CELEBRATING

YEARS OF

THE FREEDOM CHARTER

JUNE 26
1955 - 2005

Guidebook for Schools
Minister’s Foreword

This year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Freedom Charter at the Congress of the People on 26 June 1955.

On the occasion of the forty-sixth anniversary of the Freedom Charter in 2001, President Thabo Mbeki implored all of us “to take additional measures to familiarise greater numbers of our people with the Freedom Charter”. This year provides us with the opportunity to discuss, debate and convince all our people of the continued relevance of the Charter to the South Africa of today. The Freedom Charter is not merely an historical document. As the President said: “It remains still, an important guide about the direction in which we should all take our country as a consequence of its reconstruction and development.”

The Department of Education will mark this auspicious occasion by celebrating the transformation process in education and the huge strides that we have made since 1994. The theme of the celebrations is: “The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.”

As Minister of Education, I invite all schools to participate in the Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Freedom Charter at the Congress of the People on 26 June 1955.

This guidebook serves to remind and educate all of us on the significance of the Freedom Charter in South Africa’s history. It takes us on an historical journey over the past fifty years but also serves to remind us how far we have come.

The importance of the struggle for freedom and democracy should not be lost on our youth. They need to know of the sacrifices of individuals, both famous and unknown, guided by the values that are embedded in both the Freedom Charter and our South African Constitution. It is these heroes who helped us to achieve one of the greatest triumphs of the modern world – democracy in South Africa.

Celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter will allow us to reflect, celebrate and showcase the extent to which the doors of learning and culture have been opened in the first decade of freedom. Planned activities aim to promote arts and culture in schools as well as the recognition and promotion of all South Africa’s languages, particularly through the National Language Festival and the National Schools’ Competition.

The Department of Education’s programme for the year also focuses on the promotion of sporting activities in schools, particularly now that the United Nations has designated 2005 as the year of physical education and sport.

My Department’s commitment to the promotion and achievement of gender equity in all schools is reflected in the National Girls’ Games planned for August 2005, as well as the SADC Girls’ Conference that will create an opportunity for girl learners in Southern Africa to come together and strengthen the Girls’ Education Movement that works towards the identification and support of leadership amongst young girl learners.

In partnership with South African History Online, we will also during the course of the year encourage learners to research the lives of individuals in their communities – thus bringing back to public memory the roles played by numerous people in uplifting communities and in the struggle for freedom. This will be run as a competition and special awards known as the Albert Luthuli Young Historians Awards will be given to FET winners of the research essay category.

I encourage all schools to participate not only in the nationally organised events, but to be creative in developing schools and classroom level activities involving learners, parents, schools governing bodies and members of the community.

Let us mark this significant event of the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Freedom Charter at the Congress of the People together and celebrate our freedom.

MRS GNM PANDOR, MP
MINISTER OF EDUCATION
History of the FREEDOM CHARTER

At the Cape provincial congress of the African National Congress (ANC) in August 1953, Cape ANC president Professor Z.K. Matthews called for a “national convention at which all groups might be represented to consider our national problems on an all-inclusive basis” to draw up a Freedom Charter for the democratic South Africa of the future. Little did he realise that in less than two years, on a dusty playing field on the edge of what is now Soweto, the Congress of the People (CoP) would occur. It was held in an open field owned by a sympathetic Indian congress supporter, in the heart of Kliptown, one of the few areas in the country where black people could own property in an urban area. In June 1955 over three thousand delegates and observers met to co-create and democratically adopt the Freedom Charter.

ANC president Chief Albert Luthuli urged people to get involved in organising the CoP. He underlined its importance by saying: “why will this assembly be significant and unique? Its size, I hope, will make it unique. But above all its multi-racial nature and its noble objectives will make it unique because it will be the first time in the history of our multi-racial nation that its people from all walks of life will meet as equals, irrespective of race, colour and creed, to formulate a Freedom Charter for all people in the country.”

While the ANC president and thousands of Congress supporters recognised the historic significance of the adoption of the Freedom Charter, they could not know of its future. After inspiring activists through four decades of bitter struggle, the key clauses of the Charter came to guide the delegates of a Constituent Assembly in the drawing up of a new Constitution for a newly democratic, non-racial, non-sexist, free South Africa.

The Congress of the People – 25 June 1955

The CoP was scheduled to begin shortly after lunch on Saturday 25 June 1955. Some of the delegates, like Ellen Lambert, the Transvaal full-time Umkhonto we Sizwe operative, and Els Weinberg, a Johannesburg band opened the proceedings with music and the reading of messages from the Indian, Chinese and other progressive governments and organisations. A recorded speech by Chief Albert Luthuli was played to the conference and the Congress then conferred the newly-created Isitwalandwe/Seaparankoe award on Luthuli, Dadoo and Father Trevor Huddleston.

The CoP National Consultative Committee had already drafted a proposed document, which was tabled for discussion. The CoP National Consultative Committee delegates then presented their various points which were then opened for discussion. If anyone had any suggestions or amendments they were afforded the opportunity to step up to the podium and make their remarks. The point was then put to a vote, determining which demands should be included in the Charter.

The Congress started late on Saturday afternoon largely due to the organisers waiting for countrywide delegates to arrive. The proceedings opened with a prayer and the reading of messages from the Indian, Chinese and other progressive governments and organisations. A recorded speech by Chief Albert Luthuli was played to the conference and the Congress then conferred the newly-created Isitwalandwe/Seaparankoe award on Luthuli, Dadoo and Father Trevor Huddleston.

The first day ended with the public reading of the Draft Freedom Charter. This had to be done largely in the dark, as the conference lights did not function. The second day the delegates had the opportunity to discuss and vote on clauses of the draft Charter by a simple show of hands.

Some people, like “Lion of the East” Gert Sibande, attended the congress in disguise because of banning orders. When Sibande’s turn came to address the crowd he walked up to the podium and removed his disguise. Officers of the South African Police Special Branch at the meeting immediately surrounded him, but they were ordered to step down in order to maintain the peace. The proceedings on the first day of the CoP continued until the evening. Present that day was ANC President General Chief Albert Luthuli, Dr. Dadoo,

Nelson Mandela, Walter Sisulu, Moses Kotane and Rusty Bernstein and more than two hundred other key leaders and activists who were banned from attending gatherings or participating in liberation organisation and trade union movement activities. Notwithstanding their banishment, these leaders played an active but underground role in the planning of the CoP. Some like Mandela, Sisulu, Kathrada and Bernstein stood at vantage points around the conference venue and observed and directed operations. There were also a few hundred delegates, many from the Cape, who were stopped at police roadblocks where anyone suspected of going to Kliptown was detained.

As the late afternoon winter sun began fading on Sunday 26 June 1955, and the CoP delegates deliberated on the last clause of the draft Freedom Charter, “there shall be peace and friendship”, the police began moving menacingly in on the gathering and warned the delegates. The organisers sensed growing anger at this provocation and sought to avoid confrontation. Hurriedly the Congress discussed the draft of the last clause and declared the Charter adopted. Then, as one, the delegates stood to close the conference by singing of the Congress anthem Nkosi Sikelelwa Afrika.

As the police blocked all the exits, 3000 people waited silently and allowed themselves to be searched, photographed and to have their names and addresses taken. As it grew dark this continued in the light of police hurricane lamps and torches. The last of the delegates was released around 9 o’clock that night. After an impressive display of organisation and discipline, the delegates and observers that they had achieved what they set out to do. Delegate and women Congress leader Helen Joseph wrote, “The police have seized thousands of copies of draft charter but they could not touch the charter itself. Its ideas and message were now enshrined in the hearts and minds of the delegates, who would carry it far and wide to the people of South Africa for them to make it their own.”

Moses M. Kotane (1905 – 1978)

University, SA Communist Party and ANC leader, Kotane combined his Marxist convictions and commitment to the goals of African nationalism through promoting the struggle for equal rights. In 1943 he served on the Atlantic Charter committee to advance African Claims, and in 1946 he was elected to the ANC national executive committee, a position he held until he forced his nominal resignation in 1952. Following the 1946 mass strikes he spoke out in support of the 1952 Defiance Campaign. He was a co-founder of the ANC and was banned and imprisoned many times. He held an underground leadership role in the adoption of the Freedom Charter.

Yusuf Dadoo (1909 – 1983)

Dadoo lived through the 1922 miners’ revolt and passive resistance, and was inspired by Indian nationalism and Gandhi. He became a reasoner, where he became a Marxist activist. In 1936 Dadoo returned to South Africa to find the national liberation and working class movements in disarray. He then joined the SACP and became a leader within its structures.

In June 1955 an announcement was made at the historic Congress of the People that Dadoo, Luthuli and Father Huddleston had been awarded the traditional African decoration of Isitwalandwe-Seaparankoe. Dadoo was banned and imprisoned many times before escaping to Britain in 1960, where he continued his anti-apartheid activities.
break with the past traditions of the South African struggle. This was no longer a civil rights movement seeking to be accommodated in the existing socio-economic and political structures of society. It called for a fundamental restructuring of all aspects of South African society. The CoP had placed the question of social transformation squarely on the agenda of the liberation movement in South Africa. The 1950s became witness to a dramatic change in the intensification of the struggle for freedom among ‘non-White’ South Africans. This was the adoption of militant, mass-based but peaceful campaigns against the Nationalist Party government’s aggressive implementation of its apartheid policies.

Both the CoP and the drawing up of the Freedom Charter were initiated by the ANC-led Congress Alliance. The alliance was established in 1949 when a pact between the ANC and South African Indian Congress (SAIC) was signed. On the eve of the Defiance Campaign in 1953, this was expanded to include the SACPO, the South African Congress of Trade Unions (SACTU), the Federation of South African Women (FEDSAW) and the South African Congress of Democrats (SACOD).

President-General of the ANC from December 1952 until his death in 1967, Chrismas and recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1960, Luthuli was the most widely known and respected African leader of his era. Over the course of his political career his attitudes grew progressively more militant. His public support for the 1952 Defiance Campaign cost him his chieftainship. In response, Luthuli issued The Road to Freedom is via the Cross, his famous statement of his principles a belief in non-violence, a conviction that apartheid degrades. He was tried for treason and because of his banning he was unable to attend the 1955 Congress of the People. A speech of his was however read out to an appreciative multitude. After the 1960 Sharpeville emergency Luthuli publicly burnt his pass in Pretoria as part of a defiance campaign.
The campaign to convene the CoP was in part a response by the Congress alliance to revive mass political action. This was after the reversals suffered through harsh state actions against the alliance in the wake of the Defiance Campaign. The main aim of the CoP was to revive, strengthen and expand the social and geographical bases of the entire liberation movement. It did so by not directly confronting the state but by undertaking painstaking political work, by building non-racial unity and by creating amongst all South Africa an alternative social order to apartheid and racism.

Eighteen months later on 5 December 1956, government forces swept down on 156 leading members of the Congress Alliance and charged them with treason. The state prosecutors claimed that the Freedom Charter was a revolutionary document requiring an overthrow of the state to achieve its aims. The Treason Trial lasted about six years and placed a great strain on the Congress Alliance. Most of its leaders were under banning orders, some were banished and were now being entangled in a lengthy court battle.

The formal adoption of the Freedom Charter by the ANC in the following year, and the sudden removal of its key leadership from branch activities provided an opportunity for its Afrikaner wing. It renewed its efforts to disengage the ANC from its non-racial alliance by embarking on a virulent anti-Communist, anti-White and anti-Indian campaign.

The biggest crisis facing the entire anti-apartheid movement was yet to come. Following the Sharpeville Massacre in April 1960, and the subsequent banning of many organisations, the liberation movement was forced underground and many organisations hurriedly launched what proved to be ill-prepared sabotage campaigns. This very nearly resulted in the destruction of the anti-apartheid movement.

The Freedom Charter, National liberation and the new democracy

The decade-long struggle against the apartheid regime in the 1950’s and the adoption of the Freedom Charter helped forged one of the most remarkable movements of the 20th century. One which kept the vision of a free, non-racial South Africa alive and inspired generations of youth of all races to struggle for democracy. The generation of South Africans born after 1994 are charged with ensuring that the new democracy takes firm root and the dreams of a just, non-racial, non-sexist and non-imperialist South Africa alive and inspired generations of youth of all races to struggle for democracy.
Women on the march

Women in the Congress of the People

The 1940s saw a marked increase in women’s involvement in trade union and national anti-apartheid organisations. Women activists ran some of the key trade unions. The passing of the Pogging Act and other discriminatory legislation directed at the Indian and Coloured community was the catalyst that saw hundreds of Indian and Coloured women participating in the mainstream organisations and campaigns. Hundreds of women participated in the 1946 Passive Resistance Campaign and many were imprisoned with hard labour for up to six months, some on more than one occasion.

1950–60 was the decade of mass campaigns on a national level, and it would be fair to say that it was the decade of the women. The 1950’s saw the growth of the ANC as a national organization, which was made possible partly by African women being organised into the resuscitated ANC Women’s League (ANCWL).

The 1952 Defiance Campaign concentrated against six unjust laws. Opposition to the extension of Pass Laws to Black women provided the focus for the growth of progressive women’s organisations amongst all race groups, and for women to mount one of the most successful campaigns of the decade. The inputs for the creation of national women’s organisations came from women trade union leaders like Ray Alexander and Annie Silinga. In October 1955 2000 women marched to the Union Buildings in Pretoria. A year was spent building the women’s structures and on 9 August 1956 the Federation of South African Women (FEDSAW) organised thousands of women from across the country to March on Pretoria. 20,000 women led by Lilian Ngoyi, Helen Joseph, Sophie Williams and Rahima Moosa marched on the Union Buildings in Pretoria. The women’s march became one of the most important events in the country’s history and inspired generations of women to play leading role in the liberation movement and to ensure that women’s issues were foregrounded in all their programmes.

It was the organising of the Congress of the People that brought thousands more women of all races into the liberation struggle, and it inspired women to draw up their own charters.

In the 1950’s women were in the forefront of community struggles, the struggle against Bantu Education; and leaders in FEDSAW and the ANCWL were

Delegates to the Congress of the People
Adopted at the Congress of the People, Kliptown, on 26 June 1955

We, the People of South Africa, declare for all our country and the world to know:

that South Africa belongs to all who live in it, black and white, and that no government can justify claim against it unless it is based on the will of all the people;
that our people have been robbed of their birthright to land, liberty and peace by a form of government founded on injustice and inequality;
that our country will never be prosperous or free until all our people live in brotherhood, enjoying equal rights and opportunities; that only a democratic state, based on the will of all the people, can secure to all their birthright without distinction of colour, race, sex or belief.

And therefore, we, the people of South Africa, black and white together equals, countrymen and brothers adopt this Freedom Charter;
And we pledge ourselves to strive together, sparing neither strength nor courage, until the democratic changes here set out have been won.

The People Shall Govern!

Every man and woman shall have the right to vote for and to stand as a candidate for all bodies which make laws;
All people shall be entitled to take part in the administration of the country;
The rights of the people shall be the same, regardless of race, colour or sex;
All bodies of minority rule, advisory boards, councils and authorities shall be replaced by democratic organs of self-government.

All National Groups Shall have Equal Rights!

There shall be equal status in the bodies of state, in the courts and in the schools for all national groups and races;
All people shall have equal right to use their own languages, and to develop their own folk culture and customs;
All national groups shall be protected by law against insults to their race and national pride;
The preaching and practice of national, race or colour discrimination and contempt shall be a punishable crime;
All apartheid laws and practices shall be set aside.

The People Shall Share in the Country’s Wealth!

The national wealth of our country, the heritage of South Africans, shall be restored to the people;
The mineral wealth beneath the soil, the Banks and monopoly industry shall be transferred to the ownership of the people as a whole;
The aim of education shall be to teach the youth to love their people and their culture, to honour human brotherhood, liberty and peace;
All the cultural treasures of mankind shall be open to all, by free exchange of books, ideas and contact with other lands;
The government shall discover, develop and encourage national talent for the enhancement of our cultural life;
Child labour, compound labour, the tot system and contract labour shall be abolished.

The Land Shall be Shared Among Those Who Work It!

Restrictions of land ownership on a racial basis shall be ended, and all the land reallocated amongst those who work it to banish famine and land hunger;
The state shall help the peasants with implements, seed, tractors and dams to save the soil and assist the tillers;
Freedom of movement shall be guaranteed to all who work on the land;
All shall have the right to occupy land wherever they choose;
People shall not be robbed of their cattle, and forced labour and farm prisons shall be abolished.

All shall be Equal Before the Law!

No-one shall be imprisoned, deported or restricted without a fair trial; No-one shall be condemned by the order of any Government official;
The courts shall be representative of all the people;
Imprisonment shall be only for serious crimes against the people, and shall aim at re-education, not vengeance;

The police force and army shall be open to all on an equal basis and shall be the helpers and protectors of the people;
All laws which discriminate on grounds of race, colour or belief shall be repealed. All Shall Enjoy Equal Human Rights;
The law shall guarantee to all their right to speak, to organise, to meet together, to publish, to preach, to worship and to educate their children;
The privacy of the house from police raids shall be protected by law;
All shall be free to travel without restriction from countryside to town, from province to province, and from South Africa abroad;
Pass books, permits and all other laws restricting these freedoms shall be abolished.

There Shall be Work and Security!

All who work shall be free to form trade unions, to elect their officers and to make wage agreements with their employers;
The state shall recognise the right and duty of all to work, and to draw full unemployment benefits;
Men and women of all races shall receive equal pay for equal work;
There shall be a forty-hour working week, a national minimum wage, paid annual leave, and sick leave for all workers, and maternity leave on full pay for all working mothers;
Miners, domestic workers, farm workers and civil servants shall have the same rights as all others who work;
Child labour, compound labour, the tot system and contract labour shall be abolished.

The Doors of Learning and Culture Shall be Opened!
The government shall discover, develop and encourage national talent for the enhancement of our cultural life;
All the cultural treasures of mankind shall be open to all, by free exchange of books, ideas and contact with other lands;
The aim of education shall be to teach the youth to love their people and their culture, to honour human brotherhood, liberty and peace;
Education shall be free, compulsory, universal and equal for all children; Higher education and technical training shall be opened to all by means of state allowances and scholarships awarded on the basis of merit;
Adult illiteracy shall be ended by a mass state education plan;
 Teachers shall have all the rights of other citizens;
The colour bar in cultural life, in sport and in education shall be abolished.

There Shall be Houses, Security and Comfort!

All people shall have the right to live where they choose, be decently housed, and to bring up their families in comfort and security;
Unused housing space to be made available to the people;
Rent and prices shall be lowered; food plentiful and no-one shall go hungry;
A preventive health scheme shall be run by the state;
Free medical care and hospitalisation shall be provided for all, with special care for mothers and young children;
Slums shall be demolished, and new suburbs built where all have transport, roads, lighting, playing fields, creches and social centres;
The aged, the orphans, the disabled and the sick shall be cared for by the state;
Rest, leisure and recreation shall be the right of all;
Fenced locations and ghettos shall be abolished, and laws which break up families shall be repealed.

There Shall be Peace and Friendship!

South Africa shall be a fully independent state which respects the rights and sovereignty of all nations;
South Africa shall strive to maintain world peace and the settlement of all international disputes by negotiation - not war;
Peace and friendship amongst all our people shall be secured by upholding the equal rights, opportunities and status of all;
The people of the protectorates Basutoland, Bechuanaland and Swaziland shall be free to decide for themselves their own future;
The right of all peoples of Africa to independence and self-government shall be recognised, and shall be the basis of close cooperation.
Let all people who love their people and their country no say, as we say here:

THESE FREEDOMS WE WILL FIGHT FOR, SIDE BY SIDE, THROUGHOUT OUR LIVES, UNTIL WE HAVE WON OUR LIBERTY
Preamble to the 1996 South African Constitution

We, the people of South Africa,
Recognise the injustices of our past;
Honour those who suffered for justice and freedom in our land;
Respect those who have worked to build and develop our country; and
Believe that South Africa belongs to all who live in it, united in our diversity.

We therefore, through our freely elected representatives, adopt this Constitution as the supreme law of the Republic so as to ú
Heal the divisions of the past and establish a society based on democratic values, social justice and fundamental human rights;
Lay the foundations for a democratic and open society in which government is based on the will of the people and every citizen is equally protected by law;
Improve the quality of life of all citizens and free the potential of each person; and
Build a united and democratic South Africa able to take its rightful place as a sovereign state in the family of nations.

May God protect our people.
Nkosi Sikelel’iAfrika. Morena boloka setjhaba sa heso.
God seën Suid-Afrika. God bless South Africa.

The 1950’s - Planned Inferior Education

It would be mistaken to understand that there was no pre-apartheid educational marginalisation of Black, Indian and Coloured South Africans. Even under British rule and until Union government, children had received different education based on their race. Long before the historic 1948 White elections that gave the Nationalist Party power, there was a system of segregated and unequal education in the country. White White schooling was free, compulsory and expanding, Black education was simply neglected. Financial under-provision and an urban influx led to gravity-massive school structures, teachers and educational materials as well as student absenteeism or non-enrolment. A 1936 Inquiry identified grave problems, only to have almost nothing done about these needs.

From 1948 however, the disadvantaging of Black, Coloured and Indian children was legislated and pursued with an unprecedented vigour. The Bantu Education system was designed to ‘train and fit’ Africans for the newly evolving apartheid society. Indian and Coloured children were also discriminated against, but on a ‘divide and rule’ manner of cascading discrimination. Education was viewed as part of the overall apartheid system including ‘homelands’, urban restrictions, pass laws and job reservation. The socio-economic role intended for anyone who was not White was one of labourer, worker, and servant. As Prime Minister H.F. Verwoerd, the architect of the Bantu Education Act (1953) conceived it:

“There is no place for [the African] in the European community above the level of certain forms of labour. It is of no avail for him to receive a education that will prevent Black children from being of a high quality.

Significant progress has been achieved in education since 1994

Under a democratic government, the education budget has grown tremendously to become the largest expenditure item in the country’s annual budget.

The early years of democratic government witnessed significant reform in education that included:

- dismantling apartheid structures to create a unified education system consisting of one national and nine provincial departments of education
- creating a more equitable system of financing education
- creating a policy framework to reflect the values and mandate of the new government
- putting in place democratic governance structures
- establishing a basis for lifelong learning, and
- transforming learning at school level by offering a new learner-centred and outcomes-based school curriculum to reflect the values and ethos of the new democratic order.

Educating for all

Today, the country can proudly boast of the establishment of a vibrant public education system that is accessible to all and which accounts for 97% of all education in South Africa:

- Beginning with Grade R, the first ten years of education are compulsory for all of our learners.
- By 1998 almost universal enrolment in primary schooling and 85% enrolment in secondary schooling had been achieved.

Celebrating Ten Years of Freedom

The birth of a truly South African education system

“Whereas despair and hopelessness characterised the apartheid schooling system, order and hope characterise the schooling system in a new democratic order... in short, schools are stable and now focus on the core business of teaching and learning.”

Deputy President Jacob Zuma, speaking at the Most Improved School Awards, 11 March 2004.

The first decade of our freedom has seen immense strides being made in transforming our education system from a fragmented, unequal and race-based system into a unified and non-racial system that promotes equity and lifelong learning and ensures the development of all our children regardless of their background.

Honouring the Memory of All

A National Oral History Project

“The task is not finished. South Africa is not yet a home for all her sons and daughters. Such a home we wish to ensure. From the beginning our history has been one of ascending unities, the breaking of tribal, racial and creedal barriers. The past cannot hope to have a life sustained by itself, wrenched from the whole. There remains before us the building of a new land, a home for men who are black, white, and brown, from the ruins of the old narrow groups, a synthesis of the rich cultural strains which we have inherited. There remains to be achieved our integration with the rest of our continent. Somewhere ahead there beckons a civilisation, a culture, which will take its place in the parade of God’s history beside other great human civilisations, Chinese, Egyptian, Jewish, European. It will not necessarily be all black, but it will be African. “

- Chief Albert Luthuli. Let My People Go 1962

“The time will come when our nation will honour the memory of all the sons, the daughters, the mothers, the fathers, and the children who, by their thoughts and deeds, gave us the right to assert with pride that we are South Africans.”

President Nelson Mandela, First address to Parliament, 1994

The Albert Luthuli Young Historians Prize is a national oral history project to involve learners in reclaiming our past and honoring those who played a role in the struggle for freedom, non-racialism, non-sexism, and democracy.

The Young Historians’ Prize is named after Chief Albert Luthuli, a humble teacher who rose to become head of the ANC and one of Africa’s greatest sons, he fought for freedom, non-racialism, peace and democracy and was the continent’s first recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1961.

Rules of the competition

The competition is open to Senior and FET learners.

Learners are expected to research and write an essay on either

An individual, either a parent, teacher or other member of your family or community who played a role in the student movement and the education struggles prior to 1996.

Or

An individual in the local community who participated in the Congress of The People.

Or

An individual in the local community who played a role in the political struggle for freedom in South Africa.

Essays must show evidence of research, analysis and argument. It is important that learners base their essays on oral history research. They should interview a member of the community, or family. They should include with their essays, any relevant photographs, memorabilia and documents relating to the individual’s experiences. Copies of tape recordings of interviews are important. The learner must get a letter from the individual authorising release of materials for publication and use of the interview.

Judging Process

The essays and accompanying material will be edited and published on SAHO website.

In addition, all the essays will be judged by a panel of experts and the best 50 essays from each region will then be sent to a national panel which will choose the nine best essays. The winning group of learners will be invited to a national workshop at which they will work alongside filmmakers to make a short documentary on their subject. The documentary will be shown on a SABC Television channel.

In addition, the school from which the learner comes will receive video and other equipment to undertake further oral history projects.

All essays should be forwarded to the provincial co-ordinators.

Further Information

For further information on the Albert Luthuli Young Historians’ Award, how to undertake oral history, history of South Africa, Timelines, Documents and the new history curriculum go to the SAHO website www.sahistory.org.za

E-mail info@sahistor or

The Albert Luthuli Young Historians’ Prize

The competition will run annually. It will identify those learners who have researched and written an essay, thereby recording the lives of those people in their community who have played a role in shaping our history.

The Albert Luthuli Young Historians’ Prize will give learners the skills to undertake research, to conduct interviews, and to write an essay on the lives of local and national heroes.

The Albert Luthuli Young Historians’ Prize will allow learners to contribute to the building of a national “Wall of Honour” online, celebrating the lives of those who played a role in the struggle for freedom and democracy.

The nine learners whose essays are judged as the best researched and presented will be given a chance to work with film makers to translate their research project into a short television documentary.

All submissions will be published on South Africa’s largest history education website – www.sahistory.org.za. As a result, thousands of people will read your essay. You would be responsible for recording the history of people from your community who played a role in bringing about changes in our country.

The Prize is named after Chief Albert Luthuli – a humble teacher who rose to become one of South Africa’s greatest leaders who fought for freedom, non-racialism, peace and democracy and was the continent’s first recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1961.

The Competition has been started in order to allow young people to participate.
An introduction for teachers

As with most teaching and learning techniques, it is important to stress consistency in the writing process. Establishing a structured approach that is used for every assigned story is one way to create independent writers and ensure generalisation of writing skills. A typical writing process consists of steps: pre-writing, writing, revising, editing, and publishing.

Pre-writing

This is the "getting ready to write" step. Learners gather and organise ideas for writing. Young learners use drawings or simple words for pre-writing and older learners often use groups of words. In the pre-writing step, the teacher and learners choose a context, consider purpose, audience, and form while they gather and organise ideas for writing.

Writing (Rough draft)

Writing the rough draft is the step where the learners begin to compile all of the details into cohesive, flowing thoughts. In terms of structure, the story should have a beginning, middle and end. The teacher encourages learners to use transition words from the pre-writing step while varying sentence formats and lengths. Many learners get overwhelmed at this point and worry about spelling and grammar. Continuously remind learners that this is NOT the final paper and mistakes are part of learning.

Revising

Revising is making decisions about how to improve the writing, e.g. their story or poem. Learners pick places where the writing could be clearer, more interesting, more informative, and more convincing. This is the time learners add to their writing, re-arrange sentences or words, remove unnecessary parts of their stories, or replace words to help others understand the story.

The revising step may include peer and/or teacher suggestions. During a peer revising activity, the teacher provides a list of questions and instructions that is both general (e.g., opinion of the story) and specific (e.g., identifying context sentence, detail sentences, concluding sentence). The writers use the revision feedback from their partners to make changes or to improve the story. Peer revising and proofing not only assists the writer in seeing ways to make their story better, but also allows the partner to obtain another perspective on the context.

Editing

Editing involves checking the story for errors in spelling, capitalization, punctuation, grammar, sentence structure, subject/verb agreement, consistent verb tense, and word usage. The teacher may do all of the editing of the first few stories, and then gradually allow learners to work with a partner to edit. Eventually, learners will be able to recognise their own errors and edit their own stories. After the suggestions from the revising and editing steps are considered, the learner proceeds to the publishing step.

Presentation

Presentation is the final step of the writing process. Before beginning this step, some learners may need a discussion with the teacher to review corrections and/or to add any final recommendations for improvement.

DO RESEARCH IN YOUR OWN COMMUNITY... CONTRIBUTE TO GRASS-ROots SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY!

South Africa has a conflict ridden history that was taught in a biased way in the past, neglecting the historical and cultural contributions of all our people. There was a focus on political leaders, important White people and broad socio-economic trends (e.g. industrialization, urbanization). We need to critically examine this past and rewrite it with inclusivity - irrespective of race, gender, age, language, class, beliefs and region.

This different approach will create grass-roots history, through the eyes of ordinary people, a ‘history from below’. Apart from righting apartheid, this will enrich our new democracy. Recently there has been much work of this kind: marginalized people have written their stories or had their experiences recorded orally. Historians have researched early Black communities living in southern Africa before and after the first White settlers arrived. This process of re-discovery of our history must continue as new information comes to light, because all history is provisional.

Oral history is a great tool to explore the history of the people around us in our local communities. Ask them about their memories of the past, their traditional folk songs and their cultural practices. We are rich with this information but it is not written down. Instead it has passed from elders to children in the form of story telling, praise songs, inventions or rituals. Unless we use new methods to discover and then record this vital information about our past, it may be lost forever.

This is where the idea of the Chief Albert Luthuli Young Historians Oral History Competition comes in. YOU can be involved in filling the gaps in our past and building a new history. Many people played roles in your community in the struggle for freedom, in the political, educational and civic arena. Much of this has been neglected. You as a learner can be an historian and make the words of our former President Nelson Mandela come true: “The time will come when our nation will honour the memory of all-the-sons, the daughters, the mothers, the fathers, and the children who, by their thoughts and aloud, gave us the right to assert with pride that we are South Africans.”

Tell us about the lesser-known people who played a role in the struggle for freedom and democracy. This booklet and accompanying CD provides details of how to become involved in this exciting project. There are great prizes and incentives to participate, including the possibility of having your presentation adapted for a production on national television.

Getting started

Find you need a clear understanding of the scope of oral history and the meaning of some key terms. Information given verbally (oral information) can be used by researchers (that’s YOU!) in a number of ways. Here are some ideas to get you started:

Reminiscences: Community reaction to or participation in an historical event

A project like this will need background study in a library on web sites. Did anyone in your local area take part in the Defiance Campaign of the 1950s? Did people in your community send demands to the Congress Of The People in 1952? Did any of them participate in the 1952 Rivonia Trial? Did your community participate in the Treason Trial of 1956? Did any of them participate? Did they discuss these issues among themselves? Were there any local meetings about or any attempts to participate? Or were they content to let others push for freedom on their behalf? What difference has the new democracy made to the local way of life compared to life in the old, apartheid era? The answers to all these questions will fascinate you and are likely to fill gaps in our historical knowledge, but be careful to structure your findings and give them coherence around a particular theme, organisation or person. Avoid ending up with a jumble of disconnected memories.

Organise a ‘think-tank’ – then take a decision on your topic

We suggest that class discussions to talk about possible people to research – those who you believe played a role in your local community. If you can’t think of a name, ask members of your family, your neighbors or elders. If you have access to the Internet you could go to www.sahistory.org.za and look at the list in our People section or on the Wall of Remembrance and look for anyone from your region, known to people from your school or family. Either way your research must be directed at a definite person. You cannot begin research until you have decided this.

Take a tentative decision on the form of your presentation

Once you have decided what you are going to research, you are ready to think about the way you are going to present your findings. For this project you will produce a written document. You and your teacher could surprise everyone with a fresh idea for your presentation, by including old/new photographs, playing a voice recording and field notes (notes that you made while interviewing the person).

Oral History A Step by Step Guide

You won’t be on your own. Information on the accompanying CD and the SA History Online website will help you. It takes you step-by-step through Research, Planning, Interviewing, Interpretation of material, and presentation and application of your material. An example list of some of this is below:

Draw up a basic interview outline covering the main aspects of the information you need. Include the following:
- Details like the person’s name, birth date and place, address, employment, hobbies, marital status and family details. Don’t forget to ask them about where they lived long ago and how it was then.
- Ask about specific, detailed questions. Also, being flexible will mean allowing questions to present themselves in the interview. Read up on the topic you want to cover in the interview, and you’ll be more able to adjust your questions in the interview.
- Always try to establish where and when events took place. However, let contradictions or vagueness be. Other people don’t remember an exact date, but can link it to events around that time which can be traced. Remember, you are directing the process but be flexible enough to let unexpected ‘diamonds’ surface.

A great deal of additional information (practical and theoretical) on how to undertake Oral History research is to be found on the accompanying CD – or by visiting the SA History Online website www.sahistory.org.za

Suggestions for educators on how to engage learners on the Freedom Charter

Learning areas (GEO) Languages, Social Sciences, Arts and Culture, Life Orientation

Subjects (FET) Languages, History, Dramatic Arts, Life Orientation

1. Learners could examine life under apartheid and write a speech from the point of view of a person in one of the photographs. Begin by asking learners what they already know about apartheid. Write down their responses to create a summary of their understanding of apartheid.

Discuss the following questions:
- What do you know about apartheid from those who lived during that time?
- What do their voices add to your understanding of South African history?
- What do the resources, particularly photographs, teach us about life under apartheid?

Let learners choose a photograph and complete the following activity:
- Pretend to be the person in the photograph.
- How do you think the person feels?
- What do you think that person is thinking?
- If that person were to speak to us what might she or he say?

Make a speech in the voice of that person. Use the first person (I, me) when speaking and try to capture the person’s feelings and thoughts.

2. Design a questionnaire in class with learners based on the principles of the FREEDOM CHARTER in order that learners may interview parents and members of the community around the extent to which these have been achieved.

3. Learners could design a monument to Freedom that incorporated or symbolised the principles of the FREEDOM CHARTER.

4. Design a crossword puzzle with clues based on the main principles of the FREEDOM CHARTER.

5. Learners could draw a Freedom map of their community or province, choosing significant historical sites of the struggle for freedom across time. They could map struggles against colonization or imperialism and/or the struggles against segregation and apartheid. For example: the siege of Malemore 1854, (Limpopo), The Battle of bashavane 1879 (KENZ), the Bambarah Rebellion 1906(KZ), the Bulvax Massacre 1921 (Eastern Cape), the Congress of the People, Kliptown 1955, the Sharpeville Movement 1960, the Soweto Uprising, 1976, the Trojan Horse massacre, Athlone 1985, (WC).

6. Compare the FREEDOM CHARTER and the Preamble to the South African Constitution. To what extent are the principles the same and to what extent do they differ? Let learners create a short summary of their findings.

7. Research the historical roots of the FREEDOM CHARTER. See the Charter of the League of Nations, the UN Charter of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the African Charter and the Charter of Children’s Rights.

8. Learners could discuss the question of what freedom means to them. They could also examine the question of rights and responsibilities around the question what does it mean to be a true member of the community and society.

9. Learners in groups could discuss issues around freedom and draw a poster highlighting rights and responsibilities.

10. Learners could work in groups to develop a presentation in any form (drama, poetry, etc.) that examines the struggle of an individual for the rights set out in the FREEDOM CHARTER.

11. Draw up a table with columns of rights and responsibilities: eg to be proud of our heritage, language beliefs and culture and oppose to respect the language, culture, beliefs and heritage of the right to quality education and other side the responsibility to be punctual, prepared and participate actively and respectfully towards others in class.

12. Using the FREEDOM CHARTER as a basis, learners could examine the extent to which the aims of the Charter have been achieved and to identify what challenges remain.

13. Learners examine the clauses of the FREEDOM CHARTER and create a charter for a democratic classroom. Let learners draw up rules for life in their classroom, and vote for them.

When they have decided what rules they wish to include in the charter, let them, in small groups, write a preamble to the charter using the preamble of the FREEDOM CHARTER as inspiration.

Let groups compare each other’s preambles and reflect on their experience of writing the preamble. Does their preamble resemble the Freedom Charter’s preamble? How are they similar? How are they different?

What challenges did they make while writing their preamble?

How did the group decide what to include and what not to include?

What would learners in 50 years time think if they had to read this preamble?
SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

The celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Freedom Charter in South Africa is a significant milestone in the history of the country. The Department of Education’s contribution to the national celebration will take a variety of forms. The major thrust will be towards the engagement of all in the educational sector around the historical significance of the Charter, its vision and principles, as well as its links to present day South Africa and the Constitution.

The Department of Education through the Chief Directorate: Special Programmes, aims to integrate all festivals and celebration of national days during 2005 under the umbrella of the broad theme of: “The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.”

The Department of Education will coordinate a number of national events that will involve provincial participation. At the same time, it is envisaged that there will be provincial, district and school based activities around national and other significant days under the broad theme.

Two of the planned programmes that seek to involve the mass participation of schools are the National Language Festival and the National Schools’ Competition.

The guidelines for each are outlined below and schools are advised to contact the relevant provincial coordinator to indicate their willingness to participate in them and to get more information on provincial activities.

What is my school expected to do?

Principals are encouraged to seek the commitment of educators and learners to the Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Freedom Charter. They should flag the school’s intentions in monthly planning and involve the School Governing Body and community. They should display the resource pages of the Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Freedom Charter in as many areas of the school as possible.

These resource areas are an invaluable guide for educators and learners in the classroom around the theme.

During 2005, schools are encouraged to participate in the National Language Festival and the National Schools’ Competition. Schools should organise displays and design banners reinforcing the themes. Such banners could be displayed at entrances of school premises, points of assembly or any other convenient but visible location on the school premises.

Material produced by learners for the National Schools’ Competition could be displayed in school. Learners could plan and develop a mural / wall painting that reflects the feelings and experiences of themselves and members of the community around issues of freedom.

Schools should be encouraged to interact with the local and broader community focusing on the Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Freedom Charter through discussions, oral history projects and intergenerational dialogues.

Can the Celebration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Freedom Charter be seen to be part of the Curriculum?

Principals should encourage educators to include the celebration of the Freedom Charter as part of the year planning so that it is not seen as an add-on to normal curriculum activities. Classroom activities that could feed into the Celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Freedom Charter Competition and Language Festival could include any work from GET learning areas such as Languages, Human and Social Sciences, Life Orientation and Arts and Culture that falls within the main theme. At FET level, planning should involve as many subject areas as possible. Co-operation in planning between subjects should be encouraged.

The Department of Education’s National Schools’ Language Festival

What is the nature of the National Schools’ Language Festival?

The Department of Education is organising a Schools’ Language Festival. This festival seeks to promote and preserve languages as the living heritage of South Africa and, equally important, to foster a better understanding and respect amongst our people by promoting greater communication. The National Language Festival will take place on 16 June 2005 in Gauteng. Provinces will select provincial entries in each category to participate in the national festival.

What is the overall theme and sub themes for the National Language Festival?

Theme

The main theme for this year will be The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.

Underlying the main theme is a number of sub themes:

- Open and free cultural treasures for all
- I am what I am, I am who I am (to nurture a sense of belonging and national pride, to honour human brotherhood, liberty and peace)
- Many tongues: A focus on language, multilingualism and oral culture
- Entangled Roots: Unity and Diversity (Reconciliation, anti-discrimination and anti-xenophobia)
- Voices of the past (A focus on oral history)
- Roots of the nation (A focus on the history of South Africa)
- My roots are alive - the link between past and present (focus on culture and history)
- Democratic participation through patriotism
- Social Justice, a healthy environment, human rights and inclusivity
- Abolish discrimination in cultural life, in sport and in education
- Education, our living heritage

What language may entrants use?

Learners may enter in any of the eleven official languages, other indigenous languages, sign language and Braille. Educators should make special effort to encourage the use of indigenous languages as well as participation of learners with special education needs. Provision will be made for appropriate adjudication to accommodate learners’ needs. These need to be communicated to the provincial coordinator. (See contact details below)

What are the categories of the National Language Festival?

Category A: Public Speaking

Time limit:
- a. Primary Schools: 2.3 minutes
- b. Secondary Schools: 3.5 –5 minutes

A copy of the speech should be handed in to the adjudication panel.

Entries per province
- a. Primary Schools: one from Grade 6 or 7
- b. Secondary Schools: one learner from Grade 8-11

Category B: Poetry

General rules:
- 1. Copies of selected own choice passages, plays etc and competitor’s names must be handed to the selection panel prior to the relevant session in English
- 2. Please adhere to time limits.

Rules for Poetry

1. One person per item
2. The time limit is three minutes
3. Copy of poem and the name of the participant to be submitted to the selection panel
4. Entries per province:
   - One learner from Primary School per subsections below
   - One learner from Secondary School per subsections below
5. Items:
   - Formal Poetry (published works)
   - Informal Poetry (original works e.g. praise singing)

LSEN schools can enter under any category, and will be assessed inclusively.

Category C: Dramatised Poetry

Time limit:
- Primary Schools: 5 minutes.
- Secondary Schools: Maximum of 10 minutes.
- Allowance will be made for the following, which excludes the actual performance time:
  - Setting of stage: 3 minutes
  - Striking of stage: 2 minutes
  - Number of participants per group: five or more
  - Additional music effects such as drums or background music will be allowed.
  - A copy of the poem must accompany the entry.

Entries per Province
- One Primary School
- One Secondary School
- One LSEN School
Category D: Debate

General Rules of Debate

1. The occasion of the debate is traditionally a formal one.
2. It is essential that teams prepare with the requirements of the rules in mind.
3. Once a school team submits itself as an entrant, it is honour-bound to fulfill its commitments.
4. The school may replace the team members of the entire team if the need arises.
5. No adjudicator should be approached with the request for marks to be divulged.
6. Where any rule is unclear, the adjudicator shall decide on the matter.
7. There should be two timekeepers for each competing team. A school will be penalised by 1 point per full minute over the time limit.
8. Each participating school should arrive at the venue at least 15 minutes before the time.
9. The convener will do her/his best: to supply three adjudicators for each debate. However, two adjudicators should be deemed sufficient to proceed with the debate.

How can my school enter?

Please contact your provincial co-ordinator to indicate your school’s participation. (Names and contact details below.)

The Department of Education’s National Schools Competition

What is the nature of the competition?

Learners should be encouraged to express themselves through written, visual or oral presentations on one of the sub themes in the following categories.

Category A

- Visual Art (including three dimensional works in clay, waste or found items and photography). Works should speak to the Freedom Charter inspired theme:
  - The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.
- This Category is open to ALL Phases.

Category B

- Creative writing in the form of poetry or short stories or prose. Creative writing works should speak to any of the following sub themes:
  - Quality Education for All
  - Education and the Community
  - Education and Freedom
  - Why Education is important to me
- This Category is open to ALL Phases.

Category C

- A research essay on either:
  - An individual (either a parent, teacher or other member of the local community) who has played an important role in transforming education in South Africa.
  - An individual in the local community who participated in the Congress of the People.
  - An individual in the local community who contributed to the political transformation of South Africa.
- Essays must show evidence of research, analysis and argument. It is important that learners base their essays on oral history research. They should interview a member of the community.
- This Category is open to Senior and FET Learners.
- One FET winner from each province will be awarded the Albert Luthuli Young Historians Award.

Category D

- Oral presentations:
  - Speeches on the theme:
    - The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.
    - Speeches should show evidence of research. Speeches MUST be available in written form.
    - This Category is open to Intermediate, Senior and FET learners.
    - Please note the following requirements for written work (including written forms of Category E speeches):
      1. Written work by FET learners should not exceed 1000 words on A4 paper. (Younger learners’ contributions can be substantially shorter.)
      2. All pages should be clearly numbered.
      3. It should be kept in mind that written work may be displayed. Entries may be handwritten or typed.
      4. Learners should write on one side of the page only for display purposes.
      5. Work must be correctly referenced with all sources consulted.
    - This Category is open to ALL Phases.
    - Please note the following requirements for Group Performances:
      1. The number of participants in each group is not restricted.
      2. Performances should not exceed 10 minutes per group.

Category E

- Mixed Mode presentations
  - Mixed mode (any medium of spoken word, song, drama and dance presented by groups on the theme:
    - The doors of learning and culture shall be opened through quality education for all.
  - Presentations may combine different modes.
  - This Category is open to ALL Phases.
What does the main theme and the sub themes mean to us?

The main theme is intended to encourage learners to explore the extent to which the doors of learning and culture have been opened in the first decade of freedom. It also intends to encourage learners to reflect on the practices within their own school and to examine the extent to which the values expressed in the Freedom Charter and the South African Constitution are advanced.

What language may entrants use?

Learners may enter in any of the eleven official languages, other indigenous languages, sign language and Braille. Educators should make special effort to encourage the use of indigenous languages as well as participation of learners with special education needs. Provision will be made for appropriate adjudication to accommodate learners' needs. These must be indicated on the reply form.

How will the competition be organised?

There will be three levels of adjudication:
At school level: Schools may select three entries from each phase and each category.
At district level: Each district will select three entries from each phase and each category through an adjudication process.
At provincial level: Each province will select a winner from each phase and each category through a provincial adjudication process at a provincial event.
Provincial winners in each category will be awarded with a certificate and an award (in the form of a book) from the national Department of Education.
FET winners in each province in CATEGORY C (research essays) will be recognized as the Albert Luthuli Young Historians.

General Rules of Entry:

1. The work submitted should be authenticated by the supervising teacher/s with respect to originality and ownership. Any form of plagiarism (copying) or blatant assistance from others (excluding advice from the educator) will result in the immediate disqualification of a learner.
2. Entries from all categories should have a title.
3. Teachers must adjudicate and select the school entries according to the general criteria at school level, before submitting these to the district/circuit.
4. All written or visual art works entries will be accompanied by a form signed by the learner giving user rights to the Department of Education to publish, circulate and disseminate materials as it so wishes other than for purposes of profit and that the Department will remain the custodian of all written and visual art entries. The Department undertakes to acknowledge original artists and authors.
5. These works could therefore be duplicated or photographed for the school records before submission to the organisers.
6. All schools should ensure that they adhere to the deadlines that have been set.
7. Adjudicators' decisions at provincial levels will be final.
8. Packaging of entries is primarily the responsibility of schools.

Sample of entry form to accompany each entry:

This is the responsibility of the school to include the following details with each learner's entry on the cover-sheet of all written piece (including the written versions of Category C) or on the back of art-works.
