As with Bloomberg, the psychiatrists and psychologists showed no awareness of the brutal environment in which Tsafendas was kept. The medical experts spent up to six hours with Tsafendas but it did not occur to them to ask how he was treated and what had happened during the past twenty days. Like the lawyers, they could not have been unaware of the methods used by the police with prisoners. Throughout the early 1960s there were widespread reports in the media of detainees being tortured. The lawyers and the medical men seem to have assumed contrary to widespread belief, a civil and proper police force had treated Tsafendas perfectly correctly during the twenty days he was in their care. What seems clear is that the one thing they cared about was Tsafendas's state of mind, unconcerned that his state of mind might have been affected by the conditions of his imprisonment.

Determined nevertheless to save his client's life, and by using only Telex and telephone, Bloomberg and his assistants contacted hospitals and mental institutions in Europe and the United States to locate Tsafendas's medical records. Despite the limited time at their disposal and the limitations of technology at the time, they managed to track down at least four hospitals.³⁸⁶⁰ Bloomberg's team also located several people who knew Tsafendas. However, because their names were on the State's witness list, the defence could not consult them without the State's consent and this was refused by the prosecutor, Attorney-General Willem van den Bergh. The defence team then approached Judge Beyers, who gave the lawyers permission to speak to witnesses on the State's list. The defence thereupon consulted with them without demur from the State.³⁸⁶¹

Several of these witnesses were brought to Bloomberg's office and made detailed statements.³⁸⁶² From all those interviewed, only the following were eventually chosen to testify for the defence: Peter Daniels, Helen Daniels's brother, and his wife Merle Daniels, Patrick O'Ryan and his wife Louisa, Gerald Shaw, James Johnstone, O.J. Smorenberg, Gillian Lieberman and Gideon Cloete. Finding suitable witnesses to support the chosen line of defence – insanity – must have been extremely difficult for Bloomberg and his associates, since none of Tsafendas's contacts questioned by the police had testified that he was schizophrenic or that he had mentioned a tapeworm. The criteria by which defence witnesses were chosen would be clear during the trial.

³⁸⁶⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 80.

³⁸⁶¹ Cooper, 2016: 106-107.

³⁸⁶² Bloomberg, 2007: 80.

The choice of witnesses shows the clear desperation of the defence team to find suitable witnesses to support their defence line and save Tsafendas's life. At first glance, the strangest choices of witnesses were those of James Johnston and Gerald Shaw. Johnstone, a preacher of the Christian Church, had told the police, "I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about ten minutes on each occasion." And how many occasions was that? Two. A man who had talked with Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his whole life was called to testify while people who knew him for years or lived with him in the same house for weeks and months, were not chosen. Why was Johnston chosen? Clearly because of he believed that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced" and had said so in his statement to the police, "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all right."³⁸⁶³ As we have seen from the statements taken by the police, this was the closest a witness came to supporting the defence's line.

Similar is the case of Gerald Shaw, a parliamentary reporter for the Cape Times. According to Shaw, he had only a "brief acquaintanceship" with Tsafendas in the Press Gallery and had only spoken to him briefly on three occasions. Shaw had "never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity," but he believed that he was "rather slow mentally."³⁸⁶⁴ That Shaw did not believe Tsafendas to be insane, only slow mentally, was nevertheless enough for the defence to ask him to testify. The above two witnesses are evidence of the difficulties Bloomberg's team was having difficulty finding anyone to support its defence line. However, probably accidentally and without the defence expecting it, Gerald Shaw would be a vital witness in the summary trial.

Then we have Patrick O'Ryan, the most important defence witness who was Tsafendas's best friend at the time and knew him better than any of the other witnesses. O'Ryan said Wilfrid Cooper asked him if he knew about Tsafendas's tapeworm and he replied hesitantly yes, as he knew the truth behind the tapeworm story. O’Ryan was the only person Tsafendas ever confided to about the tapeworm before the assassination. Determined to save his client’s life, Cooper asked O’Ryan to tell the court about the tapeworm and to exaggerate its importance to Tsafendas, as he put it. Cooper told him that this was the only way to “get Tsafendas free.”³⁸⁶⁵

³⁸⁶³ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁶⁴ Shaw, 2007: 64.

O’Ryan, who knew that Tsafendas did not believe he had a tapeworm, was put in a difficult position. It was not easy for him to lie to the court. Not only was it an unlawful act, but O’Ryan was very religious and considered lying to be a major sin. Nevertheless, he did not hesitate and agreed to testify as suggested to save his friend. The fact that O’Ryan had not mentioned the tapeworm to the police when he was questioned did not seem to bother the defence. Equally ignored was his statement to the police on September 17 that he “never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.”³⁸⁶⁶ The situation was easier for O’Ryan’s wife because she believed Tsafendas really had a tapeworm. Patrick O’Ryan stated thirty years later that his testimony at the trial was the only time he ever lied in his life.³⁸⁶⁷

Another witness the defence spoke to was Helen Daniels, the young lady who had written to Tsafendas about a possible marriage and in whose home he had lived, along with her and her parents, for one and half months. However, Daniels was not chose to testify in the summary trial, most probably because she had already told the police on September 15 about Tsafendas that she had not “noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”³⁸⁶⁸ The defence then asked Helen’s brother, Peter Daniels, and his wife Merle to testify, as none of them had been questioned by the police. Although they did not know Tsafendas as good as Helen, they agreed to do it in order to save his life.

Chosen to testify was also O.J. Smorenberg,³⁸⁶⁹ who had worked with Tsafendas for five weeks at Cape Town docks. When interviewed by the police, he said nothing about Tsafendas being insane, but stated that “sometimes Tsafendas acted childish and did things which you wouldn’t expect from a man of his age.” More importantly, he referred to an ³⁸⁶⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A question of Madness, 1997.

³⁸⁶⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁸⁶⁸ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

³⁸⁶⁹ The name in the statement is given as Smorenburg, however, in the trial transcript is given as Smorenberg.

incident which would later be used falsely to demonstrate that Tsafendas supported apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd.³⁸⁷⁰ We will look at Smorenberg's testimony in detail in the summary trial section.

Another witness interviewed by the defence team was Richard Poggenpoel, also a member of the Christian Church and a very good friend of the O'Ryans and the Daniels.³⁸⁷¹ He had known Tsafendas for about a year and Tsafendas had lived in his house for a few weeks. However, Poggenpoel had also testified to the police, on September 15, that, "There was no mention or impression that he (Tsafendas) was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life."³⁸⁷² Poggenpoel was not asked to testify.

Someone who had known Tsafendas for more than a year was Elias Constantaras. He told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist who opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be "Hitler's best student." This clearly contradicted the defence case that Tsafendas had no political interest. Constantaras remembers being interviewed by one of Tsafendas's lawyers, but does not remember who it was. He was not asked to testify.³⁸⁷³

It is obvious from the choice of witnesses that the defence, very rightly so, did not chose people who knew Tsafendas well, but those who had a story to tell about his apparent "strangeness." Among all his contacts, there were many who knew Tsafendas much better than the ones who testified. First of all was Tsafendas's family, but none of them was asked to give evidence. Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law and Eleni Tsafantakis's husband, contacted the defence team to enquire about the case. The author does not know to whom he spoke to, but he was told that neither he, nor any other member of the family was needed to testify.³⁸⁷⁴ As we will see in the following chapter, every member of the Tsafendas family, including his step-mother, was questioned by the Commission of Enquiry. All said that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that he had never told them about the tapeworm.³⁸⁷⁵ Vlachopoulos said exactly that to Tsafendas's lawyers, which is almost certainly why the ³⁸⁷⁰ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 Oor Stafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁷¹ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

³⁸⁷² Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁸⁷³ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³⁸⁷⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

³⁸⁷⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

entire family was ruled out. For how could a man have a tapeworm in his stomach which controlled his life since 1935 and no one from his family knew about it?

Although most of those who knew Tsafendas better, including other family members, were in Pretoria, there were also people in Cape Town who knew him well, certainly much better than some of those chosen to testify. For example, John Bornman, a traffic policeman who shared quarters with Tsafendas for three months; Costas Michaletos a Geek man who had grown up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques; Mary Cathleen Scott, the Greek woman in whose boarding house Tsafendas lived for two months and which he visited frequently afterwards to eat; Ralph Lighton who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks; Elizabeth Groves, Tsafendas's landlady for six to seven weeks; Robert Smith, who lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for ten months; Kenneth Ross, who knew him for two months; Costas Chagios, who knew him for more than a year, James Summers, who knew Tsafendas for six weeks and Alice Theysser, who knew him for two months. We are not in position to know which of them was interviewed by the defence lawyers, but all of them had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and none of them had any strange story to tell about him.

More importantly, some of them had very positive views of Tsafendas while others had declared he was a Communist and against apartheid. Together, they flatly contradicted the picture the defence was trying to build of an insane person without political convictions. However, although all these witnesses were not suitable for the defence, they would have been extremely useful to the State in order to challenge the defence's claims. However, not even one of them was brought as a witness for the Prosecution.

It is important to state here that the police did not give the statements they had taken from Tsafendas to the defence and most likely also not to the State. The reasons are made clear in the summary trial section. According to Bloomberg, the defence also did not ask the police for any statements they might have taken from their client. It seems that neither the defence nor the State wondered what Tsafendas had told the police during the twenty days he was in custody.

After Tsafendas's brief hearing on October 6, confident that Tsafendas was schizophrenic, as diagnosed by the defence psychiatrists, Bloomberg and Cooper decided to show their hand to Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg. According to Bloomberg, van den Berg was convinced that Tsafendas had been dispatched to South Africa by a foreign agency to murder Dr. Verwoerd.³⁸⁷⁶ However, such claim is completely inaccurate as if van den Berg really believed that he should have used some evidence to support such claim in the summary trial and most importantly to challenge a defence witness who testified that Tsafendas practically supported apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd.

The most important evidence, that could have also challenged the fact that Tsafendas was mentally ill, was the report from the South African Embassy in Washington, on September 9, 1966, only three days after the assassination. This document informed the Secretary of the Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that according to the US Immigration authorities, which had a detailed file on Tsafendas and his hospitalization, Tsafendas had “shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)³⁸⁷⁷ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe.” If van den Berg really believed that Tsafendas was sent by some outside agency, this was perfect evidence for him, which could also have challenged the insanity plea.

In addition, there were the statements by several people who had testified to the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, a former member of the South African and Greek Communist Parties, even a member of the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Civil War. He was reported to the South African Police as a “dangerous Communist” and “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.” None of this evidence was used at the summary trial and the word “Communist” was never heard.

Although, according to Bloomberg, van den Berg acknowledged that Tsafendas had many strange ways and beliefs, he did not accept that he was insane, or so mentally impaired that he could not understand court proceedings and instruct his lawyers accordingly. To support his view that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, the Attorney-General gave the defence a copy of a report from a State psychiatrist, Professor Adolph Johannes van Wyk, Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, senior psychiatrist at Pretoria General Hospital and Deputy Commissioner of Mental Health of South Africa. The government had used Professor van Wyk's services in court in the past and he had examined Tsafendas on three occasions

³⁸⁷⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 90.

³⁸⁷⁷ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

without the knowledge or consent of the defence team.³⁸⁷⁸

Professor van Wyk's report read:

“He is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation. The tests indicate that his intellectual abilities are above average. He maintains that he is infested with a tapeworm, and that this influences his life. He denies that he suffers from hallucinations. I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence.”³⁸⁷⁹

According to Bloomberg, he and Cooper wondered whether their three psychiatrists and Professor van Wyk had examined the same man.³⁸⁸⁰ What they did not know was that van Wyk had examined Tsafendas most likely before their client started his act. However, the surprising thing here is that the above diagnosis by Professor van Wyk must have been made on September 23 or 24, as according to his testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, he examined Tsafendas again on October 4 and reached the conclusion that he was schizophrenic. This is what van Wyk testified:

“During the first two observations, on the 23rd and the 24th, I was a little uncertain, because the man was very evasive, and one could not really place him, to determine to what extent there was simulation, and I felt at that time that I definitely would not certify him with the information and with the interviews which I had had with him until then. I wanted to know more about his background; I wanted to know more about the motivation for the act, would he be able to give this? Although he was evasive in that respect, it could also be a schizophrenic symptom. They often say ‘I don't know... It may be...’³⁸⁸¹

However, after examining him twice on October 4, the first time with David Bloomberg present, Professor van Wyk “definitely decided” that Tsafendas was ³⁸⁷⁸ Cooper, 2016: 107.

³⁸⁷⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 81-82.

³⁸⁸⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 81-82.

³⁸⁸¹ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

schizophrenic.³⁸⁸² Therefore, the Attorney-General must have been aware of the new diagnosis by Professor van Wyk when he met with Bloomberg and Cooper after the hearing on October 6. If we assume that Bloomberg is mistaken about the timing of this meeting and that it took place earlier than this, then again, on September 28 and 29, Mr. Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus, a psychologist who was appointed by the Attorney-General and the State, examined Tsafendas. His conclusion was that there were “clear signs of schizophrenia” with Tsafendas.³⁸⁸³

Thus, even if the meeting had taken place before the time Bloomberg claims it took place, then again van den Berg must have been aware that one of the experts he had appointed himself had found Tsafendas to display “clear signs of schizophrenia.” Bloomberg’s claim that van den Berg believed that Tsafendas was sent by a foreign agency appears to be inaccurate. Firstly, the police did not come up with even the slightest evidence to suggest that Tsafendas was sent by a foreign agency.

In addition, van den Berg in his October 3 memorandum regarding Tsafendas did not mention anything of the sort. If he believed that Tsafendas was anything like this, he must have surely mentioned it there. In addition, since the memorandum was written on the 3rd, that was before Bloomberg and Cooper disclose their hand, therefore he could not have made such an absurd claim, unless he was bluffing. Of course the fact that Bloomberg might be mistaken about van den Berg’s alleged claim cannot also be ruled out. As for the supposed claim by van den Berg that Tsafendas’s deed was premeditated, this is something that he could easily have proven by using Tsafendas’s statement to Major Rossouw in which he confessed how he had planned and executed the act.

POLICE AND STATE BEFORE THE SUMMARY TRIAL

South Africa’s ruling circles were in deep shock after Dr. Verwoerd’s killing, stunned that an assassin had penetrated to the seat of power. However, what truly worried them was the nature of the assassin and the possibility that his action was politically inspired, perhaps a carefully plotted and defiant demonstration of opposition to the rule of apartheid.³⁸⁸⁴ If that was the case, such a damning revelation would surely come out in a trial and world attention would be focussed on the workings of apartheid.³⁸⁸⁵ This was not a scenario that appealed to the men of power.

³⁸⁸² Adolph Johannes van Wyk testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁸³ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Thus, as we have seen, within a short time of the assassination the South African press and especially the Afrikaans press, manipulated by the apartheid authorities, had already labelled Tsafendas as a psychopath. On some occasions the manipulation was not necessary as apartheid supporters eager to protect the memory of their beloved leader were quick to speculate with conviction that the assassin was probably a psychopath, as no sane person could have killed such a wonderful and adored prime minister. For example, in the Afrikaans-language Dagbreek, on which Dr. Verwoerd was chairman, Lod Spies, an advocate from Johannesburg who had never met Tsafendas, said that “the attack on the Premier was presumably done by a psychopath who was possibly not suffering from an acute form of the abnormality, but possibly shows some characteristics of the abnormality.”³⁸⁸⁶

However, this was not enough for the authorities, who wanted to be certain that nothing damaging to them would come out of the trial. Thus they left nothing to chance. Judge Beyers, the Judge President of the Cape and a supporter of the government, was named to preside over the proceedings, while the prosecution was placed in the hands of the Attorney-General of the Cape, Willem van den Bergh, who, it transpired, was more than willing to aid the government's cause. As we will see, van den Bergh did not hesitate to lie, bluntly and publicly, to protect this aim.

Finally, on September 9, only three days after the assassination, it was decided that Tsafendas would face a summary trial rather than the conventional judicial process.³⁸⁸⁷ During the apartheid years, the Attorney-General was given the right in political cases to order a summary trial without a preparatory examination. This meant that accused persons, such as Tsafendas, were unable to prepare their defence in the normal way, being deprived of opportunities which even a murderer could enjoy in a non-political case.³⁸⁸⁸

³⁸⁸⁴ Morris, 2004: 185.

³⁸⁸⁵ Sifakis, 2013: 645.

³⁸⁸⁶ Dagbreek, 11 September 1966, “Tsafendas: Party se psigopaat ...”

³⁸⁸⁷ The Cape Times, 10 September 1966:1, ‘Top security for trial of assassin.’

³⁸⁸⁸ “A Distinguished South African Lawyer,” 1965: 8-10.

As far as the author can establish, Attorney-General van den Berg never interviewed Tsafendas and all the information he received about him was provided by the police. He appointed Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk, Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, and Jacobus Erasmus, a clinical psychologist at Weskoppies Hospital in Pretoria, to examine Tsafendas. Both concluded that Tsafendas was schizophrenic (Their cases are examined in detail later in this chapter as they contained several inconsistencies).

Furthermore, the South African authorities had in their possession more than a hundred and fifty statements by people who knew Tsafendas and none of them had stated that Tsafendas had shown any signs of schizophrenia or mental abnormality or any of the symptoms described by van den Berg's two experts; on the contrary he was characterised as a normal man, very capable and with high intelligence. The authorities were also in possession of at least six statements from people who had testified that Tsafendas had faked mental illness so as to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. In addition, a medical report from Grafton State Hospital revealed that Tsafendas had staged the pretence of madness in the USA. Other medical reports, secret telegrams, documents and PIDE reports stated that Tsafendas was not insane and that his admissions to hospitals were either voluntary or that he was taken there after showing signs of mental illness during interrogation. None of this evidence appears to have been available to the State experts or was simply ignored by them.

As we also saw, the South African police discovered ample evidence that Tsafendas was a committed Communist, that he had been a dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party, was a member of the Greek Communist Party and of the DSE, the party's military wing during the Greek Civil War; that he was fanatically opposed to apartheid, had been a member of the British anti-apartheid movement and that participated in a demonstration in London, holding a placard showing a man in a Ku Klux Klan uniform captioned "Dr. Verwoerd."

Most importantly, Tsafendas had made no secret of the fact that he considered Dr. Verwoerd personally to be a tyrant and a dictator, describing him as "Hitler's best student" who had applied some Nazi policies to South Africa's non-Whites. The assassin was also anti-colonialist and had been arrested by the Portuguese police for promulgating propaganda against the Portuguese government. Finally, the police had also discovered that Tsafendas had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable on grounds that he was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. Was there the remotest possibility that the South African authorities would allow this derogatory portrayal of South Africa and its leader to become known or permit such things to be stated in open court by a man who was demonstrably political?

PRINCIPALS AT THE SUMMARY TRIAL

The Judge President of the Cape, Mr. Justice Andries Beyers was sitting with two assessors acting in an advisory capacity. These were a Cape Town advocate, Peter William Edward Baker S.C., who was well known to Tsafendas's attorney, David Bloomberg, and who later became a judge, and a psychiatrist from Pietermaritzburg, Dr. P.H. Henning. It seemed sensible for the judge to have access to an experienced psychiatrist of his own. The Attorney-General, Willem van den Berg S.C., led for the State, with Donald Brunette as his assistant.³⁸⁸⁹

JUDGE ANDRIES BEYERS (1903-1975)

Andries Brink Beyers known to his friends as Andrew or A.B.,³⁸⁹⁰ graduated from the University of Stellenbosch and was appointed as a lecturer there in 1928. It was at Stellenbosch that he met Dr. Verwoerd, who was also a lecturer there at the time.³⁸⁹¹ He quickly gained a reputation as an outspoken and unorthodox thinker and a sound Roman Dutch Lawyer, laying the grounds for his subsequent characterisation by a Cape Bar chairman as “a legend in his lifetime.” Beyers's introduction to politics came when he served as a secretary to a cabinet minister and came to know many politicians.³⁸⁹² He joined the Cape Bar in 1936 and became Henry Fagan³⁸⁹³'s junior counsel on the government side in Ndlwana. In 1938, with a formidable reputation as a criminal lawyer behind him, Beyers took silk and went into politics. He stood as the United Party candidate for Oudtshoorn during the general election that year, but was not elected. He later gave up active politics, but he ³⁸⁸⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 88-89; Diemont, 1995: 132-133.

³⁸⁹⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 60; Diemont, 1995: 131.

³⁸⁹¹ Diemont, 1995: 132.

³⁸⁹² Diemont, 1995: 131, 136.

³⁸⁹³ Henry Allan Fagan (1889-1963) was one of South Africa's most eminent jurists and loved authors. He served as South Africa's Chief of Justice (1957-1959) and was a member of the Fagan Commission (discussed earlier). He was also critical of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd's policies calling them “hopelessly impractical” (TIME, 29 February 1960: 31, ‘South Africa: Rustle on the veld’).

changed his political trajectory and became an adviser to the National Party.³⁸⁹⁴

Beyers represented the apartheid government in several high-profile trials,³⁸⁹⁵ notably as in the Harris case concerning the removal of Coloured voters from the Electoral Roll. Ultimately, the Coloured voters were removed because the government increased the size of the Senate and of the Appellate Division and made a raft of judicial appointments.³⁸⁹⁶ Beyers and his colleague, the above-mentioned van Wyk, had no hesitation in slapping down junior lawyers of the Cape Bar who dared to speak against the removal of the voters.³⁸⁹⁷ The voters' attorney, Pilkington-Jordan, wrote to United Party leader J.G.N. Strauss as follows: "Beyers again treated the Court with scant courtesy and both he and van Wyk were thoroughly rude to Duncan (Graeme Duncan KC was the leader of the legal team for the voters). They really are monkeys in dinner jackets and the sartorial elegance of that garb does not in the least conceal the barbarian beneath ..."³⁸⁹⁸

Nevertheless, it was Beyers's performance at these proceedings which led to his meteoric rise. He was rewarded with an appointment to the Cape bench on October 1, 1955,³⁸⁹⁹ a move held by many to be nakedly political.³⁹⁰⁰ Thereafter, he was promoted in short order, to the Appellate Division in 1958, and a year later as Judge President of the Cape High Court, a position he held until his retirement on July 31, 1973.³⁹⁰¹ This latter appointment proved highly controversial. Beyers had been on the Bench for fewer than five years and was junior to Joseph Herbststein, who had been acting as Judge President for some months and was expected to be appointed as the permanent Judge President.³⁹⁰²

In the early 1950s there was one Black member of the Cape Town bar, Ndhlovu. He could not be accommodated in Temple Chambers because the Group Areas Act had just been enacted barring him from a building in a "white" area. Beyers and van Wyk refused to go to the common room if Ndhlovu was expected to be there.³⁹⁰³

³⁸⁹⁴ Davis and le Roux, 2009: 18; Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 8-9; Loveland, 1999: 208.

³⁸⁹⁵ Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/6000000008317660124>

³⁸⁹⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Dugard, 1978: 31; Sachs, 1973: 143-145.

³⁸⁹⁷ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 8-9.

³⁸⁹⁸ Davis and le Roux, 2009: 25.

³⁸⁹⁹ Loveland, 1999: 363.

³⁹⁰⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 25.

³⁹⁰¹ Davis and le Roux, 2009: 18; Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 67; Sachs, 1973: 257-258.

³⁹⁰² Diemont, 1995: 131.

³⁹⁰³ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 8-9.

According to Judge Wilfrid Cooper (and Tsafendas's advocate):

“[Beyers was] as deeply racist as the ordinary man in the street. He had his own solution to the problem of race-mixing. He said the problem in this country was that the White man didn't understand the Black man ... and he drew a distinction between the Black man and the Coloured man ... and he said 'As far as the Coloured people are concerned, we must fuck them white' ... that was his solution ... The Black man remained an insoluble problem. He didn't understand ... he was at a loss...”³⁹⁰⁴

Despite such racist sentiments as outlined by Cooper and the fact that he was an outspoken government supporter, according to Judge Marius Diemnot and David Bloomberg, Beyers deplored racial segregation in court and with the support of some of his colleagues he managed to keep the Cape Supreme Court free of apartheid notices.³⁹⁰⁵ Bloomberg told the author that Beyers “would not allow apartheid to be practised in his court, and he was quite famous for ensuring that there were no apartheid practices in his court. He wouldn't allow a defendant, White or Black, to be handcuffed or shackled in his court. He was an Africana, and pro-government – which was the apartheid government – but at the same time he was a libertarian. He had liberal instincts as well. I know that sounds a bit of a contradiction.”³⁹⁰⁶ Due to his insistence on keeping apartheid out of his courtroom, some Coloureds called him “Big Boy.”³⁹⁰⁷

Once, when he went on circuit in Stellenbosch, Beyers refused to go into court because a partition separated White and non-White spectators. “Unless that thing is removed, I'll sit and hear all the cases under the oak tree outside,” he said. When an official of the Department for Public Works fixed a notice on the door of a Supreme Court cloakroom saying, “White Judges Only,” Beyers asked the official, “How many Black judges have we got? Take that notice down today.”³⁹⁰⁸

On another occasion, at a luncheon in Grahamstown to commemorate the establishment of the High Court in that city, Minister of Justice John Vorster delivered the keynote speech. He declared that South Africa satisfied all the requirements of a democracy in that it had regular, free and fair elections and an independent judiciary. Beyers told ³⁹⁰⁴ Wilfrid Cooper in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁹⁰⁵ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014; Sachs, 1973: 258.

³⁹⁰⁶ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

³⁹⁰⁷ Kahn, 1968: 153.

³⁹⁰⁸ Diemont, 1995: 135.

Vorster, “Yes, John, you say we are a democracy, but you forgot to say non-whites could not vote!” Vorster smiled and shook his head. It was the equivalent of saying, “Who takes Beyers seriously?”³⁹⁰⁹

According to Judge Robin Marais, who had acted as Beyers’s Registrar for some time, Beyers could never understand Black people but had great empathy with Coloureds. He spoke on one occasion to the Stellenbosch University Law faculty about the injustice being done to a Coloured man who came to Cape Town to give evidence. From the railway station to the court and back again he could not find a place where he could have a coffee or use a toilet. This, said Beyers, was “disgraceful.” This story did not go down well with the audience who booed him, and finally he sat down, wondering at his listeners’ insensitivity to something he felt was clearly outrageous.³⁹¹⁰

In 1962, in the Drakenstein case, to the embarrassment of many of his peers, Beyers urged a review of prison conditions. Beyers sentenced a Coloured prison warder to ten years’ imprisonment and ten strokes for killing an African prisoner. Beyers commented that it was strange that only the warder was in the dock. The doctor who gave testimony said that except for victims of train crashes, he had never seen a body so mangled. Judge Beyers said he hoped the case would lift the veil from conditions in the prison service and he suggested a judicial inquiry.³⁹¹¹ Such a call from such a quarter made headlines countrywide, but it embarrassed the government, which was forced to explain why it did not feel that such a move was justified. Beyers also encouraged a boycott of the newly-built Nico Malan Theatre which was built with public money but admitted only Whites.³⁹¹²

However, Judge Beyers took a hard line when a question arose concerning conditions for detainees under the 90-day law. In 1964, in Rossouw v. Sachs, the argument was whether such a detainee should be allowed reading and writing materials. The detainee in question was Albie Sachs, a Cape Town advocate and anti-apartheid activist. Two senior judges of the Cape Provisional Division, Louis van Winsen and J.J. Banks, ruled that a reasonable supply of such materials should be provided since depriving a prisoner of them amounted to punishment. The judges said, “It would be surprising to find that the legislature intended punishment to be meted out to an unconvicted prisoner.” However, the Appellate Division, in ³⁹⁰⁹ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 69.

³⁹¹⁰ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 67-70.

³⁹¹¹ Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016; International Defence and Aid Fund, 1967: 1.

³⁹¹² Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 67-69.

a judgement delivered by Judge Ogilvie Thompson, held otherwise. Judge Beyers concurred with this judgment.³⁹¹³

A significant historical case concerned the University of Cape Town. On June 13, 1972, Judge Beyers extended indefinitely an order restraining the police from breaking up meetings on the campus. The decision was welcomed by the students as a step towards their ultimate goal, which was the right to hold peaceful demonstrations. As Judge President of the Cape Province, Beyers ruled that anybody who interfered with students on the steps of Jameson Hall (where police had launched a baton charge) was going beyond the terms of a proclamation issued a week ago which banned open-air political gatherings in 18 university towns. The governing council of the University of Cape Town had applied for a restraining order on the grounds that the campus was not public property.³⁹¹⁴

Beyers was also characterised as a compassionate man of “pronounced personality and sometimes humanity”³⁹¹⁵ who opposed the death penalty.³⁹¹⁶ In a famous case in Cape Town, Beyers clearly dispensed justice from his heart rather than employing the letter of the law. Ronald Cohen, a prominent businessman, was on trial for murdering his wife. It became clear that there was a hidden factor in the case which Cohen refused to address. The suspicion was that his wife had been having an affair and Cohen was too proud to admit it. In what fellow lawyers described as an extraordinary decision, Judge Beyers declared: “There is no mitigating circumstance that the court has heard from Mr. Cohen, but I know Mr. Cohen is lying. I know he is concealing something. And I find that that is a mitigating circumstance.” He was therefore not sentenced to death. There was widespread sympathy for Cohen and public support for the judgment, but in truth, Beyers acted unprofessionally in that there was no evidence of any mitigating circumstance.³⁹¹⁷

In court, Beyers appeared formidable, even frightening, but his colleagues believed he had a big heart and sympathy for “the little man.” He was famous for not taking notes because he had a photographic memory.³⁹¹⁸ David Bloomberg told the author about Beyers’ ability:

³⁹¹³ Dugard, 1978: 333.

³⁹¹⁴ The Times (London), 14 June 1972, ‘Ban on Cape Town Police.’

³⁹¹⁵ Davis and le Roux, 2009: 18.

³⁹¹⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁹¹⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁹¹⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 98; Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 74.

“He was tremendous. In fact, there was one famous case in South Africa where the counsel was appearing before him, and then Judge Beyers closed his eyes, and was slumped over the desk. And the counsel said to him, ‘Judge, I’m afraid it appears as if you are not listening to what I am saying.’ And he came to, and he said, ‘I will repeat to you everything you said in the last three minutes.’ And he rattled off the last three minutes, where he had appeared to be slumped and asleep. So he was a very, very astute judge.”³⁹¹⁹

However, as we will see, this was not the case at Tsafendas’s summary trial, when Beyers seemed not to remember exactly what some witnesses had said.

Although a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and of the National Party, Beyers was not blind about apartheid and declared, “Dr. Verwoerd is an intellectual giant, but his policy will lead to disaster.” When he was asked by the government to represent the Cape Supreme Court at the State funeral of Dr. Verwoerd in Pretoria, he was in a dilemma. He knew that he had to preside over the trial of Tsafendas and believed that in the eyes of the public his impartiality might be suspect if he attended the funeral. He sent Judge Marius Diemont in his place.³⁹²⁰ In 1975, Andries Beyers was in hospital dying from cancer. By an extraordinary coincidence, just across the corridor, Judge van Wyk was also dying from cancer.³⁹²¹ ³⁹¹⁹ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

³⁹²⁰ Diemont, 1995: 132.

³⁹²¹ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 77.

DAY 1: 17 OCTOBER 1966INTRODUCTION

As we have seen, the defence team, due to the extraordinary efforts of David Bloomberg, who had managed in a very limited time to build a very strong defence line, based on witnesses, medical records and the diagnosis of four psychiatrists and a one psychologist. It was then up to Advocate Wilfrid Cooper, the “tiger” of the courts to use them efficiency in the summary trial. The State, should have been in a much stronger position, especially since knowing what the defence line was going to be and since the South African Police had in its possession overwhelming evidence not only to challenge the Defence’s line, but to easily break it down. However, none of this evidence was going to be used during the summary trial and most probably was never given to the State.

The State’s two experts, obviously unaware of the police’s evidence, had agreed with the Defence’s experts that the accused was schizophrenic. In addition, both sides were in possession of Tsafendas’s medical record which confirmed their diagnosis, so the summary trial should have been a straightforward case. However, this was not going to be so and instead a show (summary) trial took place.³⁹²²

There trial started at 10.00 a.m. when Judge Beyers entered the packed courtroom in his traditional scarlet robes.³⁹²³ Tsafendas wore a double-breasted suit and a light-coloured shirt with a maroon tie.³⁹²⁴ A maximum three hundred spectators plus forty reporters squeezed into the courtroom, which was heavily guarded inside and out. Security was unprecedented. Plain-clothed police officers were posted inside the courtroom as well as around the court building, while police marksmen took up strategic positions on the rooftops of nearby buildings. The precautions were the most stringent for any case heard at the Cape High Court and lasted for the duration of proceedings.³⁹²⁵

Judge Beyers briefly addressed the public: “I wish to say a few words to the public who are here in unusual numbers today. You have a right to be here because in this country we believe that justice be done publically and must also be seen to be done, theretofore it is ³⁹²² Herbstein and Evenson, 1989: 16.

³⁹²³ Bloomberg, 2007: 88-89.

³⁹²⁴ D’ Oliveira, 1977: 208.

³⁹²⁵ Bloomberg, 2007: 83-84; Schoeman, 1975: 4.

right that in a case like this the public must be here. This case might stir up emotions in certain people. These emotions would have to be controlled. If I find any behaviour on the part of the public which will disturb the quiet of this court I will not hesitate for a moment to have you all sent out of the court and continue alone.”³⁹²⁶

Judge Beyers then addressed the press:

“In this country we believe that justice be done publically and should be seen to be done. We realise that only a small proportion of the public can be accommodated in a court of law, and the Press represents all the many others who cannot be here. For this reason the press is welcome in this court. But this case is at the moment sub judice. This is a serious business, a man is being tried for his life. The trial is in the hands of myself and my two assessors and our hands alone. There is one thing that will not be allowed and which I hope will never be allowed in this country, and that is trial by newspaper. If the newspapers go beyond the bounds of what is correct in a matter that is sub judice, I shall have not the least compunction in refusing that newspaper further access to this court, and if they should transgress at all the lines which the law allows, I shall not have the least compunction in applying the full rigor of the law-not that I believe it will be necessary to do so.”³⁹²⁷

Immediately afterwards, the case was called, Advocate Wilfrid Cooper rose and, addressing the Judge, said that in the view of the defence, the accused was mentally disordered in terms Section 28 of the Mental Disorders Act of 1916 which states “This section provide that if a court finds a person to be mentally disordered, he must be committed for detention in a mental institution until the State President orders his release” and therefore unfit to plead.³⁹²⁸

Cooper reminded the judge that according to the Act, a person was mentally disordered if he was incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or was a danger to himself or others. Advocate Cooper then stressed that the Act referred to the mental condition of the accused at the time of his arraignment or during his trial, that being now, on October 17; the court was not concerned with his mental condition at the time of the alleged offence. Cooper said, “This, my Lord, is on the basis that this court cannot and will not try an insane person,

³⁹²⁶ Pretoria News, 17 October 1966: 1, ‘Press and the public warned.’

³⁹²⁷ Pretoria News, 17 October 1966: 1, ‘Press and the public warned.’

³⁹²⁸ Pretoria News, 17 October 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas mentally disordered defence contends as trial starts.’

irrespective of his culpability. I accordingly apply to your Lordship at this stage to hold an enquiry into the accused's mental condition."³⁹²⁹

The Attorney-General raised no objection to such an enquiry being held and the judge then ruled that such an enquiry would now take place, a proceeding described by Bloomberg as in effect, "a trial within a trial."³⁹³⁰ Advocate Cooper then outlined the evidence that the defence would offer to argue that the accused was suffering from schizophrenia and was mentally disordered. The first witness called was the psychiatrist Dr. Cooper.

THIRD-PARTY INFORMATION IN FORENSIC MENTAL HEALTH ASSESSMENTS

Before we consider the testimonies of those who examined Tsafendas, we should take under consideration a very important issue that applies to all those who examined Tsafendas at the time of the judiciary proceedings, namely the collection and evaluation of third-party information (TPI). In "any forensic mental health assessment (FMHA), third-party information is a very important aspect of the assessments in order to provide a more accurate evaluation." This is because it enables the clinician to detect "distortions in self-reported information."³⁹³¹

TPI is defined as "a type of collateral source that is not obtained directly from the individual being evaluated." It serves an essential role in forensic mental health assessment for three primary reasons: greater need for accuracy, issues with response style, and the greater scrutiny that the evaluator's conclusions may receive. TPI may be obtained through interviews with personal and professional collateral informants or through reviews of various forms of written documentation. It may be used to help detect response styles and malingering, making it vital to evaluation of the validity of the examinee's self-report.³⁹³²

TPI is important in forensic criminal cases for five reasons:

- The use of TPI to assess response style is an integral part of a comprehensive approach to FMHA and provides valuable collateral information.

³⁹²⁹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹³⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 85.

³⁹³¹ Heilbrun et al, 2007: 96; Heilbrun et al, 1994: 400.

³⁹³² Hunt and Kimonis, 2015.

- Some measures relevant to FMHA require the forensic clinician to incorporate TPI as part of the assessment and scoring process.
- The use of collateral and corroborative information increases accuracy in detecting deception.
- TPI information can increase the face validity of FMHA and enhance the credibility of the evaluation.
- TPI may be helpful in allowing the forensic clinician to clarify a constellation of symptoms and identify, confirm, and or/disconfirm the various forms of psychopathology.³⁹³³

Forensic clinicians widely recognize the importance and value of TPI, whether in the form of documents and records, third-party interviews, or scientific data produced by researchers.³⁹³⁴ It helps to promote overall accuracy, detects bias from other sources, enhances impartiality, and increases credibility.³⁹³⁵ It also performs the important role of verifying the information collected by the patient. Putting TPI together with information from the patient greatly improves the ability of the clinician to detect the possibility of malingering. In several cases it has been proven that “lying is not accurately detected by mental health professionals and other professional groups” when their opinion is based solely on information from the patient. People such as relatives, friends, workmates, neighbours and flatmates provided the best TPI because they had close and regular contact with the accused.³⁹³⁶

Professor Kirk Heilbrun, one of the world's leading forensic psychologists, renowned for his research on TPI in forensic cases, emphasised, in a personal interview with the author, its importance and the significance of its absence in Tsafendas's case, “an important and complex case like this.”³⁹³⁷ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, a defence witness in the case who examined Tsafendas, told the author that “in psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends and medical records.”³⁹³⁸ Mr. van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Alban Burke, Robert L. Sadoff, Kirk Heilbrun ³⁹³³ Heilbrun et al, 2002: 220-221.

³⁹³⁴ Heilbrun et al, 2015: 21.

³⁹³⁵ Heilbrun et al, 2015: 38.

³⁹³⁶ Heilbrun et al, 2003: 69-79.

³⁹³⁷ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

³⁹³⁸ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

and Phillip Resnick emphasised to the author that to make an accurate diagnosis, additional information was required from outside sources and agreed to the importance of information held by people who knew Tsafendas.³⁹³⁹ It is standard practice since the lack of input from any one of the three could lead to a wrong conclusion.

The leading forensic psychiatrist Professor John Macdonald, who was renowned for his discovery of the Macdonald triad of sociopathic traits and for his profiling of serial killers, said that “simulation is more frequent when a suspect faces the death sentence.”³⁹⁴⁰

According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, the prime objective in a criminal case where the accused seems to be mentally unstable is to establish whether he is scheming or not. That is why it is important to have his medical records and information from his friends and family.³⁹⁴¹

In an interview with the author, Professor Alban Burke stressed the importance of talking to people who know the patient. He said:

“In forensic cases, and I work at Weskoppies Hospital where we get these kinds of assessments, if you are doing an assessment for legal purposes, you need to speak to as many people as possible. You need to use as many documents as possible, and it is your right to have access to a document whether the police have produced it or not ... the psychologist and psychiatrist should have questioned, and they should have done extensive interviews, because the problem with any psychiatric order is, you cannot make a diagnosis based on what you see and hear alone. It has to be backed up by your psychological tests; it has to be backed up by a wide range of investigations, and with these kinds of observations, you speak to family, you speak to school, you speak to as many people as possible.”³⁹⁴²

Despite all of the above, plus the fact that this was a forensic case and Tsafendas was known to have faked illness at least twice in the past, none of those who examined him spoke to anyone who knew him; not even a single one. What is more, none of the examiners asked for any additional TPI, with the exception of Dr. Sakinofsky, who managed, on his own initiative, to get Tsafendas's medical records from the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in ³⁹³⁹ Prof. Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Prof. Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Prof. Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Prof. Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³⁹⁴⁰ Macdonald, 1958: 61.

³⁹⁴¹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

³⁹⁴² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

Hamburg. None of those who examined Tsafendas was a forensic psychiatrist. Nor were any of them experienced in dealing with similar situations, with the exception of Professor van Wyk. Neither the State nor the Defence found it necessary to call a forensic psychiatrist to examine Tsafendas. Dr. Sakinofsky did tell the court in his testimony that a forensic psychiatrist should have been called to examine Tsafendas, but this was never done. Finally, no-one became aware of the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.

Dr. Sakinofsky cautioned that while “such a maxim certainly holds true as a goal,” it was not always possible in practice:

“Collateral information may not be available when a patient is first seen (as in an emergency room) or may never be available or it may not be available for reasons of confidentiality. Not having such collateral does not necessarily invalidate diagnoses made without such; it depends on the nature of the individual case. Most clinical diagnoses are made in practice on the clinical examination and on the mental state and treatment may be started before collateral information is forthcoming, if available.”³⁹⁴³

Although Dr. Sakinofsky's reservation is valid and certainly applied to the circumstances in which he examined Tsafendas shortly after the assassination, it did not apply to the wider aspects of this case. It would have been very easy to seek additional information about Tsafendas as there were tens of people who knew him in Cape Town and who were interviewed by the defence and by the police. The specialists who examined Tsafendas, both for the State and the defence, could have found and interviewed these people with the help of the defence and the police. However, not one of those who examined Tsafendas spoke to anyone who knew him personally. This was not entirely their fault, however, considering the obstacles in their path. As we will see, Dr. Cooper was discouraged from making outside contacts, and there was a problem of time, since only fifteen days elapsed between the examinations of Tsafendas and the start of his trial.

Further, the experts had no access to any written TPI. Neither Tsafendas's statements to the police nor any other information about him or his past were given to them. The only exceptions were Dr. Sakinofsky as stated before, and Dr. Cooper who was shown by the defence three medical reports on Tsafendas, although this was after he had examined him and diagnosed him as schizophrenic. The other experts did not even have sight of Tsafendas's medical records, being told orally of their contents. They were also advised that this was a straightforward case and that the man they examined was a schizophrenic with a long history of schizophrenia.

³⁹⁴³ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 16 December 2016.

Reyner van Zyl, the a clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas on behalf of the defence and testified in court told the author that he never spoke to anybody who knew Tsafendas, he never received any written information about him and was told verbally about Tsafendas's long mental history and the content of some of the medical reports. Asked whether he saw Tsafendas's medical records or if he had any TPI about him, van Zyl replied,

“No, no, no, we were just told, we were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man ... And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”³⁹⁴⁴

It is interesting to compare the Tsafendas case with that of David Pratt, who shot and wounded Dr. Verwoerd in 1960. After his defence team pleaded that he was mentally disordered and unfit to stand trial, Pratt was sent by the judge to a mental hospital for fourteen days' observation under a State psychiatrist, Professor Lamont. In an effort to get a more comprehensive understanding of Pratt, Professor Lamont interviewed five people who had different relationships with him. Two were relatives, one a very good friend, the fourth was his former doctor (a general practitioner) and the fifth was one of Pratt's employees. None of those who examined Tsafendas did anything similar, and because of time pressures, they were unable to double-check what Tsafendas was telling them, simply taking his word for granted. Dr. MacGregor, psychiatrist and defence witness, referring to a problem common to all those who examined Tsafendas, said that due to lack of time, he “had to take shortcuts” and that he “accepted what was given” to him from the accused, without being able to check the information or to seek third-party input.³⁹⁴⁵

Pratt was also examined in the relative comfort of a hospital over a period of fourteen ³⁹⁴⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³⁹⁴⁵ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

days, seen every day by Professor Lamont.³⁹⁴⁶ Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Cooper for six hours and by the other psychiatrists for four and a half hours each while in custody in Caledon Square police station. This was the place where, as well as being physically tortured, he was forced to sleep for one and half months on the concrete floor with a single, dirty blanket. Prof. Tuviah Zabow believes that the environment where the examination takes place is very important, and that Tsafendas should have been taken to a hospital to be examined.³⁹⁴⁷

TPI is essential not only for psychiatrists involved in FMHA, but also for psychologists. According to Specialty Guidelines for Forensic Psychologists, a forensic clinician conducting an evaluation actively seeks information “that will differentially test rival hypotheses” (p.661). One of the reasons this is necessary is to determine whether the patient “presents but does not actually experience the symptoms of a mental disorder.”³⁹⁴⁸ None of the psychologists who examined Tsafendas had access to any TPI about Tsafendas, and as we have seen, van Zyl was advised verbally about his medical record and simply told that he was clearly schizophrenic.

³⁹⁴⁶ Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report about David Prat in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, 'Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.'

³⁹⁴⁷ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 2 September 2016.

³⁹⁴⁸ Heilbrun et al, 2002: 221.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 1: DR. HAROLD COOPER

DR. COOPER'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Harold Cooper graduated as a doctor in 1944, obtained a Diploma in Psychological Medicine in 1950 and with a thesis in psychiatry became a Doctor of Medicine in 1953. He held the following full-time appointments: Three and a half years at Tara Psychiatric Hospital, Johannesburg, six months at Weskoppies Hospital, a mental institution, in Pretoria, eighteen months at Valkenberg Hospital, also a mental institution in Cape Town. Since 1954 he acted as part-time consultant psychiatrist at Groote Schuur Hospital, Cape Town. He was in private practice continuously since 1954, dealing with a large variety of mental disturbances, including the diagnosis and treatment of schizophrenics.³⁹⁴⁹ It should also be noted, though it was not mentioned at the trial, that in a 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy, the court refused to accept Dr. Cooper's psychiatric evaluation. Dr. Cooper had declared a person accused of murder to be "mentally disordered" (as he found Tsafendas to be), but the judge dismissed his diagnosis as based on improbable evidence, and found the accused fit to stand trial.³⁹⁵⁰

DR. COOPER'S EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Cooper testified that he examined Tsafendas at the request of David Bloomberg for the first time on October 1, 1966. He saw him again on October 4, then on October 11 along with Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow, and a final time on October 14. The average length of each session was an hour and a half, thus six hours in all.

Dr. Cooper testified:

"I made a diagnosis of schizophrenia on the basis of my interviews with him, but, in order to try and add either supportive or negative evidence towards this diagnosis, I felt it essential to elicit a history from him and try and decide whether the history I obtained from ³⁹⁴⁹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁵⁰ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. P: 17. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1967.

him was consistent with my impression of him suffering from schizophrenia.”³⁹⁵¹

What Dr. Cooper is saying, and the same applies to some of the other psychiatrists and psychologists who examined Tsafendas, is that he formed his conclusions in the first place on what Tsafendas told him and instead of seeking confirming or contrary evidence from third parties, he went back and asked Tsafendas himself. Although partly forced on him by circumstances beyond his control, including a shortage of time and a rebarbative attitude by the police, this seems an extraordinary method of forming a diagnosis, particularly in a criminal case of such huge importance. As we will see, Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists made many assumptions about Tsafendas, and their testimonies contain inaccuracies about his character and life which could have been avoided had they spoken to friends, acquaintances and kin.

Professor Kirk Heilbrun disagreed with the method used by Dr. Cooper (and subsequently the other psychiatrists, too) to diagnose Tsafendas, and was surprised that the doctor relied only on what he was told by him. He told the author that if he was in Dr. Cooper's position, he “would have sought information from the second and third domains [collateral interviews with people who knew Tsafendas and his medical and criminal record] rather than additional information from the first domain [Tsafendas].” He added he did not believe it possible to make an accurate diagnosis about a patient, especially in a forensic case, simply by listening to him over three ninety-minute sessions without additional, extraneous information.³⁹⁵²

However, the lack of TPI, at least in Dr. Cooper's case, is hardly his fault. When he attempted to collect additional information about Tsafendas's background and activities before the assassination he was discouraged by the police from probing too deeply. This, he was told, was their job. He was also told that Tsafendas was a perfectly straightforward case of a schizophrenic. This led Dr. Cooper to have serious misgivings about the whole procedure and to wonder if the authorities were perhaps covering up their lax security procedures and pressing for Tsafendas to be declared insane so that they could avoid any responsibility for assassination.³⁹⁵³

³⁹⁵¹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁵² Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

³⁹⁵³ Lambley, 1980: 239-240, 273; Dr. Lambley's The Psychology of Apartheid (1980) was very well received on the time of its publication and was published by The University of Georgia Press. In addition, the foreword

EXTRACTS FROM DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY³⁹⁵⁴

BACKGROUND OF THE CASE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Who requested you to interview the accused in this case?

DR. COOPER: The attorney for the defence, Mr. David Bloomberg.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And how many interviews, to date, have you had with the accused?

DR. COOPER: I have had four interviews.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The first interview that you had, when was that?

DR. COOPER: On the 1st October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In whose presence did you interview the accused?

DR. COOPER: In the presence of Mr. Bloomberg.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other person present?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The second interview?

DR. COOPER: On the 4th October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In the presence of anybody?

DR. COOPER: This interview was held jointly with my colleagues Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the third interview?

DR. COOPER: Was similarly held jointly on the 11th October, 1966, with Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The fourth interview?

DR. COOPER: The fourth interview was on the 14th October, 1966; this interview was individual, without the assistance of my colleagues.

of the book is written by Antony Storr, one of the leading psychiatrists of the previous century and Britain's most literate psychiatrist (The Guardian, 20 March 2001, 'Antony Storr obituary').

³⁹⁵⁴ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you were introduced to the accused at your first interview, was he told what your profession was? How did you introduce yourself?

DR. COOPER: He was told I was a doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: These interviews, could you tell His Lordship how long did they usually last?

DR. COOPER: They varied, but the average length of each interview was an hour and a half.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the purpose of examining the accused?

DR. COOPER: My purpose was to assess this man's mental condition.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you find the accused when you spoke to him?

DR. COOPER: At all times I found him soft-spoken, polite, co—operative and apparently fully prepared to co-operate with all questions that were put to him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards intelligence, what is your comment?

DR. COOPER: Concerning his intelligence, at an early stage I decided that this man was of normal intelligence, even quite high intelligence and throughout the interviews nothing arose to make me alter that opinion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What language did you speak to him?

DR. COOPER: I spoke to him in English.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is his fluency in English?

DR. COOPER: His fluency in English is perfectly adequate, and I was careful in this matter, and decided in my mind that he was perfectly able to do himself justice in replying to questions in English, DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of vocabulary has he?

DR. COOPER: Very adequate.

TSAFENDAS'S BEING UNABLE TO FOLLOW A CONVERSATION AFTER FIFTEEN MINUTES

DR. COOPER: This man's difficulty in thinking logically and assessing things and forming reasonable judgments and coming to reasonable conclusions becomes increasingly difficult as the complexity of what he is presented with increased, particularly in respect of time. If one talks to him over quarter of an hour, the first quarter of an hour if one asks him simple questions he gets along quite all right, but as the time goes on his thoughts drift more and more and he tends more and more to lose contact with what is going on around him.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO FOLLOW A CONVERSATION AFTER FIFTEEN MINUTES

Dr. Cooper described Tsafendas as man who is unable to follow a conversation after the first fifteen minutes and "as the time goes on his thoughts drift more and more and he tends more and more to lose contact with what is going on around him." Tsafendas spent one and a half months in police custody and throughout this period was constantly seen by Major Rossouw. Rossouw interrogated Tsafendas for several hours on several occasions and was present in Caledon Square police station throughout the time Tsafendas was held there. He testified to the Commission that Tsafendas "answered all the questions spontaneously" and that he (Rossouw) "never got the impression that he tried to evade any question." He made no mention of Tsafendas's alleged inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes or being unable to answer any questions.³⁹⁵⁵

As stated before, Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but as a very experienced interrogator, he would have noticed whether a prisoner was able to follow his questions and whether he was able to answer them in a satisfactory manner. Furthermore, both of Tsafendas's statements to the police seem to support Maj. Rossouw's testimony since Tsafendas answered all the questions perfectly sensibly while it is obvious from the length of the transcripts that each interrogation lasted far longer than fifteen minutes.

Professor van Wyk, the State psychiatrist appointed by the Attorney-General himself, had examined Tsafendas three times by October 6. He had written in his report, which was in the possession of the Attorney-General, that Tsafendas was “orientated,” adding, “He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation...I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence.”³⁹⁵⁶ However, although the Attorney-General had in his possession the report of his own expert-witness, which flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis, he did not use it to challenge his testimony.

³⁹⁵⁵ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Furthermore, just the following day at the court, Dr. Muller, also a defence witness, would completely contradict Dr. Cooper’s argument. The following dialogue took place between Dr. Muller and the Defence Counsel:

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You had no difficulty in communicating with him?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he have difficulty in expressing himself?

DR. MULLER: None at all.³⁹⁵⁷

In addition, none of the about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission mentioned anything like this. On the contrary some commented as to the exact opposite:

- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”³⁹⁵⁸
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas’s supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He “observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average ³⁹⁵⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 81.

³⁹⁵⁷ Dr. Hendrik Muller’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁵⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

person.”³⁹⁵⁹

- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”³⁹⁶⁰
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”³⁹⁶¹
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”³⁹⁶²
- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”³⁹⁶³
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”³⁹⁶⁴
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman.”³⁹⁶⁵

³⁹⁵⁹ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁶⁰ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

³⁹⁶¹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁶² Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

³⁹⁶³ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁶⁴ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁶⁵ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”³⁹⁶⁶

Furthermore, Tsafendas attended many interviews in his working life and appeared perfectly capable of answering questions or he would not have got the jobs:

- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament and one of the three men who had interviewed him and appointed him told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”³⁹⁶⁷
- Sydney Wiehand, who had also interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.”³⁹⁶⁸
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s employer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, Germany, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”³⁹⁶⁹
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”³⁹⁷⁰ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he ³⁹⁶⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁹⁶⁷ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁹⁶⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁹⁶⁹ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

³⁹⁷⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind.³⁹⁷¹

- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”³⁹⁷²
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”³⁹⁷³
- Gideon Cloete, also employed at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.³⁹⁷⁴
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”³⁹⁷⁵

Tsafendas was also interviewed by Limasollu Naci, owner of the private language college in Istanbul in 1961, and given the position of teacher of English. During a week’s probation, he was under observation. Obviously successful, he remained at the college for some six months before leaving on his own volition. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, does not remember Tsafendas, but stated firmly that her husband would have never appointed or kept on a teacher who was not able to follow a conversation. Teachers had also to deal with the students’ parents and someone at some point would have noticed if her had problems.³⁹⁷⁶ In fact, Limasollu Naci became a good friend of Tsafendas and spent a lot

³⁹⁷¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁷² Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

³⁹⁷³ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

³⁹⁷⁴ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

³⁹⁷⁵ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁷⁶ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

of time with him during those six months.³⁹⁷⁷ If Tsafendas had problems, would he not have noticed?

More importantly, Tsafendas was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for his South African permanent residency permit and neither of them noticed any “thought-disorder,” though they were not psychiatrists:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”³⁹⁷⁸ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.³⁹⁷⁹
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the permit by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report” and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.³⁹⁸⁰

In addition to these two doctors, Tsafendas was examined by another ten physicians, none of them psychiatrists, over the course of three years, and no one noticed any inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.³⁹⁸¹
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker, a casualty officer, and nothing was reported about his mental state.³⁹⁸²

³⁹⁷⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

³⁹⁷⁸ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

³⁹⁷⁹ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁰ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demitrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

³⁹⁸¹ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

³⁹⁸² Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.³⁹⁸³
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him³⁹⁸⁴ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.³⁹⁸⁵
- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He reported nothing about his mental condition.³⁹⁸⁶
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work.³⁹⁸⁷
- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn't appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree... He was calm...”³⁹⁸⁸
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation.³⁹⁸⁹

³⁹⁸³ Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁴ The doctor's name in the medical report is indecipherable.

³⁹⁸⁵ Demitrio Tsafendas's Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁶ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁸⁷ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

³⁹⁸⁸ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁹⁸⁹ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on June 3, 1966 and did not notice Tsafendas's reported inability to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. Nothing was reported about his mental state.³⁹⁹⁰
- Finally, Dr. Darby, a casualty officer, examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.³⁹⁹¹

The author asked forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas if they thought Dr. Cooper was right about Tsafendas not being able to concentrate for more than fifteen minutes. Not a single one agreed with the doctor. Here are responses from some who knew Tsafendas over a long period and who spent a lot of time talking with him:

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years (1989-1994) and spoke extensively with him, shook his head in disbelief upon hearing Dr. Cooper's comment. He told the author:

"No, no, this is not true. He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion... I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man.

I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject... [His speech] was not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. I am positive that this was not the case [Tsafendas being unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes]. This comment is entirely false."³⁹⁹²

³⁹⁹⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 64. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁹⁹¹ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁹⁹² Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

Alexander Moumbaris spent in 1972 three months in the cell next to Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison. Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for an hour every day during this period, thus, he must have spent at least ninety hours talking to him. Moumbaris dismissed outright the suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. Asked by the author if Tsafendas had any difficulty in following their conversations or understanding his questions, Moumbaris smiled dismissively. He said:

“No, no, it was nothing like this. He was absolutely normal and very serious, he always talked like a normal man, like any other man. I enjoyed talking to him, he was very intelligent and witty. He had things to tell you, you could have a serious conversation with him. He never had any difficulty expressing himself or participating in a conversation. Most times he led the conversations. There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations.”³⁹⁹³

Moumbaris also told the author that even in March 1996 when he visited him for a couple of hours in Sterkfontein Hospital, they had a perfectly normal conversation, despite the deterioration in Tsafendas's health and hearing. How capable Tsafendas was to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes is also evident from the fact that he asked Moumbaris in 1972 to teach him Algebra. Although the warders stepped in and stopped the lessons not long ago after they started, Tsafendas turned out to be an excellent student and more than capable of following Moumbaris's teaching.³⁹⁹⁴

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis visited Tsafendas regularly for about a year in Pretoria Prison hospital. He told the author:

“We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He would bombard you with examples and arguments about the point at question. Sometimes I thought he must be making up some of the examples to convince us he was right. I would then go home and check the example he had used only to find out that he was right! He was incapable of letting you go until he had convinced you he was right. The doctor's diagnosis is 100% wrong, believe me."³⁹⁹⁵

³⁹⁹³ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

³⁹⁹⁴ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

Fotini Gavasiadis invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother's café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends. She smiled and shook her head after she heard Dr. Cooper's comment. "What else am I going to hear!" she exclaimed in disbelief. She told the author:

"This is like a joke, it is ridiculous! This and all the other things you have told me these psychiatrists said are ridiculous and unbelievable. Of course they are untrue. I don't know what type of doctors they were, but I they certainly lost the plot with Dimitri... I told you Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn't let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics...

He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him ... In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. The doctor's comment is for laughs."³⁹⁹⁶

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's half-sister, was very surprised to hear such a comment. "This sounds to me like a comedy... the doctor's comment is entirely false and does not bear any resemblance to the truth. Dimitris was not like this; he was never like this. The doctor is ³⁹⁹⁵ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 2 August 2016.

³⁹⁹⁶ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

talking nonsense.”³⁹⁹⁷

Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1963-1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author:

“What are you talking about? Is this what the doctor believed about Dimitri? My God, I can't believe it. What type of doctor was this? Of course Dimitris was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes; it's laughable to suggest otherwise. He could talk for hours and hours about anything, especially politics, trying to convince you that he was right. He would continue talking to you for hours and hours until he would have convinced you that he was right.”³⁹⁹⁸

Irene Michaletos was visited frequently by Tsafendas in her house in Beira for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even often stayed there. She strongly dismisses Dr. Cooper's claim and states that Tsafendas was “very good with words. Of course he was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes; he never lost track or there was never any suggestion that he was not capable of doing so. Never, never. He was talking all the time, he was really good with words, he knew how to talk.”³⁹⁹⁹

In 1951, and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in his aunt Artemis Michaletos's house (Tsafendas's aunt who brought him up in Egypt) and even slept there on several occasions. John Michaletos, Artemis's son and Tsafendas's cousin, who was always present and spent hours talking to Tsafendas, told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] talked very, very passionately about his political ideas, his cheeks sometimes getting red and sweaty from the passion. He was very self-assured about his ideas and you could not have a political debate with him, he would have cut you into pieces. He was very well read, especially in politics, while he had this ability I haven't seen in anyone to be able to convince you that he is right. He would bring argument after argument and example after example to convince you that he is right. Sometimes, I wondered whether all these [political and historical] examples and facts he was talking about were true. I did not know. I was not aware of any of these. And you couldn't check at the time, there was no

³⁹⁹⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁹⁹⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁹⁹⁹ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

internet, but it all sounded very, very convincing. I used to tell him, and my mother used to tell him too, that he should be a politician or a lawyer.”⁴⁰⁰⁰

It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he was unable to follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head in disbelief at Dr. Cooper's comment. Asked by the author to comment, he said:

“What should I tell you? I have told you everything about him. He [Tsafendas] was nothing like this. He [Dr. Cooper] could not have been more wrong. Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is nonsense, it's not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it's like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”⁴⁰⁰¹

Antony Michaletos, Artemis's son and John's brother, was also present in 1951 and in 1963-1965 when Tsafendas stayed at their house. He dismisses outright Dr. Cooper's suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation for longer than fifteen minutes. He told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] spoke fine, like a normal, intelligent man, no disjoint, not gibberish, nothing like this... Are you joking? Of course he was able to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. We were talking for hours. Hours and hours. Almost every night or every other night he would come to our house; we'll eat and then sit in the living room or the balcony and talk.”⁴⁰⁰²

Ira Kyriakakis, Tsafendas's childhood friend who remained very close to him until his imprisonment. She told the author:

“The doctor is making a mistake. Dimitris not only could follow a conversation for indefinite time, but could also participate in any type of conversation because he was very knowledgeable. He was never as the doctor described. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could convince the devil to buy a Bible. He was like a politician, he would turn things upside-down to make you see things from his point of view. He was talking beautifully; slowly and with authority, like a very important man. No, no, he was not like the doctor said.”⁴⁰⁰³

⁴⁰⁰⁰ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁰¹ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁰² Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

⁴⁰⁰³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

Thirteen of the Eleni seamen who were with Tsafendas every day for forty-two days until three days before the assassination, and who were interviewed by the author, also rejected the idea that Tsafendas couldn't follow a conversation after fifteen minutes. The author will include only the more representative of the men's statements:

Michalis Vasilakis told the author that Tsafendas appeared to be "able to convince anyone that his political ideas were right. ... You couldn't disagree with him about anything. He always found a way to convince you that he was right. He was very, very able in reasoning and developing and explaining an argument. He was extremely good with words and arguments."⁴⁰⁰⁴

Nikolas Kambouris, another seaman, was very surprised to hear Dr. Cooper's statement. "I told you he had a very distinctive way of talking. It was slow, but very intelligent and sophisticated ... He was talking like a professor. It was more likely for us to not be able to follow him than him to follow us. We spent hours talking about politics and he was leading the conversation; none of us knew anything about apartheid at the time."⁴⁰⁰⁵ Shaking his head in a negative manner, Manolis Mastromanolis said of Dr. Cooper's comment, "No, no, I never noticed this. He could speak for hours and hours. Always clearly and logically."⁴⁰⁰⁶

Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. "No, no, never ... Dimitri was not just able to follow the conversation, most of the times he was leading the conversation, especially when talking about politics."⁴⁰⁰⁷

The following witnesses all strongly dismiss Dr. Cooper's diagnosis about Tsafendas being unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes:

- Reuben O'Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months.⁴⁰⁰⁸
- Stanley O'Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months.⁴⁰⁰⁹
- Panagiotis Peroglou knew Tsafendas for about a year in 1965-1966.⁴⁰¹⁰

⁴⁰⁰⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁰⁰⁵ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

⁴⁰⁰⁶ Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

⁴⁰⁰⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁰⁰⁸ Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁰⁹ Stanley O'Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

⁴⁰¹⁰ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest...⁴⁰¹¹
- Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁴⁰¹²
- Nick Papadakis knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964.⁴⁰¹³
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks.⁴⁰¹⁴
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for seven months in 1961 in Istanbul.⁴⁰¹⁵
- Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest.⁴⁰¹⁶
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963. They spent several hours talking.⁴⁰¹⁷

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.⁴⁰¹⁸ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was "highly improbable."⁴⁰¹⁹

⁴⁰¹¹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁰¹² Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁴⁰¹³ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁰¹⁴ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁴⁰¹⁵ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁰¹⁶ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁴⁰¹⁷ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

⁴⁰¹⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴⁰¹⁹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

TSAFENDAS NOT BEING CONCERNED FOR HIS FUTURE AND TALKING IN A DISJOINTED MANNER

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the first thing that struck you when you saw this man, the accused?

DR. COOPER: The first thing that struck me was an abnormality in this man's emotional attitude to his situation and surroundings. I was struck by him reacting rather incongruously. I felt that here was a man who had been charged in a very, very serious matter and he displayed a singular lack of anxiety. He showed no sign of agitation, stress or tension. He was not restless. On each occasion when one came to interview him one never found him pacing up and down; one found him usually sleeping or at least dozing. When one discussed this whole matter with him, he did not show any appropriate emotional reaction that one would expect...

JUDGE BEYERS: Have you had experience of murderers before?

DR. COOPER: Yes. I have never found them climbing walls yet. I have defended quite a lot of them in my life. In the instances where I have gone to various gaols to see murderers, I have found them anxious, I have found them frequently complaining of insomnia, frequently asking and pleading for sleeping tablets. They have been agitated. They have constantly intercepted with questions as to their predicament and as to their fate. These features were, I thought, significantly absent in this man...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want to put this to you: is the accused concerned about his fate?

DR. COOPER: No. Not as far as I was able to establish.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you probed that matter with him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This lack of, I think, or inappropriate emotional response to his present predicament, why is that important? Or is it important, first of all?

DR. COOPER: I felt it was important, firstly, on the basis that I considered this to be abnormal and different from what one had been accustomed to seeing in such cases, different from what one would expect in such a case, and, furthermore, important in that precisely this type of emotional reaction is frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia...

... I would describe him, for the most part, as being emotionally flat, except that, again rather incongruously, he would at times smile, at times chuckle at inappropriate moments in the interview, and also one might mention a feature, namely, that he quite frequently tends to grimace rather grossly and extensively during interviews...

... This type of grimacing, one cannot go so far certainly as to say that it is diagnostic of schizophrenia but it does frequently occur in people suffering from schizophrenia ...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards his emotional response, what relevance has that in diagnosing schizophrenia?

DR. COOPER: Simply that this emotional response is commonly seen in schizophrenia and is completely consistent with the diagnosis of schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does the present emotional state indicate?

DR. COOPER: It indicates to me an indifference to his whole situation, DEFENCE COUNSEL: And in relation to reality?

DR. COOPER: In relation to reality I found him decidedly disturbed in that, although it was clear to me, because he said so, he knew what he had done, he knew that he was going to be tried, but he was unable to understand the magnitude of the situation. He was unable to fully grasp the serious consequences of the situation. This became apparent, apart from his general attitude and his mode of discussion, in certain remarks which he made, remarks that I am completely satisfied he made in all sincerity, such remarks as at one stage, he paused for a moment and he said: "I do not think that I will be able to live in Cape Town after this because of the public opinion, you know." At another stage, when we were discussing various jobs that he had held, he said that if he was ever offered a job in the House of Assembly again he does not think that he would be able to face up to that job again. These remarks perhaps are small remarks, but to me they had deep significance and confirmed my impression of this man being out of touch with reality, unable to grasp the real nature of the situation in which he now finds himself...

... The next sign or indication of mental abnormality that I detected during my first interview, and at all subsequent interviews, concerned his thinking processes. I have already stated that he is an intelligent man. He is able to make certain quite intelligent statements. He is able to provide one with certain facts in quite an intelligent manner. But if one allows him to give free flow to his thoughts and feelings, one finds that one would be discussing a certain point or matter with him and he will start perhaps vaguely answering your questions and then gradually ramble along in a completely disjointed manner. He will lose the trend of his thinking. As a listener, one finds oneself losing the trend of what he is trying to tell you, and you end up not quite knowing at all what he is trying to put across to you... this man is an intelligent individual. In fact, I think I am prepared to go so far as to say he is above average in intelligence. And taking into account his intelligence, I find that his inability to express himself in a coherent fashion is in fact significant...

... I have spent considerable time with this man trying to elicit from him whether he has any views regarding his defence, whether he had any idea of what sort of approach his defending counsel would be adopting in this case, whether he had any personal views on how he would try to defend himself, whether he really understood the implications of this whole matter, and I came to the conclusion that he had no notion of these things, that he had no understanding of these things at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he able to make a proper defence?

DR. COOPER: Most definitely not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he able to instruct me properly in this matter?

DR. COOPER: I don't think he is able to instruct you at all, usefully.

DR. COOPER: I found myself comparing this case with other murder cases, other murderers who I have examined, and they have always shown a lot of interest and anxiety concerning their defence, and they have always tendered to offer explanations, excuses, reasons and - whether they be worthwhile or not - ideas they had concerning why they may not be guilty. This man had nothing of this type to offer at all."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever get the impression that the accused was concerned about his rights?

DR. COOPER: His rights?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. COOPER: He showed a certain amount of concern, but I would say minimal concern and a degree of concern that I thought was completely inappropriate and unusual in circumstances of this sort.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONYTSAFENDAS NOT BEING CONCERNED ABOUT HIS FUTURE

Asked about Tsafendas's lack of response to his predicament, Dr. Cooper states that "this type of emotional reaction is frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia ..." Tsafendas told the police in a statement he made on September 11, 1966, "I did not care about the consequences, for what would happen to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister." He repeated this in the same interview, saying, "I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me."⁴⁰²⁰ Clearly, his political convictions overrode his certainty that he would be captured and required to face the consequences of his action. That is entirely different from someone being indifferent to his fate as a result of schizophrenia. However, Dr. Cooper did not have access to Tsafendas's statements.

In addition to this, Tsafendas could not have claimed that he was innocent. He had killed Dr. Verwoerd in front of more than a hundred witnesses and could hardly have said, "I didn't do it!" Being aware of the consequences and ready to face them, why would he change his attitude towards Dr. Cooper? He was not the first defendant to follow court proceedings with apathy. In many cases, especially political trials, prisoners are uninterested, either because they don't care about the outcome or they don't recognise the authority of the court. Tsafendas knew what the outcome would be: he was going to be found unfit to stand trial and believed that he would be sent to a hospital.

Thirty years later, Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that it was easy to convince his defence team and everyone who examined him that he was mad. "It was easy because everyone wanted to find me mad, both the government and my defence team."⁴⁰²¹ Hence his apathetic attitude. Defendants who fear death or life imprisonment would demonstrate concern or distress, but Tsafendas did not care about what would happen to him and because he was almost certain about the outcome, he was not fearful.

⁴⁰²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

An alternative reason for Tsafendas's attitude and one that has never been explored was offered to the author by Father Minas Constandinou: that Tsafendas was seeking personal redemption for what he saw as past acts of cowardice. Tsafendas felt guilty that he had not fought the Nazis during the Second World War; instead, he had repeatedly pretended to be ill so as to remain in hospital and avoid being sent into the Atlantic and exposed to German U-boats. Tsafendas often spoke of the shame these actions caused him and how this became worse when he learned of the Nazis' atrocities. He also regretted that he had not gone to Spain to join the International Brigades against the fascists because he feared dying young. Although Tsafendas never related his guilt for these matters to the assassination, Father Minas got the impression that by carrying out an attack on Dr. Verwoerd without an escape plan and in the certain knowledge that he would be captured, Tsafendas was seeking atonement for his earlier failures.⁴⁰²²

History is replete with examples of men who faced critical situations, including the prospect of death, with an equanimity similar to Tsafendas's. These people were not schizophrenic, indeed they were entirely sane, many were highly intelligent and all were fully aware of their circumstances. Surely the last thirty days of Socrates' life give the lie to Dr. Cooper's conclusions that Tsafendas's "emotional reaction" was "frequently seen and completely consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia." Was Socrates also a schizophrenic?

TSAFENDAS TALKING IN A DISJOINTED MANNER

Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas was vague when answering questions and spoke in a rambling and disjointed manner, and the following day three more defence witnesses, Dr. Sakinofsky, Peter Daniels and Patrick O'Ryan, gave similar testimony. However, Patrick O'Ryan had also testified that Tsafendas "was well-spoken and had good vocabulary."⁴⁰²³ In addition, O'Ryan later declared that he had lied and exaggerated some of the things he said about Tsafendas in order to save his friend's life. This was done after Wilfrid Cooper said it was the only way to prevent from being condemned to death. It is also very possible that advocate Cooper gave the same advice to Peter Daniels. We will examine these two ⁴⁰²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁰²³ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

testimonies and that of Dr. Sakinofsky later.

However, with regard to Dr. Cooper's comment about the accused being vague and talking in a disjointed manner, none of Tsafendas's statements to the police conveyed that impression. His words are coherent and he communicates clearly. Major Rossouw, the head of the Security Police in Cape Town, who interrogated Tsafendas several times and for many hours and who was in constant touch with him while in custody, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas "answered all the questions spontaneously," he "never got the impression that he tried to evade any question" and reported none of the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Cooper.⁴⁰²⁴

Major Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but he was a very experienced interrogator having also interrogated John Harris, Stephanie Kemp and other ARM members, who had all been tortured during their interrogation,⁴⁰²⁵ and must have been able to detect whether Tsafendas talked in a disjointed manner or presented any of the other symptoms described by Dr. Cooper. Having spent so much time with Tsafendas, he could surely tell if something was wrong with him. Both of Tsafendas's statements to the police support Maj. Rossouw's testimony, since Tsafendas answered all the questions he was asked perfectly ably and judging by the length of the transcripts, it is clear that each interrogation lasted far longer than fifteen minutes, allegedly Tsafendas's maximum concentration span.

None of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission or the forty-four who were interviewed by the author, including several people who knew him very well, said Tsafendas ever lost the thread of what he was saying or talked in a rambling or disjointed manner. For example:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, "I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation."⁴⁰²⁶
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁴⁰²⁷

⁴⁰²⁴ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁰²⁵ South African Democracy Education Trust, 2004: 362.

⁴⁰²⁶ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁴⁰²⁸
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”⁴⁰²⁹
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴⁰³⁰
- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁴⁰³¹
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”⁴⁰³²
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁴⁰³³
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas, “was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a ⁴⁰²⁷ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰²⁸ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

⁴⁰²⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰³⁰ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰³¹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰³² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁰³³ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

good impression. From his general appearance, he appeared to be a businessman.”⁴⁰³⁴

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature.”⁴⁰³⁵

Furthermore, the author asked forty-four people who knew Tsafendas, some very well, and none ever got the impression that his speech was disjointed: two priests who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and who spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not talk in a disjointed manner.⁴⁰³⁶

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years (1989-1994), and spent several hours talking with him, strongly denied to the author that Tsafendas spoke in a disjointed manner, or that there was anything wrong with the way he spoke. He told the author:

“No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [in a disjointed manner]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false.”⁴⁰³⁷

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who met Tsafendas in 1994 in Pretoria Prison hospital told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty

⁴⁰³⁴ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴⁰³⁵ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰³⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁰³⁷ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine."⁴⁰³⁸

Mary Eendracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, said, "Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with his speech or thoughts, both were excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours on politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people's."⁴⁰³⁹

Alexander Moumbaris, who spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison, dismissed outright the suggestion that Tsafendas talked in a disjointed manner. He told the author:

"No, this is not true. He was not talking in a disjointed manner. I never heard him talking like this, neither in 1972 nor in 1996. He always spoke absolutely fine... There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations."⁴⁰⁴⁰

One of the strongest comments comes from Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with him every day for nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964. She told the author:

"Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn't let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive, he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him.

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned.”⁴⁰⁴¹

⁴⁰³⁸ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁰³⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁰⁴⁰ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

Gavasiadis was not the only one impressed by the way Tsafendas spoke. None of the crewmen from the Eleni ever got the impression that Tsafendas's speech was disjointed. In fact, they were impressed by the way he spoke.⁴⁰⁴² The seamen called him “Professor” because of his knowledge and mode of speech.⁴⁰⁴³ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He talked like a university professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.⁴⁰⁴⁴ Another crew member, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can't explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He knew how to speak and how to pick up words. He was talking like a professor; this is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”⁴⁰⁴⁵

In addition, Tsafendas worked in 1961 for six months as teacher at the best private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. He worked initially on trial basis, under observation for a week, and then was appointed permanently. He remained in the post for six months, leaving eventually on his own accord. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, the owner of the college, does not remember Tsafendas, but she is certain that her husband would never have appointed, much less retained for a significant period, a teacher who talked in a disjointed manner.⁴⁰⁴⁶

Furthermore, while in Istanbul, for about seven months in 1961, Tsafendas gave free English lessons to Greek and Turkish children. Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him throughout this period and conversed with him at length five or six times, told the author, “He talked perfectly well whenever I spoke to him.” Her husband was Father Agathagelos Vaporidis, the priest at Agia Triada Church where some of the lessons took place. He sat in on some of Tsafendas's classes and never mentioned anything being untoward about ⁴⁰⁴¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁰⁴² Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁰⁴³ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁴ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

⁴⁰⁴⁵ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁰⁴⁶ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

Tsafendas's mode of speech. On the contrary, he was very happy with Tsafendas and his wife said he would certainly have told her if there were any speech issues.⁴⁰⁴⁷

Father Nikola Banovic told the author about the way Tsafendas spoke: "the way he spoke was very distinctive ... he spoke good Greek, but he used the grammar in a very different and distinctive way, talking like a teacher or an author, using nice words." Father Nikola also observed some of Tsafendas's teaching in Istanbul and characterised him as a "natural," "born to be teacher."⁴⁰⁴⁸ He would hardly have used these terms about a teacher who spoke in a disjointed manner.

In 1951, and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in his aunt Artemis Michaletos's house (Tsafendas's aunt who brought him up in Egypt) and even slept there on several occasions. John Michaletos, Artemis's son and Tsafendas's cousin, who was always present and spent hours talking to Tsafendas, told the author:

"He [Tsafendas] was very self-assured about his ideas and you could not have a political debate with him, he would have cut you into pieces. He was very well read, especially in politics, while he had this ability I haven't seen in anyone to be able to convince you that he is right. He would bring argument after argument and example after example to convince you that he is right. Sometimes, I wondered whether all these [political and historical] examples and facts he was talking about were true. I did not know. I was not aware of any of these. And you couldn't check at the time, there was no internet, but it all sounded very, very convincing. I used to tell him, and my mother used to tell him too, that he should be a politician or a lawyer."⁴⁰⁴⁹

It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he talking in a disjointed manner. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head once again in disbelief at Dr. Cooper's statement on which, again, he refused to comment because he found it absurd; he believes that what he already told the author about Tsafendas was enough to demonstrate how wrong Dr. Cooper's diagnosis was.⁴⁰⁵⁰

⁴⁰⁴⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁰⁴⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁰⁴⁹ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁵⁰ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Nikolas Kambouris, an Eleni seamen who spent several hours talking with Tsafendas about politics and history, dismissed Dr. Cooper's diagnosis: "I told you he had a very distinctive way of talking. It was slow, but very intelligent and sophisticated ... He was talking like a professor. It was more likely for us to not be able to follow him than him to follow us. We spent hours talking about politics and he was leading the conversation; none of us knew anything about apartheid at the time."⁴⁰⁵¹

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best or longest. All insist that Tsafendas did not talk in a disjointed manner:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;⁴⁰⁵²
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁴⁰⁵³
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;⁴⁰⁵⁴
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days in 1966;⁴⁰⁵⁵
- Elias Constantaras, who lived under the same roof for two months in Cape Town in 1966 and knew him for more than a year;⁴⁰⁵⁶
- Irene Michaletos, who knew him for more than a year (1963-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira;⁴⁰⁵⁷
- Antony Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousin and the son of Artemis's (Tsafendas's aunt who brought him up in Egypt), met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, ⁴⁰⁵¹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

⁴⁰⁵² Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁰⁵³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁰⁵⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁰⁵⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁰⁵⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁰⁵⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

getting to know him very well;⁴⁰⁵⁸

- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;⁴⁰⁵⁹
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964;⁴⁰⁶⁰
- Panagiotis Peroglou, Stratis Vamvarapis, Antonis Nichas and Costas Chagios, who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁴⁰⁶¹

Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a 75-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁴⁰⁶²

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he spoke in a disjointed manner.⁴⁰⁶³ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was "highly improbable"⁴⁰⁶⁴

As for the Attorney-General, it appears that either he did not have Tsafendas's September 11 statement in his possession or he did not think it was important to question Dr. Cooper about what Tsafendas told the police: that he knew he was not going to get away but went ahead and killed Dr. Verwoerd anyway because he was "disgusted" with his race policies and hoped that a change of policy would take place.⁴⁰⁶⁵

⁴⁰⁵⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May April 2016.

⁴⁰⁵⁹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁰⁶⁰ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁰⁶¹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016; Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁴⁰⁶² Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁰⁶³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴⁰⁶⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

⁴⁰⁶⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

COMMENT REGARDING DR. COOPER'S EXPERIENCE WITH MURDERERS

Finally Judge Beyers is unaware of the fact that Dr. Cooper has experienced with murderers from the 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy. Therefore and more importantly, he is unaware of the fact that the Court in this case had dismissed his psychiatric evaluation of the defendant as based on improbable evidence.⁴⁰⁶⁶

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is there any other feature that emerged from your examination of the accused?

DR. COOPER: Yes. This feature that I am coming to is perhaps the most striking feature, or let us call it dramatic feature, of his mental state. This man tells a story that in 1935 or 1936 - I am not quite clear whether it was 1935 or 1936 - he became afflicted with a tapeworm. He describes how initially he tried to rid himself of the tapeworm, how he went to a chemist to get medicines, how he consulted a doctor. He describes, rather luridly, how he sat over a pail of water and how part of the tapeworm emerged but snapped in his hand and part of the tapeworm remained inside him. And he then goes on to explain that he had in fact consulted many doctors about this tapeworm; he has in fact been to hospitals which specialise in tropical medicine and this type of disorder; he has had X-rays; he has had numerous investigations; he has been told that he no longer has a tapeworm inside of him, but he is convinced, he has a fixed belief, that he has a tapeworm inside of him, in spite of all these negative medical investigations.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How does he believe it affects his life?

DR. COOPER: There are many aspects to this tapeworm, and it is important, and I ask the Court to bear with me if I can explain what this man says about his tapeworm. First of all, his description of the tapeworm I feel is significant. I in my mind believe, although I cannot prove it, that in 1935 or 1936 he probably did in fact have a tapeworm. But his description of the tapeworm that he now believes he has and the qualities that he attributes to it are highly significant. Firstly, he describes this tapeworm as being, sometimes he says 1½ ins. in breadth, sometimes he says 2 ins. in breadth. He describes it as having serrated edges like a serrated saw. This is a tapeworm much larger than life. It is a grossly exaggerated description of a tapeworm. He insists that he has the tapeworm in spite of all medical evidence against the fact that he has it. He says that he can feel the tapeworm crawling around in him and that if he passes delicious foods the tapeworms smells the foods and he can feel the tapeworm wriggling up towards his neck. I must explain to the Court that an individual suffering from a tapeworm cannot feel the tapeworm wriggling around him in that manner. Then he attributes a great deal to this tapeworm. He says repeatedly

⁴⁰⁶⁶ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. P: 17. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1967.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does he call it?

DR. COOPER: He has referred to this tapeworm at different interviews variously as a devil, as a dragon, as a snake. Demon was another one. He feels that this tapeworm has changed his entire life. He believes that it is in fact because of the tapeworm that he has done many things. He believes that the tapeworm influences his thought He insists that on many occasions he has said things which he would not otherwise have said if it had not been for the tapeworm. He insists that the tapeworm influences his behaviour. He said at one stage: "If I did not have the tapeworm I would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd, I would not have wandered round the world, I would not have become involved in a fight with Nicholas Vergos and I would not have been taken in by certain thoughts." He elaborates further on this tapeworm, particularly during my last interview with him, where he says this time that he is not absolutely convinced that it is a tapeworm, it may be some form of human snake, but whatever this demon, this devil, is inside of him. He believes that it may be possible that there may be an element of witchcraft in this whole affair. He explains that as a child - at that time he was living in the Transvaal - his stepmother indoctrinated him against the natives, and he believes that it is possible that the natives have in fact something to do with this tapeworm. Now, apart from what he says about the tapeworm, when one interviews this man one can find oneself talking about almost anything, from employment, travels, friends, the murder, the trial - virtually anything like - and it does not take very long before you are back to the tapeworm. He incorporates the tapeworm in all his thoughts, and it is as if this tapeworm is to a very large extent governing this man's thoughts, governing his feelings, governing his reaction to his environment, governing his behaviour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His wandering around the world, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: His wandering around the world he attributes to his tapeworm. He is vague about it, he can't elaborate on it, but he insists that it is because of the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His inability to hold down a job for any length of time, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: That is attributed to the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This belief in the existence of a tapeworm in him, which can be medically proved not to be there, what is that?

DR. COOPER: I believe that this is a delusion.

DR. COOPER: "... This man has built around his tapeworm inside of him a delusion system whereby he believes emphatically that this worm is instrumental in controlling his thoughts, in controlling his actions, in ruining his life, and even in killing Dr. Verwoerd... I asked the accused the question: 'If you had been cured of your tapeworm, would you still have killed Dr. Verwoerd?' His reply, his repeated reply, was emphatically 'No, I would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd.' I on more than one occasion asked the accused to explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at this point, relevant to the topic we are now dealing with, I would just like to say that he was extremely vague in his attempts to explain why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He told me that he had a great deal of difficulty in understanding and explaining why he did, but one thing was quite definite, he said the tapeworm was right in the middle of it. I am quoting his words. I asked him whether the tapeworm actually told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. He said: 'No, that is not so.' The reason why I asked him this question, quite incidentally, was from the point of deciding whether this man was simulating or not. I virtually invited him to simulate mental disorder, and he did not take up the bait...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider - I am sure you did - the possibility that the accused invented this story of the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Most definitely I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you do to test whether or not he had invented this tapeworm story?

DR. COOPER: Well, this matter tied up with one's general approach in trying to establish whether this man was inventing or simulating as a whole. I was most careful to try and assess whether his story was consistent, whether there were not perhaps any irregularities, any things that didn't fit in with the picture as a whole. I felt very strongly that here was a man who, after all, knew a fair amount about mental disorder, because he had told me that he had been in several mental hospitals. Patients in mental hospitals inevitably know, particularly the more intelligent ones, that hearing voices is a common symptom in mental disorder and a common symptom of schizophrenia, so I felt, if ever a man was going to simulate, here was his easy, ready opportunity. If this man had told me that he heard voices, and in fact, if he had told me that the tapeworm spoke to him and told him what to do and what not to do, this would have been difficult, let us say, to disprove; this would have been consistent with schizophrenia. I hammered on this particular angle, and at no time did this patient suggest that he heard voices and at no time did he suggest that the tapeworm spoke to him or actually told him what to do...

... Simulating in cases of serious crime, of course, is quite common, and, I might say, usually readily detected, especially if one spends approximately six hours with the individual, as I did. It is extremely difficult to imitate mental disorder and particularly to imitate the group of symptoms, the picture as a whole, in schizophrenia. Patients often try to simulate mental disorder by telling you that they hear voices, they see visions, they can't remember, they are just confused, they say they are just unable to tell you anything. This patient did none of these things.

...He did not blame Dr. Verwoerd for the existence of it directly, but he implies that if it had not been for the tapeworm he would not have killed Dr. Verwoerd, so presumably he interrelates Dr. Verwoerd and the tapeworm in some way...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: ... no matter what you talked about - you talked about various things; I think you mentioned various things - no matter what you talked about, you finished with the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes, my Lord, I am not suggesting ...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So that it is constantly there, no matter what you talked about?

DR. COOPER: Constant would mean that he talked about the tapeworm and nothing else. I am not suggesting that. He did talk of other things. But I am saying that the tapeworm played a prominent part in his overall conversation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do I remember correctly that whatever you talked about you finished on the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Frequently that was so.

UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

DR. COOPER: He is relating this tapeworm in this instance to something that happened in his early life.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: when his mother put him against the blacks, and the blacks in revenge, by witchcraft, put a tapeworm in him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't that what I understood you to say? Is that right?

DR. COOPER: Yes, that is right.

DR. COOPER: ... After having examined him for several hours (that is six hours including the joint interview), and, after I knew that fellow psychiatrists had also examined him for several hours (maximum five hours each one of them including the joint interview), during the course of a joint interview with him I noticed him, just in passing, saying "I must thank you very much for all the assistance you are giving me." He rambled on a little bit, and then I took this up and I said to him "In what way do you think we are trying to assist you? In what way are we assisting you?" and he said "Well, the tapeworm is giving me a lot of pain, and you are listening to my difficulties about the tapeworm." And it was clear to me at that time that this man had not grasped the purpose of our examination..."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There is the bizarre aspect of the tapeworm. Does that necessarily manifest itself in his dealings with people from day to day?

DR. COOPER: Not necessarily, no. I would say that he is quite likely to refer to his tapeworm in his everyday life but not every time he is confronted by anybody, not constantly in conversation.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORMTHE EXISTANCE OF THE TAPEWORM

According to Dr. Cooper, the tapeworm was central to Tsafendas's existence as it controlled his life and his thoughts. It appeared responsible for everything that was happening with him. However, Tsafendas's alleged belief that he had a tapeworm is as much as a myth as Mamoru Samuragochi's deafness.⁴⁰⁶⁷

The police and the Commission questioned about two hundred people about Tsafendas and not a single one was aware of the tapeworm. Of the sixty-nine interviewed by the author, not one (apart from the four members of his defence team, Bloomberg, Burger, Dr. Sakinofsky and van Zyl), heard Tsafendas mention a tapeworm. Tsafendas did speak of the tapeworm to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, but made clear that it was simply a ploy to stop the torture and avoid an undignified death while in custody. He told the priests the whole truth about the tapeworm and its origins in America with Tom Tuff. Fathers Minas and Ioannis would later confirm that Tsafendas was telling the truth about the tapeworm and Tom Tuff when they met Patrick O'Ryan, the only man to whom Tsafendas had confided the whole truth about the tapeworm and how he had used it before the assassination.⁴⁰⁶⁸ The meeting between the two priests and O'Ryan and how it came about is discussed later in this chapter in O'Ryan's testimony.

Dr. Cooper understood Tsafendas to say that the tapeworm was responsible for his killing Dr. Verwoerd, although it did not actually tell him to do so. However, if the tapeworm was primarily responsible, it is strange that Tsafendas failed to say so in his two statements to the police. Instead, he declared openly that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was "disgusted with his policies" and hoped that a "change of policy would take place" after the killing. He never mentioned a tapeworm at all.⁴⁰⁶⁹

According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas said he had the tapeworm since 1935 or 1936. At that time and until 1941, excepting for some short absences, Tsafendas lived with his father and step-mother and his step-siblings. The Commission of Enquiry and the police questioned

⁴⁰⁶⁷ Mamoru Samuragochi is a Japanese composer who claimed for many years that, like the German master, Beethoven, he was totally deaf. This extraordinary claim resulted in his being nicknamed "The Beethoven of the Dital Age." Later, however, it was discovered that Samuragochi was a liar and could hear perfectly well.

⁴⁰⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁰⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

all family members, including his step-mother Marika, two of his three half-sisters, his half-brother, his two brothers-in-law and his sister-in-law. They all told the Commission that Tsafendas “never mentioned a tapeworm” and that he “was definitely not insane.”⁴⁰⁷⁰ Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law, also testified that “As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.”⁴⁰⁷¹

Two more defence witnesses, Dr. Muller, a specialist physician, and Mr. van Zyl, a clinical psychologist, would testify that they were told by Tsafendas that he had the tapeworm since 1935. This is in line with Dr. Cooper saying Tsafendas told him he had the tapeworm since 1935 or 1936. However, the doctors at Ochsensall Hospital in Hamburg said he gave the date 1937. If the tapeworm was so important in his life, one would expect him to know exactly when it first arrived. More importantly, defence witness Louisa O’Ryan would testify that Tsafendas told her he had the tapeworm since he was a “little boy.”⁴⁰⁷² In 1935/1936, Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen and not a “little boy.” The difference in dates clearly indicated that Tsafendas was making up the story as he went along but the errors were not picked up by anyone during the summary trial.

More importantly, Louisa O’Ryan would testify that Tsafendas’s step-mother, Marika, was aware of the tapeworm, indeed partly responsible for its existence, having removed and destroyed only a portion of it while the remainder stayed inside him.⁴⁰⁷³ However, Marika denied in her testimony to the Commission that such an incident ever took place and even stated that Tsafendas had never mentioned a tapeworm. She, as well as Tsafendas’s entire family, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas never said anything about a tapeworm and that “he was definitely not insane.”⁴⁰⁷⁴ All were convinced that he had made it up to escape the death penalty.⁴⁰⁷⁵

Between 1935/1936 and 1939, Tsafendas was very close to George Grispos, Helen ⁴⁰⁷⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁰⁷¹ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷² Louisa O’ Ryan’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷³ Louisa O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Kavadias-Grispos, Andreas Babiolakis and Ira Kyriakakis, none of whom ever heard him speak of the tapeworm and none of them ever doubted his sanity. They were all certain that he pretended to be mad in order to not be hanged.⁴⁰⁷⁶ Tsafendas was always very close to his first cousin, Mary Eendracht, who was also at the time in Lourenço Marques, and he said nothing to her. She never doubted his sanity and firmly believed that he invented the tapeworm to escape the gallows.⁴⁰⁷⁷ If this tapeworm was so important in Tsafendas's life, and since he spoke so freely about it after the assassination, would he not have mentioned something to someone throughout his life?

In addition, while in South Africa in the three years before his arrest, Tsafendas was medically examined at least ten times by nine doctors, none of whom discovered anything mentally wrong with him. Needless to say, Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to any of them, since he wished to be passed physically and mentally sound.

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. C. Been for a permanent residence application for South Africa and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁴⁰⁷⁸ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Nothing about his mental state was noted.⁴⁰⁷⁹
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined, also for purposes of residence, by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report.” Subsequently, a certificate for permanent residence was issued to him.⁴⁰⁸⁰
- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways' medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.⁴⁰⁸¹

⁴⁰⁷⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁰⁷⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁰⁷⁸ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁰⁷⁹ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁰ Memorandum re application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸¹ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker and nothing was reported about his mental state.⁴⁰⁸²
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.⁴⁰⁸³
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him⁴⁰⁸⁴ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.⁴⁰⁸⁵
- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He reported nothing about his mental condition.⁴⁰⁸⁶
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epitis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work.⁴⁰⁸⁷
- Finally, Dr. Darby, a casualty officer, examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.⁴⁰⁸⁸

Nor once during all these examinations did Tsafendas mention the tapeworm and not even once did any physician spot anything strange about Tsafendas's behaviour. What is notable is that when he was in custody, Tsafendas seemed to tell everyone he came across about the tapeworm, especially doctors who examined him, but before that, he did not tell anyone. The police were in possession of the medical reports written by all nine doctors, but none was used in court since presumably they were not given to the Attorney-General. It should be mentioned here that Tsafendas was also examined, in July 1966, by Dr. Ralph Kossew, Cape Town's district surgeon, and was found to be a schizophrenic after an

⁴⁰⁸² Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

⁴⁰⁸³ Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁴ The doctor's name in the medical report is indecipherable.

⁴⁰⁸⁵ Demitrio Tsafendas's Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁶ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁷ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁴⁰⁸⁸ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

examination that lasted “a little bit longer” than ten minutes. However, this was after Tsafendas had applied for a disability grant and had to be found to be unable to do any work in order to qualify for it. This case will be discussed extensively later in this chapter, as Dr. Kossew was one of the defence’s witnesses.

Dr. Cooper also testified that he “is quite likely to refer to his tapeworm in his everyday life but not every time he is confronted by anybody, not constantly in conversation.” However, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm to anyone, not to his family or his friends and not even to one of the about three hundred and fifty people who were interviewed by the police and the Commission at the time and the author later (apart from the three priests who testified to the author who learned about it thirty years after the assassination).

The Attorney-General must have been aware at the time that out of the scores of witnesses questioned by the police, no one mentioned the tapeworm. Having also listened to Dr. Cooper’s statement above and his vivid description of Tsafendas talking about the tapeworm, should van den Bergh not have asked the doctor how nobody had ever heard of it until now? Tsafendas also did not mention the tapeworm to the police – another puzzle. We will examine some of these witnesses’ statements in the section about Tsafendas “being unable to function on a reasonable level.”

During the late-1970s, Father Minas Constandinou was assigned by the Greek Orthodox Church of South Africa to visit all the Greek Orthodox inmates in prisons in Gauteng. Thus, Father Minas had the chance to visit Tsafendas in Pretoria Central Prison. He was the first visitor Tsafendas had had since the one-off visit by David Bloomberg in 1976. Tsafendas immediately recognised the priest, whom he had not seen since 1965. Because of his profession, Father Minas was allowed to speak to Tsafendas in Greek and without any of the warders listening. Father Minas considered Tsafendas at that time to be a “highly intelligent person with very deep political convictions,” and was sure that he had invented the tapeworm in order not to be executed. But to his surprise, when he asked his old friend about the assassination, Tsafendas pointed to his stomach and said “It was the tapeworm, my Father, the tapeworm.” Father Minas understood that Tsafendas was not keen on discussing the issue and dropped the subject.⁴⁰⁸⁹

⁴⁰⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

During his subsequent visits, Tsafendas spoke perfectly normally to him, as he always had done, and never mentioned the tapeworm again. Their conversations in the beginning were about each man's life up till then and memories of the old days in Mozambique. One day Tsafendas saw Father Minas talking to one of the warders. He then asked the priest whether the warders were asking him to reveal what they were discussing. Father Minas replied seriously, "yes." Tsafendas nodded and did not say a word. Father Minas then informed him that he had been telling the warders that he was mad and that he talked constantly about the tapeworm. Some days, he added, he would tell the warders that Tsafendas had said that the tapeworm "was hungry today", or that "it did not let him sleep last night." Tsafendas gave him a restrained smile and Father Minas smiled back, also in a restrained way.⁴⁰⁹⁰

Subsequently, Tsafendas started asking him about politics and current affairs as he had no access to newspapers, magazines or the radio. Thus, Father Minas would always read the day's newspaper before his visit to keep himself up to date. Father Minas kept on visiting Tsafendas for a couple of years. He only asked him once more about the assassination and Tsafendas again pointed to his stomach. It was second and last time Tsafendas spoke to him about the tapeworm.⁴⁰⁹¹

Sometime in 1994, and after apartheid had collapsed, when Tsafendas was in the Pretoria Prison Hospital, he was visited again by Father Minas, who had not seen him since the late 1980s. The priest asked him, "How is the tapeworm Dimitri?" Tsafendas replied (smiling like he knew nothing about it), "What tapeworm my Father?" Father Minas, pretending to be taken aback, asked, "the tapeworm Dimitri, the tapeworm?" and pointed to Tsafendas's stomach, just like Tsafendas had done a few years previously in Pretoria Central Prison. Tsafendas smiled and replied, "I don't believe I have a tapeworm, my Father." He then pointed to the warders and said "They think I have one." A little later he told Father Minas smiling, "If I believed I had a tapeworm, I would have gone to a gastroenterologist, not to a psychiatrist."⁴⁰⁹²

Tsafendas, a completely different person now from the one Father Minas had seen in the high-security prison – relaxed and witty just like the old days in Mozambique – explained how the tapeworm story had come into being, from Tom Tuff in the 1940s, and how he had taken possession of the story and used it up to his arrest in 1966.⁴⁰⁹³ Tsafendas also repeated this account of the tapeworm's genesis a little later to Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis.⁴⁰⁹⁴ Apart from these three priests who were aware of Tsafendas's play-acting with the tapeworm, none of the other witnesses the author interviewed knew anything about such a ruse.

⁴⁰⁹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁰⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁰⁹² Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

An important witness is Tsafendas's first cousin, Mary Eendracht, who was born in Egypt in 1923. She knew Tsafendas in Egypt in early childhood and they grew up together in Mozambique. As an adult, Eendracht maintained a friendly relationship with her cousin, who often confided to her. However, he never mentioned a tapeworm or anything else that might suggest he was schizophrenic. Eendracht dismissed out of hand the notion that Tsafendas ever spoke the way his speech was presented by his defence lawyers and Dr. Cooper. She believed he was perfectly sane and made up the tapeworm story so as not to be executed. "I knew him all my life; we grew up together and I think he confided to me everything that ever happened in his life. He trusted me. I was with him every day until 1939, when he went to South Africa. He was like a real brother to me. I don't believe for a moment he really believed he had a tapeworm and that he said these things to these people and meant them. No way!"⁴⁰⁹⁵

As soon as Eendracht heard about the tapeworm, she knew Tsafendas had made it up to save himself. "If there was such thing, I would have probably been the first person Dimitri would tell. He told me everything. If he wanted advice about how to approach or what to say to a girl, he was coming to me. I never believed, and no one will ever convince me, that Dimitri really believed it or really meant these things he told these people." She was referring to the statements he made to Dr. Cooper.⁴⁰⁹⁶

Another important witness is Fotini Gavasiadis, sister of Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law. Tsafendas lived in Fotini's and her husband's house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they ⁴⁰⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁰⁹⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁰⁹⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁰⁹⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

worked together in her brother's café. When the transcription of Tsafendas's halting remarks to his defence team and the psychiatrists were read to her by the author, she laughed and said:

“There is absolutely no way Dimitri would have talked like that. This is a different man speaking. This is not only nonsense, which Dimitri would have never said, but he did not talk in that way. I don't believe he said these things. It's true, he ate a lot, but he never attributed [his appetite] to any tapeworm. He just liked food, he was a big man; it was natural to eat more than most people.”⁴⁰⁹⁷

Gavasiadis never heard Tsafendas mention a tapeworm and she ate with him at least once every day for nine months. She is certain that he was pretending to avoid being hanged, and said, “He was certainly capable of putting on an act like this. He was very, very clever.” She said, “Dimitri could buy you and sell you any time he wanted, and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever.” Furthermore, according to Gavasiadis, Tsafendas had a very distinctive way of talking and this was not it. She does not believe that Tsafendas could have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.⁴⁰⁹⁸

Important testimony came also from Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola had Tsafendas living with him for four-five months in Istanbul in 1961, saw him there almost every day for another two-three months and kept in touch with him by letter until 1966. He was one of those who became very close to Tsafendas. Like Gavasiadis, Father Nikola laughed when I read Tsafendas's words to him and refused to believe it was Tsafendas talking. Tsafendas “was not talking like that and would never have spoken like that; these are the words of a madman, this is not Dimitri.” He said that if he had been asked at the time to testify before a court, “I would have sworn that he was not insane; there is absolutely no way this man to have been insane. I lived with him in the same house for four months; there was never even the slightest indication that he might be even slightly unbalanced, never ... he was a good-hearted man with high principles.”⁴⁰⁹⁹

Father Nikola believes that the words attributed to Tsafendas “could not possibly have come out of his mouth. The only reason he might have talked in that way would have been to convince the police he was insane.” The priest said Tsafendas never said anything that might suggest he was insane. “I assure you he was not insane. I am positive he made it up in order ⁴⁰⁹⁷ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁰⁹⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁰⁹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

not to be hanged.” He too did not believe Tsafendas could have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.⁴¹⁰⁰

Ira Kyriakakis grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, having been born in 1927. She was always friendly with him and never heard him say anything about a tapeworm. She is certain he did not believe he had one and was making the story up. If he truly believed he had a tapeworm, he would have told her as they were extremely close. She also does not believe Tsafendas could have spoken in the way described by the defence or the psychiatrists. She told the author:

“Dimitri was a devil since he was child; he was extremely intelligent and capable. If he wanted something, he would find a way to do it. Nothing and no one could stop him. He was not mad, he was very clever. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could convince the devil to buy a Bible. You will never meet anyone who knew him well, apart from these psychiatrists and lawyers you told me about, that will tell you he was mad. He was not.”

Kyriakakis does not believe that Tsafendas could have really believed he had a tapeworm or to have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.⁴¹⁰¹

Helen Grispos was born in 1930, when Tsafendas was twelve, but she lived in the house next to the Tsafendas family in Lourenço Marques. George Grispos, who became her husband, was three years older than Tsafendas, but they were boyhood best friends in Lourenço Marques. Helen Grispos's mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother, Marika in Lourenço Marques. Neither Helen nor her husband or mother ever heard Tsafendas talk about a tapeworm and Helen does not believe he would have spoken as claimed. When she and her husband read newspaper trial reports about the tapeworm, they had no doubt Tsafendas was making it up. Because a lot of people knew that Helen's husband was very close to Tsafendas, they often asked about him. According to Helen, George maintained consistently that Tsafendas never spoke about the tapeworm and that he was making it up in order not to be hanged. As for herself, she refused to believe that Tsafendas could have meant the things he told Dr. Cooper. “He was definitely not insane. He never said or did anything to make me think that he was insane. George always maintained that he had pretended to be mad in order that they would not kill him. He had no doubt about that.”⁴¹⁰²

⁴¹⁰⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴¹⁰¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴¹⁰² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

Father Minas Constandinou knew Tsafendas for about thirty-five years. He met him first in 1963 in Lourenço Marques, he visited him in Pretoria Central Prison in the 1980s, and he continued seeing him in the prison's hospital and the Sterkfontein Hospital in the 1990s until Tsafendas died. We have just seen what he said about the tapeworm story based on what he was told by Tsafendas. Father Minas was another who laughed when he read what Tsafendas said to Dr. Cooper. The then told the author:

“Ha, ha, he told me what he did, but not in such detail. Fascinating! If he had not told me that he had deliberately played the fool, I wouldn't have believed that these were his words. Impossible! Even at the beginning, when I asked him why he did it and he pointed with his finger to his stomach, he did not say any of these things. He didn't talk like this even then and he never told me anything like this. His speech was absolutely perfect. Even when he told me about the tapeworm, I was not sure that he was mad because everything else he was saying and the way he spoke did not suggest that he was mad ... later, when he told me that everything about the tapeworm was a lie, it all made sense.”

Father Minas does not believe that Tsafendas could have really meant the things he told Dr. Cooper.⁴¹⁰³

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis met Tsafendas in 1994 in Pretoria Prison hospital and had three very lengthy conversations with him. Tsafendas confided to him the truth about the tapeworm. As for Tsafendas's form of speaking, the priest said he could easily tell that these words were not naturally spoken by Tsafendas. “He never spoke like this. He never said anything like this, not only about the tapeworm, but generally he never said anything that would make me think this man is not mentally well. He always talked logically. I am certain that he deliberately talked like this to his lawyers and to the doctors.” Bishop Ioannis does not believe Tsafendas could have said what he supposedly said to Dr. Cooper.⁴¹⁰⁴

Artemis Michaletos was Tsafendas's aunt, who helped raise him in Egypt, then lived close to him in Mozambique. The author did not interview her but spoke to her sons, Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, and to John's wife, Irene Michaletos, all of whom knew Tsafendas. According to them, Artemis knew Dimitri better than anyone but his father. She was devastated when she heard Tsafendas had killed Dr. Verwoerd, fearing he would be tortured and hanged. When she heard about the tapeworm during the trial and that Tsafendas was declared insane, she was very happy. "I knew it," she cried. "I knew he would find a way not to be hanged." When asked by some of her friends if he had ever mentioned the tapeworm to her, she had responded, "No! Are you crazy? He is not crazy, he is making it up. He is exceptionally clever." Artemis had known Tsafendas since he was one year old and insisted throughout her entire life that he was perfectly sane and that if he believed he really had a tapeworm, he would have told her. He had no secrets from her. Several relatives asked her if Tsafendas ever mentioned the tapeworm and she always gave the same answer, no.⁴¹⁰⁵

⁴¹⁰³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴¹⁰⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

John Michaletos also told the author:

"What a hell of an invention, isn't it [the tapeworm]! How he thought that up I don't know. It was Antony [his brother] who first told me [that Tsafendas had spoken to his defence team about a tapeworm] and I did not believe him. I thought John was making it up, I knew Dimitris would have never said that. He insisted, but I still did not believe him. I honestly thought he was joking. I only believed it later that day when he showed me the newspapers. I burst into laughs when I read it. I remember me reading aloud from the newspaper what he had allegedly told the doctors and everyone laughing about it [his brother, his sister-in-law and his parents]. My mother got a real kick out of it; she really enjoyed hearing it. In our house, after we read the first day [of court proceedings] we couldn't wait for the next one to see what else will be said, and again, we will sit around the table all together and I will read out loud. I remember there was also an old woman who lived next door to our house, she lived by herself, and she knew Dimitri since he was a little child. She could not read and she would ask me to read every single thing that the newspaper was writing about Dimitri. She even understood that he was making it up, but found it very amusing to hear all about it. I remember that when I was reading something that sounded very strange to her, especially about the tapeworm, she would ask me 'Dimitri said that?' and then she would cross herself in disbelief. He [Tsafendas] made it up to save his skin, no doubt about that. I knew it, I had no doubt about it, I did not even think about it for a second, it was impossible to believe such a thing, impossible."⁴¹⁰⁶

Katerina Pnema was Tsafendas's younger half-sister. To this day, she is extremely angry with Tsafendas, believing that he ruined her life. She strongly condemned his murder of Dr. Verwoerd. In 1994, efforts were made under the first democratically elected ⁴¹⁰⁵ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

⁴¹⁰⁶ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

government in South Africa to grant Tsafendas amnesty. He was aged seventy-six at the time and unable to care for himself. Judge Jody Kollapen, and subsequently governmental officials, asked Tsafendas's family to take him into their home and care for him. They refused and Tsafendas spent the remaining years of his life in Sterkfontein Hospital.⁴¹⁰⁷

Despite her anger towards her half-brother, Pnema considers it "impossible" for Dimitri to have spoken as his defence team and Dr. Cooper described. She told the author:

"He would never have said anything like this ... what you read to me, it's nonsense; he never spoke like this and I don't believe he ever said those words ... I don't believe he even said it deliberately to play the fool. He was certainly capable of doing it [pretending to be mad], but to say all this nonsense? No, I don't believe it. Dimitri never spoke like this..."

Pnema does not believe that Tsafendas could have really meant the things he told Dr. Cooper or that he really believed he had a tapeworm.⁴¹⁰⁸

Important testimony comes from Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis and Ira Kyriakakis. According to these three witnesses, Tsafendas, while in Beira, associated with Dr. Vasilis Tzitzafakos, a Greek general practitioner. The witnesses all discussed Tsafendas's case with him at the time of the summary trial and the doctor had no doubt that Tsafendas was pretending to be mad in order to escape the gallows. According to these three witnesses, although Tsafendas was close to the doctor, he never told him anything about the tapeworm or Saint Peter and the doctor always maintained that Tsafendas was certainly not a schizophrenic.⁴¹⁰⁹ If Tsafendas really believed he had a tapeworm, he would almost certainly have discussed it with this physician, whom he knew well and trusted. Likewise with the Saint Peter story. In addition, Dr Tzitzafakos had spent several months with Tsafendas, while Dr. Cooper had spent just six hours with him.

Further testimony to Tsafendas's cleverness came from his half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, who was closer to Tsafendas than any of his siblings. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 and thus spent only her first five years in the Tsafendas family, but Tsafendas maintained contact with her thereafter through letters and postcards and he spent nine months ⁴¹⁰⁷ Judge Jody Kollapen in a personal interview, 16 April 2015.

⁴¹⁰⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴¹⁰⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

in 1964 as her neighbour in Pretoria.⁴¹¹⁰ Vlachopoulos testified to the police in 1966 that Tsafendas never spoke to her or to anyone in the family about a tapeworm. She said exactly the same thing in 2007 in Manolis Dimelas's documentary about Tsafendas, Live and Let Live, when she also claimed that her half-brother "was not crazy, he was very, very clever; cleverer than any of us and very able. If he wanted to do something, if he had a target, he would always achieve it. He never mentioned this tapeworm." Eleni Vlachopoulos always believed that her half-brother made up the tapeworm story to escape the gallows.⁴¹¹¹

The author has read Tsafendas's alleged words to forty-four people who had some kind of contact with him, and all declared he could not have spoken as claimed, or if he did, it was to mislead his interrogators. Further, they never heard him mention a tapeworm. Of this total, the author have not listed those who did not know Tsafendas well or were very young at the time – Tsafendas's nephews, for instance. The thirty-three who are named below all knew Tsafendas for more than a month and spent substantial time with him. None of them believes that Tsafendas could have meant what he told Dr. Cooper. Brief accounts of the interviews with them follow:

- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town restaurant owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios does not believe "even for a moment" that Tsafendas said what is claimed by Dr. Cooper. "If he did, he was lying to save himself ... He was very intelligent and this was not the way he talked, he talked very nicely; excellent use of words."⁴¹¹²
- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965. She never heard him saying anything about a tapeworm or anything else that might seem strange. She does not believe Tsafendas meant what he told Dr. Cooper. Tsafendas, she said, was perfectly sane and a "very, very clever man."⁴¹¹³
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met ⁴¹¹⁰ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴¹¹¹ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴¹¹² Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁴¹¹³ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.⁴¹¹⁴

- Alexander Moumbaris came to know Tsafendas in late 1972 in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison while awaiting trial on political charges. He was found guilty of “conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, aiding terrorists, distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968, and reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings.”⁴¹¹⁵ Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months. Initially, Tsafendas was cautious and although very talkative, it was obvious to Moumbaris that he did not trust him. However, as time passed, Tsafendas began opening up. Moumbaris told the author that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to him or said anything to suggest he was insane; all the conversations they had were perfectly normal. One day, Tsafendas told him proudly in Greek about Verwoerd: “I got τον Νταή τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense). Moumbaris found Tsafendas to be “a very intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person.” Tsafendas even asked him to teach him Algebra, but the lesson was short-lived as the warders forbade it. Moumbaris told the author: “I not only regard Dimitri Tsafendas as a sane man but also as the bravest and ill-treated man I have ever met.”⁴¹¹⁶
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything “ridiculous” such as his supposed gibberish to Dr. Cooper and has no doubt he was perfectly sane. “I remember how he talked and I cannot see these words coming from his mouth. He did not talk like that. He never said anything about the tapeworm.”⁴¹¹⁷
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni and met Tsafendas on board the ship. In the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town, he never heard him say anything to suggest he was less than sane.⁴¹¹⁸

⁴¹¹⁴ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴¹¹⁵ South African History Online. Alexander Moumbaris, n.d.

⁴¹¹⁶ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

⁴¹¹⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴¹¹⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul. She doesn't remember everything they discussed, but she is certain he was a "completely normal man ... he never mentioned this tapeworm or anything else that sounded insane. He was always well-dressed and very courteous." Her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was friendly with Tsafendas during his stay in Istanbul and Alexandra says he would have told her if he had noticed anything wrong with him.⁴¹¹⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children in Lourenço Marques. Although they embraced opposing political ideologies, Babiolakis is certain that Tsafendas invented the tapeworm. He does not recognise the words quoted by Dr. Cooper and by the other psychiatrists who examined him and is convinced he made them up, too. Babiolakis heard in Beira in 1964/1965 that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in police custody. When he later asked Tsafendas about it, Tsafendas just said that he had a nervous breakdown, but he was now ok. Babiolakis believed then that Tsafendas made up the Saint Peter act and later did the same for the tapeworm. "I never heard Dimitri talking like this, this is someone else talking. He couldn't have said these things unless he did it deliberately, which is what I think he did."⁴¹²⁰
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Gondola and Beira in 1964. He too had heard that Tsafendas claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in Portuguese custody. He and several other Greeks discussed the issue and concluded that Tsafendas had made it up since they were with him every single day up to his arrest and never heard him say anything strange. Papadakis does not recognise Tsafendas's words when examined by Dr. Cooper and the rest of his defence team and he is positive he was acting.⁴¹²¹
- Panagiotis Peroglou was another who met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept up with him until his arrest. They were often eating together at Mary Scott's boarding house. He never heard Tsafendas say anything crazy and has no doubt that he was quite sane.⁴¹²²
- Pamela Abrahams met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 also at Mary Scott's boarding house which she visited with her husband Panagiotis Peroglou. He made a very good ⁴¹¹⁹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴¹²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴¹²¹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴¹²² Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

impression on her due to his politeness and good manners and she never heard him say anything to indicate he might be insane.⁴¹²³

- Stratis Vamvarapis knew Tsafendas in 1965 as a resident of Mary Scott's boarding house. He never heard Tsafendas saying anything like the remarks attributed to him by Dr. Cooper and his defence team or anything else to suggest he was insane.⁴¹²⁴
- Costas Poriassis met Tsafendas in Beira in 1965. He is certain that Tsafendas was not insane and never heard him say anything absurd.⁴¹²⁵
- Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything close to what he told his defence.⁴¹²⁶
- Antonis Nichas, a supplier to the Eleni, met Tsafendas in 1966. He never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane or anything similar to what he told the police.⁴¹²⁷
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated for a few weeks with him. He described him in his statement to the police as "a normal person with a very high-intelligence." He does not believe that Tsafendas was insane and always maintained that he must have been making g up the tapeworm story.⁴¹²⁸
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas "definitely did not look or sound insane."⁴¹²⁹
- Marina Tsihlakis. She met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964. Her father was good friend of Tsafendas. She never heard him speak in the way his defence statement conveyed.⁴¹³⁰
- Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis met Tsafendas in Germany at different times in the 1950s and never heard him say anything that would indicate that he might not be sane. He also visited him in the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital. Although Tsafendas was admitted ⁴¹²³ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴¹²⁴ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁴¹²⁵ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴¹²⁶ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁴¹²⁷ Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016.

⁴¹²⁸ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴¹²⁹ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴¹³⁰ Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 3 April 2015.

supposedly because of the tapeworm, he did not tell Father Efthimios anything about it. The priest does not remember what Tsafendas told him was the reason for his hospitalization, but he is certain that he did not mention the tapeworm.⁴¹³¹

- Dimitris Skoularikis met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1990s. He once asked Tsafendas, “How is the tapeworm, Dimitri?” Tsafendas replied “I don’t have one; they [the prison guards] think I have one.”⁴¹³²

All the above witnesses are willing to swear under oath in any court that Tsafendas did not talk in the manner attributed to him and that he would never have said any of the things attributed to him unless he was pretending to be mad. The following are testimonies from the crew of the Eleni, the tanker that was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3. Their evidence is important since these men saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days until three days before the assassination:

- Cleanthes Alachiotis developed a warm relationship with Tsafendas. Tsafendas told him about “pretending to be mad” in order not to serve in the Portuguese army and Alachiotis believes that his reported speech in custody was another such act since he considered it “absolutely impossible” that Tsafendas spoke as claimed. “He was either joking or he had a specific reason to do it. Obviously, it was the second, since he wanted to save his head. If the police had asked me to testify in court, I would have sworn that he was making it up. He was nothing like this, but I am not surprised he did it since he had done it before.”⁴¹³³
- Nikolas Billis is not surprised by Tsafendas’s words to his defence as he has no doubt that he made up the tapeworm story so as not to be hanged. Tsafendas had told him how he pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. “No doubt he did it again. If you met him, you could tell that this man’s brain was a level above the rest. He could easily manipulate you and convince you of anything. I am not at all surprised that he told this to the police. He definitely made it up. He did not talk like this. He talked very well, like a teacher.”⁴¹³⁴
- Nikolas Kambouris became close with Tsafendas. He told the author:

⁴¹³¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁴¹³² Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015.

⁴¹³³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010

⁴¹³⁴ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

“I would bet my house that Dimitri did not say these things ... well, if he did, he must have had a reason and he did not really mean them. I am positive about it. These are the words of a madman and Dimitri was an intelligent and cultured man ... he must have been pretending with them as he did with the Portuguese. He was saner than a lot of people I knew ... I don't believe that he told these people these things. He was a serious man; he was not talking like this. I was with him for forty-two days and he never said anything stupid like these things.”

Kambouris states that Tsafendas “did not talk rubbish; he was an idealist; a man with high principles.”⁴¹³⁵

- Michalis Vasilakis became closer to Tsafendas than any of the crew. This was his reaction when I read to him what Tsafendas told his defence:

“A tapeworm? Did Dimitri say that? Are you sure? He couldn't have said that. A tapeworm? It's unbelievable. Dimitri was a very clever man; he was not talking nonsense. He knew as much as all of us knew and he was talking better than a professor. I was the one who first called him ‘Professor.’ I have no doubt that if he really said these things to the police he must have done it to save himself. He couldn't possibly have believed them and I am telling you he did not believe them. He would have told me if there was such thing. He told me a lot about his life and I can tell you this man was one of the smartest people I have ever met. You could see some rare dignity and pride in him. You could see from the way he was talking about politics and the world how politically passionate he was. You don't meet men like that every day. I don't think that anyone who met him would tell you that he was crazy. This is complete nonsense.”⁴¹³⁶

- Georgios Kantas, like Billis and Alachiotis, he is not surprised that Tsafendas spoke about a tapeworm, although he never mentioned any such thing to him. However, Tsafendas told him about his act with the Portuguese in order to not serve in the Portuguese army and Kantas firmly believes that this was just another mad act.

“He never spoke in this way and I can't imagine him talking like this, though I believe he did it as he was capable of doing it. You could tell that this man was very able. He did not talk this way. I can't explain it, but I remember that he had a very specific way of talking, ⁴¹³⁵ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

⁴¹³⁶ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He was talking like a professor. That is what we used to say and what he called him.”⁴¹³⁷

- Grigoris Pouftis agrees with his crewmates that Tsafendas was putting on another “mad” act, as he did with the Portuguese.

“He was certainly not crazy. He was a little peculiar because of the way he was talking. I mean he was sometimes over polite and it seemed to me that his personality did not fit with his job. We met hawkers all around the world and none was ever like him ... I would describe him as an aristocratic hawker, if such a thing exists! I couldn't believe that a man with his manners and knowledge could be doing this job. That was the only peculiar thing about him.”⁴¹³⁸

- Manolis Mastromanolis, the Eleni boatswain who was involved in procuring a firearm for Tsafendas, spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and never heard him speak in the way he did to Dr. Cooper and to his defence team. Mastromanolis does not believe that Tsafendas could have said such things. “He did not talk like that; definitely not,” he states.⁴¹³⁹
- Emanuel Tsabouniaris also spent a lot of time with Tsafendas. He considered Tsafendas to be “a gentleman and a very sophisticated man.” Like Pouftis, he found it strange that Tsafendas, “such an educated and well-mannered man, could do such job (hawker).” However, this was the only thing he found strange about him. He believes Tsafendas could not possibly talk as he did and mean what he said unless he did it deliberately to get something out of it.⁴¹⁴⁰
- Ioannis Speis stated that Tsafendas never said anything to him that bears the slightest resemblance to what he told his defence.⁴¹⁴¹
- Vasilios Perselis spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and stated that he never heard him say anything like his statement and has no doubt that he did so to escape hanging. “He spoke very nicely; not nonsense like that. He knew how to speak and everything he said made sense. He was not crazy.”⁴¹⁴²

⁴¹³⁷ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

⁴¹³⁸ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

⁴¹³⁹ Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

⁴¹⁴⁰ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016.

⁴¹⁴¹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

⁴¹⁴² Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

- Dionisis Lallis did not associate with Tsafendas as much as some of the other crew members, but he spoke to him a few times and never got the slightest impression of insanity.⁴¹⁴³
- Panteleimon Aspiotis, Eleni seaman. A good friend of Tsafendas, also never thought that he could be insane and could not imagine him saying the nonsense he told Dr. Cooper and his defence.⁴¹⁴⁴

The author also included here three witnesses who did not meet Tsafendas personally but were close to people who did. The author considers their statements, though second hand, to be entirely reliable.

- Advocate George Bizos's mother-in-law was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother and knew Tsafendas very well from childhood. She told Bizos that he was perfectly sane.⁴¹⁴⁵
- Dr. Costas Gazidis's first cousin Rika Nikolatos was a social worker and visited Tsafendas in prison and then in Sterkfontein Hospital. In total, she spent some ten years meeting Tsafendas and they were extremely close. She told Dr. Gazidis, "He is completely sane, there is nothing wrong with him." Tsafendas never said anything to her to suggest he might be insane and she always maintained that he was "completely sane." Dr. Gazidis is willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what he was told by Nikolatos.⁴¹⁴⁶ Nikolatos's statement is also confirmed by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis. She had discussed his case extensively with them both, and she and Father Minas had often visited Tsafendas together.⁴¹⁴⁷
- Janet Gazidis, Costas' wife is also willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what Nikolatos, too, was told.⁴¹⁴⁸

Finally, valuable testimony comes in the form of Tsafendas's medical report from Grafton State Hospital, which states that while in the United States in 1943 "he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ⁴¹⁴³ Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

⁴¹⁴⁴ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

⁴¹⁴⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴¹⁴⁶ Dr. Costa Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

⁴¹⁴⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴¹⁴⁸ Janet Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

ships.”⁴¹⁴⁹ Since he play-acted back in 1943 and then did the same several times with the Portuguese police, was it not an easy and natural tactic to use with the South African police in 1966?

Would it have been possible for Tsafendas to believe he had a tapeworm but that he hid it, never telling anyone about it? That, according to Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun and Tuviah Zabow, would be almost impossible, or at least “exceedingly unlikely.”⁴¹⁵⁰ Professor Heilbrun told the author that it is “exceedingly unlikely that an individual would have a delusion about a controlling tapeworm for thirty years and nobody around him ever heard or noticed anything to that effect.”⁴¹⁵¹

Professor Alban Burke told the author:

“What you need to remember about schizophrenic people is that the world they live in is a real world for them; they have no realisation that the world they are living in is not a real world, so what would be your motive for hiding that away? I mean, if I see an elephant walking in the room, I would truly believe I see it ... why would I pretend that there is not an elephant in the room? I would say to you, ‘What is that elephant doing here?’ and I would be surprised if you don’t see it, because, remember, the image that I have in my brain is a real one. You would often see with schizophrenic patients that they would touch a lot, to make sure that what they’re seeing truly exists....

So you would see very clearly in their behaviour that there is something strange going on; they would talk to themselves, but not ... all people talk to themselves... but what you would see, if there is a voice in your head, I would be speaking, ‘Go away, stop talking, can you shut up?’ So you would see in the person’s behaviour that they are responding to conversations; you would pick that up. It is not the same as just, merely, talking to yourself whilst you were doing something, it’s totally different, and my question would be, Why would you hide it away? Especially in a case like Tsafendas, where he himself goes to hospitals.”⁴¹⁵²

It is a fact that Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm before his arrest to some doctors

⁴¹⁴⁹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁰ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴¹⁵¹ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 16 January 2017.

⁴¹⁵² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

in various hospitals, but not to friends and companions. Therefore, one can argue that Tsafendas only mentioned the tapeworm to doctors and not to the people around him, that's why nobody knew about it. However, in this case, why did he also mention it to his defence lawyers before he was examined by the psychiatrists they appointed? If he was happy to tell them, since they were not doctors, should he have not told other people too? The fact that Tsafendas mentioned the tapeworm to them suggests that he was happy to talk about it.

After the trial and while he was imprisoned, Tsafendas talked to the prison warders and to David Bloomberg, who visited him twice, about the tapeworm.⁴¹⁵³ This again suggests that he was willing to talk about it, so to say he only talked to doctors about it is inaccurate. It is noteworthy that he only spoke of it to doctors when he admitted himself to a hospital; he never mentioned the tapeworm to those doctors who examined him for his various job applications or his application for a permanent residency permit in South Africa.

As for how the tapeworm came to feature in the case, please consult the previous chapter.

THE TAPEWORM'S RESPONSIBILITY IN THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

The other important issue with Dr. Cooper's testimony is that he claims the tapeworm was responsible for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, although he admits Tsafendas told him that the tapeworm did not ask him to do it. Tsafendas told the police on September 11, "I did believe that with the disappearance of the South African Prime Minister a change of policy would take place. I did set myself the task of destroying the Prime Minister. It was my own idea to kill him."⁴¹⁵⁴

In his second statement on September 19, Tsafendas said, "I did not do it at the instigation of anyone. I did it on my own because I thought it was the right thing."⁴¹⁵⁵ On neither occasion does Tsafendas say anything about the tapeworm; indeed he states clearly that it was his own idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he believed a change of policy would take place. Again, we not in position to know whether the Attorney-General had access to these statements or if he ignored them, but certainly their existence could at least have challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony about the tapeworm's role in the killing.

⁴¹⁵³ The Cape Argus, 2 October 1976: 1, 'Tsafendas- is no broken man-Bloomberg.'

⁴¹⁵⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Tsafendas informed Dr. Cooper about all the hospitals he had been to, as he did with the police. Also while in custody he spoke freely about the tapeworm and his hospitalizations to two other doctors, Dr. Muller, a specialist physician, and Dr. Kossew, Cape Town's district surgeon, both experts for the defence. However, between 1964 and 1966, while in South Africa, Tsafendas was examined by six physicians and did not say anything to them about either subject. These six doctors were not psychiatrists but examined Tsafendas because of his application for permanent residency in South Africa and for several job applications. Wanting a positive response, Tsafendas told the doctors and wrote on his application forms that he was in perfect health. He was passed fit in each case. If something was wrong with him, probably one or more of the six doctors would have spotted it, the same way Dr. Kossew and Dr. Muller did, who were also not psychiatrists.

Sometime in 1994, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison hospital and apartheid had collapsed, he confessed to Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that the tapeworm was an invention. He explained how the story originated with the young seaman, Tom Tuff.⁴¹⁵⁶ He said he decided to use it when he was in custody after the assassination because he "couldn't take the torture anymore" and he also feared that he would be murdered in his cell by the police, who would then claim that he was insane and committed suicide.⁴¹⁵⁷ Nevertheless, Tsafendas asked Fathers Ioannis Tsafaridis and Minas Constandinou to tell the staff in Pretoria Prison hospital that he still believed he had a tapeworm and he was definitely insane, so they would "leave him alone." When the priests or Rika Nikolatos brought food for Tsafendas, they always brought extra rations at his request; he wanted to share the food with other patients who had no visitors. However, Nikolatos and the priests, at Tsafendas's request, they would tell the staff that he had asked for the extra to feed the tapeworm.⁴¹⁵⁸

For additional information regarding the tapeworm and how it was used in court, see Patrick O'Ryan's important testimony and its analysis later in this chapter.

ABOUT TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

⁴¹⁵⁶ For the incident see Tsafendas's biography, Chapter Two.

⁴¹⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴¹⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

Dr. Cooper seems not to know that that Tsafendas had simulated mental illness in the past and that the Grafton State Hospital report said clearly that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” in 1943.⁴¹⁵⁹ He also seems to be unaware that he pretended to be mentally ill to avoid service in the Portuguese Army in 1950.⁴¹⁶⁰ Or that he had faked an attack of appendicitis in 1952 when he was not allowed to disembark from the ship that had taken him to Lourenço Marques from Portugal because of his “Communist tendencies.”⁴¹⁶¹ This last incident clearly demonstrates Tsafendas’s tendency to fake illness to get out of trouble. Aware that pretending to be mad would not get him off the ship in Lourenço Marques, he changed tack and staged the appendicitis act, confident that he would then be taken ashore. Of course, he escaped as soon as he entered the hospital where he was taken, proof that it was all an act. All of these deceptions were known to the South African police, but none was brought up during Dr. Cooper’s testimony or indeed throughout the summary trial.

It is possible, though unlikely, that the State was unaware of the simulations. After all, the Grafton State Hospital report was in the possession of the South African Police and the Commission of Enquiry, and it would seem natural for the State to be given this report, too. Certainly, the State was well aware of a time in the past when Tsafendas had “simulated abnormality,” as the Assistant of the Attorney-General put it in his cross-examination of Dr. MacGregor, another psychiatrist and defence witness, the last one to testify at the summary trial.

Although it is not clear from the cross-examination exactly which incident the Assistant was referring to, the fact is that the State was at the time in possession of such information and did not use it with Dr. Cooper. The Attorney-General’s Assistant asked Dr. MacGregor whether he was aware that Tsafendas’s had “simulated abnormality” before.⁴¹⁶² It ⁴¹⁵⁹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴¹⁶⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴¹⁶¹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Henk van Woerden in the Mouthful of Glass also describes the same scene (2000: 70), presumably because he was told about it by Tsafendas.

⁴¹⁶² Dr. James William MacGregor’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

was the normal question to ask in the circumstances. However, the State did not find it necessary to ask the same question of the first and most important defence witness. What happened during Dr. MacGregor's examination will be considered later in this chapter, although it should be stated here that the doctor expressed his surprise that Tsafendas had done something like this and stated that he was not aware of it. However, as we will see, nothing much came of this issue and it was easily and quickly brushed aside.

The following incident is a good example of Tsafendas's ability to adjust to a difficult situation. It happened when he was arrested with a suitcase full of "subversive" books and accused of pretending to be a missionary spreading religion while in reality he was preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence..."⁴¹⁶³ While in custody, Tsafendas was asked by the police if he had "dedicated himself to preach as a missionary and, under the guise of this same religion, advertised in favour of Mozambique's independence." Tsafendas replied that he was "a Christian who considers himself a representative of God on earth, a missionary that wishes he could preach the Christian religion but that he is not allowed to because, on this earth, there is no freedom of expression."⁴¹⁶⁴

Since he faced accusations of pretending to be a missionary and because he carried Bibles and holy books, Tsafendas came up with an idea that neatly fitted the situation. This time, during interrogation, he pretended to be Christ's apostle, Peter, and quoted the Christian scriptures at length. This was easy because he knew much of the Bible by heart and having copies with him made his act convincing. Later, Tsafendas told several witnesses exactly which passages he had parroted from the scriptures.⁴¹⁶⁵ It should be mentioned here that the Saint Peter act was probably not known to the South African police.

Dr. Cooper acknowledges that Tsafendas is well informed about mental disorders as he has spent a lot of time in hospitals. He says that it is common for patients to try to simulate mental disorder by pretending they hear voices, see visions etc. Tsafendas, according to Dr. Cooper, never did any of these things. Dr. Cooper tried a "trick" that would later be used also by Dr. MacGregor; he asked him if he heard "any voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear.” Tsafendas did not fall into the trap, denying any such thing. Why did Tsafendas react in this way? Because about twenty years earlier, he had pretended to hear voices and he was then discovered to be simulating.⁴¹⁶⁶

⁴¹⁶³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴¹⁶⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴¹⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Tsafendas told Father Minas that initially he was “pretending to be mad,” by pretending to hear “voices like Joan of Arc.”⁴¹⁶⁷ This matches the Grafton State Hospital report which says Tsafendas claimed he heard voices coming from the radiators. However, Tsafendas also told the priest that this pretence did not work and he was found out, so he then started using the tapeworm story. This also agrees with the Grafton report as it states that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” before he was admitted.⁴¹⁶⁸ Tsafendas was very well aware that “voices” and “visions” were tactics employed by many people simulating schizophrenia, but the tapeworm, as he told witnesses, was a highly original story.⁴¹⁶⁹

The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders — he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and (the Commission) therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁴¹⁷⁰ Of course the Commission of Enquiry was in possession of most of the documents gathered by the police, plus others. Dr. Cooper was unaware of anything about Tsafendas except what he heard from him.

What is surprising is that the police and even the Commission were aware that Tsafendas was well read about psychiatry and mental illnesses. The police had found two medical books in his possession, one about insanity and psychiatry, the other concerning intestinal disorders.⁴¹⁷¹ The Commission of Enquiry noted that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders — he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and (the Commission) therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear ⁴¹⁶⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴¹⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴¹⁶⁸ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴¹⁶⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴¹⁷⁰ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴¹⁷¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁴¹⁷²

Given that Tsafendas was experienced with psychiatrists, it was to be expected that he did not take Dr. Cooper's bait. It is also evident that Dr. Cooper was not aware of the contents of the Grafton State Hospital report, where it said that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” and had claimed to hear voices from the radiators.⁴¹⁷³ Naturally, Tsafendas's experience with psychiatrists had increased since 1946 and he did not make the same mistake of claiming to hear voices. Dr. Cooper was not aware of this, unlike the Commission of Enquiry, the South African police and presumably the State. The State must have had this report in its possession as it was given to the South African authorities on September 16.⁴¹⁷⁴

Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun and Tuviah Zabow believe the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past was extremely important and should have been made known to those who examined him.⁴¹⁷⁵ However, even without it, Professor Heilbrun disagrees with the way Dr. Cooper attempted to find out whether Tsafendas was simulating or not. He told the author that “To draw accurate conclusions under these circumstances, you need three domains of information. The first involves interviewing and direct observations of the individual. The second involves testing, including measures of response style that are sensitive to exaggeration or fabrication. The third is historical information, including both relevant records (particularly mental health and criminal justice records) and collateral interviews. Your conclusions would be drawn based on patterns that you see recurring across these three domains.”⁴¹⁷⁶

TSAFENDAS'S CHILDHOOD AND TRAVELS

DR. COOPER: He explains that as a child - at that time he was living in the Transvaal - his stepmother indoctrinated him against the natives, and he believes that it is possible that the ⁴¹⁷² Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴¹⁷³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁴ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. Vol. 1, File: 80/0043 A123. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴¹⁷⁶ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

natives have in fact something to do with this tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: When his mother put him against the blacks, and the blacks in revenge, by witchcraft, put a tapeworm in him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DR. COOPER: There was a poor relationship between the accused and his stepmother.

DR. COOPER: He did mention that his stepmother, I think it was, induced a relative to commit sodomy on him when he was a small youngster, and he felt that perhaps this was designed to destroy his masculinity, and he also felt it had something to do with the question of making him unfit for any inheritance. If this be true, of course, it is delusional, but one wondered a little at least whether some relative hadn't in fact committed sodomy here. But the deduction that he drew from this incident would point to him being paranoid and deluded.

DR. COOPER:...and as a result of this disturbed relationship between the accused and his stepmother, he says he was sent to a school in the Transvaal, in Middelburg, Transvaal, where he remained until about the age of twelve, and then he returned to Lourenço Marques. I would like to pause there and say that I am mentioning this aspect of his background in that, if it be proved, if it be true, it would lead one to believe that a man with such a background would be rather more prone to develop mental illness later in life than would the individual with a normal family background. Then comes a story of aimless ramblings, wanderings, around the world, from one country to another, with an apparent inability to find any sort of niche for himself; an inability to adjust himself to any one fixed abode. The number of countries that he has been to is obscure, but he listed at least 25.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

CHILDHOOD

In reference to Tsafendas's relationship with his stepmother and his schooling in South Africa, Dr. Cooper uses the words, "if it be proved, if it be true." He could easily have discovered if it was true by talking to the family or people who knew Tsafendas. Dr. Cooper also stated that Tsafendas did not have a “normal family background,” especially in relation to his stepmother, and this played a role in his developing a mental illness. This argument has no basis in truth.

Numerous witnesses declared that Tsafendas had a perfectly normal family background. His stepmother said she brought him up “as one of her own children,”⁴¹⁷⁷ and Costas Michaletos, an intimate friend of the family, said Tsafendas “grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family.”⁴¹⁷⁸ Guglielmo Conte, a friend and business partner of Tsafendas’s father, who also knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, denied that Dimitri was estranged from his family and stated that except for his school years in Middleburg, he always stayed with his father and stepmother and their family.⁴¹⁷⁹

Tsafendas did not discover that Marika was his stepmother and not his birth mother until he was seventeen, but his relationship with her was the normal one of mother-son. Tsafendas always referred to Marika as his “mother” and not as his “step-mother.”⁴¹⁸⁰ If Marika was at odds with Tsafendas, she would hardly have travelled from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques to help him return to South Africa, then give him a rent-free house in Pretoria.⁴¹⁸¹

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas’s half-sister, Mary Eendracht, his first cousin, Advocate George Bizos,⁴¹⁸² Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis, Helen Grispos, Irene, Antony and John Michaletos all stated to the author that Marika brought up Dimitri as her own child and that they had a very good relationship. The only arguments they had were about Tsafendas’s political activities and these started only when he was around eighteen, not in his ⁴¹⁷⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁸ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁷⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 17 September 1966, Tsafendas timid and puny as a boy.’

⁴¹⁸⁰ For example: Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015, and several others.

⁴¹⁸¹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴¹⁸² Advocate George Bizos did not meet Tsafendas but was told about his relationship with his step-mother by his mother in law who was Marika’s best friend in South Africa.

childhood.⁴¹⁸³

Tsafendas spoke highly of his step-mother to several of the witnesses the author interviewed, praising her for caring for him and treating him like her own child. He talked of how she took him to the cinema, helped him with his studies and taught him many things, especially in the fields of literature and poetry. All of these witnesses were surprised to hear that Tsafendas spoke badly of his step-mother to the psychiatrists, claiming that she indoctrinated him against Black people and induced a male relative to commit a sexual act against him. Why did Tsafendas say such things?

The author has not been able to establish this for a fact, as Tsafendas never discussed this issue with anyone. However, it is quite likely, since Tsafendas was knowledgeable about mental disorders and mental institutions, that he made use of her to convince the psychiatrists that he suffered a trauma when a child, knowing that in a lot of schizophrenic conditions, a childhood trauma frequently played a role. Tsafendas himself had told Father Minas Constandinou that two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- To have a family history of insanity and
- To have a childhood trauma.⁴¹⁸⁴

As for his schooling at Middleburg, two of his former classmates testified as follows: William Mare Volbrecht, by then a psychologist, said, “At that stage, Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us.”⁴¹⁸⁵ And Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, by then a physician, remembered Dimitri as “a popular boy and not the least introverted.” “I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert,” he said. “He was very funny and had us all in stitches.”⁴¹⁸⁶

Again here, Dr. Cooper attributes the tapeworm to his childhood and to what ⁴¹⁸³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴¹⁸⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴¹⁸⁵ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁶ Rand Daily Mail, September 8, 1966, ‘Boyhood days of Tsafendas.’

supposedly happened back then, even though Tsafendas was not a child at the time that Dr. Cooper talks about. If Tsafendas had to create a childhood trauma and problem, he was never going to put the blame to his father whom he worshiped, so presumably he chose the mother.

TRAVELS

Dr. Cooper characterised Tsafendas's travels as "aimless ramblings, wanderings around the world, from one country to another with an apparent inability to find any short of niche for himself; an inability to adjust himself to any one fixed abode." Calling Tsafendas's travels "aimless ramblings" is like calling Odysseus's journeys "pointless wanderings." Tsafendas never travelled aimlessly or for just the sake of it. Wherever he went was for a purpose. Remember he was banned from South Africa and Mozambique and was prosecuted in Portugal. Therefore, he travelled either to find employment (Sweden, Germany, England) or because he was deported there (Greece and Germany again), or because these countries were on the way to his destination (Syria, Lebanon, France, Spain, Denmark, Italy) or simply for a holiday (Bulgaria, Rhodesia, Greece again)

Dr. Cooper seems to be unaware that Tsafendas was forced to spend the years from 1951 to 1963 in exile since he was banned from Mozambique, the country of his birth, because of his pro-Communist and anti-colonialist activities. The same period he was also barred from South Africa because he was a "half-caste" with Communist tendencies. In the years up to 1963, Tsafendas made nine applications for permanent residence in South Africa and all were rejected; he made at least six to be allowed to return to Mozambique, all of which were turned down.

Mozambique was then a Province of Portugal and Tsafendas was officially a Portuguese citizen. However, not only was he banned from Mozambique, he was prosecuted and imprisoned in Portugal. The authorities objected to his past political activism in Mozambique and the fact that he was a Communist who opposed the dictatorship of Premier Antonio Salazar. As for his "aimless ramblings and wanderings around the world," Mozambique and South Africa were the only countries Tsafendas lived in prior to being banned from them, although as a child, he had also lived for a year in Egypt. While serving the Allied cause as a merchant seaman in World War Two, he was stationed in Canada and in the United States. In 1947, he was deported from America to Greece and it was then that his odyssey began. With Mozambique, Portugal and South Africa inaccessible, he tried to find a place to live.⁴¹⁸⁷

The fact is Tsafendas was travelling because he was not allowed to live where he wished to live, in Mozambique and South Africa. "Forced globe-trotting," he called it.⁴¹⁸⁸ If one of his visa applications had been successful, he would have gone there immediately. As to the extent of his globe-trotting, the twenty-five countries Dr. Cooper mentioned was an exaggeration. Before the war, Tsafendas had lived in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa, but since he was only a child and taken there by his parents, this could not be considered globe-trotting.

During the war, the ship he worked on docked in Canada (1) and to the USA (2), where after the war, he was deported to Greece (3). He remained there for two years and then in an attempt to reach Portugal and Mozambique, he passed through France (4) and Spain (5). Over the next twelve years, he visited and worked in England (6), Germany (7), Belgium (8), Sweden (9), Denmark (10) and Turkey (11). He passed briefly through Jordan (12), Lebanon (13) and Syria (14), while later, on his way back to Portugal, he went through Italy (15). During his stay in Turkey, he took in Bulgaria (16) then later in Africa, Rhodesia (17) to visit a half-sister he had not seen since 1941.⁴¹⁸⁹ That totals seventeen countries, not "at least 25" that Dr. Cooper guessed at and he travelled through at least half of them only because they were the way to his destination.

It is true that Tsafendas travelled much more widely than most people, but an analysis of his journeys and intentions comprehensively disproves Dr. Cooper's conclusion that he wandered about aimlessly, seeking and failing to find a niche in the world. He spent the first twenty-three years of his life in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa. He lived in those countries because that was where his family was. From 1941 to 1947, he lived in the United States or, during the Second World War, at sea serving in American Liberty Ships. In 1947, and against his will, he was deported to Greece because of his Greek origins, although he wanted to return to Mozambique.

⁴¹⁸⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁸⁸ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴¹⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

While in Greece, he joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and fought with them in the civil war. When it was obvious that the Communists had lost and the war was coming to an end, Tsafendas applied for a visa to return to South Africa. In his application he wrote, "I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs and languages."⁴¹⁹⁰ The application was turned down. He decided to try Mozambique, via Portugal. He managed to do this by taking ship from Greece to France, then travelling on foot to Portugal through Spain.⁴¹⁹¹

In Portugal, in November 1949, Tsafendas was arrested because the authorities had questions about his identity. It was discovered that he was indeed a Portuguese citizen, but had not served his compulsory term in the military and that he had been dismissed twice from jobs in Mozambique for Communist activities.⁴¹⁹² Tsafendas spent the next year in prison but was then released and boarded a ship to Mozambique. He arrived there in October 1951 but was refused entry because he was listed in official files as a Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities.⁴¹⁹³ This refusal led to his next twelve years being spent in exile. In January 1952, he was back in Portugal and was arrested in Lisbon. The police discovered that he was a Communist and an avowed anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of "unclear activities" during his time in Mozambique and put him in jail again.⁴¹⁹⁴

Upon his eventual release a few months later, with his chosen destinations South Africa and Mozambique unattainable, he decided to go to Sweden, where he had heard he could get a job as a welder. He travelled there through Denmark, and eventually got a job as a carpenter.⁴¹⁹⁵ He did not stay in Sweden long as the weather was too cold and the money too little, so he moved to Hamburg, Germany and found work as a welder. Tsafendas remained in Germany from early 1954 to June 1955. During his time there, he sent off applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and to South Africa. All were rejected and in mid-1955 he returned once more to Portugal and spent the next three years working as a hawker in ⁴¹⁹⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴¹⁹¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁹² PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴¹⁹³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴¹⁹⁴ Diario Popular, 9 September 1966, 'E conhesido em Lisboa o assassino do Dr. Verwoerd.'

⁴¹⁹⁵ Ochsensall Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150. Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

Lisbon.⁴¹⁹⁶

Being constantly under PIDE supervision and police harassment, in 1958 Tsafendas decided to leave Portugal and he travelled to Brussels to sell embroidery at the international exhibition, Expo 58. From there, he went back to Germany and spent the next year and a half in Frankfurt, working for one and half months at Fries and Son, six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers, and then another six months at a US Army printing works.⁴¹⁹⁷ During his time in Germany, he lived on his own but had a relationship with a German girl who was a Communist.⁴¹⁹⁸ Again he applied several times for permission to return to Mozambique or to South Africa, but all of his applications were refused.⁴¹⁹⁹

In May 1959, Tsafendas travelled to Britain, hoping to find a job. He was refused a work permit and took clandestine jobs to survive.⁴²⁰⁰ In London he became politically active with anti-apartheid and anti-fascist organisations. He was discovered to be in the country illegally and in December 1959, the British sent him back to Germany, where he spent the next six months working in a tractor factory in Munich.⁴²⁰¹ In March 1960, he read about the Sharpeville massacre and decided to return to South Africa and “do something” against Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid.⁴²⁰²

Convinced by now that he would not be allowed to enter the country legitimately, he decided on an illegal route, “through the African states south to South Africa.” The first stage took him through the Balkan States to Piraeus, Greece, then he took a ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. There his passport expired and he was unable to renew it or replace it, but with the help of the Red Cross, he managed to get to Beirut and Jerusalem.⁴²⁰³

With his Africa North-to-South plan blocked, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain

⁴¹⁹⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴¹⁹⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴¹⁹⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁴¹⁹⁹ Report of the COE. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴²⁰⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴²⁰³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

range and reached Ankara, Turkey in May 1961. A month later, he arrived in Istanbul, where he worked as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Turkey at the time, the Limasollu Naci College.⁴²⁰⁴ In December 1961, he left to visit a former comrade from the Greek Civil War who lived in Sofia, Bulgaria. His visit lasted two weeks and then he went to Greece to spend Christmas with his good friend John Michaletos and his family.⁴²⁰⁵ In January 1962, he travelled to the island of Crete to meet his relatives and see where his beloved father and his hero great-grandfather were born. From Greece, he travelled to Italy, then took the train to Lisbon, where he arrived in February 1962.⁴²⁰⁶

Tsafendas worked as a welder in Lisbon until July 1962, when he went back to England and again participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. In late 1962, he learned that his father had died and he determined to visit his grave in South Africa. After several more unsuccessful applications for a visa for Mozambique and South Africa, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government relented. Convinced by an “act” he put that he was mad but harmless, and “reformed” in terms of his political ideology, the authorities gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.⁴²⁰⁷

In October 1963, he arrived in Mozambique and a month later, with the help of his family, he was back in South Africa in Pretoria. He remained in Pretoria until July 1964, working for five months for F.A. Poole Engineering and the rest of the time at his half-sister's café. He crossed into Rhodesia to visit another half-sister he had not seen since 1941, and from there went again to Mozambique. He remained in Beira from October 10, 1964, until November 16, 1964, working at the Hume Pipe Company,⁴²⁰⁸ before being arrested by the Portuguese police for “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁴²⁰⁹

⁴²⁰⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴²⁰⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁰⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio

After three months in jail in Beira, he left Mozambique for Durban in March 1965. He remained there until October 1965, working off and on as an interpreter at the Durban Court, as a welder at Fraser and Chalmers for two months and for a month for South African Railways. After receiving a letter from a girl who said she wanted to meet and marry him, he travelled from Durban to Cape Town, where he met her. He remained in Cape Town from October 1965 until September 1966.

None of the above travels can be described as aimless. Tsafendas himself characterised them in his affidavit, but also to friends and family as “forced globetrotting”⁴²¹⁰ and he was right. Several countries happened to be on the way to his destination, like France, Italy, Spain, Syria, Lebanon, Denmark and Turkey. Naturally, he spent little time there because he was just passing through. This does not apply to Turkey, where he got a teaching job and stayed for seven months. He visited Greece for the second time, Rhodesia and Bulgaria for holidays. For business and work, he travelled England, Belgium and Sweden, while one of the Liberty ships during the Second World War also took him to Canada. Apart from places where he stayed only weeks or a few months, this is his life story:

- Six years in Egypt, all in Alexandria (1919-1925)
- Seventeen years in Mozambique: 16 years in Lourenço Marques and one in Beira (1918-1919, 1925-1939, 1963-1964)
- Five years in South Africa: approximately two years in Pretoria, one in Johannesburg, one in Cape Town and a eight months in Durban (1939-1941, 1963-1966, plus school in Middleburg)
- Six years in the USA in Boston and New York, a lot of this time at sea (1941-1947)
- Two years in Greece, all in Athens (1947-1949)
- Six years in Portugal, all in Lisbon (1951-1953, 1955-1958, 1962-1963)
- Three years in Germany, all in three cities, Munich, Frankfurt and Hamburg (1953-1955,

Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²¹⁰ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

1958-1959)

- Seven months in Turkey in Istanbul (1961)⁴²¹¹

This is not drifting, it is the odyssey of a man who was forced to live in exile from the country where he was born (Mozambique) for twelve years, who for sixteen years was not allowed to enter the country where his family lived (South Africa) and who was prosecuted and imprisoned because of his political beliefs in the country of his official nationality and where, after Mozambique, he spent most of his time (Portugal). Wherever he was, he always applied for permission to return to Mozambique and South Africa. Had he been allowed to return to either country or left in peace in Portugal, this vast Baedeker of travel would never have been opened.

Tsafendas travelled through so many countries mainly for two reasons:

- In search of a better place to stay and work
- He needed to cross through many countries to reach his destination.

Tsafendas's desperate efforts to return to Mozambique or South Africa and find a place to live and work without being followed by the police do not constitute "aimless ramblings." His life, as he said, was "forced globetrotting," peregrinations similar to those of Odysseus, who travelled for ten years through many different places to reach his destination. Tsafendas's odyssey is misunderstood by Dr. Cooper, who is clearly not aware of the circumstances of Tsafendas's travels.

Finally, Tsafendas's travels and their planning and how he managed not only to merely survive, but in some occasions, like in Istanbul, thrive is further proof of Tsafendas's ability to plan and adjust to any situation, something a schizophrenic is most unlikely to do. Professor Burke told the author, "The other thing, as well, that we have to question is how he could plan his behaviour and his trips, so perfectly? What you typically find with schizophrenic patients, is they become homeless people, so they can't find a job, or whatever the case may be, so, in his case, he was very rational and planning in what he did."⁴²¹²

⁴²¹¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²¹² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT AND BEING "UNABLE TO FUNCTION ON A REASONABLE LEVEL"

DR. COOPER: Then one tried to go into the question of employment...his employment was again of the same ilk, in the sense that it appears from his story that he was never able to hold down a job for more than a couple of months at a time. And I was particularly interested in his employment recently in Cape Town, because there one could at least have some grasp of what he was talking about. And the fact that here was an intelligent man first of all taking up menial, simple forms of employment was to me significant. And furthermore the fact that, having taken up these menial, simple, jobs, that he was unable to hold down these jobs was also important and indicative of something being wrong...

DR. COOPER: He was usually sacked, I think, but occasionally left on his own accord... The explanation again usually revolves around the tapeworm, that because of the tapeworm he could not hold down the job, and this made him move on...

DR. COOPER: He said the tapeworm had destroyed his entire personality, both mentally and physically. That it made him weak, feeble and infirm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If it is shown that between August 1965 and the 6th of September of this year the accused had five jobs in which he never stayed longer than two months in any one of those jobs, what do you feel about this?

DR. COOPER: This would be consistent with his mental condition as I saw it, in that I would not be able to, I would not expect this man to be able to hold down sustained employment even of a relatively simple type.

JUDGE BEYERS: May I put the opposite to you – the other side? Again it is not unusual - we in these courts know it is not unusual - for people not to hold jobs. It is not unusual for them never to do a stroke of work?

DR. COOPER: I went into this carefully....

JUDGE BEYERS: That is so, isn't it?

DR. COOPER: That is so.

JUDGE BEYERS: You have come across people who won't work and who don't hold jobs, haven't you?

DR. COOPER: Yes, but, when I do, I try and establish the reason therefore, the reason why they don't hold these jobs.

JUDGE BEYERS: You don't believe that they just don't want to work, and are lazy?

DR. COOPER: I am sure that there are those people, but this man did not fall into that category. He was continually seeking employment; he was continually getting employment, but, having sought it, and got it, he was unable to hold it; he was unable to function on a reasonable level. If his story is correct, there is nothing to suggest, from what he told me, that he is a won't-work.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His inability to hold down a job for any length of time, to what does he attribute that?

DR. COOPER: That is attributed to the tapeworm.

DR. COOPER: I believe that this type of employment record is completely consistent with a man suffering from chronic schizophrenia and I believe that he is suffering from chronic schizophrenia and, therefore, I relate his employment record to this mental illness.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS'S EMPLOYMENT

Perhaps the most inaccurate statement of all by Dr. Cooper was that Tsafendas was "unable to function on a reasonable level" and that was why he lost his jobs. More than fifty former colleagues testified to the police about Tsafendas. Only one of them, Owen Smorenberg, who would be produced as a witness for the defence, suggested Tsafendas was any kind of failure. He stated that Tsafendas "was no good as a fitter and was dismissed for that reason, but instead of dismissing him, he was given the opportunity to resign."⁴²¹³ However, Smorenberg said nothing to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level. Not being good at your job is not the same thing as being unable to function on a reasonable level. Far from perceiving functional failure in Tsafendas, many of those who worked with him praised his skills, efficiency and intelligence. For example:

⁴²¹³ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

- The Attorney-General himself was in possession of testimonials from the Vulcan Iron Works in Lourenço Marques, where Tsafendas had worked for six years, 1933-1939, stating that “he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.”⁴²¹⁴ This was during the time when Tsafendas allegedly started believing he had a tapeworm in 1935 or 1936.
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁴²¹⁵
- Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, characterised him as a “good tradesman,”⁴²¹⁶ “a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type.”⁴²¹⁷
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was senior security officer for the Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He testified to the police:

“We were transferred from the Marina on a small outboard boat to the Colponton. It was terrible, rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who was not seasick. Upon landing, he filled the mess basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”⁴²¹⁸

⁴²¹⁴ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁴²¹⁵ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²¹⁶ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²¹⁷ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, ‘Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.’

⁴²¹⁸ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker."⁴²¹⁹
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He "observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant."⁴²²⁰
- Hulse, who worked with Tsafendas at Marine Diamond Cooperation from December 1965 to March 12, 1966, stated that Tsafendas "did not appear to be disturbed at any stage."⁴²²¹
- Antonio Teixeira Da Silva, who worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole's engineering works in 1965, testified that Tsafendas "was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here."⁴²²²
- Gillian Claire Lieberman was a personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation who was often visited by Tsafendas in her office. She "found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy, dirty clothing."⁴²²³
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be "not a very good worker, but will say that ⁴²¹⁹ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²⁰ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²¹ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²² Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²³ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

he was an intelligent worker.”⁴²²⁴ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He said “Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person but he was always looking to quarrel with the white workers. Mr. Vercueil would usually receive complaints from the other (white) foremen, but never from the Black workers. He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.”⁴²²⁵

- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴²²⁶
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, was approached by Tsafendas offering his services as a Portuguese or Greek interpreter. Rudolph appointed him and said Tsafendas “was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work.” He used him “on several occasions” over a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He told police, “I spoke with him several times. He seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁴²²⁷
- Nikolaas Nel worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole and told the police that Tsafendas “seemed normal.”⁴²²⁸
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning

⁴²²⁴ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²²⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²⁶ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²²⁷ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²²⁸ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

powers.”⁴²²⁹ Judson later said that Tsafendas was “competent at his job but overly talkative and sociable.”⁴²³⁰

- Michaelis Augustides, owner of Mike’s Outfitters, also found Tsafendas to be “competent at his job but overly talkative and sociable.”⁴²³¹
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”⁴²³²
- Horst Hartmann, a senior officer at the heavy engineering company, Fries and Son, in Frankfurt, Germany, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”

Six weeks later Tsafendas left the company voluntarily with a very good reference in his suitcase. Hartmann said, “He left of his own accord ... we would have liked to keep him.” Hartman gave him a reference which Tsafendas used when he applied for the messenger job in Parliament. Would Hartmann have given him a reference and regretted his departure if Tsafendas was not able to function on a reasonable level? Three other colleagues said of Tsafendas that “He was a nice guy,” “He was a good comrade” and “He left me with a good impression.”⁴²³³

- Although he worked at Fries and Son for only six weeks, Tsafendas made a lasting impression on Guenter Haafe, the fifty-seven-year -old factory doorman, who eight years later, still remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning.

“He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker to say hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in ⁴²²⁹ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴²³⁰ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁴²³¹ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁴²³² Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²³³ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin,’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out; this man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”⁴²³⁴ Is this the sort of man Dr. Cooper described?

- Tsafendas lived in the house of Fotini Gavasiadis and her husband Markos for several weeks. When he left, he moved into an apartment next to their house, where he stayed for the next eight months, seeing Fotini and Markos every day, and spending a lot of his time their home. Tsafendas and Fotini also worked together for nine months in her brother's café. According to Gavasiadis:

“[Tsafendas] had a quick mind and was very intelligent. He worked out prices in head and was invariably correct... he was very good, very polite and friendly. All the customers liked him and some of them used to come just to chat with him, mostly about his travels around the world. Some old men really adored him. My brother was initially not very keen on having him there because he was told that he would start arguing with customers over politics, but he never argued with anyone as long as he was there.”

Some customers angered him but Tsafendas kept his counsel. Gavasiadis told the author:

“Many times he told me, ‘These people are bloody racists,’ but he never told them anything out of respect for my brother because it was his business. A lot of times he complained about some customers, that they were getting into his head with what they were telling him and the blood was going to his head because of his anger, but still he never said anything and carried on his work.”

Tsafendas worked voluntarily at the café because Nick Vlachopoulos had given him a rent-free apartment. Tsafendas was so good that Vlachopoulos offered him a permanent job with good wages, but Tsafendas refused. He did not want to take any money after accepting the free apartment. He worked full-time at the café when he was unemployed and part-time when he was at F.A. Poole Engineering. Gavasiadis strongly denies the suggestion that Tsafendas was not able to hold down a job because he was unable to function on a reasonable level. She states however, that she was told by Tsafendas himself and by members of his family, that he had lost jobs in the past because of his outspokenness with regards to politics.⁴²³⁵

⁴²³⁴ The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas "definitely did not look or sound insane."⁴²³⁶
- In addition, Tsafendas functioned perfectly well in Istanbul where he was able to hold a teacher's job for five or six months. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, wife of the college owner, Mr. Limasollu Naci, stressed that her husband would not have kept anyone on the teaching staff who was not good.⁴²³⁷ That Tsafendas taught at the college was reported by the South African press⁴²³⁸ and was known to the police,⁴²³⁹ but apparently not to Dr. Cooper and to the Attorney-General.
- Finally, Tsafendas worked for a little over a month in Parliament. None of the five colleagues who worked with him and were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry mentioned anything being wrong with him.⁴²⁴⁰ Petrus Schuin, the head messenger, was one of the three who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that "there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there."⁴²⁴¹ Sydney Wiehand, also on the interview panel, said, "he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly-spoken, well-mannered."⁴²⁴² The evidence of these witnesses ⁴²³⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴²³⁶ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴²³⁷ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

⁴²³⁸ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, 'Tsafendas taught Turks English'; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas taught English in Turkey'; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, 'Tsafendas seen as 'mystery man.'

⁴²³⁹ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁴⁰ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴²⁴¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴²⁴² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

was important because it came from people who had dealt with him recently and in a professional environment.

None of the above statements given to the police or the Commission of Enquiry was used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. We do not know if the Attorney-General was in possession of these documents or if he ignored them. The fact remains that the statements flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper's testimony, revealing yet another error in his diagnosis. Even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of the above statements, he was certainly in possession of several others from Tsafendas's bosses at the Vulcan Iron Works, where he was employed for six years stating that "he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner."⁴²⁴³ Still, the Attorney-General did not use this evidence.

Dr. Cooper also said, "I would not expect this man to be able to hold down sustained employment, even of a relatively simple type." This is clearly incorrect and the argument would be contradicted the following day when another defence witness, Dr. Muller, testified that he found Tsafendas to be intelligent and healthy enough to hold down a job with ease. Asked by the Defence Counsel, "With his health and his intelligence, should he be able to hold down a job?" Dr. Muller replied, "Yes. Yes, I would think he could very easily."⁴²⁴⁴

However, at this stage, the State should have been able to challenge Dr. Cooper's argument by itself since the police had ample evidence to contradict it. Firstly, Tsafendas worked in 1961 as a teacher of English for nearly six months at Limasollu Naci, the leading private language college in Istanbul. The State must have been aware of this. Not only did Tsafendas mention it in his statement to the police on September 11, his teaching stint was reported in the South African press,⁴²⁴⁵ it was mentioned in a report by Col. McIntyre of the South African police⁴²⁴⁶ and it was known to the Commission of Enquiry.⁴²⁴⁷ The police also found a separate note stating that Tsafendas worked at this language school.⁴²⁴⁸ However, the ⁴²⁴³ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁴²⁴⁴ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴²⁴⁵ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, 'Tsafendas taught Turks English'; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas taught English in Turkey'; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, 'Tsafendas seen as 'mystery man.'

⁴²⁴⁶ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁴⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 37. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria; Report of the COE. Chapter VI, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴²⁴⁸ Report of the COE. Chapter VI, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

Attorney-General did not mention the Istanbul work.

The obvious question is how could a man as described by Dr. Cooper work as a teacher at a prestigious college for six months? Teaching a foreign language at such a place is not a “menial, simple form of employment.” Tsafendas had to work on a trial basis, under observation by his colleagues for a week, to determine if he was good enough. Professor Burke believes it would have been impossible for a man with schizophrenia as described by Dr. Cooper to hold down an intellectual post for such an extended period: “There would have been symptoms a lot earlier. If it was schizophrenia, why was he able to hold down a job? If his functioning was so impaired, how could he possibly have performed his job?”⁴²⁴⁹ According to van Zyl, it would have been “impossible” for Tsafendas, as described by Dr. Cooper, to have been able to work at the college, “He certainly was bright and intelligent. The person that I dealt with at the time was so beset by symptoms of schizophrenia that that would not have been possible ...”⁴²⁵⁰ However, Tsafendas managed to keep the job for five or six months and then left of his own accord with a glowing reference that he used to get the job in the House of Assembly.

Advocate Cooper’s statement that Tsafendas did not stay longer than two months in any job in the year before the assassination is inaccurate, as he worked for at least four months (December 1965-March 1966) for the Marine Diamond Corporation.⁴²⁵¹ Tsafendas left all his jobs voluntarily except for one in Mandini, where he was dismissed for fighting with a fellow worker, Nick Vergos. Tsafendas said Vergos had refused to pay Black workers he had illegally employed to do some work for him, and when he intervened, they fought.⁴²⁵² As to the level of expertise required in his various jobs, Tsafendas worked as a welder for five months, from February 7, 1964 to July 10, 1964, at F.A. Poole in Pretoria,⁴²⁵³ as a part-

⁴²⁴⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴²⁵⁰ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴²⁵¹ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁵² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴²⁵³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

time interpreter for seven to eight months at the Court in Durban⁴²⁵⁴ and for nine months at his half-sister's café shop in Pretoria in 1963-1964.⁴²⁵⁵

Tsafendas also worked at several jobs for much longer than two months. The author is not in position to know all the jobs Tsafendas did and has relied mostly on the documents found in the archives. Naturally, not all his jobs are listed there, but here are a dozen:

- For six years (1933-1939) in Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, in Lourenço Marques. The Attorney-General was aware of this information as it was contained in his Memorandum about Tsafendas. In addition, he was in possession of “testimonials from this firm” affirming that “he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.”⁴²⁵⁶
- For two years (1936-1938) at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane.⁴²⁵⁷
- For about two years (1933-1935) at Spanos's bookshop in Lourenço Marques.⁴²⁵⁸
- For about a year (around 1938-1939) as a waiter at Gerry Kyriakakis's restaurant. He was fired after he argued with a German customer who supported the Nazis.⁴²⁵⁹
- For almost two years (May 1940-early 1942) as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg.⁴²⁶⁰
- While in Athens (October 1947-April 1949), Tsafendas was employed for twelve months as an interpreter and foreman with the American Reconstruction Mission, under the US Marshall Plan.⁴²⁶¹

⁴²⁵⁴ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁵⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁴²⁵⁶ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁴²⁵⁷ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁵⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴²⁶⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- For about three years (1955-1958), Tsafendas worked as hawker in Lisbon, going “on board ships lying in the Tagus to ply his trade of itinerant vendor of regional articles and embroideries.”⁴²⁶²
- For six months (1958) with Anglo-American Fashions and Designers in Frankfurt.
- For around six months (1958-1959) at a US Army printing works in Hochst, a district of Frankfurt.
- For six months (1959) in a tractor factory in Munich.⁴²⁶³
- For six-seven months (June-December 1961) as teacher of English at Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul.⁴²⁶⁴
- For four months full-time, five months part-time (November 1963-July 1964) at Proclamation Hill Café, Pretoria.⁴²⁶⁵
- For five months (2 February-10 July 1964) at F.A. Poole Engineering in Pretoria.⁴²⁶⁶
- For seven-eight months (March-October 1965) in the court in Durban; although he only worked there when needed, this was on “several occasions.”⁴²⁶⁷
- For three-four months (December 1965-March 1966) at Marine Diamond Corporation in Cape Town.⁴²⁶⁸

Tsafendas liked casual work and being his own boss. In 1951, he requested and received from the Director of the International Police in Lisbon a card which declared him to be a maritime salesman.⁴²⁶⁹ He spent the next three years, then after a break another two, in Portugal and then again in South Africa as a hawker, selling “embroidery, postcards and ⁴²⁶² PIDE report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas or Dimitrie Tsafandakis. 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/6. Department of Justice. NASA.

⁴²⁶³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴²⁶⁶ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁷ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁸ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁶⁹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

watches, mainly to holidaymakers on cruise ships.” He travelled to Belgium in 1958 for the Brussels World Fair (Expo 58) to sell his embroidery.⁴²⁷⁰ Hawking became Tsafendas's favourite work and he would often return to it when he was out of a steady job. He liked running his own life and working whenever he wanted. If it had been more profitable and less tiring, he would have done it permanently, he said.⁴²⁷¹

There is no doubt that Tsafendas was fired from some jobs, but this was usually due not to incompetence but his outspokenness on politics and workers' rights. As we have seen in his biography, this started shortly after Tsafendas became an active Communist. In 1937, he was dismissed from the Sideris kiosk in Lourenço Marques “owing to his Communist leanings.”⁴²⁷² The Chai et Kiosk, was owned by P. Sideris, a good friend of his father. Sideris, a conservative Greek loyal to the Portuguese government, often berated his young employee for arguing about politics with his customers.⁴²⁷³

One day, Dimitri crossed swords with a wealthy Portuguese businessman and city councillor. He denounced the man as a “fascist” and accused him of exploiting Mozambicans. Then aged seventeen, Tsafendas said, “One day the Mozambicans will rebel against the Portuguese and take back everything you stole from them.” The businessman reported the incident to Sideris and told him he would inform the police because he considered his employee to be a “dangerous Communist.” Although reluctant to do so, but feeling he had no choice, Sideris dismissed Tsafendas. He knew he would be in trouble with the colonial authorities if he did not do so.⁴²⁷⁴

In 1938, while working at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane, Tsafendas came under suspicion by PIDE of “spreading Communist propaganda.”⁴²⁷⁵ Tsafendas had ⁴²⁷⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁷¹ Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

⁴²⁷² Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴²⁷³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁷⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁷⁵ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

distributed the Communist Manifesto to some of his colleagues,⁴²⁷⁶ but he was not arrested as the accusation was “never proven.”⁴²⁷⁷ This incident dogged Tsafendas throughout his life since it led to the creation of a file, Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis, by the International and State Defence Police (PIDE), the Portuguese security police, which would only get bigger with the passage of time.⁴²⁷⁸ A 1961 PIDE report referred to the two above incidents, stating that while Tsafendas was “residing in that Province (Mozambique), he was twice a suspect of Communist activities, but evidence of such activities was never found.”⁴²⁷⁹

Later in 1938 or in 1939, the twenty-year-old Dimitri worked as a waiter at a hotel owned by Gerry Kyriakakis, a friend of his father. Once again, he argued politics with the guests, despite Kyriakakis's threats of dismissal. One day he got into an argument with a German guest about the persecution of Jews in Nazi Germany. The German asked if he was a Jew himself, whereupon Dimitri replied proudly that indeed he was and the German dropped the argument. News of this dispute and of Tsafendas's Jewish background spread through the Greek community and when the political disputes continued, Kyriakakis decided they were jeopardising business and finally dismissed his young waiter.⁴²⁸⁰

Sometime in early 1965, Tsafendas asked his half-sister Katerina Pnema and her husband Gerry to help him find a job in Mozambique. Gerry Pnema was friendly with the manager of a dock in Beira and persuaded him to hire his brother-in-law as an interpreter. Tsafendas lasted only a few days before being dismissed for urging the Mozambican workers to strike because of their working conditions. Tsafendas denounced the manager and the company as “capitalists exploiting the workers.” The manager told Gerry Pnema about the incident and said the “only reason he did not call the police was that he did not want to cause his family problems.” He urged his friend not to help Tsafendas again because he was a “dangerous Communist.”⁴²⁸¹

⁴²⁷⁶ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴²⁷⁷ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁷⁸ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁷⁹ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 04 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴²⁸⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴²⁸¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

During his time with the Hume Pipe Company in Gondola in October and November 1964,⁴²⁸² Tsafendas often complained that Portugal was exploiting Mozambique's oil wealth⁴²⁸³ and urged the non-White workers to go on strike because they were mistreated by the Whites.⁴²⁸⁴ During his five months with Poole Engineering in Pretoria in 1965, "Tsafendas bullied the other Portuguese workers and had fights with several white workers",⁴²⁸⁵ but he never argued with Coloureds.⁴²⁸⁶ He was "unpopular among white workers" and "adapted more to the non-whites."⁴²⁸⁷ The reason Tsafendas was unpopular with White workers and bullied the Portuguese workers is perhaps provided by a Portuguese colleague, Antonio Da Silva. He testified to the police that Tsafendas learned that he had served in the Portuguese army in Mozambique and asked him what he thought of Dr. Salazar, the Prime Minister of Portugal. Da Silva claimed that he did not discuss the issue further with Tsafendas, but Tsafendas became aggressive towards him after that.⁴²⁸⁸ In May 1965, while Tsafendas was working for Fraser and Chalmers in Durban, he fought physically with Nick Vergos in an attempt to protect the rights of some African workers, as noted, and was dismissed.⁴²⁸⁹ Finally, Katerina Pnema said that Tsafendas "couldn't keep his mouth shut about politics" and that "he could not keep his mouth shut if he saw something he considered to be wrong."⁴²⁹⁰

TSAFENDAS BEING "UNABLE TO FUNCTION ON A REASONABLE LEVEL"

The South African police and the Commission of Enquiry questioned about two hundred people regarding Tsafendas. Only three raised questions as to his mental stability, one, James Johnston, in a rather confused manner:

⁴²⁸² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁸³ Demetrio Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴²⁸⁴ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴²⁸⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴²⁸⁶ Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁸⁷ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁸⁸ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File Verklarings. NASA.

⁴²⁹⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

- Caroline Barbeau, a member of the Christian Church who met Tsafendas in Durban in 1965, got the impression that he was “not all there,” although she did not state why she got such an impression.⁴²⁹¹
- James Johnston, a minister of the Christian Church, spoke to Tsafendas twice for ten minutes on each occasion. He told the police that “I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion ... He appeared to be perfectly normal ... I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right.”⁴²⁹²
- Keith Martincich, who worked with Tsafendas for two to three weeks at Marine Diamond Cooperation, thought that there “was something mentally wrong with him” because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself.⁴²⁹³

Johnston and Barbeau were members of the Christian Church and Johnston's contradictory statement should be read in that context. The Daniels and O'Ryan families, who would testify as defence witnesses, were also members of the Christian Church and one of them, Merle Daniels, admitted to the Court that she “would like to protect the name of the Christian Church.”⁴²⁹⁴ According to Patrick O'Ryan, Reuben O'Ryan and Richard Poggenpoel, all three friends of Tsafendas and members of the Church, the assassination embarrassed the Church and some of its members tried to distance themselves and their Church from Tsafendas.⁴²⁹⁵

Peter and Helen Daniels had asked Gordon Winter, the Post journalist who interviewed them, not to mention that Helen was a preacher in the Christian Church because it “would bring disgrace” on the Church.⁴²⁹⁶ Like the majority of the Greek community, some members of the sect tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them in order to protect their reputation. In addition, Tsafendas also often clashed with leaders and members of the ⁴²⁹¹ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁹² James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁹³ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴²⁹⁴ Marle Daniels testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴²⁹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴²⁹⁶ Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

Christian Church because they advocated obedience to rule, including that of the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid.⁴²⁹⁷ Witnesses did not want to admit to the police that they had discussed various issues with Tsafendas and most likely made their comments so as to persuade the police that they did not respect Tsafendas or hold him in any sort of esteem.

As for Martincich, his conclusion is preposterous. If everyone who talked to himself were to be considered mentally unstable, the world would not be big enough to hold all their asylums. What is more, Martincich was the only one out of some three hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission and the author, who noticed Tsafendas mumbling to himself. This was a man who had known Tsafendas for three weeks, while people who lived with him in the same house or worked with him or socialised with him for many months and even years, failed to spot such a habit.

Others questioned by the South African police about Tsafendas's mental state testified as follows:

- Reginald Robert Maile was the guard on the Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3, 1966. He saw Tsafendas every day and told the police that he “never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.”⁴²⁹⁸
- Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be “normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person.”⁴²⁹⁹
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”⁴³⁰⁰
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a ⁴²⁹⁷ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

⁴²⁹⁸ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴²⁹⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁰⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

normal and very intelligent person.”⁴³⁰¹

- Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He told the police that Tsafendas “definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ...”⁴³⁰²
- Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas’s best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was “well-mannered and intelligent.”⁴³⁰³ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane. “He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane.”⁴³⁰⁴
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”⁴³⁰⁵ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas was not right in his mind.⁴³⁰⁶
- James Summers, owner of the “Barlings Tea Lounge,” which Tsafendas frequented from July 1966 until the assassination, testified that Tsafendas “was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”⁴³⁰⁷
- John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described Tsafendas as “a normal and intelligent person.”⁴³⁰⁸
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except ⁴³⁰¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁰² Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁰³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁰⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴³⁰⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁰⁶ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁰⁷ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁰⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴³⁰⁹

- Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he “appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position.”⁴³¹⁰
- Costas Michaeletos,⁴³¹¹ who knew Tsafendas from birth, stated, “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”⁴³¹²
- John Galanakis, who met Tsafendas in Umtali in 1964, told police that he found Tsafendas to be “an intelligent person.”⁴³¹³
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁴³¹⁴
- Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”⁴³¹⁵
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high intelligence.”⁴³¹⁶ Liberopoulos also stated to the author that he “never believed that Tsafendas was insane. He was perfectly normal; very clever man.”⁴³¹⁷

⁴³⁰⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³¹⁰ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³¹¹ The correct spelling is Michaeletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³¹² Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³¹³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³¹⁴ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴³¹⁵ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴³¹⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³¹⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

- Harry Hall, a member of the Christian Church, knew Tsafendas from March 1966 until his arrest. He testified to the police that he regarded Tsafendas “as a sub-standard intellect, but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal.”⁴³¹⁸
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in 1963. He described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high-intelligence.”⁴³¹⁹ He later told the author that Tsafendas “is impossible to have been insane. He was a very intelligent and educated man. He was definitely able to function on a reasonable level.”⁴³²⁰
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”⁴³²¹
- John Verghis, owner of a coffee shop in Beira which Tsafendas visited often for several months, said he considered him to be a “normal person.”⁴³²²
- None of Tsafendas’s five colleagues at the Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with him.⁴³²³
- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was one of the three messengers who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”⁴³²⁴
- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at ⁴³¹⁸ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³¹⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³²⁰ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

⁴³²¹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴³²² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³²³ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴³²⁴ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, "he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered."⁴³²⁵

- Mrs. Tsafandakis, Tsafendas's sister in law, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴³²⁶

Several people lived under the same roof or in close proximity to Tsafendas for substantial periods. None of them noticed anything wrong with him:

- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis's house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother's café. Gavasiadis never noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas and has no doubt that he was perfectly able to function, not just at a "reasonable level" but beyond that, since he was extremely intelligent and lucid. She told the author:

"Dimitris could buy you and sell you any time he wanted and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him."

Gavasiadis laughed at the suggestion that Tsafendas was "unable to function on a reasonable level":

"In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. It must have been the doctor who said it, who was himself not able to function on a reasonable level if this was his diagnosis about Dimitri. Dimitri was not just able, but much more than able to function on a reasonable level. It's absolutely ludicrous for someone to say this about Dimitri and it shows how little he knew him.”⁴³²⁷

⁴³²⁵ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴³²⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

According to Professor Burke, “if you lived with somebody for nine months, you would know if this person was strange.”⁴³²⁸

- Father Nikola Banovic lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four-five months in 1961, and then for another two-three months, he lived in a house next door. In all this time, he saw him every day. He declares that Tsafendas “was perfectly sane” and he does “not have the slightest doubt about it. It is impossible; Dimitri was not schizophrenic. With God as my witness, he was not crazy. He was more than capable of functioning on a reasonable level; he was a very intelligent and capable man. His brain was a level above most of ours.”⁴³²⁹
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author: “Dimitris unable to function on a reasonable level? Are you sure a doctor said that? I don’t know what kind of doctor he was, but he either examined a different person or he had completely lost the plot with Dimitris. Dimitris was one of the most capable and intelligent persons I ever met. Nobody who knew him is going to agree with what this doctor said.”⁴³³⁰
- John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He testified to the police that he found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.”⁴³³¹
- Patrick O’Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the Christian Church as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”⁴³³² He formed a “deep liking”⁴³³³ for Tsafendas and considered him to ⁴³²⁷ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴³²⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴³²⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴³³⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴³³¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³³² Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴³³³ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

be an “enlightened person.”⁴³³⁴ He also testified that “I had confidence in him and used to like him. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he “was mentally disturbed.”⁴³³⁵ He also found Tsafendas to be “well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁴³³⁶

- Reuben O’Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months. He considered him “perfectly normal,” saying, “no-one in my family ever thought that he was mad. He couldn’t have been insane.”⁴³³⁷
- Stanley O’Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months and described him as a “very down to earth man, a very quiet man and very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. No, never, nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”⁴³³⁸
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: “it was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴³³⁹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge.”⁴³⁴⁰
- Alice Mary Theyser was Tsafendas’s landlady from July 1, 1966 to August 30, 1966, just six days before the assassination. She testified to the police that she “never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person.”⁴³⁴¹

⁴³³⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴³³⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴³³⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴³³⁷ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴³³⁸ Stanley O’Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

⁴³³⁹ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴³⁴⁰ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁴¹ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Helen Daniels lived with Tsafendas in her parents' house for six weeks in 1965 and "did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."⁴³⁴²
- Marika Tsafantakis, Tsafendas's stepmother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴³⁴³
- Victor Tsafandakis, Tsafendas's stepbrother, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴³⁴⁴
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He did not mention anything to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level and even stated that he "was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well-versed in politics."⁴³⁴⁵
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott's boarding house. She told police that she "never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal."⁴³⁴⁶
- Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks in his house and kept on associating up to his arrest, "there was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life."⁴³⁴⁷
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."⁴³⁴⁸
- In 1972, Alexander Moumbaris spent three months in the cell next to Tsafendas in Pretoria Prison. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard. Moumbaris laughed when the author told him of Dr. Cooper's comment [that ⁴³⁴² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴³⁴³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴³⁴⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴³⁴⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁴⁶ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁴⁷ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁴⁸ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. 'Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.'

Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level]. He said:

“It’s not true. Tsafendas was highly intelligent and lucid. He was very able and determined, if he wanted to do something, he would do it... The fact that he managed to survive the prison and remain sane after all he went through also shows you how capable and how strong he was.”

Moumbaris also told the author that he found Tsafendas to be “perfectly normal, a very intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person.”⁴³⁴⁹

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He, too, disagrees with Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis. “Dimitri was not mad, not even a little. He was an exceptional man, very clever too.”⁴³⁵⁰
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos was Tsafendas’s landlady for three weeks in 1966. She testified to the police that she “considered him to be a completely normal person.”⁴³⁵¹
- Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. As for Tsafendas being mad, he told the author:

“If he was mad, then the whole world must be mad. He was not even the slightest disturbed. Every single Greek in Mozambique discussed Dimitri after we heard about the tapeworm; not even one from those who had met him believed that he was mad. He was not; we all said the same thing. He made it up, as he did with the Saint Peter act. If someone believes that he was mad, he did not meet him Dimitri, but someone else. Dimitris was ahead of his time. Everything he was saying about Africa and Mozambique was correct and have happened. He was telling us [the Greeks], including me, to take our money and leave as long as there was time, because sooner or later the Portuguese would be kicked out and everything we had ‘stolen’ from the Mozambicans would be returned to them. We should have heard him, but none of us did and I told you what happened ... he was a good and bright man. The things he was saying at the time seemed wrong and ⁴³⁴⁹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁴³⁵⁰ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴³⁵¹ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

maybe stupid, but we couldn't see beyond our noses."⁴³⁵²

- Nick Papadakis also lived with Tsafendas in the same flat for two months in Beira and Gondola. He told the author: "I never believed, not even after I read what happened in the trial, that he was insane. He played the fool and they believed him. It's impossible that he was insane, he was absolutely fine and very clever."⁴³⁵³
- Eleni Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴³⁵⁴
- Evangelia Nissiotis, Tsafendas's stepsister, testified to the Commission that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane."⁴³⁵⁵
- Irene Michaletos was visited frequently by Tsafendas in her house in Beira for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even spent the night there several times. She never noticed anything wrong with him and was sure that he was perfectly sane. She flatly denied to the author the suggestion that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level.⁴³⁵⁶
- In 1951 and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas slept for several nights in the house of his aunt Artemis Michaletos in Lourenço Marques. Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and Artemis's sons, who also lived at the same house at the time, spent several hours talking to him. They both strongly denied to the author that Tsafendas was unable to function at a reasonable level. They both consider him to be "a very intelligent and capable person." Furthermore, they told the author that their mother who had brought Tsafendas up in Egypt and lived in Lourenço Marques while he was growing up there, always maintained that he was "perfectly sane and very intelligent." John Michaletos also told the author that he and his mother used to tell Tsafendas that "he should be a politician or a lawyer," on account of cleverness and excellent fluency in talking.⁴³⁵⁷ It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he was unable to function on a reasonable level.

⁴³⁵² Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴³⁵³ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴³⁵⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴³⁵⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴³⁵⁶ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴³⁵⁷ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. It is difficult to believe that Artemis and John Michaletos would have envisaged Tsafendas as a successful politician or lawyer if he talking in a disjointed manner. Artemis had known him since he was two and a half years old and watched him learn and grow through infancy. John Michaletos also smiled and shook his head in disbelief at Dr. Cooper's statement on which he refused to comment because he found it absurd; he believes that what he already told the author about Tsafendas was enough to demonstrate how wrong Dr. Cooper's diagnosis was.⁴³⁵⁸

- Stelios Marangos was Tsafendas's landlord in Beira for six weeks. He did not mention anything to the police about Tsafendas being "unstable" or strange.⁴³⁵⁹

In addition to the above testimonies, the author asked fifty-eight people who knew Tsafendas and none of them believed that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level. The statements of those who knew him better are listed in the Tapeworm section.

Furthermore, Tsafendas was a frequent babysitter for the sons of his half-sister Elena Vlachopoulos, who were seven and five-years old, and for the three-year-old son of his sister-in-law Fotini Gavasiadis in Pretoria, as well as for the four-year-old daughter of his friend Patrick O'Ryan in Cape Town.⁴³⁶⁰ It is unthinkable that parents would trust a person to look after their children if they thought there was something wrong with him or that he was unable to function on a reasonable level.

Furthermore, Tsafendas's "activities" while in prison after the assassination is further proof of his ability to function and adjust to any given circumstances. While imprisoned on Robben Island and later in Pretoria Central Prison, he spent most of his time in solitary confinement, separated from other prisoners and without access to books, newspapers, radio or magazines. After a few years in Pretoria Central Prison he was allowed to read the Bible and a little later he was allowed to read dictionaries, but nothing else. In both prisons, even the warders were not allowed to talk to him. He was in complete isolation. Sometimes he spent several days without being allowed to come out of his cell. In order to fill his time and ⁴³⁵⁸ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴³⁵⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴³⁶⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

to not go crazy (as he said), resourceful as ever, he found ways of passing the time and having something to do.

Since he had no one to talk to and nothing to do Tsafendas developed a programme of mind activities to do while in the cell; partly to fill his time, but mostly, as he specifically said, to keep his mind active and sharp. He had loved music since he was a child, and there had not been many days when he had not listened to it. Since he was now not allowed access to a radio, Tsafendas started signing inside himself (in his mind and with the back of his mouth, but not out loud) revolutionary songs, such as the Song of Freedom and Bella Ciao. He believed that the lyrics of the songs gave him strength, but it was also a form of entertainment for him.⁴³⁶¹

Tsafendas believed that in order to keep his mind active and sharp, he had to be creative. Throughout his time in jail, he had created a “reading hour” and a “writing hour” for each day, in which he would read in his mind some of his favourite books and try to recreate them with pictures in his mind, or else create a completely new story. He told Father Minas that it was like watching a movie in his mind. Generally, he tried to sleep as much as possible, so he could dream.⁴³⁶²

Tsafendas said that he was trying to keep his mind constantly busy and thought that the best way of doing it, also because it was helping to beat the boredom, was to create stories. He claimed that he had created thousands of stories in this fashion. He stopped this technique as soon as he was transferred to the Sterkfontein hospital where he had access to newspapers, radio, books and even TV. On other occasions, while he was trying to sleep, he would think of a historical event, for example the Storming of the Bastille, and imagine how it must have happened; how it must have been, how the events had unfolded as he knew them, based on what he had read.⁴³⁶³

Furthermore, in order to keep his mind sharp and active, he even came up with mathematical problems. He would quickly come up with large and complicated numbers, usually dividing them and multiplying them with other large numbers. For example, 2.764 times 23 divided by 8 and things like that. Tsafendas enjoyed this enormously and created each day a “mathematical hour” in which he attempted to solve mathematical problems like ⁴³⁶¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴³⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴³⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

this. Books, fictional stories and mathematical problems were not the only things in his mind. He also dreamt of his life outside the prison once he was released. He hoped that one day he would be released. He was dreaming of another life in Cuba or in a democratic South Africa or Mozambique.⁴³⁶⁴

Sleeping was Tsafendas's favourite activity in prison. He went to sleep, hoping that he would have a pleasant dream. It was during his time in prison that he first started sleeping in the afternoons. Before this, he had generally believed that sleeping was a waste of time and had tried to sleep as little as possible: just enough to give him strength. Usually he slept for six hours every day and eight on Sundays. However, in prison, he slept much more than that. He was desperate to dream and carry himself outside of the prison, and he believed that by making up stories in his mind and revisiting books he had read, he was helping himself to dream better.⁴³⁶⁵

Finally, the Commission of Enquiry questioned all of Tsafendas's closest family, including his step-mother, Marika, two of his three half-sisters, his half-brother, his two brothers-in-law and his sister-in-law. Every one of them told the Commission that Tsafendas "was definitely not insane."⁴³⁶⁶ Furthermore, the Commission of Enquiry reported that persons who knew Tsafendas and his family in Pretoria considered him to be "eccentric, but did not think he was mentally disordered."⁴³⁶⁷

According to Professor Burke it would have been impossible for these people, especially those who lived with him under the same roof, not to notice if Tsafendas was mentally unstable. It would not have been possible for Tsafendas to hide his schizophrenia for so long from so many. He said:

"If Tsafendas's functioning was so impaired, someone would have noticed - all these years and all these people. How would people not have picked this up? His employers, his family members, whatever? Schizophrenia is blatant, you can see it, and there would have been times that he would have been overtly, observably, psychotic, and if you know psychotic people, you see it. Schizophrenic patients, typically, do not look after themselves; they would not bath, they would not shave, they would act in strange ways, you would see ⁴³⁶⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴³⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴³⁶⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴³⁶⁷ Report of the COE, Chapter II C, Paragraph 6. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

that they are hallucinating, so there would be some very clear indicators that there is something wrong with them, in any kind of environment. His family would have picked it up, his employers would have picked it up, those people would have picked it up.

The other thing that we have to question is how he could plan his behaviour and his trips, so perfectly? What you typically find with schizophrenic patients, is they become homeless people, so they can't find a job, or whatever the case may be, so, in his case, he was very rational and planning in what he did. I mean, if the story about the hospital in England is true (about visiting the Isle of Wight and immediately admitting himself to the hospital), that requires a lot of planning: 'I'm going to go there, and I'm going to stay in the hospital, and I'm going to go ...' that, typically doesn't happen. You would see paranoid schizophrenic patients as homeless people, because they drop out of society, they can't think, they can't plan, they can't really care for themselves, and that's the giveaway. So, your first indication of schizophrenia is to what extent personal hygiene is intact, to what extent the person can function properly, because if you have schizophrenia, you can't do any of those things."⁴³⁶⁸

A man who was able to find a job wherever he wanted in almost every country he went to can clearly function on a reasonable level. In addition, Tsafendas was able to plan and find a solution to his financial problem when he was stuck in Istanbul without money. He sold his blood at a hospital in order to earn some money.⁴³⁶⁹ Finally, two examples of Tsafendas's powers of observation and his supposed "inability" to function on a reasonable level:

In August 1976, the British Sunday newspaper The Observer published a story which claimed that Tsafendas was a broken, old man, who was being ill-treated by the warders in Pretoria Maximum Security Central Prison. General H.J. van den Bergh, the head of BOSS, the South African intelligence agency, sent Gordon Winter, a journalist employed by the government newspaper *The Citizen*⁴³⁷⁰ and an undercover agent for BOSS, to do a story refuting these claims.⁴³⁷¹

Winter visited Tsafendas accompanied by General Jannie Roux, the Deputy ⁴³⁶⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴³⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴³⁷⁰ The Citizen was a government-funded English-language newspaper, launched in 1976. It was a pro-apartheid propaganda sheet designed to counter the liberal political position of the long-established Rand Daily Mail and to positively promote apartheid (Hachten and Giffard, 1984: 250-251, 275; Sanders, 2006: 99).

⁴³⁷¹ Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness. 1997; Winter, 1981: 477-479.

Commissioner of Prisons and by Brigadier Gerrie Visser, the Commanding Officer of the Pretoria prison. Speaking in front of the prison officials, Tsafendas denied being ill-treated. However, when Winter found himself alone with Tsafendas for a few minutes, he whispered to him, "Of course, you must have been ill-treated at some time, haven't you?" Tsafendas turned to him and said coolly, "You are obviously here to do a denial story for the new government newspaper The Citizen, so what's that question supposed to mean?" Winter was stunned. Tsafendas had not only deduced that Winter's instructions were to produce a denial of The Observer story, but he had realised that The Citizen, which had only recently been launched, was the government's mouthpiece. Winter then said, "I can't write a completely one-sided story saying what a bed of roses you have in jail. I've got to put a few small niggles in to make it look credible." Tsafendas got the point and a little later, when Roux and Visser returned, Winter asked him if he had any complaints. Taking his cue, Tsafendas smiled at Brigadier Visser, "Yes," he said, "there was one warder who was always abusive and tormented me. One day when he pretended to spit in my tray of food I complained to the Brigadier. And you reprimanded him severely, didn't you sir?" Visser was caught off guard by Tsafendas and, flustered, agreed that he had done so. Winter said later that Tsafendas was not just sane, but "a highly intelligent man, seriously highly intelligent, remarkably astute, charming and even witty."⁴³⁷²

The first time Father Minas Constandinou visited him in prison, their guard was walking nervously up and down. Tsafendas said he was trying to decide if the guard was getting a divorce or if his wife was just untidy. When the priest asked what he meant, Tsafendas pointed out that the guard was wearing a wedding ring, proof that he was married. His shoes were always shined but often his uniform was not ironed. While it was easy for a man to clean his shoes, Tsafendas said, many men could not iron their clothes. This suggested to him that either his wife was incompetent or lax in domestic affairs or they were not living together.⁴³⁷³

The very next defence witnesses, next day, Dr. Muller, would contradict Dr. Cooper's testimony. Dr. Muller, although not a psychiatrist, would find Tsafendas "not particularly disturbed", "intelligent and able to understand what was said to him", with "no difficulty at all in expressing himself” and with no problem communicating and answering his questions.⁴³⁷⁴

⁴³⁷² Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness. 1997; Winter, 1981: 477-479.

⁴³⁷³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level.⁴³⁷⁵ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was “highly improbable.”⁴³⁷⁶

TSAFENDAS NOT BEING LAZY

The Court attempted to claim that Tsafendas was probably lazy, but Dr. Cooper dismissed this suggestion. He said Tsafendas “did not fall into that category” and that it was the tapeworm perception which caused Tsafendas to lose all these jobs. What is surprising here is that the police and the Attorney-General were in possession of evidence supporting the argument that Tsafendas was indeed lazy, which was why he had lost several jobs, but none of this evidence was used. The following facts and statements were available:

- On June 12, 1942, the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division of the South African Police, informed the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs that when working for the British Mining Supply Company, Tsafendas “was discharged from his employment on account of irregular attendance and loafing.”⁴³⁷⁷
- Keith Martincich told the police that Tsafendas “appeared to be one of the laziest persons that I have ever seen ... He was definitely lazy.”⁴³⁷⁸
- Ralph Lighton told the police: “I got to know that he was lazy and inefficient.”⁴³⁷⁹

⁴³⁷⁴ Dr. Hendrik Muller testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴³⁷⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴³⁷⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

⁴³⁷⁷ Confidential Letter of the Lieutenant for the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division to the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs. 12 June 1942. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

⁴³⁷⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁷⁹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Jacobus Bornman told the police: “I believed that he was a lazy person.”⁴³⁸⁰
- Charles Nissiotis told the police: “I asked him to assist my wife in the cafe we owned at that time. He was however so lazy that my wife told him to leave within the first two days.”⁴³⁸¹
- Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg: “the accused was work-shy for hard work.”⁴³⁸²
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos He: “he gave me the impression that he is work-shy.”⁴³⁸³
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, Tsafendas's tram instructor, testified to the police that he was “slow” and “lazy.”⁴³⁸⁴
- According to a PIDE report given to the South African police, in 1962 Tsafendas was dismissed for being lazy while working as a welder on a bridge over the river Tejo in Lisbon.⁴³⁸⁵

Because none of this bountiful available evidence was led, Dr. Cooper's misdiagnosis prevailed. What is certain is that his diagnosis would have been entirely different had he been aware of such information. Tsafendas himself admitted to many witnesses that he was lazy. He said that he would work only hard enough to make ends meet and only when absolutely necessary.

His half-sister Katerina Pnema described him to the author as being “bone-lazy.” She said: “If you told him to come and help clean the house, he would tell you, ‘I can't be bothered.’ But if you told him, ‘Let's go to clean the place where a political meeting was going to take place or to distribute political leaflets,’ he would have come immediately.”⁴³⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas “was one of the laziest persons I have ever seen. You could tell from the way he was walking he was lazy; he was so slow.”⁴³⁸⁷

⁴³⁸⁰ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸¹ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸² Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸³ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸⁴ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴³⁸⁵ Confidential PIDE report regarding Dimitro Tsafendas, 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴³⁸⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴³⁸⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

Generally, he found work boring, except when he liked the job. He said his favourite job was that of a teacher, and said that he could even do it for free, which was one reason why he taught children voluntarily in Mozambique and in Istanbul.

Although Tsafendas's tendency was to indolence, he would often work without pay when he wanted to help people. He taught the children freely in Turkey and Mozambique because he thought it was important for them to learn. He helped an elderly Indian man in Beira to build an additional room to his house for his daughter's wedding, joining in the physical labour.⁴³⁸⁸ He helped the sister of his brother in law in her café in Pretoria. The volunteering jobs, were probably unknown to the State, but his teaching stint in Istanbul and the one with F.A. Poole must have been known and could have been used against the argument that Tsafendas was unable to hold a job, and only simple and menial ones at that - unless the Attorney-General considered college-level teaching to be simple and menial.

During Dr. Cooper's testimony, he refers to something Tsafendas told him, adding "if his story is correct." However he does not check if it is correct when it would have been relatively easy to do so. In fairness, much of the evidence for Tsafendas's laziness would have been unknown to Dr. Cooper. As for the Attorney-General, once again, the author is not in position to know whether he was given all relevant information or chose not to use it.

There is further evidence which contradicts Dr. Cooper's conclusion regarding Tsafendas's employment record and activities. This will be considered in relation to Dr. Kossew as some of it is more relevant to his testimony.

TSAFENDAS'S RELATIONSHIPS

DR. COOPER: In this type of mental illness, the individual tends to be rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship and is in fact quite unable to form and maintain any intimate relationships. He tends to be rather untidy, neglectful of his appearance; he tends to have difficulties in concentrating and applying himself consistently; he tends in fact to be a daydreamer, preoccupied with his own inner thoughts which are not in fact directly related to the environment around him; and he ⁴³⁸⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

quite often tends to lead an aimless, almost vagrant, useless sort of life, with very little go, very little ambition, very little achievement, very little worthwhile.”

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S RELATIONSHIPS

a. “In this type of mental illness the individual tends to be rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship and is in fact quite unable to form and maintain any intimate relationships.”

To relate this condition to Tsafendas and claim that he was “isolated from his surroundings,” unable to form an intimate relationship and that he did not maintain any close friendship is entirely inaccurate. Tsafendas had two very good childhood friends and kept in touch with them all his life.

The first was Manuel, who he knew as a small boy when they played together. After leaving Mozambique, Tsafendas kept in touch with Manuel, corresponding regularly and often sending him gifts from wherever he was in the world at that time. In 1951, when Tsafendas was denied entry in Lourenço Marques, he took refuge in Manuel's house, and when he returned to the city in 1963, they were together almost every day. He also spent a few evenings in Manuel's house. He stayed in touch with Manuel up until his arrest for Verwoerd's assassination.⁴³⁸⁹

Another childhood friend was John Michaletos,⁴³⁹⁰ who corresponded with Tsafendas even while he was in jail; in 1947 he recruited Tsafendas to the Greek Communist Party and its military wing the DSE, and Tsafendas spent Christmas with him in 1961. The two were together consistently from 1926 to 1941 and from 1947 to 1949.⁴³⁹¹

Another friend from school days was George Grispos, who also kept in touch over the years; Tsafendas visited him in Umtali in 1963.⁴³⁹² Another friendship which endured over the years was between Tsafendas and Ira Kyriakakis⁴³⁹³ and he was also very friendly with ⁴³⁸⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴³⁹⁰ Again we do not know whether it is the doctor or the professor.

⁴³⁹¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴³⁹² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴³⁹³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

Irene Michaletos, daughter-in-law of his aunt Artemis Michaletos.⁴³⁹⁴

Tsafendas's best friend was Patrick O'Ryan. Tsafendas lived in his house for five months and then visited him at his home at least once every ten days. He rated him the best person he ever met. Patrick O'Ryan testified openly that he thought very highly of Tsafendas.⁴³⁹⁵ When he died, O'Ryan travelled from Cape Town to Sterkfontein for his funeral.⁴³⁹⁶

Father Nikola Banovic who lived with Tsafendas for four to five months in Istanbul in 1961 also formed a strong relationship with Tsafendas and they kept in touch until Tsafendas was imprisoned. Tsafendas formed a strong bond with Limasollu Naci, the language college owner in Istanbul who hired him to teach English.⁴³⁹⁷ Tsafendas also had a very warm friendship with Fotini Gavasiadis, the sister of Nikos Vlachopoulos, his brother in law. Fotini invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother's café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends.⁴³⁹⁸ Finally, he also had a very good friendship with Helen Kavadias-Grispos, Giorgos Grispos's wife, another he had known since they were children.⁴³⁹⁹

The above were all "close friendships." When it came to "intimate relationships," Tsafendas was keen to marry and raise a family, as was testified Helen Daniels,⁴⁴⁰⁰ Caroline Barbeau⁴⁴⁰¹ and Tsafendas himself.⁴⁴⁰² Tsafendas, Helen Daniels and Caroline Barbeau⁴⁴⁰³ told the police that he wanted to be reclassified as Coloured in order to marry Helen Daniels.

⁴³⁹⁴ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴³⁹⁵ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴³⁹⁶ South African Press Association, 9 October 1999, 'Small group gather for Tsafendas' funeral.'

⁴³⁹⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴³⁹⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴³⁹⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁴⁰⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰¹ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁰³ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas also had a special interest in Sybie Barendilla.⁴⁴⁰⁴

It is impossible to know specifics of the love life of a peripatetic person such as Tsafendas, but as an adult, he certainly had at least two long and serious relationships. They were both in the 1950s; with a German woman while he lived in Germany which lasted for at least two years, and with a Portuguese woman while he lived in Lisbon which lasted at least a year. In addition, Tsafendas also had a relationship with a Turkish woman in Istanbul which lasted a few months but ended because neither was willing to accept the other's religion in order to marry, and with a Greek woman in Athens in the late 1940s. In his younger years, he had another two relationships of at least a year each with Stella, a Mozambican woman around 1936-1939, and a Jewish woman in South Africa for a year around 1940.⁴⁴⁰⁵ Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas's flatmate for two months told the police, "As far as I know, Tsafendas loves women, he talked a lot about women and I believed that he attended church services so often to make contact with the woman he met there."⁴⁴⁰⁶

Dr. Cooper characterised the Tsafendas type as "isolated... a day-dreamer preoccupied with his own inner thoughts." While two witnesses out of around two hundred who testified to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas "did not mix freely and kept to himself most of the time",⁴⁴⁰⁷ and that he was "not very talkative,"⁴⁴⁰⁸ the vast majority declared the opposite.

- William Mare Volbrecht, a friend and schoolmate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that Tsafendas was "never a loner and freely mingled with us."⁴⁴⁰⁹ Tsafendas's half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, his first cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques, and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, said that from childhood Tsafendas was ⁴⁴⁰⁴ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; van Woerden, 2000: 139.

⁴⁴⁰⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰⁷ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰⁸ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁰⁹ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

sociable, friendly and very talkative.⁴⁴¹⁰

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time."⁴⁴¹¹
- An unnamed "respected member of the Press gallery" in the House of Assembly "who knew Tsafendas well" spoke to Rene MacColl, of the Daily Express, about Tsafendas. He said that "far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn't have been a less grey or faceless figure."⁴⁴¹²
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."⁴⁴¹³
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas "spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type."⁴⁴¹⁴
- Hulse, who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said "Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his..."⁴⁴¹⁵
- Ian Boswell of the Department of Labour, in his description of Tsafendas, included the phrase, "aside from being over talkative ..."⁴⁴¹⁶
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, another employment officer at the Department of Labour,

⁴⁴¹⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴¹¹ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴¹² Daily Express, 9 September 1966: 2, 'Was it murder incorporated?'

⁴⁴¹³ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. 'Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.'

⁴⁴¹⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴¹⁵ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

⁴⁴¹⁶ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

testified that “he was very talkative.”⁴⁴¹⁷

- Owen Smorenberg, who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”⁴⁴¹⁸
- Albert Vercueil, his boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months, found him to be a “very friendly, social and talkative person.”⁴⁴¹⁹
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden worked with Tsafendas for some three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation and testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”⁴⁴²⁰
- Jacobus Bormman, his flatmate for two months, summed Tsafendas up as “a friendly and plausible person.”⁴⁴²¹
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas’s employer for two months, found him to be “overly talkative and sociable.”⁴⁴²²
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴⁴²³
- Jose Lopez Baltazar a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he ⁴⁴¹⁷ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴⁴¹⁸ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴¹⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴²⁰ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴²¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴²² Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁴⁴²³ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

approached.”⁴⁴²⁴

- Reginald Maile, shipguard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”⁴⁴²⁵
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for two months and testified to the police that he had “a very friendly way of talking.”⁴⁴²⁶ Judson later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”⁴⁴²⁷
- Jose Baltazar, a fireman in Beira, testified to the police that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”⁴⁴²⁸
- Panagiotis Peroglou who knew Tsafendas for about a year, testified to the police but his statements have gone missing, However, in a personal interview, he and his wife Pamela Abrahams, who had also met Tsafendas, characterised him as “very talkative, courteous and friendly.”⁴⁴²⁹
- Peter Pappas said that Tsafendas often ate at his cafe and he found him pleasant. Pappas also stated that Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.⁴⁴³⁰
- Colleagues at Durban Magistrate’s Court described him as the “chatty Greek.”⁴⁴³¹

Perhaps, the most convincing proof that Tsafendas was not “rather isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he tends to not make any close friends, not maintain any close friendships - he does not really concern himself terribly with any intimate relationship,” as Dr. Cooper suggested, comes from Guenter Haafe, doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Haafe was interviewed eight years later, shortly after the assassination, and vividly remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come ⁴⁴²⁴ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴²⁵ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴⁴²⁶ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴⁴²⁷ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁴⁴²⁸ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴²⁹ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴⁴³⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁴⁴³¹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Algumas versoes sobre a vida de Tsafendas.’

into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”⁴⁴³² Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's chief on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man... he looked like a satisfied, successful businessman we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”⁴⁴³³

As well as the witnesses questioned by the police, most of the sixty-nine interviewed by the author characterised Tsafendas as very friendly, very sociable and very talkative. None agreed with Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. Their testimonies cannot be listed here for reasons of space, but the words of those reproduced above clearly prove Dr Cooper's diagnosis was wrong.⁴⁴³⁴ Again, none of the statements given to the police was used to challenge Dr. Cooper.

b. “He tends to be rather untidy, neglectful of his appearance.”

Wholly or partly inaccurate is the reference to Tsafendas looking untidy and neglected. Four witnesses made statements to the police supporting Dr. Cooper's testimony:

- Helen Daniels testified to the police that when she first saw Tsafendas his “clothes were dirty and neglected.” However, Tsafendas had just arrived in Cape Town from Durban after a twenty-four-hour journey by train but also hitch-hiking. Helen Daniels also testified that Tsafendas had with him a “large bundle of dirty laundry.” All this suggests is that Tsafendas had not been able to wash his clothes. This was confirmed by Merle Daniels, Helen's sister-in-law, who testified that as soon as Tsafendas arrived, he gave her all his clothes to be washed and after that, his clothes were always clean.⁴⁴³⁵
- Nickolas Nel, who had an argument with Tsafendas while they were working at F.A.

⁴⁴³² The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

⁴⁴³³ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

⁴⁴³⁴ If someone is not satisfied with the evidence presented here, the study can produce all the statements regarding this issue.

⁴⁴³⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Poole Engineering, testified that he “had a messy and dirty appearance.”⁴⁴³⁶

- Landlady Wilhelmina de Vos testified that Tsafendas was “dirty.”⁴⁴³⁷
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary with Marine Diamond Corporation, told the police that Tsafendas had “dirty, sloppy clothes.”⁴⁴³⁸ But she had only seen Tsafendas at work, where dirty clothes were the norm.

However, the majority who talked to the police said Tsafendas's appearance was neat and clean and that he was very well dressed:

- The report by Police Col. van Wyk, which contained interviews with people from Rhodesia and Mozambique, concluded that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”⁴⁴³⁹
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry, “It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me, he was well-dressed, well-spoken and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴⁴⁴⁰
- Ian Boswell, an officer at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”⁴⁴⁴¹
- Gideon Cloete, an officer at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas “was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.”⁴⁴⁴²
- Jacobus Bornman testified that “according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.”⁴⁴⁴³

⁴⁴³⁶ Marle Daniels testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁷ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁸ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴³⁹ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁰ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴¹ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴² Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴⁴⁴³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys of the Department of Labour in Cape Town interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed.”⁴⁴⁴⁴
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer, who worked with Tsafendas at the Power Station in Cape Town, testified that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed.”⁴⁴⁴⁵
- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”⁴⁴⁴⁶
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas “was well-dressed and gave a good appearance” although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.⁴⁴⁴⁷ She later also stated that Tsafendas was always very well dressed and never saw him wearing dirty clothes except when he was coming back from work. “He was always well-dressed. I remember my poor mother often knitting something for him.” She also remembers Tsafendas being overly clean as a child, refusing to eat without washing his hands first. “When we were playing outside the house and someone had a chocolate or some bread, he would first go to the house, wash his hands and then he would eat it.”⁴⁴⁴⁸
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott’s boarding house. She told the police, “Whilst the accused had his meals with me, I found him to be very poorly mannered - so-much-so that I named him “Vark.” His clothing however was clean and always tidy.”⁴⁴⁴⁹
- Sidney Wiehand, one of the three senior messengers who interviewed Tsafendas for a job in Parliament, said that in order to be hired, one “must always be neat.”⁴⁴⁵⁰ The fact that Tsafendas was appointed suggests that he met the dress criterion.

⁴⁴⁴⁴ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁵ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁶ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁷ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁴⁴⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁴⁹ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁵⁰ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

The author asked forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about the way he was dressed. Only two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriadis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.⁴⁴⁵¹ None of the rest said Tsafendas was of a dirty or neglected appearance. Indeed, the vast majority remembered him as dressing well and looking like a gentleman. It is not possible to reproduce here more than a hundred statements that contradict Dr. Cooper's view. The following are only from those who knew Tsafendas well or saw him very often:

- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months. He saw Tsafendas virtually every day and says he was always a very clean person and well-dressed, wearing a different hat each day.⁴⁴⁵²
- Fotini Gavasiadis invited Tsafendas to be a guest in the house where she lived with her husband and small son in Pretoria in 1963. After a few weeks, he moved into an apartment next door where he stayed for the following eight months. During this period, he spent much of his time back in her house, almost like flatmates. Throughout these nine months, Tsafendas and Gavasiadis also worked together in her brother's café. Fotini got to know Tsafendas very well and ranked among his closest friends, along with Patrick O'Ryan, Manuel and Father Nikola.

Gavasiadis told the author that it is "nonsense" to say Tsafendas was not well-dressed or dirty, that in fact he always very well dressed and clean. "Sometimes it took him longer than it took me to get ready, trying to find a more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties. He never wore the same clothes for two days in a row and when it was hot he would even change twice per day. He adored hats and ties."⁴⁴⁵³

- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. He said Tsafendas "was always very clean and well-dressed, ⁴⁴⁵¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁵² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁴⁵³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes and he always shaved.”⁴⁴⁵⁴

- Stanley O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas as “clean and well-dressed person.”⁴⁴⁵⁵
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed and clean. She was impressed by his suits and Tsafendas told her that most of them were bought in Europe. “He was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat, and was a very clean person. He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can’t remember for sure.”⁴⁴⁵⁶
- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend, described as “absolutely absurd” claims that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He looked like a gentleman. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s and brought me a hat for a present from Lisbon.”⁴⁴⁵⁷
- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965 and remembers him as always well dressed and clean.⁴⁴⁵⁸
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well dressed and clean.”⁴⁴⁵⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months. He finds the thought that Tsafendas had a dirty and neglected appearance as “absurd.” He recalls that Tsafendas “had a ⁴⁴⁵⁴ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁵⁵ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

⁴⁴⁵⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁴⁵⁷ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁴⁵⁸ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁵⁹ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

shower every morning when he woke and in the evening when he returned from work. He believed that he sweated in the night, so he had one in the morning.” Apart from the day mentioned before, he never saw Tsafendas with dirty clothes.⁴⁴⁶⁰

- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant, which thereafter he patronised more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas as always well dressed and clean.⁴⁴⁶¹
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961. She was impressed by his many hats and remembers people commenting about how neatly he dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie.”⁴⁴⁶²
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels’s best friends at the time, stated to the author that whenever she saw Tsafendas, “he was always very neatly dressed.”⁴⁴⁶³
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and says, “I was very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”⁴⁴⁶⁴
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town. He remembers him “looking clean and well-dressed.”⁴⁴⁶⁵
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He remembers Tsafendas as always well-dressed and clean, often wearing suits and hats.⁴⁴⁶⁶
- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s, I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don’t remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He ⁴⁴⁶⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁴⁶¹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁴⁴⁶² Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁴⁶³ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

⁴⁴⁶⁴ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

⁴⁴⁶⁵ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁴⁴⁶⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

was certainly well-dressed.”⁴⁴⁶⁷

- Peter Peroglou ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966. He remembers him being well-dressed and very courteous.⁴⁴⁶⁸
- Pamela Abrahams, Peroglou's wife, also ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966. She also remembers him being well-dressed and very courteous.⁴⁴⁶⁹
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and his memory is of “a well-dressed man.”⁴⁴⁷⁰
- The thirteen Eleni crewmen were impressed with the way Tsafendas dressed. He told some of them that most of his suits were bought in Europe a few years ago and that he had not bought any new clothes since he returned to South Africa.⁴⁴⁷¹

In addition, Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said in a newspaper interview in 1966:

“He drove up here in a big, battered American car. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”

Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁴⁴⁷²

A point worth making is that opinions on dress and appearance are subjective. A man who seems dirty and neglected to one person is simply dishevelled or workaday to another. It is important also to remember that Tsafendas was a poor man, often forced to stay in cheap

⁴⁴⁶⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁴⁶⁸ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴⁴⁶⁹ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴⁴⁷⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴⁴⁷¹ Kleanthis Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁴⁷² Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin,’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

places without laundering facilities. Plus, his jobs, as a welder or fitter, for instance, were not conducive to smart dressing. The most important point regarding Dr. Cooper's statement, however, is not so much Tsafendas's appearance as the fact that the Attorney-General did nothing to challenge Dr. Cooper's deposition, despite witnesses' testimony to the contrary. Again, we do not know if this happened because of van den Berg's incompetence or because he was not given the necessary information. The result was that Dr. Cooper's diagnosis, much of it inaccurate, went seriously unchallenged.

c. “He tends in fact to be a daydreamer, preoccupied with his own inner thoughts, which are not in fact directly related to the environment around him; and he quite often tends to lead an aimless, almost vagrant, useless sort of life, with very little go, very little ambition, very little achievement, very little worthwhile.”

This third part of the psychiatrist's testimony is partly accurate. Tsafendas could be considered a daydreamer insofar as he dreamt that one day the people of South Africa would storm Parliament, as the French revolutionaries did at Versailles, and that apartheid would then collapse and everyone would be allowed to live altogether without any kind of separation. He also dreamt that Mozambique would become independent.⁴⁴⁷³

As for an “aimless... useless sort of life,” Tsafendas taught English without charge for six months to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul and did the same for poor children in Mozambique. He became an active member of the British anti-apartheid and anti-fascist movements, participated in demonstrations and smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa. By standing up for his political beliefs, he was exiled for twelve years from Mozambique, while in Portugal he was prosecuted, arrested, imprisoned and tortured. He toured villages in Beira trying to raise awareness of the independence cause and for this suffered further imprisonment and torture.⁴⁴⁷⁴ He joined the Greek Communist Party and its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War and fought for a cause was the achievement of an aim.⁴⁴⁷⁵

⁴⁴⁷³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁴⁷⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴⁷⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

However his political activities may be viewed by others, they cannot be considered “aimless” and representative of a “useless sort of life.” Many people go through life without really achieving anything or just live a simple life with very little “go” or “ambition.” Are they all schizophrenic? Tsafendas did enough during his lifetime to render significant service to society and far from being, aimless, he had well-defined goals that could never be described as “daydreaming.” He wanted “to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa” and was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁴⁴⁷⁶ The removal of Dr. Verwoerd was aimed at a change of national policy.⁴⁴⁷⁷

Tsafendas fearlessly told the PIDE agents who were questioning him that he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation” and that he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique.”⁴⁴⁷⁸ The fact that the Director-General of PIDE in Portugal instructed the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique that “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities,”⁴⁴⁷⁹ can also be seen as an achievement for Tsafendas.

Tsafendas worked tirelessly and at a hands-on level to achieve his goals of independence for Mozambique and political change in South Africa. He toured villages in Beira conducting “subversive” propaganda, distributing leaflets and books and telling people of the possibilities of independence for Mozambique, his country, always seeking to raise their awareness. The fact that PIDE considered him to be “a partisan for the independence of Mozambique” and deliberately hid his detailed file from the South African authorities certainly proves that he was far from just a “daydreamer.”

As for South Africa, smuggling anti-apartheid literature into that country, asking visitors not to spend money there which would boost the apartheid economy and finally killing the man he believed had “created apartheid” and was “the brains behind

⁴⁴⁷⁶ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁴⁷⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁴⁷⁸ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴⁷⁹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

apartheid,"⁴⁴⁸⁰ hoping that it would bring a change of policy⁴⁴⁸¹ were the actions of a practical man with practical aims, He was no dreamer.

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL REPORTS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you been shown a copy of a report from the University College, St. Pancras Hospital, London?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want you to tell the Court what is in that report, but would you describe whether that report relates to the accused's state of mind, mental health?

DR. COOPER: It does relate to his state of mind, and in fact describes the state of mind.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are the contents of that report relevant to the present enquiry?

DR. COOPER: I believe so, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important are they to the present enquiry?

DR. COOPER: Very important.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important will it be for the Court to hear the evidence of the medical practitioners who in fact interviewed the accused and who wrote up these reports?

JUDGE BEYERS: When was that?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: 1959.

DR. COOPER: That would depend on the Court's attitude towards this matter. If the Court would require evidence in addition to what evidence has been presented now, to satisfy or to elaborate on the evidence, then it would be very important.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would be somebody else's opinion on the clinical examination which he held?

DR. COOPER: More than that. It would be somebody else's opinion and the fact that, if this other opinion was to the effect that this man was suffering from schizophrenia at that time, it would be very relevant to whether he is suffering from schizophrenia or not.

⁴⁴⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁴⁸¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

JUDGE BEYERS: That I follow. I will put it to you again: it will merely be some other person's opinion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't know if it was a psychiatrist or what it was - on certain observations made by that person as to what his opinion is?

DR. COOPER: That is correct. Except - I would like to elaborate on that and explain that when a patient is admitted to a mental hospital, eventually a report may emerge which will almost always be signed by the superintendent, but very often it is in fact the opinion of the group of psychiatrists who have dealt with this particular individual. So it is the opinion of perhaps several people ... I am unable to say whether the individual who wrote this report actually was involved in the examination or not...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Assume the investigators are alive and are able and willing, in London, to give evidence that this man was a paranoid, they diagnosed him to be a paranoid schizophrenic, that he did attribute everything to the tapeworm - assume that - how relevant, and how important would that be?

DR. COOPER: It would be important, very important, from many points of view. It would tend to certainly confirm one's present clinical impressions of the man, and I feel strongly it would obliterate finally and conclusively any question of simulation in this case, malingering.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have also seen a report from the Whitecroft Hospital, Newport, Isle of Wight?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your observation on that report?

DR. COOPER: The general observation is that again there is reference, extensive reference, to the tapeworm, and again there is a diagnosis of psychotic illness. I don't know whether I am permitted to read a line or not....

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Don't read. There is reference, you say, to tapeworm, reference to a psychotic illness?

DR. COOPER: Yes. And there is reference to the fact that he has not recovered, on discharge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, how important would it be if we are able to find the doctor who did examine the accused, who did make this diagnosis, and I am led to believe that he is available? How important is that, to have that evidence before this Court?

DR. COOPER: It is important. And I must point out that in this report the person who has signed the report said "I found this" and "I found that," so presumably he is reporting on his own findings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In regard to the White Croft Hospital, there are in fact two doctors, not so, who have signed reports — it is actually a composite report?

DR. COOPER: I have not got the report here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We will deal with it at a later stage. Furthermore, you have seen a report from a German hospital near Hamburg?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does that contain a diagnosis of the accused's mental condition in 1955?

DR. COOPER: Yes. That also refers to him as suffering from a psychotic illness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again there is reference to the tapeworm, and that the patient attributed everything to the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How important is that in your opinion?

DR. COOPER: That is very important.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, if we are able to get the evidence of the practitioner or practitioners who diagnosed the accused's condition at the time, would that be material evidence?

DR. COOPER: Yes, it would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And further, you have seen the American report as well, haven't you?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do they show?

DR. COOPER: There is a report from America in 1946 describing or, let us say, making a diagnosis of schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, would it be relevant and material to this enquiry, if possible, to obtain the evidence and have it before the Court?

DR. COOPER: Yes, it would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want you to give us your final assessment?

DR. COOPER: My final assessment of this man's mental condition is that he is suffering from a mental illness known as schizophrenia; that I feel I have good reason to believe that he has been suffering from this mental illness for probably at least twenty years, and that this mental illness is of such a degree as to make him certifiably mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

Advocate Cooper refers to a number of Tsafendas's medical reports which he has in his possession, and which obviously Dr. Cooper saw at one point since he refers to signatory doctors who might be asked to testify. Apparently the purpose of this exhibition of documents is to demonstrate to the court that Tsafendas had a long history of mental illnesses.

Tsafendas had given a detailed account of all the hospitals where he had been treated, including how he was diagnosed each time, in his statement to the police on September 19. However, he only revealed information about the occasions on which he was diagnosed as schizophrenic or psychotic, not the times when he was found to be perfectly healthy. He also hid the fact that he was caught faking mental illness in the United States and that he once claimed to be Saint Peter. That the South African authorities possessed at least some of these records is evident from the fact that some were found by the author in the National Archives of South Africa. Documents reveal that the South African authorities had the reports from the US hospitals from the 16th of September.⁴⁴⁸² There are also references to them in the report of the Commission of Enquiry. However we cannot be sure if they were in the State's possession at the time of the summary trial.

⁴⁴⁸² Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas at the request of the defence, told the author that he never saw any of the medical reports from the hospitals where he was treated, as was the case with others who examined the prisoner. He said he was verbally informed that Tsafendas had been diagnosed as schizophrenic in overseas hospitals and took it for granted. Asked by the author if he and the other psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas had read or seen any of these medical reports, he replied:

“No, no, no, we were just told. We were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man ... And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”⁴⁴⁸³

Advocate Cooper's questioning of Dr. Cooper revealed one major issue that is extremely important for the summary trial. Advocate Cooper refers to a “report from America in 1946” where Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic. This is the report from the Grafton State Hospital and it is entirely true that the diagnosis for Tsafendas was “Schizophrenia – hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved.” However, this report also contains important information that is not mentioned. It states that in 1943, Tsafendas “faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of ships.”⁴⁴⁸⁴ It is understandable that neither Dr. Cooper nor advocate Cooper mentioned this as it had the potential to cause serious problems for their line of defence.

The author is not in position to know whether Dr. Cooper had actually read all of the Grafton report or if the diagnosis was just conveyed to him verbally, as was the case with his friend van Zyl. Certainly, the report was not available to Dr. Cooper at least during his first two consultations with Tsafendas, on October 1 and 4. Indeed, it was not available to anyone from the defence because on October 3, 1966, the Consul of the US Embassy in Cape Town wrote to the South African Security Branch that “Mr. Tsafandakis's legal representatives have asked permission to see the medical reports in question.” The letter also states that the ⁴⁴⁸³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁸⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

US authorities discussed the matter and agreed to provide the defence with the files in question. However, they ask the “appropriate South African authorities” to give the reports to the defence representatives if “they deem it appropriate.”⁴⁴⁸⁵

That this letter was written on October 3 suggests that it would have been highly unlikely for the “appropriate authorities” to have discussed the matter and given their permission the same or the following day. Since it was an official request, certainly a written response must have been made to the US Embassy. Even if it had arrived at the Embassy the next day, which would be highly unlikely, still the defence would not have had the records on the 4th as it would have certainly taken at least one day for them to receive them from the Embassy. This suggests the 5th as a more likely date, though that is a very optimistic scenario, given the bureaucracy involved and the fact that mail services at the time were not as fast as today.

If at any point Dr. Cooper had read the complete Grafton report, he would not have mentioned the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past since such a claim would have raised serious questions about the defence case. Although it was understandable for the defence to conceal such information, is this not something that the State should have enquired about? The State must have had this report in its possession as it was given to the South African authorities on September 16.⁴⁴⁸⁶ Yet the State did not find it important enough to mention it, assuming that it did have the report among its files. This was the first, but not the only, time that the State overlooked evidence, or was ignorant of evidence, which stated clearly that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.

An equally important issue is the following: Advocate Cooper mentions four medical reports, one from Hamburg, one from the Isle of Wight, one from London and one from America, and states that all agree that Tsafendas is schizophrenic. He also states that the first three (Hamburg, Isle of Wight and London) refer to the tapeworm which Tsafendas blames for everything. Then Advocate Cooper mentions the report from America which also diagnoses Tsafendas as schizophrenic. However, he does not mention the tapeworm and says nothing else about the hospital's diagnostic report. This goes on to say that Tsafendas “is in the habit of smearing the walls in his room with faeces and is hallucinated and suspicious. He hears voices coming through the radiators. He is orientated as to the month but completely disorientated as to place and situation. He has peculiar mannerisms. He is wont to assume silly grimacing expressions and is prone to misidentify the attendants and the examiner.”⁴⁴⁸⁷

⁴⁴⁸⁵ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

⁴⁴⁸⁶ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

This is very important information for a psychiatrist as it shows that Tsafendas, apart from believing that he has a tapeworm, also believed, at least at one point in his life, that he also heard voices from radiators. Dr. Cooper was asked by the Attorney-General in reference to the tapeworm:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: That is the only delusion he had, isn't it, that you discovered? You didn't discover any other delusion?

DR. COOPER: No, but I found other aspects of his mental disorder which in my opinion are equally important to simply his being deluded.

This surely suggests that Tsafendas's delusions from 1946 were gone by 1966, or that Dr. Cooper had not read the Grafton report carefully or he had not seen it at all or that he ignored information which any psychiatrist would consider highly important. Again, the Attorney-General does not raise the issue of the “other delusion.” According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas had the tapeworm since sometime in the mid-1930s, thus he still had it in 1946. However, the Grafton report suggests that Tsafendas was hearing voices from the radiators when he also had a tapeworm, meaning he had two delusions at the same time. How possible is it for someone to be doubly deluded?

The information about the radiators takes on extra importance because in 1965, Tsafendas had claimed to be suffering from a third delusion, that he was the Apostle Peter. This diagnosis was made after Tsafendas was arrested by the Portuguese Security Police in Beira accused of pretending to be a missionary for religion, while in reality he was preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence.”⁴⁴⁸⁸ During interrogation, Tsafendas had claimed to be Jesus Christ's Apostle Peter.⁴⁴⁸⁹ Tsafendas used this act as it fitted nicely with his missionary pretext. Therefore, again Tsafendas had simultaneous delusions involving at any one time, the tapeworm, radiator voices and Saint ⁴⁴⁸⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁴⁸⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴⁸⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Peter.

Then on June 26, 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Kossew and appeared to have yet another delusional idea, this time of a persecutory nature. He claimed that more than twenty people had died from food poisoning in the house where he was staying.⁴⁴⁹⁰ The author interviewed several people who knew Tsafendas at that time, including two of his flatmates and two others who took their meals there. Tsafendas never told them about this "suspicion," but he continued eating there up to the assassination - for two months taking food he had told the doctor was poisonous!⁴⁴⁹¹

According to Professor Burke:

"There are a lot of contradictions in the story ... let's assume he was schizophrenic, for the sake of this argument, and that in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles, that delusion would have stayed. So why would he, then, have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense, because your delusion stays fixed, so if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger and they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely. Why would you go from the apostle and that worked for you ... well, let's say he truly believed he was an apostle, why did that change as he went along? It makes no sense.

Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it's inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but it doesn't change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd based on the delusion that he was an apostle. He wouldn't have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there's, already, some kind of inconsistency."⁴⁴⁹²

The Grafton report contains another important piece of information which was not mentioned in court. It states that while in custody in Bangor, Maine⁴⁴⁹³ on charges of ⁴⁴⁹⁰ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁴⁹¹ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

⁴⁴⁹² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴⁴⁹³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

contravening US immigration laws,⁴⁴⁹⁴ Tsafendas “showed symptoms of mental disorder” and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts.⁴⁴⁹⁵ This perhaps did not sound very important at the time, especially to the defence, but it was very important for the State. There was also, as we will see, a report from a hospital in Lisbon which stated the same thing, that Tsafendas, “during his interrogations, gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar.”⁴⁴⁹⁶

There was also a third report, from the Government Hospital in Beira, which is not in the possession of the author. This must have contained a similar statement about Tsafendas's behaviour, as he was taken there by the Portuguese police after he had claimed to be St Peter.

What makes these reports so important is the fact that Tsafendas had also shown signs of mental illness while in custody for Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, at least the fourth time that something like this happened. Significantly, no ordinary person testified to the police that Tsafendas was unstable or had mentioned the tapeworm to them. When he rambled about the tapeworm and appeared insane was invariably when he talked to the police in custody or to doctors in hospitals where he was taken by the police or to which he had admitted himself. Apart from those hospitals to which he was taken by police, all the others had admitted Tsafendas at his own request, indicating that Tsafendas had a reason of his own for seeking admission. The Grafton State Hospital report also states that Tsafendas voluntarily admitted himself to the Boston Psychiatric Hospital on March 1946 before he was transferred to the Grafton.⁴⁴⁹⁷

The South African embassy in Washington informed the South African Ministry of Foreign Affairs on September 9, 1966, just three days after the assassination, that the US Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas which contained “full particulars” of his time in the United States. The embassy's letter stated that Tsafendas “is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁴⁴⁹⁸ insane, but the type of man who would easily be used as an instrument of Communist or hostile organizations.” It ⁴⁴⁹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁴⁹⁵ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁴⁹⁶ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁴⁹⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁴⁹⁸ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

said the impression of American Immigration officials was that Tsafendas had been manipulated and was “under the influence of someone or some organization.” He had subsequently been deported to Europe.⁴⁴⁹⁹ This information was also not used during the summary trial and most likely was not given to the psychiatrists for consideration.

The Grafton State Hospital report stated that Tsafendas had a paternal uncle who was mentally ill and had died in a mental hospital. According to his close relatives Katerina Pnema, Mike Vlachopoulos, Mike Pnema, John Michaletos and Mary Eendracht, this is a lie.⁴⁵⁰⁰ The Commission of Enquiry pointed out that Tsafendas was knowledgeable about mental disorders and well-acquainted with hospital situations.⁴⁵⁰¹

Presumably Tsafendas claimed there was mental illness in the family to strengthen his own claims. In fact he later said he knew that to appear convincingly mad, it was helpful to invent insanity in the family and suggest suffering a childhood trauma. That Tsafendas lied whenever it was convenient for him is also evident from the fact that on at least one other occasion when he was hospitalised, after an alleged suicide attempt, he stated that there was no history of mental illness in the family.⁴⁵⁰² Whenever he needed to back up his claim that he was schizophrenic, Tsafendas referred to a history of mental illness in the family, an “uncle” who was mentally ill and had died in a mental hospital. However, when he was hospitalised for other reasons, he denied that there was a history of mental illness in the family.

Advocate Cooper also referred to a report from a hospital in Hamburg – clearly the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in whose psychiatric section Tsafendas stayed from February 11, until June 7, 1955. Tsafendas had admitted himself to the hospital claiming he had taken twenty sleeping pills. This was soon after he was discharged from the Tropen Krankenhaus in Hamburg, where he had admitted himself claiming to suffer from tapeworm trouble. However, nothing was found and he was discharged immediately.⁴⁵⁰³ Advocate Cooper said the Hamburg hospital report referred to a “psychotic illness” and that Tsafendas ⁴⁴⁹⁹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁵⁰⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁰¹ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵⁰² Medical Bulletin of Dimitrio Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁵⁰³ Dr Bieser's medical report on Tsafendas, Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital, 6 April 1955. K150. Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/8. NASA.

attributed everything to the tapeworm. Both references are correct, but they tell only half of the story.

Advocate Cooper phrased his words carefully and in such a way as to reveal only what was helpful for the defence. There was no mention in the hospital's report of schizophrenia as such, although Tsafendas did refer to the tapeworm. Furthermore, there were two concluding diagnoses made at this hospital: Dr. Bieser, a senior physician, labelled Tsafendas's condition as "mixed – pictured phasic psychose,"⁴⁵⁰⁴ and Dr. Nachtwey, a psychiatrist, diagnosed "endogenous depression, mixed-picture."⁴⁵⁰⁵ Tsafendas's condition thus appears to be much less serious than that depicted. He was diagnosed as suffering from depression and so treated and not for schizophrenia. Naturally, Advocate Cooper took from the report only what was convenient for the defence's case.

Professor Tuviah Zabow told the author about Tsafendas's condition as it appeared in the hospital's records:

"He was admitted without escort from his residence suggests he came voluntarily to the hospital requesting admission and presented with depression and an account of an overdose suicidal attempt. The impression recorded initially and ultimately concluded as diagnosis was 'depression with hypochondriacally features' or psychosomatic symptoms. He spontaneously presented the 'tapeworm' story mentioning it as present since 1937 and continued to emphasise this at interviews in detail. Was this again the method he uses to gain admission? Supporting a mood disorder rather than a process psychosis such as schizophrenia is the record that his thought processes were normal but slower. This would be again in keeping with depression rather than schizophrenia. Schizophrenia would have been more representative of a syndrome i.e. presenting with a group and other symptoms as well such as disordered thought processes.

Notably if this had been present since 1937 or even since 1955 it would have been expected to have deteriorated in his general function. He recovered rather quickly and was treated with only two shock treatments and left with a sympathetic acquaintance who provided the care he again required or manipulated for. The diagnosis of 'Endogenous Depression – mixed picture' was referring to the old terminology of manic-depression but no clear note of hypomanic features are recorded. The 'mixed picture' label or the 'phasic psychosis' label also fits this suggested clinical picture and the recovery so rapid."⁴⁵⁰⁶

⁴⁵⁰⁴ Dr Bieser and Dr Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁵⁰⁵ Medical Buletin of Dimitrio Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

What is also strange about Dr. Cooper's questioning is that there is no mention of how Tsafendas came to be admitted to the Whitecroft Hospital, on the Isle of Wight. The Isle of Wight is a small island in the English Channel off the country's south coast. No one seemed to wonder how Tsafendas ended up in a hospital there. Patients in such a hospital were either local islanders or were referred from other hospitals in Britain.⁴⁵⁰⁷

Tsafendas was unique in presenting himself in the lobby and being admitted on his own cognisance. Why would he travel all the way to this small island and admit himself to a hospital there? The only logical explanation, and it fits with Tsafendas's impetuous curiosity and love of travel, is what he later said: that he had heard about this beautiful island that it had a hospital which looked like a castle and he decided to visit it. According to Professor Burke, this sort of planning is not something that a schizophrenic can do: "That requires a lot of planning -- I'm going to go there, and I'm going to stay in the hospital, and I'm going to go ... that, typically doesn't happen."⁴⁵⁰⁸

Dr. Cooper, referring to Tsafendas's medical report from the Isle of Wight hospital, states that, "there is reference to the fact that he has not recovered, on discharge." According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry⁴⁵⁰⁹ and to a secret telegram from the South African embassy in London, Tsafendas was given a certificate which described his mental condition as good enough for him to travel to any country.⁴⁵¹⁰

As we have seen before, Tsafendas was medically examined over the previous three years while he was in South African by at least nine doctors on ten separate occasions and none of them noticed anything wrong with him. None of these doctors was a psychiatrist, but then one of the defence's main witnesses was a district surgeon who diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic.

Another fact nobody appeared to notice was that Tsafendas told the police and his defence team the names of all the hospitals to which he was admitted and the exact dates of ⁴⁵⁰⁶ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴⁵⁰⁷ Laidlaw, 1994: 100-103.

⁴⁵⁰⁸ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴⁵⁰⁹ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 33. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵¹⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

his stays there, as well as the precise diagnosis in every case. However, he concealed all the examinations he had by doctors and hospitals where nothing was reported about his “schizophrenia” and the tapeworm. A fact that also seems to have been overlooked is how Tsafendas managed to avoid being certified and detained in hospital before 1966 if he was as described by Dr. Cooper and later by other psychiatrists. He was admitted in several hospitals and examined by numerous doctors and no one thought he was certifiable or as bad as Dr. Cooper described. Indeed no doctor described him in the way Dr. Cooper did. It is true that his condition could have deteriorated since 1959, when he was last hospitalised because of the tapeworm, if he was really a schizophrenic. However, seven years had passed since then and no change was noted in his behaviour.

More importantly, between November 1963 and September 1966, Tsafendas was examined by ten doctors and he did not mention the tapeworm to any of them, which again suggests that either the tapeworm had not become more important in his mind or that he simply did not use it to his advantage. Finally, if his health had deteriorated, he would almost certainly have admitted himself to a hospital, something he had no problem with. He had admitted himself to all the hospitals claiming a “fixation about a tapeworm.”⁴⁵¹¹ If he had no problem admitting to the tapeworm problem in 1946, in 1955 and in 1959, why would he hide it afterwards, especially since he was not “cured”?

Finally, the medical records mentioned in court told only half the truth about Tsafendas's hospitalizations, with important information, for example from the Grafton State Hospital report, omitted by the defence and not raised by the State. None of Tsafendas's medical records mentioned by the defence would be submitted as evidence during the summary trial and no one will know the detailed contents, apart from the diagnosis. However, as we have already seen, the contents of two of the four records mentioned in court were misrepresented by the defence in order to suit its needs, mentioning only what was convenient for them. It is highly likely therefore the same thing happened with the other two reports that the author did not have access to.

⁴⁵¹¹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

THE ISSUE OF TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

What is interesting about all these hospitalizations is that no-one enquires how or why Tsafendas ended up there. He admitted himself to the mental ward of St Pancras Hospital in London, telling doctors that “he had a fixation about a tapeworm.” Then he did the same on the Isle of Wight.⁴⁵¹² He admitted himself to the Ochsensall Hospital in Hamburg by claiming, falsely, that he had taken twenty sleeping tablets.⁴⁵¹³ The Grafton State Hospital had confirmation that Tsafendas had admitted himself to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, before he was transferred there.⁴⁵¹⁴

Why did Tsafendas admit himself to these hospitals? He gave a frank explanation to three different witnesses, the priests Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsaftaridis, when he spoke to them on separate occasions after the assassination. He said he did it when he had no money and needed a place to stay. He said he saw hospitals as “hotels.” At other times, he told the priests, he was taken to hospitals after he “pretended to be mad,” but this was to stop police questioning and sometimes torturing him.⁴⁵¹⁵

The only hospital which Tsafendas named to the priests the Whitecroft on the Isle of Wight. He told two of them on separate occasions that he admitted himself there because he wanted to see the island and he was without money and a place to stay.⁴⁵¹⁶ In all of his travels, Tsafendas admitted himself to hospitals in only three countries, England, the United States and Germany. What is the common factor? Tsafendas was not permitted to work legally in those three nations and sometimes he was there illegally. At the same time, he was jobless, penniless and without a place to stay. In each case, the medical records confirm that Tsafendas himself sought admission and was not taken to the hospitals.

The most obvious example of his hospital ruse was in Britain. In 1959, the first time he visited that country, he was unable to get a work permit and therefore could not work legally. He remained in the country from May until October. His money ran out at some point ⁴⁵¹² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵¹³ Dr Bieser and Dr Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁵¹⁴ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demetrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁵¹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵¹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

and he had nowhere to stay. Tom Fox Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, who Tsafendas had met on his frequent visits to the Society's office, arranged for him to stay at a hostel in Victoria, London. Concluding that Tsafendas was destitute, Pitt gave him a grey, flannel suit.⁴⁵¹⁷ Tsafendas chose not to stay permanently at the hostel while having his costs met by Pitt or the Society, so he left and admitted himself to the hospital in St. Pancras. He later followed the same pattern at the Whitecroft Hospital, on the Isle of Wight.

Tsafendas made one more visit to Britain, in 1962, although he stayed a shorter time. Still, he was not hospitalized. However, nor did he have any financial concerns, with enough money saved from Portugal to get by or from illegal jobs. Edward Furness, who met him then said Tsafendas, "was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy."⁴⁵¹⁸ It is clear that when Tsafendas was without money, jobless and on the run from the British police because of his illegal status, he got himself admitted to the two hospitals. When he was financially secure, however, he had no need of free bed and board.

Germany followed the same pattern. Tsafendas was hospitalised in Hamburg in 1955 when he had spent a few months in the city unsuccessfully looking for work. However, in 1958, when he was back in Germany and stayed there for one and a half years, he was not hospitalised anywhere since he was constantly in work. In 1955, after spending a few weeks unsuccessful seeking a job in Hamburg, Tsafendas told his friends that he was going to look for work in Frankfurt. However, it appears that instead he admitted himself to the hospital, where he was discovered by Fathers Damaskinos Doxiartis and Efthimios Eleftheriadis, from the Greek Orthodox church of St Nicholas in Hamburg. They were surprised to see Tsafendas there as they thought he had gone to Frankfurt.⁴⁵¹⁹

According to Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis, Tsafendas "seemed perfectly fine... I can't remember what he told us about why he was hospitalised, but he definitely never told me or Father Damaskinos anything about this tapeworm, not even when we were in the hospital, I would have remembered such thing ... I remember he looked embarrassed when he saw us, but I really can't remember what he told us; why he was there ... he came to the church to see us when he was released from the hospital and he seemed fine ... he never said or did anything to make me or Father Damaskinos believe that he was insane or even a little unbalanced.”⁴⁵²⁰

⁴⁵¹⁷ The Guardian, 30 September 1966: 10, 'Winding back.'

⁴⁵¹⁸ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵¹⁹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

Asked by the author if he or Father Damaskinos got the impression that Tsafendas might be faking his illness, the priest said, “He did not give me that impression ... I am not sure about Father Damaskinos, but I think he also did not get such an impression. I certainly did not get the impression that he was faking it, why would he do such thing? But I also certainly did not get the impression that he was mentally ill. Definitely not, he was perfectly normal.”⁴⁵²¹

Tsafendas spent most of his time in Mozambique and in South Africa. Surprisingly, he was not hospitalised in any hospital in these countries for psychiatric problems, apart from when he was taken by PIDE to the hospital in Beira while he had claimed to be Saint Peter during integration. The rest of his time in these countries, he was not only never hospitalised, but examined by several doctors and no one noticed anything. Tsafendas also spent two years in Greece, seven months in Turkey, some months in Sweden and one and a half year in Germany in 1958-1959. He had jobs all these times and he was not hospitalised at any of these places during this time, which again it confirms what Tsafendas told the witnesses, about admitting himself when he was penniless and homeless.

Tsafendas also told several witnesses that he had “pretended to be mad” on some occasions in order to stop being tortured while he was in detention.⁴⁵²² Again, Tsafendas’s medical record seems to confirm this too. Whenever he did not admit himself to the hospital, he was taken there by the police after he had shown signs of mental illness during his interrogation, as happened in the USA, in all the hospitals in Portugal and in Beira.

In addition, the psychiatrists claimed in court that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935. However, he made no mention of such a thing to any of his family or to a doctor, nor did he ever seek treatment in a hospital. The tapeworm made its appearance for the first time in 1946, eleven years later. When he was admitted to a hospital for the first time in 1943, while in detention in a prison in Bangor, Maine,⁴⁵²³ on charges of contravening US

⁴⁵²⁰ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁴⁵²¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁴⁵²² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵²³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

immigration laws,⁴⁵²⁴ Tsafendas “showed symptoms of mental disorder.” He was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, from where he was transferred on April 23, 1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital. He was initially diagnosed as having “psychoneurosis – mixed type” plus “many psychopathic traits.”⁴⁵²⁵ However, psychiatrists in this hospital discovered that Tsafendas was play-acting. According to a report by the Grafton State Hospital, Massachusetts, to which he was admitted in 1946, Tsafendas then confessed that in 1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”⁴⁵²⁶ The tapeworm finally emerged in 1946 while he was in Grafton State hospital in Massachusetts, eleven years after he was allegedly infected and three years after his first hospitalization. If Tsafendas really believed what was stated in court about the tapeworm, he must have told the doctors when he was first hospitalised in 1943 or someone else before that. Furthermore, Tsafendas’s claim that he began talking about a tapeworm only after he was first found pretending to be mad is confirmed by the above.

As stated above, Tsafendas spoke extensively to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis about his hospitalizations. He said that the first time he ever did it was in the USA when he was arrested and put to jail for being illegally there. He said that it was very tough there and feared for his life, so he pretended to be mad by hearing voices, as he did not know what else to say or do, in order to be taken away from there. Although he was later caught faking it, he then came across Tom Tuff who gave him the idea for the tapeworm and began using it.⁴⁵²⁷ While the time was passing, he developed his “performances” further and he knew what to say and what to do whenever he wanted to be found insane.⁴⁵²⁸

In January 1952, Tsafendas was arrested in Lisbon as security reports from Mozambique told the Portuguese that Tsafendas was a half-caste, a Communist and an anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of “unclear activities” during his time in ⁴⁵²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵²⁵ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁵²⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁵²⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Gordon Winter in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness. 1997.

Mozambique.⁴⁵²⁹ Tsafendas spent more a year in a prison cell in the Cascais Fort.⁴⁵³⁰

Tsafendas told several witnesses that at the time he was severely tortured, including been given electric shocks and at one point, he said, he could not take the pain and so played the madman again and the police then stopped torturing him.⁴⁵³¹ He was then taken to the Instituto de Medicina Tropical and then to the Hospital do Ultramar for psychiatric examination. A PIDE report said that “during his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Overseas Hospital.”⁴⁵³²

In 1964, after he was arrested in Beira accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique, once again during interrogation he showed signs of mental illness and was taken to the Government Hospital in Beira. Soon, he was declared to be mentally ill and was subsequently released.⁴⁵³³ It must be more than coincidence that Tsafendas showed signs of mental illness to his interrogators, but not to any of the people who came across him. This fact was not picked up by the State although Tsafendas showed signs of mental illness while he was in custody for Dr. Verwoerd's death, as he had done at least three times before in a similar situation; meanwhile, one hundred and fifty people who were questioned by the South African police failed to notice any signs of mental disturbance in Tsafendas.

In 1998, Gordon Winter, a former BOSS agent, journalist and very close friend of General van den Bergh, was interviewed by David Beresford, South Africa correspondent for the British newspaper, The Guardian. He said:

“Wherever Tsafendas went, he usually booked himself into a hospital under some pretext, for the simple reason that after having enjoyed a good look round as a tourist, Tsafendas himself admitted to me that he was lazy and hated working, that he always got himself booked into some hospital for a while. He said he loved hospitals because in them, he got a comfortable bed, clean sheets, three meals a day, the company of other patients - and, equally important, the attention of nurses and doctors.

When Tsafendas really liked a hospital (or the country it was in) and he looked as ⁴⁵²⁹ Diario Popular, 9 September 1966, ‘E conhesido em Lisboa o assassino do Dr. Verwoerd.’

⁴⁵³⁰ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 05 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵³¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁵³² PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Minister of Interior. 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Director General of the Civil and Political Administration Overseas Ministry. 18 April 1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵³³ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

though he would be thrown out, he would go into his 'mad' mode, which lengthened his stay. If that didn't work he would tell them about his tape worm. That story lengthened his stay so that the doctors could check to see whether he had a tape worm or not. When they discovered he did not have a tape worm inside him, he would act madder and insist that the doctors were part of a conspiracy against him - which also lengthened his stay so that psychiatrists could then examine him. Tsafendas himself, told me in Pretoria Central, that psychiatrists were stupid and that (from their questioning) he had learnt their verbals and was thus able to work out what they wanted him to say - which would fit in with their theories. No, I will never believe Tsafendas was as mad as they say. As I told Liza and Sylvia, Tsafendas loved mind games and he was very clever at playing stupid when it suited him."⁴⁵³⁴

What Winter told Beresford is exactly what Tsafendas later told the three priests. It seems clear that he could only have learned these things from Tsafendas himself. Furthermore, eighteen years after he talked to Beresford, Winter repeated the exact same story of Tsafendas and the hospitals virtually word for word to the author. He added that General van den Bergh had asked Tsafendas when he interrogated him how he came to be admitted to all these hospitals. Tsafendas gave him precisely the same reason he later gave to Winter and finally the three priests; that he saw the hospitals as hotels whenever he was penniless and homeless.⁴⁵³⁵

As for Tsafendas admitting himself to hospital, how common is it for a "deluded schizophrenic" to seek treatment in a hospital, admitting that he has a fixation, a delusion he told no-one else about? According to Professor Burke, it makes no sense: "He admits himself, so why would he want to hide any of this away? I mean, it's paradoxical. If I was scared that I was going to be hospitalised, I would keep this to myself, but here's a man who goes to the hospital, and reports by himself, so why would he hide it away, because he was clearly not scared of a mental hospital, so what would be his motive for hiding it away?"⁴⁵³⁶

In later life, Tsafendas was deeply embarrassed about misusing hospitals as he had in America, Britain and Germany, and he avoided talking about it, simply saying he had wanted a place to stay and found refuge in hospitals.⁴⁵³⁷

⁴⁵³⁴ Gordon Winter's correspondence with David Beresford, 8 September 1998. Liza Key's personal collection.

⁴⁵³⁵ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁴⁵³⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴⁵³⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

MISSING MEDICAL REPORTS FROM MOZAMBIQUE AND PORTUGAL

The defence refers to medical reports from hospitals in the United States, England and West Germany, the most recent being from England in 1959. However, Tsafendas was also admitted to the Government Hospital in Beira sometime in late 1964 or early 1965, when he claimed that he was Saint Peter.⁴⁵³⁸ This was after he was arrested by the Portuguese Security Police accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while actually campaigning for Mozambique's independence.⁴⁵³⁹

The South African police were aware of this because Tsafendas stated it in his statement of September 19, it was mentioned in PIDEs report given to the South African police on September 7 and Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk had mentioned it in his report from Beira on September 20. More importantly, van Wyk had then taken the "necessary steps" and "formally applied" to obtain a copy of Tsafendas's medical report from the hospital.⁴⁵⁴⁰ It must have been a simple formality to obtain it, since the Portuguese authorities had provided all of Tsafendas's medical reports from Portugal, and it must have been by then in the possession of the South African police. However, the author is not in a position to know this for a fact, nor is it in a position to know whether Tsafendas's defence team was aware of this hospitalization. The fact that this was the last time Tsafendas was in a hospital before the assassination, with the exception of his cosmetic nose surgery in Groote Schuur hospital in April/May 1966, makes the Beira admission extremely important.

It is also important because seven years had passed since the last time Tsafendas was hospitalised for a psychiatric condition, according to his defence, and such a report would have strengthened their line that he was still a schizophrenic and diagnosed as such also in 1965. The South African police and the defence team got hold of all of Tsafendas's other medical reports, from hospitals in Europe and the United States going back decades, in the case of the Grafton State Hospital to 1946. A report from Beira was important because it would contain the most recent medical information on Tsafendas and it would surely have been quite easy to get, given the excellent bilateral relationship between South Africa and ⁴⁵³⁸ This report was not found in the archives and therefore the study is not in position to know its content.

⁴⁵³⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁴⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

Portugal and their collaboration on Dr. Verwoerd's murder investigation. That the PIDE had deliberately hidden all "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique" while highlighting that he had been declared mentally disable by their hospitals, demonstrates their willingness to impart such information to the South African police.

Indeed, the PIDE had already included in one of its reports an earlier diagnosis by Dr. Pegado of the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare, who examined Tsafendas in Lisbon and on April 6, 1962 diagnosed him as a psychopath.⁴⁵⁴¹ This is when Tsafendas had pretended to be slightly but harmlessly mad in order to convince the Portuguese to give him amnesty to return to Mozambique. However, still, his detailed medical report is missing and we have only the final diagnosis. The Commission of Enquiry evidently had access to one of Tsafendas's medical reports from Lisbon since it stated that in 1952 he was diagnosed with "intestinal parasitosis, manic-depressive psychosis."⁴⁵⁴² The fact that the above two reports were given to the South African authorities confirms that the Portuguese had no problem in handing Tsafendas's medical records to the South African police. Since, as we have already seen, it would be to their benefit that Tsafendas be found to be insane, the Portuguese were only too happy to co-operate.

The fact is, however, that neither the State nor the defence make any reference to a Beira report of Tsafendas's 1964/1965 hospitalization. If we assume that both the Defence and the South African police got hold of this report, what would they have found? That Tsafendas, apart from believing he had a tapeworm, also believed he was Saint Peter. They were not his only imaginings. When he was examined by Dr Kossew on June 16, 1966, Tsafendas appeared to have a delusion of a persecutory nature, believing that twenty people had been murdered in the house where he lived.⁴⁵⁴³ Over the years, Tsafendas mentioned four different delusions:

- hearing voices from the radiators;
- believing he has a tapeworm inside him;
- believing that he is Saint Peter;

⁴⁵⁴¹ Dr. Pegado's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafandakis, 6 April 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van Verdediging. NASA.

⁴⁵⁴² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 24. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵⁴³ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

- having feelings of a persecutory nature and believing that twenty people died in the house where he was staying from deliberate food poisoning.

Chronologically, Tsafendas heard voices from the radiators in the 1940s, later in the following decade he believed he had a tapeworm, then on one occasion in 1965 concluded that he was Saint Peter and in June 1966 expressed illusions of persecution. Since the tapeworm delusion was constant since the 1930s, as Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists claimed, then Tsafendas had at different periods, one different and additional delusion.

Psychiatrists say that it is highly unlikely if not impossible for a person to have multiple delusions. That is why as we have seen, the Grafton hospital reference to Tsafendas hearing voices from the radiators is also not mentioned. According to Professor Alban Burke, to have two delusions at the same time or for a delusion to come and go or be replaced by another delusion is not impossible but unlikely:

“It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is unlikely. It’s possible but it’s improbable. Let’s assume he was schizophrenic... and, in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles, that delusion would have stayed. So why would he then have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense because your delusion stays fixed, so if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger, so they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely, so why would you go from apostle, and that worked for you, let’s say he truly believed he was an apostle, why did that change as he went along?”

Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it’s inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but doesn’t change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd based on the delusion that he was an apostle! He wouldn’t have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there’s, already, some kind of inconsistency.”⁴⁵⁴⁴

⁴⁵⁴⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

Reyner van Zyl, agrees that it is almost impossible, “One may disappear, and the other one may then appear, but two at the same time? I don’t think so, because these delusions are usually very powerful.”⁴⁵⁴⁵

Naturally, the defence lawyers, even if they were in possession of this report, were never going to use it as it would have damaged their argument. However, if the State had the report, it could easily have used it and raised the issue of the three different delusions. It was already aware of the tapeworm issue because the defence had “opened their hands” about it two weeks before the summary trial,⁴⁵⁴⁶ but also because Dr. van Wyk, the State’s expert psychiatrist, was also told about it by Tsafendas.⁴⁵⁴⁷

Thus, why did Tsafendas use the tapeworm story and not the more recent one of Saint Peter? Tsafendas never discussed it. However, it seems logical that he would have wheeled out his most “experienced” act, the one he had used often and which always worked. The Saint Peter show was a one-off, which fitted the religion-related Portuguese accusation, and as for hearing voices a la Joan of Arc, this had failed once before, and anyway hearing voices was the most common way for someone to pretend madness. Tsafendas himself said later that “everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?”⁴⁵⁴⁸

Although there is no evidence to confirm that the Beira report was in the possession of the South African police, everything indicates that it must have been. The fact that Tsafendas had claimed that he was Saint Peter, while in custody just two years before the assassination was of major importance for the summary trial and for his psychiatric evaluation. Even though it did not become known at the time, it demonstrates Tsafendas ability to pretend to be “unstable” whenever necessary. That he managed to adjust himself to his circumstances - accused of pretending to be a missionary, but in reality pressing for the independence of Mozambique – and dream up the Saint Peter idea, so fitting to the situation, suggests that Tsafendas was more than capable of pretending to be unstable, improvising according to his needs at each time.

⁴⁵⁴⁵ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴⁵⁴⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 90.

⁴⁵⁴⁷ Professor Adolph Johannes van Wyk testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁵⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO MANAGE HIMSELF

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he capable of managing himself?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why? Because of the mental disorder?

DR. COOPER: Why? Because I believe that he is quite incapable of fending for himself. He is incapable of holding down employment. He is dependent all the time on others for help and assistance.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Therefore you say he is incapable of managing his own affairs?

DR. COOPER: And he is incapable of managing his own affairs.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: To what extent is he a danger to himself or others?

DR. COOPER: He has certainly proved himself to be a danger to others. And in schizophrenia the thought processes are so confused and unpredictable that one might say he may well become a danger to himself. I believe that this man has been suffering from schizophrenia for longer than five years, and therefore, on this basis alone, I believe that his outlook is now extremely unfavourable. I am of the opinion that the accused is not able to understand the exact nature of the evidence which will be led here, that he is not able to grasp....

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO MANAGE HIMSELF

Once again, an entirely inaccurate diagnosis by Dr. Cooper. Here was a man who travelled on his own through a large number of countries, who found employment wherever he went, who, when penniless, sold his blood to earn some money,⁴⁵⁴⁹ who was arrested five times by the Portuguese Police on serious accusations and secured his release each time. Could such a man be incapable of managing his own affairs? Tsafendas was forty-eight years old at the time of his arrest and did not seem to have any problem getting through life up to then.

If we accept for a moment that Tsafendas was indeed schizophrenic, he must have been extremely good at hiding it from doctors, since he was invariably found sane whenever it was in his interests to be found sane. For example, between 1964 and 1966, a period in South Africa when he was looking for jobs, he was examined by six doctors and no one noticed anything wrong with him. On none of his job application forms did he report any hallucinations or that he had been hospitalised in the past, always claiming to be in exceptional health. Furthermore, he flatly lied when he applied for permanent residency in South Africa, denying anything that might result in a refusal. He wrote in his application that he had “never previously applied for permanent residence in South Africa, had never been found guilty of a criminal or unlawful action, had never been refused entry to any South African harbour and had never been deported from South Africa or any other country.”⁴⁵⁵⁰

⁴⁵⁴⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

He then attended three interviews with three different officers at the Department of Immigration and made a favourable impression on all of them.⁴⁵⁵¹ In addition, on November 11, 1963, he was examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence permit and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁴⁵⁵² On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the same reason by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report.”⁴⁵⁵³

If Tsafendas was unable to manage himself, how did he manage to survive the forty-eight previous years of his life? A man who, although penniless most of the time, managed to travel to sixteen countries where he knew no-one yet never spent an evening without a bed. A stranger in all these countries, he always managed to find a job and sometimes he even thrived, as he did in Istanbul, where he worked for almost half a year at the Limasollu Naci College.

Tsafendas always seemed to find a way of achieving his goals. During the Greek Civil War, he managed to join the Democratic Army of Greece, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and he survived. Arrested five times by the Portuguese police because of ⁴⁵⁵⁰ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵¹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵² Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵³ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

his political ideas and political activities, he managed to secure his release each time. Banned from entering Mozambique due to his anti-colonialist beliefs, he convinced the Portuguese that he was harmlessly mad so they allowed him to return. He also attended several job interviews and no one noticed anything wrong with him, and that included three officials at the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him three times over his application for permanent residency in South Africa.⁴⁵⁵⁴ PIDE would not have held a detailed 130-pages file on Tsafendas and withheld from South Africa information on his political activities if he was a man who was not able to look after himself.

The author asked forty-four relatives, friends and acquaintances if they ever got the impression Tsafendas was not able to care for himself. Not a single one agreed. Again, we list opinions by those who knew him well:

Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with Tsafendas every day for nine months in 1963-4, was shocked and asked, “Are you serious? Are you sure the doctor said this about Dimitri? He must have examined a different man.”⁴⁵⁵⁵ Mary Eendracht, the cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique, his half-sister Katerina Pnema, childhood friends Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis, Father Nikola Banovic who knew him for seven months in Istanbul and Nick Papadakis, who was close to him for two-three months in 1964 in Mozambique all discounted Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis as, at least, inaccurate. Other comments they used to describe it were “ludicrous” and “for laughs.”⁴⁵⁵⁶

The following are some incidents and statements which are indicative of Tsafendas’s character and ability to manage himself:

- Reuben O’Ryan, Patrick’s son said about Tsafendas: “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”⁴⁵⁵⁷
- Peter Pappas, owner of a Greek café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he ⁴⁵⁵⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁵⁵⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

⁴⁵⁵⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁵⁵⁷ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

would give “a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city.” Furthermore, Pappas said about Tsafendas “When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me,”⁴⁵⁵⁸ These are hardly the actions of a man who is unable to look after himself.

- Jacobus Bornman was Tsafendas's flatmate. When he was broke, Tsafendas lent him five cents and when Bornman tried to return the money, Tsafendas refused to take it back.⁴⁵⁵⁹
- On January 25, 1965, Tsafendas was released after three months' imprisonment in Beira for subversive propaganda. Penniless as without a roof over his head, Tsafendas asked if he could sleep at the Beira fire department premises and the fire-fighters agreed. He slept there for ten nights, making sure that “he arrived at mealtimes, when he was invited to share in the food.”⁴⁵⁶⁰
- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated blood for money to survive.⁴⁵⁶¹
- When Tsafendas was arrested in Beira by the Portuguese police with a suitcase full of anti-fascist and anti-colonialist books, but also some Bibles, he was accused of pretending to be a missionary spreading the word about religion, while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence.”⁴⁵⁶² Questioned in custody, Tsafendas came up with the idea of pretending to be Saint Peter, which fitted perfectly with his story of Christian missionary preaching. The Portuguese thought he was mad and released him.⁴⁵⁶³
- In 1964, in Beira, John Emmanuel Marvis lent him twenty escudos, which Tsafendas paid back a few days later.⁴⁵⁶⁴

⁴⁵⁵⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁴⁵⁵⁹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁵⁶⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴⁵⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁶² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁶³ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Conclusion, signed by António Fernandes Vaz, 22 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁶⁴ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

- When Tsafendas was ordered to fulfil his duty of compulsory military service in the Portuguese army, he pretended to be mad and got away with it.⁴⁵⁶⁵
- In 1963, Tsafendas managed to convince the Portuguese that he was a “reformed man,” no longer a Communist or a supporter of the independence of Mozambique, but just a little bit mad and harmless, so they granted him amnesty and allowed him to return to Mozambique after twelve years of exile.⁴⁵⁶⁶

We could go on listing evidence to prove how wrong Dr. Cooper’s testimony was, but the author feels that this particular statement is best disproved by reading Tsafendas’s biography, Chapter Two. It is obvious there that he was well able to manage himself.

Dr. Cooper’s statement that Tsafendas depended “all the time on others for help and assistance,” is inaccurate. The author asked forty-four people who knew Tsafendas if this was the case and they all strongly denied it. Twenty-three of these witnesses who knew him very well told the author that this was untrue and that he was not like this. Some of them even characterised him as a very proud man and no beggar. Another forty-two witnesses who met him and knew him reasonably well agreed with the above statement.

However there were people who testified to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas had asked them for help. For example: His family told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “only wrote to them when he needed money.” According to his half-sister, Katerina Pnema, this was not true. She said that as far as she could remember, Tsafendas never asked for money. On the contrary, his father continually asked in letters to his son if he needed money or anything else. Michalis was deeply concerned about Dimitri’s welfare while living abroad. Pnema believes her family made that remark in order to explain why Tsafendas wrote to them from overseas and in an attempt to show that they did not have a close relationship. Pnema said Tsafendas corresponded regularly with her father and her sister, Eleni, and often sent presents for everyone in the family from overseas, including his step-mother.⁴⁵⁶⁷ Mary Eendracht and Fotini Gavasiadis also strongly denies that Tsafendas ⁴⁵⁶⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁵⁶⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵⁶⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

wrote to the family asking for money and confirm that he often sent gifts along with his letters from overseas.⁴⁵⁶⁸ Some of the gifts are still in the family's possession.

Two more witnesses are John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, and Jose Lopez Baltazar, a fire-fighter in Beira, who testified that Tsafendas asked for their help. Gianouris told the police that he "met Tsafendas during the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas called on him for financial assistance. Tsafendas could not convince him that he was a Greek citizen and therefore he did not meet Tsafendas's request. He describes the subject as a normal and intelligent person."⁴⁵⁶⁹ What was not stated here is that Tsafendas had just been released, having spent the previous three months (16 November 1964- 26 January 1965) in police custody.⁴⁵⁷⁰ Tsafendas had asked the firemen for permission to sleep in the fire station and was allowed to do so, sharing in the men's meals.⁴⁵⁷¹ Looking for a bed in a fire station was unusual, but this was also the same day Tsafendas was released from prison, and he was penniless and homeless.

Tsafendas himself had also admitted to the police that he had to borrow money from some Greeks in order to leave Mozambique for South Africa by boat in March 1965. However, he had spent three of the previous five months in solitary confinement in Beira accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."⁴⁵⁷² Penniless, homeless, jobless and with PIDE following him closely, Tsafendas needed to leave Mozambique. Some of his friends in Mozambique, including Costas Poriadis and Andreas and Giangos Babiolakis, voluntarily gave him money to travel from Beira to Durban. About a month later, Tsafendas paid back the money, even though they had insisted they did not want it back.⁴⁵⁷³

Another person who had helped Tsafendas was Peter Pappas, a Greek café proprietor in Durban. Pappas said he would "sometimes gave him (Tsafendas) a free meal, but when he started work he paid me." Pappas also said that Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-⁴⁵⁶⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁵⁶⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵⁷¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁷³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.⁴⁵⁷⁴ This was not the first time Tsafendas helped poor people, though penniless himself. In Cape Town, he helped his young flatmate, Jacobus Bornman, when he was out of funds, and then declined to take the money back.⁴⁵⁷⁵ He constantly bought food and sweets and toys for the family of Patrick O’Ryan who was hosting him⁴⁵⁷⁶ and he voluntarily helped a colleague in Beira to build a room for his daughter who was to get married.⁴⁵⁷⁷

Regarding Tsafendas being incapable of keeping a job, this is arguable. It is a fact that he was lazy, doing the minimum of work, especially when it did not interest him. However, he was perfectly capable of keeping a job when he wanted to, as he did for six months at the language college in Istanbul, for another six months in the tractor factory in Munich, for six-seven months as part-time interpreter in the court in Durban and when he worked for three years as a hawker in Portugal. He also taught English voluntarily for a year or so in Lourenço Marques in the late 1930s, for six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961 and for five-six months in Beira in 1964.⁴⁵⁷⁸ Tsafendas was always able to find work, even when he was not legally permitted to do so, as happened in England.

Far from being incapable of managing his own affairs, Tsafendas worked all over Europe, as a welder and an engineer in Germany, as a carpenter in Sweden, as a teacher in Turkey, as an interpreter in Greece and as a welder and hawker in Portugal. In England, he was refused a work permit but still managed to find work ‘clandestinely’ and therefore survive.⁴⁵⁷⁹ In Portugal in 1952, he requested and received from the Director of the International Police in Lisbon a certificate which declared him to be a maritime salesman.⁴⁵⁸⁰ Whenever he was jobless, he would return to this form of work, which he liked because he

⁴⁵⁷⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁴⁵⁷⁵ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁷⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁵⁷⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁵⁷⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

⁴⁵⁷⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁸⁰ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

was his own boss could work whenever and wherever he wanted. Had it been more profitable and less tiring, he would have done it permanently, he said.⁴⁵⁸¹

Dr. Cooper was probably unaware of all this, but the police knew of it and one would have expected the State to be aware, too. However, no effort was made by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony with this bountiful evidence that Tsafendas was perfectly capable of managing his affairs. Once more, we are not in position to know whether van den Berg was given this information by the police or that he just did not use it.

DR. COOPER ON WHAT A SCHIZOPHRENIC CAN ACHIEVE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you had a man that you found was a schizophrenic - at least you thought he was - you go and find out who he is; you find he is a capitalist, he's got a match factory or something like that, would you then discard your diagnosis?

DR. COOPER: If he was - yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is a successful business man?

DR. COOPER: Oh yes, I would say there was something wrong with me because a schizophrenic....

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can't be a successful business man?

DR. COOPER: No.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING WHAT A SCHIZOPHRENIC CAN ACHIEVE

Dr. Cooper stated that he would disregard his diagnosis of schizophrenia if his patient was found to be a successful businessman. Tsafendas worked for five years as a hawker-salesman and obviously made enough money to meet his living costs. Perhaps this was not enough to characterise him as a successful businessman in Dr. Cooper's eyes, though it is more likely that he was not aware of it. Dr. Cooper believes that a schizophrenic cannot be a successful businessman. Perhaps this was a reflection on Dr. Cooper's knowledge at the time, because ⁴⁵⁸¹ Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

there have been many examples of schizophrenic people who became exceptionally successful in their field. To name a few, Elyn R. Saks, a Law Professor at the University of Southern California⁴⁵⁸²; John Nash, a mathematician who won a Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences; Rufus May, prominent clinical psychologist; Jack Kerouac, the author of On the Road;⁴⁵⁸³ Robin Cunningham, successful businessman and scientist.⁴⁵⁸⁴

It is worth mentioning here that in the 1950s, 1960s and early 1970s, a large number of psychiatrists, especially Americans, believed that homosexuality was a psychiatric condition, a mental disease, and it could be treated. The American Psychiatric Association listed homosexuality as a mental disease. Advice often given to those who experienced homosexual feelings was that they should consult a psychiatrist or psychologist. Some psychiatrists even tried to “cure” homosexuals with psychiatric therapy.⁴⁵⁸⁵ As for South Africa, from the mid-1960s to the late-1980s, the apartheid government attempted to “cure” homosexual soldiers under the so-called “Aversion Project” of forensic psychiatrist Dr. Aubrey Levin. Possibly as many as 900 military draftees of both sexes (a rate of about fifty a year for eighteen years), mostly aged 16-24, were subjected to chemical castration, electric shock treatment and “sexual reassignment” surgery, intended to remove their homosexuality, which was seen as a “disease.”⁴⁵⁸⁶

It was only in the early and middle 1970s that attitudes to homosexuality in the areas of medicine and psychiatry began to change. In 1973, the American Psychiatric Association removed homosexuality from its official list of mental disorders, giving rise to a series of jokes about the “instant cure.”⁴⁵⁸⁷ However, as late as 1979, the US Public Health Service was carrying out psychiatric examinations of visiting foreigners with a view to diagnosing

⁴⁵⁸² Elyn Saks (The New York Times), 25 January 2015, ‘Successful and schizophrenic.’

⁴⁵⁸³ Schizophrenia.com, (n.d.) ‘Famous People and Schizophrenia.’

⁴⁵⁸⁴ HealthCentral.com, (n.d.) ‘Scientist, Businessman, Poet, and Activist, Cunningham Copes with Schizophrenia Daily’; NJ.com, 7 October 2010, ‘Retired businessman living with paranoid schizophrenia to discuss his struggle.’

⁴⁵⁸⁵ Williams, 2013: 104.

⁴⁵⁸⁶ Kaplan, 2001: 216-217.

⁴⁵⁸⁷ Letter from the American Psychiatric Association to President Carter, March 14th, 1977. National Gay Task Force records, Box 145, Folder 47, Cornell University; It is Time, National Gay Task Force Newsletter. The National Gay Task Force: Our Past and Future. National Gay Task Force records, Box 145, folder 47, Cornell University.

those who presented as homosexual as having “psychopathic personalities.”⁴⁵⁸⁸ Even so, in South Africa the forced “sexual reassignment” surgeries continued until the late-1980s.⁴⁵⁸⁹

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND THE JUDGE

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE, PART I

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused gave other reasons for killing the deceased as well as for his travels, do you still say that this delusion is constant?

DR. COOPER: Yes, but I have not said that the accused gives the tapeworm as an excuse for killing Dr. Verwoerd. All I have said is that the accused has said that the tapeworm was in the middle of whatever that may he identified Dr. Verwoerd as the leader. I think he was fed up with society as a whole, and the obvious man to attack was the man that he considered to be the leader of the society in which he was...

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't quite follow. You told me you think the real reason is that this man found all society was against him?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: This was the leader of society, and he kills him. Aren't you now describing to me a paranoic par excellence? Isn't this a paranoic that you are describing to me, a man who believes the hand of all society is against him at all times. You told me this man only showed very slight paranoic tendencies. I am a layman, I am not an expert. I don't know where I am?

DR. COOPER: I don't regard this as being particularly paranoic, in that I don't think - he doesn't feel that people have been persecuting him or trying to poison him or any of these things that paranoics sometimes do believe. But he believes that his whole life has been hopeless, that he is helpless, that he just can't make any headway, and he is only being paranoic in the sense of being unable to understand that this failure is the product of his own sick mind, and he is rather blaming society for this hopeless and helpless situation he finds himself in.

⁴⁵⁸⁸ Gay Right Advocates Memorandum to the United States Department of Justice and Acting Associate Attorney General John H Shenefield, 1980, Gay/Lesbians, (2/8/79-6/30/80), 02/08/1979 - 06/30/1980, container 7, Jimmy Carter Presidential Library.

⁴⁵⁸⁹ Kaplan, 2001: 217.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then he should have had a grudge against the doctors?

DR. COOPER: Which doctors?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The doctors who couldn't kill the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he certainly has a grudge against these doctors, which he expressed.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn't he kill a doctor, why did he kill the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: It is very hard. If one could creep into this man's mind one would be able to understand. But I think the Prime Minister was a much bigger and greater authority figure in this man's mind than a doctor.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was that the reason or was that not the reason for killing the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I believe that the reason for killing the Prime Minister can only be explained on the basis of a very complex, confused, deluded mind; that one cannot say there was any one element and blame that one element for his killing of Dr. Verwoerd. I believe it was a complex, confused, muddled issue, of which the tapeworm played a part, and which other things also played a part.

DR. COOPER: If the Court wishes me to expound on why I think this man killed Dr. Verwoerd, I am afraid it is the only way in which I can answer this question. This is very complicated ground that we are on now, and it is impossible for me just to answer in a simple way, but perhaps just as a preliminary answer I believe that this man has feelings that throughout his life he has been frustrated, that he has been up against it. I believe that he feels that society as a whole is against him. And I believe that he, in his peculiar assessment, assessed Dr. Verwoerd as the head of society, I think he identified Dr. Verwoerd as the leader. I think he was fed up with society as a whole, and the obvious man to attack was the man that he considered to be the leader of the society in which he was.

DR. COOPER: I asked him whether he blamed Dr. Verwoerd for everything. No, he didn't care to go so far as to say that he blamed Dr. Verwoerd for everything.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How far did he go?

DR. COOPER: There was a big pause, there was a big 'or' and a hesitation, as there is in so many of the questions one put to him, but he said no, he cannot blame Dr. Verwoerd directly for what happened to him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How far did you probe this? You are a trained psychiatrist?

DR. COOPER: I probed it very far.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did you get anything at all beyond that he didn't kill him because he disliked him? Did you get any idea as to why he did kill him?

DR. COOPER: I spent a great deal of time on this question of "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" In fact I tried to give him the impression that in fact I was getting fed up. I said to him - this I said to him at my last interview again. - I said "Look, I am going to ask you a simple question: why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd? And I want a simple answer." He said "I don't know. I can't explain. It is complex. Frustrations, you know", and we got no answer to this question. I asked him this question many times. I probed as forcefully as I could, and I could not get him to tell me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and, with respect, I came to the conclusion that he doesn't really exactly know why he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If he killed him as a result of the machinations of a delusion and he was a deluded individual, wouldn't he immediately be able to tell you what his delusion was and why he killed him?

DR. COOPER: My answer is yes, provided that the reason for him killing the man was purely and simply in response to the delusion. Then I would say yes, he would.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand your giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it. He knows he did it but he doesn't know why and

JUDGE BEYERS: Again I am having difficulty with this, as you have just told me that at least - according to what he told you - for days, if not longer - at least for a matter of days he was considering and contemplating and premeditating this killing.

DR. COOPER: That is correct.

DR. COOPER: He pointed out to me that there are many people that he hasn't liked in this world, that there are many people that have made him fed up, that he has been resentful towards, and he said that his not liking Dr. Verwoerd, that his dislike of Dr. Verwoerd was not such that he would therefore kill Dr. Verwoerd, and that he in fact couldn't understand really why exactly he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE BEYERS: So this really had nothing to do with the tapeworm?

DR. COOPER: It did have something to do with the tapeworm, because the tapeworm has, in his mind, been instrumental in placing himself in a society and having been placed in that situation in society he is resentful of Dr. Verwoerd as an authority figure, and resentful in a personal sort of confused way to his policies... He said that he felt that the reasons underlying his killing of Dr. Verwoerd were far too complex. He couldn't explain to me why. And then he started talking about frustration, frustration, and the tapeworm, and not holding jobs, and having nowhere to live, and the whole thing became jumbled in his mind.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand you're giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is the only delusion he had, isn't it, that you discovered? You didn't discover any other delusion?

DR. COOPER: No, hut X....

JUDGE BEYERS: Except vague ones that "society isn't very nice to me"?

DR. COOPER: No, but I found other aspects of his mental disorder which in my opinion are equally important to simply his being deluded.

JUDGE BEYERS: I must put it again. The fact that he could not give you a definite answer when you pressed him as to why he had killed Dr. Verwoerd shows that he did not kill him as a result of any definite delusion. Am I wrong in that?

DR. COOPER: That is correct. He did not kill Dr. Verwoerd because he believed he had a tapeworm ... I believe delusion did play a role in the killing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he give you any other considerations that played a role, other than this political side?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What were the others?

DR. COOPER: The other consideration was his own personal feelings - what has happened to him personally. He talked in terms of: "Frustration, frustration, for years frustration, Doctor. You don't understand what it has meant to me this terrible frustration." Then one would say to him: "What frustration"? And he would say: "Well, for years I have just been wandering about. I have never been able to do anything." And then you'd say to him: "What has this got to do with killing Dr. Verwoerd?" "Well, you don't understand, it is frustration and tension building up."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused killed the deceased for political motives, would this factor strongly suggest that he is responsible for his actions?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say "No"?

DR. COOPER: That is what I said.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. COOPER: Because I believe that there was at least that there certainly was at least an element of political resentment in this man's mind. This man's background was such that he did in fact talk in terms of being opposed to certain aspects of Dr. Verwoerd's policy. He admitted that quite openly. It was clear to me that he had no liking for Dr. Verwoerd, and I asked him - I told him in fact that it seemed to me that this was a straightforward affair that he didn't like Dr. Verwoerd and therefore he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He pointed out to me that there are many people that he hasn't liked in this world, that there are many people that have made him fed up, that he has been resentful towards, and he said that his not liking Dr. Verwoerd, that his dislike of Dr. Verwoerd was not such that he would therefore kill Dr. Verwoerd, and that he in fact couldn't understand really why exactly he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he may have killed the Prime Minister because he blamed him for his own troubles? The accused's own troubles?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He never said that?

DR. COOPER: No. I put that specifically to him and he said he could not go so far as to say that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused perhaps say to you that he didn't know why he killed the deceased?

DR. COOPER: He did definitely say he didn't know why he killed the deceased.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you know that on the night of the day that Dr. Verwoerd was killed, the accused only gave political reasons for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd to Dr. Sakinofsky?

DR. COOPER: I think he gave predominantly political - he spoke about things political in attempting to explain what happened.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you have Dr. Sakinofsky's report there?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I've got Dr. Sakinofsky's report and if I can read just one paragraph that my eye happened to light on to explain why I have difficulty with this political angle. Dr. Sakinofsky reports: "He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a Cape to Cairo union which he (the patient) identified with the Commonwealth," I don't know what that means and I...

JUDGE BEYERS: I do.

DR. COOPER: If one wishes one can place some interpretations into it.

JUDGE BEYERS: I certainly can.

DR. COOPER: But if that was produced in an English examination it would be sent back as not a completely rational, coherent sentence. This is an intelligent man writing this, and he speaks all the time of these vague concepts.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I may interrupt, doctor, I don't think you read the whole paragraph. According to this report, it is reported as follows: He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a Cape to Cairo union which he (the patient) identified with the Commonwealth. He claimed that his mother, from whom he had been separated, was called Von Willem, and that she was a member of an overseas Royal family, and this idea he apparently connected with his concern for the Commonwealth. He stated that he had brooded over the weekend.

JUDGE BEYERS: Why does that come before me, Mr. van den Berg? If that witness is being called then he can say that that is what he had been told. Now you are putting it to somebody else for what purpose? It does not go in via this witness, I can tell you that.

JUDGE BEYERS: So you mean that he was emphatic that his idea of killing the Prime Minister arose in his mind only after he had taken the job?

DR. COOPER: He spoke in terms of vaguely associating his mind with thoughts of killing Dr. Verwoerd at odd times long before, for instance, when he was in England. He heard people talking and he thought vaguely, he says, about the killing of Dr. Verwoerd. But he is quite adamant that when he took this post it was not in any way related to his wanting to plan to kill Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE BEYERS: So in England already - which I presume now puts us not days but possibly years before the event, does it?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He was already - his mind was on this assassination of the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Except that it was on the assassination of a lot of people. He says he thought vaguely in terms of killing a lot of people. It was not an isolated thing.

JUDGE BEYERS: That may be. It is a fair correction you make to what you have said. But let me get back again: You said years ago, when he was still in England, he admitted to you that he had formed an idea (you said a vague one) of wanting to kill the Prime Minister of South Africa?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He then comes to this country and he takes a position in the House of Assembly?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: On the floor of the House, which is only by virtue of that position, he kills the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: He doesn't, you say, relate all this lot together, but I must.

DR. COOPER: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say he never did it?

DR. COOPER: No, he said that at the time of taking this post at the Assembly it was not with the intention of killing Dr. Verwoerd. That this final plan to kill Dr. Verwoerd came up in his mind after he took this position.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE FOR KILLING DR. VERWOERD, PART I

Dr. Cooper's testimony and his cross-examination by van den Berg constitute the most persuasive proof that the Attorney-General is incompetent, or unaware of Tsafendas's statements to the police, or deliberately does not use the evidence in his possession in order to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. According to Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas could not really understand or explain to him why he killed Dr. Verwoerd. Dr. Cooper believed that it was because of his deluded mind, because Dr. Verwoerd was head of a society which was against Tsafendas, that the tapeworm was partly responsible and that he was "frustrated." Nevertheless, Dr. Cooper admits that Tsafendas never said to him that the tapeworm told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd or that it influenced his decision to do it; it is Dr. Cooper's conclusion that the tapeworm delusion played a role in the killing. In addition, Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas said he "didn't know why he killed the deceased."

However, Tsafendas knew perfectly well why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, according to the two statements he gave to the police. He explained it very clearly and in detail, with no suggestion that he was deluded or psychotic. Tsafendas told the police that he was "anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist," that he had "a grudge against the South African government on account of its racial policies" and that he was in "sympathy with people fighting racialism." He told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was "disgusted with his policies" and hoped that by killing him "a change of policy would take place." He considered the Nationalist Government not to be "the real representative of all the South African people" and wanted to see a government that would represent all South Africans.⁴⁵⁹⁰ Tsafendas never said anything to the police about society being against him, or that he was frustrated or that he believed he had a tapeworm which controlled his life. What he told the police was exactly what he told people who knew him, which is what they testified to the police and to the author. Not a single one of those who were interviewed by the police or the author stated that Tsafendas ever told them what Dr. Cooper said that he told him.

The Attorney-General's comments showed that he had knowledge of Tsafendas's plan and his movements prior to the assassination. This information could have only been supplied to him by the police. This could have been done by giving him Tsafendas's statements or perhaps by a precis of them. If the Attorney-General had Tsafendas's statements, he would have seen all of the above and could have very easily used them to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. Again, we are not in position to know for sure what happened and whether van den Berg was in possession of this evidence.

The most astonishing thing of the cross-examination regarding Tsafendas's motive is the fact that van den Berg claims Tsafendas had given political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd and attempts to support his argument by using Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report on Tsafendas instead of Tsafendas's two statements to the police. The report stated clearly that Dr. Sakinofsky had found Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic based on what he was told by him, which were allegedly mostly his "political ideas." Dr. Sakinofsky was the only person in the world who ever heard Tsafendas mention any of these "political ideas" of his. This section from Dr. Sakinofsky's report is extensively analysed in his testimony later in this chapter and therefore it is not included here. However, it would be best for the reader to read the analysis before proceeding further in this section. It is there proven that everything Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky was a deliberate lie, the same way he lied to Dr. Cooper.

Therefore, instead of using Tsafendas's two statements where he had given clear and logical political reasons for the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, van den Berg attempts to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony about Tsafendas's motive by using a report where Tsafendas has also been diagnosed as schizophrenic. A report which, apart from the fact that it states that Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic, also does not contain Tsafendas's real political ideas as expressed by him to the police and to tens of witnesses! A report whose content's would appear as the words of a schizophrenic and not as a politically motivated man to anyone who might have heard it; but still van den Berg used it in an “attempt” to challenge Dr. Cooper.

⁴⁵⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

The astonishing thing with this move by the Attorney-General is that while he could have very easily broken down Dr. Cooper's testimony about the motive by using Tsafendas's own words, he used instead a report that contained “confused and deluded ideas,” similar to the ones mentioned by Tsafendas to Dr. Cooper. The result, instead of challenging Dr. Cooper's testimony, was to further reinforce the idea of Tsafendas as a schizophrenic but also, and perhaps more importantly, that he did not have any clear political thought! The damage for the Attorney-General could have been far bigger if he was not stopped from proceeding further with the report by Judge Beyers.

Instead of attempting to challenge the motive by giving Tsafendas's reasons as he told them to the police and which have been much quoted here – disgust with Dr. Verwoerd's racial policies, hopes that his death would change things etc. etc. - van den Berg claims the reasons were that Dr. Verwoerd was against the Cape to Cairo movement etc.! These are ideas that not a single witness ever heard Tsafendas mention while they were the exact opposite of his true ideas.

Van den Berg is shooting himself in the foot, and apparently deliberately. Was there any possibility that van den Berg really believed he could have challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony by using the report of Dr. Sakinofsky, a report where Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic? This must be unique in the history of law, where an Attorney-General attempts to challenge a diagnosis of schizophrenia by using a medical report that has found the accused to be schizophrenic. In addition, he attempts to challenge Tsafendas's supposedly deluded motive, but only presents more deluded and confused ideas about his motive. All this when van den Berg could have so easily challenged Dr. Cooper's testimony about motive by simply using Tsafendas's own two statements to the police.

None of Tsafendas's “political reasons” in Dr. Sakinofsky's report were really his own. More importantly, there couldn't have been a person who would have heard these reasons and would not have concluded that the person was not schizophrenic, apart from van den Berg. Even if we accept that van den Berg did not have in his possession Tsafendas's statements to the police, still he could surely not have believed he could challenge Dr. Cooper on the motive issue by using Dr. Sakinofsky's report. The above incident should be taught in a law schools about how to NOT cross-examine someone, although the author serious doubts if anyone in a fair trial in a democratic country would have even done what the Attorney-General did here.

Professor Alban Burke commented to the author about the motive and the 'delusion':

"It doesn't matter what the delusion is, what the content of the delusion is, the fact that he killed Dr. Verwoerd has got nothing to do with the tapeworm, because if he had heard voices, if the voice had said to him, 'kill Dr. Verwoerd', it was an idea that he already had, that was triggered by this hallucination, but he already had the idea that he was going to kill him. If he had been psychotic at the time that he was committing the murder, he would have been psychotic at the time of his arrest, because it doesn't disappear like that, so you would have picked up traces of that already in his statement. His statement [to the police] would not have made sense; you would have had a lot of irrelevant detail in there, so it is, again, not the picture of somebody who committed a crime whilst he was under, or in, a state of psychosis. I just want to give you a counter-argument on this, and it doesn't take anything of this away. The human brain does not create new information out of nothing, so let's say he had been exposed to stories of tapeworms, during a state of psychosis that story would have come out, that he could have blamed this on a tapeworm, but the motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd must have been there altogether, so whether he committed the crime whilst he was psychotic, or not, the motive must have been there. You don't suddenly decide, I don't like someone, when you're psychotic.

Whether he was psychotic or not, the motive was there before he was psychotic, so you can argue it a number of ways, whether he was psychotic or not doesn't really matter, but there was already the plan that he was going to ... or there was enough anger and hostility towards Dr. Verwoerd, for him to have created that. If he was a psychotic person, with murderous intent, there would have been other incidents of him attacking people, 'Don't look at me a strange way, don't follow me, I think you're a spy', whatever the case may be. There would have incidents of him, then, at least assaulting somebody else, which we don't find any evidence of, anywhere. So, if you say that Dr. Verwoerd is a dictator, yes he was; was he oppressing his people, yes, so by saying that Dr. Verwoerd is all these things, does not make him delusional. The fact that he killed Dr. Verwoerd still doesn't make him delusional. Assuming that he had an auditory hallucination that instructed him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, that could maybe have been the trigger for it, but the thinking, the planning, all of those things, were in place before he got the instruction to do it. He didn't walk into the parliamentary chamber that day and suddenly the voice came up and said, 'I must kill this person.'⁴⁵⁹¹

Furthermore, as we have already seen, the police gathered evidence during their investigation which supported Tsafendas's statements regarding his political ideas. They took statements from people who knew him, declaring that Tsafendas was a Communist and anti-colonialist, politically engaged and a strong opponent of Dr. Verwoerd's policies and of apartheid:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to "create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."⁴⁵⁹²
- Tsafendas himself had testified to the police that he was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942, that he was against apartheid and colonialism, that he had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and that he took part in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London.⁴⁵⁹³
- The South African police had FOUR files on Tsafendas because of his Communist beliefs and political activities.⁴⁵⁹⁴
- PIDE held a 130-page file on Tsafendas, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.⁴⁵⁹⁵ It opened in 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he was "suspected of distributing communist propaganda"⁴⁵⁹⁶ and went up to his release from PIDE custody on January 26, 1965 after spending three months in a cell in Beira accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while in reality preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence."⁴⁵⁹⁷
- PIDE had withheld from the South African police the fact that they had such a file, along ⁴⁵⁹¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴⁵⁹² Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁵⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁵⁹⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁵⁹⁵ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁶ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

with other information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,”⁴⁵⁹⁸ thus hiding the extent of Tsafendas’s political activities. However, the South African embassy in Lisbon was aware of all this and on September 7, the day after the assassination, informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans.” The communication said he had “never been convicted as courts have found him to be of unsound mind” and added, “if information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”⁴⁵⁹⁹

- Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of Immigration because of his Communist beliefs and activities.⁴⁶⁰⁰ This list was also in the possession of the Security Police.⁴⁶⁰¹
- The Department of Immigration had two files on Tsafendas:
 - a. “On file B.7771 there were, inter alia, references to Demitrios Tsafendakis’s alleged communist activities, as well as references to his unsuccessful applications for permanent residence. It is also evident from the file that he had been placed on the stop list.⁴⁶⁰²
 - b. “On file G.8226 there were references to his alleged communist activities, and detailed references to his unsuccessful applications of 1936, 1938, 1941, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1950 and 1959 to enter the Union of South Africa.”⁴⁶⁰³
- It was known to the South African police that Tsafendas was deported and exiled from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.⁴⁶⁰⁴

⁴⁵⁹⁸ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁵⁹⁹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁰⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁰¹ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

⁴⁶⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁰³ Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 20. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁰⁴ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas: Mystery man of parliament’; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; The Herald (Melbourne), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘The killer: Five passports and a record of subversion’;

- It was known that Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique by the Portuguese Public Security Police on November 16, 1964 and subsequently handed to PIDE accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.” It was also known that he had spent three months in custody being interrogated because of the accusations.⁴⁶⁰⁵
- It was known to the South African police that while he was in South Africa from 1939 to 1942 Tsafendas was “engaged actively in Communistic propaganda.”⁴⁶⁰⁶
- It was known that in 1938 in Mozambique he was dismissed from a job “owing to his Communist leanings” and that he was suspected of being “engaged in disseminating Communistic propaganda.”⁴⁶⁰⁷
- It was known that Tsafendas supported Mozambique’s independence from Portugal and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation.”⁴⁶⁰⁸
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement.⁴⁶⁰⁹
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Rev. Canon Collins.⁴⁶¹⁰
- Although PIDE had concealed important information about Tsafendas’s political activities, it confided in a report which it gave to the South African police that Tsafendas had admitted after being arrested on one occasion that he was “a partisan of the

Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dimitrio a Red, they alleged’; The Rhodesia Herald, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassin said to have been deported from P.E.A. for Communist connections.’

⁴⁶⁰⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁶⁰⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter I A, Paragraph 23. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁰⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁰⁸ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁶⁰⁹ The Guardian, 30 September 1966: 10, ‘Winding back’; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁶¹⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

independence of this province.” The same report also stated that “although, as above mentioned, TSAFENDAS is mentally deficient, the truth is you find in him an obvious spirit of rebellion against the Portuguese Administration, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique.”⁴⁶¹¹

- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He told the police that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin-Island because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pre-Russian.”⁴⁶¹²
- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”⁴⁶¹³ Later O’Ryan described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was ‘Hitler’s best student’ and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.⁴⁶¹⁴
- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”⁴⁶¹⁵
- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party

⁴⁶¹¹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁶¹² Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶¹³ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁴ Patrick O’Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶¹⁵ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African Government’s policy was “rotten” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”⁴⁶¹⁶

- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, “You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too.”⁴⁶¹⁷
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”⁴⁶¹⁸
- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as “Communist bastard.”⁴⁶¹⁹
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”⁴⁶²⁰ He suspected Tsafendas of stirring up disaffection among young non-whites in the Mangete Reserve. “I say this because during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion, because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable... He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”⁴⁶²¹
- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”⁴⁶²²
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr.

⁴⁶¹⁶ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁸ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶¹⁹ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶²⁰ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶²¹ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶²² Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

Verwoerd.”⁴⁶²³

- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁴⁶²⁴
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”⁴⁶²⁵
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”⁴⁶²⁶
- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.⁴⁶²⁷
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”⁴⁶²⁸
- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”⁴⁶²⁹
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”⁴⁶³⁰
- In July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already ⁴⁶²³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁴ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁵ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶²⁶ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁷ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁸ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁶²⁹ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

⁴⁶³⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁴⁶³¹ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁴⁶³²

- Reports from Mozambique which emerged after the assassination said that Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”⁴⁶³³
- Jorge Perestrelo, who met Tsafendas in Lisbon, told Diario Popular that “one could see how anxious he was to oppose the authorities.”⁴⁶³⁴

Nine witnesses told the author that Tsafendas believed the Whites in Mozambique, South Africa and Rhodesia had commandeered the land from its rightful owners. Thus these territories were “occupied lands” ruled by “occupiers” such as Dr. Verwoerd and Ian Smith. However, Tsafendas considered that Whites who accepted majority rule and opposed colonial government had the right to live there.⁴⁶³⁵

Eight more witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, Elias Constantaras, the first seven of them from the Eleni tanker, whose statements were not found in the NASA, maintained that they were interviewed by the South African police and testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator. They also testified that Tsafendas joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.⁴⁶³⁶

Six of the Eleni crew, Alachiotis, Billis, Kantas, Kambouris, Pouftis and Vasilakis, ⁴⁶³¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’

⁴⁶³² Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶³³ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘180-day prison for Tsafendas?’

⁴⁶³⁴ Cuttings from the Diario Popular of 9.9.66. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶³⁵ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶³⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

said they told the police that Tsafendas had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as justifiable because he was a tyrant and the oppressor of his people; exactly the same thing Tsafendas repeated thirty years later to the three priests.⁴⁶³⁷ The fact that Tsafendas said this just three days before the assassination adds strength to their claim. These six witnesses had also testified to the police, as Elias Constantaras had done,⁴⁶³⁸ that Tsafendas described Dr. Verwoerd as “Hitler’s best student” and that he spat at his photograph in a newspaper. None of the above statements was used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony, although they were in the possession of the police.

Several other witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well like Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikolas Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Helen Grispos, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nick Papadakis, Mary Eendracht, John and Antony Michaletos, Nick Augustides and Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student.”⁴⁶³⁹ Tsafendas kept characterising Dr. Verwoerd with those words as long as thirty years after the assassination.⁴⁶⁴⁰ Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas made no attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid. Tsafendas told Babiolakis one day that “Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar are fascist dictators and should be executed like Mussolini.”⁴⁶⁴¹ Six years after the assassination, Tsafendas proudly told anti-apartheid activist and Umkhonto we Sizwe fighter Alexander Moumbaris, a fellow prisoner in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, “I got τον Νταή τους” (“their tough guy” or “their champion,” but in a pejorative sense).⁴⁶⁴²

The vast majority of witnesses, some 90% of the forty-four who were interviewed by the author, testified that Tsafendas talked constantly about politics and that he was strongly against apartheid and a Communist. The rest had not discussed politics with him. Several witnesses, including Katerina Pnema, Mary Eendracht, Ira Kyriakakis, Antony, Irene and ⁴⁶³⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁶³⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁶³⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁶⁴⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁴¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁶⁴² Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

John Michaletos, Andreas Babiolakis and Mike Vlachopoulos characterised him as a “political animal.”⁴⁶⁴³ Nick Augustides, for instance, remembers Tsafendas “talking violently about politics and about the apartheid system ... he was very passionate about politics.”⁴⁶⁴⁴

Father Minas Constandinou told the author:

“Dimitris was the most political person I ever met. He lived and breathed politics. Most of his conversations were about politics... he was very Communist, very, very Communist. But you know he was not one of those Communists who just say they are Communists. Dimitris had read a lot about Communism and he practised and preached Communism, he did not just claim to be one... he was also anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid. I think above all, he was that. He was very much for the independence of Mozambique and actually, not just Mozambique, but all the colonies in Africa.

Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, ‘conquerors’ and ‘occupiers;’ he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be ‘occupied lands,’ conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying them to the Blacks.”⁴⁶⁴⁵

Another issue is the disclosure that Tsafendas formed the idea of killing Dr. Verwoerd while in England. This might be correct, or partly correct. Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou that he decided to “do something against apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd” upon reading about the Sharpeville massacre.⁴⁶⁴⁶ The massacre took place on March 1960 and Tsafendas was deported from England to Germany in December 1959, so presumably and according to his statement to the police he was in Germany at the time and not in England. However, he also mentioned to the police in his statement that while in England in discussions he had with anti-apartheid activists and leftists it was argued that the “South ⁴⁶⁴³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁶⁴⁴ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴⁶⁴⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁶⁴⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

African Prime Minister deserves to be shot.”⁴⁶⁴⁷

All the witness statements gathered by the police flatly contradicted Dr. Cooper's testimony, indeed challenged it at many points. Tsafendas never spoke to any of them about Dr. Verwoerd being responsible for his troubles, or that society was against him or that he was frustrated. Most importantly, Tsafendas, according to the witnesses, had a clear political mind and would have had no difficulty explaining why he acted as he did. Although several witnesses testified to the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, the word Communist was never heard during Dr. Cooper's testimony. Indeed, it was not to be heard throughout the entire summary trial and the fact that Tsafendas was deeply political would be concealed.

The Attorney-General could easily have challenged Dr. Cooper's statement and conclusions simply by reading Tsafendas's statement or by using some of the evidence mentioned above. However, he did nothing. Whether this was because of incompetence or because he was unaware makes no great difference to Tsafendas. The fact is that the evidence which would have proved Dr. Cooper wrong, or at least raised serious doubts, was not used. Instead van den Berg's cross-examination, though sounding aggressive, did not lead anywhere.

In 1994, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison Hospital and apartheid had collapsed, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis asked him, “Why did you do it, Mr. Tsafendas [kill Verwoerd]?” Tsafendas told the priest that he considered Verwoerd to be “a dictator and a tyrant” and that because he was the “brains behind apartheid,” he hoped his death would lead to the collapse of that racist policy. He knew everything would not be transformed overnight, but he hoped Verwoerd's “removal” would be a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid.⁴⁶⁴⁸

Tsafendas denounced the slain Prime Minister as a “monster” and an “evil person,” and set out in detail the steps Verwoerd had taken to establish his iron rule and earn his title, “the architect of apartheid.” Tsafendas told Bishop Ioannis that “Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant who oppressed his people. People were like slaves. He created apartheid... Even if you had lived here, you would not have been able to tell of its real extent [of apartheid] unless you had lived with Coloureds and Blacks. People were like slaves, they were only living to serve the Whites. Verwoerd did that. He was a monster, almost as bad as Hitler. I ⁴⁶⁴⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

call him 'Hitler's best student' because he copied some of Hitler's Nurnberg Laws and applied them to the Blacks here... Verwoerd would have done to the Blacks what Hitler did to the Jews if he did not need them to serve the Whites."⁴⁶⁴⁹

Tsafendas then argued that his act was "an act of profound moral principle," morally justifiable because Verwoerd was a tyrant and a dictator. He quoted at length from the works of Frantz Fanon, the Martinican revolutionary, philosopher and psychiatrist, who had argued that violence against colonialism was not only necessary in order to free the people, but also legitimate. Tsafendas spoke at length of his admiration for Fanon and urged both priests to read his works. He then said that since he had the opportunity to rid the world of such monster, it was his "duty," his "social responsibility" to do so, a "tyrannicide." Tsafendas also argued that if he had not acted, his guilt would have equalled that of Verwoerd, because any person who is aware of a crime and does not intervene, or worse allows it to continue when he has the power to end it, is as guilty as the criminal himself. Father Minas disagreed with all this and reminded him that he had killed a man and that was unacceptable and a mortal sin, no matter who the person was and what he had done. Tsafendas then put this question to Bishop Ioannis and Father Minas:

"Every day, you see a man you know committing a very serious crime for which millions of people suffer. You cannot take him to court or report him to the police, because he is the law in the country. Would you remain silent and let him continue with his crime, or would you do something to stop him?"⁴⁶⁵⁰

Both priests replied that they would have wanted to stop the crime but they would not have killed a person to stop it. Tsafendas said, "Then you would have been as guilty as Dr. Verwoerd. You are guilty not only when you commit a crime, but also when you do nothing to prevent it when you have the chance." The debate went on and on but Tsafendas refused to accept that he was wrong, producing arguments and counter-arguments to support his contention. He even used examples from history where tyrants and dictators were executed by the people. He characterised the lynching of the Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and the ⁴⁶⁴⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁵⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

killing by partisans of Reinhard Heydrich, Gestapo chief and one of the architects of the Holocaust, as justifiable and as tyrannicides.⁴⁶⁵¹

Father Minas refused to accept that such acts were morally justifiable and asked Tsafendas if he would also have killed Hitler to save the people. Tsafendas replied “Yes” without hesitation. The priest then asked if he could travel back in time whether he would have killed Hitler or Dr. Verwoerd as babies, so that they would never grow up to become the monsters they became. Tsafendas replied, “no” and justified it with an answer that took both priests by surprise. He told them that if he was able to go back in time, instead of killing the infant Hitler and the infant Verwoerd, he would have tried to raise the two babies in a different environment so that they would have been protected from the influences of the time which helped turn them into the monsters they became. Tsafendas then used Jan-Jacques Rousseau’s observation that “all people are good by nature, but corrupted by society.”⁴⁶⁵²

Father Minas had asked Tsafendas exactly that question (the infant Verwoerd) when he first visited him in prison the mid-1980s. He was so impressed by the answer, that when he first spoke to Bishop Ioannis about Tsafendas, the first thing he mentioned was his answer to the infant Hitler and infant Verwoerd question. When Bishop Ioannis put the identical question to him many years later, Tsafendas again gave him the same answer.⁴⁶⁵³ Tsafendas’s answers to the priests hardly fit with the way he was described by Dr. Cooper.

Sometimes, Tsafendas, in the presence of the priests, would proudly make a stabbing gesture and denounce Dr. Verwoerd yet again as “Hitler’s best student.” He told them that at first, he intended to kidnap the Prime Minister and offer to exchange him for political prisoners. When he realised that this was not possible, he considered placing a bomb in Parliament to kill all the MPs. However, he dismissed this idea because journalists and other innocent people and the only “good” MP, Helen Suzman, could also have died.⁴⁶⁵⁴ Tsafendas always referred to his killing of Dr. Verwoerd as “the execution.” He refused to use the word ⁴⁶⁵¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁵² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁵³ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁵⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

assassination. When the priests referred to “the assassination,” Tsafendas would invariably correct them, saying, “the execution!”⁴⁶⁵⁵

Tsafendas also always maintained to Liza Key that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons; because he was an “immoral man” and “disagreed with his policies” as he specifically told her.⁴⁶⁵⁶ Over the four years that she visited him in the Sterkfontein Hospital (1995-1999), he never told her anything to make her think that he could have been insane. She never doubted his sanity.⁴⁶⁵⁷

It should be noted here that on October 9, 2015, the sixteenth anniversary of Tsafendas's death, Rev. Ioannis Tsafaridis, then Bishop of the Greek-Orthodox Church in Mozambique (now Bishop in Zambia and Malawi), described Tsafendas as “the Greek Che Guevara.” The bishop was laying the foundation stone for the church of Saint Dionysius, also to serve as a Greek Orthodox missionary centre, at Murakela village in Nangoma Murumbi, North Mozambique. Reminding the congregation that it was Tsafendas's anniversary, Bishop Ioannis went on to describe him as the “man who killed apartheid,” as “a modern Greek hero who wanted to set the people of Mozambique and South Africa free,” “a man who wanted to liberate South Africa and Mozambique from the oppressors,” “an idealist,” “a concerned man about the people's sufferings,” and as “a humble man, a man with dignity,” while he described Verwoerd's assassination as “tyrannicide.” Finally, the bishop said that the new church was “in the memory of the revolutionary Dimitri Tsafendas.”⁴⁶⁵⁸

Furthermore, nine days later, on October 18, 2015, Rev. Ioannis Tsafaridis, led a memorial service for Tsafendas in the Greek Orthodox Church in Maputo. The service was announced in the Press and by posters distributed throughout the city in which Bishop Ioannis heralded Tsafendas as “The Idealist.” During the service, Bishop Ioannis declared that Tsafendas was “was not an ordinary man, but a man who gave up his life for a principle and for the good of his fellow citizens... an idealist who removed a tyrant ... a freedom-fighter who struggled for the independence of Mozambique and against apartheid.” He said that Tsafendas “laid a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid” and that his actions “were ⁴⁶⁵⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁵⁶ Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

⁴⁶⁵⁷ Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁶⁵⁸ Dimelas (Times of Change) (2015) “Ο πρώτος ναός στη μνήμη του Έλληνα «φονιά του απαρτχάιντ»” (The first church in memory of the Greek “assassin of apartheid”). Retrieved from: <http://www.thetoc.gr/koinwnia/article/o-prwtos-naos-sti-mnimi-tou-ellina-fofia-tou-apartxaint>; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 18 October 2015.

borne out of selflessness and for the public good.” He also said that although he never got the recognition he deserved, Tsafendas did not care that he was not hailed as a hero; according to his conscience, he did the right thing, regardless of what others might think. The bishop quoted Tsafendas as saying, “Do a good thing and then throw it in the sea; when you do a good thing, you don’t go around advertising it.” Bishop Ioannis concluded by saying that Tsafendas opened the “door of freedom” in South Africa and that “Mozambique and South Africa should recognise his efforts and stop believing apartheid’s lies.”⁴⁶⁵⁹

Finally, Rev. Seraphim Kykkotis, currently Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church in Zimbabwe and Angola and former Archbishop of Johannesburg and Pretoria, never met Tsafendas. However, he was very impressed from what he heard about him from the priests who were visiting him in prison and in the hospital, as well as Greeks who knew him in South Africa and elsewhere. Thus, Bishop Seraphim, in his 2013 book about Nelson Mandela (Αναφορές στο Νομπελίστα Νέλσον Μαντέλα), praised Tsafendas and his act. He characterised Tsafendas as “A Greek soul, a brave Cretan who raised in his stature the dignity of humanity against apartheid” and described his act as “heroic.” He concluded about Tsafendas that “people in his time called him a murderer, while others thought that he was crazy... However, his motives were absolutely pure: he was a selfless fighter for people’s dignity who acted only out of love, to protect people’s rights.”⁴⁶⁶⁰

TSAFENDAS’S MOTIVE, PART II: DR. VERWOERD’S MEETING WITH CHIEF JONATHAN

JUDGE BEYERS: There was the political motivation; is there anything else that made up this complex of his intention to kill?

DR. COOPER: Yes. Well, again, this was, if you like to call it, a political thing again, but in my mind it was an irrational political thing. I recall that the question of Dr. Verwoerd’s meeting with Jonathan, he says, came into it. Now, when one asks him exactly in what way it came into it, how it came into it, what this meeting had to do with his killing Dr. Verwoerd, one is again confronted with a very vague account, but one gathers that his idea concerning that meeting was that he felt that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population in this country, and he felt that Chief Jonathan was not truly representative of the non-European population in this country, and in some rather muddled perplexed way that seems to upset the accused and in his words, he says, that might have had something to do with it. But one cannot from that deduce that the accused killed Dr. Verwoerd because of that meeting. But his thoughts revolving around this meeting further muddled his mind, further confused his feelings and ideas about the political situation, and apparently contributed in some way to the mass of irrational thinking that collected in his mind and eventually burst forth in this aggressive act.

⁴⁶⁵⁹ Press Release of the Orthodox Metropolis of Mozambique, 18 October 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 18 October 2015.

⁴⁶⁶⁰ Bishop Seraphim Kykkotis, 2013: 47.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE FOR KILLING DR. VERWOERD, PART II

The above short but crucial testimony from Dr. Cooper is a good example of what was happening in the summary trial. Dr. Cooper said Tsafendas told him that "he felt that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population in this country." That is a very, very important statement.

What Tsafendas told the police in his statement of September 11, 1966 was that he believed "Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the Nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government." Tsafendas did not say that Dr. Verwoerd was not truly representative of the White population of South Africa, but that he was not representative of all the people of South Africa. He also said that the Nationalist Government, formed from Dr. Verwoerd's party, was not representative of all the South African people.

The first important point here is that the Attorney-General again does not make any attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's statement, which has a completely different meaning from what Tsafendas told the police. The Attorney-General could easily have challenged Dr. Cooper's statement just by reading out Tsafendas's statement. There is a massive difference between someone who is representative of the white population and someone who is representative of all the population. The Attorney-General either is not aware of Tsafendas's police statement or chose to ignore it and let Dr. Cooper's version pass unchallenged. A statement such as Dr. Cooper's, along with many that will follow, including some in the media, portray Tsafendas as completely different to the person he really is. They show him as a man who supported apartheid or disagreed with it for the wrong reasons, a man with confused political ideas.

What Tsafendas said in his statement, that Dr. Verwoerd was not representative of all South African people, clearly states his opposition to Dr. Verwoerd and to his government. What Dr. Cooper said, that Tsafendas believed Dr. Verwoerd did not truly represent South Africa's Whites, suggests Tsafendas accepted racial divisions. Tsafendas's statement to the police on this matter is compatible with statements taken by the police, and separately by the author, from people who knew Tsafendas's thinking. Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd a "dictator" long after the assassination to people like Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, but also before the assassination to Patrick O'Ryan, Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Elias Constantaras, Nick Papadakis, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nikolaos Kambouris, Katerina Pnema, Michalis Vasilakis and many others.

As for the statement which Dr. Cooper alleges Tsafendas made, we do not know what Tsafendas's exact words were. It is possible that he said what Dr Cooper claimed he said, perhaps in an attempt to mislead the psychiatrist about his true political ideas. It is also possible that Dr. Cooper misunderstood what Tsafendas said. Finally, it is possible that Dr. Cooper changed Tsafendas's statement and replaced his words "all South African people" with the "the White population" to support the defence's line. The author is not in position to know what happened for sure, but the fact is that another inaccurate statement by Dr. Cooper regarding Tsafendas's character and political ideology was accepted by the State when it would have been easy not only to challenge it, but to break it down.

It is also worth raising the possibility that Tsafendas is lying about the meeting in question being a motive. He told the police that the "idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly."⁴⁶⁶¹ Tsafendas also told two witnesses that he decided to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd as soon as he got the job in the Parliament.⁴⁶⁶² The author is not in position to know whether Tsafendas was aware at the time of the forthcoming meeting, but it is likely that he was not. However, it is possible that he was aware of the meeting in advance since he read the newspapers every day but also because he was working at the Parliament. It is a fact though, that Tsafendas never mentioned this meeting as a motive to any of the witnesses he spoke to about the assassination.

⁴⁶⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Although the police had ample evidence to prove that Dr. Cooper's statement was inaccurate, the Attorney-General did not use it. Again, we are not in position to know whether this was from incompetence, or a deliberate attempt to conceal Tsafendas's real political ideas, or because he did not have the information. The result was that another false statement by Dr. Cooper was accepted by the court and subsequently by the public.

TSAFENDAS'S PLANNING OF THE ASSASSINATION

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was it weeks before he did it that he conceived the intention of committing this crime?

DR. COOPER: I gathered from him it was at least several days.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: From what he told you, when did he say he wanted to kill the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I can't answer that. I just got from him that he had vaguely in his mind planned to kill him, and then, on that particular day he decided that this was now going to be the time he was going to do it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he tell you that he wanted to kill the Prime Minister on the 3rd September?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he originally wanted to shoot the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he told me that he had originally tried to buy a revolver and that he had bought some sort of gas pistol but that it did not function properly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he arranged to buy a Beretta pistol?

DR. COOPER: I don't recall the name Beretta, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he say that he had arranged to buy a Beretta pistol from a seaman on the tanker Eleni?

DR. COOPER: He did give me a vague, garbled account of his thoughts and the happenings on that vessel. He did talk vaguely in terms of references made on that boat to ill-feeling concerning the political policies of Dr. Verwoerd, and he did tell me of thoughts crossing his mind concerning the killing of Dr. Verwoerd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused say that he waited for his salary at the end of August, 1966, before buying the pistol?

DR. COOPER: No. He didn't tell me that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he tell you that he intended escaping on the tanker Eleni after shooting the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: Yes, he did tell me, again in vague terms, of how he contemplated escaping on this ship. This was when he was thinking in terms of the shooting, not when he was apparently thinking in terms of the stabbing. He was very adamant that he had no plan of escape although thought of escape after committing this act.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he had obtained American dollars at the bank in order to purchase the pistol?

DR. COOPER: Yes, I do recall him saying something about American dollars.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused say that he changed his plans after he had purchased the gas pistol, which was not suited to his purpose?

DR. COOPER: No, he didn't really talk to me in terms of plans; when he discussed the eventual stabbing with me he didn't really know why he did what he did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused tell you that he...

JUDGE BEYERS: I am sorry, I do not understand that. I have asked you that before, and I don't understand it now. You did tell me that in his telling you about killing the Prime Minister there was a political motive as well as other things probably. Didn't you tell me that he did not like his politics?

DR. COOPER: He told me that he didn't like his politics.

JUDGE BEYERS: And wasn't that associated with his killing?

DR. COOPER: It was associated with it but only indirectly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I cannot understand you are giving an answer and saying he didn't give you any reason for doing so. I cannot understand that answer.

DR. COOPER: I say that because I repeatedly asked him to try and explain to me why he killed Dr. Verwoerd, and at no time was he able to offer me any explanation. When I am talking about these political issues, these are things I elicited from him quite apart from this question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" He did not tell me about his political feelings directly in relation to my question of: "Why did you kill Dr. Verwoerd?" When I asked him that question, at no time was I able to elicit any coherent account of why he thought he did it. He said, in fact, that he doesn't know why he did it. He can hardly believe that he did do it. He knows he did it but he doesn't know why and...

JUDGE BEYERS: Again I am having difficulty with this, as you have just told me that at least - according to what he told you - for days, if not longer, at least for a matter of days, he was considering and contemplating and premeditating this killing.

DR. COOPER: That is correct.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think you told me that he went and bought the knives on that morning?

DR. COOPER: That was what he told me.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I don't follow why he told you that he does not know why he killed him, because he must have been thinking about it for days.

DR. COOPER: I know, but this is the point, he premeditated it apparently from what he said, and he did it. But when one asks him why he did it, he cannot gather a coherent system of ideas in his mind to explain why he did it. He thought of doing it apparently, he planned to do it, he did it. But why he did it, what was in his mind concerning the doing of it, this he was unable to tell me despite repeated interrogations.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S PLANNING OF THE ASSASSINATION

The surprising thing here is not Dr. Cooper's testimony, but the cross-examination by the Attorney-General. Van den Berg demonstrates knowledge of Tsafendas's movements prior to the assassination, information which could only have come from Tsafendas himself and presumably from the statements he gave to the police. However, up to this point, van den Berg seemed not to have access to the Tsafendas's statements since he did not use any of the information in them to challenge Dr. Cooper's statements, especially with regards to his motive and the tapeworm.

The question therefore is, where did he get the information from? If it was from Tsafendas's statements to the police, why did not he use the rest of the information to challenge Dr. Cooper? Of course, there could be other explanations as to how van den Berg got the information, perhaps from the police but possibly only on specific areas, the rest being withheld. It is also conceivable of course that van den Berg only used those parts from the statement he wanted and deliberately did not mention the rest in an attempt not to reveal Tsafendas's real motive. Whatever the explanation, the fact that van den Berg used only parts of Tsafendas's statements is secondary to the main issue, being why he failed to challenge Dr. Cooper by citing Tsafendas's statement with regard to why he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

TSAFENDAS'S "NEW RACE" THEORY AND BEING UNSYMPATHETIC TOWARDS COLOUREDS AND NATIVES

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused perhaps say to you that he didn't know why he killed the deceased?

DR. COOPER: He did definitely say he didn't know why he killed the deceased

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: he tell you that he may have killed the deceased because he blamed the deceased for all his troubles - the accused's troubles?

DR. COOPER: No, he did not word it in that way.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't the accused tell you that he believed, as he called it, in evolution?

DR. COOPER: Evolution? Yes, he did talk in terms of evolution.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And didn't he explain that by this he meant that members of all the races in South Africa should be free to intermarry so that a new race could develop?

DR. COOPER: Well, he gave me an exposition on evolution and its relation to the...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Please reply to my question?

DR. COOPER: But he didn't tell me the job properly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Did the accused explain that members of all races in South Africa should be free to intermarry so that a new race could develop?

DR. COOPER: He put forward that view, as well at another time putting forward a view that he felt unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and natives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And didn't he tell you that he was against the Immorality Act?

DR. COOPER: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he say that he thought that Dr. Verwoerd was standing in the way of this evolution?

DR. COOPER: I don't recall him saying that in so many words but I accept that he implied something of that sort.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he may have killed the Prime Minister because he blamed him for his own troubles the accused's own troubles?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He never said that?

DR. COOPER: No. I put that specifically to him and he said he could not go so far as to say that.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS BEING UNSYMPATHETIC TOWARDS COLOUREDS AND NATIVES

Here Dr. Cooper makes the most extraordinary of his statements - that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards South Africa's Coloureds and natives. Firstly, the Attorney-General himself is aware that Tsafendas applied to be reclassified as Coloured since he had included this information in his memorandum of October 3, 1966, regarding Tsafendas.⁴⁶⁶³ Tsafendas had given as one of the reasons for his application the fact that he regarded himself as a ⁴⁶⁶³ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

Coloured.⁴⁶⁶⁴ This was hardly the act of a man who did not like such people.

In addition, Tsafendas testified to the police that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, anti-slavery, that he had “a grudge against the South African government on account of its racial policies,” that he was in “sympathy with people fighting racialism” and that he had participated in anti-apartheid demonstrations.⁴⁶⁶⁵ He also wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power”⁴⁶⁶⁶ and he “opposed every decision taken by the South African government.”⁴⁶⁶⁷ For a more detailed account of Tsafendas’s political ideas and preferences, see the references in Dr. Cooper’s testimony regarding his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd.

Out of approximately two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission, not one said anything to agree with Dr. Cooper’s statement. On the contrary, several people told the police that Tsafendas was friendlier to Coloureds than to Whites and that he supported them:

- Patrick O’Ryan testified that Tsafendas was “favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.”⁴⁶⁶⁸
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”⁴⁶⁶⁹
- A report by Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-White.”⁴⁶⁷⁰
- Col. McIntyre of the South African Police wrote in his report regarding Tsafendas on October 3 that Tsafendas told “several people that he was upset because he was not ⁴⁶⁶⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 39. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁶⁶⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁶⁶ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁶⁷ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁶⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁶⁶⁹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁰ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

classified as a Coloured.”⁴⁶⁷¹

- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁴⁶⁷²
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several White workers”⁴⁶⁷³ but he never argued with Coloureds.⁴⁶⁷⁴
- Jose Baltazar told police that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached.”⁴⁶⁷⁵
- Gladstone Dunn testified that Tsafendas had told him that the South African Government “was not playing fair with the non-Whites. He said that the wages paid to non-Whites was very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation.”⁴⁶⁷⁶
- Meldon Tillek said Tsafendas told him that “the White people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people.”⁴⁶⁷⁷
- Ralph Lighton testified that Tsafendas “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans.”⁴⁶⁷⁸
- According to Nikolaas Nel, Tsafendas “was certainly unpopular among White workers” and “adapted more to the non-Whites.”⁴⁶⁷⁹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired

⁴⁶⁷¹ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁷² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁶⁷³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁴ Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁵ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁶ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁷ Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁷⁹ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, "I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners."⁴⁶⁸⁰

- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas "said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me. I noticed that he was very familiar with the coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him."⁴⁶⁸¹

The next day in the summary trial, Peter Daniels, a defence witness, testified in court that Tsafendas "preferred to be amongst the Coloured community" and that "he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man."⁴⁶⁸² Although all this evidence gathered by the police proved that Dr. Cooper's statement was inaccurate, the Attorney-General made no attempt to challenge it. Again, we do not know if this was through lack of access to the information or incompetence or if he decided it would be better for Tsafendas to appear "unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the natives."

The author asked forty-four people who knew Tsafendas well about Dr. Cooper's statement that he was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds. No-one agreed, indeed all stated that the reality was the exact opposite. These are some of the responses from people who knew him best:

- Katerina Pnema said Dr. Cooper "does not know what he is talking about. Dimitri always defended the Coloureds and the Blacks from the Whites. He was fired from jobs because he supported them."⁴⁶⁸³
- Father Michalis Visvinis told the author that Dr. Cooper "could not have been more wrong."⁴⁶⁸⁴
- Alexander Moumbaris characterised the comment as "absurd" and a "lie."⁴⁶⁸⁵

⁴⁶⁸⁰ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁶⁸¹ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁶⁸² Peter Daniels testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁶⁸³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁶⁸⁴ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁶⁸⁵ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

- Antony Michaletos laughed at the suggestion and said “What!” in disbelief when he heard about it. He described the suggestion as “preposterous.” He added, “This is real slander. Dimitris was teaching here in Lourenço Marques English to Black children for free, for free, because he wanted to, he wanted to help them because they were poor.”⁴⁶⁸⁶
- Father Nikola Banovic told the author: “Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”⁴⁶⁸⁷
- Father Minas Constandinou told the author: “I would not say that Dimitris was more or less sympathetic towards a race, for him all the people were the same and he believed they should all have equal rights. He was very much against the injustices, he wanted to correct them if he could. If, let us assume, apartheid was the other way around and the Blacks were treating the Whites they way were treated by them during apartheid, Dimitris would still have opposed it and fought against it.”⁴⁶⁸⁸
- Fotini Gavasiadis called the statement “ridiculous,” stating that Tsafendas was “the exact opposite.”⁴⁶⁸⁹
- Mary Eendracht said she was completely surprised to hear such a statement. “Are you serious? I never heard that. It can’t be true. No one would have said that about Dimitri.”⁴⁶⁹⁰
- Andreas Babiolakis said, “These people [Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg] must have been hallucinating, not Dimitri, if this is what they said about him.”⁴⁶⁹¹
- Ira Kyriakakis told the author that Tsafendas was “an idealist. He was very passionate about politics; he despised racism and colonialism and wanted Mozambique to get rid of the Portuguese; he was very strong in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁴⁶⁹²
- Michalis Vasilakis said Dr. Cooper’s statement was “one of the biggest nonsense I have heard in my life.”⁴⁶⁹³

⁴⁶⁸⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

⁴⁶⁸⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁶⁸⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁶⁸⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁶⁹⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁶⁹¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁶⁹² Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁶⁹³ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

It should also be noted that even David Bloomberg told the author that Tsafendas “felt Coloured, and he was more comfortable with the Coloured people, and he had been living with Coloured people in Cape Town.”⁴⁶⁹⁴ In addition, Tsafendas got into a fight with Nick Vergos after he supported two Black workers who were exploited by Vergos.⁴⁶⁹⁵ Finally, Tsafendas took some of the Eleni seamen to a township in Cape Town where Blacks lived in an effort to show them at first-hand how some people lived under apartheid. He had also urged the seamen to spend as little money as possible while in Cape Town in order not to contribute to South Africa’s economy.⁴⁶⁹⁶ These are hardly the attitudes of someone who was unsympathetic towards Coloureds. It seems unlikely that Dr. Cooper was right of Tsafendas’s ideological and political beliefs after six hours of discussion with him rather than people who knew him all his life, or who lived with him for many months.

TSAFENDAS’S “NEW RACE” THEORY

Regarding Tsafendas’s “new race” theory, Dr. Cooper and van den Berg talked about it as if Tsafendas had an insane idea about creating a new race of humans. In fact, what he meant is not clear from what he told the police and the genesis of the statement was published in the Press in a distorted form. John Marvis also spoke about it in his statement to Col. van Wyk on September 20, 1966, but did not give all the details.⁴⁶⁹⁷

Tsafendas spoke about a “new race” one evening in the Scala Café in Beira.⁴⁶⁹⁸ According to Nick Papadakis and Andreas Babiolakis, who were present, they were all discussing politics. Tsafendas believed that the world would become a better and safer place if there were no countries, no religions, and all people were the same colour. When asked how the last of the three could be achieved, Tsafendas had jokingly said that “everyone should have sex with someone of a different colour so a new race will be created where everyone will be the same colour or at least they will all be mixed! Only then will there be no ⁴⁶⁹⁴ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

⁴⁶⁹⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁶⁹⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁶⁹⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁶⁹⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

racism and discrimination anymore!”⁴⁶⁹⁹ It was clear to them that Tsafendas said the sex part as a joke but that he was serious about the rest of his theory.⁴⁷⁰⁰ Many a serious idea has been told in such a way as to indicate it is intended as half-truth and half-joke. When Barack Obama was asked by Stephen Colbert why he got the Nobel Peace Prize, he replied, “to be honest, I still don’t know.”⁴⁷⁰¹

Tsafendas would later repeat broadly the same theory and comment about sex in the same conversational context, still half-serious and half-joking, to several people. He repeated the same idea about the three things that, according to him, needed to be done for the world to become a better place; he never told anyone only about the sex part (the sex part was always a part of the three and not a separate issue). He truly believed that the only way to eradicate racism was to dismantle barriers such as colour, religion and national borders; he believed this until he died.⁴⁷⁰² It was hardly an insane notion. Sir Antony Sher, the British-South African actor and playwright, considered Tsafendas’s idea a “rather wonderful ideal for the future.”⁴⁷⁰³

It is worth mentioning here that in 1998, the American actor and film director Warren Beatty produced, wrote, directed and starred in a film titled Bulworth. The movie’s hero, US Senator Bulworth, played by Beatty, declared that in order to eradicate racism, “[we should] eliminate white people, black people, brown people, yellow people...get rid of ‘em all! All we need is a voluntary, free spirited, open-ended program of procreative racial deconstruction. Everybody just gotta keep fuckin’ everybody till they’re all the same colour.” This is effectively what Tsafendas said thirty-five years earlier. Audiences laughed and no-one questioned Warren Beatty’s sanity. The film was described by the New York Times as a “political satire with jubilant wit and energy,”⁴⁷⁰⁴ and the prominent critic Roger Ebert said, “You realize that if all politicians were as outspoken as Bulworth, the fragile structure of our ⁴⁶⁹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁷⁰⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁷⁰¹ Saul, H. (The Independent), 18 October 2016, “Barack Obama on Stephen Colbert: ‘To be honest, I still don’t know what my Nobel Peace Prize was for.’” Retrieved from <http://www.independent.co.uk/news/people/barack-obama-stephen-colbert-nobel-peace-prize-a7367321.html>

⁴⁷⁰² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁷⁰³ Unsworth (Sunday Times), 21 September 2003, ‘A play about assassination, a tapeworm and notions of madness.’

⁴⁷⁰⁴ Maslin (The New York Times), 15 May 1998, ‘White bread senator turns homeboy.’

system would collapse, and we would have to start all over again ... It's better when Bulworth abandons political correctness and says what he thinks, however reckless, as when he theorizes that the solution to racial difficulties is for everybody to bleep everybody else until we're all the same colour."⁴⁷⁰⁵ People applauded the line when it was delivered by Beatty, but Tsafendas was ridiculed for saying the same thing thirty-two years earlier.

Furthermore, Tsafendas's comment was taken out of context. Even worse, the rest of his thinking, the eradication of countries and religions, was removed and only the part about the "new race" was kept, in order to present his theory as the product of lunacy. It is possible that Tsafendas did not explain his beliefs to Dr. Cooper in detail and did not include the other two "necessities" for a better world, and that was why the doctor only mentioned this. However, Tsafendas never told anyone about the race issue as a separate issue, always mentioning it as part of his wider beliefs.

We should remember here that Tsafendas had told the police in his statement that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the representative of all South Africans. He had repeated the same to more than fifty witnesses and had repeatedly called Dr Verwoerd a dictator. Nevertheless, Dr. Cooper told the court that Tsafendas had told him that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of the White South Africans. None of the witnesses questioned by the police, the Commission or the author mentioned that Tsafendas ever said anything like this, while more than fifty testified that he had told them the same thing he told the police. Although it is possible that Tsafendas made such comments to Dr. Cooper, the possibility that the doctor deliberately slightly paraphrased Tsafendas's words or took them out of context in order to support the defence's line cannot be excluded.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EFFICIENCY AS MESSENGER

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I put it to you that he performed his work in the House of Assembly normally and efficiently, would you agree with that?

DR. COOPER: I would like to know details of that. I would say that a highly intelligent man performing as a messenger in court may well be able to perform fairly reasonably, but I would suspect in this man that he didn't in fact perform all that reasonably. I would be surprised, in fact, that he performed altogether satisfactorily.

⁴⁷⁰⁵ Roger Ebert, 22 May 1998, 'Bulworth.' Retrieved from: <http://www.rogerebert.com/reviews/bulworth-1998>

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But he was a messenger in the Press Gallery, and if he didn't perform his duties efficiently wouldn't he have been dismissed?

DR. COOPER: I understand that he was only there for a short time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was there from the 1st August to the 6th September?

DR. COOPER: Yes. I must draw a conclusion from this that he wasn't completely and obviously hopeless and inefficient in his duties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But if there is evidence that he performed his duties normally and efficiently, you won't deny that?

DR. COOPER: If the evidence is such, I must accept it.

COMMENTS ON THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S STATEMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EFFICIENCY AS MESSENGER

The Attorney-General here does something strange. He suggests that Tsafendas's work in the House of Assembly was efficient and normal. He seems to know this for a fact, but he doesn't adduce any evidence and leaves the issue hanging. This might not look quite odd until we see what happens the next day. With the topic now introduced by van den Berg for debate and discussion, the defence took full advantage. Gerald Shaw, a defence witness and parliamentary correspondent for the Cape Times, testified that Tsafendas's work was not satisfactory. Even though this contradicted the Attorney-General's reference to Tsafendas's efficiency, van den Berg did nothing to support his claim and the evidence he mentioned never made an appearance in court. We will look at this case in greater detail in the following day's proceedings.

Going back to the evidence of efficiency that van den Berg referred to, five messengers from the Assembly testified to the police and the Commission of Enquiry. They were Piet Burger⁴⁷⁰⁶ the Chief Messenger, senior messengers Sydney Wiehand⁴⁷⁰⁷ and Petrus ⁴⁷⁰⁶ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁷⁰⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Schuin,⁴⁷⁰⁸ all three of whom interviewed and appointed Tsafendas, and another two messengers, Fred Feinauer⁴⁷⁰⁹ and Felix Miles.⁴⁷¹⁰ None of the five stated that Tsafendas was not efficient or that they had noticed anything wrong with him. On the contrary, Schuin described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and “same as any other person that had worked there.”⁴⁷¹¹ Sydney Wiehand said that for a person to be appointed as a messenger, “he must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he’s got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty.”⁴⁷¹² Since he was appointed, Tsafendas must have fulfilled all of these conditions.

Wiehand testified that he never received any complaints about Tsafendas’s work, but he was told by fellow messenger, Pienaar, that Tsafendas was eating a lot, then sitting and sleeping. However, Wiehand did not see this as a complaint, testifying that most messengers, including himself, ate and then slept until they were required to work again. In fact, Pienaar’s comment had more to do with his observation of Tsafendas’s eating habits; he thought he was overeating.⁴⁷¹³

The messengers’ statements should have been known to the Attorney-General, but none of them was used to support his argument that Tsafendas’s work was efficient. More surprisingly, none of Tsafendas’s colleagues at Parliament was asked to testify at the summary trial. The State could certainly have used their testimonies to support its argument about Tsafendas’s efficiency and challenged Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis. It would also have been useful also for all those who examined Tsafendas to speak to the messengers, not only to find out what type of man he was, but to hear their opinions as to his mental state shortly before the assassination. After all, the messengers had seen him virtually every day for five weeks.

⁴⁷⁰⁸ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁷⁰⁹ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁷¹⁰ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

⁴⁷¹¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁷¹² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁷¹³ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S NO ESCAPE PLAN

ASSESSOR: You mean he never planned an escape?

DR. COOPER: He not only never planned an escape, he says he gave no thought to escape. The question of escape, in fact, did not enter his mind, and from what he did and the way he did it, it does seem to support that. It seems to me that anybody who had given it any thought should have realised that there was no possible hope of escape.

JUDGE BEYERS: But a lot of rational people have done things with no hope of escape. Every Kamikaze pilot who went down on an American warship had no hope of escape, and he wasn't a madman.

DR. COOPER: Yes. This is related to a fanatical patriotic drive that some of these people had during the war. But I don't believe that this is applicable in this case at all.

ASSESSOR: You said a little while ago in your opinion the accused has never given the eventualities of this crime a thought. I think you said that as a fact he never got as far as thinking about it. Did you perhaps ask him whether he had thought about escape?

DR. COOPER: Oh yes. I asked him in some detail as to whether he thought about the escape; whether he thought he had a chance of escape; what sort of plans of escape he visualised, and he was persistent - apologetically I may say - he quite apologetically said: "I am sorry, my mind is blank about that. My mind was blank about that. I just never gave the question of escape any thought at all, I just didn't think one way or the other about escaping," Following on this, I said to him: "Then does this mean that you decided to sacrifice yourself, because I assume that if a man decides that he is not worried about escape, this means that he is going to sacrifice himself? He was adamant. He said: "No, there was no question of sacrifice." He says his mind was blank. He did not think one way or the other.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S NO ESCAPE PLAN

The above testimony is another example that the Attorney-General was either not in possession of Tsafendas's statement or incompetent. Again he makes no attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony, even though Tsafendas's statement to the police plainly contradicts it. Tsafendas did give thought to his escape and told the police about his plan: "I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before Tuesday when I stabbed the Prime Minister ... I never thought about hiding. If I had to do the job with a knife, I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught." In another statement to the police, Tsafendas said "I did not care about the consequences, for what would happened to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister."⁴⁷¹⁴

Dr. Cooper also seems unable to understand that a man with deep political convictions would proceed to such a desperate act without having an escape plan. The Court's example about Kamikaze pilots is not irrelevant to Tsafendas's case, although it is not identical. Tsafendas, too, wanted to kill the enemy without regard to the personal consequences. Professor Dugard said that Tsafendas's remarks showed him as a "politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change, with nothing to lose personally."⁴⁷¹⁵

History is full of people committing desperate acts out of deep political conviction; to raise awareness of their cause, to make a visible protest or simply to carry forward their fight. In 1936, Stefan Lux, a young Czechoslovakian Jew, committed suicide inside the League of Nations in Geneva while the members were in session. His aim was to raise awareness of the early persecution of Jews in Germany and to warn that Hitler must be stopped. He was not schizophrenic. In 1970, Kostas Georgakis, a Greek student of geology in Genoa, set himself on fire in protest against the dictatorship in Greece. He was not schizophrenic; a statue of him has been erected in Corfu and he was honoured by a commemorative postage stamp. Several Shaolin monks have publicly burned themselves to death over the years for their cause. None of them was schizophrenic. In 74 CE, during the First Jewish-Roman War at the Siege of Masada, 960 Jews committed suicide in order not to be enslaved by the Romans. No-one ever characterised them as schizophrenic.

Many have chosen to fight a battle in the full knowledge that there was no escape and certain death was awaiting. Salvador Allende in 1973 was given the chance by Pinochet to surrender and leave Chile. He refused and remained in the besieged Presidential Palace knowing that his death was inevitable, as proved to be the case. Constantine Palailogos XI was the last Byzantine emperor. In 1453, he was given the chance of surrendering Constantinople, then capital of the Byzantine Empire, or of fighting and losing the city and his life. Palailogos refused the surrender offer, fought and lost the city and died in the fighting. Jozef Gabcik and Jan Kubis, the two Czechs who assassinated Reinhard Heydrich in Prague in 1942, fled afterwards to a church. The SS surrounded the church and the two men, knowing there was no escape, chose to fight rather than surrender and lost their lives.

⁴⁷¹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷¹⁵ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

In 1994, twenty-eight years after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, Fathers Ioannis Tsafaridis and Minas Constandinou asked Tsafendas why he chose to stab Dr. Verwoerd in Parliament, knowing he could not possibly escape. Tsafendas replied that when he first conceived the idea of killing Verwoerd, he planned that he would have a chance of escape. He gave the priests a detailed account of how he would shoot Verwoerd, then flee the building and take refuge in the Eleni. He had rehearsed the scenario several times. It was when he was unable to get hold of a reliable firearm that he considered the alternative of a knife attack. He knew that if he stabbed Verwoerd there would be no escape and he debated the issue mentally for two or three days. In the event, he decided to go ahead with the knife because he did not care what would happen to him. This is exactly what he told the police twenty-eight years earlier. After all, he explained to the priests, he had no wife or children or responsibilities for anyone else, so he chose to act confident that there would be no human collateral damage while fully aware of what awaited himself.

Father Minas likened the act to a suicide mission and suggested that it could have been better planned. Tsafendas said there were time pressures in that his House of Assembly work terms were temporary and he feared he would never find a gun before possibly being redeployed. Minas asked if he had planned in advance to use the tapeworm to escape the death sentence. Tsafendas insisted that he never planned such a course and always wanted to claim "political responsibility" for his act. This was borne out by his two statements to the police after his arrest. Minas suggested it was madness to kill Verwoerd knowing he would be caught, a remark that angered and upset Tsafendas. He turned to Minas and said, "If I don't burn, if you don't burn, if we don't burn, how will the light vanquish the darkness?" He explained immediately that these were not his words, but a verse from Nazim Hikmet's poem Like Karem (Kerem Gibi). Had he failed to try, he would have regretted it for the rest of his life. "Freedom demands virtue and courage," he then told the priests. He then cited Andreas Kalvos's poem, Eis Samon (To Samos), saying, in part: "Those who feel fear's unbending *hand weighing on them may bear the yoke of bondage. Freedom demands virtue and courage...*⁴⁷¹⁶

The priests asked him if he regretted his act, since it cost him more than thirty years in prison and took almost as long for apartheid to collapse. Passionately, Tsafendas declared, “No, never!” He said he would have regretted not doing it. He said he believed apartheid would have collapsed earlier with Dr. Verwoerd out of the way and did not expect it to last so long without him. Still, he maintained that he did not regret his action. He insisted that it was worth it, as apartheid after Verwoerd was never as strong and stable as it was when its so-called architect lived. Even though it took so many years for the system to collapse, killing Verwoerd alone was justifiable because of his crimes, he said. “Look at Vorster, look at Botha,” he told the priests. “Just like Verwoerd they were responsible for the enslavement of twenty million people and the death and torture of thousands and they were not punished for their crimes. At least Verwoerd got what he deserved.” After this, the priests never asked him again about the assassination.⁴⁷¹⁷

DR. COOPER ON TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT THAT HIS ACT WOULD BE JUDGED BY HISTORY AND TSAFENDAS'S FEELINGS REGARDING DR. VERWOERD'S DEATH

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused say that he must have been abnormal when he killed the deceased because no normal person would have done it? Yes or no?

DR. COOPER: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that history will judge whether he was right in killing the deceased?

DR. COOPER: Words to that effect. It is very difficult for me to remember his exact words. Whether he said he was abnormal when he killed the deceased or whether he said that he was out of his mind, I cannot recall the exact words, but I do recall him saying something to the effect that history will prove whether he is right or wrong.

⁴⁷¹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁷¹⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What are the accused's feelings about the death of the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: I find the question difficult to answer because this man's feelings show a characteristic emotional blunting, which was referred to from the text book a short while ago. He doesn't seem to show any depth of feeling one way or another about Dr. Verwoerd, himself or, in fact, anybody else. He is emotionally flat concerning this matter.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he proud of the fact?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he happy that he has killed the Prime Minister?

DR. COOPER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he indicate to you that he has achieved something of which he should be proud?

DR. COOPER: No. He doesn't seem to, in his mind, now at this stage be able to put together in his mind really why he did it at all, what purpose he was going to achieve.

JUDGE BEYERS: I can't take this answer in the light of history going to prove whether he was right or wrong. He becomes an historical figure; he has told you that and you told me what he told you. If history is going to prove him right or wrong, he must have a feeling of pride or achievement about this thing?

DR. COOPER: I don't know what he means. It is a funny sort of answer to give, that history is going to prove whether he is right or wrong. Those are his only views. He hasn't got any views, in fact, on whether he is right or wrong, or what this was all about. He just says he must wait for history to prove that. He has got no feelings or real thoughts about the matter at all.

COMMENTS ON DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT THAT HIS ACT WOULD BE JUDGED BY HISTORY AND TSAFENDAS'S FEELINGS REGARDING DR. VERWOERD'S DEATH

Through this testimony we learn something important: that Tsafendas told Dr. Cooper that history would judge whether or not he did the right thing. What is surprising here is that Dr.

Cooper does not appear to understand the statement and even finds it “a funny sort of answer to give.” On the contrary, it is an intelligent response. Tsafendas is well aware that his deed would find only condemnation in South Africa under the current regime, but believed it would be hailed when apartheid fell.

This is a conviction that has been widely used by people defending an action or decision they have taken. For example, Fidel Castro made a similar statement from the dock when he was tried in 1953 for his revolutionary activities against the Cuban dictator, Fulgencio Batista. Castro concluded his testimony by saying “history will absolve me.”⁴⁷¹⁸ Dimitris Koufontinas, a member of the Revolutionary Organization 17 November, told the court that history would judge whether or not its victims were rightly targeted.⁴⁷¹⁹ The British Prime Minister Tony Blair and the American President George W. Bush both said “history will judge” whether they were right to go to war in Iraq,⁴⁷²⁰ obviously believing that they were right. Tsafendas, too, believed he did the right thing. In his September 19 statement to Maj. Rossouw, he said that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “believed it was the right thing to do.”⁴⁷²¹

Dr. Cooper also claims that Tsafendas does not have any views, feelings or real thought regarding the killing. However, Tsafendas told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his racial policies” and hoped that “a change of policy would take place.” Most importantly, he believed that “he did the right thing.” Even more importantly, on October 14, three days before the trial began and Dr. Cooper testified, Maj. Rossouw gave evidence before the Commission of Enquiry and the following dialogue took place:

COMMISSION: “How does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?”

MAJOR ROSSOUW: “When I originally questioned him I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered, ‘That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!’ At a later stage I asked him whether he regretted his deed yet and he answered that he did feel ⁴⁷¹⁸ Bourne, 1986: 101.

⁴⁷¹⁹ Τα Νέα, 25 July 2003, ‘Η απολογία του Δημήτρη Κουφοντίνα.’

⁴⁷²⁰ Ashley, J. and McAskill, E. (The Guardian), 1 March 2003, ‘History will be my judge’; CNN, 25 April 2013, ‘Bush: History will ultimately judge ... I am a content man.’

⁴⁷²¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done.⁴⁷²²

However, according to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, when Tsafendas was questioned by the Commission, which was after the summary trial had ended, “he showed no signs of remorse.”⁴⁷²³ Tsafendas also told the police officer that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “thought it was the right thing to do,”⁴⁷²⁴ and hoped that “a change of policy would take place,”⁴⁷²⁵ which reflects the same mind-set. Tsafendas’s replies showed that far from being emotionally blunt, as Dr. Cooper claimed, he was fully aware of the situation. They also demonstrate that he had no regrets, indeed was proud of what he did. These statements were not used by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Cooper’s testimony. As for Tsafendas appearing to change and showing some remorse at a later stage, this would surely be expected in someone who has brutally tortured, both psychologically and physically, for at least three weeks.

What is also important here is not so much that Tsafendas had told Dr. Cooper history would prove whether he was right or wrong for killing Dr. Verwoerd, as the fact that the Attorney-General refers to it. During his examination of Dr. Cooper, the Attorney-General referred to several things Tsafendas told the police and asked the psychiatrist if he was told the same. For example, van den Berg asked Dr. Cooper, “Did he tell you that he originally wanted to shoot the Prime Minister?” This question, and others along the same line, were based on what Tsafendas had told the police. This suggests that Tsafendas had also told the police at some point that history would prove whether he was right or wrong for killing Dr. Verwoerd. As we have seen, not all of Tsafendas’s statements during his interrogation were recorded. For example, when Major Rossouw “originally questioned him,” he “accused him of being a horrible murderer.” Tsafendas’s answer, “That is what you think, but the world thinks differently,”⁴⁷²⁶ is not in any of the recorded statements found in the archives. We know of it because of Major Rossouw’s testimony at the Commission of Enquiry.

Sometime in 1994, at Pretoria Prison hospital, twenty-eight years after the ⁴⁷²² Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁷²³ Report of the COE. Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁴⁷²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁷²⁶ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

assassination, Tsafendas was asked by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis whether he regretted killing Dr. Verwoerd. He replied: “No, never. It was the right thing to do, he was a tyrant and a dictator,” “the monster who created apartheid.” When the priests suggested he might have come to regret his act, Tsafendas replied, “No, no, no, not even for a moment, never, never. I did the right thing. He was a dictator, he created apartheid; it was him who did everything. You did not live then to see how it was, people were like slaves ...Verwoerd had taken away their dignity.”⁴⁷²⁷

When asked by the two priests whether it was worth it, since apartheid continued for another twenty-eight years and his action seemed like a failure and a lost cause, Tsafendas said, “I hoped things would change ... I had the chance to kill this monster... if I had not done it, I would have regretted it all my life ... there is no such thing as a lost cause, any cause can be won ... no cause or battle is ever lost until it is fought. If you fight, you always have a chance to win ...” He then quoted Jan-Paul Sartre, saying “A lost battle is a battle one thinks one has lost.” He maintained that he had done the right thing and it was worth it because apartheid never again reached the heights and strength it enjoyed before Dr. Verwoerd’s death. He said he never expected apartheid to collapse overnight, though he admitted that he did not expect it to last as long as it did without Dr. Verwoerd.⁴⁷²⁸

When asked by the two priests about his posthumous fame and how he would like people to remember him, Tsafendas said he did not care about it, that he felt he had done his duty, the right thing and his conscience was clear. When Fathers Ioannis and Minas told him that they were going to tell his story to the world Tsafendas urged them not to do so. Tsafendas said, that “when you do a good thing, you can’t go around advertising it. You do it because it is the right thing to do, not to be applauded by the others. Do a good thing and then throw it into the sea⁴⁷²⁹ ... I believed it was my social responsibility, my duty, to do it when I had the chance and I did it... I had the chance to kill the tyrant.”⁴⁷³⁰ Tsafendas also told the priests that he feared that White racists would kill him if they found out he was not insane

⁴⁷²⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁷²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁷²⁹ “Do a good thing and then throw it into the sea” is an old Greek adage.

⁴⁷³⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

and had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons. He believed that he had remained alive all these years because everyone thought he was mad.⁴⁷³¹

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DR. COOPER

It appeared through the cross-examination that both Judge Beyers and the Attorney-General were highly sceptical of Dr. Cooper's testimony. The defence team found the Judge to be so hostile to Dr. Cooper that they decided to speak to him and ask him to be less aggressive towards their witnesses. When Beyers adjourned the proceedings for lunch, Wilfrid Cooper and Willie Burger went to see him in his office and told him of "the impression of bias and hostility he was creating." The Judge did not accept their view.⁴⁷³²

However, it is the Attorney-General's attitude throughout the duration of the testimony of Dr. Cooper which is surprising, given that his own two experts who had examined Tsafendas (Professor van Wyk and Mr. Erasmus), had already found him to be schizophrenic, thus agreeing with the defence witness's diagnosis. If the Attorney-General believed Tsafendas was sane, thereby disagreeing with the two experts he had himself appointed, the logical thing to do was to bring in more psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. In challenging Dr. Cooper, he was also challenging his own expert witnesses.

Furthermore, the Attorney-General was aware of the defence's line since October 6. According to their testimonies in the court, Professor van Wyk had found Tsafendas to be schizophrenic, thereby agreeing with the defence's line from October 4, while Erasmus had also diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic since September 29. The Attorney-General had another two weeks to find new psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. Even David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper were puzzled. Bloomberg wrote: "One presumed that the Attorney-General knew what evidence his psychologist and psychiatrist would be giving. If that was the case, why did he challenge, in cross-examination, the evidence of the defence witnesses, when he knew that his own witnesses agreed with them, and allow Dr Harold Cooper, in particular, to be tested so vigorously and sceptically by the judge?"⁴⁷³³

⁴⁷³¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁷³² Willie Burger in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; Cooper, 2016: 115-116.

⁴⁷³³ Bloomberg, 2007: 98.

Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard who discussed the issue with the author of the author also found it puzzling and believe that it is almost impossible for the Attorney-General to not have been aware of the diagnosis of his two expert witnesses.⁴⁷³⁴ Professor Dugard said that he is “quite sure” that van den Berg, although he did not know him personally, knew what to do, as most prosecutors did at the time, with the case and characterised as “possible” the suggestion that this could have been a charade laid on for public consumption, stating that the prosecutors during apartheid “were never very independent.”⁴⁷³⁵

Since both sides had come to the conclusion that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic, the summary trial should have been a straightforward case, but as can see from its beginning, this was not the case and it was becoming something of a show trial. If the Attorney-General really wanted to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony, many of his conclusions had been refuted in the depositions of the two hundred-plus witnesses and other evidence gathered by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time. None of this evidence supported Dr. Cooper's testimony, but it was never used against his conclusions.

A very important issue of Dr. Cooper's testimony was Tsafendas's motive. Both the Attorney-General and judge Beyers cross-examined Dr. Cooper intensively about it. The Attorney-General could have easily gone beyond challenging Dr. Cooper's testimony, and could have broken it down. However, instead of using Tsafendas's statements in order to do so, he used Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report from his interview with Tsafendas where he had also diagnosed him as schizophrenic based on Tsafendas's delusional and confused alleged “political ideas.” The result was not only that the Attorney-General did not challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony, but he reinforced it as more “delusional and confused ideas” supposedly held by Tsafendas became publicised. It is hard to believe that the Attorney-General was so incompetent or so naïve as to think that he could challenge Dr. Cooper with such a report. The alternative must be that he wanted to underline the theory that Tsafendas was indeed a schizophrenic.

It is also surprising that the Attorney-General does not seem to use the medical reports from the various hospitals where Tsafendas was treated, although we are not in position to know whether they were in his possession. These reports had all been tracked down and assembled by the police. Since Professor van Wyk, the State's expert witness, was instructed to examine Tsafendas, one would have expected the police or the State to provide him with these records. Had he seen them, Professor van Wyk could have attacked the defence's line because of the various contradictions they contain; for instance, that Tsafendas had three different delusions, that he had faked mental illness at least twice in the past, and that nine South African doctors had examined him the last three years and had found him to be perfectly sane. If this information was known to the State, then one would have expected the Attorney-General to use it after it was evaluated by his two expert witnesses. However, this did not happen.

⁴⁷³⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁷³⁵ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

We cannot exclude the possibility that the State was in possession of all the above evidence but deliberately did not use them it so that Tsafendas would be found insane, which would be more convenient for everyone. Knowing how some of the judiciary worked during apartheid, this should not be ruled out and as Professor Dugard highlighted the prosecutors during apartheid "were never very independent"⁴⁷³⁶ and van den Berg was a supporter of apartheid and of the National Party.⁴⁷³⁷

OTHER ISSUES IN DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY

Dr. Cooper arrived at his diagnosis exclusively by talking to Tsafendas for six hours in a room in the police station. Although he wanted to get more information about Tsafendas, he was unable to do so due to the lack of co-operation from the police and the shortage of time, He was also fobbed off by both the defence and the police, who stated that this was a straightforward case.⁴⁷³⁸

It was important for Dr. Cooper to know Tsafendas's emotional and mental state in the days preceding the assassination. This should not have been difficult since witnesses like the Eleni crew, his colleagues at the Parliament and Patrick O'Ryan, who were with Tsafendas at that time, had testified to the police. However, Dr. Cooper did not receive any of this information. It was not the police's duty to provide Dr. Cooper with their statements but it would not have been difficult for him to find such information since David Bloomberg had located many who were around Tsafendas in the days before September 6.

⁴⁷³⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁷³⁷ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

⁴⁷³⁸ Lambley, 1980: 239-240.

A vitally important issue that was not picked up by the Attorney-General was that in the case of Dr. Verwoerd, Tsafendas used exactly the same modus operandi he had employed with PIDE, just a year and a half earlier. On November 16, 1964, Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique and accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁴⁷³⁹ The following day, after anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and Communist books were found in his suitcase, along with several Bibles, Tsafendas was handed in to PIDE and was transferred to a police substation in Beira for interrogation.⁴⁷⁴⁰ He was accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁴⁷⁴¹

At first in custody, Tsafendas gave clear and valid political reasons for his actions. He told the police that he supported “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother Nation,” and “clearly stated he was in favour of the independence of Mozambique.”⁴⁷⁴² Furthermore, Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held for the first fourteen days, testified to the South African police that Tsafendas was “intense anti-white and went as far as to tell him that the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites.” He characterised Tsafendas as “normal and he regarded him as a very intelligent person.”⁴⁷⁴³

Sometime later, Tsafendas changed his stance and began claiming he was Saint Peter. At some point during his detention, Tsafendas was taken to the Government Hospital in Beira for examination because of his Saint Peter act. On January 23, 1965, PIDE in Lisbon informed its counterparts in Lourenço Marques that “having seen the archives, it is remarked ⁴⁷³⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁴⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁴¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁴² PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁴³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

with a minimal margin of error, that the defendant Demitrio Tsafendas (id. a fls. 10), is mentally ill and therefore not chargeable at a juridical or penal level. Given this, it seems to us a pure waste of time to continue working on these archives, since we already know what their end will be. Therefore, considering the probable fact that the defendant cannot be charged, and he is not at all dangerous, I propose the release of the defendant, and closure of the archives.”⁴⁷⁴⁴

Tsafendas was subsequently released, whereupon he was perfectly normal again with everyone he met. Indeed, he admitted proudly that he had pretended to be Saint Peter so that the PIDE would release him. Precisely the same thing happened with Dr. Verwoerd. Tsafendas initially gave clear and valid political reasons for the killing, and then, obviously after the torture and threats he sustained in custody, he changed his stance and started claiming that a tapeworm had taken control of him. However, the Attorney-General failed to see the similarities in the two cases and did not bring up the issue.

Another important issue which was not raised during Dr. Cooper's testimony is that whenever Tsafendas was admitted to a hospital, he either presented himself or was taken there by the police while in custody. He was never referred by a doctor or taken there with an illness or a suspected nervous breakdown. Why did Tsafendas admit himself to hospitals? He said he did it only when he was penniless and had nowhere to stay. He said he saw “hospitals as hotels.”⁴⁷⁴⁵

Perhaps the most important issue with Dr. Cooper's testimony is that it is incompatible with the statements Tsafendas made to the police when they questioned him, the statements by about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry and the statements of forty-four people who were interviewed by the author. All the witnesses' statements are compatible with Tsafendas's statements to the police, but they are not compatible with Dr. Cooper's diagnosis and description of Tsafendas. Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, Mr. van Zyl and Professors Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Tuviah Zabow and Phillip Resnick also emphasised that to make an accurate diagnosis, additional ⁴⁷⁴⁴ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁴⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Gordon Winter's correspondence with David Beresford, 8 September 1998. Liza Key's personal collection.

information was required from outside sources.⁴⁷⁴⁶ Professor John Dugard and Advocate George Bizos stated to the author that Tsafendas's statements, along with all the other evidence collected by the police, should also have been given to the State.⁴⁷⁴⁷

Van Zyl was "surprised" to read Tsafendas's statements and the depositions the police and the Commission of Enquiry took at the time from some two hundred people. He felt that they showed Tsafendas as a completely different man to the one he examined and to the way he was described in court. The perceptions were so different he found it "hard to believe" that Tsafendas said what he did to the police and that all those people described Tsafendas in the way they did. Van Zyl agreed that this evidence should have been available to the specialists who examined Tsafendas since it would have played an important role in each one's diagnosis. He told the author:

"Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one's findings in the end. There is no doubt about it ... the fact that those sentiments [that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was disgusted with his policies and believed a change would take place with his death] expressed in the statement that he made to the police weren't ever mentioned to any of the psychiatrists."⁴⁷⁴⁸

Professor John Dugard agreed that the statements should have been made available to the State. Of Tsafendas's statement, he said it: "completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed."⁴⁷⁴⁹

⁴⁷⁴⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁴⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁷⁴⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁴⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

TSAFENDAS FAKING MENTAL ILLNESS IN THE PAST

As we have seen, there were at least two occasions when Tsafendas faked mental illness and this was known to the South African police. However, neither was mentioned during Dr. Cooper's testimony or indeed throughout the summary trial:

- The Grafton State Hospital report stated clearly that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past.⁴⁷⁵⁰
- At least six men from the Eleni, Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, testified to the police that Tsafendas "played the fool" to avoid serving in the Portuguese Army.⁴⁷⁵¹

In addition to the above, just three days after the assassination a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Washington was sent to the South African Foreign Minister in Cape Town. It informed him that that the US Immigration Department, which had dealt with Tsafendas often during his time in the United States and was aware of his hospitalizations, had a file on him which contained "full particulars" of his time in that country. In telegram form, it said, "He is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁴⁷⁵² insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of US Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization."⁴⁷⁵³

According to Professor Alban Burke:

"In these kinds of cases, any kind of legal cases, the first thing you want to eliminate is malingering, so is this person lying or not? That's your first thing that you have to decide, because, obviously, especially in those days, it was a decision between life and death, so 'I'm going to lie so that I don't get hanged, so I've got a very strong motive to lie, to malinge.' If I was the consulting psychologist or psychiatrist at that point in time, I would want to ⁴⁷⁵⁰ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁴⁷⁵¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁴⁷⁵² This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second 'not' within brackets.

⁴⁷⁵³ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

eliminate the malingering thing, and if there was evidence that he had used this in the past, already it puts a lot of doubt on whatever conclusion I'm going to arrive at.

So, even in those days, malingering was something you wanted to look at because, I mean, the malingering can ... it's not an unknown thing, because for years now, especially during World War One, a lot of people malingered, so that they wouldn't have to go to the army; the same thing with World War Two. So, the malingering was always there, and if you're dealing with a forensic case, where there could be a death penalty, you would want to eliminate that.⁴⁷⁵⁴

All the above information was known to the South African police, but with the possible exception of the Grafton State Hospital report, was not given to the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas. Mr. van Zyl and Professors Burke, Heilbrun, Resnick and Tuviah Zabow agree that it was extremely important that such information should have been made available to the psychiatrists.⁴⁷⁵⁵

⁴⁷⁵⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁵⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

REACTION OF THE PEOPLE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS AFTER THE FIRST DAY OF THE SUMMARY TRIAL

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's step sister who lived in Rhodesia at the time, had not gone outside her house or even smiled since the assassination. "We were barely talking to each other," she said about the climate of deep depression in her house. "We were like zombies." However, after the first day of the summary trial, her husband came running into the house, waving some local newspapers. "Look," he shouted, "look what he said ..." Pnema picked up the newspapers, scanned the trial stories and burst out laughing, "I couldn't believe it," she said, "it was the first time I laughed in a month, our house was like a graveyard before."⁴⁷⁵⁶

Pnema said of Tsafendas:

"He was always very, very smart, a devil, but how on earth he thought of this tapeworm story? I couldn't control myself and laughed. It was then I felt sorry for him for the first time, thinking what was going to become of him now. I was very angry before, I knew he had ruined my life, but after that, I felt very sorry for him ... after that I began reading everything in the newspapers about the trial. I had stopped reading before as most of the things they were saying about him were complete lies. What was said in the trial were lies too, but it was amusing, as he had told them! It was really amusing, even though I felt sorry for him that he had to say such things ..." Katerina Pnema had no doubt then and has no doubt now that her half-brother invented the tapeworm story to escape the gallows.⁴⁷⁵⁷

Mary Eendracht and Fotini Gavasiadis said that the whole's family reaction was similar to Pnema's; Tsafendas's step-mother, his other two half-sisters and his half-brother were all convinced he had made it up.⁴⁷⁵⁸ Eleni Grispos, who knew Tsafendas since he was a child, and her husband, who was Tsafendas's best friend in Lourenço Marques, were also certain that he had made up the tapeworm story. Ira Kyriakakis and her sister Alik, who also knew him from childhood, thought the same.⁴⁷⁵⁹

Others convinced that it was a ploy to avoid the death penalty included Father Nikolas Banovic, who lived under the same roof as Tsafendas for four months in Istanbul in 1961 and ⁴⁷⁵⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁴⁷⁵⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁴⁷⁵⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁷⁵⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

who prayed for him after hearing about the assassination, Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins in Lourenço Marques, Irene Michaletos, John's wife, Artemis Michaletos who had brought him up in Egypt, his first cousin Mary Eendracht who also knew him since Egypt, Nick Papadakis who associated with Tsafendas in Beira and Gondola and became close friends of his, and his childhood friends Andreas Babiolakis and George Grispos.⁴⁷⁶⁰ Not one of the forty-four people the author interviewed who met Tsafendas had believed that he was telling the truth about the tapeworm; every one believed he made it up, just as he pretended to be insane in order to escape the gallows.

⁴⁷⁶⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

CONCLUSION: DR. COOPER'S TESTIMONY AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S RESPONSE

Dr. Cooper found Tsafendas to be unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, talking in a disjointed manner and isolated from his surroundings in the sense that he could not make and keep good friends. However none of some two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry noticed any of these characteristics. Not even one. The same applies to the forty-four people who knew Tsafendas well and were interviewed by the author. On the contrary, Tsafendas was described several times as being the direct opposite of the person described by Dr. Cooper.

Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow believe that it is extremely unlikely, if not impossible, that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he spoke in a disjointed manner or that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.⁴⁷⁶¹ They must have been very unobservant, unless the symptoms were simply not there; because Tsafendas made them up when talking to the doctors. Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, conceded to the author that it was “highly improbable” that none of those who knew Tsafendas ever spotted any of the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Cooper, especially the issues of concentration and disjointed speech.⁴⁷⁶² Professor Phillip Resnick told the author that such a scenario is “extremely unlikely.”⁴⁷⁶³

Father Nikola Banovic told the author: “Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”⁴⁷⁶⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Everything you have been telling me [as to what Dr. Cooper and the other doctors said] is gibberish. Everything that they were saying is gibberish. Everything. I don’t know how they came to these conclusions and how they managed to get away with it. It’s ⁴⁷⁶¹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁴⁷⁶² Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁶³ Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 7 May 2017.

⁴⁷⁶⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

absolutely gibberish. Dimitris must have had a lot of fun sitting [in the court] and listening to all this gibberish about him. I can imagine him [in the court] laughing inside him ... I am sure he must have had enjoyed it ... especially since he succeeded in fooling them and getting away with it.⁴⁷⁶⁵

Dr. Cooper diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic based on what the accused told him and without getting any information about him from other sources. He therefore could not compare different avenues of information and so judge that what Tsafendas told him was true or not. Instead of attempting to confirm or reject what Tsafendas told him by checking other sources, he simply asked Tsafendas again. As we have seen, Reyner van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Kirk Heilbrun, Alban Burke and Phillip Resnick have all highlighted the importance of third-party information in order to make an accurate diagnosis in such cases, assessing information taken from people who know the patient, as well as his medical and criminal records. This is standard practice in criminal cases.

However, Dr. Cooper did not speak to even one person who knew Tsafendas. He was told by both the defence and the police that it was a straightforward case and the only information he had about Tsafendas was most probably given to him verbally, as was the case with van Zyl, and this was after he had already diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic. If Dr. Cooper was given the statements gathered by the police or if he had spoken to people who knew Tsafendas, he would have seen immediately that this information did not accord with what he had heard from the accused. If he had read the medical reports, he would have seen the inconsistencies and, most importantly, the fact that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the past. However, Dr. Cooper seems to have been discouraged to seek outside information about his patient by the police and was led to believe that Tsafendas was a clear-cut case of schizophrenia.⁴⁷⁶⁶

The most striking thing about Dr. Cooper's evidence, however, was not the fact that he diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, but that the Attorney-General did very little to challenge the diagnosis, and much more to reinforce it. The police had gathered a vast amount of information. The author cannot know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of all this information, but none that could have broken down Dr. Cooper's testimony was used.

⁴⁷⁶⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁶⁶ Lambley, 1980: 239-240.

The most important evidence should have been Tsafendas's statements to the police. In them, Tsafendas testified that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons: because he was against apartheid, because Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of all the South African people, because he was disgusted with his policies and he hoped that a change would take place by removing him. These statements clearly showed Tsafendas as a well-informed, opinionated person with a lively interest in national politics. Professor Dugard said about the statement:

“(It) completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change, with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement, which was carefully concealed.”⁴⁷⁶⁷

The evidence gathered by the police and the Commission from some two hundred interviewees along with reports from agencies and organizations around the world demonstrated that Tsafendas was far from the hopeless, helpless individual without any political thought described by Dr. Cooper. However, none of these statements, reports or interviews was used to contradict Dr. Cooper's views. We are not in position to know the reasons, but the fact remains that the Attorney-General did very little to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony generally, even though the police had gathered considerable information.

Although the court heard much discussion of Tsafendas's possible motives for killing Dr. Verwoerd, what was never mentioned was Tsafendas's statement to the police that he murdered the Prime Minister because he was disgusted with his policies, considered him a dictator and hoped a change of policy would take place by killing him. Also not mentioned were the statements of several witnesses that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler's best student” and a tyrant and dictator. Instead, Tsafendas appears to have no idea why he killed Dr. Verwoerd and was unable to explain his reasons. However, thirty years later Tsafendas was able to explain his reasons for the assassination, as he had done to the police, which again suggests that he deliberately told Dr. Cooper all this.⁴⁷⁶⁸

The Attorney-General appeared to “attempt to challenge” Dr. Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's motive, by using Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report. The astonishing thing with ⁴⁷⁶⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁷⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

this move is that van den Berg could have very easily broken down Dr. Cooper's testimony about the motive by using Tsafendas's own words, but he used instead a report that contained "confused and deluded ideas," similar to the ones mentioned by Dr. Cooper. The result, instead of challenging Dr. Cooper's testimony, was to further reinforce the idea of Tsafendas as a schizophrenic but also, and perhaps more importantly, that he did not have any clear political thought.

Much was said about the tapeworm, but what did not become clear was the gulf between those who heard about it and those who did not. Tsafendas made sure to mention the tapeworm to every single person connected with his defence or the State, but up to then he had never mentioned it to friends and family. Dr. Cooper came back time and again to the tapeworm, but statements to the police by Tsafendas and witnesses contained not a single reference to it. Also not mentioned was that Tsafendas did not speak of the tapeworm to at least nine doctors who examined him in the three years prior the assassination, all of whom declared him, as he wished to be declared, perfectly healthy, both physically and mentally. It could hardly be clearer that in telling Dr. Cooper, the police and his defence team about the tapeworm he wanted to be considered insane, while hiding it from the nine doctors he wished to be declared mentally fine so he could get jobs and the permanent residency permit he had applied for.

Several other life issues were inaccurately presented and wrongly interpreted, for example his supposed inability to care for himself, to make friends, to function properly, to live a meaningful life, as well as his relationship with his step-mother. Tsafendas was presented as a man without any political ideology or concerns. That he was a member of the South African Communist Party and the Greek Communist Party and its military wing (the DSE) and that he participated in the Greek Civil War were not mentioned. Nor was the fact that he was reported at least twice to the South African police as a "dangerous Communist." The court did not hear that he was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years and arrested several times by the Portuguese police because of his Communist and anti-Portuguese activities. In fact, the word Communist was never heard in court, although several witnesses told the police that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist and was even described as the "biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa"⁴⁷⁶⁹ or simply as a "dangerous

⁴⁷⁶⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Communist.”⁴⁷⁷⁰ The fact that PIDE had a very detailed file on Tsafendas since 1938 was also not mentioned, but this was perhaps not known to the South African authorities as PIDE had withheld from the South African police all the information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”⁴⁷⁷¹

Dr. Cooper seemed not to know that Tsafendas had faked mental illness, although it was stated in the Grafton State Hospital medical report, which was in the hands of both the police and the defence. At least six witnesses told the police that Tsafendas pretended to be crazy to avoid serving in the Portuguese Army. None of this came up in court.

Importantly, Dr. Cooper was also apparently unaware that Tsafendas spoke not of one delusion but three. The tapeworm, according to Dr. Cooper, made its first appearance in the mid-1930s and was still there up to his trial. However, in 1946, Tsafendas had claimed to hear voices from radiators and at one point in 1964 or 1965 he “believed” he was Saint Peter, while in 1966, just two months before the assassination, he “believed” that people were murdered by poisoned food in the house where he lived. Thus since the 1930s, Tsafendas at least had two simultaneous delusions - the tapeworm and the radiator voices in 1946, the tapeworm and Saint Peter in 1965 and the tapeworm along with the people being murdered by poisonous food in 1966. Tsafendas was later to remark, “Everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?”⁴⁷⁷²

Speaking of having two delusions at the same time, Professor Burke said, “It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is unlikely. It’s possible but it’s improbable.”⁴⁷⁷³ Mr. van Zyl agreed, “One may disappear, and the other one may then appear. But two at the same time? I don’t think so, these delusions are usually very powerful.”⁴⁷⁷⁴

None of the statements taken from the Eleni sailors was used, not even those found in the archives. These statements were particularly important since many of these men were ⁴⁷⁷⁰ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁷⁷¹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁴⁷⁷² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁷⁷³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁷⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

with Tsafendas every day for forty-two days up to three days before the assassination and were cognisant of Tsafendas's behaviour and state of mind at a crucial time. Tsafendas had bought a gun from one of the crew and was planning to escape by hiding aboard the tanker. Even more important, he told the crewmen that any assassination of Dr. Verwoerd would be morally justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator. Dr. Cooper and Tsafendas's defence team did not know about these statements and could not talk to the men because the Eleni left Cape Town on September 3, but the police had heard from the seamen's own lips. One would have expected the Attorney-General to have knowledge of such statements, but there was no mention of them.

A very important fact of Tsafendas's life was never raised at the trial. Although there was considerable discussion of his employment record and apparent inability to hold down a job, Tsafendas's six months teaching English at the best private language college in Turkey passed without mention. The teaching stint was reported in South African newspapers,⁴⁷⁷⁵ the Commission also found out about it, Tsafendas told the police about it and he used his reference from the college to get the job in Parliament. Dr. Cooper found Tsafendas to be unable to hold down a job, care for himself, function on a reasonable level and follow a conversation after fifteen minutes while he was also talking in a disjointed manner.

Professors Burke and Zabow and Mr. van Zyl agreed that it would have been impossible for a man with his reported level of schizophrenia to hold down such a job, especially for an extended period. Furthermore, this was not the only job Tsafendas kept for a substantial length of time; he worked for six years at the Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, for two years at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane, for almost two years as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg, five months at F.A. Poole Engineering in Pretoria and six months at a tractor factory in Munich and none of his fellow workers noticed anything odd about him. He also worked satisfactorily as an interpreter for another five-six months, although part-time, at Durban Court, being recruited periodically as the need arose. He worked off and on for nine months at his brother-in-law's coffee shop, the Proclamation Hill Café in Pretoria. Colleagues praised Tsafendas for his work and character. Finally, none of his superiors or colleagues at Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with Tsafendas's ability to perform his duties.

⁴⁷⁷⁵ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, 'Tsafendas taught Turks English'; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas taught English in Turkey'; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, 'Tsafendas seen as 'mystery man.'"

It is possible that the Attorney-General was unaware of some of the information gathered by the police and therefore did not bring it up in court, despite the fact that most of it had been published in the newspapers. However, the same could not be said of Tsafendas's employment record and ability to hold down a job. The Attorney-General himself wrote in October 3 in his Memorandum for Tsafendas that in 1933 Tsafendas returned to Mozambique and "for 6 years he worked at the Vulcan Iron Works, General Engineers, as an oxyacetylene electrical welder. According to testimonials from this firm, he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner. These testimonials were included with his application for permanent residence in South Africa."⁴⁷⁷⁶ This important evidence directly contradicted Dr Cooper's testimony, yet the Attorney-General did not use it to challenge it.

At least twice, Dr. Cooper seemed to misunderstand or manipulate Tsafendas's words, although Tsafendas might well have lied to him. One of these instances concerned Tsafendas's statement to the police that he did not consider Dr. Verwoerd representative of all South African people. Dr. Cooper's version was that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of the White population. What is important here is not whether Dr. Cooper misunderstood Tsafendas or if he was lied to, but that the Attorney-General did not challenge him when the police had ample evidence to break this down.

Tsafendas's "globetrotting" is also misunderstood. That he was forced into exile for twelve years from Mozambique, persecuted and imprisoned in Portugal and banned from entering South Africa is not mentioned. Neither are the more than twenty applications he made to be allowed back into these countries. Ignored, too, is that most of the countries he visited were on the way to his destination and he had to pass through them to get there. Missing also is the fact that Tsafendas was forced to travel through some of these countries in a desperate attempt to get back to Mozambique by illegal means since he was officially banned. Tsafendas's travels are those of a man desperate to return to his home and family, but prevented from doing so because of his political beliefs, and so he was forced to spend much time living in "strange lands," as he put it himself.⁴⁷⁷⁷

⁴⁷⁷⁶ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁴⁷⁷⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

It is also a fact that the police possessed sufficient evidence not only to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony but to break it to pieces. None of it was used. The fact that the Attorney-General wrote a memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3, 1966 which contained misinformation regarding his reclassification application, strongly suggests that van den Berg was perfectly competent but was not given all relevant information by the police. However, we are considering a case which took place under apartheid and we cannot exclude the possibility that the Attorney-General was indeed in possession of all the information but deliberately did not use it, assuming or being "advised" or simply knowing what he had to do in such case, that it would be better for everyone if Tsafendas were to be found insane. As Professor Dugard said, the prosecutors during apartheid "were never very independent" and knew what they had to do each time.⁴⁷⁷⁸ The fact that he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony without trying very hard while his own witnesses had already come to the same conclusion as those of the defence, strengthens the suspicion that the whole thing was a charade intended to secure a verdict of insanity.

Tsafendas spoke at length about the assassination and his life while he was in prison and in the hospital where he ended his days, but only to people he trusted. He never mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Cooper but repeated what he told witnesses prior to the assassination and which some of them told the police. For example, that Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator and not the real representative of ALL the South African people, that he was a tyrant oppressing his people, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be Hitler's best student because he copied some of his Nuremberg Laws concerning Jews and applied them to the non-whites, and that he hoped that his death would bring a change of policy in South Africa or at least provide a stepping stone towards it, as he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be the "brains behind apartheid."

If Tsafendas was really schizophrenic when he was examined by Dr. Cooper, he must still have been schizophrenic when he was in the prison and then in the hospital. His situation must even have deteriorated, given that he had been in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours per day for about twenty years, deprived of contact with his fellow prisoners, systematically assaulted and kept in a room next to the execution chamber, often forced to watch those who were going to be executed passing in front of his cell, possibly a reminder of what to expect if he ever became “sane” again. All this was still happening when Tsafendas was seventy.⁴⁷⁷⁹

⁴⁷⁷⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was really a schizophrenic, his condition, because of these conditions and the fact that he received no treatment, should have remained at least the same or more likely worse.⁴⁷⁸⁰ However, Tsafendas appeared to be perfectly sane to those who met him, he remained faithful to the ideas and philosophy he had before the assassination until he died and never repeated to anyone any of the things that Dr. Cooper said he told him.

A trained psychiatrist should be able to understand whether a person is schizophrenic more authoritatively than a lay person. However, psychiatry does not deal with wounds and conditions that can be touched and seen, are broken and can be healed. It deals with aspects of a personality upon which there may be differing opinions. Dr. Benjamin Chesler, a specialist psychiatrist, who examined David Pratt in 1960, admitted to the court that his diagnosis “could have been wrong.” He added, “I was not certain that I was correct. Psychiatry is not a factual science, a lot of it is subjective interpretation.”⁴⁷⁸¹

That is also why it is very important to have as much additional third-party information as possible. John J. Broderick, Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Law at Notre Dame University, said that in an important murder trial, where the defence is insanity, it is not uncommon for psychiatrists of equal eminence to be lined up on opposite sides of the case. It was the same when the issue being contested was a will.⁴⁷⁸² This implies that the psychiatrists from one side or other misdiagnosed the accused. There are several well-known cases where prominent psychiatrists got their diagnoses wrong:

- Issei Sagawa murdered and ate a girl in Paris in 1981. He was examined by several French psychiatrists and was found to be legally insane and unfit to stand trial. He was later deported to Japan and committed to a mental hospital. However, when examined by ⁴⁷⁷⁹ Beresford (The Guardian), 9 June 1989: 12, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s insane killer being brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell next to gallows for 71- year old prisoner.’

⁴⁷⁸⁰ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

⁴⁷⁸¹ Dr. Chesler’s testimony in the Enquiry regarding the mental condition of David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 13 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA.

⁴⁷⁸² Broderick, 1960: 517.

Japanese psychiatrists, they declared him perfectly sane and he was released. He still lives free.⁴⁷⁸³

- Joseph Paul Franklin was an American serial killer. A forensic psychiatrist for the defence testified that he was a paranoid schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial. However, the court found him fit to be tried and he was executed in 2013.⁴⁷⁸⁴
- Leopold and Loeb murdered a boy in the United States in 1924. Several prominent psychiatrists of the time testified that they were insane, while other equally prominent psychiatrists testified that they were perfectly sane.⁴⁷⁸⁵
- In October 2016, in the Spalding murders trial, Dr. Indranil Chakrabarti, a psychiatrist, testified that the fifteen-year-old accused girl was suffering from a mental disorder. However, consultant forensic psychiatrist Dr. Philip Joseph gave as his opinion that Dr. Chakrabarti's diagnosis was wrong and the accused was not suffering from a mental disorder. At the time of writing, the trial is still ongoing.⁴⁷⁸⁶
- In February 1965, Professor Lewis A. Hurst,⁴⁷⁸⁷ Professor of Psychology at the University of Witwatersrand, diagnosed John Harris, who planted a bomb in the Johannesburg railway station, as unfit to stand trial. His opinion was that Harris "was suffering from a mental disease which rendered him incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong" and that he harboured "paranoid traits of a nature sufficient to impair his judgment." On the other hand, Professor van Wyk, who also examined Tsafendas, disagreed with that diagnosis and found Harris perfectly sane. The Court accepted Prof. van Wyk's diagnosis and dismissed Prof. Hurst's.⁴⁷⁸⁸

In the above-mentioned cases and very many more, psychiatrists disagreed about the mental state of a person. One side must be wrong, which means that some of the psychiatrists misdiagnosed the person concerned. Clearly, a psychiatrist's diagnosis, especially when unaccompanied by third-party information, cannot be taken for granted. In addition, in the cases mentioned above, the psychiatrists had far more information available about their ⁴⁷⁸³ Morris, 2007. Retrieved from:

<https://web.archive.org/web/20110714172725/http://www.newcriminologist.com/article.asp?nid=17>; Murder in Mind (1997) The Japanese Cannibal.

⁴⁷⁸⁴ Gladwell (The New Yorker), 24 February 1997: 132-47, 'Damaged.'

⁴⁷⁸⁵ Illinois v. Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb. Retrieved from:

<http://law2.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/leoploeb/leopold.htm>

⁴⁷⁸⁶ BBC, 12 October 2016, 'Spalding murders: "Toxic relationship" behind killing of mum and daughter.'

Retrieved from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-england-lincolnshire-37631891>

⁴⁷⁸⁷ Incidentally, Prof. Hurst was also one of the psychiatrists who examined David Pratt.

⁴⁷⁸⁸ State v. Harris (Appellate Division), 11 February-1 March 1965: 340-341.

patient than the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas. In large part, a diagnosis depends on what the patient tells his examiner and Dr. Cooper and the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas relied on what he told them. However, Tsafendas told his psychiatrists stories he never told anyone else, most of them clearly lies, as witnesses told the police, the Commission and the author. Furthermore, he talked and behaved in a manner that none of the witnesses described or recognised.

Was Tsafendas capable of convincing Dr. Cooper that he was schizophrenic? That he had done so in the past with the tapeworm story and the Saint Peter fixation suggests that he could. Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry said in his final report that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore (the Commission) adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁴⁷⁸⁹

The unavoidable conclusion concerning Dr. Cooper's evidence is that his portrayal of Tsafendas was a travesty of the truth. A long list of Tsafendas's actions and opinions which would have provided an entirely different picture of the man went unmentioned throughout the summary trial. They included: that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, an evil man, the brains behind apartheid and Hitler's best student; that Tsafendas hoped killing him would bring about a change of policy; that he wanted to do everything possible to get the ruling regime out of power and see a government representing all the South African people in its place; that philosophically he detested apartheid, slavery, colonialism and racism; that he was a partisan for the independence of Mozambique, was arrested and imprisoned five times by the Portuguese Police because of his anti-Portuguese and Communist activities, and that PIDE had a 130-page file on him from 1938. None of these facts came to light and Tsafendas was presented as a schizophrenic who believed he had a tapeworm which controlled his life, who did not like Coloureds and who assassinated Dr. Verwoerd because he was frustrated. This became the public perception of Tsafendas and has remained so to this day.

Professor Kirk Heilbrun believes that Dr. Cooper's diagnosis would not have been seen as credible in an American court today. He told the author:

⁴⁷⁸⁹ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

“It [Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis] would not be given much credibility in a U.S. court. Many of the points we have discussed [above] would be incorporated into cross-examination to challenge the credibility of the opinions based only on self-report.”⁴⁷⁹⁰

Professor Zabow also agrees with the author’s analysis of Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis. He said:

“Just a few comments further to our interesting discussion this afternoon where we seem to concur on the issues of psychiatric expert testimonies. I have read the information with interest particularly the collateral background provided. Much of this was not available at time of psychiatric assessments or in the Court. Of interest is the Tsafendas statement which was done early on the investigation and much of the information he must have been able to provide or a least agreed upon if coerced to sign. If he was psychotic and unable to marshal his thoughts, this would not have been possible. This is significant in relation to the expert testimonies which are so central to the discussion that all these were provided without background factual information at than stage. The focus should have been on mental state examination in its ‘form’ and not therefore dependent on the content. The uncertainties expressed as to conclusions in relation to the nature of the disorder and the features are evident.

As mentioned previously in discussion with you, the evaluation should consist of supportive history as available and observation of behaviour and functioning. Forensic assessments are undertaken in hospital-like setting where function and behaviour outside of the consulting room are observed. I am also concerned as to when the examinations took place relevant to other activities and interrogations. Many appear to have taken place under some pressure of time and in various environments such as the EEG laboratory etc. The time of the assessments clearly were during the severe and ongoing torture and abuse so this effect on his mental status in the ‘sample’ period needed consideration. The observed symptoms may be explained somewhat in other ways due to the above.”⁴⁷⁹¹

Tsafendas’s file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, while imprisoned in Pretoria Central Maximum Security Prison described him as:

“A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is ⁴⁷⁹⁰ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

⁴⁷⁹¹ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape."⁴⁷⁹²

This description hardly fits the Tsafendas described by Dr. Cooper as someone unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to care for himself and unfit to stand trial. However, the description fits perfectly with the way Tsafendas was described by people who knew him well and according to a plethora of evidence gathered by the South African police. Finally, Advocate George Bizos found the evidence showing Dr. Cooper's testimony as wrong to be "overwhelming and unquestionable."⁴⁷⁹³

⁴⁷⁹² Marais, 1992: 208.

⁴⁷⁹³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

DAY 2: 18 OCTOBER 1966

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 2: DR. HENDRIK MULLER

Dr. Muller, a Cape Town physician, was appointed by David Bloomberg to examine Tsafendas and offer an expert opinion on whether or not he harboured a tapeworm. It was an astute appointment since Dr. Muller was not only well known and widely respected, he was also the personal doctor of Judge Beyers.⁴⁷⁹⁴

EXTRACTS FROM DR. MULLER'S TESTIMONY⁴⁷⁹⁵

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you examine the accused?

DR. MULLER: On the 12th October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you examine him?

DR. MULLER: At Caledon Square.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you ask the accused?

DR. MULLER: I asked him if he suffered from any physical illness. I explained to him that it was my purpose to examine him physically.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his reply?

DR. MULLER: He said that his only trouble was this worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he tell you about the worm?

DR. MULLER: He first became conscious of the worm in 1936. He stated that for some two to three months he had been feeling irritable and unwell and during this period he had noticed that he was passing segments of worm by rectum; segments which passed spontaneously and would fall into his trousers, and he described them as being like macaroni, which nevertheless moves spontaneously, and this led him to believe that he had a worm. This had happened while he was in Lourenço Marques, and he went to a chemist there who told him how to treat ⁴⁷⁹⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 79; Cooper, 2016: 105.

⁴⁷⁹⁵ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

this condition.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From his description did you form the impression that, in fact, in 1936 he did have a worm which?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I was fully convinced about that, especially when he described the result of taking this treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, what was the result?

DR. MULLER: He passed a long length of the worm, but he felt that he had not passed the whole worm, that part of it still remained in his rectum. It broke off when he pulled on it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is his present complaint about?

DR. MULLER: He says that the worm has changed his whole character and his whole physique, whereas before he was thin and wiry, he has now become fat and flabby. It has made him irritable, changed his nature; that he can no longer be friendly with people, he was bad-tempered. It has made him eat excessively and made him put on weight to a great extent. He states he can feel the worm moving about inside him, causing severe pain at times, and generally making him feel thoroughly miserable and unwell.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How does he describe the worm? What does he call it?

DR. MULLER: He referred to it on two or three occasions as an abominable thing inside him, and as a worm, but he didn't use any other terms.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you tried to ascertain from him whether he has passed any segments since taking medicine in 1936?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I asked him that on two occasions, whether he had again passed any segments of the worm or whether he had passed a long length of the worm, and he was quite sure that he had never again passed a segment or a length of the worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you ascertain from him whether he had had any treatment for this worm since 1936?

DR. MULLER: Yes, he stated he had had many treatments, some of them very severe. In fact, one of the treatments, he says, almost killed him but in spite of this he never again passed any part of the worm. And no treatment at any time made him feel better.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does he presently believe that he still has the tapeworm?

DR. MULLER: He appears to be quite convinced about that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did you form as to the veracity; does he genuinely believe in the existence of this worm?

DR. MULLER: Yes, I believe that is so. I think he really does feel that he still harbours this worm and that it still is affecting him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your examination was directed to - obviously after this worm story - find out whether he still had a worm?

DR. MULLER: Well, I didn't do anything more extensive. I examined him clinically, palpated his abdomen, examined the heart, lungs and nervous system generally. I did not have stool examinations or other examinations to demonstrate whether the worm is still present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your opinion?

DR. MULLER: I am quite convinced he does not have a worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If evidence is led that in May, 1959, the accused received treatment at the University College Hospital, that is, St. Pancras Hospital, to ascertain whether or not there was a worm and that no tape-worm was produced, how important would that evidence be to you as a physician?

DR. MULLER: Well, it would confirm my feeling that he just does not have a worm. It is a very reputable hospital and I am sure that they must have done the job properly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If they came to the conclusion that there was no worm in 1959, you would not quarrel with that?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the overall physical condition of the accused?

DR. MULLER: Physically he is fat and rather unfit but there is no organic disease demonstrable. He is as healthy as most people of his age are.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You had no difficulty in communicating with him?

DR. MULLER: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he have difficulty in expressing himself?

DR. MULLER: None at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was the accused during your examination? Was he in a state of anxiety?

DR. MULLER: It was difficult to say. He appeared vague in his manner and almost, one could say, detached. It is difficult to describe exactly how he was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to ask the doctor this, what impression did the accused make upon him?

DR. MULLER: He appeared an ordinary enough man, certainly not exceptional, particularly not ill, not particularly disturbed, you know; not anxious or upset; intelligent and able to understand what was said to him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to ask you finally: With his health and his intelligence should he be able to hold down a job?

DR. MULLER: Yes. Yes, I would think he could very easily.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I am talking about his physical health?

DR. MULLER: Yes.

COMMENTS ON DR. MULLER'S TESTIMONY

According to Dr. Muller, Tsafendas was able to understand what was said to him, had no problem communicating with him and was not particularly disturbed. More importantly, Dr. Muller contradicted Dr. Cooper's beliefs that Tsafendas was not able to hold down a job and unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

Tsafendas spoke to Dr. Muller at length about the tapeworm and its origins. As we will see, it is something he does with any doctor who examines him in custody. Tsafendas also spoke about the tapeworm in most of the hospitals where he was treated, saying roughly the same things he told Dr. Muller. However, these were hospitals to which Tsafendas himself sought admittance or to which he was taken by police who believed they had noticed "something wrong with him" during interrogation. Tsafendas was never taken to a hospital or recommended to one by anyone other than the police.

Significantly, Tsafendas was examined by at least nine physicians during the three years up to the assassination and did not tell any of them anything about a tapeworm. They were not psychiatrists, so Tsafendas may have felt it was an irrelevance, however, Dr. Muller is not a psychiatrist either and Tsafendas told him clearly that “his only trouble was this worm.” If Tsafendas really believed he had a tapeworm and always told the medics who examined him in custody, would he not also have told the other nine doctors? After all, he said that this was his only health problem.

Surprisingly, although Dr. Muller was appointed to discover if Tsafendas had a tapeworm, he did not carry out any of the relevant physical examinations, including rectal investigation, as he appeared to be convinced simply by listening to Tsafendas that the worm was a figment of his imagination. However, his remit was to discover the truth of the tapeworm, not by talking to Tsafendas - that was the psychiatrists' task - but by examining him, and this he did not do. He produced no physical evidence, either pro or con, and his conclusion was based on an assessment of Tsafendas's words, upon which, not being a psychiatrist, he was not qualified to pronounce. What was the point of Dr. Muller testifying that Tsafendas did not have a tapeworm when he did not examine him? For all anyone knew, he could very well have had one. It is germane that the nine physicians who examined Tsafendas over the previous three years did so after he applied for permanent residence in South Africa and in connection with several job applications. In every case, he was found to be perfectly sane, capable of doing the work he applied for and fit for permanent residence. Not only did Tsafendas remain silent on the tapeworm, he also concealed his previous hospitalisations.

Dr. Muller stated that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1936. At that time, Tsafendas was still living at his parents' home, yet everyone in his family stated in their testimony to the Commission that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to them and that he was “definitely not insane.”⁴⁷⁹⁶ Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas's brother-in-law, told the police, “As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.”⁴⁷⁹⁷ Tsafendas's half-sister Katerina Pnefma and his first cousin Mary Eendracht also were never told by Tsafendas about the tapeworm. Eendracht had grown up with Tsafendas in Egypt and then in Mozambique and was very close to him. The private conclusion of all the family members was that Tsafendas made up the tapeworm story to save himself from the gallows.⁴⁷⁹⁸ Family apart, three good friends of Tsafendas from that time, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and his schoolmate George Grispos, never heard Tsafendas say anything about a tapeworm.⁴⁷⁹⁹

⁴⁷⁹⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁴⁷⁹⁷ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

The most surprising thing about Dr. Muller's testimony is that he contradicts Dr. Cooper's evidence on a number of points and no attempt is made by the Court or the Attorney-General to clarify these issues. Dr. Cooper had found Tsafendas "unable to function on a reasonable level," "incapable of holding down employment" and unable to "express himself in a coherent fashion." Dr. Muller found no communication issues with Tsafendas, he believed that he could "very easily" hold down a job and did not report anything regarding his being "unable to function on a reasonable level."

It is important to remember that Dr. Muller is not a psychiatrist with the necessary expertise to comment on Tsafendas's state of mind, therefore Dr. Cooper's is the expert opinion. However, the next defence witness is Dr. Kossew, a district surgeon, who is also not a psychiatrist and therefore not an expert; he will diagnose Tsafendas as schizophrenic and his testimony will prove vital for Judge Beyers to reach his verdict in the end.

⁴⁷⁹⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁷⁹⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 3: DR. RALPH KOSSEW

Dr. Kossew, the District Surgeon in Cape Town, although not a psychiatrist, was an important witness for the defence because he had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic three months before the assassination. Judge Beyers would state in his verdict how much he valued and gave weight to Dr. Kossew's testimony. However, as we will see, it is by far the weakest evaluation of Tsafendas by any of the doctors who examined him.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. KOSSEW'S TESTIMONY⁴⁸⁰⁰

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The accused, have you seen him before?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see him during June, 1965?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On what date?

DR. KOSSEW: On the 17th of June.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

DR. KOSSEW: At our offices - the District Surgeon's offices.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it 1965 or 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did the accused come to you?

DR. KOSSEW: He was referred to us by the Department of Social Welfare for a disability grant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And tell me, doctor, did you examine him then?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you fill in a form as a result of your examination and the opinion that you formed?

⁴⁸⁰⁰ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you a carbon copy of that form before you?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes. I have typed copies for the benefit of the Court, M' Lord. This will be R.S.C.A.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you read out this document?

DR. KOSSEW: The name was given as Dimitrio Tsafendas, born on the 14th January, 1918. He was not at work at this time I examined him, and he had last worked in March, 1966, and was a handyman at that time at the Engineering Works, Marine Diamond Corporation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the applicant's complaint?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I had to DEFENCE COUNSEL: Read out what you have written down?

DR. KOSSEW: I found that he was vague and did not give a coherent account of himself, and that he was hypochondriacal. I have a note here that he talks about nothing else but his complaints and has ideas of a persecutory nature. He says that in his boarding-house they deliberately give certain food to people to cause their deaths. And he says that 20 people had died in a year that way. His memory was defective, I noted.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was this what you put in under the heading "Applicant's complaints - (history, symptoms and previous treatment)"?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In your general examination, what did you find his general physical and nutritional state to be?

DR. KOSSEW: I found nil abnormal in all his systems.

JUDGE BEYERS: In "General physical and nutritional state" you've got "Good."

DR. KOSSEW: Yes. His respiratory system was normal. His cardiovascular system was normal. His blood-pressure was 150/100. His genito-urinary system was normal, and so was his alimentary and other abdominal systems. His musculo-skeletal system was normal, as was his central nervous system.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And his mental condition?

DR. KOSSEW: I put down "Schizophrenic."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you put down for a prognosis for 'Schizophrenic'?"

DR. KOSSEW: I put down: "Prognosis - Poor."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you say was his degree of disablement?

DR. KOSSEW: I put the degree of disablement as compared with a normal individual as: "Severe."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So where you have whether the disablement is slight, moderate or severe, you put it in a high class?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His present incapacity, do you find it to be temporary or permanent?

DR. KOSSEW: Permanent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider that medical treatment would improve or cure his schizophrenia?

DR. KOSSEW: I put: "No."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What labour did you find him suitable for?

DR. KOSSEW: I suggested that he would be a suitable candidate for subsidised labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards the open market, what was your opinion?

DR. KOSSEW: I said he is not suitable for the open market.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards sheltered employment?

DR. KOSSEW: I put: "No."

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you busy on that particular day in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes, we are normally very busy in the mornings.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you very busy?

DR. KOSSEW: I can't remember if I was very busy. I suppose an average morning's work.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And normally you are very busy, not so?

DR. KOSSEW: In the mornings, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How long were you with the accused?

DR. KOSSEW: Between a quarter of an hour to 20 minutes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Weren't you only busy with him for 10 minutes?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I can't say exactly how long I was busy with him but I...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You may have been busy with him for only 10 minutes?

DR. KOSSEW: He presented himself without any form of certificate or reference from anybody. He just came in as a person, I had to start from scratch, so that would have taken me a little bit longer.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Have you any qualifications in psychiatry?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that there is a difference between ideas of a persecutory nature and of a persecutory delusion?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I don't think I can - my psychiatric knowledge is not so detailed that I can make these intricate definitions or distinctions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that many people are preoccupied with their health?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Don't many people exaggerate the poor quality of boarding-house food?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't the accused fabricating?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, I had no idea of verifying his statements, and no means of verifying his statements, I'd say.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that the accused was vague?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, not actually any tests, but I got the impression that he was not able to remember things clearly and he was sort of uncertain. My questions actually were mostly concerned with his physical condition and the type of work he had previously done in order to assess his degree of disability.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Normal people also often forget these things?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that the accused's memory was defective?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, the defective memory I got as a general picture; I remember questioning him about the type of work he did and the nature of his complaints. Well, he was very uncertain as to some details of his complaints and his previous working habits, and that induced me to put down that his memory may be defective.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What test did you apply to find that he was vague?

DR. KOSSEW: A similar thing applies to the fact that he was vague. I got the impression that he didn't remember things very clearly and he was often very uncertain.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't this also a normal phenomenon?

DR. KOSSEW: It could be, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You didn't consider it necessary to have the accused sent for treatment or observation?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn't you certify the accused when you saw him in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, in my opinion he wasn't certifiable. To me he appeared to be a person who could take care of himself. He didn't look as if he needed care and attention, and I did not get the impression that he was dangerous to himself or to others.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He did not complain to you that he was not capable of doing his work at the Marine Diamond Corporation?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he ever mention to you that he was suffering from a tapeworm in June, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: He didn't mention it in June, 1966, but I did see him subsequently when he made some mention of it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When did you see him subsequently?

DR. KOSSEW: I saw him about - I can't remember the exact date - it was about two weeks ago when I was asked by Major Rossouw to come and see him, as he was complaining of some ailment.

JUDGE BEYERS: This is rather interesting because you did fill in "Alimentary and other abdominal systems: nothing abnormal detected." Now, I suppose a tapeworm would fall under that heading wouldn't it?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would certainly be intestinal, so you must have enquired, made some enquiry into his intestinal condition?

DR. KOSSEW: I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: And he didn't tell you anything about this?

DR. KOSSEW: He never mentioned a tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: He told you about the tapeworm only after the alleged murder?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You saw the accused at 2.50 p.m. on the 6th September, 1966?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You then also examined him?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he then mention anything about this so-called tapeworm?

DR. KOSSEW: That examination was at the request of the Police, to ascertain his injuries that he sustained, and I was asked to fill in form J.88 which - I don't know the exact wording - for examination of a person who alleges he's been assaulted.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is this the form that you filled in? (R.S.C.B).

DR. KOSSEW: Yes, this is the form.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you find on that occasion?

DR. KOSSEW: Must I read this form?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: No. You can refresh your memory from it.

DR. KOSSEW: Must I read this form in its entirety?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But on that occasion you found that he was not confused?

DR. KOSSEW: No, he was not confused.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And that was only 35 minutes after the murder had been committed?

DR. KOSSEW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then he was not confused?

DR. KOSSEW: He was not confused. I did add in my remarks that he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You have already said that he never mentioned a tapeworm to you on that occasion?

DR. KOSSEW: No.

Re-Examined by the DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you examined the accused at 2.50 on the 6th September, 1966, was he anxious?

DR. KOSSEW: No, he didn't appear anxious.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he appear?

DR. KOSSEW: Well, he was quiet. He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Generally he was calm?

DR. KOSSEW: He was calm.

COMMENTS ON DR. KOSSEW'S TESTIMONY

Even though he was not a qualified psychiatrist, Dr. Kossew was able to determine, after an examination which lasted "a little bit longer" than ten minutes, that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unable to work in the "open market" or in "sheltered employment." Dr. Kossew also admits that he had no intention and "no idea" and "no means" of verifying Tsafendas's statements and he obviously took as truth whatever Tsafendas told him. The fact that he was not a psychiatrist must have made it even more difficult for Dr. Kossew to understand whether the patient was lying. He stresses, however, that his intention was mostly to make a determination of his physical condition and not his mental condition.

Dr. Kossew did not consult any medical reports on Tsafendas and did not get any information about him from anyone who knew him; he took his words for granted. After examining Tsafendas for the first time, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Cooper, both psychiatrists, shared the impression that he was schizophrenic, but both wanted to examine him again before reaching a conclusion. For the non-psychiatrist Dr. Kossew, a very brief consultation was enough to diagnose him as schizophrenic and find him eligible for a disability grant. However, we should also note the circumstances under which Tsafendas was examined. The psychiatrists examined a man who had murdered the Prime Minister and were naturally very thorough, while Dr. Kossew examined an applicant for a disability grant on a very busy morning.

What is extraordinary about Dr. Kossew's role in the case is that no-one raises the fact that Tsafendas was seeking a disability grant, having been referred to Dr. Kossew by the Department of Social Welfare. In order to qualify for such a grant, an applicant had to be found "unable, owing to infirmity of mind or body, to undertake regular work."⁴⁸⁰¹ This is exactly what Tsafendas was found to be; had he been found sane, he would not have qualified for the grant.

During the previous two and half years, however, whenever Tsafendas needed to prove he was perfectly healthy and sane, in order for instance to secure a job or a permanent residence permit, all five doctors who examined him found him to be so. Tsafendas did not tell any of these doctors about the tapeworm. We should not forget that Tsafendas did not tell Dr. Kossew about it either, at least during their first two meetings, but mentioned it in the third, which was four weeks after the assassination while he was in custody.

These are the five doctors who examined Tsafendas:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found "not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁴⁸⁰² Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state was noted.⁴⁸⁰³

⁴⁸⁰¹ House of Assembly, Question No. 17. 3 February 1967. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again in reference to his residence application by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who wrote “a favourable report.” A certificate for permanent residence was subsequently issued.⁴⁸⁰⁴
- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. Tsafendas was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working for the company.⁴⁸⁰⁵
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was examined to assess his fitness to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. Again, he was found to be fit to work and duly hired.⁴⁸⁰⁶
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for a job at the Marine Diamond Corporation and was medically checked that same day. The doctor who carried out the examination⁴⁸⁰⁷ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.⁴⁸⁰⁸

In addition, the previous three years Tsafendas was also examined by another five doctors who also did not discover anything being wrong with him and he did not tell them anything about the tapeworm. They were:

- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He reported nothing about his mental condition.⁴⁸⁰⁹
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum

⁴⁸⁰² Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰³ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demitrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰⁵ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰⁶ Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰⁷ The doctor’s name in the medical report is indecipherable.

⁴⁸⁰⁸ Demitrio Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

⁴⁸⁰⁹ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work.⁴⁸¹⁰

- Finally, Dr. Darby, a casualty officer, examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.⁴⁸¹¹
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the care of Dr. Leon Solomon, a medical practitioner at Groote Schuur Hospital, was suffering from a “deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent an operation on his nose. Dr. Solomon did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas fit to return to his work.⁴⁸¹²
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker, a casualty officer, and again nothing was reported about his mental state.⁴⁸¹³

All of the above medical reports were in the possession of the South African police but none of them was used to challenge Dr. Kossew's testimony. None of these doctors was a psychiatrist, but neither was Dr. Kossew and if Dr. Kossew was acceptable as a witness, surely the ten doctors who examined Tsafendas over the previous three years should also be acceptable. However, they were not asked to testify and their diagnoses were not used in court.

The obvious reason Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to the ten doctors is that questions would have been raised about his mental state and he would have been refused a residence permit and turned down for the jobs he was seeking. Importantly, Dr. Goldman, a consultant surgeon, who examined Tsafendas just one month before Dr. Kossew did not report anything about his mental state or his ideas of a persecutory nature. Then, why did Tsafendas eventually tell Dr. Kossew? Obviously because he wanted to qualify for the grant. Tsafendas admitted openly to several witnesses in later life that “wherever I had to be found

⁴⁸¹⁰ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁴⁸¹¹ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸¹² Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁴⁸¹³ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

insane, I was found to be insane; wherever I had to be found sane, I was found sane.”⁴⁸¹⁴

Furthermore, Tsafendas never appeared to be a schizophrenic to Dr. Vasilis Tzitzafakos, a Greek general practitioner he became friendly with in Beira in 1964. The doctor always maintained that Tsafendas was a very intelligent person and certainly not a schizophrenic.⁴⁸¹⁵

The Attorney-General raised the issue of the ten-minute examination, but did not make much of it or of Dr. Kossew's professional status as a physician and not a psychiatrist. We do not also know if the Attorney-General was aware of Tsafendas's many medical examinations over the previous three years or their resulting decisions with regard to residence and employment. However, the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry were well aware of them and one would have expected the Attorney-General to know about them, too. Once again, it seems van den Berg was either not aware of certain facts or did not think it was important to raise them. The fact remains that Tsafendas was never found to be unhealthy or disturbed when he needed to be found healthy and sane; but he was invariably found unhealthy and disturbed when that was the condition he wanted.

Another aspect of the case which nobody seemed to notice was that Tsafendas told the police and his defence team not only the names of the hospitals and exact dates of his various hospitalisations, but also his exact diagnosis in each case. However, he concealed all the examinations where nothing was reported about his schizophrenia and the tapeworm. For instance, he mentioned the examination by Dr. Kossew when he was declared schizophrenic but was silent on all those ten mentioned above when he was pronounced healthy.

Dr. Kossew said when he first saw Tsafendas he seemed unable to give a coherent account of himself, which was not something any of the ten doctors who examined him ever noticed. The Attorney-General, as mentioned earlier, was in possession of a report by his own expert psychiatric witness, Professor van Wyk, which contradicted Dr. Kossew's assessment. The report said that Tsafendas “is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant.”⁴⁸¹⁶ However, just as in Dr. Cooper's case, the Attorney-General did not use it to challenge this testimony either.

⁴⁸¹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁸¹⁵ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁸¹⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 91.

Dr. Kossew also considered Tsafendas's memory defective because he could not give details about his previous work. However, Tsafendas had no such problem when he spoke to the police about his employment record, and Dr. Cooper characterised Tsafendas's memory defect as "negligible" and said that "on the whole his memory was satisfactory." In further contradiction of Dr. Cooper's diagnosis, Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas "to be a person who could take care of himself."

An extremely important issue that is not mentioned at all is the fact that Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm when he was first examined by Dr. Kossew and instead appeared to have ideas of persecutory nature. Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas twice, on June 17, 1966 and then on the day of the assassination. On neither occasion did Tsafendas mention the tapeworm, only doing so when he met Dr. Kossew a third time, some two weeks before the trial commenced. This would have been around the first week of October, a time when Tsafendas was telling everybody he met about the tapeworm. Again, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, why did not he mention it to him before, as he did with the rest of the doctors and lawyers?

Dr. Cooper testified that Tsafendas attributed his inability to work and stay in a job to the tapeworm. However, Tsafendas did not give the same excuse to Dr. Kossew, indeed he did not even mention the tapeworm when he was examined for the disability grant. Instead he made up a preposterous story about the people in his boarding house being murdered. It is difficult not to assume that for Tsafendas, the tapeworm act was something like the "flavour of the month," alternating with his other tricks such as pretending he was Saint Peter and hearing voices like Joan of Arc. He could have used the tapeworm on this occasion with Dr. Kossew, but it may have sounded rather complicated and with possibly serious ramifications for himself than just a persecution complex. If he believed that a tapeworm was responsible for his inability to work but also to find work, then almost certainly he would have told Dr. Kossew, too, as it would have fitted perfectly with his claim for his alleged inability to work. The important point here is that Dr. Kossew was not asked to comment on the fact that Tsafendas blamed the tapeworm for his job problems to Dr. Cooper but made no such claim to him.

More importantly, no one questioned the fact that Tsafendas, two months after Dr. Kossew first examined him, did not repeat any of the things he told the doctor then about people being murdered in the house where he lived. If Tsafendas believed that then, would not have believed it two months later? Since it was clearly a “delusion,” would it have just come and go so easily or he had two delusions in September and October 1966? Is it possible Tsafendas to not have believed he had a tapeworm at the time of the June 16 examination by Dr. Kossew if he really believed he had one? That would have meant that the tapeworm delusion had gone and a new one was created. Then, two months later, the tapeworm reappeared again and the persecutory ideas disappeared.

The same thing appeared to have happen again in 1964 when he was arrested by the Portuguese. In 1959 he was diagnosed as schizophrenic because of the tapeworm and in 1964 he was diagnosed again as schizophrenic but this time because he believed he was Saint Peter. This also suggests that the tapeworm delusion had gone and was replaced at the time by the belief that he was Saint Peter. Then, in June 1966, Saint Peter disappeared and the poisonous food appeared. In September 1966, the tapeworm re-appeared and the poisonous food disappeared.

According to Professor Burke, to claim two delusions at the same time or to have delusions coming and going as they were supposedly doing with Tsafendas, stretches credulity. He said:

“It’s not impossible, because the human brain is difficult to understand. It’s not impossible, but it is unlikely. It’s possible but it’s improbable. Let’s assume he was schizophrenic, for the sake of this argument, and, in the past, he had the delusion of being one of the apostles; that delusion would have stayed, so why would he, then, have created a new delusion around a tapeworm? It does not make sense, because your delusion stays fixed, so, if he really did believe he was one of the apostles, early on, that story would have stuck because the delusions will not have shifted. What happens with delusions is, they can become bigger, so they could include more things, but a shift from one delusion to another one is highly unlikely, so why would you go from apostle, and that worked for you ... well, let’s say he truly believed he was an apostle; why did that change as he went along?

It makes no sense. Even if the schizophrenia had been treated, and it came back, then the same delusion would have come back, so it’s inconsistent in terms of the delusions. You typically have a very fixed delusion, and it becomes bigger, but doesn’t change significantly, so if he had been truly schizophrenic, and he had been admitted to these hospitals previously, based on what he said, that he believed he was an apostle, then he would have killed Dr. Verwoerd, based on the delusion that he was an apostle; he wouldn’t have changed to say there was a tapeworm, or whatever the case may be. So, there's, already, some kind of inconsistency."⁴⁸¹⁷

Reyner van Zyl agrees that it is next to impossible, "Yes, one (delusion) may disappear, and the other one may then appear. But two at the same time, I don't think so, because these delusions are usually very powerful."⁴⁸¹⁸

At the time of the June 17 examination by Dr. Kossew, Tsafendas lived at Wilhelmina de Vos's boarding house, presumably the house he referred to in his remarks to Dr. Kossew about murders. De Vos testified to the police that she "considered him to be a completely normal person."⁴⁸¹⁹ At the same period Tsafendas also had his meals at Mary Scott's boarding house. Scott testified to the police that she "never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced," indeed she thought that he "appeared to be perfectly normal."⁴⁸²⁰ These are the two boarding houses that Tsafendas visited at the time.

Tsafendas was extremely close at the time to Patrick O'Ryan, Richard Poggenpoel, Costas Chagios and Elias Constantaras. Constantaras, Panagiotis Peroglou and his girlfriend, Pamela Abrahams, took their meals, together with Tsafendas, in Mary Scott's boarding house. He never told any of them anything about his "suspicion" that twenty people died because of "certain food." All the above witnesses laughed when they heard this claim.⁴⁸²¹

Constantaras, Chagios and Poggenpoel have no doubt that Tsafendas would have told them if he believed such a thing since they discussed many things, including De Vos's and Scott's boarding houses and the way they ran them. Tsafendas also loved the cooking of both his landladies and ate at both houses throughout June 1966 – hardly something to do if you believe people are dying from the food there. Constantaras has no doubt that Tsafendas made up the story.⁴⁸²² Again, Tsafendas seems to be telling a doctor more than he ever said to his friends and certainly it was not because he trusted him.

Another significant issue is that Tsafendas got a job in the Parliament after he was ⁴⁸¹⁷ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁴⁸¹⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁴⁸¹⁹ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸²⁰ Mary Cathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁸²¹ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016; Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁴⁸²² Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

examined by Dr. Kossew and found to be schizophrenic. According to Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger who was present at Tsafendas's interview, a person seeking such an appointment "must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty."⁴⁸²³ Tsafendas said nothing about the tapeworm or the mysterious deaths he had mentioned to Dr. Kossew just a month ago, and he was duly appointed. A second senior messenger who was also present at the interview, Petrus Schuin, described Tsafendas as an ordinary man, the "same as any other person that had worked there."⁴⁸²⁴

In addition, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an "anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship."⁴⁸²⁵ Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁴⁸²⁶

Dr. Kossew also found Tsafendas unable to work either in the "open market" or in "sheltered employment" and capable only of subsidised labour. However, five of Tsafendas's colleagues at Parliament were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry and none of them said he was inefficient or incapable. Gerald Shaw, a reporter for the Cape Times, would testify the following day that he found Tsafendas's work as a messenger not good enough. However, he would later state that he had only a "brief acquaintanceship" with Tsafendas and that he did not think he was insane. Interestingly, the incidents which made Shaw think that Tsafendas's work was not good occurred on September 2 and September 6, both days when Tsafendas had planned to kill Dr. Verwoerd, to shoot him at a party on the 2nd then to stab him in Parliament on the 6th. We will examine both incidents in detail in his testimony that follows.

⁴⁸²³ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁸²⁴ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁸²⁵ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

⁴⁸²⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

Tsafendas also worked as interpreter for the court in Durban for six-seven months. However, the overriding single fact that contradicted Dr. Kossew's diagnosis regarding Tsafendas's working abilities was that he worked for nearly six months as a teacher of English at the Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private language college in Turkey. Equally important is that Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas just twenty minutes after the assassination and found him to be "calm" and not confused. Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm again and Dr. Kossew did not make any note of Tsafendas being a schizophrenic.

CONCLUSION

Dr. Kossew's testimony persuades us like no other testimony that Tsafendas could be found sane or insane whenever he wanted. He was examined at least three times by doctors to determine if he was healthy enough to be hired for a job and he was found to be healthy. He was examined twice by state doctors to assess if he was healthy and capable of working in South Africa in order to get permanent residence and he was found healthy and capable. On the other hand, when Tsafendas deemed it necessary to be found mentally or physically unable to work, he was duly found unfit. Since he was always perfectly well physically, Tsafendas could not pretend otherwise, and therefore had to demonstrate mental defects, which is precisely what he did.

Dr. Kossew stated that he came to his conclusions after an examination that lasted "a little bit longer than ten minutes," and even though he was not a psychiatrist and therefore not an expert on the subject, still he declared Tsafendas to be schizophrenic. His diagnosis was accepted by the court and was taken seriously and accepted by Judge Beyers.

It is also noteworthy that Tsafendas told his defence team about Dr. Kossew's examination, but not about the other ten examinations where he was found to be perfectly healthy. However, the South African police were aware of these examinations but none of them was used to challenge Dr. Kossew's testimony.

Dr. Kossew diagnosed Tsafendas's condition as permanent and his prognosis for him as "poor," but how seriously can his testimony be taken? Here is a district surgeon and not a psychiatrist who examined a patient for "a little bit longer" than ten minutes and found him to be a schizophrenic; who came to his conclusions without looking at the patient's medical records or receiving any other information about him; who admitted that he was not able to verify his patient's words and therefore took them for granted. Is there any possibility that such a diagnosis would be taken seriously today in any modern courtroom? Or even being brought before such a court in the first place? However such a diagnosis was given serious consideration in apartheid South Africa.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 4: PETER HENRY DANIELS

INTRODUCTION

The fourth defence witness was Peter Daniels, Helen Daniels's brother. Although Helen lived in the same house as Tsafendas for fifty days, while her brother did not, Helen was not chosen as a defence witness while Peter Daniels was. Helen had written to Tsafendas when he was in Durban asking him to meet and marry her. She wrote five letters to him and sent a photograph of herself. Tsafendas travelled from Durban to Cape Town at her invitation, having replied that he wanted to meet her but to wait before making any commitment.

The defence lawyers spoke to Helen but she was not asked to testify to the court, presumably because she had told the police on September 15 that she had "not noticed anything abnormal" about Tsafendas and "there was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."⁴⁸²⁷ Instead, they asked Peter Daniels and his wife, Merle to give evidence, as neither of them had been questioned by the police. They agreed to do so in order to save Tsafendas's life. Peter Daniels's testimony was followed by that of his wife, Merle. Peter Daniels had also been interviewed by the Post and the Sunday Times, on September 18, 1966, and had lied about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas. He said it was Tsafendas who pursued Helen, writing to her and asking her to marry him,⁴⁸²⁸ while in reality it was the other way around.

PETER DANIELS'S TESTIMONY⁴⁸²⁹

MEETING TSAFENDAS AND HIS STAY IN HIS MOTHER'S HOUSE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you see Tsafendas for the first time?

P. DANIELS: On the 28th August, 1965, Tsafendas knocked at my mother's door and in her kitchen the first time I saw Tsafendas.

⁴⁸²⁷ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁸²⁸ The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, 'I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl'; Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

⁴⁸²⁹ Peter Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you know he was coming?

P. DANIELS: I did not know that he was coming.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But did you know about him?

P. DANIELS: I had never heard of him before.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he come to your place?

P. DANIELS: He had a correspondence with my sister, Ellen, who is at present in this great ministry.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In which part of the house did he live?

P. DANIELS: He stayed in the front room in my mother's house.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you charge him any lodging?

P. DANIELS: We never charged him any lodging until the day that he went to work. From then on my dad spoke to him, but before that he never paid a penny.

IN CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did I understand correctly that he never paid for board and lodging?

P. DANIELS: Not while he was not working. But when he started to work my dad spoke to him, and then he contributed something towards the house, towards the family.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you satisfied with his contribution?

P. DANIELS: My dad was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have much to do with him? Did you see him often?

P. DANIELS: All his free time he spent in my house. Most of his free time, shall I say.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I want you to make one thing clear to the Court. Your religious group, do you believe in putting up members who come to visit a town?

P. DANIELS: We fully believe if a brother is a brother, irrespective of his race, we fully accept him as a brother, because we believe that was from the beginning in the Lord Jesus.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

Peter Daniels testified that he was not aware of Tsafendas coming to his mother's house and that he had never heard of him before. He refers to Tsafendas's correspondence with his sister, but does not reveal anything else about it. Furthermore, the exchanges between himself and Advocate Cooper imply that Tsafendas was uninvited and accepted into the house for humanitarian reasons. That is entirely inaccurate. Helen Daniels, had testified to the police on September 15, 1966, that:

“During April 1965 I was visiting friends in Boksburg. There I learned of Demitrio Tsafendas. It was told to me that they would want me to meet him, he's a nice man. I never met him and later returned to Cape Town. When I was in Cape Town, I thought to correspond with him and wrote to my friends to find out his address... Other friends of mine went on holiday to Durban and I then wrote a letter to Tsafendas and asked my friends to give this to him. Our preacher is in Durban and I hoped to trace Tsafendas through the church. ... I wrote my letter during the June holidays in 1965 and received a reply from him on July 10, 1965. I wrote in my letter that I would like to meet and wanted to marry him. His answer was that he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer. I wrote to him again - four letters – all of which he answered. I sent him a picture, but he did not send me one in return. He sent word that he would come to Cape Town for our church conference - it would be in November 1965. I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965 - he arrived at my parents' house ... We had a spare room and gave him lodging.”⁴⁸³⁰

Peter Daniels made no mention of the fact that his sister wrote five letters to Tsafendas, sent him her picture and asked him to meet and marry her. The fact that Tsafendas replied that he wanted to meet her first, as most sensible men would do, he also omitted. Is it possible that Peter Daniels was unaware of these facts? It is not impossible, but must be highly unlikely. First, Peter and his sister lived next door to each other and the whole family was very close. Patrick O’Ryan and Richard Poggenpoel, good friends of the Daniels family, were aware of the situation,⁴⁸³¹ so one would expect a brother to be, too. Even if he was ignorant of the truth before the assassination, he must have become aware of it after Helen's interview by the police, when she freely set out the facts. After the police interview, Helen Daniels went into seclusion with friends and did not appear in public up to the trial.

⁴⁸³⁰ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁸³¹ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

Why, if he knew about it, would Peter Daniels not mention the marriage proposal? Most likely because he felt it would be embarrassing for his sister if the world learned that she wanted to marry the man who assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, and that it was she and not Tsafendas who initiated the relationship. This was not the first time that Daniels concealed the truth about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas. On September 18, 1966, in interviews with the Post and the Sunday Times, he declared wrongly that it was Tsafendas who had pursued Helen, writing to her several times after obtaining her address from a fellow member of the Christian Church.⁴⁸³² As we have seen, the reality was the exact reverse. It should also be mentioned here that Peter and Helen Daniels had asked Gordon Winter, the Post journalist who wrote the article to not mention the fact that Helen was a preacher of the Christian Church because it "would bring disgrace" on the Church.⁴⁸³³

Daniels also erred in the interview by saying Tsafendas came from Johannesburg when he had travelled from Durban. He said Tsafendas was accepted in the house because he had nowhere to stay and because he was a member of their Church, with again no mention of Helen's proposal. He also claimed that their meeting "did not result in a great friendship... Helen was not interested in marriage."⁴⁸³⁴

It is understandable that Peter Daniels would try to protect his sister's reputation. However, his concealment of the facts and the exchanges between Daniels and Advocate Cooper gave the impression that Tsafendas had turned up at the house out of the blue and was allowed to stay for reasons of Christian charity. That his sister asked to meet Tsafendas and even proposed marriage is not revealed at all during the trial. The Helen Daniels-Tsafendas connection has further significant implications. Daniels was a highly respected minister in her Church and the way she heard about Tsafendas suggests that he was held in high esteem by the Church members who recommended him. The fact that Daniels went to considerable trouble to get in touch with him, attempting to find his address, sending him a letter with a friend of hers and then sending him four more letters and a picture of hers, implies that she expected to meet a good man who was warmly recommended by her friends in Boksburg. Patrick O'Ryan, too, had heard good things about Tsafendas, having heard him praised by fellow Christians as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."⁴⁸³⁵

⁴⁸³² The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, 'I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl'; Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

⁴⁸³³ Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁴⁸³⁴ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

That the Attorney-General would make no attempt to challenge Peter Daniels's testimony by using his sister's statement suggests that he was not in possession of it or that he simply allowed a lie to prevail in order to miserably portray Tsafendas.

TSAFENDAS'S APPEARANCE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was Tsafendas dressed when you saw him for the first time?

P. DANIELS: He impressed me as a man shabbily dressed, poorly dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Describe his clothing.

P. DANIELS: I can remember fully the day he arrived he had on a brown suit, a black jersey with a hole right in front, a big brown hat. He was shabbily dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did it make upon you, his appearance?

P. DANIELS: He impressed me as a poor man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us what his habits were. Was he a clean man, a neatly dressed man?

P. DANIELS: Well, during the weeks he impressed me as a shabby man. He never impressed me as careful about his way of dress. He never impressed me as a man who was careful about himself.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S APPEARANCE

Tsafendas was indeed a poor man, but the majority of witnesses questioned by the police stated that he was nevertheless clean and neatly dressed. Only four witnesses out of two hundred who were questioned by the police and the Commission testified in negative terms about Tsafendas's way of dressing. One of them was Helen Daniels: "I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965, he arrived at my parents' house. When I saw him, his clothes were dirty and neglected and I had a very bad impression of him. However, I received him with friendliness. He said he was in Cape Town looking for work and his belongings are at the station. My brother went to fetch his belongings from one of the Cape stations. When the belongings came, (there were two suitcases and a bunch of pots and pans and a large bundle of dirty laundry) I was very disappointed when I saw the state of his property."⁴⁸³⁶

⁴⁸³⁵ Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

Three other witnesses made similar statements. Nickolas Nel, who had an argument with Tsafendas when they worked at F.A. Poole Engineering, testified that he "had a messy and dirty appearance,"⁴⁸³⁷ landlady Wilhelmina de Vos described Tsafendas as "dirty,"⁴⁸³⁸ and Gillian Clare Lieberman, personnel secretary at the Marine Diamond Corporation, told the police that Tsafendas had "dirty, sloppy clothes."⁴⁸³⁹ However, she and Nel had only seen Tsafendas at work, where rough clothes would be normal. Although Lieberman described Tsafendas's clothing as sloppy and dirty, she said, "I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well-travelled etc., I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy, dirty clothing."⁴⁸⁴⁰ She characterised him as "different" not mad.

Most of the witnesses questioned by the police said Tsafendas was neat, clean and well-dressed. They included:

- South Africa Police Col. van Wyk, who reported from Rhodesia and Mozambique on interviews with people in those countries who knew Tsafendas. His report stated that Tsafendas "was always neatly dressed."⁴⁸⁴¹

⁴⁸³⁶ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁸³⁷ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸³⁸ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸³⁹ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁰ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁴¹ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry about Tsafendas: "It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means."⁴⁸⁴²
- Ian Boswell testified that Tsafendas was "at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute."⁴⁸⁴³
- Gideon Cloete, an official at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas "was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance."⁴⁸⁴⁴
- Jacobus Bornman, a one-time flatmate of Tsafendas, observed that "according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch."⁴⁸⁴⁵
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was "neatly dressed" and he "never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally."⁴⁸⁴⁶
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer worked with Tsafendas at the Power Station in Cape Town and he was 'neatly dressed.'⁴⁸⁴⁷
- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas "was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy."⁴⁸⁴⁸
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas "was well dressed and gave a good appearance," although as far as she could see, he had no visible means of ⁴⁸⁴² Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁴³ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁴ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁵ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁷ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁴⁸ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

support.⁴⁸⁴⁹ She later stated that Tsafendas was always well dressed and she never saw him wearing dirty clothes except when he was coming back from work.⁴⁸⁵⁰

- Mary Scott was Tsafendas's landlady in Cape Town for two months in 1966. She told the police, "His clothing however was clean and always tidy."⁴⁸⁵¹
- Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger at the House of Assembly was one of three messengers who interviewed Tsafendas. He said that in order to be hired, a messenger "must always be neat," indicating that Tsafendas fitted that description.⁴⁸⁵²

The author asked forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about the way he was dressed. Only two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriadis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.⁴⁸⁵³ None of the rest said Tsafendas was of a dirty or neglected appearance. Indeed, the vast majority remembered him as dressing well and looking like a gentleman. It is not possible to reproduce here forty-four statements that contradict Dr. Cooper's view. The following are only from those who knew Tsafendas well:

Without quoting everyone's statement about Tsafendas, the study offers these words from people who knew him well:

- Father Nikola Banovic in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months. He saw Tsafendas virtually every day and says he was "always a very clean person and well-dressed, wearing a different hat each day."⁴⁸⁵⁴
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends at the time, stated to the author that ⁴⁸⁴⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁸⁵⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁸⁵¹ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁵² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁸⁵³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁵⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

whenever she saw Tsafendas, “he was always very neatly dressed.”⁴⁸⁵⁵

- Reuben O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. He said Tsafendas “was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes; he was a clean person and always shaved.”⁴⁸⁵⁶
- Stanley O’Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept being in touch for another year. He remembers Tsafendas as “clean and well-dressed person.”⁴⁸⁵⁷
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed and clean. She was impressed by his suits and Tsafendas told her that most of them were bought in Europe. “He was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat, and was a very clean person. “He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can’t remember for sure.”⁴⁸⁵⁸
- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis’s and her husband’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. She told the author that it is “nonsense” to say Tsafendas was not well-dressed or dirty, that in fact he always very well dressed and clean. “Sometimes it took him longer than it took me to get ready, trying to find a more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties. He never wore the same clothes for two days in a row and when it was hot he would even change twice per day. He adored hats and ties.”⁴⁸⁵⁹
- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend, described as “absolutely absurd” claims that Tsafendas was not well-dressed and clean. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He looked like a gentleman. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved ⁴⁸⁵⁵ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

⁴⁸⁵⁶ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁵⁷ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

⁴⁸⁵⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁸⁵⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s and brought me a hat for a present from Lisbon.”⁴⁸⁶⁰

- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s, I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don't remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He was certainly well-dressed.”⁴⁸⁶¹
- Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and saw him often until 1965. She remembers him being always well dressed and clean.⁴⁸⁶²
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well dressed and clean.”⁴⁸⁶³
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months. He finds the thought that Tsafendas had a dirty and neglected appearance as “absurd.” He recalls that Tsafendas “had a shower every morning when he woke and in the evening when he returned from work. He believed that he sweated in the night, so he had one in the morning.”⁴⁸⁶⁴
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when Tsafendas walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.⁴⁸⁶⁵
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six months in Istanbul. She was impressed by his many hats and remembers that a lot of people commented about how neatly Tsafendas dressed. “I remember him coming to the church always wearing a ⁴⁸⁶⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁸⁶¹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁸⁶² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁶³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁶⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁸⁶⁵ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

tie.”⁴⁸⁶⁶

- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and says, “I was very impressed by the way he was dressed. He always wore a suit and very often a tie and a hat. I never show him wearing the same clothes two days in a row.”⁴⁸⁶⁷
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He recalls Tsafendas being well dressed and clean, often wearing suits and hats.⁴⁸⁶⁸
- Peter Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams ate at the same place as Tsafendas for two or three months in 1966 and they remember him as always well dressed and very courteous.
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town, for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and remembers him as “a well-dressed man.”⁴⁸⁶⁹
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town. He remembers him “looking clean and well-dressed.”⁴⁸⁷⁰
- The thirteen Eleni crewmen were impressed with the way Tsafendas dressed. He told some of them that most of his suits were bought in Europe a few years ago and that he had not bought any new clothes since he returned to South Africa.⁴⁸⁷¹

In Europe, Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said in a newspaper interview, “He drove up here in a big, battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on...

⁴⁸⁶⁶ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁸⁶⁷ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

⁴⁸⁶⁸ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁸⁶⁹ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴⁸⁷⁰ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁴⁸⁷¹ Kleanthis Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁴⁸⁷²

Personal appearance is a subjective matter. What is sloppy and dirty to one person may be casual and comfortable to another. It is germane that Tsafendas was a poor man, who often lived in basic lodgings, possibly without the facilities to wash his clothes. In addition, the kind of jobs he did, welder and fitter, would require rough working attire. The fact is only the four people noted above – Helen Daniels, Nel, de Vos and Lieberman - out of the two hundred the police and the Commission of Enquiry interviewed and another forty-four interviewed by the author, testified that Tsafendas was dirty. The vast majority not only disagreed, but stated that Tsafendas was neatly dressed.

TSAFENDAS'S “STRANGE” HABITS AND SOME “STRANGE” INCIDENTS

TSAFENDAS AND HIS HAT

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you remember any incidents, any things that happened, in which he featured?

P. DANIELS: Are you talking about his strange habits now?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes.

P. DANIELS: I can remember Tsafendas, seeing him sitting at my dad's table, coming from work one day, with a hat on. He still had his overcoat on. He was reading his paper at the table with his hat on. And I can remember me taking him to my mother-in-law in Woodstock, and in this particular instance, as we walked down the passage I myself took off my hat, hanged it on the hanger, but he (Tsafendas) walked straight down the passage into my mother-in-law's kitchen. He never took his hat off.

Then we came back into the lounge and sat down in conversation, and he was now telling about his travels all over the world, and he never took his hat off yet. Then, as the conversation went on, tea was served, and at this time I thought that Tsafendas would now take his hat off, but as tea was served he rather adjusted himself much better in his seat, pulling the collar of his coat up, and pulling his hat further down on to his head, which gave me a very poor impression of the man. Shall I say that to my mind I now thought this man was mentally affected.

⁴⁸⁷² Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin,’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you normally with your friends, etc., behave normally and take your hat off when you are inside?

P. DANIELS: We respect our friends with great diligence, and as a body of Christians we respect each other very highly.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S HAT

According to P. Daniels, Tsafendas was mentally affected because he did not take off his hat inside his mother-in-law's house in Woodstock. Daniels had referred to this incident when he was interviewed by Gordon Winter of the Post on September 18. He said that Tsafendas was "a genuinely religious man who did not smoke, drink or use bad language," but behaved "very oddly" at times, though he did not suggest that he was mad or "not at all there," as his wife would soon claim in court. What did Tsafendas do which was very odd? "Normally well-mannered," Tsafendas had "astounded the family when he once wore his hat throughout a tea party at a friend's home."⁴⁸⁷³

For a man to wear a hat in someone's home would be considered rude in most cultures, but few would describe a person who committed such a breach of etiquette as mentally affected. According to several witnesses, Tsafendas always wore a hat. Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan, Tsafendas's landlady said he "never removed his big hat and wore a coat all the time." However, she did not take it as a sign of mental deficiency.⁴⁸⁷⁴

Hats were a Tsafendas trademark. He had many and would wear a different one each day. According to Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas began wearing hats when he was a teenager after Russian sailors in Lourenço Marques gave him one which was supposed to be similar to the hat worn by Vladimir Lenin. Tsafendas would buy a hat from each country he visited. He even bought a bonnet rouge, the soft red cap associated with the French Revolution, though he never wore it.⁴⁸⁷⁵ According to Father Nikola Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis and Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas often wore a hat, especially on those occasions when his hair would not succumb to control by brush and comb. However, none of them ever remembers him wearing a hat indoors.⁴⁸⁷⁶ Also, none of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission referred to anything of the sort, suggesting that this occasion was a one-off and Tsafendas might have had a good reason for keeping his hat on.

⁴⁸⁷³ The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, 'I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl.'

⁴⁸⁷⁴ Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan statement to the COE, 26 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁷⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

The following incident described to the police by his flatmate Jacobus Bornman demonstrates Tsafendas's concern for his headgear: "On Tsafendas's wardrobe were paper bags and on top of the paper bags were three of his hats. I reached up to a paper bag to put in certain items of clothing. When I reached for the paper bag on top of his closet, he leaped swiftly from where he lay on his bed reading. When I saw, Tsafendas stood beside me. It surprised me to see how quickly he could move since he had a big and clumsy posture and I believed that he was a lazy person. I asked him why he jumped up so quickly and he said he was afraid I would knock his hats from the closet."⁴⁸⁷⁷

Tsafendas is not the only person who wore a hat indoors. It is generally considered to be impolite to do so, however a lot of people are doing it, mostly because of stylistic issues. For example British MP and Respect Party leader George Galloway is famous for constantly wearing a fedora hat, even indoors, and it is considered to be his trademark style. Galloway has worn hat in indoor public speeches, public lectures etc.⁴⁸⁷⁸ Johnny Depp and Steven Spielberg often wear a hat indoors, as can be seen in their publicity photos. A long-established British strip cartoon character, Andy Capp, a typical working man, wears his cap at all times, including in bed, and Thomas Magnum, from the 1980s television series, Magnum p.i., wears a baseball cap indoors. None of these characters, real or fictional, ever succumbed to mental illness. It could be argued that manners change over the years. However, whatever the strictures of the time, wearing a hat indoors could be considered a sign of rudeness, but certainly not of insanity.

However shocked Peter Daniels may have appeared, Helen Daniels did not say anything about the hat incident, since presumably she did not find it strange. In fact, she ⁴⁸⁷⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁸⁷⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁷⁸ Freeman, H. (The Guardian), 1 June 2015, 'A man refusing to take his hat off indoors? This once, I doff my cap to George Galloway'; Perraudin, F. (The Guardian), 28 May 2015, 'George Galloway tweets his intention to run for London mayor.'

testified that “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”

Once again, the Attorney-General could have challenged this testimony since Daniels's sister had not noticed “anything abnormal” and “there was never any indication” that Tsafendas was “mentally abnormal.” The fact that Daniels had lived under the same roof as Tsafendas and knew him better than her brother adds value to her testimony.

P. DANIELS ON OTHER “STRANGE” INCIDENTS BY TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other strange incidents that you recall?

P. DANIELS: There are many instances that we can recall of Tsafendas. There is an instance now where one hot day he tried to cool the fowls off, which proves to me that he was also mentally deranged.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he try to cool the fowls off?

P. DANIELS: He got hold of the hosepipe and tried to cool the fowls down, because he thought that they were hot, too. (Laughter in Court.)

JUDGE BEYERS: One does it with fowls when it gets hot. I keep fowls. When it gets very hot you may have to do it. They die if you don't, sometimes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other strange incidents?

P. DANIELS: There are instances when in our meetings, as we worship in our homes, he was one of the members in the gathering, and we as a rule each give our testimony as Christians, discussing the word of God, and he (Tsafendas) after he had said something, would put his Bible and hymn book down and be unconcerned about his surroundings, which impressed me too that this man is a strange man.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING OTHER “STRANGE” INCIDENTS

The Court's response to Tsafendas spraying water on the family chickens highlights the desperation of Peter Daniels's attempt to portray Tsafendas as mentally unbalanced. To his surprise and no doubt that of the defence team, the judge intervened to say that he kept chickens and it was sometimes necessary to cool them off in very hot weather. Thus what Tsafendas did, far from being insane, was the right thing to do and may have saved the lives of the birds.

The second incident, concerning Tsafendas's demeanour at a prayer gathering, defies analysis. That Tsafendas appeared "unconcerned about his surroundings" is neither here nor there and certainly in no way strange, even in a context of meditative prayer. The likelihood is that Peter Daniels knew perfectly well that none of these incidents meant Tsafendas had mental problems, but he did not have much else to say to support the defence's insanity claim. Patrick and Louisa O'Ryan were asked by Advocate Cooper to exaggerate stories about Tsafendas to "get him free."⁴⁸⁷⁹ It is very likely that Peter Daniels was asked to do the same, especially since Helen, who knew Tsafendas better, was not asked to testify.

TSAFENDAS'S EATING HABITS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you tell us anything about his eating habits?

P. DANIELS: Yes. There is a very incident that will go down with me in all my life. This was the day of the morning when Tsafendas left us. It was round about 7 o'clock the morning when this knock came at our door. My wife and myself got up. As a matter of fact, she got up before me. And here was Tsafendas with a parcel under his arm, a parcel of meat, eggs and some other victuals, and blood dripping down his coat. He was unconcerned about that. The next thing he was looking for a stove and a pan. The wife handed it over to him, showed him the stove, gave him the pan. He started, without washing this meat that he had - just gave it a shake, and into the pan it went. And before it was even done, Tsafendas got a plate from the wife and settled down to this big meal. We surmised it was approximately two to three pounds of T-bone steak. On this particular morning I can well remember DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it just meat, or what else did he have?

P. DANIELS: There were meat and eggs and tomatoes and onions. It was all in one dish. And then Tsafendas settled down to this great plate of meat, and I was sitting next to the table, looking at the man, and as he dug into it, I could hear him chewing away.

JUDGE BEYERS: What did you expect him to do except chew at his T-bone steak? Did you expect him to swallow it whole?

⁴⁸⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Patrick O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

P. DANIELS: The way he settled down to it - he settled down to it like a dog.

JUDGE BEYERS: He really enjoyed this T-bone steak?

P. DANIELS: He really and thoroughly settled down to this meat. (Laughter.)

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say he settled down to it like a dog?

P. DANIELS: Really and truly getting his teeth into it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Had you seen a human being behave like this before?

P. DANIELS: Not in all my life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he eat it - with a knife and fork?

P. DANIELS: He first started off with knife and fork, after he was finished he dugged in, two hands and all. And he was dirty as far as of the mouth here (indicates down outer edges) and then he told me personally - my wife was present - "Pete", he told me, "I am making a pig of myself", and I told him I could see it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he say, why was he eating this?

P. DANIELS: He said he had to feed the worms.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How many could have fed off this food that he consumed in this way?

P. DANIELS: Easy two people.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On any other occasion did he bring food?

P. DANIELS: There was an occasion in my dad's house. I saw the half a sheep that Tsafendas brought in there, and I believe the family said that on this day also blood was dripping from the meat on to his clothes, which he was unconcerned about. There was another occasion when he came with approximately half a cheese and a full liver poloney. And all these things were queer to the family, because we are not accustomed to things like that.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S EATING HABITS

Peter Daniels claimed that Tsafendas had messy eating ways and that he ate a lot. This is something that several witnesses told the police, including his sister, but no one found anything sinister about that, including Helen Daniels, who said, “besides his messy ways I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.” Many people can eat sloppily and consume enough for two without being insane. Actor Marlon Brando and actor-writer-director Orson Welles famously ate hugely and messily. They were not mad.

What Peter Daniels did not mention about the morning that Tsafendas arrived in their house at seven o'clock, and subsequently cooked and ate such a big meal, was that Tsafendas had just come back from his night shift and therefore this was his dinner and not his breakfast. Naturally, when he worked on the night shift, he always used to eat his dinner after he finished work, which was very early in the morning; then he would go to sleep. He did exactly the same thing when he was at the O'Ryans' house, the Poggenpoels' and elsewhere. None of them thought it an act of madness or anything strange.⁴⁸⁸⁰ When was he supposed to eat his dinner, when he was working from six in the afternoon until six in the morning? People tend to eat after they finish work, no matter what time it is.

Daniels also fails to explain adequately is that Tsafendas also brought food for the whole family, something his family was not accustomed to. Neither was the O'Ryan family when Tsafendas lived there but they saw it differently. Reuben O'Ryan told the author: “He was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”⁴⁸⁸¹ That Tsafendas did not wash his meat did not point to a lack of hygiene. The UK Food Standards Agency states that “washing raw meat is not recommended. Bacteria in raw meat and poultry juices can be spread to other foods, utensils, and surfaces.”⁴⁸⁸² Tsafendas probably knew that, but even if he did not, many people do not wash meat because, they believe all the bacteria dies in the cooking. Whatever the reason for not washing a chicken before you cook it, it certainly cannot be taken as a sign of insanity.

The strangest line in Daniels's testimony is his reference to “worms,” not to a “worm,” but to “worms,” plural. The five psychiatrists, one district surgeon, one specialist physician and two psychologists who testified at the summary trial all said Tsafendas told them about a worm, one worm not many worms. The author is not in position to know why Daniels said worms and not worm. It could have been a slip of the tongue, or Daniels ⁴⁸⁸⁰ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁸¹ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁸⁸² UK Food Standards Agency, 2014, 'Don't wash raw chicken.'

misheard Tsafendas, or Tsafendas misspoke saying worms when he meant worm, or Daniels mention the word in order to support the defence's line, as Patrick O'Ryan would do. It is possible, though highly unlikely, that Tsafendas mentioned "worms" to Peter Daniels but not to the other members of the family.

It is also possible that Peter Daniels might have heard about the tapeworm at Patrick O'Ryan's house, when Tsafendas joked with him as he had done with Louisa O'Ryan. A further possibility exists, that Patrick O'Ryan asked Daniels, who was a good friend, to mention the word in court in the same way that he was urged to do by Advocate Cooper. It is also equally possible that Advocate Cooper himself asked Daniels to refer to it in his testimony, as he had the O'Ryan's to do. Tsafendas often made play of the tapeworm with the O'Ryan children, demonstrating what happened when it became hungry, and as we have seen, he staged such a performance once after a prayer gathering,⁴⁸⁸³ when the Daniels must have been present.

TSAFENDAS'S INTEREST IN WOMEN

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know if he was interested in any woman while he was staying with you?

P. DANIELS: Yes. Not with us, but we learned afterwards that he was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he discuss his matrimonial problems with you?

P. DANIELS: Not with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is not married, is he?

P. DANIELS: He is not married.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S INTEREST IN WOMEN

Again, Peter Daniels does not mention anything regarding his sister's proposition to Tsafendas regarding marriage. He must surely have known about his sister writing letters to ⁴⁸⁸³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Tsafendas, who then arrived at the Daniels house specifically to meet her. Daniels's parents naturally knew about it.

TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Whose company did he prefer, Coloured or white, while he was staying with you?

P. DANIELS: He preferred to be amongst the Coloured community.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any discussion about the identification card?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He said he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man, so that he can easily be accepted, because he said he was really never accepted among the white folk, and for that reason he make application to be made a European, but that was refused him, and afterwards he told ...

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean to be declared a non-European?

P. DANIELS: A non-European.

JUDGE BEYERS: To be declared a Coloured man?

P. DANIELS: He preferred to be a non-European. But that was refused, because it was told him that there are more privileges on the other side.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES

Peter Daniels here directly contradicts the conclusion Dr. Cooper arrived at after examining Tsafendas, that he was "unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the Natives." If he was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds and the Natives, he would hardly have preferred to live with them and even apply for reclassification as Coloured.

TSAFENDAS'S INTENTION TO START A BUSINESS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He was unemployed. Did he ever discuss with you starting any businesses or anything like that?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He discussed with me of putting up such a tremendous business where all could have - in other words, what can I term this - do-it-yourself workshop, where people can come to him and they can either fix their cars or make their furniture or do anything, and make it your own shop. He had that in mind. And the next thing he would tell us he is going away. That to me was very strange, that a man talking about settling down in a place and the very next moment talk about going away. That also proves to me that this man was not altogether.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S INTENTION TO START A BUSINESS

The fact that Tsafendas suddenly changed his mind about starting a business suggested to Peter Daniels that Tsafendas "was not altogether." There are many reasons why Tsafendas may have considered such a move then changed his mind. He may have thought things might work out between him and Helen and that a do-it-yourself workshop would support them in married life. Perhaps he decided that it would not work with Helen and it was best to put the episode behind him. He could then hardly stay on in the Daniels household when no relationship eventuated with Helen. What seems most plausible is that Daniels was aware of all this and was just trying to find support for the notion that Tsafendas "was not altogether."

P. DANIELS'S OVERALL IMPRESSION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What then is your overall impression that you have of Tsafendas?

P. DANIELS: Well, my own words at one time were "This man is mad."

JUDGE BEYERS: I am interested. When did you have occasion to say this, and why?

P. DANIELS: Because this man, the accused, would talk about doing a business, doing something, and never really getting to the actual thing. He would even start making a thing. I can remember at one instance he was very zealous in doing something for us - he even had the thing - and he just left it and never touched it again.

JUDGE BEYERS: When you used the words to yourself - did you say it to somebody or did you say it to yourself?

P. DANIELS: I said that to my brothers.

JUDGE BEYERS: “This man is mad”?

P. DANIELS: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am very interested. The reactions of the ordinary man may be very helpful. Did you mean mad in the sense of queer, off his rocker, or did you mean something else?

P. DANIELS: I meant that he was half off his rocker. He wasn't altogether there, because a man in his full and true senses would never discuss nor would he have done the things which the accused has done.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was his flow of speech?

P. DANIELS: He used to speak in a manner - he would speak a few words, then break off, and then continue with some other subject rather than the one he was talking about at the first.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In conversation, would Tsafendas stick to the point?

P. DANIELS: No. He would often wander from what he would say and he would oftentimes have ended up with, before he would finish a verse, “You know, Pete”, or “You know.” He used to get a blank spot in his mind. That was very often.

COMMENTS ON P. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS OVERALL IMPRESSION OF TSAFENDAS

Peter Daniels concluded that Tsafendas was mad because a “man in his full and true senses would never discuss nor would he have done the things” which Tsafendas did. However, from he has said, none of the things he mentions are things that a sane man would not do. That he kept his hat on in the house, had bad table manners and suddenly changed his mind about something do not suggest that he was insane.

Daniels also fails to explain what the “thing” was that Tsafendas was going to make for them, and neither the judge, the Attorney-General nor his own advocate asked him to clarify it. At the same time, Helen Daniels, who knew Tsafendas better than he did, flatly contradicted his view of Tsafendas's sanity, saying that “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad was interesting.”⁴⁸⁸⁴

Regarding Tsafendas's flow of speech and the blank spots, this seems to be something that only Peter Daniels noticed. None of the two hundred people questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry mentioned anything like that. On the contrary, several people were impressed by the way Tsafendas talked:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”⁴⁸⁸⁵
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁴⁸⁸⁶
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁴⁸⁸⁷
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike's Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”⁴⁸⁸⁸
- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁴⁸⁸⁹
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria in 1964. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except ⁴⁸⁸⁴ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁸⁸⁵ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁸⁶ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁸⁷ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

⁴⁸⁸⁸ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁴⁸⁸⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁴⁸⁹⁰

- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁴⁸⁹¹
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “... was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman.”⁴⁸⁹²
- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas’s supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas “was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”⁴⁸⁹³
- Helen Grispos grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and her mother was Tsafendas’s step-mother best friend there described him to the police as “well-mannered and intelligent.”⁴⁸⁹⁴
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”⁴⁸⁹⁵
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the ⁴⁸⁹⁰ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁸⁹¹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁹² Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴⁸⁹³ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁸⁹⁴ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁸⁹⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”⁴⁸⁹⁶

None of the forty-four witnesses interviewed by the author also mentioned anything like that. Two priests who met and talked with Tsafendas in prison and in hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and who spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that he did not suffer from thought blocking, that he did not talk in a disjointed manner and that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation with others.

Father Michalis Visvinis, who visited Tsafendas in prison very regularly for five years (1989-1994), and spent several hours talking with him, strongly denied to the author that there was anything wrong with the way Tsafendas spoke. He told the author:

“No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [in a disjointed manner]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is entirely false.”⁴⁸⁹⁷

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”⁴⁸⁹⁸

⁴⁸⁹⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁴⁸⁹⁷ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁴⁸⁹⁸ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Mary Eendracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, said “Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with his speech or his thoughts, both were excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours about politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people’s.”⁴⁸⁹⁹

Alexander Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison. He flatly denied to the author that there was anything wrong with the way Tsafendas spoke. He told the author: “No, this is not true. He was not talking in a disjointed manner. I never heard him talking like this, neither in 1972 nor in 1996. He always spoke absolutely fine.”⁴⁹⁰⁰

One of the strongest comments comes from Gavasiadis, who was with him every day for nine months in 1964. She said about Tsafendas:

“Dimitris could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn’t let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white. If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong. If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him...

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned.”⁴⁹⁰¹

Gavasiadis was not the only one impressed by the way Tsafendas spoke. None of the crewmen from the Eleni ever got the impression that Tsafendas’s speech was disjointed. In fact, they were impressed by the way he spoke.⁴⁹⁰² The seamen called him “Professor”

⁴⁸⁹⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁹⁰⁰ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁴⁹⁰¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁴⁹⁰² Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016; Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17

because of his knowledge and mode of speech.⁴⁹⁰³ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He talked like a university professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.⁴⁹⁰⁴ Another crew member, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can’t explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He knew how to speak and how to pick up words. He was talking like a professor; this is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”⁴⁹⁰⁵

In addition, Tsafendas worked in 1961 for six months as a teacher at the best private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. He worked initially on trial basis where he was under observation for a week before he was appointed permanently. Obviously he successfully passed this stage as he remained as a teacher in the college for about six months. Mrs. Adviye Vedia Limasollu, wife of Limasollu Naci, the proprietor, does not remember Tsafendas, but is positive that her husband would never have appointed or retained a teacher who talked in a disjointed manner.⁴⁹⁰⁶ In fact, Mr. Naci became a very good friend of Tsafendas and spent a lot of time with him during these six months.⁴⁹⁰⁷

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author and stated that there was nothing wrong with Tsafendas’s speech:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;⁴⁹⁰⁸
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;⁴⁹⁰⁹
- His first cousin Mary Eendracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for nine months in 1964;⁴⁹¹⁰

January 2014; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁹⁰³ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁹⁰⁴ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

⁴⁹⁰⁵ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁴⁹⁰⁶ Adviye Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

⁴⁹⁰⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

⁴⁹⁰⁸ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁴⁹⁰⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁹¹⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁴⁹¹¹
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;⁴⁹¹²
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;⁴⁹¹³
- Irene Michaletos, who was close to him for more than a year (1964-1965) and whose house he often visited;⁴⁹¹⁴
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, who first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.⁴⁹¹⁵
- Costas Poriassis who met him in 1965 in Beira;⁴⁹¹⁶
- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;⁴⁹¹⁷
- Nick Papadakis, who lived under the same roof for two months and associated with him for another two months in Mozambique in 1964;⁴⁹¹⁸
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks.⁴⁹¹⁹
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁴⁹²⁰

Finally, in July 1966, only a few weeks, after he was examined by Dr. Kossew, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a journalist named N.D. Hartford on the Cape Argus. They had met earlier in the year when Tsafendas enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-⁴⁹¹¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁹¹² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁹¹³ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁹¹⁴ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁹¹⁵ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁹¹⁶ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁴⁹¹⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁹¹⁸ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁴⁹¹⁹ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁴⁹²⁰ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁴⁹²¹ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective and stated that Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁴⁹²²

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The accused came from Durban, not so?

P. DANIELS: The accused told me he came from Durban by way of hitchhiking and by train from Port Elizabeth

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he come alone?

P. DANIELS: He came all alone.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I believe he had four suitcases with him?

P. DANIELS: Not four.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many?

P. DANIELS: I can remember him having one or two suitcases. He had with him a bundle of dirty washing and he had a bundle of tools with him. His welding kit he had with him,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever see him use the tools?

P. DANIELS: I never saw him use the tools.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Just give us the date again when he arrived at your home?

P. DANIELS: He arrived approximately Saturday midday, the 28th of August, 1965.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: It was not the 10th of July?

P. DANIELS: It was not on the 10th of July.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The 28th August?

P. DANIELS: The 28th August, 1965.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And he lived in your house until the 16th of October?

P. DANIELS: October.

⁴⁹²¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

⁴⁹²² Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did I understand correctly that he never paid for board and lodging?

P. DANIELS: Not while he was not working. But when he started to work my dad spoke to him, and then he contributed something towards the house, towards the family.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were you satisfied with his contribution?

P. DANIELS: My dad was.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: For how long was he out of employment?

JUDGE BEYERS: Three weeks, the witness said.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he receive letters while he lived with you?

P. DANIELS: Yes. He received letters from - I think from Greece, this man John Micheletos,⁴⁹²³ whom he knew so well, and from other correspondents which I don't know.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was his address in Greece, do you know? Was it Athens?

P. DANIELS: I would not know what his address was.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You don't know whether he lived in Athens?

P. DANIELS: That I can't say, whether he was in Athens.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused also write letters?

P. DANIELS: He used to write letters himself.

COMMENTS ON THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CROSS-EXAMINATION

Van den Berg's cross-examination of Peter Daniels sheds no new light on the case and does not attempt to challenge his testimony in the slightest. It demonstrates either his incompetence or ignorance of the information gathered by the police and therefore his inability seriously to challenge Daniels's testimony. One cannot help but wonder what was the purpose of this cross-examination and line of questioning. None of the points Daniels made was challenged. Instead, the Attorney-General asked about statements Daniels had already made, a point which the Court highlighted, or asked him irrelevant or unimportant questions such as how many suitcases Tsafendas had, whether he used his welding kit and if he received and wrote letters. Daniels twice said that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965, but the Attorney-General still asked if it was July 10. What was the purpose of this question? Helen Daniels had testified to the police that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965. Van den Berg did not suggest that August 28 might have been the wrong date, so why press this? Even if the date was wrong and Tsafendas had stayed for a longer or shorter period with the family, what difference would that have made to the case?

⁴⁹²³ This John Michaletos, Tsafendas's childhood friend who recruited him to the Democratic Army (DSE) during the Greek Civil War and spent the Christmas 1961 in his house in Athens.

What highlights the pointlessness of this cross-examination is that the Attorney-General could easily have broken it down by using Helen Daniels's testimony to the police on September 15, 1966. Not only did she not mention any of the things which Peter Daniels mentioned, but she stated clearly that Tsafendas's behaviour was normal and that she had not "noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal."⁴⁹²⁴ Nothing at all would have changed in Peter Daniels's testimony if the cross-examination had not taken place, and it would have saved everyone some time.

TSAFENDAS AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH THE DANIELS FAMILY

Peter Daniels and his family were not happy with Tsafendas, primarily because of his failure to form a relationship with Helen Daniels with a view to marriage. Helen had initiated the contact, stating frankly that she wanted to marry him. His first response, she said, was that "he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer." When he did meet her, he clearly decided that he did not want to marry her. As she said in her statement to the police, "He also did not try to establish a relationship with me ... and he never discussed our relationship, thus I was happy that my earlier proposal died a silent death."⁴⁹²⁵

Tsafendas appears to be logical and calculating in this business. He was careful to meet Helen Daniels in the flesh before deciding whether or not to marry her; deciding he did not wish to do so, he made no effort to establish a relationship with her. This seems perfectly sensible behaviour, perhaps beyond the reach a man who was "not altogether there." Nevertheless, Tsafendas always spoke well of Helen Daniels and her family and never made reference to the marriage issue. He was grateful to them and in later years acknowledged the part he believed they played in saving his life by exaggerating the stories about him.

⁴⁹²⁴ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁹²⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

CONCLUSION

There are three major points:

- Daniels conceals the fact that his sister pursued Tsafendas, writing to him and asking him to meet and marry her.
- Daniels claims that Tsafendas is mad because of some things he said and did, although all of these things could have been done by any normal man.
- The Attorney-General could have easily challenged, indeed broken down, Daniels's testimony, just by using the statement his sister gave to the police, but he did not do it.

Peter Daniels omitted from his testimony the fact that his sister wrote five letters to Tsafendas, including one with her picture, asking him to meet and marry. It was not the first time he had lied. In two interviews with the Post and the Sunday Times on September 18, 1966, he claimed that it was Tsafendas who pursued his sister, writing to her several times and that their meeting "did not result in a great friendship... Helen was not interested in marriage."⁴⁹²⁶ It is understandable that Daniels tried to protect his sister from the inevitable negative reaction had it become known that she wrote letters to the man who assassinated the country's Prime Minister, asking him to meet and marry her.

However, there are wider implications as to the way Tsafendas is portrayed, since Daniels offers a picture of a homeless person who practically forced himself on the family or was offered bed and board for humanitarian reasons or because he was a fellow member of their Church. If Tsafendas was mad or even strange, Helen Daniels's friends would not have told her about him with the suggestion that she should meet him and marry him. Helen was a minister in their Church and her friends were also very religious and their view was that Tsafendas would be a good and suitable husband, indicating how highly they thought of him.

Some of the strange things Peter Daniels imputed to Tsafendas turned out not to be strange at all. The perfect example concerned Tsafendas spraying the family chickens with water to cool them in hot weather. Daniels believed Tsafendas was insane for doing so and Judge Beyers had to explain to him that this was a necessary procedure sometimes to save the birds' lives and that he personally did that, too.

⁴⁹²⁶ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed'; The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, 'I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl.'

That Tsafendas's actions during his stay with the Daniels family were perfectly normal is supported by Helen Daniels, who lived in the same house at the same time and later told the police that she had not "noticed anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad was interesting."⁴⁹²⁷ If she thought Tsafendas was acting as a mad person, she would have told the police. What is more, she lived under the same roof as Tsafendas, which her brother did not.

What is most likely is that Daniels himself did not believe that the things Tsafendas said and did were crazy, and he was merely supporting the defence's line to get Tsafendas "free." Patrick O'Ryan and Louisa O'Ryan said they were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas and to "make sure to mention the tapeworm." The Daniels family, close friends of the O'Ryan, may well have been asked to do the same by Advocate Cooper. The fact that Helen Daniels, who knew Tsafendas better than her brother and played a more important role in his life, was not asked by the defence to testify while her brother and his wife were, also suggests that the defence's aim, and rightly so, was not to find someone who knew Tsafendas well, but someone who could support their line of argument.

Although Helen Daniels was not a suitable witness for the defence, she surely was for the State. She had lived in the same house as Tsafendas for about fifty days, she had corresponded with him and she had asked him to marry her. In addition to this, she had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane, a complete contradiction to her brother's testimony. The Attorney-General should have been aware of her statement and he could have easily used it to challenge her brother's testimony. He could even have asked her to testify as a witness for the prosecution to challenge the defence's line that Tsafendas was insane. However, not for the first time, evidence that could have challenged or broken down the case for insanity was not used.

It is important to remember here that Attorney-General van den Berg had made a mistake regarding the reclassification issue in his memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3, 1966, making it obvious that he was not, even then, in possession of Helen Daniels's statement. It seems more likely that van den Berg was never in possession of her statement rather than choosing not to use it to challenge Peter Daniels's testimony. Despite the fact that none of the things mentioned by Peter Daniels could really be considered as actions of an insane man, Judge Beyers, as we will see in his final verdict, found it as very convincing as to the fact that Tsafendas was mad.

⁴⁹²⁷ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 5: MERLE DANIELS⁴⁹²⁸

EXTRACTS FROM MERLE DANIELS'S TESTIMONY⁴⁹²⁹

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The man before Court here, Demitrio Tsafendas, when did you see him for the first time?

M. DANIELS: The first time I saw him was on the 28th August.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

M. DANIELS: 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

M. DANIELS: I saw him in my mother-in-law's home.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see much of him, did you talk often to him?

M. DANIELS: Well, in his free time he used to come in there, you know, and speak to us a little, about his travels.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he also a member of your religious persuasion?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, we accepted him as a brother of our faith, that is how we took him in.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you expect him to pay for his lodgings when he arrived at your home?

M. DANIELS: When he first came there he wasn't working, so my father-in-law did not expect anything from him until he started to work.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When he arrived there, what impression did he make on you?

M. DANIELS: Well, he seemed to be a strange person. I mean, he was shabbily dressed, and to me he seemed strange the first day I saw him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His shabby dress, did that make/him strange? Anything else?

M. DANIELS: No, well, just because of the way he was dressed and he started speaking to ⁴⁹²⁸ Merle Daniels is the wife of Peter Daniels and sister-in-law of Helen Daniels.

⁴⁹²⁹ Marle Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

us of the different preachers he had met all over the world from the same faith.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were there any strange incidents that you can remember in connection with the accused?

M. DANIELS: Yes. I can very well remember one afternoon. This particular day he had gone out to look for work, and this particular afternoon when he came home - it was about mid-afternoon - and I asked him to come over and have a cup of tea with us, because my mother and aunt had visited me that day, and I asked him to come and have tea with us this day. He said that he would, he was first going to take his coat off as it was a hot day and he had his big overcoat with him. And he went next-door, but before he left I asked him to tell us a little about his travels and where he has been all over the world, and he said that he would come and tell my mom and aunt a little about it. He went next-door and he came back and he brought his bible along with him, which seemed such a strange thing, because I had asked him to speak about his travels. I spoke to him at the table and I said: "Well, Demitrio, tell us a little about your travels", and he looked at me but he was unconcerned about the question I had asked him, and he was reading about the experiences of Paul and relating it, telling me a bit about the life of Paul. He said that his own life, when he examined himself, he felt that he came so far short when he thought of the life of Paul. And after that he just left. He asked us to excuse him and he went home, still with his bible under his arm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On this occasion, after he started talking about Paul, did you try to bring him back to talking about his travels?

M. DANIELS: Yes. I said to him: "Well, Demitrio, tell us a bit about your travels. That is the purpose-that I asked you", and he wasn't concerned about the question that I had asked him. He was just reading his bible and speaking about the travels of Paul.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you think of any other incidents?

M. DANIELS: Well, there was a time in my mother-in-law's home that he would lie on the bed with his boots on, on her clean quilt, and he would not think of removing them before he would go and lie down.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want to go into the other incidents that the Court knows of, but what is your overall impression of this man, Demitrio Tsafendas?

M. DANIELS: Well, I often said, we even said amongst ourselves, surely Demitrio is not all there; by the things that he did and the strange way that he acted sometimes we felt that he wasn't all there.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S ASSISTANT

BRUNETTE: Was he a bit eccentric?

M. DANIELS: Could you explain that word to me?

BRUNETTE: Well, I mean he did strange things here and there, but it wasn't anything in particular.

JUDGE BEYERS: It was something particular. He spoke about St. Paul when he should have been speaking about himself, and he lay with dirty boots on the clean coverlet. That is what I have got at the moment - particulars.

BRUNETTE: When you asked him to come and tell about his travels, could he perhaps have misunderstood you?

M. DANIELS: No, I don't think he could, because I spoke to him quite a few times. I said to him "Demitrio, tell us about your travels" and he looked at me and said "Yes, Merle", but he wasn't concerned about the question of us asking him.

BRUNETTE: Did he perhaps read to you about the travels of Paul?

M. DANIELS: That is right. He sat at table with his Bible and just pushed the cake plate aside and he started telling us about the travels of Paul.

BRUNETTE: Did he pay to stay with you, or what was the arrangement?

M. DANIELS: He did not stay with me.

BRUNETTE: With your father? Do you know?

M. DANIELS: Well, after the first few weeks he did not work and my father did not expect him to pay anything, but when he started work my father-in-law spoke to him and asked him if he would contribute something towards the family, towards the home.

BRUNETTE: Was he willing to do that?

M. DANIELS: Yes, he was.

BRUNETTE: Do you know whether he paid after that? Did he pay for any boarding or lodging after that?

M. DANIELS: While he stayed in my father-in-law's house?

BRUNETTE: Yes?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, he did. After my father-in-law spoke to him he did pay, because then he worked.

BRUNETTE: Are you perhaps worried that a member of your Church is in trouble?

M. DANIELS: Well, when we heard about it we were shocked. We were upset about it, and in a way felt sorry that he could have done such a thing.

BRUNETTE: Is it worrying you?

M. DANIELS: It has to a certain extent. I mean, we accepted him as a brother of the Faith and it is not of us people to do any violence of that sort.

BRUNETTE: Did you ever have anything to do with his washing?

M. DANIELS: Well, the first day he came there he asked me to wash shirts for him for the meeting of the Sunday, and I said I would, but then he came with a big bundle of washing, dirty washing, which I did do for him the first day. But after that he stayed with my mother-in-law, so she did the rest of his washing. But the first day I did his washing.

BRUNETTE: So as far as you know he generally had his clothes washed, and he wore clean clothes?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, my mother-in-law kept him clean. I mean, she did his washing and ironing for him.

BRUNETTE: Would you like to protect the name of your Church in this matter?

M. DANIELS: Yes, well, I would.

COMMENTS ON M. DANIELS'S TESTIMONY

Before we analyse this testimony, we should consider the issue of Tsafendas's clothes. Helen Daniels testified to the police that Tsafendas was wearing dirty clothes when she first saw him and he had dirty laundry with him. According to Merle Daniels, the day Tsafendas arrived at their house, he immediately asked her to wash his clothes, which suggests that he was aware of their condition and was not habitually a dirty person.

As with Peter Daniels's testimony, there is nothing in Merle's statements to indicate that Tsafendas was schizophrenic. The word eccentric is unknown to her and the incidents she describes as “strange” are things that any normal man might do. Albert Einstein had several habits which could be described as “strange” by some people, for example playing as an adult with a toy telescope, wearing shoes with holes and having his wife cut his hair because he was parsimonious. He was also absent-minded, often forgetting his own address.⁴⁹³⁰ Einstein was not mad, but if Merle Daniels had come across him, it is very likely that she would have also considered him very strange and perhaps “not all there.”

TSAFENDAS WAS “STRANGE” BECAUSE OF THE WAY HE WAS DRESSED

One of the reasons Tsafendas seemed strange to Merle Daniels was the way he dressed – “shabbily,” she said. None of some two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry thought Tsafendas was strange because of how he dressed. The only person among those interviewed who found Tsafendas’s style of dressing to be “different” was Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited. “I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.”⁴⁹³¹ Still, she found him “different,” not mad. Tsafendas never had much money, so dressing for fashion might not have been a priority. Nonetheless, several witnesses referred to his frequent purchases of stylish headwear.

In addition, several testified that Tsafendas was neatly dressed. For example:

- The report of Col. van Wyk from Rhodesia and Mozambique which contained interviews with people who Tsafendas in these two countries, stated that Tsafendas “was always neatly dressed.”⁴⁹³²
- Ian Boswell testified that Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute.”⁴⁹³³

⁴⁹³⁰ Chilton (The Telegraph), 19 April 2016. ‘Albert Einstein: he really was an egghead.’

⁴⁹³¹ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁹³² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas's landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas paid for a serviced room, “but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁴⁹³⁴
- Gideon Cloete, an employer at the Department of Labour testified that Tsafendas “was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.”⁴⁹³⁵
- Jacobus Bornman testified that ‘according to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat on his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch.’⁴⁹³⁶
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁴⁹³⁷
- Redvers Quintin Wakfer who worked with Tsafendas at the Power Station in Cape Town testified that Tsafendas was ‘neatly dressed.’⁴⁹³⁸
- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas ‘was well dressed and appeared to be wealthy.’⁴⁹³⁹
- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, testified that Tsafendas ‘was well dressed and gave a good appearance although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.’⁴⁹⁴⁰
She later also stated that Tsafendas was always very well dressed and never showed him

⁴⁹³³ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁴⁹³⁴ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁴⁹³⁵ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁴⁹³⁶ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁹³⁷ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁴⁹³⁸ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA; Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁴⁹³⁹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁹⁴⁰ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

wearing dirty clothes except from when he was coming back from work.

- Sidney Wiehand, a senior messenger at the Assembly who was one of the three messengers who interviewed Tsafendas. He said that in order to be hired, he “must always be neat” and suggested that Tsafendas was like this.⁴⁹⁴¹
- Mary Scott was Tsafendas's landlady in Cape Town for two months in 1966. She told the police, “His clothing however was clean and always tidy.”⁴⁹⁴²
- Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the Fries and Son in Frankfurt, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said about him, “He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression.”⁴⁹⁴³

Furthermore, none of the forty-four witnesses interviewed by the author said that Tsafendas had a dirty or neglected appearance. Two of them, Andreas Babiolakis and Costas Poriазis, said that they once saw Tsafendas looking neglected and wearing a torn shirt. However, that was on the day he was released from jail in Beira in February 1965. Having just spent several days in a prison cell, wearing the same clothes every day and being beaten up, he could hardly have appeared otherwise. Both witnesses said this was the only time they saw Tsafendas looking less than perfectly dressed.⁴⁹⁴⁴

In addition, all the witnesses remembers him as being always very well-dressed and that he looked like a gentleman. For example, the thirteen sailors of the Eleni tanker who spent forty-two days with him told the author that Tsafendas had a clean appearance and was always very well dressed. They were all surprised by the fact that he was so well-dressed while he seemed to be a poor man because of the job he was doing. Again, in order to not include everyone's statement about Tsafendas appearance, the study includes here the statements of people who knew him more:

⁴⁹⁴¹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁴⁹⁴² Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁴⁹⁴³ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin,’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

⁴⁹⁴⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

- Father Nikola Banovic lived at the same house with Tsafendas for four months in 1961 and for another two-three in one right next to his, practically seeing him again every day all this time. According to him, Tsafendas was a very clean person and was always very well dressed, each day wearing a different hat.⁴⁹⁴⁵
- Reuben O’Ryan, Patrick O’Ryan’s son. He lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year. Tsafendas had moved to his house immediately after he had left the Daniels’s house. He said Tsafendas “was always very clean and well-dressed, apart from when he was coming home from work. That was the only time I saw him wearing dirty clothes. He always wore nice clothes; he was a clean person and always shaved.”⁴⁹⁴⁶
- Stanley O’Ryan, another of Patrick O’Ryan’s sons also remembers Tsafendas being “neatly and nicely dressed” and a “clean person.”⁴⁹⁴⁷
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up together in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him within a year while he was in Pretoria in 1964, while he also lived at the same house as her for two-three months. She insists that Tsafendas was always well-dressed, very often wearing a hat and was a very clean person. “Since he was a child, he would never eat anything without washing his hands. Even when we were out playing, he would pump into the house to wash his hands before eating something. He was very fussy with clean hands when he was a child, and I think he was also like this when he grew up, but I can’t remember for sure.”⁴⁹⁴⁸
- Fotini Gavasiadis saw and talked to Tsafendas every day for a period of nine months. She told the author that “it is nonsense” that Tsafendas was not well-dressed or a dirty person and she is surprised from this comment. She maintains that he was always very well dressed and clean. “Sometimes it was taking him longer than it was taking me to get ready, trying to find the more suitable hat or tie. He adored hats and ties.”⁴⁹⁴⁹
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a very good friend of his until his arrest believes that the statement that Tsafendas was not well-

⁴⁹⁴⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁴⁹⁴⁶ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁴⁹⁴⁷ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁴⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁴⁹⁴⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

dressed and clean is absolutely absurd. “He was always very well dressed; since he was a child. He used to wear hats he had bought from all over the world. He loved hats and he must have had tens of them. He came back to Lourenço Marques in the 1960s he brought me a hat for present from Lisbon.”⁴⁹⁵⁰

- Helen Grispos grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and her mother was Tsafendas's step-mother best friend there. “He was always very well dressed, even as a child; his step-mother always looked after him. When he visited us in the 1960s I remember he wore a big hat he said he had bought somewhere in Europe. I don't remember what he was wearing, but I remember the hat. It was very distinctive. He was certainly well-dressed.”⁴⁹⁵¹
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends at the time, stated to the author that whenever she saw Tsafendas, “he was always very neatly dressed.”⁴⁹⁵²
- Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and closely associated with him until 1965. She remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.⁴⁹⁵³
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique. They both remember Tsafendas being “always well dressed and clean.”⁴⁹⁵⁴
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since childhood and lived with him in the same house in Beira for about two-three months. He remembers Tsafendas having a shower every morning, being very well dressed and with clean clothes.⁴⁹⁵⁵
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean.⁴⁹⁵⁶
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul. She was ⁴⁹⁵⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁴⁹⁵¹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁴⁹⁵² Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

⁴⁹⁵³ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁹⁵⁴ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁴⁹⁵⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁴⁹⁵⁶ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

impressed with the many hats Tsafendas was wearing and remembers that a lot of people she knew were commenting about how neatly Tsafendas was dressed. "I remember him coming to the church always wearing a tie."⁴⁹⁵⁷

- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and in the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town and remembers him being always very well dressed.⁴⁹⁵⁸
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He remembers Tsafendas being always well dressed and clean, often wearing suits, ties and hats.⁴⁹⁵⁹
- Peter Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams were eating at the same place as Tsafendas for two-three months in 1966. They remember him being always very well dressed and very courteous.⁴⁹⁶⁰
- Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and remembers him always being "a well-dressed man."⁴⁹⁶¹

Albert Einstein who was a little stingy with money wore old, worn clothes and even his shoes had holes in them and kept on wearing them even if they were no longer watertight. "He would wear them until it was no longer possible," said Herta Waldow, who was his live-in housekeeper for six years. The way he was dressed often suggested that he was a poor man.⁴⁹⁶² So, we could safely assume that if Merle Daniels had come across Einstein, she would have thought that he was "not all there."

TSAFENDAS WAS STRANGE BECAUSE HE TOLD THEM ABOUT THE PREACHERS OF THEIR FAITH HE HAD MET ALL OVER THE WORLD

Merle Daniels also testified that Tsafendas seemed strange to her because he told them about the preachers of their faith he had met all over the world. All the Daniels family were very ⁴⁹⁵⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁴⁹⁵⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

⁴⁹⁵⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁶⁰ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁴⁹⁶¹ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

⁴⁹⁶² Chilton (The Telegraph), 19 April 2016. 'Albert Einstein: he really was an egghead.'

religious and members of the same Christian sect as Tsafendas, therefore what could be strange about Tsafendas talking about the preachers he met? Helen Daniels was a preacher, therefore it seemed perfectly natural to mention others he met. She had also told the police that Tsafendas's "stories about traveling abroad were interesting."⁴⁹⁶³

TSAFENDAS WAS "STRANGE" BECAUSE ON ONE OCCASION HE DID NOT SPEAK TO THEM ABOUT HIS TRAVELS, BUT ABOUT SAINT PAUL'S TRAVELS

Another reason Tsafendas seemed strange to Merle was that when she asked him to talk about his travels, he insisted on speaking about the travels of Saint Paul, the Christian Evangelist. Helen Daniels testified to the police that Tsafendas's "stories about travelling abroad were interesting"⁴⁹⁶⁴ and several others said he spoke widely about his travels. The fact that on this occasion, he chose not to talk about them, hardly seems sufficient to characterise him as strange.

TSAFENDAS WAS STRANGE BECAUSE HE LAY ON THE BED WITH HIS BOOTS ON

Finally, according to Merle Daniels, Tsafendas was "not all there" because he lay on her mother-in-law's clean quilt with his boots on. This might argue that Tsafendas was inconsiderate and maybe even rude, but does it mean that he was mentally strange? He may have been exhausted after work or simply thoughtless. In the finale of Steven Spielberg's movie, "Bridge of Spies," which is based on fact, the leading character, played by Tom Hanks, stretches out on his clean bed with his shoes on. I doubt if any movie-goer thought that the Tom Hanks character was therefore "not all there."

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND TSAFENDAS

Merle Daniels admitted she wanted to protect the name of the Christian Church. Patrick O'Ryan⁴⁹⁶⁵ and Richard Poggenpoel⁴⁹⁶⁶ said the assassination brought embarrassment on the ⁴⁹⁶³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁹⁶⁴ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁴⁹⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁹⁶⁶ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

Church and several members tried to distance themselves and their Church from Tsafendas. As with most members of the Greek community, some from the Christian Church tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them, in order to protect their reputation.

CONCLUSION

Merle Daniels, who makes no mention of the tapeworm, found Tsafendas to be “strange” and “not all there” because of how he acted and the way he dressed. However, the examples she gives are actions which any normal person could perform. She seems not to know about eccentricity (at least she needs the word explained to her) and that people may behave in ways unfamiliar to her.

We must also consider the possibility that she portrayed Tsafendas as strange in order to support the defence's insanity argument and save his life and that she did not really find all these things strange. Just as Patrick O’Ryan and his wife were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas, Merle and her husband, who were good friends of the O’Ryans, may have been asked to do the same. By any modern standards, Merle Daniels's testimony would never be accepted as proof that a man who acted as Tsafendas did was therefore out of his mind or, as she put it, “not all there.” Yet, extraordinarily, Judge Beyers would state in his verdict that her testimony was among those that convinced him Tsafendas was mad.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 6: PATRICK O'RYANINTRODUCTION

Patrick O'Ryan was the key defence witness from among those who knew Tsafendas because he was able to speak at length about the tapeworm - testimony that was crucial for the defence line. Tsafendas considered O'Ryan to be his best friend and the nicest person he ever met.⁴⁹⁶⁷ He was a Coloured teacher and a member of the Christian Church sect. He first heard of Tsafendas from a minister of their sect who described Tsafendas as a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages."⁴⁹⁶⁸ When O'Ryan met Tsafendas he invited him to stay with his family in his home.⁴⁹⁶⁹ Tsafendas lodged there for five months, then visited regularly until his arrest.⁴⁹⁷⁰

Patrick O'Ryan formed a "deep liking"⁴⁹⁷¹ for Tsafendas, someone he saw as an "enlightened person."⁴⁹⁷² Tsafendas returned the affection and respect. Upon hearing of the assassination, the O'Ryan family, including the oldest children, were devastated since they had grown to know and love Tsafendas. There was much weeping in the family household, including by Patrick and his wife. Patrick was the most deeply affected and asked his wife and children to pray for Tsafendas. He also led prayers for him at many gatherings of the Christian Church, although not all the members were happy about this.⁴⁹⁷³

EXTRACTS FROM PATRICK O'RYAN'S TESTIMONY⁴⁹⁷⁴P. O'RYAN'S MEETING WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How big is your family?

⁴⁹⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁹⁶⁸ Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁹⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁴⁹⁷⁰ Patrick O' Ryan's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 7 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁷¹ Patrick O' Ryan's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁹⁷² Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁹⁷³ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁹⁷⁴ Patrick O' Ryan's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

P. O'RYAN: We are nine.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How big is your house?

P. O'RYAN: We have three bedrooms, a lounge, kitchen, bathroom, outroom, and a garage.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your profession, your occupation?

P. O'RYAN: I teach.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What subjects do you teach?

P. O'RYAN: English and Art.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how many years have you been a teacher?

P. O'RYAN: Thirty years.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you meet Demitrio Tsafendas for the first time?

P. O'RYAN: The actual acquaintance that I made first was while in prayer at a conference. I heard...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was this conference?

P. O'RYAN: This conference was held out at Durbanville.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What month, and in which year?

P. O'RYAN: It was towards the end of November 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was this conference, this congress of? Which people?

P. O'RYAN: It was an assembly, a conference of delegates, Christian delegates I may call it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you present at that assembly?

P. O'RYAN: I was present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the accused, was he there?

P. O'RYAN: The accused was there.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us - you say the first time that you saw him...?

P. O'RYAN: When I heard the accused praying, or rather repeating the Paternoster, I opened my eyes and looked to see who it was, because never had anything like that happened that an individual parroted a prayer.

JUDGE BEYERS: That he did what?

P. O'RYAN: He said the Our Father.

JUDGE BEYERS: In what language?

P. O'RYAN: In English. None of us ever makes repetitions in praying.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How do you deliver your prayer at your assemblies, and how do the other delegates?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Every member of this faith prays in spirit and in truth from the heart.

BY THE COURT: A silent prayer?

P. O'RYAN: Audibly.

ASSESSOR: You don't repeat a well-known prayer, is that what you mean?

P. O'RYAN: No prayer - we repeat no prayer.

JUDGE BEYERS: I am not following. The unusual feature of this man, which made you open your eyes and look who this was, was that he was saying a well-known ritual Pater-noster, and that was not according to your ...?

P. O'RYAN: Not according to the teachings of Jesus.

ASSESSOR: In other words you pray spontaneously?

P. O'RYAN: That is right.

ASSESSOR: You make up your prayer as you pray?

P. O'RYAN: It flows spontaneously.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he also speak at this assembly?

P. O'RYAN: Normally there is an opportunity of open testimony, in which he participated.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does everybody have an opportunity at this assembly?

P. O'RYAN: Everyone has an opportunity to give a testimony.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At the assembly. What do the members usually talk about, or give testimony about?

P. O'RYAN: We usually give testimony of our experiences on Christian lines and the work of God in our own personal lives.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you heard the accused speak, what did he speak about?

P. O'RYAN: When the accused spoke he cited a passage of scripture, and thereafter, normally, one refers, or tries to interpret this passage of scripture. In his case, however, he continued, shall I say, at a tangent, or he spoke of his travels, which were not relevant to the chapter at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did this strike you as being odd, strange conduct?

P. O'RYAN: It struck me that the individual concerned, the accused, was not, in my opinion, born of the spirit of God.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did you sense something false in it, do you mean?

P. O'RYAN: Whosoever is born of the spirit of God can discern spiritually, and the context....

JUDGE BEYERS: It didn't ring true?

P. O'RYAN: Not at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When he had finished this talking, did you know what he was trying to tell you?

P. O'RYAN: He got nowhere. Just a string of incoherent or disjointed sentences mostly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did the other delegates to the assembly react to his speech?

P. O'RYAN: Quite a few with whom I discussed it felt the way I did, that his, could I say, discourse lacked in spiritual content.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At that time did you speak to the accused at that assembly?

P. O'RYAN: I did speak to the accused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he employed then? Did he have a job?

P. O'RYAN: He was unemployed at that time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was he living?

P. O'RYAN: He was on the verge of terminating his residence at a particular place in the Gardens.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did he ask you whether he could come and stay with you?

P. O'RYAN: I had been approached by a member of the faith with the object of arranging accommodation for the accused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you then make arrangements and give the accused accommodation?

P. O'RYAN: I told him to call at my place, which he did the day after conference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did he arrive at your home?

P. O'RYAN: That was at the beginning of - I am not very sure of my dates - at the beginning of December. Immediately after the conference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

P. O'RYAN: 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how long did he stay with you?

P. O'RYAN: He stayed with me for about close to five months.

COMMENTS ON P. O'RYAN'S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS FIRST MEETING WITH TSAFENDAS

In 1997, two years before Tsafendas's death, O'Ryan was interviewed by Liza Key as part of her television documentary about Tsafendas. He was asked by Key to explain how he met Tsafendas. He said that he heard about him from a minister of his church who said that a "highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages" was looking for accommodation.⁴⁹⁷⁵

Three-four years later, O'Ryan said the same thing to Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsafaridis when they visited him. However, when advocate Cooper asked him in court to describe how he met Tsafendas, Cooper cut him off after the words, "I heard ...". What was O'Ryan going to say? It is a fair assumption that he was about to repeat the description he had heard of Tsafendas as "highly cultured" and "very refined" and a speaker of seven languages. Why was he stopped? He was asked by the defence team not to praise Tsafendas since that would invalidate its portrayal of him as odd and moronic.⁴⁹⁷⁶

⁴⁹⁷⁵ Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

⁴⁹⁷⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

O'Ryan appeared surprised that Tsafendas recited the Lord's Prayer at an assembly of his Church. This suggests that Tsafendas was not well acquainted with the Church's modes, which favoured spontaneous prayer, when a person feels moved by the Spirit, rather than the recitation of established formulae, as in the established Christian churches.

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he try to find any employment while he was staying with you?

P. O'RYAN: Regularly. He wrote a number of applications. He went for interviews. And on one occasion he managed to land a job at the City Tramways, which lasted only a few days. He was issued with a uniform however. Thereafter he was unemployed again, and thence he was engaged at the Diamond Marine Corporation, I think, South West Africa.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: While he was with you, was he a lazy man?

P. O'RYAN: While he was with me, very often he would remain in bed, and would apparently do so for the day. But with us, we believe that every individual should have solid and permanent work. Then I would speak to him and tell him it is very unsavoury for a healthy man like him to remain in bed. Then he complained of this, of a worm that he mentioned of enormous proportions. In this case he mentioned that six foot of the worm had once come down, and the head remained behind, and the width was two inches wide. And more than one evening, after a late evening, he would ask my wife for a hunk of bread, he said, just to feed the worm, or demon, or the snake, which he most frequently termed it. Then there were other occasions when I had to speak to him, but not necessarily about his being inactive or lazy.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In what way further did he say that this worm affected his life?

P. O'RYAN: He told me about this worm, and that it sapped him or that it robbed him of his energy with the result that he could not hold a job very long. He also mentioned among other things that this worm affected him in many ways, so much so that his finances were always very low, since I had told him he could stay free of charge, and at that time, then he need not pay me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever go and try to get treatment for this worm? Medical attention?

P. O'RYAN: He went to the local hospital, I think Groote Schuur. Some of our friends saw him there. He went for treatment down at the Foreshore. And my wife also gave him a sort of treatment. She was very sympathetic in his case, whereas I told him the worm only existed in his mind, and then he was very disappointed and he told me I was like the doctors who wouldn't believe him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say what this worm did, how this worm behaved inside him?

P. O'RYAN: Well, at night he said this worm used to crawl about in him when it was hungry, and irritate him and so on.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think about this worm?

P. O'RYAN: Well, I candidly told him, as I do in many cases, that he should try to get his mind above matter, and that the worm was a figment of his imagination, purely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react to that, when you told him?

P. O'RYAN: He was most disappointed, and told me that I was just like the medical men whom he had seen, or medical opinion that he had got, who disbelieved him, and that my wife was much more sympathetically inclined towards him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So he used to pour out his troubles about the worm to your wife then, is that correct?

P. O'RYAN: That is right.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell us, what was the overall impression that Demitrio Tsafendas made upon you?

P. O'RYAN: I formed a conclusion that he was not in truth one of our faith.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I understand that, in truth. What did you think about his mental state?

P. O'RYAN: I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The fact that he believed in the tapeworm, what impression did that make upon you?

P. O'RYAN: That, however, made me feel that he believed in the tapeworm very strongly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he a strange man?

P. O'RYAN: No, it had never occurred to me.

COMMENTS ON P. O'RYAN'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM

Although Patrick O'Ryan speaks at some length during his testimony about the tapeworm, he also states clearly that he "never actually doubted his mental state" and that Tsafendas's mind was similar to the one "the majority of people have." This is what he really believed and he could not have said otherwise because he had already testified to the police on September 17, 1966 that Tsafendas's "spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind." What is more, his testimony to the police did not include any mention of the tapeworm.⁴⁹⁷⁷

About thirty years later, O'Ryan repeated to Liza Key while she was filming him for her documentary exactly the same phrase he had used to the police, "I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind."⁴⁹⁷⁸ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that "Tsafendas always behaved like a normal person, except that his interpretations of the Bible differed from mine."⁴⁹⁷⁹ Therefore, why did he bring up the tapeworm at the trial?

Tsafendas later told Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis that O'Ryan lied to the court about the tapeworm in order to save his life. He explained to the priests that O'Ryan was the only person to whom he had told the truth about the tapeworm and the origin of the story prior to the assassination. This happened because of his close friendship with O'Ryan. Tsafendas talked to many people but confided certain things only to O'Ryan. One of these was about Tom Tuff, the preacher of the Christian Church he met in an American hospital and who introduced him to the Christian Church. Tsafendas told O'Ryan about Tom's tapeworm story, describing how he copied it and used it to convince the Portuguese he was mad so as to receive amnesty and return to Mozambique, but also to make then stop ⁴⁹⁷⁷ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁹⁷⁸ Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

⁴⁹⁷⁹ Patrick O' Ryan statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

torturing him when he was imprisoned.⁴⁹⁸⁰

A few months before his death, Tsafendas was visited by Father Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, who asked if there was anything they could do for him, as they always did. Tsafendas had never asked them for anything, but then he said he believed he was dying and begged them to do something for him. Tsafendas wanted to apologise to Patrick O'Ryan for putting him in a situation that required him to lie in court about him and the tapeworm to save his life. Tsafendas, clearly stricken, said he had never had the chance to apologise personally; he pleaded with the priests to find O'Ryan and apologise on his behalf and thank him for what he did. Weeping, Tsafendas said he knew O'Ryan was very religious and lying was a major sin for him. Tsafendas guessed it must have been extremely difficult for O'Ryan to go through with his performance in court and he felt bad about putting him in such a difficult position. He said the only regret he had about killing Dr. Verwoerd was putting his best friend in such a position.⁴⁹⁸¹

Several months after his death, Fathers Minas Constandinou⁴⁹⁸² and Ioannis Tsafaridis visited Patrick O'Ryan in his home and told him what Tsafendas had said. O'Ryan wept and praised Tsafendas as the "kindest man I ever met." He told them how Tsafendas confided to him about the tapeworm story and he confirmed everything that Tsafendas had already told the priests, including its origins with Tom Tuff.⁴⁹⁸³

O'Ryan told the priests that he did not pay much attention when Tsafendas first told him the tapeworm story in 1965 and later he joked about it with his wife and children. It was only after the assassination and he was asked about the tapeworm by the defence lawyers, that he realised its importance. He said he had never told anyone the truth – that the tapeworm was fake, – not even his wife, and he had not intended ever to do so, but he could confirm it now that the priests had heard the story from Tsafendas himself.⁴⁹⁸⁴

O'Ryan said this was the only time in his life that he lied and that he had been praying about it ever since. He believed God would forgive him because he did it for a noble cause.

⁴⁹⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁸¹ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁸² Father Spiros Randos was unable to travel and Father Minas Constandinou went instead.

⁴⁹⁸³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁸⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

O'Ryan also told the priests that he was asked by Tsafendas's lawyers whether he was aware of the tapeworm and he had replied "yes?" unsure initially if he meant the truth about it or the jokey situation surrounding the tapeworm which he had created. However, he also remembered that Tsafendas had used the tapeworm story with the Portuguese when he was arrested and thought that he might be using it again. What he regretted was telling the police that Tsafendas was sane. It had not occurred to him then that he might pretend to be mad.⁴⁹⁸⁵

O'Ryan told the priests how, after Tsafendas confided in him, he turned the tapeworm into a "family joke." He said that one day when Tsafendas was starting on a second or third plate of food, one of the O'Ryan children, who was not eating, asked him how he managed to eat so much. O'Ryan joked that it was because Uncle Dimi "has a tapeworm inside him which eats his food." He added that if his son did not eat his own food, Uncle Dimi would take it and give it to the worm. Fascinated and a little frightened, the boy plied Tsafendas with questions, whereupon Tsafendas opened his eyes wide and breathed heavily, saying that was what happened when the tapeworm ate. After that, the children often asked about the tapeworm and Tsafendas would repeat his performance.⁴⁹⁸⁶

Upon hearing about the tapeworm, Louisa, Patrick's wife, told her husband, "that figures!" She was referring to Tsafendas's appetite. Patrick did not tell her about Tom Tuff or that the tapeworm was imaginary and he enjoyed joking with Tsafendas about it.⁴⁹⁸⁷ Tsafendas built a very good relationship with Louisa O'Ryan because she sympathized with his "problem," unaware it was a joke.⁴⁹⁸⁸ According to O'Ryan his wife had spoken to some other members of the Church about Tsafendas's "problem" and that made him feel bad as he considered himself responsible for starting this "story." O'Ryan apologised to him, but Tsafendas did not seem to care and on the contrary seemed to enjoy the charade.⁴⁹⁸⁹

O'Ryan also told the priests that one time at a prayer gathering in a church member's house, Yvette O'Ryan, his four-year-old daughter and youngest child of the family, asked Tsafendas to show their friends how the tapeworm acted. Embarrassed, Patrick said this was not the right place for it, but Tsafendas, evidently untroubled, staged his act. When some ⁴⁹⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁸⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁸⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁴⁹⁸⁸ Louisa O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁴⁹⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

parents inquired about the tapeworm, Louisa O'Ryan and Tsafendas said it was true, he had a tapeworm, but Patrick said he was just joking. Tsafendas appeared perfectly relaxed about the tapeworm business and put on his act when he was with the O'Ryan children or their friends' children. O'Ryan told the priests that this was everything that ever happened with the tapeworm and nothing else.⁴⁹⁹⁰

In 1997, Patrick O'Ryan told Liza Key, as he would tell the two priests, three or four years later, that advocate Cooper asked him to speak about the tapeworm in court and to exaggerate it as the only way to prevent Tsafendas from being hanged. He told Key that he "wouldn't have done it ordinarily," if Cooper had not asked him. O'Ryan also said that Cooper asked him to exaggerate other stories about Tsafendas in order to support the insanity plea.⁴⁹⁹¹ Cooper, by then a judge himself, watched the documentary and told Liza Key that he enjoyed it. As for Patrick O'Ryan's statement, he made no comment to Key⁴⁹⁹² nor to his son, Gavin Cooper.⁴⁹⁹³ If O'Ryan had lied to Liza Key about Cooper and his "advice", would Cooper not have protested? However, far from complaining, he praised the programme.

Professor John Dugard finds Wilfrid Cooper's actions to be perfectly logical and admits he would have done the same in that position:

"I could understand it ... I can understand very well, if I had been in Wilfrid Cooper's position, and I heard that there was some problem with a tapeworm, I would have done exactly the same. In South Africa at that time, the law was that murder was a capital crime, and it was compulsory for a judge to impose sentence of death unless there were mitigating circumstances. That meant that lawyers – and I was a practicing lawyer at that time too – went out of their way to find mitigating circumstances ... Often, the mitigating circumstance was very far-fetched, and sometimes ridiculous.

So, if I was in that situation, and I heard that there was some story about a tapeworm that troubled my client, and it was the only mitigating circumstance that I had, I would have done exactly what Wilfrid Cooper did. I would have expanded the tapeworm story because it was my only chance to save his life. I mean, I don't think that I behaved unprofessionally, but ⁴⁹⁹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁹¹ Patrick O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁹² Liza Key in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁴⁹⁹³ Gavin Cooper in a personal interview, 16 June 2015.

I can remember doing similar things... Because we used to look very hard for mitigating circumstances.”⁴⁹⁹⁴

It is important to mention here that at first O’Ryan was not sure whether the defence lawyers knew the truth behind the tapeworm or if Tsafendas had used it with them as he had used it with the Portuguese. He was therefore cautious and spoke of it only when he realised Tsafendas had indeed gone the same route as with the Portuguese. O’Ryan told the priests that Tsafendas’s lawyers seemed desperate because they could not find anyone else who knew about the tapeworm, which seems clear from the fact that none of the two hundred or so people who were questioned by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry ever mentioned it.

O’Ryan also told the priests that he and his wife were asked by advocate Cooper to exaggerate some “strange” stories about Tsafendas and to claim that he was “crazy.” O’Ryan could not – and did not – make such claim as he had testified to the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that he “never got the impression that there was something wrong with his brain.”⁴⁹⁹⁵ Thus, why did he lie to the court about the tapeworm? Because, as he told the priests, he considered Tsafendas to be the “kindest man he ever met.” He “took a deep liking” to him and considered him “very kindly man ... he had a good heart” and wanted to save his life.⁴⁹⁹⁶

NOTE: O’Ryan stated that Tsafendas went to Groote Schuur hospital for treatment for his tapeworm problem, but this is inaccurate. There is no such medical report and the only time that Tsafendas went to this hospital was for an operation on his nose. O’Ryan perhaps spoke as he did to support his testimony further.

TSAFENDAS BEING RELIGIOUS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he read his Bible often?

P. O’RYAN: He read his Bible regularly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he attend meetings of the movement?

⁴⁹⁹⁴ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁴⁹⁹⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁴⁹⁹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

P. O'RYAN: He most frequently accompanied me, because he and I attended the same Sunday morning meetings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How many meetings do you have, does your movement have, every week?

P. O'RYAN: We have meetings regularly every Sunday morning where we break bread, Sunday evenings and Wednesday evenings.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At these meetings, how did he fit in?

P. O'RYAN: Into the form of the meetings he fitted perfectly, but when it came to the substance of the meetings, he again, as I would put it, lacked spiritual depth. He was always superficial in his little discourses.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that what you mean by spiritual depth, that he was superficial in his discourse?

P. O'RYAN: That is right, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he appear to understand the Bible, from what you could see?

P. O'RYAN: He seemed to have not the slightest notion of what he usually cited in scripture, or passages that he tried to interpret.

TSAFENDAS'S WAY OF SPEECH

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In conversation, how would he answer a question, a simple question?

P. O'RYAN: He was always very hesitant before he replied, and, after he had started, then he would hesitate again and very often when he continued there was no logical sequence again.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was his concentration?

P. O'RYAN: He had a very poor power of concentration, which I would say was manifested by the way in which he spoke. One could gather that.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would I summarise what you have just said if I say that his conversation was disjointed? Would that be a way of saying it?

P. O'RYAN: That is it, it was disjointed.

JUDGE BEYERS: Can I put it down like that?

P. O'RYAN: That is right.

JUDGE BEYERS: That his conversation was disjointed and didn't seem to flow one from another?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: How was he spoken? How would you describe him? How did he speak?

P. O'RYAN: He was very well spoken, soft spoken, and his disposition was very meek. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart.

COMMENTS ON P. O'RYAN'S STATEMENT REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S WAY OF SPEECH

The author cannot be certain, but it seems fair to suggest that O'Ryan's initial comment about Tsafendas's disjointed speech was intended to support the defence's line. No other witness testified that Tsafendas spoke in a halting fashion and O'Ryan himself did not mention it to the police when he was questioned. He told the police that he "never got the impression that there was something wrong with his brain;" he also said, "... even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary."⁴⁹⁹⁷

The fact that Tsafendas was well-spoken and soft-spoken has been stated by several other witnesses as we have already seen. None of the witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry (about two hundred of them) mentioned anything about Tsafendas's mode of speech. In addition, not one of the forty-four witnesses the author interviewed agreed that Tsafendas spoke in the way he was presented. All said he spoke perfectly normally. The issue has been discussed extensively, especially at Dr. Cooper's testimony, so it would not be discussed here again.

DISCUSSING POLITICS TOGETHER

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In these conversations, did you ever canvass political topics?

P. O'RYAN: No.

⁴⁹⁹⁷ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is it correct then that during the whole period of five months that he stayed with you, he did not discuss politics with you?

P. O'RYAN: He might have discussed politics in the way that I, or rather, say, any Coloured man, would discuss. We may discuss say - I have no specific case, but I would not deny that he might have discussed general politics with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But any topic that he may have discussed made no impression on you?

P. O'RYAN: Never. Mostly the Bible - scripture.

COMMENTS ON P. O'RYAN'S STATEMENT REGARDING NOT DISCUSSING POLITICS WITH TSAFENDAS

After the tapeworm, the biggest lie that Patrick O'Ryan told the court was that he and Tsafendas did not discuss politics in any serious way, although he had told the police that they did. As we will see shortly, the Attorney-General's cross-examination revealed that O'Ryan had told the police that Tsafendas "was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal" and that he "labelled apartheid policies as unfair."

Years later, O'Ryan added that Tsafendas became "excited" talking about politics and had told him Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant. He said Dr. Verwoerd oppressed his people, was "Hitler's best student" and if he ever get hold of him "he would bash his skull."⁴⁹⁹⁸ However, O'Ryan did not tell the police of these remarks as he believed they would count against Tsafendas. O'Ryan said he was advised by advocate Cooper not to reveal the political discussions he had with Tsafendas.⁴⁹⁹⁹ Nevertheless, as we will see, the State was in possession of O'Ryan's statement to the police and in cross-examination would mention the fact that he told the police that they had discussed politics, though not what he revealed thirty years later.

⁴⁹⁹⁸ Patrick O' Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁴⁹⁹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015

P. O'RYAN'S RELATIONSHIP WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was the accused married?

P. O'RYAN: No, as far as we knew, he was unmarried.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know whether he took out any women while he was staying with you?

P. O'RYAN: No, but he was interested in some of our friends.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he manage to strike up some association, friendship with a woman while he lived with you?

P. O'RYAN: He was unfortunate.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you about his wanderings, his travellings all over the world?

P. O'RYAN: Ad nauseam.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you whether he had been subjected to any treatment in any part of the world?

P. O'RYAN: He told me that in some Portuguese territory - it might have been Portugal, it might have been somewhere down Lourenço Marques way - this brainwashing that I read about in the paper. But before it appeared in the paper he told me all about it. He described it to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What had they done to him? What did they do to him?

P. O'RYAN: He mentioned that they slapped him on the temples of the head, regularly, until he fell down, and then they would pour water on him and so on, and on one occasion he mentioned that they carried away a corpse, someone to whom this third degree had been applied. He mentioned that to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Could you form a close attachment, friendship with this man, Demitrio Tsafendas?

P. O'RYAN: I took a deep liking to the man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you form an attachment? Did you discuss your personal problems with him?

P. O'RYAN: As a rule we don't discuss much of our personal problems.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he behave towards your children?

P. O'RYAN: He was very attached to the children, and very often my wife used to say "This man has never had the opportunity to know a little about home life. This most probably is the first home where he is at home." And we tried to make him at home as much as we could.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he discuss with you and tell you any of his background, of his home life as a child?

P. O'RYAN: Most of that he told my wife. He did not speak sentimentally to me at all, much.

P. O'RYAN: ... He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart.

COMMENTS ON P. O'RYAN'S STATEMENT REGARDING HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH TSAFENDAS

O'Ryan clearly states that he liked Tsafendas. He also trusted him to babysit his children.⁵⁰⁰⁰ Although sometimes unemployed, Tsafendas often bought sweets for the young ones and when he was in work, he came every day with sweets, toys and food. Reuben O'Ryan, the closest to Tsafendas of all the children, said, "We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house."⁵⁰⁰¹ Another child, Stanley, remembers Tsafendas as a "very down-to-earth man, very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. Nothing at all. Perfectly normal."⁵⁰⁰²

Patrick O'Ryan testified in court that Tsafendas told him he was tortured and brainwashed in Portugal. No exploration was made of this, therefore it is important to state here what Tsafendas meant by brainwashing. He perceived it as an attempt by the Portuguese forcefully to change his pro-Communist and anti-colonial ideology, which included support for the independence of Mozambique. Tsafendas used the same word, "brainwashing," when ⁵⁰⁰⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁰⁰¹ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵⁰⁰² Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

he described his torture by the Portuguese to several witnesses the author interviewed. He was not tortured to reveal something, but to change his political ideas.

O'Ryan stated openly that he liked Tsafendas and had confidence in him, even letting him to babysit his children. It seems unthinkable that he would have allowed a man who was unstable to do that. Perhaps conclusive proof of O'Ryan's affection for Tsafendas is the fact that he and his wife were the only friends who attended his funeral. With just one day's notice, they flew from Cape Town to Johannesburg to see Tsafendas interred in the cemetery next to Sterkfontein Hospital. O'Ryan was not a rich man and two last-minute plane tickets must have been costly. This demonstration of grief and loyalty says a lot about their relationship. "We do feel his death. He was dear to us," Patrick O'Ryan said the day of the funeral and characterised him as "pleasant and highly intelligent."⁵⁰⁰³

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused show any feelings for your children?

P. O'RYAN: He was very fond of them.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And you took a deep liking to the accused?

P. O'RYAN: I had confidence in him and used to like him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you think that he felt the same about you?

P. O'RYAN: Yes. Only that I didn't sympathise with him about the worm.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What made you conclude that he was not one of your faith?

P. O'RYAN: Among other things, number one he mentioned to me that a friend of ours in Greece had baptised him by means of a triple immersion; in the name of the Father he was immersed; in the name of the Son he said he was immersed; and in the name of the Holy Spirit he was immersed. That was most unusual to me, and unscriptural. To us a baptism is symbolic of a burial, a natural burial. And when a man is buried naturally he is just buried once and not exhumed again and so on. Then, secondly, he was surprised when I told him about Jesus having existed before the earth....

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I don't think we need go into that any further. Didn't you gain the impression that the accused was sponging on you?

⁵⁰⁰³ South African Press Association, 9 October 1999, 'Small group gather for Tsafendas' funeral.'

P. O'RYAN: Quite a few friends of mine told me that, but I believe in hospitality so I overlooked it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When did the accused tell you about this so-called worm?

P. O'RYAN: When I told him to get out of bed and not to be too inactive, and not to surrender to a thought like that. But to him it was real.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Can you remember the date?

P. O'RYAN: It would have been very shortly after - I would say it was in December.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: December?

P. O'RYAN: 1965 already.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: On how many occasions did the accused tell you about this so-called worm?

P. O'RYAN: Very very frequently.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Very very frequently?

P. O'RYAN: It became common in the home, so much so that the remedy they used for him, well, there was quite a quantity of it in the home already.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You made a statement to the Police on the 17th September 1966, is that correct?

P. O'RYAN: Most probably. Yes, the date must be.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You can have a look at the statement?

P. O'RYAN: I did make a statement. Correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why didn't you mention anything about this worm to the Police in your statement?

P. O'RYAN: The Police mentioned, number one, that that was not necessary, I must just leave it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So you say that you mentioned this worm to the Police?

P. O'RYAN: Yes. Not necessary, they mentioned. And I also made a statement about this treatment, and the Police said it is common in the papers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: This gentleman here, Mr. Troost, (pointed out) took the statement, not so?

P. O'RYAN: That is right.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So you tell me that you told Mr. Troost about this worm?

P. O'RYAN: Yes, I said he mentioned the worm.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And Mr. Troost said it was not necessary to make any mention of it?

P. O'RYAN: No, he just brushed it away.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you say to Mr. Troost?

P. O'RYAN: I just said he mentioned the worm and also the third degree.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Just give us your exact words that you used to Mr. Troost?

P. O'RYAN: Mr. Troost spoke to me in the form of questions, which I answered, but in between I mentioned these two things that I noted were not noted.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You told Mr. Troost that this man has on many occasions mentioned to you...

P. O'RYAN: No, no, I did not say on many occasions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What exactly did you say to Mr. Troost?

P. O'RYAN: I said he mentioned a worm, and the brainwashing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What did Mr. Troost say to that?

P. O'RYAN: Well, in writing - he just continued to write and...

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So in spite of the fact that you mentioned something about the worm, he did not take that down in writing?

P. O'RYAN: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Am I going to be allowed to see that statement?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Certainly my lord.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: With respect, I don't think your lordship can read it. It must be put to this witness first of all, and say that he made this statement and he admits the contents.

JUDGE BEYERS: I thought that he had admitted.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He admits that he has made a statement, but he has not identified this statement yet.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is not all that important. (Statement not read by the Court).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say in this statement - I quote what is written down in this statement: "He (that is the accused) stayed with me for approximately 3 months, 2 weeks of which he stayed at Poggenpoel, but afterwards returned to me?"

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "He read the newspaper and it was apparent that he was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal." Did you say that?

P. O'RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "He made the impression with me that he was favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured." Did you say that?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "He said that he had a blank identity card, in other words his race was not recorded on it."?

P. O'RYAN: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "He labelled the apartheid policies as unfair"?

P. O'RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "His reasoning was not very intelligent"?

P. O'RYAN: Correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is that right?

P. O'RYAN: That is right, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: "I did not encourage him, because we advocate the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government." Is that right?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I will not be much longer you honour.

JUDGE BEYERS: You are not boring me. I am quiet interested.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “His spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed.” You said that?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “On the contrary, even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well spoken and had good vocabulary”?

P. O'RYAN: That is right.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say that?

P. O'RYAN: Yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: “I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind”?

P. O'RYAN: That is correct, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say that?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why then did you not say anything about the worm in the statement?

P. O'RYAN: It was so commonplace, most likely, that I did not want to draw any more attention to it. I only mention it casually.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You said you told Mr. Troost?

P. O'RYAN: Casually, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You told him about the worm?

P. O'RYAN: Yes.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The most important aspect of the cross-examination is that van den Berg, for the first time, challenged a witness on the basis of evidence given in a statement to the police. This suggests that the Attorney-General was given at least some witness statements and probably would have challenged the other witnesses, too, if he had the relevant statements. Still, though he challenged O'Ryan with questions which anyone could have asked, he did not do enough to break down his testimony.

An obvious question would have been, how was it that O'Ryan "never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind" when he heard Tsafendas talking about the tapeworm? Could anybody hear a man say he had a greedy tapeworm in his stomach and believe such a man to be sane?

The tapeworm creates a paradoxical situation: although Tsafendas does not talk about the worm to the Daniels family, they think he is insane; however, he does speak to O'Ryan about it and he believes that he is perfectly sane. O'Ryan lived for five months with Tsafendas in the same house and they then kept in regular touch for another year. The Daniels family spent some time with Tsafendas, though not in the same house, over forty-two days, then never saw him again. How is this dichotomy resolved? Both were asked by the defence to "exaggerate" some stories suggesting Tsafendas was strange, in particular to mention the tapeworm. O'Ryan had not spoken of it to the police, indeed had said Tsafendas was perfectly sane, therefore he could not now change. However, since he and his wife were the only witness who was aware of the worm, the defence used them to strengthen this angle.

The most important of the questions asked by the Attorney-General was why O'Ryan did not tell the police about the tapeworm, since Tsafendas spoke so frequently about it? O'Ryan seems a little unsure about what to say. He replied that he mentioned it "causally" and Sgt. Troost, the policeman who took the statement, did not write it down. O'Ryan did not comment about this particular incident to the two priests or to Liza Key, but he did state that he had not told the police about the tapeworm. The obvious conclusion is that he lied in court when he said he mentioned it "casually." Very likely he thought that the policeman would probably not remember whether he had said it or not.

However, since Sgt. Troost was present in the trial and was pointed out by the Attorney-General, he could have been asked whether he remembered O'Ryan mentioning it. In addition, it seems that O'Ryan is aware that there is nothing about the tapeworm in his statement as he stated that Troost "just continued to write." O'Ryan could not have been in position to know what Troost was writing, unless he was asked specifically about something he had just said and Troost wanted a clarification. Therefore, he was not in condition to know whether it was written or not, unless he was given to read the statement in the end, as Troost had had done with all the statements he took. It is possible that O'Ryan did not bother at the time reading his statement as some of the witnesses did not. In this case, he would not have been able to know whether it was written or not. On the other hand, if he had read the statement, he would have seen that the tapeworm is not there, so he could have told Sgt. Troost that he forgot to include it.

O'Ryan was asked whether Tsafendas was sponging on him and he answered in an ambivalent fashion, that "quite a few friends of mine told me that, but I believe in hospitality so I overlooked it." The author is not in position to know how O'Ryan really felt, however his two sons are positive that their father did not believe Tsafendas was sponging on him. On the contrary, they said their dad was often embarrassed because Tsafendas brought food to the house and toys and sweets for the children. When O'Ryan asked Tsafendas not to do this because he thought it made him look bad, Tsafendas continued to bring food and sweets but told the children they were bought by their dad and himself. Young Reuben O'Ryan said about Tsafendas, "We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house."⁵⁰⁰⁴

The Attorney-General's above question also supported the defence's line and not the State's, so it is a strange kind of question. This was the sort of question you would have expected from the Defence Counsel and not from the Attorney-General. The Defence was trying to prove that Tsafendas was the kind of helpless man who was taking advantages of others and the State was supposedly trying to prove otherwise. This question only helped the defence.

O'Ryan's statement to the police that Tsafendas was "favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured" contradicts Dr. Cooper's testimony from the previous day when he said that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloureds. In addition, through the cross-examination we also hear for the first and last time in the court, Tsafendas's real political ideas: that he was "against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal" and "labelled the apartheid policies as unfair" - again in contradiction to Dr. Cooper's testimony. Importantly, these statements are not from a witness's courtroom testimony, but from a witness's statement to the police.

⁵⁰⁰⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

CONCLUSION

Patrick O'Ryan was the defence's main witness with regard to the tapeworm and spoke extensively about it, although he also stated clearly that he "never actually doubted his (Tsafendas's) mental state." How is it possible to believe that a person who claims to host a massive and voracious tapeworm is sane? The fact is O'Ryan had already told the police in his statement that he believed Tsafendas "was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind",⁵⁰⁰⁵ therefore he could not go back on this position in court. He spoke about the tapeworm because he was asked to do so by advocate Cooper since he was the only defence witness who was aware of it.

The fact that O'Ryan did not tell the police about the tapeworm, although it was so important to Tsafendas, was raised by the Attorney-General. O'Ryan replied that he had mentioned the tapeworm but the policeman taking his statement brushed it aside. O'Ryan later claimed that he had not told the police about it and then spoke openly about it in court because he had been told by advocate Copper that this was the only way to "get him free." In reality, as O'Ryan himself admitted to the priests and as Tsafendas had already told them, he was aware that the tapeworm was a fiction which Tsafendas had used in the past to stop the Portuguese torturing him. O'Ryan knew the origin of the tapeworm story and he could have become aware of it only from Tsafendas himself.

It is not surprising that O'Ryan lied to the court since, as he admitted in his testimony, he had taken a "deep liking" to Tsafendas, whom he considered to be a kind person with a good heart, his best friend and the kindest person he ever met. Upon hearing of Tsafendas's death, O'Ryan and his wife bought airline tickets at short notice and flew to the funeral at Sterkfontein, his only friends to do so. This must have involved financial sacrifice for a poor man and testified to the genuine affection that existed between them.

It is important to note that the Attorney-General's intervention was the first time he used a statement taken by the police to challenge a defence witness's testimony. This suggests that the police gave him at least some of the witness statements, raising the likelihood that if he was in possession of all the statements, he might have challenged other witnesses, too. That he reads extracts aloud confirms that the police did indeed take a statement from O'Ryan, something that might have raised doubts because no statement by ⁵⁰⁰⁵ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Patrick O'Ryan was found in the National Archives. Accordingly, we are not in position to know its contents, apart from the excerpts read out in court. By reading out parts of the statement, the court heard, for the first and last time, Tsafendas's real political ideas: he was "against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal" and "labelled the apartheid policies as unfair."

Patrick O'Ryan's testimony would play an important role in Judge Beyers's verdict, though the judge seemed to have poor recall of part of it. Judge Beyers stated, "I should also mention, briefly, that the ordinary people, the ordinary everyday people with whom he (Tsafendas) came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected... It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife." While O'Ryan might have testified to the lunacy of the tapeworm, he did not state that Tsafendas was mentally affected. On the contrary, he said clearly "I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have." The court also heard O'Ryan's statement to the police where he said that Tsafendas "was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind."⁵⁰⁰⁶ This the judge also seems to have overlooked.

⁵⁰⁰⁶ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 7: LOUISA O'RYAN

INTRODUCTION

Louisa O'Ryan, Patrick O'Ryan's wife, was urged by defence advocate Cooper to highlight the tapeworm in her evidence. However, unlike her husband, she was under the impression that the worm was real. Patrick had joked that Tsafendas's voracious appetite was caused by a tapeworm.⁵⁰⁰⁷ She replied, "That figures!" However, Patrick did not tell her about Tom Tuff and that the tapeworm was imaginary and he joked with Tsafendas about it.⁵⁰⁰⁸ Tsafendas himself built a good relationship with Louisa because she sympathized with his "problem," unaware it was all a fiction.⁵⁰⁰⁹

LOUISA O'RYAN'S TESTIMONY⁵⁰¹⁰

L. O'RYAN'S FIRST ENCOUNTER WITH TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the accused?

L. O'RYAN: I know Demitrio.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you meet him for the first time?

L. O'RYAN: At our convention in Durbanville.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he behave on that occasion?

L. O'RYAN: Well, quite normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you hear him speak?

L. O'RYAN: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he preach?

L. O'RYAN: Well, not actually preach. We just each give our testimony.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he give his testimony?

⁵⁰⁰⁷ For more about the incident see Chapter Two.

⁵⁰⁰⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁰⁰⁹ Louisa O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁵⁰¹⁰ Louisa O'Ryan's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

L. O'RYAN: Well, he started off with the way he got away from Cape Town half a century ago, or a quarter century he mentioned, and then how he got on to the boat, peeling potatoes. Then he spoke a little of his travels, and then he cited a verse in the Bible, but I could not sort of get a grasp of what he was trying to explain at the time.

ASSESSOR: You mean the verse had no relation to what he was talking about?

L. O'RYAN: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But after this convention he came to live at your house, did he?

L. O'RYAN: Yes.

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever discuss any of his complaints with you?

L. O'RYAN: Well, he spoke to me about his stomach, and he explained to me that it was because of a tapeworm which was an inch and a half wide, and he told me that a while back, when he was a little boy, about six feet of it came down. The doctor gave him something and six feet of it came down. He was sitting on a bucket. And then he fainted on the bucket, and his mother removed it and she destroyed it, and since then nothing has ever come down.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he speak often about this worm?

L. O'RYAN: Quite often he spoke to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he call this worm?

L. O'RYAN: He called it a snake, or a demon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he tell you whether it moved, or what it did inside him?

L. O'RYAN: He told me that this snake, or this worn, sort of cones up at night and then it sort of hunts for food. He seemed that it put it down that way, that it hunts for food late at night while he was asleep; it sort of woke him up; and this thing was hunting for food.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he ever ask for food for this worm?

L. O'RYAN: Yes, he asked me quite a few times if he could just have a piece of bread to feed the worn.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he take medicine for this worm?

L. O'RYAN: He took medicine. He once went to the Groote Schuur Hospital, and then he went again to the Foreshore to the Medical Centre there and they gave him a bottle of white stuff, I think it was some sort of a line mixture.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he very energetic?

L. O'RYAN: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he do?

L. O'RYAN: Well, he told me that in spite of his big body he always felt tired, and he reckoned that it was the worm, because of the worm sort of devouring the food that his body should have.

JUDGE BEYERS: A most wonderful worm. You don't have to work, and you eat at night in order to feed him. One of the best pets I have heard of. Anyway, he can't work because of the worm, but the worm has got to be fed.

NO CROSS-EXAMINATION TOOK PLACE

COMMENTS ON L. O'RYAN'S TESTIMONY

Louisa refers to Tsafendas's mother, but she means his step-mother. She was aware that Tsafendas had lived with his birth mother for about only eighteen months. Tsafendas referred to Marika as "mother," and not as step-mother. As far as the author can establish, he only referred to Marika as step-mother in his statements to the police. As stated before, several witnesses interviewed by the author stated that he referred to Marika as his mother, not his stepmother.

What is important here is the story Louisa O'Ryan tells about the origin of the tapeworm. It is this story that would be remembered afterwards. According to Louisa, Tsafendas told her that his (step) mother removed six feet of tapeworm which Tsafendas excreted as a boy and destroyed it. Tsafendas does not mention anything about witchcraft, as he did with Dr. Cooper and with Dr. Sakinofsky. According to Louisa, Tsafendas was a "little boy" when it happened, not a teenager as claimed by Dr. Cooper and Dr. Muller. Dr. Cooper has stated that it was in 1935 or 1936, while Dr. Muller had stated that it was after 1936.⁵⁰¹¹ In 1935 and 1936, Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen, not a little boy. No-one noticed this and it was left unchallenged.

However, it is highly significant that Tsafendas's (step) mother, Marika, in her testimony to the Commission, flatly denied that such an event ever took place and swore that she never heard about the tapeworm until now. Exactly the same thing was stated to the Commission by the rest of the family.⁵⁰¹² Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's half-sister, had never heard Tsafendas say anything about a tapeworm and did not remember such an incident taking place, but upon reading about it, she asked her mother to double-check it.⁵⁰¹³ Marika denied all knowledge of the incident and of the worm and told her daughter that Tsafendas was making it up. Fotini Gavasiadis's brother, Nick Vlachopoulos was married to Helen Tsafantakis, another of Tsafendas's half-sisters. She and other long-time family members and friends all questioned Tsafendas's step-mother and she gave them the same answer as she gave to the Commission: "It never happened."⁵⁰¹⁴

Ira Kyriakakis, who had grown up with Tsafendas and Mary Eendracht who was his cousin and had also grown up with him were certain that he had made it up as they were extremely close to him at the time the alleged incident took place as he never told them anything about it and they were both certain that he would have told them if such thing had happened. Still though, they both asked Marika who once again denied that this story ever took place. Throughout her life, Marika vigorously denied that such a thing ever happened and insisted that Tsafendas had made it up.⁵⁰¹⁵ As for Louisa O'Ryan, despite her belief in the reality of the tapeworm, she strongly believed that Tsafendas was perfectly sane.⁵⁰¹⁶

⁵⁰¹¹ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁰¹² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁵⁰¹³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁰¹⁴ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁵⁰¹⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁰¹⁶ Louisa O'Ryan in Liza Key's A question of Madness, 1997; Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Stanley O'Ryan in a personal interview with the author, 9 April 2015.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 8: OWEN SMORENBERG

INTRODUCTION

Owen Smorenberg was an important witness for the defence. Although he knew Tsafendas for only five or six weeks, he was chosen to testify rather than others who had known him or lived with him for many months. Smorenberg was questioned by the police on October 6, 1966.⁵⁰¹⁷

EXTRACTS FROM OWEN SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY⁵⁰¹⁸

MEETING TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your occupation?

SMORENBERG: I am employed as maintenance foreman at the Cape Town City Council Power Station.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And for how long have you been working there?

SMORENBERG: Eight years.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the accused?

SMORENBERG: Yes I know him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you meet him for the first time?

SMORENBERG: He came to work for us as a fitter on the 13th September, 1965.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But how long did he stay with you?

SMORENBERG: Approximately six weeks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During this period did you work with him?

SMORENBERG: Yes, I did work with him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of work did he have to do?

⁵⁰¹⁷ For his statement to the police see page

⁵⁰¹⁸ Owen Smorenberg's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

SMORENBERG: Mainly rough engineering. Fitting.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have to check his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, every day.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The work that he had to do, was it difficult work? Was it involved work?

SMORENBERG: Not really. I would say it is the easiest type of fitting that there is.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was he taken on as a fitter or as a labourer?

SMORENBERG: As a fitter.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he claim to "be a fitter?"

SMORENBERG: He claims to be a fitter, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he have papers?

SMORENBERG: That I couldn't say. I never employed him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the type of work that he was doing? Rough engineering work?

SMORENBERG: Rough engineering fitting.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was your first impression about Tsafendas?

SMORENBERG: The first impression was that he was a friendly type of man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he talk freely with you?

SMORENBERG: Fairly freely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Had he travelled extensively?

SMORENBERG: He claimed to have travelled extensively, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he form any close friendship with any person on the job?

SMORENBERG: Not really. Perhaps myself, and maybe one other fellow. We were about the friendliest with him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was that a close friendship?

SMORENBERG: Not really.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he claim that he could speak more than one language?

SMORENBERG: He did claim so, and I actually heard him speak in more than one language.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

Smorenberg was called as a defence witness rather than many who knew Tsafendas longer and better. He worked with Tsafendas for six weeks one year before the assassination (although he said five weeks in his statement to the police twelve days earlier) and he described their relationship as "not really" close. However, not one of Tsafendas's Parliamentary messenger colleagues was asked to testify when they worked with him a year later, just before the assassination, and for the same length of time. The choice of Smorenberg is understandable since he was the only one of the one hundred and fifty or so witnesses questioned by the police who could support specific aspects of the defence's line. Precisely why Smorenberg was chosen we will see shortly.

TSAFENDAS AND THE COLOURED PEOPLE

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he like Coloured people?

SMORENBERG: The impression I got is that he didn't like them.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you get that impression? Was there an incident that you can relate?

SMORENBERG: Yes. There are one or two incidents. The first time, they normally have a labourer working with them, and on this particular occasion the labourer had come to complain that he did not wish to work with the fitter any longer. I asked why, so he said that when he offered him a little bit of advice the fitter had turned round and told him that he is the boss on the job and he is not taking any advice or any backchat whatsoever from any Coloured.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other incident that you can recall?

SMORENBERG: Yes, the second time that I formed an opinion that he didn't like them was the statement he had made to me while we were working down at the Docks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the occasion? What were you working on?

SMORENBERG: We have down at the Docks a cooling water intake for the Power station.

We have gone down there to do some overhaul work, and we were about 40 feet down in the ground.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is it like down there?

SMORENBERG: It is quite a big tunnel. It reminds one of, shall we say, a 15th century castle, the torture chambers or the dungeons. It is dripping with water, and quite dirty and dark. It is generally an eerie place. We had gone down there to do some work, and while we were working I said to him jokingly that this is a good place for Mr. Vorster to keep his political prisoners, to which he replied, and I was quite shocked at the time - I suppose I generally didn't expect any political conversation from him - he replied "Yes, they should put them all down here; in fact they should put all the Coloureds here, open the doors and drown the lot."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In what tone of voice did he make this remark?

SMORENBERG: Well, it wasn't sort of overbearing; it was just as a sort of general discussion.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S IMPRESSION THAT TSAFENDAS DID NOT LIKE THE COLOURED PEOPLE

Of the many absurd statements about Tsafendas that were heard during the summary trial, Smorenberg's remarks regarding Tsafendas's attitude to Coloured people are the hardest to comprehend. They stretch belief to breaking point, but even if they are true, and the author has no way to be certain, mountains of evidence is available to demonstrate that they do not represent Tsafendas's true feelings. Out of the about two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission and the forty-four the author has interviewed, not one said anything that would support Smorenberg's claims. Indeed witnesses stated the exact opposite:

- Perhaps the most decisive refutation is the fact that Tsafendas applied to be classified as Coloured himself, hardly the act of a man who did not like such people. Furthermore, Tsafendas had given as one of the reasons for his application the fact that he regarded himself as a Coloured.⁵⁰¹⁹ ⁵⁰¹⁹ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 39. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

- For five months, Tsafendas lived with the Coloured family of Patrick O’Ryan, who testified before Smorenberg that Tsafendas was “favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.”⁵⁰²⁰
- Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas’s flatmate for three months in Pretoria in 1965, testified to the police that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds.”⁵⁰²¹
- Col. McIntyre of the South African police wrote in a report dated October 3 that Tsafendas told “several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a Coloured.”⁵⁰²²
- Albert Vercoueil, who was Tsafendas’s supervisor for five months at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, told the police that Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers (and) had fights with several White workers,”⁵⁰²³ but he “never argued with Coloureds.”⁵⁰²⁴
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-white” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁵⁰²⁵
- Keith Martincich said Tsafendas told him that “Coloureds were better than the Europeans”⁵⁰²⁶
- Jose Baltazar testified that when Tsafendas “was in the presence of whites, he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached.”⁵⁰²⁷
- Gladstone Dunn said Tsafendas told him that the South African Government “was not playing fair with the non-whites. He said that the wages paid to non-whites were very ⁵⁰²⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁰²¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰²² The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰²³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰²⁴ Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰²⁵ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁰²⁶ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰²⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation.”⁵⁰²⁸ Tsafendas himself was classified white, so why would he care about mistreatment of non-whites, especially if he was said not to like them?

- Meldon Tillek testified that Tsafendas told him that “the white people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people.”⁵⁰²⁹
- Ralph Lighton who had worked with Tsafendas for 9-10 weeks testified that Tsafendas “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans.”⁵⁰³⁰
- Nikolaas Nel: Tsafendas “was certainly unpopular among white workers” and “adapted more to the non-whites.”⁵⁰³¹
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”⁵⁰³²
- Peter Daniels testified to the court only minutes before Smorenberg that Tsafendas “preferred to be amongst the Coloured community” and that “he would like to be among the Coloured community, make himself a Coloured man.”⁵⁰³³
- Keith Martincich testified to the police that Tsafendas “said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me ... I noticed that he was very familiar with the coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him.”⁵⁰³⁴

The author read Smorenberg’s court statement to forty-four people who knew ⁵⁰²⁸ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰²⁹ Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰³⁰ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰³¹ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰³² Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰³³ Peter Daniels testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁰³⁴ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas very well, such as Tsafendas's half-sister Katerina Pnema, Fotini Gavasiadis, the three priests who visited him in hospital and in prison, Costas Poriadis, Helen Grispos and Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikola Banovic and to thirteen of the Eleni crew who were with him for forty-two days prior to the assassination. Every one of the above witnesses believes that Smorenberg's statement is either a lie or a false impression. Several of them simply laughed when they heard what Smorenberg said.

These are some of the responses from people who knew Tsafendas best:

- Katerina Pnema said Smorenberg “does not know what he is talking about. Dimitri always defended the Coloureds and the Blacks from the Whites. He was fired from jobs because he supported them.”⁵⁰³⁵
- Fotini Gavasiadis called the statement “ridiculous,” stating that Tsafendas was “the exact opposite.”⁵⁰³⁶
- Mary Eendracht said she was completely surprised to hear such a statement. “Are you serious? I never heard that. It can't be true. No one would have said that about Dimitri.”⁵⁰³⁷
- Andreas Babiolakis said, “These people [Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg] must have been hallucinating, not Dimitri, if this is what they said about him.”⁵⁰³⁸
- Ira Kyriakakis told the author that Tsafendas was “an idealist. He was very passionate about politics; he despised racism and colonialism and wanted Mozambique to get rid of the Portuguese; he was very strong in favour of Mozambique's independence.”⁵⁰³⁹
- Michalis Vasilakis said Dr. Cooper's statement was “one of the biggest nonsense I have heard in my life.”⁵⁰⁴⁰

We should also remember that Tsafendas lived not only with the O'Ryan family but in the same house as other Coloured people such as Richard Poggenpoel and the Daniels family. He was willing to meet and consider marriage to the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels, while he also wanted to marry Sybie Barrendila a young lady of Coloured-Indian ⁵⁰³⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁰³⁶ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁰³⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵⁰³⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵⁰³⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁰⁴⁰ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

ancestry. His first serious relationship, which lasted for more than a year in the late 1930s, was with a Black Mozambican girl named Stella. Tsafendas described himself to the police as being against apartheid and in “sympathy with the people fighting racialism.”⁵⁰⁴¹

David Bloomberg told the author that Tsafendas “felt Coloured, and he was more comfortable with the Coloured people, and he had been living with Coloured people in Cape Town.”⁵⁰⁴² Tsafendas also took some of the Eleni seamen to a township in Cape Town where Blacks lived in an effort to show them at first-hand how some people lived under apartheid. He had also urged the seamen to spend as little money as possible while in Cape Town in order not to contribute to South Africa’s economy.⁵⁰⁴³ Finally, Tsafendas got into a fight with Nick Vergos after he supported two Black workers who were exploited by Vergos.⁵⁰⁴⁴ All these are hardly the attitudes of someone who was unsympathetic towards Coloureds.

It is not impossible that Tsafendas made the comments attributed to him by Smorenberg, but we do not know the background to the incident, whether Smorenberg may have misunderstood what happened or misheard what was said, or whether Tsafendas was being sarcastic or ironic, as he often was according to several witnesses the author interviewed. Alternatively, he might have said what he did because he simply did not want to argue with the Whites around him. What is a fact is that he was not antagonistic towards the Coloured community, indeed he was strongly opposed to apartheid as several witnesses testified. The Attorney-General could have used all the witness statements which were in the possession of the police, to challenge Smorenberg’s comments, but he chose not to do so. For a more detailed account of Tsafendas’s’ racial “preferences,” see Dr. Cooper’s testimony (the part: Being unsympathetic towards Coloureds and Natives) and his biography in Chapter Two.

⁵⁰⁴¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁴² David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

⁵⁰⁴³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁵⁰⁴⁴ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S OPINION ABOUT VORSTER AND VERWOERD

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he make any comment on Mr. Vorster?

SMORENBERG: Yes. He said he thought that Mr. Vorster was the right type of man for the Minister of Justice's job. And he went on to say that he thought the Prime Minister was a clever man and he held the right position. In other words, he was the right man for the job as well.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And who was the Prime Minister then?

SMORENBERG: Dr. Verwoerd.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What impression did you get, was he a supporter of the Government or an opponent or a critic of the Government?

SMORENBERG: Well, I got the impression that he was a supporter.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S OPINION ABOUT VORSTER AND VERWOERD

If Smorenberg's claim that Tsafendas disliked Coloured people was the most absurd statement made at the trial, then the second most absurd must be that he "got the impression" Tsafendas was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and his government. Both came from the same man, a man who stated that Tsafendas "never discussed politics with me."⁵⁰⁴⁵

It is possible that Tsafendas was being sarcastic, especially with his comment about Vorster. That he characterised him as "the right type of man" for the job does not mean that he agreed with or supported him. Indeed, it could have implied that Vorster's character was such that he was right for some sort of dirty work involving his responsibility for police and prison. Judging a person as the "right type of man" does not imply he is a "good type of man," merely that he has the appropriate skills for a designated task. It is like saying that Heinrich Himmler was the right type of man to orchestrate the Holocaust, meaning that he was able to do it because he was monstrously evil. Arguably, Himmler was indeed the right man for a job which could only be performed by a monster but which required administrative abilities, too. Jack the Ripper was also a monster but might not have been the “right type of man” to organise the Holocaust, but was obviously the “right type of man” to murder women.

⁵⁰⁴⁵ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

As for the comment about Dr. Verwoerd, again the fact that Tsafendas described him as “clever” does not imply approval or even that he agreed with him. It is an objective statement. Someone may comment that Hitler was a vegetarian, but this would not be taken as a statement of support for Hitler.

Let us first look at what people told the police concerning Tsafendas's opinion about Dr. Verwoerd and the government:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁵⁰⁴⁶
- Kenneth Ross told the police that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pre-Russian.”⁵⁰⁴⁷
- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”⁵⁰⁴⁸ Later O’Ryan described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was ‘Hitler’s best student’ and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.⁵⁰⁴⁹

⁵⁰⁴⁶ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁴⁷ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁴⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁰⁴⁹ Patrick O’Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes. Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”⁵⁰⁵⁰
- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African Government’s policy was “rotten” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”⁵⁰⁵¹
- Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.”⁵⁰⁵²
- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, “You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too.”⁵⁰⁵³
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”⁵⁰⁵⁴
- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as “Communist bastard.”⁵⁰⁵⁵
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a ⁵⁰⁵⁰ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵¹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵² Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁵³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵⁴ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵⁵ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

dangerous person.”⁵⁰⁵⁶ He suspected Tsafendas of stirring up disaffection among young non-Whites in the Mangete Reserve. “I say this because during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion, because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable... He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”⁵⁰⁵⁷

- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”⁵⁰⁵⁸
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁵⁰⁵⁹
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”⁵⁰⁶⁰
- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.⁵⁰⁶¹
- One day after the assassination, a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon informed the South African police that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”⁵⁰⁶²
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being ⁵⁰⁵⁶ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵⁷ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁵⁸ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

⁵⁰⁵⁹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁰⁶⁰ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁶¹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

⁵⁰⁶² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

“intensely anti-white.”⁵⁰⁶³

- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas's landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”⁵⁰⁶⁴
- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”⁵⁰⁶⁵
- Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a 75-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁵⁰⁶⁶ Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁵⁰⁶⁷

For a more detailed account of Tsafendas's political ideas, see earlier in Dr. Cooper's testimony regarding his motive killing Dr. Verwoerd.

More importantly, Tsafendas himself had told the police that he was “disgusted” with Dr. Verwoerd's racial policies, that he did not believe he was the real representative of all South Africans and wanted to see a government that would represent all the South African people. He even said he had hoped that by killing him a “change of policy would take place.” The police also had in their possession photographs from the demonstrations in London where Tsafendas was holding a placard depicting a man in a Ku Klux Klan uniform and underneath it the words, Dr. Verwoerd and another one where he had pinned the Yellow Star ⁵⁰⁶³ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁰⁶⁴ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁶⁵ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

⁵⁰⁶⁶ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

⁵⁰⁶⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

of David to his coat.⁵⁰⁶⁸

Nick Vergos had characterised Tsafendas as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa,”⁵⁰⁶⁹ while Kenneth Ross,⁵⁰⁷⁰ Robert Smith, Roelof Swiegers⁵⁰⁷¹ and many others testified that he was a Communist. Stronger language came from such witnesses as Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, all of whom testified to the police that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student,” and that he made a spitting gesture at Verwoerd’s picture.⁵⁰⁷² As recently as a year ago, Father Probst and Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas as a dangerous Communist.⁵⁰⁷³

All of this evidence was in the hands of the police, but none of it was used to challenge Smorenberg. If the Attorney General had challenged Smorenberg’s “impressions” that Tsafendas supported Dr. Verwoerd and his government, the Attorney-General could have presented him as an unreliable witness since his testimony was plainly incompatible with evidence gathered by the police. However, it was perfectly compatible with the defence’s case, of which it was an important part.

SOME “ODD INCIDENTS”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any other incident which stands out in your mind as being odd?

SMORENBERG: From what point of view?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just odd incidents. Things that you thought were strange conduct ⁵⁰⁶⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁰⁶⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁷⁰ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁷¹ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

⁵⁰⁷² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵⁰⁷³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

on the part of Tsafendas?

SMORENBERG: Regarding his conduct?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

SMORENBERG: Yes, there were one or two strange things about him. On one particular occasion he was required to change a fairly large pipe. These pipes are held together by 8 bolts. Normally speaking these bolts rust up. There is a lot of seawater there. When a set of bolts comes out we quite often replace them with new ones. On this occasion he had come to me with the bolts in his hand, and they were fairly badly rusted, and he asked me what he should do with them, to which I replied "Make out an order and get a new set from the stores." He went away, made the order out, drew the bolts, and about half an hour later I went on the job to check and I found the old bolts lying, I should say the new bolts lying to one side and he has replaced the old bolts. Well, I thought it was a bit strange to ask for new bolts and then put the old ones back DEFENCE COUNSEL: Time sheets - can you recall an incident in relation to time sheets which you considered to be strange?

SMORENBERG: Yes. Normally time sheets for the fitters in the section are made out on Monday morning, and that covers the work for the previous week. Any overtime that has been done is also entered on these time sheets. Except in the case where there is a public holiday which falls during the week, as was the case in October. The 10th of October was Kruger Day, which fell on a Sunday. Monday was automatically taken as a holiday, so therefore we were required to make these time sheets out earlier in the week. It was done on a Thursday.

It makes it a bit difficult, because you are then entering up time which they have not yet worked, such as the Thursday and Friday, I had made out the time sheets for the week and sent them on. On the Friday we had a fairly urgent job to do, and the fitters were required to work throughout their lunch hour, and they would therefore be paid overtime for this. I then went out and explained to them that the time sheets had already been sent in, and I could only enter the overtime up on the following week. Everybody seemed to be quite happy about it. There was a number of Coloureds on the job, as well as other fitters

When the next Thursday came and they went to get their pay he had come back and complained bitterly that he had been underpaid for half an hour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you think it was strange?

SMORENBERG: Well, I then went ahead and explained to him again. I said "I told you last week that you would have to wait an extra week before you get this money." But he could not quite grasp it. Eventually I had to take out a piece of chalk and a wooden board and sort of draw a long line and divide it up into seven days and explain from one week to the next week. The Coloureds understood quite easily the first time, but he had great difficulty in understanding why he had to wait an extra week for his money.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When you say "The Coloureds" are they labourers?

SMORENBERG: They are the labourers, yes.

COMMENTS REGARDING THE "ODD INCIDENTS"

Advocate Cooper appears determined to portray Tsafendas as acting strangely with regard to two apparently workaday situations, although Smorenberg is slow to understand his prodding. When Cooper mentions "Odd," Smorenberg asks, "From what point of view?" and when Cooper says "Just odd incidents," Smorenberg asks, "Regarding his conduct?" The first example of "strange conduct" involved eight rusted pipe bolts. Tsafendas asked Smorenberg what he should do about them and was told to draw new ones. Later, Smorenberg noted that Tsafendas had put the rusted bolts back while the new bolts were lying to one side. The second incident concerned overtime payments. In a week when there was a public holiday, as happened in this case, with Kruger Day on October 10, some overtime payments were delayed by a week. Tsafendas apparently failed to understand this and complained that he had been underpaid by a half-hour. Smorenberg said, "He had great difficulty in understanding why he had to wait an extra week for his money."

Neither of these incidents suggests anything stranger than the sort of back-and-forth and misunderstandings that take place in every workplace during a busy day. That Tsafendas put back the old bolts instead of the new ones could easily be an act of absent-mindedness. If he was unfamiliar with the overtime payments system, it seems natural that he would be suspicious and need the details explained to him. Neither of these incidents was mentioned by Smorenberg in his statement to the police made twelve days earlier. What might seem genuinely odd is that although the defence team had met ahead of the trial and Smorenberg knew what he would be asked, he seemed at a loss to find something strange about Tsafendas's conduct. Whatever difficulties Tsafendas may have had with the time sheets, Smorenberg later told the court that he found Tsafendas's intelligence to be "perhaps a little bit higher than normal," contradicting his own testimony a few minutes earlier which suggested that the accused was perhaps not very bright.

TSAFENDAS'S TRAVELS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he talk about various subjects?

SMORENBERG: Well, he quite often started to talk about his travels, but in a sense it was garbled. He would start off on something and then he would sort of go off at a tangent, and you could never get to the basic point that he was trying to get to. Invariably I used to just sort of lose patience and not even worry to listen.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you believe that he was shooting a line?

SMORENBERG: Yes, very much so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You didn't believe his story?

SMORENBERG: Not particularly. One or two of them may have been true. He said he had been an engineer at sea, which could quite possibly have happened, but on the standard of his work, I doubt it very much.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How would you describe these stories that he told you?

SMORENBERG: Which stories? The travels?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

SMORENBERG: They seemed a bit farfetched. He mentioned that he had been in Canada, and that he had been to sea as an engineer. I can't remember them all. In fact, as I said earlier, I had given up hope afterwards of even bothering trying to remember.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his favourite saying?

SMORENBERG: Well, he gave me the impression that he thought he had done very well for himself in the world. And on a number of occasions he said "I don't think I have done too badly for a poor Portuguese boy born in Lourenço Marques."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he married?

SMORENBERG: He told me that he was not.

TSAFENDAS'S STANDARD OF WORK

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the standard of his work?

SMORENBERG: It was very poor.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was he a qualified fitter? Could you see when he was doing a job? Did he do a job like a fitter that requires knowledge and dexterity? When he was on the job, did he look like a fitter on the job, or what?

SMORENBERG: No, he looked more like a labourer, to be quite honest.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did Tsafendas leave his employment at the Power Station?

SMORENBERG: Well, we had given him notice; we had asked him - at least we told him that he was no longer required, we were going to fire him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react?

SMORENBERG: I wouldn't actually say violently, but tendencies towards that. He was very upset about it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he say?

SMORENBERG: He said he had worked all over the world, and then, when he came to a stupid place like the Cape Town City Council, they thought he wasn't good enough.
(Laughter).

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you think they were justified in terminating his employment?

SMORENBERG: Definitely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Could he hold the job down?

SMORENBERG: No, he could not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it a difficult job? The work that you gave him, was it really difficult?

SMORENBERG: No. Quite often, if we have a breakdown and we have to get it going again, due to the fact that you must keep a constant power supply, quite often these labourers will go ahead and change a pipe for us. There may be a fitter around, but he will be on the second job. A labourer can manage quite easily.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did the labourer in fact perform this type of work better than the accused did?

SMORENBERG: Yes, but that could possibly be because they had had more experience.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was the salary of the accused?

SMORENBERG: Approximately £85 a month.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: £85 a month?

SMORENBERG: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he always complain that he was not adequately compensated for his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, quite often.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So he didn't regard £85 a month as sufficient?

SMORENBERG: No.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S WORK STANDARDS

Smorenberg's testimony here supports Dr. Cooper's view that Tsafendas was not a good worker and that he was not capable of holding down a job. Several employers, supervisors and co-workers gave statements to the police about Tsafendas's work standards. Redvers Wakfer, who also worked at the same company, also told the police that Tsafendas's work was not good, saying. "I never worked with him but received a report that he was not a good worker and I have instructions that he should be dismissed."⁵⁰⁷⁴

The reasons why Tsafendas was not a good worker will be examined shortly. However, more than fifty former colleagues of Tsafendas were questioned by the police and no one complained about his work standards, including five of his colleagues at the Parliament. On the contrary, several testified that he was a good worker. For example:

⁵⁰⁷⁴ Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision, i.e. for approximately three weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker."⁵⁰⁷⁵
- Charles Woods, Tsafendas's supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, characterised him as "a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type."⁵⁰⁷⁶
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden was Senior security officer of the Colpontoon, diamond boat of Marine Diamond Corporation and worked with Tsafendas for around three months in 1966. He testified to the police that "we were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump- or engineer operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal."⁵⁰⁷⁷
- Garnet Muller, Tsafendas's supervisor at South African Railways for three weeks, testified that Tsafendas gave him to understand that he took the job on a temporary basis. He "observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant."⁵⁰⁷⁸
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban

⁵⁰⁷⁵ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁷⁶ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, 'Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.'

⁵⁰⁷⁷ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁷⁸ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

was approached by Tsafendas offering his services as a Portuguese or Greek interpreter. Tsafendas “was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work.” Eventually, Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁵⁰⁷⁹

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas’s boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be “not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker.”⁵⁰⁸⁰ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be “an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work.” He said Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person but he was always looking to quarrel with the White workers. Mr. Vercueil would usually receive complaints from the other (White) foremen, but never from the black workers. He never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn’t right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly.⁵⁰⁸¹
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for 9-10 weeks at Marine Diamond Corporation testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁵⁰⁸²
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s employer at the heavy engineering company, Fries and Son, in Frankfurt, Germany, described Tsafendas as “extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on ⁵⁰⁷⁹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁸⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁸¹ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁸² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁵⁰⁸³ Tsafendas received a reference from Fries and Son, which he used, with other recommendations, to get his job in the Parliament.

As to holding down a job, Tsafendas worked for five to six months as a teacher in Istanbul in 1961. He resigned of his own accord and received a warm reference from his employer, Mr. Limasollu Naci. Mrs. Advije Vedia Limasollu, Limasollu's widow said her husband would not have kept anyone at his college if they were no good.⁵⁰⁸⁴ He also worked for almost two years (May 1940-April 1942) as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg,⁵⁰⁸⁵ for two years (1936-1939) at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane,⁵⁰⁸⁶ and six years (1933-1939) at the “Vulcan Iron Works,” General Engineers.⁵⁰⁸⁷

Tsafendas worked voluntarily as a teacher of English to children in both Istanbul and in Lourenço Marques and was hired several times in Durban for interpreting work. His record suggests that Tsafendas was keen to work and that when he enjoyed the job and found the environment congenial, he worked well; but his work was questionable when he was not happy with working conditions. Since, as Smorenberg testified, Tsafendas considered the wages at the power station to be insufficient, it is unsurprising that he was not enthusiastic about the job. For more about Tsafendas's work abilities see Dr. Cooper's testimony, “unable to function on a reasonable level-employment.”

All of this evidence, that he Tsafendas was a good worker when he liked the job and a poor one when he did not, was held by the police, but again it was not used to challenge Smorenberg's testimony.

⁵⁰⁸³ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

⁵⁰⁸⁴ Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

⁵⁰⁸⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁸⁶ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demetrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁰⁸⁷ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH HIS COLLEAGUES

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think of his mental state?

SMORENBERG: Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he fit in?

SMORENBERG: No. He was not the type to fit in with the boys. He always seemed to be excluded from everything. If you saw him, you would see him sitting by himself. Although he did on a number of occasions try to strike up conversation with people.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But the other people didn't fancy him?

SMORENBERG: Didn't take to him, no.

COMMENTS ON SMORENBERG'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MENTAL STATE AND HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH HIS COLLEAGUES

Smorenberg here claims that Tsafendas seemed "a little bit barmy," although clearly not "mad." What is important about this comment is not Smorenberg's opinion, and it is only his opinion, but the fact that it was regarded by Judge Beyers as a convincing sign of Tsafendas's insanity. However, consider how Judge Beyers twisted Smorenberg's words in his verdict. He said: "One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to-earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.'" However, Smorenberg did not say that. What he said was, "Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy."

As for Tsafendas not fitting in with the boys and his co-workers not fancying him, there could be many reasons for this. It did not happen at all his jobs and many former colleagues and superiors testified about him in favourable terms. These included, as mentioned above, Johannes Aurets, Cornelius Rudolph, Charles Woods and Horst Hartman. Aurets said Tsafendas was not only "well-mannered and well-spoken" but that "associated with those working with him... appeared to be of a good nature... During the time he was employed under my supervision i.e. for approximately 3 weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker.”⁵⁰⁸⁸ August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁵⁰⁸⁹

Three workers at Fries and Son in Frankfurt described Tsafendas as “a good comrade,” “a nice guy”, “extremely courteous, a very pleasant man.”⁵⁰⁹⁰ Carel van Heerden, who worked with Tsafendas at the Marine Diamond Corporation, indicated that far from being a loner, Tsafendas was “friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”⁵⁰⁹¹ Father Nikola Banovic told this the author that Tsafendas was very popular with both students and fellow teachers at the Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul.⁵⁰⁹²

With regard to Tsafendas's attitude to his workmates, it is important to recall the statement made to the police by Horst Albert Vercueil, the foreman at F. A. Poole in Pretoria who had Tsafendas under his supervision for five months. He testified that Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers,”⁵⁰⁹³ but he never argued with Coloureds.⁵⁰⁹⁴ Nikolaas Nel, who worked with Tsafendas for five months on the same job, said he “was certainly unpopular among white workers. Accused adapted more to the non-whites.”⁵⁰⁹⁵ Martinus van Wyk, also at that job, said “he was quiet by nature and did not easily talk to us employees. He often spoke to the Bantu people.”⁵⁰⁹⁶

Nick Papadakis, who worked for a month with Tsafendas at the Hume Pipe Company in 1964 in Gondola, told the author that Tsafendas “often argued with Portuguese and other Whites.” The reason, he said, was that Tsafendas was “accusing the White workers of mistreating the Black workers ... he always defended the non-White workers.” Papadakis said that Tsafendas believed the Whites were exploiting and taking advantages of the non-

⁵⁰⁸⁸ Johannes Jaconus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁸⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁹⁰ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassination a one man's job – says Vorster.’

⁵⁰⁹¹ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁹² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁰⁹³ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁰⁹⁴ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁹⁵ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁰⁹⁶ Marthinus Petrus van Wyk statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Whites and he often argued with them about it, although he tried to avoid them as much as was possible. Papadakis said that Tsafendas had told him that he couldn't help but intervene if he saw an injustice or something wrong taking place.⁵⁰⁹⁷ A similar statement was made to the police by Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas's flatmate for three months in Pretoria in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas "stood up a lot for the Coloureds."⁵⁰⁹⁸

The author cannot be certain why Tsafendas did not "fit in with the boys" at the power station. His work record shows that at some jobs he got along fine with his workmates. The most likely reason is that he considered these particular White workers to be racist and felt they were taking advantage of the Blacks and Coloureds, and therefore sought to avoid them, as he did at F.A. Poole Engineering and Hume Pipe Company. If this was a continuing issue, it would have happened at his other jobs too, which it did not.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What was the salary of the accused?

SMORENBERG: Approximately £85 a month.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: £85 a month?

SMORENBERG: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't he always complain that he was not adequately compensated for his work?

SMORENBERG: Yes, quite often.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So he didn't regard £85 a month as sufficient?

SMORENBERG: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Don't you think that when the accused spoke about Dr. Verwoerd and Mr. Vorster he wanted to impress you?

SMORENBERG: It could well have been, but I think, under the circumstances, he was not in any fit condition to impress anybody. He was quite frightened down at the bottom. It is not too pleasant an experience down there. I think at the earliest moment he just wanted to get out. I doubt very much whether he was in the mood for impressing anybody.

⁵⁰⁹⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁰⁹⁸ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say the accused told you that he was married?

SMORENBERG: No, he said he was not married.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was his intelligence normal?

SMORENBERG: Yes, I would say he had normal intelligence. Perhaps a little bit higher than normal.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The cross examination here offers a possible clue as to why Tsafendas did not work effectively at the power station – that he was dissatisfied with his wages, frequently the main reason for poor standards in any work situation. The rest of the cross-examination does not offer anything new. Evidence gathered by the police which contradicts Smorenberg's testimony and which could have been adduced to reveal him as an unreliable witness was not used. His most absurd comment, that Tsafendas supported Dr. Verwoerd and the government, thus remained unchallenged. As usual, we are not in position to know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of this evidence.

CONCLUSION

Smorenberg "got the impression" that Tsafendas was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and of apartheid and that he did not like Coloureds. Overwhelming and undisputed evidence proves that Smorenberg's "impression" was totally wrong, although the Attorney-General did not bother challenging it.

Smorenberg's testimony regarding Tsafendas was a travesty of the truth, but it was crucial, according to Judge Beyers in reaching his conclusion that Tsafendas was insane. However, the judge manipulated Smorenberg's words in his verdict, as he did with Patrick O'Ryan. In this case, he said, "One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to-earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.”⁵⁰⁹⁹ As we have seen, Smorenberg did not say this at all. He said “Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.”

What was the real purpose of the defence in having a witness like Smorenberg? Clearly to prove that Tsafendas was pro-government and therefore the assassination was not politically motivated but the deed of an unstable man. Out of the about one-hundred and fifty witnesses who were questioned by the police, David Bloomberg managed to locate the only one who had said something which might be taken as suggesting Tsafendas was “pro-government.” Smorenberg was also able to support the defence's argument that Tsafendas was mad, even though he also stated that “I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy.” Smorenberg also supported Dr. Cooper's diagnosis that Tsafendas was unable to hold down a job.

Everything in Smorenberg's testimony could have been taken apart and rendered null and void by using the evidence gathered by the South African police, but this did not happen. The saddest thing is that Smorenberg presented Tsafendas as a man who did not like Coloured people and who supported Dr. Verwoerd and Vorster. With these claims remaining unchallenged, people were left with the impression that these were Tsafendas's beliefs. Instead of being shown to the public as someone who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator who did not represent all the South African people, a tyrant oppressor, the monster who created apartheid and “Hitler's best student,” Tsafendas is represented in exactly the opposite light. None of the statements made to the South African police by witnesses such as Bornman, Furness, Smith, Ross and many others, as well as information collected about Tsafendas's political activities and real ideology, became known during the summary trial.

⁵⁰⁹⁹ Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 9: DR. ISAAC SAKINOFSKY

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Isaac Sakinofsky qualified as a doctor in 1955, completed his internship at Groote Schuur Hospital, Cape Town, and in 1957 joined the Department of Neurology and Psychiatry at the same hospital. His initial position was Registrar and later Senior Registrar. In June 1961, he earned his Doctorate in Medicine based on post-graduate research he had completed. At the beginning of 1962, he went to London to do post-graduate study and was appointed at the Maudsley Hospital, the teaching hospital of the Post-Graduate Institute of Psychiatry of the University of London. He served on the professional unit as a Registrar and later was promoted to Senior Registrar to a Professorial Unit. As a teaching hospital in psychiatry, the Maudsley is regarded as of ultimate rank.

In 1964, Dr. Sakinofsky took the Academic Post-graduate Diploma in Psychological Medicine of the University of London, and in July 1965 he returned to South Africa as the full-time Consultant Psychiatrist to Groote Schuur Hospital. He was also Senior Lecturer to the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Cape Town. In September 1966 he had been acting head for three months in Groote Schuur's Department of Psychiatry in the absence of his chief overseas. Dr. Sakinofsky authored two chapters on emergency psychiatry in a book titled Emergencies, published by Staples, London, in 1962.⁵¹⁰⁰

BACKGROUND ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Sakinofsky examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination. Later, he contacted all the hospitals Tsafendas had mentioned, looking for as much information as possible in the event he was called to testify at a trial, which indeed happened.⁵¹⁰¹ Dr. Sakinofsky stated in correspondence with the author: "In psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends and medical records."⁵¹⁰² Mr.

⁵¹⁰⁰ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵¹⁰¹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵¹⁰² Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

van Zyl and Professors Burke, Tuviah Zabow, Heilbrun and Resnick all agreed with the above.⁵¹⁰³ Dr. Sakinofsky secured one medical report from Tsafendas's medical record, but got nothing about the accused from his family or friends.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY⁵¹⁰⁴

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Having disposed of the preliminaries, what happened at 7 p.m. on the 6th September, 1966?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, at 7 p.m. on September, 6th, I was examining the accused, Demetrios Tsafendas.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the Casualty Department, Groote Schuur Hospital.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At whose request?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I was called by the Casualty Officer and by members of the Security Police.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the nature of your examination?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Psychiatric.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long did this examination last?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I estimate, without having timed it exactly, about an hour and a half.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you make certain findings?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you reduce your findings to writing and set it out in a report?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Indeed, I did.

⁵¹⁰³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁵¹⁰⁴ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Which is dated, do you know?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: September the 7th.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When did you draw up that report?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: The report was partly drawn up the same night and completed the next morning.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: To whom did you submit that report once you had drawn it up?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I expected that the report would be submitted to the Security Police for the use of the State and the report lay with the Medical Superintendent for some time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And was subsequently forwarded to the Attorney-General?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I just want to skip ahead; were you informed by the Attorney-General that you were not required to testify for the State, but were to be called by the Defence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. I made contact with the Attorney-General some weeks afterwards because I wondered what was happening and was told that I had been allocated to the Defence - my evidence was being allocated to the Defence.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you your report dated the 7th September, 1966, before you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Will you read it out to the Court?

(Copy handed to the bench).

DR. SAKINOFSKY: (Witness reads report). "On September 6th, 1966, at 7 p.m. I was called to Groote Schuur Hospital Casualty Department where I examined the mental state of a man who identified himself to me as Demetrios Tsafendas, and gave his age as 48 years. The patient's demeanour was moderately excited (but not elated or exalted); he was tense, breathing rapidly at times, and he seemed perplexed. On two occasions he burst into weeping for a few seconds, but was not otherwise manifestly depressed. His speech seemed unguarded; was under some pressure. He answered most questions readily. There was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought.

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: Do you mind if I interrupt where I don't understand? "His speech was unguarded; was under some pressure." I am not sure I've got the purport of that.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Pressure alludes to the piece of behaviour which we refer to as "excitement" and which I think has some difference from the lay use of the word "excitement", and one of the ways that one assesses....

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: "His speech was unguarded", what does that mean? He was not careful of what he was saying?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. One makes the assessment clinically of whether a patient is holding back, and my assessment was that he was not holding back at that time.

JUDGE BEYERS: He was speaking openly?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He was speaking openly.

JUDGE BEYERS: Now "He was under some pressure."

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. This refers to the rate of speech. The rate of speech was rapid and profuse, and is a symptom of excitement. (Witness continues to read report). "

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Disorder but I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired, in that there was a manifest....."

(The Court intervenes) JUDGE BEYERS: You are going too fast for me. "There was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought disorder...."

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: What does that mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Syntactical refers to the grammar with which the patient speaks. The psychiatrist analyses the patient's utterance in terms of the form (the grammar that is) and the contents, what he says in his speech. And when one uses the term "syntactical schizophrenic thought disorder" this is a cardinal feature of schizophrenia. But its absence at a particular time does not necessarily mean that the patient is not schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: So from the point of view of syntax his expressions were in order?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, the grammar of it was fine.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean the verb didn't go where the noun should be or....?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, there are certain aspects of syntax which a psychiatrist concentrates upon. One of these is the phenomenon of thought blocking, which is an unexpected gap in the train of the patient's speech. Another is referred to as asyndesis which is a disjunction of a phrase with another phrase - two phrases being connected which are not logical. Another is the interpenetration of thoughts and ideas into a train of thought. And there are others where we talk of derailment.

JUDGE BEYERS: In other words, syntactically speaking, your observation there was negative?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: It does not negative schizophrenia?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: But it did not support it at that stage?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite.

(Witness continues reading report) "But I formed the conclusion that his reason was impaired in that there was a manifest defect of logical processes with repeated non sequiturs. He was frankly deluded in that he said that the Portuguese Government had kept him in a prison for 14 years (between 1949 and 1963) for being a conscientious objector and that they had tried to kill him for this by the application of alternating currents to his head. He gave as one of the reasons for his assassination of the Prime Minister that the latter was in league with the Portuguese Government. He voiced several other delusional ideas, viz., that the Prime Minister had been a foreigner (and he, Tsafendas, a South African)"

JUDGE BEYERS: Why do you call that delusional? That was true, wasn't it?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the first place Tsafendas himself, I believe, is not a South African, and in the second place, the Prime Minister certainly by adoption a South African.

(Witness continues reading report) "Been against the English way of life (with which he, Tsafendas, identified himself on account of 'having had an English mother'). He said that Dr. Verwoerd had been against the ideal of a 'Cape to Cairo' union, which he, the patient, identified with 'the Commonwealth.' He claimed that his mother, from whom he had been separated, was called Von Willem and that she was a member of an overseas Royal Family and I wondered at the time whether this had to do with the existence of Queen Wilhelmina and an allusion to the Prime Minister's Dutch descent.

And this idea he apparently connected with his concern for the Commonwealth. He stated that he had brooded over the weekend about the meeting between the Prime Minister and Chief Leabua Jonathan, which meant to him a further blow to the "Commonwealth," and this had determined his actions subsequently. He appears to have misinterpreted this meeting as being related to the immorality legislation, in that he claims to have applied for a double identity card, so that he could try and find a wife among either the White or non-White groups: he stated that he had been rejected by women of both race groups and therefore was not able to get married. Tsafendas spoke also of attacks of surges of "anguish and pain" ... (I am quoting him) ... "anguish and pain" throughout his body and limbs associated with "pressure headaches" (and I noted from his hospital records that he had attended the out-patient clinic for headaches - not the psychiatric clinic - during June, 1966). He claimed also to see "hairy springs and coils" in front of his eyes which he attributed to blood pressure, but I did not think that this betokened hallucinosis. He denied passivity feelings at that time but said that his thoughts raced most of the time.

JUDGE BEYERS: Now you've got me again. What is that "passivity feelings"?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: A passivity feeling is another very important cardinal feature of schizophrenia whereby an influence on the patient is interpreted, by the patient, as being due to an external agency. For instance, if a patient believes that his body had been changed by hypnosis or by computers or something like that, or by an enemy, this would be passivity.

JUDGE BEYERS: Passivity, does that mean that he maintains that it is not his fault because his body has been taken over by some other agent or something....?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At this time I did not question him.

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, but is that what it means?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: That he is just the tool of some other outside force or influence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If he said he was the tool of an outside ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that what 'passivity feelings' mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, that one's will is taken over, one's thoughts are tampered with, one's body functions are interfered with by an external agency.

(Witness continues reading report.) "He was fully orientated for time and person. His concentration was moderately impaired; his general knowledge reasonable (considering that he claimed only to have passed Standard V), and he denied epileptic seizures. The patient claims to have had several "nervous breakdowns." He says that he was detained in a New York immigration transit centre in 1942 and given tablets. Subsequently he spent about 18 months in the Grafton State Hospital, New York, where he had electro-convulsive therapy and he was subsequently deported to Greece. He had a further period of hospitalisation for "nervous breakdown" in 1963 at, what he told me was, the Ochosen Kranken- house outside Hamburg." May I say that it subsequently appears that his dates had been confused.

(Witness continues reading report.) Comment: I formed the conclusion that the patient is not of sound mind, that his thought processes are grossly impaired and deluded, and that he is not therefore in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of his deed. I consider that it is probable that his mental state is the result of damage caused by previous attacks of a mental disease called Schizophrenia. In my opinion, further important information on the state of his mind should be obtained by the following:

- He should be detained in a closed mental hospital ward for a period of observation. I would like myself to assess his mental state over a period of time and at successive interviews.
- He should have the following special investigations: An electro-encephalogram, a blood and cerebro-spinal fluid Wasserman reaction because occasionally an organic disease of the brain can mimic the clinical picture of schizophrenia, and he should have psychological tests.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is the Wasserman for? To see if it is syphilitic in origin?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Cerebral syphilis.

JUDGE BEYERS: To see if it is G.B.I. really?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

(Witness continues reading report):

- Medical reports should be obtained via the Portuguese government; Grafton State Hospital, New York, and the Krankenhaus outside Hamburg and I said it was possible that the names of these places had been garbled by the patient.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And you hand in that report as EXHIBIT C.

JUDGE BEYERS: Just before Mr. Cooper asks you further - and thanks for helping me through this - how did it come about that he told you all this that is written down here, about Chief Jonathan, the Prime Minister, Von Willem, and all that? Did you put him on a couch and make him talk, or what happened?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He was on a couch; I didn't put him on a couch; he'd been on a couch because he had had a wound stitched on his nose, so I left him on the couch and just chatted to him as a psychiatrist does; leading him along certain lines and trying to probe other channels.

JUDGE BEYERS: Were you two alone?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, there was one other person present. He was my Junior Registrar.

JUDGE BEYERS: And you just got him to ramble on and talk to see what came out?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If I may quote from some notes I made at the time. I said to him: "Is it true that you killed the Prime Minister?" That is how I started, and he nodded. He agreed that he did assassinate the Prime Minister but he said: "I don't remember what happened after that." I asked him whether he had taken the job as a messenger in order to assassinate the Prime Minister. He denied this. He denied that he sought the job as a messenger with the intention of killing the Prime Minister. He claimed that he had no idea that he would be allowed access to the Prime Minister at any time, and he was rather taken by surprise that he was. I said; "What made you do a thing like that?" He said: "I didn't agree with the policy. I am in favour of the Commonwealth. My mother is a relative to Royalty overseas" and he went on rambling in this way about his mother's name being Von Willem, that she died in 1927.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is how all this came out?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, in that sort of way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You followed, therefore, a recognised procedure?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, this is, I think, quite recognised as a means of eliciting information.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did you follow various lines of questioning?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. This is what is called an unstructured interview, in that one didn't have a sort of questionnaire and then address it to the patient. I let him ramble in order to promote him talking about things that I might not ask him about. But in doing so I tried to cover what we regard as the mental state, in other words, his general appearance and behaviour, his thought processes, existence of misperceptions, misinterpretations, his cognitive functions, and so on.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At that stage you had no information of his background, apart from what he told you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Apart from what he told me and from what I heard over the radio, that he had assassinated the Prime Minister.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You did not know that three months previously Dr. Kossew had diagnosed him as a schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had no idea.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You did not know that in America he had been diagnosed as a hebephrenic type schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No idea at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Nor did you know of the fact that he had been to the Isle of Wight?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, he didn't tell me that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Nor did you know that he had been to London Hospital?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No. He didn't tell him about the hospitals

DEFENCE COUNSEL: A mental hospital, and that he had there also been classified or diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had no knowledge of that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You obviously must have realised that this was a very important diagnosis that you had to make?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Indeed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you cautious? Did you give it a great deal of thought? Were you cautious in your approach?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, indeed. I was very much aware of the importance of this case.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You appear by nature to be a cautious person, if I may say so?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: That is for others to judge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you thereafter request to see the accused again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You requested the defence, did you not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I initially contacted the prosecutor and then the defence.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think you initially contacted me, didn't you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: And I referred you to the Attorney-General?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: This case is obviously a matter of importance?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. It is more than of importance to - I think there are several aspects of importance in this case. I think as a case in forensic psychiatry it is of the utmost importance, but I don't think that this could have concerned me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you in fact write overseas for a report to the German hospital?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did. I wrote to all the hospitals that the patient had mentioned.

JUDGE BEYERS: Perhaps we had better get this on record, in case more might be read into that remark than is necessary. Doctor, when you contacted me you asked me - I am putting it; you can say whether it is right or not - whether it isn't possible that we could do what is done in America and that you be called by the judge rather than by one of the two parties?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: That is quite true, but I don't think that I emphasised that I personally alone. My feeling, if I may say so in this place, is that in a matter of criminal trial the forensic psychiatrists should be called by the court - forensic psychiatrist.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is what you said to me. All I want is that it is clear that we discussed no aspect of this, and I didn't know what this record was going to have?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, not at all. In fact what this record was going to have you told me you didn't want to know DEFENCE COUNSEL: I accept that without qualification.

JUDGE BEYERS: I told the witness that in this country judges don't call witnesses, unless they have to at the end of a case.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: May I say that the existence of an assessor who is a psychiatrist helps about my objection to the structure of criminal trials.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING HIS FIRST EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that his first examination of Tsafendas lasted "without having timed it exactly, about an hour and a half." However, according to the newspaper reports of the time, this examination must have lasted for thirty to forty minutes maximum. According to Dr. Sakinofsky, he saw Tsafendas at Groote Schuur Hospital at 7 pm. Dr. Darby, who examined Tsafendas at the same hospital just before Dr. Sakinofsky, had examined him at 6.40 pm, which suggests that Dr. Darby had spent maximum twenty minutes with Tsafendas. According to the newspaper reports of the time,⁵¹⁰⁵ if they are accurate, Tsafendas's visit to the hospital had lasted one hour, which leaves forty minutes maximum for Dr. Sakinofsky and not an hour and a half.

PRIOR TO DR. SAKINOFSKY'S EXAMINATION

First, we must examine the condition of Tsafendas at the time he was seen by Dr. Sakinofsky. Immediately after the assassination, Tsafendas was taken to the police station in Caledon Square. He claims he was beaten by policemen all the way there. At 2.50 pm, soon after his arrival, Tsafendas was examined, because of his injuries and bleeding, by Dr. Kossew, who found that he had a gaping wound of one and a half inches from his forehead to the bridge of his nose, which was swollen, and a half-inch cut on the lower lip. Tsafendas answered questions guardedly but did not appear confused and Dr. Kossew did not find anything wrong with his mental state.⁵¹⁰⁶

⁵¹⁰⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 'Tsafendas in hospital', 7 September 1966: 1; Natal Mercury, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.' 7 September 1966: 1.

⁵¹⁰⁶ Dr. Kossew's report on examination in case of alleged assault or other crime, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

Tsafendas remained at the police station for the next three hours, during which time, he claimed,⁵¹⁰⁷ and this was supported by a policeman who was present,⁵¹⁰⁸ he was tortured and beaten.⁵¹⁰⁹ Because of his injuries and severe bleeding from the beating, the officer in charge asked Brigadier Aucamp⁵¹¹⁰ to take Tsafendas to a hospital.⁵¹¹¹ Brigadier Aucamp and his detail must have arrived with Tsafendas at the casualty department of Groote Schuur hospital around 6.30 p.m.,⁵¹¹² according to newspaper reports of the time. During a heavily-guarded, one-hour visit,⁵¹¹³ the police imposed a total security blackout on the hospital and nobody was allowed to see Tsafendas. The newspaper reports of the time claimed that plain-clothed policemen stood by Tsafendas's side constantly during the hospital visit, including when he stripped to be examined and even inside the X-Ray room.⁵¹¹⁴

At 6.40 p.m., Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Darby, who found him to be "co-operative" and "composed." According to Dr. Darby's report, Tsafendas had a broken nose with blood obstructing the airways, a ragged laceration from the right eyebrow to the nose and a laceration of the lower lip. The cuts were stitched, the nose put in a splint and Tsafendas was given an anti-tetanus injection.⁵¹¹⁵ Dr. Darby's report did not contain anything about Tsafendas's state of mind. Dr. Darby's examination would have lasted at most twenty minutes as Tsafendas was then seen by Dr. Sakinofsky at 7 p.m.

In contradiction of newspaper reports that policemen were constantly with Tsafendas during the visit to the hospital, even in the X-ray room, Dr. Sakinofsky stated in correspondence with the author that he had examined Tsafendas without the presence of any policemen: "We found Mr. Tsafendas in a room that was milling about with uniformed and plain-clothed security men of all ranks. It would have been impossible to establish any kind of rapport with him under these conditions, so there proceeded a stand-off where we refused to examine him until the room was cleared of the security personnel, which we were ⁵¹⁰⁷ Dimitris Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. The part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

⁵¹⁰⁸ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

⁵¹⁰⁹ For more about what happened to Tsafendas immediately after the assassination see Chapter Four.

⁵¹¹⁰ Not sure if this is the correct spelling, but it sounds something like this.

⁵¹¹¹ Dimitris Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. The clip is available in the rushes.

⁵¹¹² Dimitris Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Darby at 6.40, therefore he must have arrived at the hospital shortly before that.

⁵¹¹³ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas in hospital'; Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.'

⁵¹¹⁴ Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.'

⁵¹¹⁵ Dr. Darby's statement regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, G.S.H. No: 65/14-081, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

eventually able to effect only after we contacted the superintendent of the hospital and got his support. After we had interviewed Mr. Tsafendas at length and after calming his agitation at the time and gaining rapport, we did complete our examination. We deliberately refused to make any public announcements until the following day. We would have liked to have detained him in the hospital for further study and treatment but the security authorities overrode our wishes and took him away.”⁵¹¹⁶ Dr. Sakinofsky is mistaken about making a public announcement the following day, as no such announcement took place.

THE EXAMINATION AND TSAFENDAS'S DELUSIONAL IDEAS

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas burst into tears twice, “his speech seemed unguarded, was under some pressure.” Dr. Sakinofsky goes on to describe in detail Tsafendas's mental condition at the time without reference to his physical condition. Of course, his task was to examine Tsafendas's mental and not his physical state, but this was a case of huge national importance when it might be assumed that all aspects of the accused assassin's condition would be of significance. Tsafendas was taken to hospital in the first place because of his physical injuries, which in themselves might have affected his mental state at the time. It is tempting to believe that the injuries would seem natural to Dr. Sakinofsky in a man who just four and a half hours earlier had killed the Prime Minister and then spent three hours in police custody. Dr. Sakinofsky stated that “there was no formal syntactical schizophrenic thought,” but Tsafendas's reason was impaired and he was also deluded. Let us examine now how “deluded” Tsafendas was.

TSAFENDAS BEING IMPRISONED FOR FOURTEEN YEARS BY THE PORTUGUESE GOVERNMENT

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas told him that the Portuguese Government had kept him in prison for fourteen years, between 1949 and 1963, for “being a conscientious objector and that they had tried to kill him for this by the application of alternating currents to his head.” None of the about two hundred or so witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and by the author testified that Tsafendas ever told them anything like this. None of the psychiatrists and psychologists who examined Tsafendas before and after the assassination heard such a story from Tsafendas and he never repeated this claim subsequently to anyone, not even to Dr. Sakinofsky when he examined him for a second and a third time. If Tsafendas really believed this happened, surely he would have told someone else too. Tsafendas never told a single person about it, as far as the author can establish.

⁵¹¹⁶ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

The fact is Tsafendas was imprisoned and tortured in Portugal and he told a number of people about it, but in a way that differed from the story Dr. Sakinofsky recounted. Patrick O’Ryan⁵¹¹⁷ and Gladstone Dunn⁵¹¹⁸ testified to the police about Tsafendas’s account, and several witnesses interviewed by the author said they were told the same story, such as Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Katerina Pnema, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nikolas Kambouris, Grigoris Pouftis, George Kantas, Mary Eendracht, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Father Minas Constandinou, Nikolaos Billis, Michalis Vasilakis, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Nick Papadakis. Tsafendas told these witnesses that he was imprisoned in Portugal because of his Communist and anti-colonialist activities, which was a fact according to the PIDE reports. He also told them that he was given electric shock treatment, which very probably happened. None of the witnesses remembers how long Tsafendas told them he was imprisoned, but they are all certain that it was not fourteen years.⁵¹¹⁹ According to the PIDE reports, Tsafendas was imprisoned by the Portuguese for about three years altogether. Tsafendas spoke at length to these relatives and friends, but he never told them what he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

Tsafendas also told Major Rossouw during his interrogation in Caledon Square police station that while in Portugal he was imprisoned “for over a year at the Port of Casias.” However, he made no mention of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.⁵¹²⁰ What he told Major Rossouw was what he told all the other witnesses.

⁵¹¹⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵¹¹⁸ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹¹⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵¹²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Furthermore, in July 1966, in an interview with the Cape Argus, where Tsafendas had described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.” He told the journalist that he was imprisoned without trial for three years in Portugal and “brainwashed,” a procedure from which he said he had never fully recovered. He also spoke about his imprisonment in Lisbon, in Barca d ‘Alva, in Aljuba and at the Machinegun Regiment, when he refused to serve in the Portuguese Army. He said that he was not allowed to return to Mozambique until 1963.⁵¹²¹ The newspaper did not explain that by brainwashing, Tsafendas meant the Portuguese’s attempts to change his Communist ideology and anti-Portuguese stance. That Tsafendas was telling the truth about all these matters is confirmed by PIDE’s “Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, no: 2707/64/SR, of November 15, 1964.”⁵¹²²

Thus, why did Tsafendas tell Dr. Sakinofsky a different story to the one he told everyone else? The likeliest explanation is that he lied to Dr. Sakinofsky as he lied to the other psychiatrists who examined him after the assassination for his own ends, though it is worth pointing out some things in Tsafendas’s statement to Dr. Sakinofsky were true. Tsafendas was a conscientious objector and was imprisoned for a few days by the Portuguese because of his refusal to serve in the Portuguese Army.⁵¹²³ In addition, Tsafendas told Alachiotis, Babiolakis, Billis, Kyriakakis, Constantaras, Eendracht, Patrick O’Ryan, Pouftis, Vasilakis, Kantas, Kambouris, Fathers Nikola Banovic and Minas Constandinou that he had pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army, which was also a fact.⁵¹²⁴ Interestingly, the dates which Dr. Sakinofsky said Tsafendas gave him for his imprisonment, 1949-1963, are the years he was not allowed to return to Mozambique and forced to live in exile in Europe.

⁵¹²¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’

⁵¹²² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

⁵¹²³ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 4 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹²⁴ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

DR. VERWOERD BEING IN LEAGUE WITH THE PORTUGUESE GOVERNMENT

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that millions of people think that Dr. Verwoerd and the Portuguese Government were in league together?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think millions of people know that there is a friendly relationship between our two countries, but I would not say that they were in league in the sense that Mr. Tsafendas saw them to be in league. In other words, that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, the Immorality Act, etc.

Dr. Sakinofsky uses the words “Portuguese Government,” perhaps simply in imitation of the Attorney-General, who used the same words. However, Tsafendas had some “trademark” phrases, like Dr. Verwoerd being “Hitler’s best student,” and according to several witnesses, he invariably referred to “the Portuguese dictatorship,” as he did in his Cape Argus, interview,⁵¹²⁵ and not to “the Portuguese Government.”

Tsafendas told several witnesses that he considered Portugal’s Antonio Salazar to be a dictator and he actually was. He also believed and said often, that Dr. Verwoerd was also a dictator. He never spoke to any of these witnesses about Dr. Verwoerd being in league with Salazar, although he often denounced both men and almost certainly he believed, and rightly, that they were indeed in league, just not in the way he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

Dr. Sakinofsky does not explain in detail how he came to the conclusion that Tsafendas thought the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa. If Tsafendas told him this, Tsafendas was lying, as again he told this to no-one, although he spoke to many witnesses about his political ideas. None of the approximate two hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and the author said that Tsafendas ever told them anything of this nature.

These are the testimonies of people who testified to the police about Tsafendas’s political ideas and other evidence collected by the South African police regarding his political activities and ideology. They are compatible with each other but incompatible with Dr. Sakinofsky’s version of what Tsafendas told him:

- Edward Furness testified that Tsafendas wanted to “create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South

⁵¹²⁵ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’

African regime out of power.”⁵¹²⁶

- Tsafendas himself had testified to the police that he was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942, that he was against apartheid and colonialism, that he had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and that he took part in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London.⁵¹²⁷
- PIDE held a 130-page file on Tsafendas, the Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.⁵¹²⁸ It opened in 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda”⁵¹²⁹ and went up to his release from PIDE custody on January 26, 1965 after spending three months in a cell in Beira accused of pretending to be a Christian missionary while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁵¹³⁰
- PIDE had withheld from the South African police the fact that they had such a file, along with other information “indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,”⁵¹³¹ thus hiding the extent of Tsafendas’s political activities. However, the South African embassy in Lisbon was aware of all this and on September 7, the day after the assassination, informed the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans.” The communication said he had “never been convicted as courts have found him to be of unsound mind” and added, “if information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”⁵¹³²
- The South African police had FOUR files on Tsafendas because of his Communist beliefs

⁵¹²⁶ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵¹²⁸ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹²⁹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹³⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹³¹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹³² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

and political activities.⁵¹³³

- Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of Immigration because of his Communist beliefs and activities.⁵¹³⁴ This list was also in the possession of the Security Police.⁵¹³⁵
- The Department of Immigration had two files on Tsafendas:
 - a. “On file B.7771 there were, inter alia, references to Demitrios Tsafendakis’s alleged communist activities, as well as references to his unsuccessful applications for permanent residence. It is also evident from the file that he had been placed on the stop list.⁵¹³⁶
 - b. “On file G.8226 there were references to his alleged communist activities, and detailed references to his unsuccessful applications of 1936, 1938, 1941, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1950 and 1959 to enter the Union of South Africa.”⁵¹³⁷
- It was known to the South African police that Tsafendas was deported and exiled from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.⁵¹³⁸
- It was known that Tsafendas was arrested in Mozambique by the Portuguese Public Security Police on November 16, 1964 and subsequently handed to PIDE accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.” It was also known that he had spent three months in custody being interrogated because of the accusations.⁵¹³⁹
- It was known to the South African police that while he was in South Africa from 1939 to ⁵¹³³ Report of the COE. Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹³⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹³⁵ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

⁵¹³⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹³⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter IV, Paragraph 20. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹³⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas: Mystery man of parliament’; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; The Herald (Melbourne), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘The killer: Five passports and a record of subversion’; Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dimitrio a Red, they alleged’; The Rhodesia Herald, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassin said to have been deported from P.E.A. for Communist connections.’

⁵¹³⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafendakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafendakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

1942 Tsafendas was “engaged actively in Communistic propaganda.”⁵¹⁴⁰

- It was known that in 1938 in Mozambique he was dismissed from a job “owing to his Communist leanings” and that he was suspected of being “engaged in disseminating Communistic propaganda.”⁵¹⁴¹
- It was known that Tsafendas supported Mozambique’s independence from Portugal and wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation.”⁵¹⁴²
- It was known to the police that Tsafendas, while in London, had associated with prominent anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and Rev. Canon Collins.⁵¹⁴³
- Although PIDE had concealed important information about Tsafendas’s political activities, it confided in a report which it gave to the South African police that Tsafendas had admitted after being arrested on one occasion that he was “a partisan of the independence of this province.” The same report also stated that “although, as above mentioned, TSAFENDAS is mentally deficient, the truth is you find in him an obvious spirit of rebellion against the Portuguese Administration, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique.”⁵¹⁴⁴
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas’s landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He told the police that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. Tsafendas objected to the Communists being banished to Robin Island because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the ⁵¹⁴⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter I A, Paragraph 23. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹⁴¹ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹⁴² PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹⁴³ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁴⁴ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

present Government, and was definitely pre-Russian.”⁵¹⁴⁵

- Patrick O’Ryan told the police that Tsafendas “was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal” and that he “labelled the apartheid policies as unfair.”⁵¹⁴⁶ Later O’Ryan described Tsafendas as getting “excited” when he talked about politics and saying that Dr. Verwoerd was a tyrant who was oppressing his people, that he was ‘Hitler’s best student’ and if he (Tsafendas) ever get hold of him “he would bash his skull.” He did not tell the police about Dr. Verwoerd being a tyrant as he believed it would be bad for Tsafendas.⁵¹⁴⁷
- Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, a security officer at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand, told the police that Nick Vergos said Tsafendas “was not Greek, but a kaffir and a Communist.”⁵¹⁴⁸
- Robert Smith was a night clerk at the Durban Men’s Home where Tsafendas stayed for two months in 1965. He testified that Tsafendas was a Communist, “a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else” and had described “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.” Tsafendas had told him that the “South African Government’s policy was “rotten” and often compared conditions in South Africa with those of Russia, stating, “Look at all the poor people in South Africa... such conditions don’t exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state.”⁵¹⁴⁹
- Albert Vercueil said Tsafendas told him, “You are like your bloody government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too.”⁵¹⁵⁰
- Johannes Botha, a security officer, told the police that Nick Vergos characterised Tsafendas in a remark to him as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South

⁵¹⁴⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁴⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵¹⁴⁷ Patrick O’Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes. Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵¹⁴⁸ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁴⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Africa.”⁵¹⁵¹

- Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, a sergeant of the South African police, testified that Nick Vergos reported Tsafendas to him as “Communist bastard.”⁵¹⁵²
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”⁵¹⁵³ He also testified that Tsafendas “started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”⁵¹⁵⁴
- Roelof Swiegers testified that Tsafendas “leaned towards the communist side.”⁵¹⁵⁵
- Jacobus Bormman testified that Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd.”⁵¹⁵⁶
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁵¹⁵⁷
- Keith Martincich testified that Tsafendas “on quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won’t reign very long.”⁵¹⁵⁸
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was ⁵¹⁵¹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵² Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁵ Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁶ Jacobus Johannes Bormman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵¹⁵⁸ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”⁵¹⁵⁹

- Antony Maw testified that the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique did not allow Tsafendas to enter the country on grounds of suspected Communist tendencies.⁵¹⁶⁰
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”⁵¹⁶¹
- A 1941 report from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs said that Tsafendas was “dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.”⁵¹⁶²
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, said Tsafendas “spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.”⁵¹⁶³
- In July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁵¹⁶⁴ Hartford’s impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁵¹⁶⁵
- Reports from Mozambique which emerged after the assassination said that Tsafendas was “violently anti-Portuguese.”⁵¹⁶⁶
- Jorge Perestrelo, who met Tsafendas in Lisbon, told Diario Popular that “one could see how anxious he was to oppose the authorities.”⁵¹⁶⁷

⁵¹⁵⁹ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵¹⁶⁰ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

⁵¹⁶¹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵¹⁶² Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

⁵¹⁶³ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁵¹⁶⁴ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’

⁵¹⁶⁵ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹⁶⁶ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘180-day prison for Tsafendas?’

⁵¹⁶⁷ Cuttings from the Diario Popular of 9.9.66. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Eight more witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, seven of them from the Eleni tanker, whose statements were not found at the National Archives, maintained that they were interviewed by the South African police and testified that Tsafendas was a Communist and against apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and “Hitler’s best student.” More importantly, they also testified that Tsafendas had joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.⁵¹⁶⁸

Several other witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well like Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikolas Banovic, Katerina Pnema, Helen Grispos, Fotini Gavasiadis, Nick Papadakis, Mary Eendracht, John and Antony Michaletos, Nick Augustides and Andreas Babiolakis stated to the author that Tsafendas was a passionate Communist who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, and “Hitler’s best student.”⁵¹⁶⁹ Tsafendas kept characterising Dr. Verwoerd with those words as long as thirty years after the assassination.⁵¹⁷⁰ Andreas Babiolakis told the author that Tsafendas made no attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid. Tsafendas told Babiolakis one day that “Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar are fascist dictators and should be executed like Mussolini.”⁵¹⁷¹

In addition, at least six crewmen from the Eleni, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Billis, George Kantas, Nickolas Kambouris, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, testified to the police that Tsafendas described a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable, because he was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people. The fact that Tsafendas had said this just three days before the assassination gives extra value to the information. These six witnesses also told the police, as Elias Constantaras had done, that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student and that he spat at his picture in a ⁵¹⁶⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Nickolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵¹⁶⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁷⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵¹⁷¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

newspaper.⁵¹⁷²

Tsafendas never told anyone that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, not even the police when he was arrested. He neither made such claim to the Portuguese police when he was interrogated by them. It is very possible that he believed that the two Prime Minister were in league with each other, which was accurate, but he could not possibly have believed that the Portuguese were influencing the internal affairs of South Africa.

Finally, why would Tsafendas tell everyone with whom discussed politics the same things about his ideology, but say something completely different to Dr. Sakinofsky? Tsafendas never repeated this comment to anyone, not even to the psychiatrists or the psychologists who examined him; Dr. Sakinofsky is the only person who ever said Tsafendas spoke of such things.

DR. VERWOERD BEING A "FOREIGNER"

Tsafendas never told anyone who testified to the police, to the Commission of Enquiry, but also to the author, that he considered himself to be a South African. He always described himself as African and Mozambican with a Greek and Shangaan background. He did not believe in nationalities, nations and borders, anyway; he felt people should be allowed to travel and live wherever they wished. What he said, time and again, was that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator, a tyrant, an oppressor of his own people and "Hitler's best student."

The fact that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd a foreigner must be examined in the context of Dr. Sakinofsky's statement. As we saw in Tsafendas's police statement of September 19, he referred to Dr. Verwoerd as a "foreigner" and a "Hollander." He had said then, "I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander."⁵¹⁷³

⁵¹⁷² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵¹⁷³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

It is true that Dr. Verwoerd was born in Amsterdam, Holland, but Tsafendas was clearly using the word in his own wider sense. He was not speaking in terms of citizenship, rather from his personal ideology in which “foreigners” were colonialists, such as the ruling Whites in South Africa and the Portuguese in Mozambique. His belief was that pre-independent African countries were “occupied lands,” settled by a ruling minority of foreigners, whereas they should be governed on a democratic basis by the people who were born in those countries, be they White or non-White. In Mozambique in 1964, Tsafendas was accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁵¹⁷⁴

When interrogated by the PIDE, Tsafendas said he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”⁵¹⁷⁵ This was a firmly held belief which he mentioned to numerous people, including Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Katerina Pnema, Andreas Babiolakis, Mary Eendracht, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis and Father Minas Constandinou. They all said that Tsafendas considered the Portuguese rulers of Mozambique to be “foreigners” and “conquerors” and that he used those words to describe them. He believed the Portuguese had commandeered the land from its rightful owners.⁵¹⁷⁶

In the case of South Africa, Mozambique and Rhodesia, he considered these to be “occupied lands” under the oppressive minority rule of incomers such as Dr. Verwoerd, Ian Smith and the Portuguese colonialists. He exempted Whites who backed majority rule but considered as classic occupiers those settler Whites who had made large fortunes from vast tracts of land effectively stolen from the indigenous non-Whites. In effect, what Tsafendas meant by “foreigner” or “conqueror” was “colonialist.” His position was that Mozambique was a province, i.e. a colony, of Portugal, and the Portuguese who ruled it were therefore colonialists, foreigners, incomers from Europe. He also believed that South Africa and Rhodesia should be governed by the majority and not by a handful of Whites. For Tsafendas, ⁵¹⁷⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹⁷⁵ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵¹⁷⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

the word “foreigner” meant “colonialist.” With the witnesses mentioned above, he used the Greek word for foreigner, which can carry a darker shade of meaning than in English.⁵¹⁷⁷

Tsafendas believed that all those who supported the Portuguese and the white Rhodesian and South African Governments were foreigners who had stolen the land from the native Mozambicans and Rhodesians and set themselves up as unilateral rulers. Equally, he believed that apartheid-supporting Whites in South Africa were also foreigners and occupiers who had seized and settled native land forcibly removing the non-Whites.⁵¹⁷⁸ Tsafendas also considered apartheid to be a form of colonialism, not very different from the out-and-out colonialism of Mozambique and Rhodesia. We should note here that in 1963, the policy of apartheid had been declared by the South African Communist Party to be “colonialism of a special type.”⁵¹⁷⁹ It is possible that this pronouncement confirmed Tsafendas’s own convictions on the subject.

Father Minas told the author about Tsafendas’s political ideas:

“Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, ‘conquerors’ and ‘occupiers;’ he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be ‘occupied lands,’ conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying then to the Blacks.”⁵¹⁸⁰

As for Tsafendas seeing Dr. Verwoerd and the Whites in South Africa, Rhodesia and Mozambique as “foreigners,” he was certainly not the only one who thought that way. Even Dr. Verwoerd himself acknowledged this idea in a speech on February 8, 1961: “There are people who are far away and do not understand us. They see this southern point of Africa ⁵¹⁷⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁷⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁷⁹ Visser, 1997: 79; Volpe, 1988: 28-35.

⁵¹⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

only as a White-dominated country in a large continent with over 200 million people who are black. And then they say we do not fit here, we are foreign to the body of Africa.”⁵¹⁸¹

DR. VERWOERD BEING AGAINST THE ENGLISH WAY OF LIFE

This is again something Tsafendas never mentioned to the two hundred-plus witnesses interviewed by the police, the Commission and the author. Dr. Sakinofsky in his testimony quoted Tsafendas as stating that Dr. Verwoerd was against the “English way of life,” which Tsafendas favoured. This excerpt was read by the author to fifty-eight people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well: his half-sister Katerina Pnema, three friends who grew up with him, Ira Kyriakakis, Mary Eendracht and Andreas Babioulakis, and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Nick Papadakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Michalis Visvinis and Fotini Gavasiadis. Not one of them believes he could have made such a comment and to have really meant it.⁵¹⁸² Tsafendas never repeated the “way of life” comment to anyone else, including medical experts who examined him later.

Tsafendas was also anti-British because of British assistance to the royalists during the Greek Civil War and also because of that country’s former colonial policies,⁵¹⁸³ therefore it seems unlikely that Tsafendas was concerned about the British Commonwealth or the “English way of life.” However, Tsafendas supported the British Labour Party because of its stance against apartheid and often attended party meetings in London.⁵¹⁸⁴ He considered London to be his favourite city and an ideal place to live, if it was not for the weather and his failure to get a work permit. He was impressed that many different people lived side by side

⁵¹⁸¹ Pelzer, 1966: 494.

⁵¹⁸² Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵¹⁸³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵¹⁸⁴ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

in London and there was no evident racism.⁵¹⁸⁵

More importantly, Tsafendas despised royalty and titles. When the British king and queen visited South Africa in 1947, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's half-sister, who was still at school at the time, wrote or recited a poem or just participated in a ceremony in their honour. She was given a mug bearing a picture of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, which she treasured and which is now in the possession of her son. When Tsafendas found out about it, he protested jokingly in a letter to his father for allowing her to participate in the celebrations, since Michalis, too, was anti-royalist.⁵¹⁸⁶

After the Second World War, Tsafendas's father had become anti-British, too, because of that country's support for the royalists in the Greek Civil War.⁵¹⁸⁷ When Tsafendas returned to South Africa and spent nine months in Pretoria in 1964, he often ate or visited his half-sister's house. The mug was on display in her house and he told his sister that if he saw it he would "throw it out of the window." Of course, it was a joke and he never did.⁵¹⁸⁸

Further, it is clear Tsafendas was lying when he told Dr. Sakinofsky his mother was English. Dr. Sakinofsky had no way of knowing the truth, which was that Tsafendas's mother was born in Mozambique to a Mozambican mother and a German father. He never told anyone apart from Dr. Sakinofsky, that his mother was "a member of an overseas Royal Family." All of Tsafendas's relatives and two of the priests smiled at this comment.⁵¹⁸⁹

⁵¹⁸⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵¹⁸⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁸⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁸⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁸⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016; Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

DR. VERWOERD BEING AGAINST A "CAPE TO CAIRO" UNION

The Cape to Cairo reference is one of the strongest indications that Tsafendas was lying to Dr. Sakinofsky. Once again, none of the two hundred witnesses ever heard Tsafendas say Dr. Verwoerd opposed the idea of a Cape to Cairo union. They never even heard him mentioning the Cape to Cairo union. Tsafendas himself never mentioned it to the police when he was questioned; there is no reference to it in any of the reports by the South African police or PIDE, and it appears that Dr. Sakinofsky is the only person ever to hear him saying it. Furthermore, a Cape to Cairo union was one of Cecil Rhodes'⁵¹⁹⁰ dreams for Africa.⁵¹⁹¹ As a fanatical anti-colonialist, Tsafendas had no sympathy for the ideals of an arch imperialist such as Cecil Rhodes.

All the witnesses who knew Tsafendas and who were interviewed by the author were asked whether Tsafendas ever commented about Rhodes and whether he would have supported such an idea. Some respondents were not able to give a definite answer, but the majority discounted such a possibility outright. Let's examine the evidence:

- Tsafendas himself told the police on September 11, "I was anti-colonial, against slavery and in favour of all colonies which were controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal to be afforded self-government."⁵¹⁹² His ideas as expressed in this statement were confirmed to the author by several witnesses.
- He attended anti-colonialist meetings and demonstrations in London.⁵¹⁹³
- He considered it a disgrace that Zimbabwe had been named Rhodesia in honour of Rhodes.⁵¹⁹⁴

⁵¹⁹⁰ (1853-1902) Rhodes was part of the imperial machine, a politician and a businessman with an interest in mining. He funded the South African territory of "Rhodesia" which was named after him. He served as Prime Minister of the Cape Colony in South Africa from 1890 to 1896 (The Times, 27 March 1902: 7, 'Death of Mr. Rhodes'). A highly polarising figure, a statue of him was removed from Cape Town University in 2015 amid emotional scenes as reported by the BBC (9 April 2015).

⁵¹⁹¹ One of Rhodes' dreams for a united Africa was the construction of a railway running from the Cape of Good Hope in South Africa to Cairo in Egypt, a great "red line" on the map of the continent. On world maps of that era, British dominions were always denoted in red. Rhodes had secured much of southern and central Africa for the British Empire. He felt that the best way to "unify the possessions, facilitate governance, enable the military to move quickly to hot spots or conduct war, help settlement, and foster trade" would be to build a "Cape to Cairo Railway" (Freeman, 1915: 327-355).

⁵¹⁹² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵¹⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵¹⁹⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

- He told Katerina Pnema and her husband Gerry that one day Rhodes's statues in Africa would be brought down by the people.⁵¹⁹⁵ The monument to Cecil Rhodes at Cape Town University was brought down in April 2015.⁵¹⁹⁶
- He believed the Whites in Mozambique, South Africa and Zimbabwe had commandeered the land from its rightful owners. Thus these territories were "occupied lands" ruled by "occupiers." However, he recognised the right of Whites who accepted majority rule and opposed colonial government to live there.⁵¹⁹⁷
- Tsafendas admitted to the Commission of Enquiry that he endeavoured to recruit people for an uprising against the colonialist Portuguese in Mozambique.⁵¹⁹⁸
- A PIDE report stated that Tsafendas was a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.⁵¹⁹⁹
- Another PIDE report stated that Tsafendas wanted to see a "Mozambique governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country (Portugal)" and that "he is all for the Independence of this Province."⁵²⁰⁰
- Yet another PIDE report stated that "you find in him an obvious spirit of rebellion against the Portuguese Administration, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique."⁵²⁰¹
- Tsafendas was arrested five times by the Portuguese Police in Mozambique because of his Communist and anti-colonial activities, while he was also banned from entering the country from 1951 to 1963 due to these activities.⁵²⁰²

⁵¹⁹⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵¹⁹⁶ BBC, 9 April 2015, 'Rhodes statue removed in Cape Town as crowd celebrates.' Retrieved from:

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-32236922>

⁵¹⁹⁷ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵¹⁹⁸ Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵¹⁹⁹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵²⁰⁰ PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrios Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas

⁵²⁰¹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵²⁰² Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

- He was arrested in Mozambique accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality, preaching “in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁵²⁰³
- Father Hanno Probst reported Tsafendas to a security officer as a “communist and a dangerous person.”⁵²⁰⁴ “He started swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the black people.”⁵²⁰⁵
- According to Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, Tsafendas was “intense anti-White” and told him that “the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-Whites.”⁵²⁰⁶
- One day after the assassination, a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon informed the South African police that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”⁵²⁰⁷
- A report by of Col. van Wyk of the South African police characterised Tsafendas as being “intensely anti-white.”⁵²⁰⁸
- Peter Pappas stated that Tsafendas spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police.⁵²⁰⁹
- Also, in July 1966, just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave an interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to the newspaper and enquired whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁵²¹⁰

⁵²⁰³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵²⁰⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁰⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁰⁶ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁰⁷ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²⁰⁸ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁰⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁵²¹⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

- Tsafendas admired Patrice Lumumba, Ahmed Ben Bella and Fidel Castro and put up their posters in his quarters.⁵²¹¹

All the above evidence is mutually compatible, compatible with what Tsafendas told the police and with what several witnesses told the author. However, they are incompatible with what he told Dr. Sakinofsky, which was something that he was the only one to ever have the “privilege” of hearing.

None of the sixty-nine witnesses who were interviewed by the author was ever told by Tsafendas about the “Cape to Cairo” idea. According to twenty-six witnesses, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Michalis Visvinis, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis, Alexandra Vaporidou, Katerina Pnema, Mike Vlachopoulos, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos, Elias Constantaras, Nikolaos Billis, Nick Papadakis, George Kantas, Paul Babiolakis, Nickolas Kambouris, Mary Eendracht, Vasilis Perselis, Manuel Mastromanolis, Costas Poriadis, Vasilis Perselis, Grigoris Pouftis and Michalis Vasilakis, Tsafendas’s anti-colonialism would never have permitted him to support such an ideal. In fact, Tsafendas declared that Rhodes’ statue and the statues of all other colonialists would one day be removed from everywhere in Africa. These witnesses’ statements about Tsafendas’s political ideas have been included in this chapter already, so they will not be included here again.

Finally, Tsafendas spoke extensively about politics and his life while he was in prison and later in the hospital, but only to people he trusted. He never told anyone any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky but repeated what he told all these witnesses prior to the assassination - for example, that he was anti-colonialist and wanted all countries in South Africa to gain their independence.⁵²¹² All the foregoing evidence as to Tsafendas’s political convictions concerning colonialism and Cecil Rhodes make it evident that Tsafendas never supported such an idea and that he was simply lying to Dr. Sakinofsky.

⁵²¹¹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵²¹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

DR. VERWOERD'S MEETING WITH CHIEF LEABUA JONATHAN

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, this meeting was for Tsafendas “a further blow to the Commonwealth.” He believed Tsafendas “misinterpreted this meeting as being related to the immorality legislation.” It is highly unlikely that Tsafendas, because of his ideology, would have been concerned about the Commonwealth, something he had never mentioned to anyone before. He talked politics constantly, especially with people he knew well, freely expressing his political ideas.⁵²¹³ If he had any interest in the Commonwealth, he would have told some of the about two hundred people who were interviewed by the South African police, the Commission and the author.

Furthermore, Tsafendas mentioned the Dr. Verwoerd-Jonathan meeting in his statement to the police on September 11 made no reference to the Commonwealth or the immorality legislation. What he said then was: “The meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Leabua Jonathan was a contributory fact in my decision to murder Dr. Verwoerd. I say this because I thought the Prime Minister was dealing with the wrong person. Both Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted the Paramount Chief of Basutoland to represent the Basuto nation. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the Nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.”⁵²¹⁴

Far from referencing the Immorality Act or the Commonwealth, Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator in his usual terms, stating that the prime minister did not represent all South Africans and he (Tsafendas) wanted to see a government that would represent all of the South African people. Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a dictator to more than thirty witnesses. He never commented on Chief Jonathan to any of the witnesses interviewed by the police, the Commission or by the author. As for the Immorality Act, it is true that Tsafendas strongly opposed and openly criticised it, but he did the same with several other apartheid laws, comparing them to the Nuremberg Laws of Nazi Germany.

⁵²¹³ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²¹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

TSAFENDAS'S APPLICATION FOR A DOUBLE IDENTITY CARD

According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas told him that he applied for such a card in order to “try and find a wife among either the White or non-White group: he stated that he had been rejected by women of both race groups and therefore was not able to get married.” Tsafendas is lying again, since several witnesses and he himself stated that he had only applied for reclassification as Coloured.⁵²¹⁵

What is more, there is no evidence that Tsafendas was rejected by women of both groups. He had a Black girlfriend, Stella, in Mozambique in the late 1930s, a White Jewish girl around 1940 in South Africa,⁵²¹⁶ a Portuguese girlfriend, probably White, in Portugal in the 1950s,⁵²¹⁷ a White Communist German woman in Germany also in the 1950s⁵²¹⁸ and a Turkish Muslim woman in Istanbul in 1961. The Turkish woman wanted to marry him, but neither was willing to convert to each other's religion and anyway, Tsafendas wanted to go back to Africa.⁵²¹⁹ These were at least some of Tsafendas's serious relationships as far as the author was able to establish, but it is very possible that there were others.

Tsafendas never said much about his relationships with women to the priests who visited him in prison or the hospital or to other friends and acquaintances. Asked about girlfriends and how far he had gone with them, Tsafendas would say, “A gentleman never discusses such matters.”⁵²²⁰ The author learned about the above relationships from people who were close to Tsafendas at the time and not because he talked about them.

TSAFENDAS NOT HAVING ANY “PASSIVITY FEELINGS”

Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas did not have any “passivity feelings” and as we see, Tsafendas did not even mention the tapeworm during this examination. Dr. Sakinofsky was the third doctor to examine Tsafendas on the day of the assassination and he mentioned it to none of them. Dr. Sakinofsky clearly stated that Tsafendas did not have any “passivity feelings” which means to the psychiatrists that, at least at the time, he did not believe he had a ⁵²¹⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²¹⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵²¹⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵²¹⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁵²¹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 4 November 2015.

⁵²²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

tapeworm. Tsafendas was not embarrassed to talk about having a tapeworm to everybody he met twenty days after the assassination and, as we have seen, he told doctors in hospitals where he sought admission that he had a "fixation with a tapeworm."

Thus, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, as he told these doctors, why did he not use it with Dr. Sakinofsky? The fact that Tsafendas did not have any passivity feelings proves that he did not believe he had a tapeworm, at least at that time. This was a very important issue and contradicted the defence's line, but it was not picked up by the Attorney-General or the Judge; Dr. Sakinofsky was allowed to continue without being asked to clarify the issue and, as we will see, was not challenged about it in the cross-examination.

Tsafendas spoke freely about the tapeworm to all those who examined him twenty days after the assassination. However, on the day of the assassination, he did not mention it to anyone, not even to a psychiatrist. The idea that Tsafendas hid it for some reason could not possibly be valid, for why would he hide it from Dr. Sakinofsky that day but use it a month later? Even if we assume that Tsafendas was delusional about the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky that day, still he named reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd which were different from those he would use later with Dr. Cooper and even with Dr. Sakinofsky himself. Again, this suggests that at that time Tsafendas had not decided to use the tapeworm story, having had three opportunities to do so, especially with Dr. Sakinofsky who was a psychiatrist, none of which he used. This again, suggests that Tsafendas was play-acting according to the situation, as he did with the Portuguese and his Saint Peter act when he was accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique.

DR. KOSSEW'S DIAGNOSIS

The Defence Counsel refers to Dr. Kossew's diagnosis of Tsafendas without mentioning that he was diagnosed as such based on yet another delusional idea he appeared to have at the time, this time of a persecutory nature. He had claimed to Dr. Kossew that more than twenty people had died from food poisoning in the house where he was staying⁵²²¹ and did not mention the tapeworm at all. The incident has been discussed extensively in Dr. Kossew's testimony.

⁵²²¹ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

However, the important issue here is that Tsafendas appeared to have had another delusional idea, apart from the tapeworm, just two months before the assassination and this was an idea that he never repeated to anyone else. All the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas claimed that he had the tapeworm since the mid-1930s, therefore he must still believe he had it when he was examined by Dr. Kossew, even if he did not mention it. The strange thing is not that he did not mention it, but that he appeared to hold two delusional ideas simultaneously - the tapeworm and the poison murders. This again, suggests that Tsafendas was play-acting according to the situation, as he did with the Portuguese and his Saint Peter act when he was accused of campaigning for the independence of Mozambique. The issue of having two delusional ideas simultaneously has been discussed in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

CONCLUSION OF THE FIRST EXAMINATION

Everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky during their first meeting was a lie or he was extremely confused, which is not unlikely taking under consideration his situation. The fact that he never mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky to anyone else, not even to him again, suggests fabrication. If Tsafendas really meant the things he said, he would surely have told at least one other person, not to mention the doctors who began examining him three weeks later. What he said was completely contradictory to his beliefs as well as to all the evidence gathered by the South African police and later from forty-four interviews and 12,000 documents from archival sources which the author collected. More importantly, the evidence of the police is compatible with the evidence gathered by the author, and incompatible with what Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky.

One important issue concerning this first meeting was not adequately examined and was left unchallenged by the Judge and the Attorney-General. This was that Tsafendas did not tell Dr. Sakinofsky anything about the tapeworm and he did not have any passivity feelings at the time. Twenty days later, Tsafendas would speak freely about the tapeworm to anyone, including Dr. Sakinofsky. He had no problem talking to doctors about it, as he had done happily in the past and would do again in the future.

The doctors at the summary trial would claim that Tsafendas had had a tapeworm since the mid-1930s, that it was controlling his life and was responsible for killing Dr. Verwoerd. If he really believed that, why did he not tell Dr. Sakinofsky so shortly after the assassination? Why did he give Dr. Sakinofsky different motives to those he would give later to the doctors? And of course different to the ones he gave to the police? The big difference though between the reasons he gave to the police and the reasons he gave to the doctors is that the evidence collected at the time by the police and the evidence later collected by the author are entirely compatible with what Tsafendas told the police but incompatible with what he told Dr. Sakinofsky. This alone suggests that Tsafendas did not at the time intend to use the tapeworm act and only decided to use it later when he could no longer endure the torture.

If you should ask any of those who know the author of this study, they will say that he does not like the heat and prefers cold weather. If ever that author should murder someone and then tell a psychiatrist or his lawyer, "I don't like the cold weather, I like the heat," what would all those who knew him for so many years say? This is exactly how the people who knew Tsafendas well felt when they heard about the tapeworm, that he was insane and about all the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky that first day.

Dr. Sakinofsky also very correctly suggested that a forensic psychiatrist should be called by the court for such a case, but his suggestion never materialised. As a matter of fact none of the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas was a forensic psychiatrist. According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was a schizophrenic when he was examined by Dr. Sakinofsky and the other psychiatrists, he must still have been one while he was in prison and then in the hospital. His health must also have been deteriorating, given that fact that he did not receive any medical treatment and he was in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours per day for at least twenty-two years. While he was deprived of any contact with his fellow prisoners, he was also brutally assaulted and kept in a room next to the death chamber where executions took place regularly.⁵²²² However, Tsafendas remained ever faithful to the ideas he had from his youth and never told anyone the sort of things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

⁵²²² Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you see the accused subsequent to the 6th September, 1966?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I saw him exactly a month after the first time, on the 6th October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the E.E.G. department at Groote Schuur Hospital.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the E.E.G. department?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is the electroencephalography laboratory.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was an E.E.G. taken in this case?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: An E.E.G. had just been taken.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you know the result of that E.E.G.?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the result?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It was normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does that indicate in itself?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It indicates in itself, as far as the diagnosis of schizophrenia is concerned, nothing.

JUDGE BEYERS: It would have been different if you were dealing with an epileptic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, indeed.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then you would have found a dysrhythmia or something, which might have been indicative?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite so.

JUDGE BEYERS: But on schizophrenia you don't expect to find any dysrhythmia or any other thing wrong with the encephalograph?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that right?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Quite right.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On the 6th October, then, did you have an interview with the accused?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of what duration?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: About an hour and a half to two hours, I should estimate.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you tell the Court the findings that you made at this interview?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. My findings confirmed my initial impression. The content of the interview was somewhat different, in that he then for the first time spoke to me about this tapeworm that I have heard discussed in this Court, which I regard as a hypochondriacal delusion, a delusion referring to bodily functions. He spoke more about the episode in Portugal when he claimed to have been ill-treated in a paranoid way, and the content of what he had to say was that the Portuguese doctors and nurses, the nuns in the hospital that he was in in Lisbon, were trying to ruin him by giving him shocks on the head. I asked him what the reason was for this. He said he didn't know the reason, but they had asked him if he was a Roman Catholic and he said he wasn't, and the hospital was run by nuns, so he assumed it was because he was a Protestant that they were trying to ruin him. He then went on to reveal to me ideas of passivity, by saying - I said: "Are you going so far as to say that they tried to ruin you because you weren't a Roman Catholic?" He said: "Maybe they were trying to change me." I said: "Change you? How could they change you?" He said "Do something to my brain." I don't want to go into too much detail, but the mechanism which they were using he said was a transformed radio, and then he revealed what I regard as another symptom of schizophrenia, delusional perception, which means that an innocent visual image, something which one may see, like this microphone, takes on a sinister meaning to a patient. He said he had passed an old radio on one of the tables and immediately he knew that this was the instrument that was being used to act on his brain. He called it a "graphanola." I said: "What is a graphanola? Is that a word?" He said: "It is a radio." I said: "Is it a Portuguese word?" He said: "Portuguese, yes." I have looked up this word in seven Portuguese-English dictionaries, and it doesn't exist. I can only conclude that this is what we in psychiatry call a neologism.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is a neologism?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is a word which is manufactured by a patient with one of the major mental disorders, chiefly schizophrenia.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is it one of the symptoms of schizophrenic people that they manufacture words?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that what you are telling us?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Some schizophrenics manufacture words. This was the only neologism I elicited.

JUDGE BEYERS: The graphanola?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Graphanola.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did you look up a Greek dictionary?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I didn't.

JUDGE BEYERS: It starts with a Greek word?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It may exist in Greek.

JUDGE BEYERS: And he also speaks Greek, I believe?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, he speaks a number of languages. I didn't look up the Arabic one either.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he claim that this word was a Greek word?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, he claimed it was a Portuguese word.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He said that this graphanola had been used in previous murders which had been hushed up in Lisbon. One of them was the case of a son of a banker. I couldn't really follow him in his reasoning. He didn't seem to have much to go on to establish this, and I took this as part of his delusional system.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Ideas of reference, which I can quote. This is a symptom of schizophrenia, too. He said that once when he was sitting in a cafe where Coloured people used to gather, from the colonies, "they mentioned at one of the tables I was sitting at what was taking place", namely, that he was having shock treatment and that his brain was being washed. This is an idea of reference. He also showed the symptom of depersonalisation, which means a feeling of change in the body, which is so bizarre that it is regarded as psychotic. I asked him:

“Do you feel any strange sensation in your body, apart from this tapeworm?” and he said, “No. I don’t feel myself at all sometimes. I don’t feel my body. I don’t feel myself.” I said: “Tell me about that. That is important.” He said: “I don’t feel myself. I am walking, I just don’t feel myself. There are times when I more or less feel my body, but there are periods when I don’t feel myself. I feel I am walking lightly. I feel as if I am floating in thin air.” I think these were the chief features of that particular interview. He said that he had been turned into a hermaphrodite, which I think is significant - just paging through this.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: After the second interview, what was your opinion? To what extent were you now going to review your earlier opinion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At that point I felt I could confirm the diagnosis, broadly speaking, of schizophrenia, but I thought one could go further and try and reconcile some of the diagnostic difficulties, by using a particular sub-category of schizophrenia, which is called paraphrenia and which accounts for the relative preservation of this man’s personality. The fact that he was able to amble around the world for 30-odd years without spending more than short periods, that he appears to have spent in mental hospitals. It also accounts for the preservation of his emotions. He was not quite as flat and cold as I expected him to be. And the diagnosis of paraphrenia, hypochondriacal paraphrenia, seemed to me to fit this. There is a textbook - may I refer to it at this stage - called Schizophrenia, by Professor Fish from Liverpool, wherein he quotes the paraphrenias as classified by Professor Leonhard of Frankfurt, and he says: “Hypochondriacal Paraphrenia: The bodily hallucinations are usually referred to internal organs and are usually described so grotesquely that it is impossible for a normal person to empathise with the patient.” Further on, he says “Affectivity (that is, emotion) is fairly well preserved. These patients have thought-disorder which Leonhard calls ‘unconcentrated thinking.’ They tend to wander from the point, talk about subjects loosely related to the task in hand, and are inclined to “verbal derailments.” And I thought that, while there may still be diagnostic difficulties about the exact sub-class, he fitted into the broad category of paraphrenia very nicely.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are there any further comments that you have to make on your second interview, otherwise I think we can now go to your third interview?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No. I did consider, by the way, in both the first and second interviews, whether he was simulating mental illness, and my conclusion was that he wasn't, because there were obvious schizophrenic symptoms which he did not have when I led him up to them, and he seemed to be at pains to tell me exactly how he was feeling, rather than to fit in with the pattern that I wanted to fit him into.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky that he was a Protestant, whereas he was Greek Orthodox. He would never have said that unless he was lying for a reason or for fun. He had always asserted his membership of the Greek Orthodox Church and he knew Christianity too well to mix up Greek Orthodox and Protestant.

Tsafendas also told Dr. Sakinofsky that the Portuguese had tried to "change him." Tsafendas spoke to several witnesses about this, but not in the way he did with the doctor. He told these witnesses, including the Cape Argus, Patrick O'Ryan, Andreas Babiolakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Minas Constandinou, Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis, Michalis Vasilakis, Nikolas Kambouris, Mary Eendracht and Ira Kyriakakis that the Portuguese had attempted to "brainwash him," using the same verb every time. He did mean that they tried to "change him," but he explained explicitly that they wanted to change his political ideas, using brainwashing and torture. Tsafendas spoke a lot about this, explaining that when they were not torturing him, his captors were pressing on him the advantages that the Mozambicans enjoyed because of the Portuguese, like hospitals, churches and a modern infrastructure.⁵²²³

THE GRAPHANOLA

Tsafendas also spoke to Dr. Sakinofsky about a "graphanola" and explained that it was a "radio" that was used to torture him. Dr. Sakinofsky, unaware of the word, concluded that it did not exist and that Tsafendas made it up and this was also a sign of schizophrenia since "some schizophrenics manufacture words." However, if "graphanola" did not exist, "graphonola" certainly did, not only in Portuguese, but also in English, in which it is spelled

⁵²²³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

“grafonola.” The graphonola was a 1907 improved version of the Columbia company’s graphophone, which itself was a development of the original phonograph, recognisable by its horn. The original acoustic version of the graphonola was later adapted for electricity.

Prior to the assassination, Tsafendas told Father Nikola Banovic, Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis and Mary Eendracht that his torturers in Portugal had given him electric shocks using a wooden box that looked like the graphophone his father had in Lourenço Marques.⁵²²⁴ After the assassination Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou that when he was given electric shocks by the South African police, they also used a small wooden box with wires of different colours, though this time he did not mention the word “graphophone.” He just said it was much smaller than the device used by the Portuguese,⁵²²⁵ which he had previously said was “like a graphophone.”

The attached photographs below show an electric shock equipment and a graphophone from the 1950s and they look very much alike. Tsafendas’s description was quite accurate. Dr. Sakinofsky and the Court, probably unaware of the equipment used by the Portuguese and the South African police to administer electric shocks, could hardly envisage that the wooden box used for such a procedure looked “like a graphophone.” They were obviously unaware that the “graphonola/grafonola” and the “graphophone” were effectively the same device. Tsafendas did not make up the word and described clearly the equipment used by the Portuguese to torture him.

About twenty years after the assassination, while discussing his summary trial with Father Minas, Tsafendas said that he had often tried hard to not laugh at the things they were said about him in the court; this must have been one of those occasions.⁵²²⁶

⁵²²⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵²²⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵²²⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Graphophone

Electric Shock Box

CONCLUSION REGARDING DR. SAKINOFSKY'S SECOND EXAMINATION

Tsafendas found inspiration for his exchanges with Dr. Sakinofsky from past experiences such as the torture, then changing them a little to make himself sound schizophrenic.

Tsafendas spoke to several people about some of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky, such as the torture in Portugal, but he never mentioned the absurd things he had volunteered. Why did he tell the absurdities to Dr. Sakinofsky and not to the people he knew? Clearly to present himself to the medical expert as schizophrenic, something he did not need to do with other people in his life.

Tsafendas said later that most of the things that were heard during his summary trial were lies and sometimes he wanted to laugh.⁵²²⁷ The incident where the word graphonola was not recognised by anyone in the court and was misunderstood by Dr. Sakinofsky must have been one of them. Finally, Dr. Sakinofsky stated that Tsafendas spoke to him for the first time about the tapeworm during this meeting, but he did not elaborate further.

⁵²²⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

DR. SAKINOFSKY'S THIRD EXAMINATION OF TSAFENDAS

THE TAPEWORM AND THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He is very preoccupied with his health, is he? He is very preoccupied with his state of health?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: In the third interview he talked about this tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now we come to the third interview, again at your request - is that correct?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You saw the accused where?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I saw him at Caledon Square on the 14th of October.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how long did you see him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: For about an hour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you give the Court your findings and your comments?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. My findings were - I wanted to lead him on to the tapeworm at the beginning, because I wanted to find out more about what this meant to him, and we started talking about the tapeworm, and then he spontaneously said to me: "It may even be a serpent", and went on to describe in a delusional way how this tapeworm was a viper, a demon, a dragon, I thought in a way which wasn't at all solicited. He indicated exactly what this meant to him when he said as follows: "There is a lot in the scriptures about tapeworms. I got to the point in my church not to take bread and wine, when everybody else in the morning used to take it, the communion — you know what you call it, communion?" I said: "Yes." He said: "I said to myself, well, if I have a devil how can I be a partaker? So I left off when I came to my senses. This hasn't been long, this has been a year or two that I have stopped taking wine and bread. I thought, well, if I am taking it, I am trying to make a demon within me holy, or something." To me this was a grotesque description which fitted in with this being a delusion, not simply an idea.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is its significance?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: The significance of delusion?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I think the significance of this means that this man has schizophrenia, and if it can be shown that he has had this delusion over 20, 30 years, then I would say he has chronic delusional insanity — that kind of schizophrenia. I also found identification with the tapeworm. He alludes very much to the scriptures in this interview. He quoted a passage. I asked him if he was possessed by the tapeworm. He said: “Yes, I am possessed by a tapeworm put there by African enemies, African witchcraft.” I said: “Is it as if you were a kind of robot that they can send round the world to do what they want to, because you have got a tapeworm inside you that makes you do things?”, and he gave me an answer which I think as again showing that he wasn’t simulating. He said: “I don’t know what the effects are of that thing, but it seems to have ended up as if this had been the effect.” He quoted a passage from the Bible - I can’t lay my hands right on it - about “Lord, I am a worm, I am a worm”, that somebody says somewhere in the Bible. He drew an analogy between the Old Testament story of Moses and the serpent swallowing other serpents, but when I said did he see Dr. Verwoerd as a kind of Pharaoh and himself as a kind of Moses, he denied that. This was the content of that interview, more or less confirming the findings of the first two interviews.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say whether this tapeworm sleeps, what its habits were?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. We went into some detail. He said that when he fed this tapeworm, it was like a boa constrictor which coiled itself round his gut, and when he fed it then the boa constrictor left him and left his emotions free. He said that it purred like a cat. In other words, he gave this concept life in a bizarre, grotesque, schizophrenic way. He gave it an animistic life, like someone possessed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was there any other finding that you made?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, he had more ideas of reference.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is an idea of reference?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Idea of reference is usually found - it is found more often in schizophrenia than it is in another major mental disorder, an affective psychosis, a depressive psychosis, and it concerns the belief that other people, who may not know you from a bar of soap, are talking about you. Like when he said that in the cafe the coloured people were talking about the fact that he had got shock treatment. In this case he spoke about the Bible as having some personal reference to him. He said: “These passages have personally a deep meaning. A lot of these phrases have a meaning for me. They mean something which doesn’t mean probably anything, which other people just call a lot of rubbish. They can't see it, they can't realise it." I said: "And it has meaning for you but not for other people?", and he said: "Yes, it has meaning for me but not for other people. Something that other people wouldn't understand." I asked him what kind of meaning did it have for him, "Does it mean that you have to do certain things as a result of it?" He said: "It means that it enlightens me. It puts me in the same situation." And then he er-ed. I said: "At the time that you killed Dr. Verwoerd, had you been guided by the Bible?", and he denied this, but he said it was as if he had been hypnotised by the tapeworm, because he couldn't remember what had happened. And he went on to say in a way which aroused considerable emotion: "I fell on him, people tell me, and it is probably true, but I don't remember a thing about stabbing him. I could have stabbed him a thousand times without knowing it." I said: "How? Because you were under hypnotism?" "I don't know what it was. You are a doctor, I am asking you. I was stabbing him, and I have never stabbed people before. I never handled a knife before. I was not myself. I was just stabbing him, and if the people hadn't lifted me off I would have been stabbing a corpse."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you put the question to him: did the tapeworm have anything to do with the act of killing Dr. Verwoerd?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did, several times. He never said to me that the tapeworm, as one perhaps might have expected, that the tapeworm had told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, but he said that the tapeworm, being a demon inside him, had taken him over, and he remembered another case, when he had blurted out in Lisbon that he was a Protestant, he felt here again the tapeworm was responsible. But the main way in which he attempted to explain how the tapeworm had caused him to assassinate the late Prime Minister was that the tapeworm created a state of mind in him, when he was not himself. It had influenced his life so that he had become interested in a queer sect, wandered about trying to find a means of coping with this tapeworm, and had he not had the tapeworm he would not have been in this particular state of mind, of weakness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say that the tapeworm had corrupted him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He did say that, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he say that it had influenced him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, in the way I have described.

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't want to interrupt, but don't you think the doctor's views are quite clear enough by now? I am not stopping you; please go on. It is very clear to me what this doctor's opinion is.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I formed the impression that he - for instance, in this passage, if I may quote: I asked him if the tapeworm was the most important influence in his life. He said: "It has caused me to see how other people live. If I didn't have a tapeworm I'd probably be living only for myself. I would not know what the rest of the world was like, what other people thought, their difficulties. I would have taken life, I would have taken life ah..... I would have only seen things ah... well, I would have taken life for granted. I would have just gone through life enjoying myself, taking life" And then he went on to explain how he struggled against this tapeworm within him, it had turned him into a kind of twisted saint. That is how he saw himself.

ASSESSOR: Was all this taken down on tape?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: This interview and the second interview were on a tape recorder.

ASSESSOR: What you are reading out to us now is actually what he said in his own words?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, when I quote, this is verbatim.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he speak with the same flow and fluency that you speak? How was the flow?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, in the second and third interviews the initial pressure and excitement which had been present in the first interview were absent. Here there were lots of gaps in his train of thoughts and one might have formed a conclusion that this was thought blocking. This was an impedance of his thinking due to this disease process.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say thought blocking. Is there a difference between thought blocking and thought disorder?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Thought blocking is a variety of thought disorder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find any other varieties of thought disorder?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, as I explained just now, there are several. The chief criteria I personally applied are: thought blocking, the interpenetration of thoughts which are not connected with the material that the patient is talking about; and asyndesis, which is a disjunction of utterances which have no meaning with each other, no consecutive meaning.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your Lordship has suggested that it is pretty clear what this witness is saying

JUDGE BEYERS: It is pretty clear to me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The issue of course is whether that view is acceptable to the Court. If that view is accepted by the court, then I have no further questions.

JUDGE BEYERS: The point is whether asking further questions is going to make it more acceptable to the Court than it is now. But I am certainly not telling you that it is accepted by the court.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I think I will proceed to put further questions.

(Cont.): I will put certain general questions to you. Is it legitimate, say for instance when you view your first report, to take single sentences out and say, well, they appear in order, they make sense in themselves, or must you read the whole of what he says and then draw the inference?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I would certainly say the latter, as a psychiatrist. This is absolute sine qua non. One cannot make a diagnosis on an isolated piece of behaviour. One has to take all behaviour and, in fact, backwards in time, into account. I can quote my old teacher, Prof. Sir Aubrey Lewis on this in Price's Textbook of Medicine, 9th Edition, page 1664. He says: "More important than any Burgle feature is the impression of the case as a whole (talking about schizophrenia). The development away from normal interest and response to the real world and the establishment instead of autistic self-satisfaction, so that the patient's personality is twisted awry as it were, and withdrawn from easy contact."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What does autistic self-satisfaction mean?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Autistic means something which nobody can share with a patient. This is part of his inner life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that important in a schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. For instance, I would say that his delusion about this tape-worm is autistic. I cannot share it with him. While I am talking about the first report, what is talked about and the way he talked about the "Cape to Cairo" and the "Commonwealth", was this intelligible to you at the time?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It was not intelligible to me. I could not see any connection between these slogans, almost. It seemed to me that what he was doing is that he was taking the news of the day and because of his diseased mental processes he was just throwing them out in a disconnected way. That is how it seemed to me. I couldn't understand it.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM AND THE KILLING OF DR. VERWOERD

Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky that it was the tapeworm which made him travel to several countries. Apart from the fact that as we have seen the true story behind the tapeworm, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm as a reason for his travels, which he called "forced globetrotting."⁵²²⁸ Naturally, he said nothing about it to the police either when he spoke to them about his travels.

More importantly, Tsafendas spoke to several witnesses, like Helen Daniels, Patrick O'Ryan about his travels and never mentioned to them that it was because of a tapeworm. We will not examine again what Tsafendas said about the tapeworm since it is pretty much the same as he told Dr. Cooper and all others who examined him while he was in custody in Caledon Square police station. The author read everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky to forty-four people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well and for many years. Their reaction was exactly the same as with the things he told Dr. Cooper. The author would not list their comments here, as they have already been listed in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

However, Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky something that he did not tell Dr. Cooper and it is further proof that he lied to him. According to Dr. Sakinofsky, Tsafendas told him that he "couldn't remember what had happened at the time of the killing," that "I fell on him, people tell me, and it is probably true, but I don't remember a thing about stabbing him. I could have stabbed him a thousand times without knowing it" and that it was as if he "had been hypnotised." This interview took place on October 14. Twice, just a month earlier, on September 11 and September 19, Tsafendas remembered perfectly well how it had happened and described in detail how he killed Dr. Verwoerd and even explained how he had planned it. He did not claim that he was hypnotised or any of the other things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

⁵²²⁸ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

On September 11, Tsafendas said:

“Some days after I started working in the House of Assembly, all kinds of thoughts came to my mind about murdering the Prime Minister. I saw an opportunity of shooting the Prime Minister from the lobby. I thought of obtaining a firearm. I knew that I had to obtain a licence for a firearm. Obtaining a licence would take too long. This I found out at one of the shops where I enquired about purchasing a firearm in Durban. I thought of going to a ship, the Eleni, which I knew was in Cape Town for repairs. I was acquainted with the crew members of the Eleni ...I had an idea that I might be able to buy a firearm on the ship because some sailors carry firearms.

I went to this ship about three to four weeks before the assassination of the Prime Minister. I saw the man in the engine room (the donkey man), who told me that the bosun, foreman of the crew, may know where I could obtain a firearm. He said he could get me a “Beretta” revolver and a knife. I also enquired from him about a spring type knife, which he said he could get for me. He said he wanted 80 dollars for the two items. I told him I wanted the revolver and the knife for self-defence, he said he wanted the money in American dollars. He did not show me a revolver or a knife. I said I would return in a couple of days with the money. I waited until the end of August when I got my pay. It was, I think, R95.00. I went to Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town and enquired to buy 80 American dollars. I was told that it would cost R56. The lady teller wanted my passport.

The next day I brought my passport and she gave me the 80 dollars. I took a taxi and went to the ship. There I saw the bosun and told him that I have brought the money for the gun and the knife as arranged. He said he did not have the gun, but the galley boy had a small gun which he would try and get for me. The bosun went to the galley boy and brought a small gun which he said I could have for 30 dollars.

I thought it was a small calibre pistol and I decided to buy it. I took it without examining it. They had no bullets. I thought I could buy bullets from local stores. I took the pistol home where I examined it and discovered that it was a gas revolver. On Saturday the 3rd of September, I took the gas pistol back to the ship. I found the bosun with the intention to return the firearm to him. Both the bosun and the galley boy told me that they had spent the money. I wanted another firearm or the return of my money but ended up getting nothing. I went to the captain to protest, but as I saw I could get nothing and did not want to cause a scandal, I gave up and left. I returned to my room in Rondebosch.

The next thing is that I decided to use a knife to stab the Prime Minister in the House of Assembly. I never discussed my plans with anybody. The shops were closed over the weekend and the following Monday was a public holiday. At about 9 a.m. on Tuesday, 6/9/66, I went to town to buy the knives. I bought one knife from the first shop which was open. This shop is known as City Guns. Then I went to another shop further down the road and bought another knife. Both shops were closed when I arrived. I walked up and down the pavement waiting for the shops to open. I enquired at a certain shop as to when the sports shop would open. I cannot remember whether I spoke to a man or a woman.

I started work at 7.49 a.m. on 6/9/66. I arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 a.m. on 6/9/66. I went to work early in order to do my work and then to go out to buy the knives. I did not ask for permission to go to the town to buy the knives. I entered City Guns first and purchased a dagger. I paid R.3.30 for this dagger. I then went to the other shop where I bought another dagger - the one with the aluminium handle. It was more like a stiletto. I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job which I had in mind, I thought something might go wrong and that one weapon might be taken away from me. Both weapons were wrapped up in brown paper.

After I bought the weapons I returned to the House of Assembly where I removed the paper wrappings from the weapons and left the paper wrappings in my locker. I also left the two daggers in my locker. I started working that morning wearing a khaki overall. When I went to the shops to buy the weapons I changed into a grey suit. When I came back I changed into my navy blue messenger's uniform, then I changed into my uniform. I had a waist-belt underneath my uniform pants, to which two sheaths were attached. I left the two knives in the locker. I then went to the first floor to serve coffee and tea. I waited for the lights to go on indicating which offices were calling for tea and coffee. I was there until about 2 p.m. that afternoon.

A few minutes before the Assembly bells began to ring for the starting of the session, I went to my locker to fetch the knives. I put them into the sheaths inside my pants and went into the Assembly lobby to wait for the Prime Minister's arrival. I had previously planned to stab the Prime Minister in the Assembly hall whilst walking to his bench. I watched him walk past and followed him into the Assembly hail. I tried to pull the dagger from the sheath but had difficulty in pulling it out. Eventually I managed to pull it out, but by that time the Prime Minister had already sat down in his bench. I was very nervous and confused that I cannot remember where I stabbed him the first blow, but I aimed at his chest. I remember stabbing him twice and then the people caught hold of me. They beat me up, kicked me and dragged me into lobby. I was disarmed and arrested.”⁵²²⁹

On September 19, Tsafendas told the police:

“The idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly. I saw an opportunity to do so in the House of Assembly because I was inside the house. I first thought of buying a gun with which I could shoot him and then run away. I did in fact buy a gun from the crew of the Eleni hut I found that the gun was useless. I bought the gun at the end of the month when I got my pay. I went there before to try and get the gun but I had no money. I then waited until I got my pay. I was going to buy a Beretta but the man didn't keep his word and gave me the other pistol. He made all kinds of excuses. It was only after I found that the gun was useless that I decided on using a knife...

I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My planes were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister... I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.”⁵²³⁰

On both occasions, Tsafendas remembers very clearly how he killed Dr. Verwoerd and what preceded it. He does not mention anywhere that he was confused or say anything to suggest that he is a schizophrenic. Tsafendas's story about the purchase of the gun from the crew and later of the two knives was confirmed by the police from their own investigation and from the interviews they conducted with those involved, as we saw in Chapter Four.

⁵²²⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²³⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

About thirty years later, Tsafendas told the same story he told the police to David Beresford, Liza Key and Fathers Ioannis, Spiros and Minas. He not only described to all these people in perfect detail how he made and executed his plan, as he did with the police, but he gave additional details, such as the fact that he had poured anti-rust solution onto the blades, hoping it would poison Dr. Verwoerd's blood should he survive the stabbing. Tsafendas could even remember some of the contents of the anti-rust solution; for example the hydrochloric acid and the phosphoric acid.⁵²³¹ This proves that Tsafendas remembered what had happened: not only shortly after the assassination but as long as thirty years afterwards. The fact that he was not able to "remember" this incident when interviewed by Dr. Sakinofsky suggests that he either suffered from a temporary amnesia, for that day and for this incident only, or he lied to him.

Both of Tsafendas's statements were in the possession of the police and if they were also in the possession of the Attorney-General, as they should have been, it would have been very easy to prove that Tsafendas was lying to Dr. Sakinofsky about not remembering the assassination. However, once again, the statements were not used to challenge a witness' testimony.

Importantly, Dr. Sakinofsky clarifies that although he asked Tsafendas several times whether the tapeworm had asked him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, he denied it, as he did with Dr. Cooper. However, it became widely accepted that Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd because a tapeworm told him to. Tsafendas himself told several witnesses that both the police and some psychiatrists had tried to make him say it was the tapeworm that ordered him to do it. Tsafendas insisted to these witnesses that he never said such a thing,⁵²³² and according to Dr. Cooper, Dr. Sakinofsky and as we will soon see the other psychiatrists too, he was telling the truth.

⁵²³¹ Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Beresford (The Guardian), 6 November 1997: 6-7, "Inside Story: The madness that destroyed apartheid"; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵²³² Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Beresford (The Guardian), 6 November 1997: 6-7, "Inside Story: The madness that destroyed apartheid"; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Spiros Randos in a personal interview, 5 January 2004; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S DIAGNOSIS OF "THOUGHT-BLOCKING"

None of the two-hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time and the other forty-four who were interviewed later by the author offered anything to suggest that Tsafendas was suffering from thought-blocking. This is clearly something that it is more evident to a psychiatrist, but certainly people can tell whether a man is talking coherently, if there are gaps in his speech and whether he can answer questions and follow a conversation.

These are the statements of people who were questioned by the police and commented on his mental state:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman was a personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation who was often visited by Tsafendas in her office. She "found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation."⁵²³³
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he "never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers."⁵²³⁴
- Helen Grispos knew Tsafendas from birth and grew up with him, while her husband was Tsafendas's best childhood friend. She told the police that Tsafendas was "well-mannered and intelligent."⁵²³⁵ She also told the author that she never thought Tsafendas was insane. "He never did or said anything to make me or George (her husband) think that he was insane."⁵²³⁶
- Hendrik van Loggenberg knew Tsafendas and his family well in Pretoria. He told the police that Tsafendas "definitely came across as normal ... he also seemed healthy ..."⁵²³⁷
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira "was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him." He considered Tsafendas to be "a normal and very intelligent person."⁵²³⁸

⁵²³³ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²³⁴ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²³⁵ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²³⁶ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁵²³⁷ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²³⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F. A. Poole in Pretoria, said that in the five months he worked with Tsafendas, he found him to be "not a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker."⁵²³⁹ He also testified to the Commission of Enquiry that he considered Tsafendas to be "an intelligent man" and never got the impression that he "wasn't right in his mind."⁵²⁴⁰
- James Summers, owner of the "Barlings Tea Lounge," which Tsafendas frequented from July 1966 until the assassination, testified that Tsafendas "was no nuisance, and appeared to be a quite normal, innocent type. I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal."⁵²⁴¹
- John Gianouris, the Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques, described Tsafendas as "a normal and intelligent person."⁵²⁴²
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be "very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease."⁵²⁴³
- Kyriakos Skordis who Tsafendas used to visit at his coffee shop in Durban for several months in 1965, testified that he "appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position."⁵²⁴⁴
- Inspector Horacio Ferreira of the Portuguese Security Police was in charge of the cells where Tsafendas was held in custody in Beira in 1964. His statement to the police said he considered Tsafendas to be "normal and regarded him as a very intelligent person."⁵²⁴⁵

⁵²³⁹ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²⁴⁰ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴¹ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁴³ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²⁴⁴ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴⁵ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

- Costas Michaeletos,⁵²⁴⁶ who knew Tsafendas from birth, stated, “Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never, any time observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person.”⁵²⁴⁷
- Richard Poggenpoel lived with him for two weeks in his house and kept on associating up to his arrest, “there was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life.”⁵²⁴⁸
- John Galanakis, who met Tsafendas in Umtali in 1964, told police that he found Tsafendas to be “an intelligent person.”⁵²⁴⁹
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁵²⁵⁰
- Gideon Cloete, an employee in the Department of Labour, met Tsafendas twice and said he “seemed eager to get employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete said he saw no signs of abnormality, that “he seemed perfectly normal.”⁵²⁵¹
- George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high intelligence.”⁵²⁵² Liberopoulos also stated to the author that he “never believed that Tsafendas was insane. He was perfectly normal; very clever man.”⁵²⁵³
- Harry Hall, a member of the Christian Church, knew Tsafendas from March 1966 until his arrest. He testified to the police that he regarded Tsafendas “as a sub-standard intellect, but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal.”⁵²⁵⁴

⁵²⁴⁶ The correct spelling is Michaeletos, not Michaeletos. Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴⁷ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴⁸ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁴⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁵⁰ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁵²⁵¹ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁵²⁵² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁵³ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

⁵²⁵⁴ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

- Reginald Robert Maile was the guard on the Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town from July 26, 1966 to September 3, 1966. He saw Tsafendas every day and told the police that he “never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.”⁵²⁵⁵
- George Ananiades met Tsafendas in 1963 and described him to the police as a “normal person with a very high-intelligence.”⁵²⁵⁶ He later told the author that Tsafendas “is impossible to have been insane. He was a very intelligent and educated man.”⁵²⁵⁷
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”⁵²⁵⁸
- John Verghis, owner of a coffee shop in Beira which Tsafendas visited often for several months, said he considered him to be a “normal person.”⁵²⁵⁹
- Lt. Col. P.J.B. van Wyk of the South African police interviewed several people in Rhodesia and in Mozambique, including in Beira and Lourenço Marques, who knew Tsafendas. He stated in his report that Tsafendas, “for all purposes, can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.”⁵²⁶⁰
- None of Tsafendas's five colleagues at the Parliament mentioned anything being wrong with him.⁵²⁶¹
- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger, was one of the three messengers who interviewed and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ⁵²⁵⁵ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵²⁵⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁵⁷ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

⁵²⁵⁸ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁵²⁵⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁶⁰ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁶¹ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA; Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”⁵²⁶²

- Sydney Wiehand, a messenger who was also on the interview panel in the House of Assembly, said Tsafendas “was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type or anything like that. He was quiet, quietly spoken, well-mannered.”⁵²⁶³

Several people lived under the same roof or in close proximity to Tsafendas for substantial periods. None of them noticed anything wrong with him:

- Tsafendas lived in Fotini Gavasiadis’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. Gavasiadis never noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas and has no doubt that he was perfectly able to function, not just at a “reasonable level” but beyond that, since he was extremely intelligent and lucid. She told the author:

“Dimitris could buy you and sell you any time he wanted and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white. If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him.”

Gavasiadis laughed at the suggestion that Tsafendas was dysfunctional. She told the author:

“In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned. It must have been the doctor who said it, who was himself not able to function on a reasonable level if this was his diagnosis about Dimitri. Dimitri was not just able, but much more than able to function on a reasonable level. It’s absolutely ludicrous for someone to say this about Dimitri and it shows how little he knew him.”⁵²⁶⁴ According to Professor Burke, “if you lived with somebody for nine months, you would know if this person was strange.”⁵²⁶⁵

⁵²⁶² Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵²⁶³ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

- Father Nikola Banovic lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four-five months in 1961, and then for another two-three months, he lived in a house next door. In all this time, he saw him every day. He declares that Tsafendas “was perfectly sane” and he does “not have the slightest doubt about it. It is impossible; Dimitri was not schizophrenic. With God as my witness, he was not crazy. He was more than capable of functioning on a reasonable level; he was a very intelligent and capable man. His brain was a level above most of ours.”⁵²⁶⁶
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up alongside him in Mozambique and in Egypt. In Pretoria in 1964, she spent a lot of time with him, including two or three weeks when they lived in the same house. She told the author: “Dimitris unable to function on a reasonable level? Are you sure a doctor said that? I don’t know what kind of doctor he was, but he either examined a different person or he had completely lost the plot with Dimitris. Dimitris was one of the most capable and intelligent persons I ever met. Nobody who knew him is going to agree with what this doctor said.”⁵²⁶⁷
- Patrick O’Ryan hosted Tsafendas in his home for five months in 1965-1966 and was close to him up to his arrest. Tsafendas was described to him by a preacher of the Christian Church as a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages.”⁵²⁶⁸ He formed a “deep liking”⁵²⁶⁹ for Tsafendas and considered him to be an “enlightened person.”⁵²⁷⁰ He also testified that “I had confidence in him and used to like him. He was a very kindly man. In my experience of him he had a good heart... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind,” or that he “was mentally ⁵²⁶⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵²⁶⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁵²⁶⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵²⁶⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵²⁶⁸ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

⁵²⁶⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵²⁷⁰ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

disturbed.”⁵²⁷¹ He also found Tsafendas to be “well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁵²⁷²

- John Bornman lived with Tsafendas for six-seven weeks in April and May of 1966. He found Tsafendas to be “normal, intelligent and friendly. He was neat in his person, but his eating habits were messy.”⁵²⁷³
- Reuben O’Ryan lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months. He considered him “perfectly normal,” saying, “no-one in my family ever thought that he was mad. He couldn’t have been insane.”⁵²⁷⁴
- Stanley O’Ryan also lived in the same house as Tsafendas for five months and described him as a “very down to earth man, a very quiet man and very friendly. I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. No, never, nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”⁵²⁷⁵
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry: “it was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means.”⁵²⁷⁶
- Elizabeth Groves was Tsafendas’s landlady for six or seven weeks and a retired psychiatric nurse. About Tsafendas she said, “I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge.”⁵²⁷⁷
- Alice Mary Theyser was Tsafendas’s landlady from July 1, 1966 to August 30, 1966, just six days before the assassination. She testified to the police that she “never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite ⁵²⁷¹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵²⁷² Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵²⁷³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²⁷⁴ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵²⁷⁵ Stanley O’Ryan in a personal intervbw, 9 April 2015.

⁵²⁷⁶ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁵²⁷⁷ Elizabeth Magdalene Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

normal person.”⁵²⁷⁸

- Helen Daniels lived with Tsafendas in her parents' house for six weeks in 1965 and “did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal.”⁵²⁷⁹
- Kenneth Ross was Tsafendas's landlord in Durban for two months in 1965. He did not mention anything to suggest that Tsafendas was unable to function on a reasonable level and even stated that he “was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well-versed in politics.”⁵²⁸⁰
- For two months in 1966 Tsafendas had his meals in Mary Scott's boarding house. She told police that she “never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal.”⁵²⁸¹
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁵²⁸²
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He, too, disagrees with Dr. Cooper's diagnosis. “Dimitri was not mad, not even a little. He was an exceptional man, very clever too.”⁵²⁸³
- Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos was Tsafendas's landlady for three weeks in 1966. She testified to the police that she “considered him to be a completely normal person.”⁵²⁸⁴
- Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas in the same house in Beira for two or three months and knew him since they were children. As for Tsafendas being mad, he said:

“If he was mad, then the whole world must be mad. He was not even the slightest disturbed. Every single Greek in Mozambique discussed Dimitri after we heard about the ⁵²⁷⁸ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁷⁹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

⁵²⁸⁰ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁸¹ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵²⁸² Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

⁵²⁸³ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵²⁸⁴ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

tapeworm; not even one from those who had met him believed that he was mad. He was not; we all said the same thing. He made it up, as he did with the Saint Peter act. If someone believes that he was mad, he did not meet him Dimitri, but someone else.”⁵²⁸⁵

- Nick Papadakis also lived with Tsafendas for two months in Beira and Gondola in 1964. He told the author: “I never believed, not even after I read what happened in the trial, that he was insane. He played the fool and they believed him. It’s impossible that he was insane, he was absolutely fine and very clever.”⁵²⁸⁶
- Irene Michaletos and her mother associated with Tsafendas for several months between 1964 and 1965. He even stayed several times at their house. She never noticed anything wrong with him and was sure that he was perfectly sane.⁵²⁸⁷
- In 1951 and between 1963 and 1965, Tsafendas slept for several nights in the house of his aunt Artemis Michaletos in Lourenço Marques. Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousins and Artemis’s sons, who lived in the same house, spent several hours chatting with Tsafendas. Both were adamant in conversation with the author that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought blockage and that he had no problems in following a conversation.⁵²⁸⁸

John Michaletos told the author:

“We all [his family] had many long conversations with him. I really mean hours and hours, in a row, the same day. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man.”⁵²⁸⁹

⁵²⁸⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵²⁸⁶ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵²⁸⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵²⁸⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵²⁸⁹ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

In addition, Artemis Michaletos, who had brought Tsafendas up in Egypt and lived in Lourenço Marques while he was growing up there, always maintained that he was perfectly sane and very intelligent.⁵²⁹⁰

- Stelios Marangos was Tsafendas's landlord in Beira for six weeks. He did not mention anything to the police about Tsafendas being "unstable" or strange.⁵²⁹¹

Furthermore, in July 1966, just a few weeks after Dr. Kossew diagnosed him as schizophrenic and just two months before the assassination, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a reporter named N.D. Hartford on the Cape Argus. They had met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an "anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship."⁵²⁹² Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation.⁵²⁹³

More importantly, Tsafendas was questioned twice by Major Rossouw while he was in custody. When Major Rossouw appeared in front of the Commission of Enquiry, the following dialogue ensued between him and Judge van Wyk:

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.⁵²⁹⁴

By also looking at both of Tsafendas statements, we see that he did not have the issue Dr. Sakinofsky noted and all of Tsafendas's answers and narration are perfectly clear without ⁵²⁹⁰ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵²⁹¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵²⁹² The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

⁵²⁹³ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵²⁹⁴ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

any sign of “thought blocking.” If such an issue was noted by Major Rossouw or General van den Berg, presumably they would have been able to notice it.

In addition, Tsafendas attended several interviews in his working life and appeared to be perfectly able to answer, or he would not have got the jobs. More importantly, he was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for a permanent residency permit for South Africa and neither of them noticed any “thought-blocking,” though they were not psychiatrists. However, one would expect anyone, particularly a doctor, to spot whether a patient is able to answer a simple question or if he presents the symptoms mentioned by Dr. Sakinofsky:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁵²⁹⁵ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.⁵²⁹⁶
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the same reason by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report,” and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.⁵²⁹⁷

In addition to the above two doctors, Tsafendas was seen by a further ten doctors, none of them psychiatrists, over the previous three years and none noted any “thought-blocking”:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.⁵²⁹⁸

⁵²⁹⁵ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁵²⁹⁶ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵²⁹⁷ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁵²⁹⁸ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker, a casualty officer, and nothing was reported about his mental state.⁵²⁹⁹
- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.⁵³⁰⁰
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him⁵³⁰¹ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.⁵³⁰²
- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He reported nothing about his mental condition.⁵³⁰³
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work.⁵³⁰⁴
- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn't appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree... He was calm...”⁵³⁰⁵
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not ⁵²⁹⁹ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

⁵³⁰⁰ Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵³⁰¹ The doctor's name in the medical report is indecipherable.

⁵³⁰² Demitrio Tsafendas's Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

⁵³⁰³ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁰⁴ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁵³⁰⁵ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation.⁵³⁰⁶

- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on 3rd June, 1966 and nothing was reported to be wrong with his mental state.⁵³⁰⁷
- Finally, Dr. Darby, a casualty officer, examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.⁵³⁰⁸

Furthermore, Tsafendas worked and was interviewed on several occasions for jobs or in response to various other applications he had made, and again no one noticed anything. For example:

- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, accepted Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” over six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He said, “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁵³⁰⁹
- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was also one of the three men who had interviewed him and appointed him. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”⁵³¹⁰
- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.”⁵³¹¹
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s employer in Frankfurt, Germany, at the heavy engineering

⁵³⁰⁶ Dr. Leon Solomon’s medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁵³⁰⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 64. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵³⁰⁸ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Dimitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁰⁹ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³¹⁰ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵³¹¹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

company Fries and Son, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man... He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”

Tsafendas “left on his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁵³¹² Tsafendas was given a reference by Hartmann, so his work there must have been satisfactory.

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”⁵³¹³
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁵³¹⁴
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”⁵³¹⁵
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas’s employer for two months, found him to be “competent at his job” and never got the impression that he might be insane.⁵³¹⁶
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour, Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being

⁵³¹² Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

⁵³¹³ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³¹⁴ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³¹⁵ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵³¹⁶ Lambley, 1980: 241.

over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality during his interviews with me.”⁵³¹⁷

- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour, Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He told the police that he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁵³¹⁸
- Gideon Cloete, also at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.⁵³¹⁹
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”⁵³²⁰

Tsafendas was also interviewed by Mr Limasollu Naci, owner of a private language college bearing his name in Istanbul, given a week’s trial, and then hired full-time. He worked there for five to six months, teaching English. Mr. Limasollu died before the author’s inquiries began, but his wife, who also worked at the college, believes that it would have been impossible for her husband to hire a man who talked in the manner described by the psychiatrists or suffered from thought blocking. Tsafendas left the college of his own accord and was given an excellent reference, which he used to secure employment in Parliament.

Furthermore, none of the forty-four witnesses interviewed by the author and knew Tsafendas ever got the impression that his speech was disjointed or that he suffered from thought blocking. For example, Fotini Gavasiadis, who was very close to him and practically lived with him for nine months in 1963-4, told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn’t let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and

⁵³¹⁷ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁵³¹⁸ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁵³¹⁹ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁵³²⁰ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him ...

In the nine months I knew him, I saw him and spoke to him every day. Not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might have the issues you mentioned.”⁵³²¹

The priests who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1980s and the 1990s and spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought blocking, that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation and that he did not talk in a disjointed manner. Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”⁵³²²

Father Michalis Visvinis told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion...I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He ⁵³²¹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵³²² Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He always spoke absolutely fine, like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false.”⁵³²³

Mary Eendracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, “Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with speech or his thoughts; they were both excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours for politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people’s.”⁵³²⁴

Irene Michaletos knew Tsafendas for more than a year in 1964 and 1965 and he often visited and stayed at her house in Beira. They had several long conversations and she never experienced any problems conversing with him; on the contrary, she found Tsafendas to be an excellent and interesting conversationalist. She told the author:

“It is certainly false that he was unable to follow a conversation or that anyone had any difficulty talking to him. As a matter of fact, it was the exact opposite. I found the conversations with him very easy and interesting, too. He was a great storyteller. I had many long conversations with him. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man.”⁵³²⁵

Alexander Moumbaris, who spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months in 1972 in Pretoria Prison, flatly denied that Tsafendas suffered from thought blockage and that he had problems in following a conversation. He told the author:

⁵³²³ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵³²⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵³²⁵ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

“He never had any difficulty expressing himself or participating in a conversation. Most times he led the conversations. There were never gaps or pauses in his speech, or anything that would make me think that he was struggling to speak or participate in our conversations.”⁵³²⁶

The Eleni men were so impressed by Tsafendas's knowledge and way of speech that they began calling him “Professor.”⁵³²⁷ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He was talking like a university professor”, said Nikolaos Billis, one of the crew.⁵³²⁸ Another, Michalis Vasilakis, said, “I can't explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct, words. He knew how to speak and how to choose his words. He talked like a professor – that is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man. No, his speech was definitely not disjointed, it was excellent.”⁵³²⁹

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best and longest. None of the above witnesses ever got the impression that Tsafendas's speech was disjointed or that he was unable to answer a question properly or blocked in the way Dr. Sakinofsky described.

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;⁵³³⁰
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;⁵³³¹
- His first cousin Mary Eendracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for nine months in 1964;⁵³³²
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁵³³³
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived him for two ⁵³²⁶ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁵³²⁷ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

⁵³²⁸ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

⁵³²⁹ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵³³⁰ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵³³¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵³³² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵³³³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then,⁵³³⁴

- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;⁵³³⁵
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins, first met him in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.⁵³³⁶
- Costas Poriassis who met him in 1965 in Beira;⁵³³⁷
- Alexandra Vaporidis who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;⁵³³⁸
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964,⁵³³⁹
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁵³⁴⁰

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is the past medical history of this man relevant to you, important to you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, it is, because one of the criteria for making a diagnosis of schizophrenia is prognosis. In other words, the state of the patient - mental state - in the course of time. And in fact, if one had an almost continuous history of 30 years of this kind of delusional insanity, then I would think that is absolutely pathognomonic of schizophrenia. No other condition that I know of can last-

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And what would his prognosis be?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Hopeless for recovery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So if evidence is obtained that he was diagnosed at St. Pancras ⁵³³⁴ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵³³⁵ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵³³⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵³³⁷ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵³³⁸ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵³³⁹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵³⁴⁰ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Hospital on the 26th May, 1959 as being a paranoid schizophrenic?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I had not seen that report but if this were so, I would see this as being consistent with the diagnosis I have made.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And if the authorities there, the doctors who interviewed him, say that he there too talked about the tapeworm, which he called a 'dragon'?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, this would again be absolutely consistent with the diagnosis. I would think that this would mean that he could never have dreamt this up on the spur of the moment as a defence. We had the evidence this morning of a lady called Mrs. O'Ryan, who says that the accused talked to her, some months before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, about this tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you comment on that evidence which is now before the Court?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, the only comment I would make is that this makes it all the more likely that there was this delusion, was held continuously in time. It was not something which left him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If evidence were led, and the Court were to accept the opinion of a person called Dr. Brown, Medical Superintendent of the Hospital on the Isle of Wight - the White Cross Hospital, "that although his conduct in hospital was quiet and amenable, I did note on my report to the authorities that he was suffering from a delusional psychosis which could affect his conduct very considerably," what would the importance of that be?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, again I haven't seen this report. If this is so, then I have no doubt that this is consistent with the diagnosis of chronic schizophrenia - a variety of chronic schizophrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would it be consistent with a diseased, insane man who assassinated the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Yes, because every psychiatrist knows that chronic schizophrenia of the paranoid kind into which this man fits, while apparently amenable and moving about society, could be subject to sudden eruption.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And in that state of eruption would he act in this way, kill somebody?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Under the influence of his diseased brain, he could, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you had evidence - that goes back a little further - that is, evidence from the German hospital near Hamburg to whom you wrote, and you have seen that report....?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Ochsenzoll?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again if that evidence is placed before the Court - and let us assume for a moment it is before the Court- what would it establish in your opinion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It establishes that at the time he was in the Ochsenzoll he was suffering from a major mental disorder, due to this tape-worm, his belief about the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is mention also made in that report of his preoccupation with this tapeworm?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. He had just been investigated in the Tropical Hospital in Hamburg for a tapeworm and the doctors there had told him he had no tapeworm. He refused to believe this, became wretched and took an overdose of sleeping pills - he took 20 sleeping pills in an attempt at suicide. He was admitted to the Ochsenzoll Hospital. They found the presence of hypochondriacal delusion and they gave him a variety of treatments, insulin, opium therapy and finally electric-convulsive therapy - shock treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If you are told that prior to 1955, and in America (the year 1946, round there) he was certified insane and suffering from hebephrenic schizophrenia, what is your comment about that? The relevance and importance of that evidence?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, my first comment would be that I would not be at all surprised about it being schizophrenia. I would be a little surprised at the diagnosis of hebephrenia, because this betokens a much worse prognosis as far as deterioration, and the man we have in the dock here shows. The patients are characteristically reduced to silly, gibbering idiots.

JUDGE BEYERS: Like a child or something? The word, doesn't it mean 'behaving like a child'?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, Like a child or like a woman. I am not quite sure.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Doctor, sitting as an assessor in this case, would you consider it important to have all this medical history of the past placed before you?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, if I were in that position I certainly would think it was relevant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Let us come now to your final assessment of this man before the Court. Your opinion is that he is suffering from...?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I regard him as suffering from schizophrenia, the particular sub-category in my opinion being paraphrenia.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is schizophrenia, this mental disease that he has, a psychosis?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is a major psychosis.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is he mentally disordered in terms of the Act?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you certify him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Should he go to an asylum?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He should, at the State President's pleasure, if I may say so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you any reservations.....?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I have no reservations at all.

COMMENTS ON DR. SAKINOFSKY'S TESTIMONY REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

The Defence Counsel refers again, as he did with Dr. Cooper, to some of Tsafendas's medical records from overseas hospitals. In this particular case, advocate Cooper reads from the report from the hospital in the Isle of Wight. First, Dr. Sakinofsky states that he has not seen this report, as Dr. Cooper also did. The question is, since both psychiatrists were part of the defence team, why were they not given these reports, especially since their diagnoses were compatible? Dr. Sakinofsky had said in correspondence with the author, but also stated to the Court, that a patient's medical records are very important. Dr. Sakinofsky himself had written to some of the hospitals where Tsafendas was treated to get his records. The defence team had some of these records in its possession, but did not give them to him.

Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas for the defence stated to the author that he was verbally told that Tsafendas was diagnosed as schizophrenic by many overseas hospitals, but he did not see any of the actual reports, and this was the case with at least some, if not all, of those who examined Tsafendas.⁵³⁴¹ However, Dr. Sakinofsky was in possession of the medical report from Hamburg as he had personally requested it from this hospital. He had received them sometime after the 4th of October and while he had already examined Tsafendas at least once and maybe even twice.⁵³⁴²

The Defence Counsel then refers again, as he did with Dr. Cooper, to the medical report from "America." As he did with Dr. Cooper, he reads only the diagnosis and does not say anything about the tapeworm or anything else that it is in the report. Then, something unbelievable happens when he asks Dr. Sakinofsky: "Doctor, sitting as an assessor in this case, would you consider it important to have all this medical history of the past placed before you?" The first major question is why all of Tsafendas's medical history was not placed before Dr. Sakinofsky in the first place; before the summary trial where he would have had the time to evaluate it properly? Since the diagnosis was similar to Dr. Sakinofsky's, it would have strengthened his own diagnosis about Tsafendas. However, the report from America, more specifically from Grafton State Hospital, contained two very important phrases that would certainly have been picked up by Dr. Sakinofsky, and the Defence Counsel must have known they could have been damaging for the defence's line.

The report says about Tsafendas that "he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships."⁵³⁴³ It also says that Tsafendas "is in the habit of smearing the walls in his room with faeces and is hallucinated and suspicious. He hears voices coming though the radiators."⁵³⁴⁴ Both of the above statements are very important information for a psychiatrist and their significance has been discussed in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

We should remember here that the US Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas containing "full particulars" of his time in the United States, including the Grafton State ⁵³⁴¹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁵³⁴² Letter of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, to Dr. Sakinofsky, 4 October 1966. K150. Vol. 7, No: 09/4, Subject: Suspect Persons: Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵³⁴³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵³⁴⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

Hospital report. The South African embassy in Washington had informed the South African Ministry of Foreign Affairs that according to US Immigration officials, Tsafendas was “understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁵³⁴⁵ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe.”⁵³⁴⁶

As to the alleged suicide attempt, Tsafendas must certainly have lied when he said in Hamburg that he had taken twenty sleeping pills. He never spoke about this specific incident, but later stated that he never contemplated suicide while he was in custody, despite the severe torture, because he knew he was not brave enough to do it. Contrary to the general belief, Tsafendas held the view that suicide was not an act of cowardice but one of bravery. He believed that only a brave person would have the courage to take his own life and that people who killed themselves were mistaken in thinking they were weak when they were actually strong.⁵³⁴⁷ In addition, the Grafton State Hospital report stated that Tsafendas threatened the US Immigration authorities with suicide if they deported him. He was later deported, but did not proceed with his threat.⁵³⁴⁸

The Defence Counsel also referred to the reports from the English hospitals, as he did with Dr. Cooper and Dr. Muller. None of them was submitted as evidence and we do not know the detailed contents, apart from the diagnosis. The picture that emerged from Tsafendas's time in London, according to the evidence collected by the South African police but also by the author, is that he does not appear to act as a “paranoid schizophrenic” as the diagnosis suggests. Tsafendas arrived in England on May 16, 1959.⁵³⁴⁹ He asked the authorities if he could take a language test and work as a hotel porter, but this was refused, as was his application to remain in the country as a student. He was ordered to leave the United Kingdom by September 2, 1959.⁵³⁵⁰ However, he ignored the order and remained in the UK

⁵³⁴⁵ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

⁵³⁴⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵³⁴⁷ Father Minas Constantinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵³⁴⁸ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵³⁴⁹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵³⁵⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

“working clandestinely because legally he was not authorised.”⁵³⁵¹ On August 4, 1959, Tsafendas applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form to the Union’s immigration attaché in London.⁵³⁵²

According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, while in London, Tsafendas “was noticed in the company of leftists,” confirming Tsafendas’s own statement to the police.⁵³⁵³ Tsafendas told the police he had attended political meetings organised by the Committee of African Organisations in Hyde Park, plus Labour Party meetings in London’s Caxton Hall as well as demonstrations held by anti-apartheid and anti-fascist groups.⁵³⁵⁴ According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, evidence was submitted to the Commission that while in London Tsafendas tried to “recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa.” Tsafendas admitted to the Commission “that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising,” but said “that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.”⁵³⁵⁵ It appears unlikely that a paranoid schizophrenic will be involved in such activities and would associate with all these people and that his condition would go unnoticed.

Tsafendas told Fathers Minas, Ioannis and Spiros many years later that whenever he was penniless and homeless, he always found shelter at a hospital. As he said, hospitals where like hotels with free food and free accommodation.⁵³⁵⁶ As we have seen, according to Gordon Winter, Tsafendas had said exactly the same thing to General van den Bergh when he was interrogated by him.⁵³⁵⁷

This seems to be the case in the UK. Tsafendas was not allowed to work so when he ran out of money, he admitted himself to the hospital in St. Pancras. A report from the South African Embassy in London also stated that Tsafendas admitted himself to the hospital, claiming he had a fixation with a tapeworm.⁵³⁵⁸ He also talked his way into a hospital on the ⁵³⁵¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵³⁵² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵³⁵³ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 31. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵³⁵⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵³⁵⁵ Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph 32. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵³⁵⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵³⁵⁷ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

⁵³⁵⁸ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

Isle of Wight. It is the only one of which he spoke extensively to others. He said that while he was in the St. Pancras hospital, he learned about the Isle of Wight, a “beautiful small island” off the south coast of England, with an “impressive psychiatric hospital which was like an ancient castle.” He had never heard of this island and decided to visit it. Tsafendas accordingly cut short his stay at St. Pancras, having “recovered” from his “illness,”⁵³⁵⁹ after a few days and on October 4, made his way to the Isle of Wight. After a look around the island, he had himself admitted to the Whitecroft Mental Hospital, near Newport, claiming mental problems.⁵³⁶⁰

According to Tsafendas, the hospital staff were initially suspicious, considering it strange that a foreigner should just turn up at the psychiatric hospital of this small island. Most patients had been transferred there upon a doctor’s recommendation and nobody had ever turned up on the doorstep. Tsafendas said this was his trickiest problem. He could not claim that he was just passing and suddenly fell ill. Instead, he said he had lost his way trying to get to France and gradually he managed to convince the doctors that his case was genuine.⁵³⁶¹

Tsafendas stayed at the hospital until December 3, 1959, when he was discovered by the British immigration authorities and deported to Germany.⁵³⁶² Again, there is also no mention of the 1964/1965 report from the hospital in Beira where Tsafendas was hospitalised believing he was Saint Peter. For a more detailed analysis of the issue of Tsafendas’s medical records see the relevant section in Dr. Cooper’s testimony.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you consider your finding on the 6th September, 1966, at 7 p.m. as conclusive?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Did I consider it conclusive?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

⁵³⁵⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵³⁶⁰ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵³⁶¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵³⁶² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph 33. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Up to that point it was conclusive. I was able to make a diagnosis.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did you think that further tests and observations were necessary?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Sometimes one is misled by the clinical picture and it is only reasonable to do certain tests to find out whether other conditions are not mimicking this picture.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it true that when you examined the accused on the 6th September, 1966, he answered all questions readily?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes he answered them unguardedly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And you did not find any blocking?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Any blocking? No, not at that time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was not vague?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, he was vague, certainly, because I could not follow the processes of his reasoning. When he talked about his royal kinship with somebody called Von Willem and he talked about his quasi political ideas, I could not follow him there at all. When he talked about the meeting between Chief Jonathan and Dr. Verwoerd, it having something to do with the Immorality Act, I couldn't follow him there.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You found no syntactical schizophrenia?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I found no syntactical formal schizophrenic thought disorder at that time, which meant that his grammar was reasonable, taking into account the fact that he was in an excited state.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that you also found the accused to be fully orientated as to time and person?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

JUDGE BEYERS: All that you are putting to him now he has already said. It is on record. It is from his report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How did you come to the conclusion at 7 p.m. that the accused was not in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of the crime?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I did not come to that conclusion at 7 p.m. I came to that conclusion when I weighed up all that evidence the next morning, when I had thought about it and slept on it, and put it all together. I came to that conclusion, in fact, at the end of that interview when I came out and I said to a member of the Security Police - the Major who was there - I said that this chap ought to go into Valkenburg for observation, and he said - well, that is not relevant. Or if you like, he said: "I feel sorry for the poor bugger."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But did you know, when you examined the accused at 7 p.m. on the 6th September, that he had been concussed in Parliament?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I could see that he had been restrained, yes. Concussed, well, I could not see DEFENCE COUNSEL: I must object. There is no evidence that the man was concussed in Parliament.

JUDGE BEYERS: It might still come.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Very well, but then put it but JUDGE BEYERS: Why?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Dr. Kossew was the one who examined him and he did not find him to be concussed.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Concussion to me ...

JUDGE BEYERS: What is wrong with putting the question? The State hasn't led evidence yet?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does the State now contend that he was concussed in Parliament and will lead evidence to substantiate that?

JUDGE BEYERS: From that question and the way it is put, I would normally deduce that the advocate putting it has got evidence that he was concussed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From a medical man?

JUDGE BEYERS: I don't care from whom he's got it. He might have it from Tsafendas. He is entitled at this stage to cross-examine on that basis. The question is perfectly in order.

DR. SAKINOFSKY: If I may answer that question then from the Attorney-General. I did not conclude it on medical grounds because the man was not confused; he was not disorientated in time and place. Had he been concussed, had he been a man who was unconscious for a time, I would have expected this. And if I found that he was disorientated in time and place then I would have thought that there was concussion present which was influencing my clinical picture at the time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you know that the accused's nose had been broken?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, I saw stitches. I didn't go into exactly what anatomical feature had been broken,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you know whether the accused had had any injections before you saw him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I assumed that he would have had an anti-tetanus injection and possibly an antibiotic, but he had not had a sedative and he did not in any way have his consciousness clouded or impaired by concussion when I saw him, and the way I establish this is by orientation in time and place,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Could an injection for pain have impaired his reasoning?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I don't think so. Not without sedating him to the point where he was drowsy. He was anything but drowsy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Couldn't the accused have been suffering from delayed shock?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: When you examined him?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think that he was suffering from delayed shock in any way that would impair the mental state that I found at that time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you consider it at the time?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. He was not pale. His pulse was good; I felt it several times actually.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that millions of people think that Dr. Verwoerd and the Portuguese Government were in league together?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think millions of people know that there is a friendly relationship between our two countries, but I would not say that they were in league in the sense that Mr. Tsafendas saw them to be in league. In other words, that the Portuguese Government was influencing the internal affairs of South Africa, the Immorality Act, etc.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How can you say that this is a delusion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: How can I say that that is a delusion?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Because taking the whole of his quasi political ideas, in their context, I would think that these are false beliefs which cannot be held by a majority of our society, by anybody other than someone who is mentally deranged. Taking into account the context, not taking things out of context.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it true that the subject of the meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Jonathan was a matter of general political speculation?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I think that is certainly so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he know what they were meeting about?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Did who know? Did I know?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: No, the accused?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think he did. Not from what he told me. He told me they were meeting to consider the Immorality Act.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you regard the accused's explanation of the cause of his headaches as ridiculous?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: His explanation that they were due to pressure?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Did you regard it as ridiculous?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No, I didn't regard that in itself as being particularly ridiculous. Lots of lay people talk about their headaches being due to pressure.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The accused never mentioned to you that it was a tapeworm that was responsible for his illness, did he?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: When? At the first interview?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: On the first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: On the first interview we didn't get round to the tapeworm, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected him to have mentioned it on this first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I don't think so, because there were so many recent events. After all, he had just assassinated the Prime Minister, and one was talking about that and what led him to do that, and his mind, I think, was filled with the quasi-political delusions which he held at that time, in this state of excitement- excitement in the pathological sense.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If the tapeworm was the reason why he assassinated the Prime Minister, wouldn't you have expected him to have mentioned it on this very first occasion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think in retrospect, had I specifically asked him, he would have gone into great detail about the tapeworm, but I didn't ask him.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected him to have mentioned it himself?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Because a lot depended on how the conversation was led, and I was interested in the political side, to find out whether he had a political motive, whether this man was a criminal or an insane person.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ask him why he assassinated the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And what did he say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He said because the Prime Minister was against (witness refers to his notes) the Commonwealth, against the English way of life, because he was a foreigner, because he was in league with the Portuguese Government, because he was against the ideal of a Cape-to- Cairo union, and, somehow, also because he had a mother who was of the royal family, of royal birth. Somehow this was also intruded as a reason for his killing the Prime Minister, and I couldn't see the relevance of that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: So do you agree that the accused only gave political reasons for killing the Prime Minister?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: He gave political reasons at that time. And also, I don't know whether you would include this being a member of an overseas royal family as being a reason - if that is political, then he included that also. And also if you include the delusion of his being subjected to torture, mental torture, in a Lisbon hospital for 14 years, if that is regarded as political, then he gave that as a reason too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that schizophrenia of hebephrenic type is one of the diseases which leads to rapid disintegration? Which is that - hebephrenia? Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, it is said to lead to rapid deterioration of personality, and, if you recall, just now I said how surprised I was that they had made that diagnosis. But not all that surprised, because we know that originally these categories which Kraepelin and others put forward for schizophrenia merge with one another in the course of a man's life. A man can start off as a paranoid schizophrenia and end up as a hebephrenic schizophrenia - that kind of thing. Or he may schizophrenia start off as a catatonic and end up as a hebephrenic schizophrenia.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If the accused had been suffering from schizophrenia for 20 years, wouldn't you have expected him to have been permanently detained in a mental hospital by now?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Well, that was one of the reasons why I make the diagnosis of paraphrenia, in fact, and I would not necessarily have expected him to have been detained in a mental hospital. There are plenty of authorities I can't lay my finger on now which point out that a man can amble around the world for 20 or 30 years and spend a short space of time, every couple of years, in a mental hospital, and yet have this chronic incapacitating mental disease, schizophrenia, and yet be liable to erupt, as this man unexpectedly did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He could be a periodic type, not so?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: This is one kind of schizophrenia which many people don't believe in.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think the Attorney-General is suggesting a variety of schizophrenia which with lucida intervalla and then a bit of schizophrenia and then a lucidum intervallum again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say not many people believe in that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think many people would prefer to call those a variety of atypic or affective psychosis, but for someone, as one understands this man, to have been for 30 years possessed with this idea that he has got a giant tapeworm inside him, chronic delusional insanity, I would have thought this was entirely out of keeping with that kind of diagnosis.

JUDGE BEYERS: With this sort of come-and-go business?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. With relatively completely lucid intervals in between. I would think that in between, if one probes, one would find disease, ASSESSOR: Do you base that only on the tapeworm delusion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, I regard that as a very important delusion, hypochondriacal delusion, particularly if it is established that it has been in existence throughout this man's mental hospital life.

ASSESSOR: Assuming that it has, that alone, you feel, would destroy the idea that it was a periodic form?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. Because I would have thought that somebody who has an episodic illness would bring out fresh delusions, not the same continuous delusion.

JUDGE BEYERS: Even at times when he is in the valleys, when it is not active, the sick, delusional material is still lying at the bottom of the valley, because when he gets up to the rise in the graph again the same thing comes out again - that is what you are trying to say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: If it was periodic, it would be a tapeworm now, and in a few months' time it would be a lion?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes, quite.

JUDGE BEYERS: And then again?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: A tiger.

JUDGE BEYERS: Or a tiger. That is what you are trying to say?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Yes. With complete normality in between.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If there is evidence that the accused was diagnosed as a schizophrenic years ago, and there is evidence that over the last few years he has travelled widely and that he could take care of himself, isn't that strongly suggestive of recovery?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Of recovery?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not in itself, no.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: It is the level of life at which this man maintains himself that would have to be taken into account. If he was living as a bum, moving around the world as a locksmith here, as a woodcutter in Sweden and Canada, as a stevedore in another country - a man of his intelligence - I would have thought this is consistent with many schizophrenics that one comes across, and who spend a great deal of their time in mental hospitals too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected the accused to have mentioned to you on the 6th September that he killed the Prime Minister because of this tapeworm?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not necessarily. He might not have thought I would believe it at that stage.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Dr. Kossew found that the accused was not confused at 2.50 p.m. What would you say about that?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Not confused?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Not confused at 2.50 p.m. on 6th September?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: Sorry - what relation has this to the assassination? When was the assassination supposed to have been done?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: The 6th of September?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: At what time?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Between 2.14 and 2.15?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: So just after the assassination he wasn't confused?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes. Twenty-five minutes after the assassination Dr. Kossew found that he was not confused. I would infer from that that he could not be suffering from concussion at that time. But how do you relate it to your finding that his reasoning was not impaired?

DR. SAKINOFSKY: I think here we are in semantic jungles. The term "confused" to the lay person means somebody who is muddled. But to a doctor it means someone whose consciousness is clouded, who is disorientated in time and place or person and whose attention wanders due to a clouding of consciousness of organic kind. I assume that Dr. Kossew used the medical usage of the word confused.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The Attorney-General and the Court made a good attempt to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony with obvious questions such as why Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm in their first meeting. Although Dr. Sakinofsky's response seems adequate, it does not explain why Tsafendas mentioned all these other things like the Cape to Cairo union, the Commonwealth etc. as reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd, but never repeated these reasons to anyone else, not the police nor the medics nor lawyers who examined him. With Dr. Cooper, Tsafendas gave "frustration" as his motive, without mentioning the reasons he gave to Dr. Sakinofsky. However, he gave the police clear and straightforward reasons. What he told them is compatible with the evidence gathered by the police and the author; what he told Dr. Sakinofsky is incompatible with both.

Again, the South African police were in possession of several documents, including statements by people which contradicted Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis. The report from Grafton State Hospital was also in the possession of the police and could have also been used to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis. It is highly likely that the police were also in possession of the report from the hospital in Beira where Tsafendas was diagnosed as a schizophrenic who believed he was Saint Peter. None of all this evidence was used to challenge given testimony, thus the author is not in a position to know if the evidence was given to the Attorney-General.

What is striking is the effort made by the Attorney-General to challenge Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis, when his own two State-appointed experts, Professor of Psychiatry van Wyk and clinical psychologist Erasmus had come to the same conclusion as Dr. Sakinofsky. To challenge Dr. Sakinofsky was tantamount to challenging his own two experts. If the Attorney-General had doubts or lacked confidence in his two experts or if he believed that Tsafendas may not have been schizophrenic, why did he not appoint more psychiatrists and psychologists to examine him?

CONCLUSION

Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis of Tsafendas as schizophrenic was inevitable based on the evidence available to him. Although he admitted in correspondence with the author that "in psychiatry, after one has interviewed a patient, it is best practice to seek collateral information from family, friends, and medical records," he was not in possession of any information concerning Tsafendas from any of his friends or family. Rightly and professionally, he had contacted some of the hospitals where Tsafendas was admitted in order to seek additional information about him.

Although the defence was in possession of additional medical records for Tsafendas, these were not given to the doctor, probably because they contained information incompatible with that available to the doctor. Withheld or unavailable evidence included the fact that Tsafendas had another delusion in the 1940s, hearing voices from the radiators, while there is also no mention about Tsafendas's delusional idea two months before the assassination that people were murdered in his house. Very importantly, the fact that he had faked mental illness while in an American hospital and had been caught at it is also not mentioned.

The Attorney-General should have been in possession of documentation, from witnesses' statements to medical reports and statements from various organizations around the world to effectively challenge this testimony, but as with other testimonies, this did not happen, although the Attorney-General and the Court tried harder than before to launch a challenge.

The ever-present tapeworm makes its appearance here too and again Tsafendas repeats what he told Dr. Cooper. Everything that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky was a lie, most of them inspired by real events that had taken place in his life, like the wooden box similar to a grafonola which the Portuguese used to deliver electric shocks while he was imprisoned in Portugal. Dr. Sakinofsky was not in position to know that these were lies, but the State should have been. The police and the Commission had collected at least two hundred statements from people who knew Tsafendas.

Several extracts from Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony were read word by word, individually, to about sixty people who knew Tsafendas, including nine who knew him very well. None of them believes that Tsafendas meant what he said. Nor did he mention to them any of the topics he gave to Dr. Sakinofsky. Their position is supported by about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission at the time and none of them mentioned anything like this. Nine of those witnesses who were interviewed by the author were extremely close to Tsafendas and although he confided to them about many things, he never once mentioned the Cape to Cairo union or expressed an interest in the Commonwealth or mentioned any of the things he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

In addition, Tsafendas told several people before the assassination and police and others after the assassination, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator, but he never said this to Dr. Sakinofsky. At the same time, he never mentioned to other people what he said to Dr. Sakinofsky. If Tsafendas really believed what he told Dr. Sakinofsky, especially his political ideas, he would surely have mentioned them to someone else. Why would Tsafendas talk about the same political ideas to more than a hundred people, to the South African police and to the Portuguese police, but say something completely different to Dr. Sakinofsky? Obviously, because he was lying to him in an attempt to present himself as “deluded” and mad.

According to Professor Tuviah Zabow, “if Tsafendas was really schizophrenic, his condition should have deteriorated after what he went through in prison, especially without receiving medical treatment.”⁵³⁶³ However, to the end Tsafendas maintained to everyone he met that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people and he hoped that his death would bring a change a policy or would be a stepping stone towards the fall of apartheid. He also maintained until his death the political ideas he held before the assassination and had expressed to tens of people, namely being a Communist, anti-fascist, anti-colonialist and supporter of the independence of Mozambique. Tsafendas never changed his political ideas. He never told anyone what he told Dr. Sakinofsky.

A lot of Tsafendas's claims could very easily been proven to be lies by looking at the evidence gathered by the police. The most obvious example is that Tsafendas told Dr. Sakinofsky he did not remember anything about Dr. Verwoerd's killing and felt that he was hypnotised although he had described it in perfect detail twice to the police while he was in custody. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas was able to describe the assassination in detail.

Dr. Sakinofsky's diagnosis is entirely wrong, but this is hardly his fault. Like Dr. Cooper and the other psychiatrists he was required to evaluate Tsafendas's condition based on what Tsafendas said and on some of his medical records which told half the truth. Dr. Sakinofsky was the only one of those who examined Tsafendas who tried to get additional information about him. Advocate Cooper did an exceptionally good job for his side, as he had done with Dr. Cooper, by handling the Grafton State Hospital report in a carefully selective way. Tsafendas remembered very fondly Dr. Sakinofsky until he died, always speaking highly of him and described him as a “very kind, good and intelligent boy.”⁵³⁶⁴

⁵³⁶³ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

⁵³⁶⁴ Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 10: GILLIAN CLAIRE LIEBERMAN

INTRODUCTION

Gillian Lieberman was also questioned by the police on October 6.⁵³⁶⁵ She was the last witness to testify this day as the court then adjourned until the next day.

GILLIAN LIEBERMAN'S TESTIMONY⁵³⁶⁶

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Miss Lieberman, what is your occupation?

LIEBERMAN: I am Personnel Secretary.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Which Company?

LIEBERMAN: The Marine Diamond Corporation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you seen the accused before?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did you see him?

LIEBERMAN: I saw him approximately the first time in February, 1966 employed as...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And was he employment then?

LIEBERMAN: He was a pump operator on a diamond barge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Owned by your Company?

LIEBERMAN: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During which period was he employed as a pump operator?

LIEBERMAN: From the 3rd of February, 1966, and he resigned of his own accord on the 7th of April, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he earn per month during this period?

⁵³⁶⁵ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁶⁶ Gillian Claire Liebermann's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

LIEBERMAN: He earned R180 nett.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During the period of employment with The Marine Diamond Corporation, did you talk to him at any stage?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the nature of your conversation?

LIEBERMAN: I spoke to him on a number of occasions. The first time he came to me, he came to my office, he had a query, and he wished to go and see a doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For what reason?

LIEBERMAN: He complained that he had something wrong with his ears and nose, with his head, and I referred him to our Company doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he on the occasions that you spoke to him, did he have any grievance, any complaints?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, he did have a number of complaints.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Will you tell us some of them?

LIEBERMAN: He complained about the conditions of employment on our diamond barges. He complained about the type of person we employed on our diamond barge.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was his complaint about then?

LIEBERMAN: Well, I am not quite sure. He complained about the type of person. I never quite understood what he referred to when he meant "type of person", he did not have a tolerance towards the type of superintendent we employed, his superiors, he did not seem to like our superiors.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And as regard white people what was his attitude?

LIEBERMAN: He was rather intolerant towards them. When I refer to white people, the type of white people we employed, that was his intolerance, not to white people as a whole.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How was he dressed?

LIEBERMAN: Rather sloppily dressed.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was the impression you formed of him, overall?

LIEBERMAN: My overall impression was that he was rather untidy, sloppy. He seemed rather odd to me.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't he a very dissatisfied person?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, he seemed rather a dissatisfied person.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you tell him that you could not arrange separate facilities for them?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And what was his reaction to that?

LIEBERMAN: He accepted that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why did he resign? Who advised him to resign? Did you advise him?

LIEBERMAN: I did advise him, he had a number of complaints and his general dissatisfaction of the Company. I suggested that the best thing would be for him to resign and he agreed with me.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused speak to you about the political situation in South Africa?

LIEBERMAN: He wished to know my political affiliation and I told him that in my position as personnel secretary I was not in a position to discuss them.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you find the accused to be intelligent?

LIEBERMAN: Well, I did not find him over-intelligent or under-intelligent. He was of normal intelligence to me. I mean I did not see him that long to be able to assess his intelligence as such.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How long were you associated with him?

LIEBERMAN: He was employed with us, as I said, for roughly two months, and I met him on a number of occasions, probably this interview I had with him lasted from anything from ten minutes to half- an-hour.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Didn't you say this to the Police: "I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, I did.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And is that still your opinion?

LIEBERMAN: Yes, that is my opinion.

COMMENTS ON LIEBERMAN'S TESTIMONY AND TO HER CROSS-EXAMINATION

Lieberman does not tell us much about Tsafendas apart from the fact that he was not happy with working conditions, that he was "rather untidy, sloppy" and he seemed "odd" to her. She had only spoken to him on "a number of occasions" and was not in contact with him every day like the company's field workers. Lieberman had earlier testified to the police about Tsafendas's dirty clothes. However, since his was a labouring job, dirty clothes would seem normal. He could hardly have work a business suit for work. All those who knew Tsafendas socially, as we have seen earlier, testified that he was always dressed and that wore dirty clothes only at work. For more about the way Tsafendas was dressed look earlier at Merle Daniels's testimony.

Lieberman also testified that Tsafendas seemed "odd" to her, but did not elaborate further and neither the Attorney-General nor the Court asked what she meant by that. Leaving the word hanging could give the impression that Tsafendas was a mentally peculiar. However, what Lieberman said in her statement to the police was: "I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well-travelled etc., I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing."⁵³⁶⁷

According to her statement to the police, Lieberman had found Tsafendas strange because of how he dressed and his physical appearance, not for what he did or said. On the contrary, she had stated, and this was heard in the court only because of the cross-examination, that she had found Tsafendas to be "intelligent" and "able to reason in conversation." Lieberman was not the first one to comment on Tsafendas "reasoning power."

⁵³⁶⁷ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine or ten weeks at Marine Diamond Corporation, the same company as Lieberman, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁵³⁶⁸

Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966 and told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”⁵³⁶⁹

Lieberman had also told the police that she got the impression that Tsafendas did “not agree with authority (Governmental or other)” but she did not repeat this statement in court and the Attorney-General did not mention it.

Lieberman was obviously chosen to testify that Tsafendas was an “odd” and “dissatisfied” person who often complained. The defence seemed to turn a blind eye to the fact that she had testified to the police about Tsafendas’s intelligence and reasoning powers, probably because it was proving difficult to find suitable witnesses to support the defence line. If the defence wanted to bring forward witnesses who worked with Tsafendas and knew him reasonably well and were ready to talk about him, they would have called field workers and not an office worker who had limited contact with him. Tsafendas had worked in Marine Diamond Corporation for three months and had co-workers who saw him every day. Three of these workers had already testified to the police.

One of them was Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden, senior security officer of the company’s Colpontoon diamond boat. He testified to the police that:

“We were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing, he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea. Tsafendas was employed as a pump, or engineer, operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof. I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal.”⁵³⁷⁰

⁵³⁶⁸ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁶⁹ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵³⁷⁰ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Another one was Ralph Lighton who had testified on September 17 that having worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks, he understood that he was “lazy and inefficient,” “used to mix with the Coloureds rather than with the Europeans,” “said that the climbing of the ladders were too much for him. I never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers, but despite his former career in the Merchant Marine, was unsuitable for our work.”⁵³⁷¹ Hulse, who also worked for the company at this time, testified to the police on September 28 that Tsafendas “informed him that he left Marine Diamond as the work was too hard for an old man like him.” He also said that Tsafendas “did not appear to be disturbed at any stage.”⁵³⁷²

These three witnesses knew Tsafendas better than Lieberman and would have been able to testify to his work skills and ethics. Naturally the defence did not choose them since what they had told the police did not suit the defence line. Instead, Lieberman was brought forward (despite her remark that Tsafendas was able to reason in a conversation and was intelligent), simply because she also testified that he wore dirty clothes, was dissatisfied and a “strange person.” This demonstrates the desperation of the defence to find suitable witnesses to support their line. On the other hand, these three statements could have been useful to the State to challenge the defence, but none of them was used.

⁵³⁷¹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁷² Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

DAY 3: 19 OCTOBER 1966

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 11: REYNER JOHANNES VAN ZYL

REYNER VAN ZYL'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Reyner Johannes van Zyl, a clinical psychologist practising at Grand Parade Centre, Castle Street, Cape Town, is registered with the South African Medical and Dental Council as a psychologist. He holds a B.A. degree and a Master's in Psychology. He secured the Master's Degree at the University of Pretoria in 1959 and then worked at the Tara Neuro-psychiatric Hospital in Johannesburg as an intern in clinical psychology for eighteen months. For approximately nine months he worked at the Constantia Reformatory as a psychologist and then was employed at Groote Schuur Hospital in the same capacity. He worked at Groote Schuur full-time for two years and for the last three years part-time. At the request of defence counsel David Bloomberg, he examined Tsafendas.

REYNER VAN ZYL'S TESTIMONY⁵³⁷³

VAN ZYL'S EXAMINATION, HIS TESTS AND TSAFENDAS'S IQ

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On what day did you examine the accused?

VAN ZYL: I examined the accused on the 13th October, 1966.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: For how many hours?

VAN ZYL: For three and a half hours.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it one stretch or did you have a break?

VAN ZYL: There was a break in between.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So the first session of the interview lasted how long?

VAN ZYL: For two hours.

⁵³⁷³ Reyner van Zyl's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And the second for one and a half hours?

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you drawn up a report?

VAN ZYL: I have done so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of your tests and your findings and the conclusion you have come to?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you that report before you?

VAN ZYL: I have.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And there are photostatic copies available which you can hand in to the Court for the Court's convenience. This document which you will read out, adhere to and hand in will be R.S.C.D. would you start at the first paragraph?

VAN ZYL: I interviewed and tested Mr. Demitrio Tsafendas on the 13th October, 1966, for two hours in the morning and 1 1/2 hours in the afternoon.

(Witness reads R.S.C.D). The following psychological tests were used:

- The new South African standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Adult Intelligence Test.
- The Thematic Apperception Personality Test.
- The Rorschach Personality Test.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Before we go any further, would you explain to his Lordship and the gentlemen assessors with him what is the new South African standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Adult Intelligence Test?

VAN ZYL: It is an intelligence test consisting of ten sub-tests, and testing different aspects of intelligence. It is generally used for White South Africans and can test in the range from an I.Q. of 20 - which would be an idiot - to an I.Q. of plus-minus 190 - which is out and out a genius.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say the average White adult?

VAN ZYL: That is correct,

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would the standard test by this test be higher than for, say, an average Coloured adult?

VAN ZYL: If you are going to test a Coloured adult on this test, it is very likely that he will score lower than a White man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why?

VAN ZYL: Because it is standardized for White people and there are separate tests for Coloureds.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you deal with the sub-test - the sub-sections of the test. There were ten in number?

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just give us the ten?

VAN ZYL: The sub-tests were: Information; Comprehension; Arithmetic; Digit Span; Similarities; Picture Completion; Object Assembly; Block design; Digit symbol substitution; and Picture arrangement.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: May I just pause for a moment. How did the accused react to these tests?

VAN ZYL: He was very co-operative and calm and at ease in the testing situation.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he interested in what you were asking him, or did he appear to be interested in what you were asking him?

VAN ZYL: He did not particularly appear to be interested but he responded quite well.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: First of all, as to the Information sub-section, what was his score?

VAN ZYL: 11.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of that?

VAN ZYL: The average score is 10, and he scored 11.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was it a wide range of information that you tested him on?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Comprehension, what was his score?

VAN ZYL: 14.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of that?

VAN ZYL: Again the average is 10, which means that it is a very high score.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Arithmetic, what was the result of that?

VAN ZYL: Nine.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your comment there?

VAN ZYL: That it is somewhat below average

MR. BAKER: Is the average ten throughout?

VAN ZYL: Throughout.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Digit Span?

VAN ZYL: 12.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you explain to the Court what is meant by Digit Span?

VAN ZYL: You give the subject some digits to repeat. The easier ones he would have to repeat two or three digits immediately after you had said it, and then more difficult, it goes up to nine digits.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So again, what is your comment on the figure 12.5?

VAN ZYL: It is again better than average and good.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Similarities, the result was?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, I again don't wish to cut you short, but there does not appear to be any attack upon the fact that this man is of high intelligence. So couldn't we go through this, perhaps, a little less in detail?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Certainly, M'Lord.

JUDGE BEYERS: I did not understand there to be any question of his having more than an adequate I.Q.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There is just one aspect, that this test also ties up with his present mental JUDGE BEYERS: I don't want to put you off.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That is why I think it is necessary to have a scatter of it. The important feature is schizophrenia; and to have a scatter of it.

(Cont.): Just go on now. What did you find in Similarities?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Picture Completion?

VAN ZYL: 13.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Object Assembly?

VAN ZYL: 10.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Block design?

VAN ZYL: 10.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Digit Symbol substitution?

VAN ZYL: 8.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Picture arrangement?

VAN ZYL: 15.5.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you then go on from that point to read your report further?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading R.S.C.D). "His full I.Q. tests at 113.5. His verbal I.Q. tests at 125.00."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you test him for his standard of English?

VAN ZYL: As part of the verbal I.Q. test?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes?

VAN ZYL: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was your finding?

VAN ZYL: That it was very good.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Compared to, say, Matric, or Standard VIII or university; could you give is some idea?

VAN ZYL: I'd say Matric level.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you proceed then with your report?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading R.S.C.D). “The latter is a separate test of the Weschsler Bellevue Test and is commonly used to give a rough indication of the individual’s intelligence. The discrepancy between the full-scale I.Q. and the verbal I.Q. is therefore not important. As can be noted from the above sub-sections, there is a marked scatter in scores which can not only be contributed to higher aptitude on these sub-sections.

As a matter of fact, his verbal I.Q. as compared to his nonverbal I.Q. is 111 against 114, which is not a significant difference. These are the only two broad categories of aptitudes in this test. The scatter is therefore of great significance. This very wide scatter is indicative of gross personality disturbance and some kind of interference of the smooth functioning of the intellect of the individual. His particular pattern of scatter is not 100 per cent typical of any particular type of psychological illness. It is known that an atypical pattern does not necessarily exclude any diagnosis.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In administering the test, what did you find, what impression did you form?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “I very strongly got the impression that this man has great difficulty in abstract thinking and in expressing himself. The latter I did not think was due to language difficulty because of his high verbal intelligence. My impression was that his original I.Q. was + 125 but that this had deteriorated because of some interfering illness. I gathered from Mr. Tsafendas that this test was also done by the Clinical Psychologist representing the State but I do not think that the learning which took place by repeating the test can invalidate or change the basic pattern significantly.”

DR. PETER LAMBLEY REGARDING VAN ZYL'S IQ TESTS

Dr. Peter Lambley, a British psychologist and author of the acclaimed The Psychology of Apartheid, had worked in the 1970s in South Africa and for some time was colleague of both Dr. Cooper and Mr. van Zyl. The following is an extract from his book about van Zyl’s test:

“The evidence from the IQ testing indicated a temporal impairment - shown by only two low scores out of ten (of $z=85$) - rather than a major impairment of functioning. Truly hebephrenic schizophrenics show the reverse: impairment on all but one or two tests. Tsafendas’s scores showed him to be withdrawn and cut off - interpreted in court as schizophrenia - but not demented in anything like the degree claimed. Anyone, in fact any normal-neurotic person in the same frightful and shocking situation, would show the same kind of fall-off in performance. If you took Tsafendas's IQ test results (ten sub-tests) and asked a clinician to evaluate them blind - that is, without knowing who he was - they would say, and I quote: 'Highly intelligent, creative adult male with some personality problems.' I did, in fact, take Tsafendas's results and gave them to other clinicians to rate blind. No one said he was schizophrenic or even severely disturbed. They noted that in some instances, his sub-test results showed an extremely high level of intellectual functioning."⁵³⁷⁴

TSAFENDAS, A "WITHDRAWN AND ISOLATED INDIVIDUAL" WITH "LACK OF HUMAN REACTION"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now you came to the Thematic Apperception Test?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you shortly explain to the Court what the Thematic Apperception Test is, or as you call it, the T.A.T.?

VAN ZYL: It is a test consisting of a series of 20 pictures in which you ask the patient to tell you a story about each one. It represents everyday life, human situations. You ask him what is happening in the test, how he feels, what thoughts are concerned and the possible outcome of the story. And then you analyse that according to a specific training or pattern.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From this test, what became clear?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D) "From this test it is clear to me that the usual type of psychodynamic pattern which is present in neurotic individuals is absent in Mr. Tsafendas's record. According to the test, it is evident that there is virtually nothing in the way of meaningful interpersonal contact."

JUDGE BEYERS: "Meaningful interpersonal contact." Could you tell me what that is?

VAN ZYL: The ability to relate warmly with feeling towards a fellow human being.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Give us an example?

VAN ZYL: For example, let's assume you tell somebody that your mother has just died, and he says to you: "So, she has just died" - there is no warmth in the reply.

⁵³⁷⁴ Lambley, 1980: 272-273.

JUDGE BEYERS: A lack of human reaction?

VAN ZYL: Lack.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did he show?

VAN ZYL: (Witness continues reading from R.S.C.D). "Also he shows a marked flatness and absence of feeling except for a strong statement about depression which could not be followed through at the emotional level. He also found it very difficult to project himself and identify with the test stimuli which is indicative of his being a withdrawn and isolated individual. All his test responses were dull and without drive to complete or follow them through. This is indicative of a lack of volition and an element of depression. His whole approach to the test was vague and unsure and he found it very difficult to think constructively and in accordance with his measured I.Q. about the test stimuli. It was quite an effort for me to get him to complete his responses according to my instructions. Without fail, I had to ask him about emotions concerned. On this inquiry, he never gave me a satisfactory answer."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In view of his difficulty to make reasonable and meaningful contact, what diagnosis did you make?

VAN ZYL: That I would say is a schizophrenic symptom, but of course, the diagnosis does not rest only on this one symptom.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you give us your conclusion then at the top of page 4?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.'D'). "In view of this individual's difficulty to make reasonable and meaningful contact with the outside world and his disorder of intelligence, emotions and volition, I am making the diagnosis of schizophrenia on this test."

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS'S "LACK OF HUMAN REACTION"

According to van Zyl, Tsafendas showed a "lack of human reaction" to the tests he carried on him and there was "no warmth" in his reply. Examples of compassionate actions in Tsafendas's past would give the mistake to this diagnosis. Tsafendas cried like a baby in front of his relatives upon reading in a letter that Elena, Father Nikola Banovic's twelve-year old daughter, had drowned in Turkey. He lost his appetite and ate almost nothing for several days.⁵³⁷⁵ While he was in custody for the assassination, he begged the police to let him keep her photograph, but the police took it and he never saw it again. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas would weep when talking about the drowned girl.⁵³⁷⁶

As to an absence of feeling, Tsafendas is on record as deeply mourning his father and birth mother, constantly writing to family and friends, lending money and giving handouts to poor people. He was devastated when he learned that his step-mother was not his real mother and that his real mother had died.⁵³⁷⁷ Upon returning to Mozambique after twelve years in exile, Tsafendas desperately sought for information about his mother and for the location of her grave.⁵³⁷⁸ Later, when he was back in Pretoria, the first thing he did was to visit his father's grave. For nine months until he left, he would visit it at least once a week, tidying it, leaving flowers and lighting a candle. He often complained to his step-mother that she was not looking after the grave site properly.⁵³⁷⁹

Furthermore, Tsafendas always carried photographs of his family in his wallet and he sent them letters with pictures and postcards from wherever he travelled.⁵³⁸⁰ He also sent postcards to his close friends and thank you cards to those who had helped him, like Aris Tsafantakis' parents in Crete⁵³⁸¹ and Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul.⁵³⁸² He lent money to his flatmate John Bornman and refused to take the repayment,⁵³⁸³ he gave money to poor Whites in Durban,⁵³⁸⁴ he defended two Black South African workers who were cheated by his colleague Nick Vergos⁵³⁸⁵ and he helped a poor Indian man to build a room in his house.⁵³⁸⁶

The fact that Tsafendas did not show much interest in van Zyl's tests had nothing to ⁵³⁷⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵³⁷⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵³⁷⁷ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁵³⁷⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵³⁷⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

⁵³⁸⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵³⁸¹ Aris Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 13 April 2016.

⁵³⁸² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵³⁸³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵³⁸⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.'

⁵³⁸⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 5 August 2011; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁵³⁸⁶ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal intergiew with the author, 30 January 2015.

do with his intellect or emotions. Tsafendas twice clearly told the police that he did not care about what would happen to him and he expected to be executed. Therefore, why would he care about IQ or Digital Symbol Substitution tests? What is more, Tsafendas had already done exactly the same tests when he was examined by Erasmus two weeks previously, which could have been another reason for him to not have bothered going through exactly the same things again.

Finally, by the time Tsafendas took these tests, he must have known that he was going to be found insane, since he had already been examined by five psychiatrists. Being experienced with psychiatrists and aware that the authorities wanted him declared insane, why would he bother with yet more tests, which, some thirty years later, he characterised as “childish stuff”?⁵³⁸⁷

TSAFENDAS BEING A “WITHDRAWN AND ISOLATED INDIVIDUAL”

Van Zyl also characterised Tsafendas as a “withdrawn and isolated individual,” which he described as a symptom of schizophrenia. Many witnesses testified to the contrary, Tsafendas was sociable, friendly and open, since he was a child. The most telling evidence that Tsafendas was neither withdrawn nor isolated comes from the following two incidents:

Guenther Haafe, doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Eight years later, after the assassination, he still remembered the jovial greeting which Tsafendas gave him every morning and said about him: “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out; this man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.” Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s boss at that job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman ... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”⁵³⁸⁸

⁵³⁸⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵³⁸⁸ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man.’

While in Beira in 1964, Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, probably from Naples, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. Everyone thought he was about to deliver a speech. He did indeed deliver a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well, but then, in a ringing baritone, he launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks among the guests were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and rhythmically pounding the table with their fists or spoons. When he finished he received huge applause and Vittorio and some of his friends called for another song. Tsafendas obliged with a second Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.⁵³⁸⁹

Furthermore:

- William Mare Volbrecht, Tsafendas's school mate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that he was "never a loner and freely mingled with us."⁵³⁹⁰ His half-sister, Katerina Pnema,⁵³⁹¹ Mary Eendracht his first cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques,⁵³⁹² and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, confirmed Volbrecht's statement and said Tsafendas was also very talkative since he was a child.⁵³⁹³
- Johannes Aurets, Tsafendas's supervisor at the South African Railways, told the police Tsafendas "was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature."⁵³⁹⁴
- An unnamed "respected member of the Press gallery" in the House of Assembly "who knew Tsafendas well" spoke to Rene MacColl, of the Daily Express, about Tsafendas. He said that "far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn't have been a less grey or ⁵³⁸⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵³⁹⁰ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

⁵³⁹¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵³⁹² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵³⁹³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵³⁹⁴ Johannes Jaonus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

faceless figure.”⁵³⁹⁵

- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁵³⁹⁶
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas “spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type.”⁵³⁹⁷
- Hulse, who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said “Tsafendas was very talkative.”⁵³⁹⁸
- Colleagues at Durban Magistrate's Court described him as the “chatty Greek.”⁵³⁹⁹
- Ian Boswell, a clerk at the Department of Labour, testified that Tsafendas was “over-talkative.”⁵⁴⁰⁰
- Pieter Geldenhuys, also of the Department of Labour, testified that “he was very talkative.”⁵⁴⁰¹
- Owen Smorenberg, who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that “Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”⁵⁴⁰²
- Albert Vercueil, Tsafendas's boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months found him to be a “very friendly, social and talkative person.”⁵⁴⁰³
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden, who worked alongside Tsafendas for about three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not

⁵³⁹⁵ Daily Express, 9 September 1966: 2, ‘Was it murder incorporated?’

⁵³⁹⁶ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

⁵³⁹⁷ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵³⁹⁸ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

⁵³⁹⁹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Algumas versoes sobre a vida de Tsafendas.’

⁵⁴⁰⁰ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁵⁴⁰¹ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁵⁴⁰² Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁰³ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

aloof.”⁵⁴⁰⁴

- Jacobus Bornman, Tsafendas's flatmate for two months, characterise him as “a friendly and plausible person.”⁵⁴⁰⁵
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁵⁴⁰⁶
- Reginald Maile, guard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”⁵⁴⁰⁷
- Neville Judson, who worked with him for two months, testified to the police that Tsafendas had “a very friendly way of talking.”⁵⁴⁰⁸ He later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”⁵⁴⁰⁹
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas's employer for two months, also found him to be “overly talkative and sociable.”⁵⁴¹⁰
- Jose Lopez Baltazar, a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of whites, he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”⁵⁴¹¹
- Panagiotis Peroglou and his wife Pamela Abrahams, who knew him for about a year, testified to the police but their statements have gone missing. In a personal interview, however, they characterised him as being “very talkative and friendly.”⁵⁴¹²
- Peter Pappas, whose café in Durban Tsafendas often visited, characterised him as ⁵⁴⁰⁴ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴⁰⁵ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴⁰⁶ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁰⁷ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁴⁰⁸ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁴⁰⁹ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁵⁴¹⁰ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁵⁴¹¹ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁴¹² Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

“pleasant.” He also stated that Tsafendas “was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents.”⁵⁴¹³

In addition to the witnesses named above, van Zyl’s diagnosis of Tsafendas as withdrawn and isolated is rebutted by the forty-four witnesses interviewed by the author, who saw him as friendly, sociable and talkative. Their individual testimonies will not be listed for reasons of space, but the author will note two of them as representative of the general opinion. Father Nikola Banovic described Tsafendas as “one of the most sociable persons I ever met. He would always go and introduce himself to people he did not know in the church. He was not shy at all to speak to someone.”⁵⁴¹⁴ Katerina Pnema also disagreed with van Zyl’s comment, repeating to the author that her half-brother “could not keep his mouth shut for anything.”⁵⁴¹⁵

Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Dimitris a withdrawn and isolated individual? You are making me laugh! He was the most outspoken and sociable person I ever met. He will speak to everyone, he was not shy at all. Some people when they see someone in the street they know and they can’t be bothered talking to him, they will pretend they have not seen him. Dimitris was the opposite; even if he saw someone who was far, he will shout to him to stop and talk to him.”⁵⁴¹⁶

THE RORSCHACH PERSONALITY TEST

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Then you did the Rorschach Personality Test?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Court knows, but I think for the record would you just shortly explain to the Court what the Rorschach Personality Test is?

JUDGE BEYERS: This part of the Court does not know.

VAN ZYL: It is a series of ten standardized ink blots which is shown the patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: Modern paintings?

⁵⁴¹³ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁵⁴¹⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁴¹⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁴¹⁶ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

VAN ZYL: Almost, which you show the patient and then he responds to it. You know, when you ask him what it looks like or what it reminds him of, or what it could possibly represent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: On the Rorschach Test, Tsafendas showed?

VAN ZYL: On the Rorschach Test Mr. Tsafendas showed some typical signs of schizophrenia. They were the following: Arbitrary variation in form accuracy with decrease in F +.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is F + ?

VAN ZYL: It is an inability to see something in the ink blot which could be equated reasonably accurately with something commonly known to all of us.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean if most of us sitting here saw that ink blot we'd see some resemblance to some ordinary object which we know, and he failed to do so?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Proceed further?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D), W responses of poor quality.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What are W responses?

VAN ZYL: That is, if the patient only uses the whole of the ink blot and not part of the ink blot, but the response that he gives is of poor quality again in resembling something reasonably well-known.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the next observation?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). Bizarre and unusual detail.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by "Bizarre and unusual detail"?

VAN ZYL: May I give you an example?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Certainly, give the Court an example?

VAN ZYL: One of the ink blots that I showed him, he said: "I see a leg, but there has been a considerable amount of atrophy. It may be a rat's leg or a rabbit's leg, but I am not quite sure what species it belongs to, but there has been a considerable amount of atrophy," so really, a jumbled lot of nonsense.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The next observation?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). F C virtually absent. Which means that he cannot give form to colour, and in psychodynamic terms it means he is not able to control his feelings adequately.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: As regards Colour naming?

VAN ZYL: Colour naming is of the same order as F C. It is related to that. For instance, you show him a red ink blot, and then he'd say this is just red. Whereas usually a person says: "It is a red butterfly or a red dragon" or whatever the case may be.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Blocking?

VAN ZYL: Blocking is the inability

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you find?

VAN ZYL: That he did not answer to one of the cards. He could find nothing in it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So that is described as "blocking"?

VAN ZYL: That is blocking, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: Original responses of poor form level. For example, he said that he saw the face of a man in a position that I have never come across before on the ink blot. It was part of the small detail of the blot and he showed me eyes where I couldn't possibly see eyes, and a nose and a mouth which were just not there.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now we come to Undifferentiated shading.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You found that?

VAN ZYL: Yes, I found that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by Undifferentiated shading?

VAN ZYL: That is if the patient sees shading in a very vague and non-specific way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you find further?

VAN ZYL: Queer specifications (which is considered to be extremely important in the diagnosis of schizophrenia).

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What do you mean by Queer specifications?

VAN ZYL: For example, the patients would say that: “I see a peculiar shape which may be a bat, which may be a bird, but of course I cannot say which species of bird or which species of bat.” And then deriding his own responses as he goes along, saying that it is a very poor performance.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You say he derides his own response?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: Then Description, which is when the patient describes the ink blot in terms of its outline only, not saying that it is an island, or something like that, but “Here the line goes up, and there it goes down, and it goes in a circle”, so describing the outline of the ink blot without giving its real meaning,

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What else did you find?

VAN ZYL: The Perseveration, which is that he carried on in his mind with the same thought or the same response all the time on one ink blot, and he also carries it over to the second one, perhaps.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have given us these various findings. Would you continue with your report now?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D) “This in itself is probably meaningless to even a psychiatrist, but the interpretation of all this means very poor human contact, lack of self-control, emotional flatness, disturbance of intellect, and a general disintegration of the ego. From this I feel that the diagnosis of schizophrenia can safely be made.”

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL'S RORSCHACH PERSONALITY TEST ON TSAFENDAS

According to van Zyl's interpretation of the tests, Tsafendas had “very poor human contact,” a diagnosis which, as we have already seen, was diametrically opposed to the opinions of people who knew him. That Tsafendas derided his own efforts suggests he was simply not interested, but van Zyl concludes that a diagnosis of schizophrenia can safely be made.

However, van Zyl later admitted in a personal interview with the author that all the statements given to the police by people who knew Tsafendas, along with Tsafendas's own two statements found in the archives, portrayed a completely different man from the one he examined.

Furthermore, Dr. Peter Lambley, who had worked with van Zyl stated that he was inexperienced and not formally trained in the Rorschach test procedure. He wrote that:

“[Van Zyl] could not formally score an ink blot protocol, his grasp of psychotic signs was superficial, and he was unfamiliar with the research literature pertaining to Rorschach scores and schizophrenia, then, as now, still in its infancy. Examination of Tsafendas's responses and the interpretations given in court clearly showed that the testers were inexperienced. One clear example: Tsafendas saw a leg on one of the ink blot cards but was not sure if it was a rat's leg or a rabbit's. This very example was used in court to substantiate his schizophrenic diagnosis: ... such jumbled and nonsensical reactions are typical of schizophrenia which typically includes bizarre or unusual detail . . .

This statement comes out of a text book and the statement is true, but the example is not. It is not unusual to get this kind of response in intelligent adults; what the examiner was confusing in this instance was the confabulatory response category into which he thought Tsafendas's 'Leg' response fell, which it did not. This kind of loose and often inaccurate reflection marked the psychological analysis presented in court.”⁵⁴¹⁷

Van Zyl himself admitted to the author that he was inexperienced and not fully acquainted with the Rorschach literature, but he was better with the Thematic Apperception Test:

“I don't think, then and now in particular... I'm no great Rorschach expert, where the guys do a Ph.D. in Rorschach, and that's the only thing they pursue all throughout their careers. I'm nowhere in that league. But certainly the symptoms were there. I'm kind of averagely capable as far as the Rorschach is concerned. I'm more capable in other things.”

As For the Rorschach literature, van Zyl said:

“Well, you know, I'm fairly familiar. I've read books about it, and research articles and so on and I have a fair knowledge. But to say that I am totally familiar or unfamiliar, or that I was ever asked in court about research and records, it simply didn't happen.”⁵⁴¹⁸

Nevertheless, although van Zyl was inexperienced and not an expert on the Rorschach

⁵⁴¹⁷ Lambley, 1980: 239.

⁵⁴¹⁸ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

test, he was never challenged and his findings were simply accepted.

Finally, according to Professor Burke:

“Whether the interpretation was right or wrong, the Rorschach ink blot test was never a scientific tool, it was mainly a projective test, and, as in psychology, there are many approaches to things. So by saying it was incorrect, you could also say, ‘it was not the way I would have done it,’ so whether it was correct or incorrect doesn’t really matter. The fact is that those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation. You could have done it, come to me with the results, and I would have looked at the same results and I would have come up with a different conclusion, so whether it was done correctly or incorrectly, is neither here nor there. The test could, at most, say that there is a possibility of schizophrenia, at the very most, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis. There are people who would argue that you could, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis of schizophrenia based on that test, or on any test for that matter...

I still think that your best instrument for making a diagnosis like this is what the people around you say, and your assessment of the functioning of the person; that gives you the best idea. The psychological tests would confirm what you have picked up, so what you would always have with any kind of diagnostic assessment is, you would have your observations of the patient, the information you get from the people around, and your psychological tests, and then you pick up themes. If you pick up the same themes in those three areas, then you say, ‘this is the diagnosis.’ If it’s only in one of those areas, you can’t confirm the diagnosis until you’ve got some kind of confirmation from other areas, as well, so it’s a weak way of making a diagnosis.”⁵⁴¹⁹

VAN ZYL’S GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What were your observations?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “In talking to Mr. Tsafendas, I got the impression that he was vague in thinking and difficult to communicate with at a personal level. I felt that he was in a world of his own. In his talk, he was circumstantial and often went off the point. His thoughts were constantly blocking and he was very poor in abstract thinking such as when asking him to explain the meaning of the idiom – ‘A stitch in time saves nine.’ He said, by the way, that it is a labour-saving device. His emotions were flat and sometimes incongruous. He also grimaced and made rocking (stereotyped) movements with his head and had great difficulty in expressing himself. On both occasions when I visited him, he was lying on his bed presumably asleep or just doing nothing and was slow in his movements.

⁵⁴¹⁹ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

JUDGE BEYERS: Explain to me the use of the word “stereotyped” there, with the rocking movements. What does it mean? Was it a movement like any other movement or was it stereotyped to a certain condition? It can mean two things there. Do you mean every movement was like every other one?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

DC (Cont.): Now, your comment on the interview?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “My function and my reason for seeing Mr. Tsafendas was mainly to test him and not so much to interview him. I did, however, ask him about the tapeworm which he had told Dr. Cooper about. I communicated with Dr. Cooper very briefly with the consent of Mr. D. Bloomberg. Mr. Tsafendas jumped at the opportunity to tell me about this and came back to this topic every now and then throughout both interviews. He told me that he began suffering from this during 1936 and since then his whole existence had centred round the tapeworm. He has constantly got to eat to keep the tapeworm happy, otherwise it pricks him on certain nerve centres in his stomach or makes a noise which he can feel inside himself. The result of all this is that he had become withdrawn and lived only to eat and to sleep.

Apparently he had X-rays taken and consulted many people about his tapeworm. He had taken an interest in this to the extent that he knows about a machine which the Japanese invented to show up foreign bodies in the abdomen, stating that there is such a machine at the Queen Mother Maternity Hospital in Glasgow. According to him, the Americans have a similar invention. He also stated that the doctors only sent him to psychiatrists about this and that they had then given him shock treatment and not investigated his tapeworm condition any further. It appears as if this has been a long-standing delusion. He told me that he thought the tapeworm had a lot to do with his alleged attack on the late Dr. Verwoerd. This apparently has brought him into conflict with other people before. He was, however, very vague about it and could not explain the direct relationship in any other way than saying that it makes him impulsive. He also appeared to have no strong feelings about being in gaol or about his alleged attack on the late Dr. Verwoerd.”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now the discussion?

VAN ZYL: (Witness reads R.S.C.D). “From the above tests, observations and interview, it is quite clear to me that this man is suffering from schizophrenia. His schizophrenia to me is not as absolutely florid as one sometimes sees it in Mental Hospitals, but taken into account his high intelligence, this is not very surprising because often a schizophrenic can contain his illness to a certain extent by virtue of his intelligence, and they achieve much less than can be expected of them by virtue of their intellect. This, I think, is the case with Mr. Tsafendas.

COMMENTS ON VAN ZYL'S GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON TSAFENDAS

According to van Zyl, Tsafendas “has constantly got to eat to keep the tapeworm happy.” It is true that he ate a lot, but he never attributed it to the tapeworm. In addition, van Zyl claimed that Tsafendas “had become withdrawn and lived only to eat and to sleep.” This is perhaps the least accurate statement in van Zyl's diagnosis. Tsafendas:

- was twice suspected of distributing Communist propaganda while in Mozambique;
- had voluntarily joined the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War;
- had voluntarily taught English to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul and in Mozambique;
- had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and took part in several anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations in London;
- was arrested and imprisoned twice in Mozambique because he was “advertising in favour of Mozambique's independence”;
- was arrested and imprisoned twice in Portugal due to his political ideas and activities in Mozambique;
- was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power”;
- was exiled for twelve years from Mozambique due to his political ideas and activities;
- took visitors in South Africa to a township in Cape Town to show them the hardships of apartheid and convince them to not spend any money in the country because, he said, they would be contributing to apartheid's economy;
- was saving money to go and live in Cuba, which he had named as his preferred destination because of the political situation there.

A person involved in such activities as these is not someone who “just eats and sleeps.”

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S ASSISTANT

BRUNETTE: I would like to just clarify a few points on your findings.

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: With regard to the Wechsler Bellevue Test, I note that the highest score that you noted was the one for “Picture Arrangement.”

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: That is a test into his social insight, is that so?

VAN ZYL: I feel it can be viewed as that. I have not come across it in the literature, that it is definitely termed to be social insight, certainly not in the new standardization of the Wechsler Bellevue Test.

BRUNETTE: Isn't that score of 15.5 for “Picture Arrangement” inconsistent with a person who has been a schizophrenic for about 20 years, or a long period?

VAN ZYL: No.

BRUNETTE: Why do you say so?

VAN ZYL: It is not only social insight that counts. It is also intelligence that counts, and I do not think that that particular sub-section of the test really tests social insight.

BRUNETTE: But is it consistent or inconsistent with schizophrenia of long-standing?

VAN ZYL: I'd say that it is somewhat inconsistent.

BRUNETTE: To what extent do you say it is inconsistent?

VAN ZYL: That it is surprising to find this.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does it mean that by this time you would have expected that activity to deteriorate further than it has?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is that the correct way of putting it?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Does that also fit in with your finding that he was not a florid schizophrenic?

VAN ZYL: May I explain what I mean by the word florid?

BRUNETTE: Yes?

VAN ZYL: The type of schizophrenic that you find in the mental hospital, listening to voices and seeing things and being completely withdrawn and isolated and completely incapable of caring for himself, even to a small extent.

BRUNETTE: He was not that type?

VAN ZYL: No.

BRUNETTE: He was a type that was capable of looking after himself to a certain extent?

VAN ZYL: To a certain extent, yes. That is correct.

BRUNETTE: I see also that his arithmetic score was not very high. Would you say he was capable of looking after his money and running a banking account?

VAN ZYL: Yes, I would say so.

BRUNETTE: On the Rorschach Test, you said that you found blocking of his thought processes in that he did not react to one card.

VAN ZYL: That is correct.

BRUNETTE: Why do you say that that was blocking?

VAN ZYL: This is commonly accepted in the literature on the Rorschach technique that this is blocking.

BRUNETTE: Could it also be caused by anxiety?

VAN ZYL: It could be but I didn't think Mr. Tsafendas was anxious at all.

BRUNETTE: You said that a repetition of these tests would not make any difference, but surely, by repeating them he must learn to perform and to react to the test?

VAN ZYL: I didn't say on the Wechsler Bellevue that it made no difference. I said that it would make no difference to the particular pattern, and if he had learned to perform he would only have done better on the tests instead of giving an even poorer performance.

BRUNETTE: Did you make any allowance for the fact that he may have learned some of these tests before?

VAN ZYL: No, I did not.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS BY THE ASSISTANT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

JUDGE BEYERS: I assume you know something about the contents of the 1916 Act on Mental Disabilities?

VAN ZYL: Unfortunately, not very much. I shall explain my situation: As a clinical psychologist one is not legally permitted to certify a patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: I understand. I now need to ask for your confirmation that schizophrenia is definitely a mental disability in terms of the law?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Should you now interview this man as you had previously done – and I expect a responsible answer – would you have certified him if it were part of your duties? Does he need to be certified according to the Act?

VAN ZYL: If I had just performed the tests on him and had known nothing about his previous impulsive acts and so on, then I should not have certified him. He seems to be such a harmless person.

JUDGE BEYERS: If you had only the clinical tests?

VAN ZYL: Yes, then I would not have done so.

JUDGE BEYERS: At this moment, if I had to transfer my responsibility to you, would you certify him?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: What has happened since your tests that you are now satisfied to certify him?

VAN ZYL: I have heard of the history of his impulsive actions and behaviour.

JUDGE BEYERS: Can you state that your tests, taken against the background and history about which you have learned, that you would consider certifying such a person?

VAN ZYL: Yes, definitely.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does the history to which you refer include the murder of the Prime Minister?

VAN ZYL: No.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would his background without that knowledge, in your opinion, lead you to certify him?

VAN ZYL: Yes.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

Van Zyl stated that he would not have certified Tsafendas based on the tests if he was not aware of his previous “impulsive actions and behaviour.” However, in a personal interview with the author, van Zyl stated that he would not have certified him if he had seen the statements made by the people who were questioned by the police. He also admitted to the author that if he had seen these statements before he examined Tsafendas, his final diagnosis would have been different, “Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one’s findings in the end. There is no doubt about it.”⁵⁴²⁰

Furthermore, van Zyl stated in the cross-examination that he “heard of the history of his impulsive actions and behaviour,” but this behaviour was not evident during his examination where Tsafendas seemed like “such a harmless person.” van Zyl told the author that he was told about Tsafendas’s “impulsive” behaviour by David Bloomberg and the other psychiatrists, mainly by Dr. Cooper who was a good friend. However, none of the psychiatrists had witnessed any impulsive behaviour and some of them were probably also told verbally about Tsafendas’s impulsive behaviour by his defence team and the police.

Van Zyl also admitted to the author that he was given Tsafendas’s medical record in an oral summary and never actually saw any of such reports. He said:

“We were told, or I was told – the group of guys that examined him – that he had been in various mental hospitals all over the world... Yes. Well, you know, we were given this information – that he was a disturbed, schizophrenic man. And that was the background that we had available, and nothing else. The third part [the medical reports] was given to us almost in summary. He has been to this hospital, that hospital, that hospital... I think three or four were mentioned – various hospitals overseas.”⁵⁴²¹

⁵⁴²⁰ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

Again, statements gathered by the South African police from people who knew Tsafendas and could challenge and contradict van Zyl's diagnosis were not used. The only brief challenge came when van Zyl was forced to admit that Tsafendas 15.5 score for “Picture Arrangement” is somewhat inconsistent with a person who has been a schizophrenic for about twenty years or a long period.

CONCLUSION

Van Zyl concluded at the time that his tests definitely showed that Tsafendas was “suffering from schizophrenia,” adding that he was very intelligent, above average, as several witnesses told the police and the author. Van Zyl conceded in a personal interview with the author that he reached this decision based mostly on what was told to him about Tsafendas's past, without looking at any of his medical reports or talking to people who knew Tsafendas. He also admitted that he was inexperienced with some of the tests he conducted, though no one questioned this at the time.

Van Zyl agreed that witnesses' statements about Tsafendas and Tsafendas's own two statements to the police showed a completely different man from the one he and the other psychiatrists examined. He accepted that Tsafendas, in these statements, appeared not to be suffering from schizophrenia and felt that all this evidence should have been given to him and others who examined him to evaluate him properly.

Van Zyl told the author that he “firmly believed he [Tsafendas] was schizophrenic.” He admitted though that if he had seen the evidence gathered by the author before he examined him, his final diagnosis would have been different, “Yes. Look, obviously that is important information, and information that influences one's findings in the end. There is no doubt about it.” However, he still believes Tsafendas must had some “fairly gross personal instability” because of the way he killed Dr. Verwoerd in an amateurish way without an escape plan. He said: “With this new information, I'm beginning to think that he was a guy with, at least, fairly gross personal instability. And I wouldn't have been surprised that, within that context, he would develop schizophrenic symptomatology, as a consequence of ⁵⁴²¹ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

this. But what I didn't know about was his political involvement, as reported."⁵⁴²²

Van Zyl believes that a schizophrenic could be politically involved and could kill someone for political reasons: "Oh, he can kill him for political reasons, but to do something that is so outrageous, and so amateurishly planned, with a knife, in the middle of Parliament is ridiculous. A real assassin doesn't work like that." Van Zyl considers that a man of Tsafendas's intelligence "should have planned better." He admits though that a man with deep political convictions like Tsafendas is capable of committing such an "amateurish" act without this meaning that he was a schizophrenic.⁵⁴²³

Professor Alban Burke stated about van Zyl's psychological tests:

"The fact is that those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation. You could have done it, come to me with the results, and I would have looked at the same results and I would have come up with a different conclusion, so whether it was done correctly or incorrectly, is neither here nor there. The test could, at most, say that there is a possibility of schizophrenia, at the very most, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis. There are people who would argue that you could, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis of schizophrenia based on that test, or on any test for that matter... back in those days, the psychological tests were very unsophisticated, so you could have had results, and it could have been argued one of two ways, to say it proves or disproves. It was never an exact science."⁵⁴²⁴

⁵⁴²² Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁵⁴²³ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁵⁴²⁴ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 12: JAMES JOHNSTONINTRODUCTION

Before we examine Johnston's testimony, it should be stated that he had testified to the police on October 6 that "I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion."⁵⁴²⁵ These occasions were just two, so a man who had spoken to Tsafendas for twenty minutes in his life was asked to testify in the court about him, while Tsafendas's family and people who knew him for years or months or lived under the same roof or were neighbours were ignored. This demonstrates how stretched the defence was for witnesses to support their line. Johnston was presumably chosen because he told the police Tsafendas seemed to be "slightly unbalanced," although he did not say anything else to support the defence argument.

Johnston, Martincich and Barbeau were the three of more than two hundred witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission who commented negatively on Tsafendas's mental state. Barbeau testified that after talking to him a few times, she got the impression he "was not all there" and Martincich thought after knowing Tsafendas for two-three weeks that there "was something mentally wrong with him" because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself. Johnston testified that as a result of his two ten-minute meetings, he concluded that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all-right."⁵⁴²⁶

Both Johnston and Barbeau were members of the Christian Church. Merle Daniels, also a member of the church, had admitted the previous day under cross-examination at the summary trial she "would like to protect the name of the Christian Church." Many of the Church's law-abiding members were interviewed by the police⁵⁴²⁷ and felt deeply embarrassed to be so questioned, as well as endure the publicity shone on the Church by Tsafendas's criminal act. They felt it cast the whole of their church in a bad light and like the Greek Community in South Africa, tried to distance themselves and the Church from ⁵⁴²⁵ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴²⁶ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴²⁷ The Observer, 18 September 1966: 2, 'Police question S. African sect.>'; Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

Tsafendas.⁵⁴²⁸ As with the majority of the Greek community, some from the Christian Church tried to portray Tsafendas as not one of them and perhaps a mad man, in order to protect their reputation. It must be more than a coincidence that the only two witnesses who testified negatively to the police about Tsafendas's mental state were members of the Christian Church.

Tsafendas often clashed with leaders and members of the Christian Church because they advocated "the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government," including to the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid.⁵⁴²⁹ None of the members of the Christian Church revealed this to the police, apart from Patrick O'Ryan.⁵⁴³⁰

JAMES JOHNSTON'S TESTIMONY⁵⁴³¹

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your occupation?

JOHNSTON: I am a minister of the Christian Church and have been in this ministry for almost 39 years. The first time I met Mr. Tsafendas was shortly after his arrival here at the Cape.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: When was that?

JOHNSTON: It was in September, I would think.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Of which year?

JOHNSTON: Of last year. (Witness says he is a little hard of hearing.)

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you come to meet Mr. Tsafendas?

JOHNSTON: I went along to see him at his home, where he was staying at Mr. Daniels's place.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why were you called to see him?

JOHNSTON: I went to see him because I heard that he had been staying there and that he ⁵⁴²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁴²⁹ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁴³⁰ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁴³¹ James Johnston's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

was a Greek or a Portuguese, and I went to see him chiefly in connection with his racial status.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why did you go to see him in connection with his racial status?

JOHNSTON: I wanted to find out whether he was a white man or a Coloured man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You were interested because he was a member of your persuasion?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you discuss this racial position with him? Did you discuss his racial status with him?

JOHNSTON: I did, yes. I asked him whether he was a European or whether he was a Coloured man. The reason why I asked him that was because I was concerned about him being a foreigner, and if he was a Coloured man it was quite right for him to stay in a Coloured home as well as going to services in a Coloured home. But if he was a European or a white man, I would ask him to go along to services that were held in a white home.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you tell him that it was contrary to law for a Coloured man to mix in white circles, and conversely for a white man to mix in Coloured circles?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That was your view?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did he react when you had this little conversation with him?

JOHNSTON: I must say that I found him rather strange or odd. He told me that he would like to classify himself as a Coloured man, but he gave no reason for it. And then he began to talk about his travels. He began to talk about his travels and the countries that he visited. And that just gave me the impression of being a strange man.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he continue to attend meetings held by Coloured members of your persuasion, or did he attend meetings of the white members of your persuasion?

JOHNSTON: Excuse me, I couldn't just catch that.

JUDGE BEYERS: Did he continue with the white people or did he continue with the Coloured people?

JOHNSTON: He continued with the Coloured people until I had further discussions with him in February of this year. Then he came along to see me at the place where I was staying, at Mr. Slater's home in Plumstead. Then he told me that he had obtained employment at the Marine Diamond Corporation. And then the discussion came up again about whether he is a white man or a Coloured man, and he produced a small bit of typewritten paper with his name and number and a "W", which showed me that he was a white man. I then asked him if he would go along to services that were held in a white home, and he said he would.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And he did?

JOHNSTON: He did, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What kind of impression did Tsafendas make upon you?

JOHNSTON: Well, the discussions that I had with him was chiefly from a business point of view, because he wanted to find out different things. But the impression that I got of him was that he was an odd man, a strange man, because any discussion that we entered into he could never follow it fully.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did you think about his mental state?

JOHNSTON: His mental state - he didn't give me the impression that he was - he was a bit strange, and I would say just a little mentally unbalanced.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you remember that during the time that you knew him he received treatment for his nose?

JOHNSTON: He told me that after he had left the Marine Diamond Corporation. He came to see me on another occasion, and he told me that he was then receiving treatment for his nose and that he was staying at a convalescent home, either in Mowbray or Observatory. And then he told me that he'd be staying there for some time. I asked him whether he was going to stay there. He said he was going to make his home there, and that struck me as being odd or strange, and I didn't pursue that any further.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have told us that he told you he was working for Marine Diamonds?

JOHNSTON: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Before he left for South West Africa, did he speak to you about it, did he ask you for names of persons?

JOHNSTON: He did. He told me that he was working for some weeks at a stretch and then he was off at weeks at a stretch also, and in the weeks that he was off he would like to visit our friends in South West Africa. But, while I had the addresses of them, I was not too keen to give it to him at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Why didn't you want to give him the names?

JOHNSTON: I didn't want to give him the names because he was a strange man and he was making himself more of a nuisance among the friends that he was with down here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he a violent man, to your knowledge?

JOHNSTON: I never saw him violent in any way.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How would you describe him?

JOHNSTON: He was always mild when he spoke to me, and whenever I advised him in any matter he took it very meekly.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You made a statement to the police, not so?

JOHNSTON: I did, yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you say this to the police: "The Sunday night before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw Tsafendas at a service in Mr. Hall's home in Pinelands, but he did not discuss anything or take part in the service that night. He appeared to be perfectly normal."?

JOHNSTON: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You said that?

JOHNSTON: That is correct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Then you added to this: "I must say I did not speak to him apart from saying good-night. "Did you say this: "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right."?

JOHNSTON: I did say that, yes.

COMMENTS ON JOHNSTON'S TESTIMONY

Johnston stated that he got the impression that Tsafendas was a strange, odd man after hearing about his travels and the countries he visited, but did not state what was strange about it. He also does not explain what was strange about Tsafendas telling him that he was going to live in Mowbray or Observatory. Surprisingly, the Attorney-General did not find it necessary to ask. More than two hundred witnesses who testified to the police, to the Commission and to the author stated that Tsafendas often spoke about his travels; none of them found this strange.

When asked about Tsafendas's mental state, Johnston testified that he got the impression that he was an "odd man, a strange man because any discussion that we entered into he could never follow it fully ..." Johnston had not mentioned in his statement to the police anything about Tsafendas's perceived inability fully to follow a discussion. Obviously two ten-minute conversations were sufficient to give Johnston such an impression. The issue of Tsafendas's alleged inability to follow a conversation has been examined in detail in the relevant section of Dr. Cooper's testimony, so it would not be discussed again here.

The Attorney-General referred Johnston in cross-examination to his statement to the police that Tsafendas seemed to be "perfectly normal" on the evening before the assassination. Then he asked him again about his comment that "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right." However, he did not pursue this line of questioning and did not ask Johnston to explain his statement to the police. Nor did he ask him to explain what was so strange and odd about Tsafendas's stories about his travels. There seems little supporting evidence, therefore, that Tsafendas was "slightly unbalanced."

Johnston testified to the police in the same statement that he had only seen Tsafendas "periodically and had no discussions with him ... I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion." The third and last time they had spoken, all they said each other was "good night." Astonishingly, the Attorney-General, with the statement in front of him, did not ask the obvious question: How reliable could an opinion be about another person when it was formed from two ten-minute meetings with the person concerned?

CONCLUSION

This must be one of the weakest testimonies ever made to a court, clear proof of David Bloomberg's uphill struggle to find suitable witnesses to support the defence's line. A man who spoke to the accused for twenty minutes was asked for his assessment of the accused's character while people who knew him intimately, including his family, were ignored because their evidence would not support the defence line. However, the Attorney-General ignored the question of a twenty-minute character assessment and the creditability of the witness.

Johnston testified that he found Tsafendas to be odd and strange because of his stories about his travels and because he couldn't fully follow a discussion, although he did not specify what was so odd and strange about either. None of the two hundred witnesses questioned by the police, the Commission of Enquiry and the author detected this supposed oddness in Tsafendas, indeed most of them were impressed by Tsafendas's description of his travels. As to his inability to follow a conversation, this was a something only Johnston ever perceived. Notably, when he was first questioned, Johnston mentioned neither of these two character traits of Tsafendas to the police.

Despite the evident frailty of Johnston's testimony, Judge Beyers, though presumably unaware of the twenty-minute acquaintance of Tsafendas with the witness, said in his verdict: "Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man."⁵⁴³² ⁵⁴³² Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 13: GIDEON JACOBUS CLOETE

GIDEON CLOETE'S TESTIMONY⁵⁴³³

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where do you work?

CLOETE: I am a clerk in the Department of Labour in the general enquiries office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

CLOETE: In the Department of Labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In Cape Town or Pretoria or where?

CLOETE: Cape Town.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long have you worked there?

CLOETE: Since 3 September 1957.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the exact nature of your work?

CLOETE: The general enquiry work in the office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does it concern people who come to make enquiries?

CLOETE: Yes, people who come to make enquiries concerning labour.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And also people who are looking for work?

CLOETE: Yes, people looking for work and any information which they want, which they need, those are the people who come to make enquiries with me.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The man who is in the Court today, Demitrio Tsafendas, have you ever seen him before?

CLOETE: Yes

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where?

CLOETE: The first time that I encountered him and met him was on 26 April of this year.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where was this?

⁵⁴³³ Gideon Jacobus Cloete's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

CLOETE: In my office in the Department of Labour in Cape Town.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he want?

CLOETE: On that occasion he was off work on sick leave and he came about sick leave pay.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you grant him sick leave pay on that occasion?

CLOETE: Yes. I personally completed the application form for him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And did he receive the sick leave pay?

CLOETE: Yes, he did receive it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How much did he receive?

CLOETE: I am unable to tell you how much it was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: But approximately how much?

CLOETE: I definitely cannot tell you how much it was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Apart from this occasion, did you see him on any other occasion?

CLOETE: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Would that be a Government grant?

CLOETE: Yes. He had undergone an operation on his nose, according to the medical certificate which had been completed by the Medical Doctor.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Apart from the occasion when he applied for a grant, did you see him again?

CLOETE: I saw him again during July of this year, also in the office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What was he looking for at your office?

CLOETE: He came to me with three cuttings from an English newspaper which had been placed by employers in connection with positions which were vacant. And the reason why he came to me, was that he wanted my help, and wanted to use my telephone. I then explained to him that I could not allow him to actually use the telephone personally, but that I would help him by telephoning the firms myself to find out whether the positions were still vacant.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you do that?

CLOETE: Yes, I did as he wanted, he handed me the advertisements and I telephoned the firms. The first two of the advertisements did not supply the names of the firms in the newspaper, only the telephone numbers were given. I then called the firms and the receptionists who answered the telephone told me that the situations had already been filled. I then called the third telephone number and was put through to the works foreman, as it was an engineering firm in Maitland. The job which was vacant there was in connection with welding work. I spoke to the foreman personally.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, is all this necessary?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: No, your Honour ... Did he then go to the employer for an interview?

CLOETE: I just want to complete my testimony.

JUDGE BEYERS: I know you want to finish, but I have a great deal still to deal with and I have no interest with what you are presently busy completing. Will you please deal with the only relevant information and complete the rest at your office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he go to the place?

CLOETE: I told him that the foreman had told me to tell him that he must JUDGE BEYERS: Did he go to the place?

CLOETE: I do not know that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he come back again?

CLOETE: He did not come back to me again. I have never seen him again after that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was your impression that he was serious? That he was anxious to find work?

CLOETE: It did seem to me that was a person who really want to work. It was for that reason that he had come to me for help.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was the accused well-dressed and did he have a neat appearance?

CLOETE: Yes, he had a neat appearance and made a good impression.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Were any signs of abnormality about him which you observed?

CLOETE: Absolutely nothing. He appeared totally normal to me.

COMMENTS ON CLOETE'S TESTIMONY

Cloete's testimony is a further indication of the defence's problems in finding suitable witnesses to support its line. Cloete was obviously chosen to support Dr. Cooper's claim that Tsafendas was actively seeking work but was unable to hold down a job. The witness's testimony is very short and the only thing it really offers is validation of Dr. Cooper's claim and diagnosis. However, in cross examination, Cloete also says something that contradicts what has been stated in the summary trial and agrees with the vast majority of witnesses, that Tsafendas was well-dressed and showed no signs of "abnormality."

CONCLUSION

Although Cloete agrees with Dr. Cooper that Tsafendas was actively seeking work, he disagrees with other defence claims, describing Tsafendas as a "totally normal" man, "well-dressed" and of "neat appearance."

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 14: GERALD EDWARD SHAW

GERALD SHAW'S TESTIMONY⁵⁴³⁴

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your profession?

SHAW: I am a journalist.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And during the present Parliamentary session where were you engaged?

SHAW: In the Press Gallery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Press Gallery of...?

SHAW: Of the House of Assembly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you spend a great deal of time there during the present session?

SHAW: Yes, I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, what is your function in being there?

SHAW: I am a political correspondent of the Cape Times.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: During this session did you come to know the accused?

SHAW: Yes, I did. That is so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you come to know him?

SHAW: He was employed as a messenger; he was serving tea and coffee and things like that in the Press Gallery.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How efficient did you find him?

SHAW: He was not an efficient messenger.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you regard him?

SHAW: Well, he mixed things up. He mixed orders up, and I thought he must be a bit mentally retarded.

⁵⁴³⁴ Gerald Shaw's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Can you give us an example?

SHAW: Yes. On one occasion, the morning of the assassination of the Prime Minister, he brought me some tea when I ordered it and I paid him, and he re-appeared about 10 minutes later with a whole handful of notes, change. But I had already been given change by him when he brought the tea. So I drew this fact to his attention and he left. He seemed somewhat confused.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Any other experiences before the day?

SHAW: Well, yes. On that same occasion I reminded him that he hadn't collected money from me for a hamburger and coffee I'd ordered on the previous Friday. On that Friday I ordered this hamburger and coffee and it did not come. And I went back and listened to a debate and when I came back, it still wasn't there. I happened to glance into the office of a colleague next-door to my office, and I saw standing on the table a hamburger and coffee, which was cold. So I assumed he had delivered it to the wrong office.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he know whose office he had to deliver it to?

SHAW: Yes the order was placed in my office. We press a bell and the chap comes to the office and you place the order.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How were his manners? How did he behave?

SHAW: I found him off-hand. He didn't have the usual demeanour of a messenger, he didn't seem to be terribly obliging. He used to walk into the office without knocking and things like that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he capable of holding down this job of a messenger, in your opinion?

SHAW: Well, I wouldn't have employed him as a messenger; certainly not.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If he had been employed by a commercial concern, would he have lasted?

SHAW: I think if they had been very tolerant employers he might have.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you lodge any complaints against the accused?

SHAW: About his efficiency as a messenger?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

SHAW: I did not.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Why not?

SHAW: Well, I suppose I am fairly tolerant about this sort of thing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many reporters were there?

SHAW: In the Press Gallery? Off-hand I suppose there must be about twenty.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And the accused was the only messenger there?

SHAW: No, he was not. There were other messengers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: How many were there?

SHAW: Three in all.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was the accused very busy?

SHAW: I suppose fairly busy, yes

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I suppose fairly busy?

SHAW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Wasn't he fairly busy?

SHAW: Well, in the Press Gallery I would be rather more preoccupied with my own job, I suppose. But he was fairly busy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was very busy?

SHAW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was he friendly?

SHAW: I did not find him friendly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did you ever see where the accused stood when the bells rang?

SHAW: Once I noticed him standing at the door of the Press Gallery upstairs. At the time the bell was ringing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Is it a fact that from there he could have seen where the late Prime Minister sat?

SHAW: Yes, I think he probably could.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Was he supposed to have been there?

SHAW: Well, I don't know really.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I suppose I had better ask that question of some other witness. The psychologist says that the accused can work with money and that he can also run a banking account. How do you explain the episode that you told the Court about?

SHAW: I don't think I could explain it. He wasn't efficient in working with money in his dealings with me,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Isn't it perhaps because the accused was very anxious on that occasion?

SHAW: Yes, that may be so. It depends. There were other occasions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What time was this?

SHAW: This particular incident with the change?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

SHAW: It could have been between 10 and 11 a.m.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: What change did you have to get?

SHAW: I can't be completely sure about this.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes, I appreciate that.

COMMENTS ON SHAW'S TESTIMONY

Let us examine the two incidents described by Shaw: how Tsafendas gave him the wrong change and how he delivered a hamburger to the wrong room. The first reaction is that these errors were the sort of mistakes that anyone could make, wrong change, wrong recipient. They do not signal schizophrenia or serious incompetence. More importantly, we have to examine when the incidents took place. The wrong change was given to Shaw only a few hours before the assassination. Tsafendas had already bought the knives by then and was waiting for the right moment to strike, as he explained in his statement in the police. With something like that on his mind, it is hardly surprising that he mixed up the reporter's change.

The hamburger incident took place on Friday, September 2, 1966. This was the day Tsafendas was scheduled to work as a waiter at a function organized by Parliamentary correspondents, which Dr. Verwoerd was expected to attend.⁵⁴³⁵ Tsafendas had planned to shoot Dr. Verwoerd, flee to the Eleni and hide until departure the next day.⁵⁴³⁶ Although this plan was eventually aborted, Tsafendas's mind that morning at Parliament would certainly have been focussed on his preparations for the killing, which could certainly excuse his absent-mindedness.

Tsafendas had spoken to the police about both of his plans and therefore the Attorney-General should have been aware that the incidents described took place on days when Tsafendas was planning the assassination attempt and was presumably seriously distracted from his normal duties. If the Attorney-General was not aware of Tsafendas's initial plan of September 2 because he was not given his statements, he certainly knew that the incident with the correspondent's money occurred on the very day of the assassination. Surprisingly, he failed to make the connection. It must be more than coincidence that both incidents took place on the days when Tsafendas was planning to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd and nothing untoward about him was noted on other days. If Tsafendas was customarily inefficient this would have been remarked upon, and Shaw did not mention any incident concerning Tsafendas on any other day. In addition, none of Tsafendas's five co-messenger who were interviewed by the police and the Commission of Enquiry had anything negative to say about Tsafendas's work and the Chief Messenger stated clearly that there were no complaints against him.

Shaw wrote later that he had only a "brief acquaintanceship"⁵⁴³⁷ with Tsafendas, another pointer to the desperation of the defence team to find suitable witnesses for its case. Had it wanted reliable and sincere opinions about Tsafendas's capabilities, there were several witnesses who had worked with him for several months. These included for example Albert ⁵⁴³⁵ Fred Peinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴³⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁴³⁷ Shaw, 2007: 64.

Vercueil, who worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole engineering, and Ralph Lighton, Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden and Hulse, his co-workers for three months at Marine Diamond Corporation. Obviously, these witnesses could not support the defence's line and therefore were not called, while Shaw, and Smorenberg, were.

It is surprising that none of Tsafendas's colleagues at the Parliament was asked to testify in the summary trial, especially as the Attorney-General could have used them to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony. Even more surprising is what the Attorney-General did on the first day of the summary trial when he suggested there was evidence that Tsafendas was an efficient messenger, essentially contradicting Dr. Cooper's diagnosis that since Tsafendas was a schizophrenic, he was not able to perform his duties efficiently. This is the dialogue that took place:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: If I put it to you that he performed his work in the House of Assembly normally and efficiently, would you agree with that?

SHAW: I would like to know details of that. I would say that a highly intelligent man performing as a messenger in court may well be able to perform fairly reasonably, but I would suspect in this man that he didn't in fact perform all that reasonably. I would be surprised, in fact, that he performed altogether satisfactorily.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But he was a messenger in the Press Gallery, and if he didn't perform his duties efficiently wouldn't he have been dismissed?

SHAW: I understand that he was only there for a short time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was there from the 1st August to the 6th September?

SHAW: Yes. I must draw a conclusion from this that he wasn't completely and obviously hopeless and inefficient in his duties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: But if there is evidence that he performed his duties normally and efficiently, you won't deny that?

SHAW: If the evidence is such, I must accept it.⁵⁴³⁸

Van den Berg suggested that Tsafendas's work in the House of Assembly was efficient and normal. He seemed to know that for a fact, but he did not adduce any evidence to support his claim or challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony and left the issue there. It seems odd that evidence appeared to exist which would challenge Dr. Cooper's diagnosis but it remained unheard, leaving Shaw's statements on record in apparent validation of Dr. Cooper's opinion.

⁵⁴³⁸ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

The police and the Commission of Enquiry interviewed five Parliamentary messengers who had worked with Tsafendas. They were Piet Burger,⁵⁴³⁹ the Chief Messenger and Sydney Wiehand⁵⁴⁴⁰ and Petrus Schuin,⁵⁴⁴¹ both senior messengers, all three of whom had interviewed and appointed Tsafendas. Another two messengers, Fred Feinauer⁵⁴⁴² and Felix Miles,⁵⁴⁴³ also testified to the police. None of these five messengers stated that Tsafendas was inefficient or that they saw anything wrong with him. On the contrary, Schuin described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and "same as any other person that had worked there."⁵⁴⁴⁴

It is curious that none of Tsafendas's Parliamentary colleagues testified at the summary trial while five of them did so to the police and the Commission of Enquiry. Equally strange is that the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas did not seek any information about him from the messengers who worked with him daily for five weeks up to the assassination.

According to Sydney Wiehand, for someone to be appointed "he must be of sober habits, he must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty."⁵⁴⁴⁵ Petrus Schuin also described Tsafendas as an ordinary man and "same as any other person that had worked there."⁵⁴⁴⁶ Wiehand testified that he never received any complaints from anyone about Tsafendas's work. However, he was told by another messenger, Mr.

⁵⁴³⁹ Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴⁰ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴² Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴⁴³ Feliz George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴⁴ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴⁵ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴⁶ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Pienaar, that Tsafendas was eating a lot, then sitting and sleeping. However, Wiehand did not receive this as a complaint and testified that most messengers, including himself, ate and slept until they were required to work again. Pienaar's comment had more to do with his surprise about how much Tsafendas was eating because he thought he was overeating.⁵⁴⁴⁷ These statements were in the possession of the police and the Commission and should have been known to the Attorney-General.

In addition, an unnamed "respected member of the Press gallery" in the House of Assembly "who knew Tsafendas well," talked to Rene MacColl, a leading Daily Express correspondent, about Tsafendas. He said that "far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn't have been a less grey or faceless figure."⁵⁴⁴⁸

Forty-one years later, Shaw wrote about Tsafendas, "In my brief acquaintanceship with him in the Press Gallery I had never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity ... I told the judge of the incident with the hamburger, the change and the pot of tea, and of my belief that Tsafendas was rather slow mentally."⁵⁴⁴⁹ Shaw's belief notwithstanding, several witnesses testified to the police, and the psychiatrists and the psychologists agreed, Tsafendas was not slow mentally, indeed that he was more intelligent than the average person. What is likely is that the incidents mentioned were the result of his anxiety on days when he planned to kill the prime minister. Alternatively, Tsafendas's attitude on those days may have been one of laziness or indifference since the only reason he was working in Parliament anyway was to find the opportunity of killing Dr. Verwoerd.

CONCLUSION

How reliable was Gerald Shaw as a witnesses and to what extent was he qualified to testify, since he had only a "brief acquaintanceship" with Tsafendas? It mattered very little to the defence, as long as his evidence supported its argument and it did that perfectly. Shaw turned out to be an excellent witness for the defence. His testimony validated Dr. Cooper's diagnosis and appeared to stop in its tracks the Attorney-General's argument that Tsafendas was efficient, since he failed to bring any of that evidence forward.

⁵⁴⁴⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁴⁸ Daily Express, 9 September 1966: 2, 'Was it murder incorporated?'

⁵⁴⁴⁹ Shaw, 2007: 64.

What makes it stranger is the van den Berg must have had the evidence in his possession since at least five messengers had testified to the police and none of them reported that Tsafendas was inefficient. By not using any of the messengers' evidence, the Attorney-General handed an easy victory to Dr. Cooper and to the defence team. In doing so, the portrayal of Tsafendas as a man who could not even perform the lowly job of messenger prevailed. Finally, Shaw himself stated clearly that, although a defence witness, he "never found Tsafendas to show signs of insanity."⁵⁴⁵⁰

⁵⁴⁵⁰ Shaw, 2007: 64.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 15: FELIX BERNHEIM

FELIX BERNHEIM'S TESTIMONY⁵⁴⁵¹

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You are a handwriting expert, are you?

BERNHEIM: Yes, I am.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you been shown a sample of the accused's handwriting?

BERNHEIM: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And have you been shown this document (R.S.C.E)?

BERNHEIM: Yes, I have seen the document.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In whose handwriting is it?

BERNHEIM: The handwriting of the accused.

JUDGE BEYERS: What document is that, Mr. Cooper?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: A letter which the accused wrote.....

JUDGE BEYERS: I haven't seen it yet.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your lordship will see it now. It is a letter written by the accused to the Prime Minister of England in 1959.

JUDGE BEYERS: The only purpose of this witness is to identify the handwriting?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes. I therefore don't think it is necessary to read through it.

COMMENTS ON BERNHEIM'S TESTIMONY

Bernheim refers to a letter which Tsafendas is said to have written to the British Prime Minister in 1959, Harold Macmillan. Bernheim identified Tsafendas's handwriting as that of the person who wrote the letter in question, which is signed "Staa-Sin-Hah." As we will see from Dr. Zabow's examination which follows, the letter was submitted in evidence to the court as Exhibit E. However, nothing has been recorded in the trial's records about what followed the submission and the letter was not found in the National Archives.

⁵⁴⁵¹ Felix Bernheim's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

According to Press reports at the time, the letter was handed to Judge Beyers. He glanced at it and said, "I cannot make head nor tail of it. Which of course is the purpose of giving it to me."⁵⁴⁵² The letter was apparently written from St. Pancras hospital in London and was found in Tsafendas's medical file. It was headed: "St. Pancras Hospital, c/o North Wing, London. NW1." It was undated but refers to a letter written from 10 Downing Street on September 14, 1959, on behalf of the British Prime Minister, acknowledging receipt of a previous letter.

The letter began:

"Dear Sir, with reference to your letter dated September 14, 1959. Which I am enclosing as I have written on the back of it, just to make sure... Well, I have just had a second nervous breakdown because the situation is so serious. You can have us all killed if you don't do the following."

The letter then mentions a statue brought to London during Queen Victoria's reign which he described as a "hieroglyphs," adding if it is the original one, then "it is sacrilege."

It goes on:

"Dave this is getting too hot to handle, and in order to appease them before we all get fried, I suggest brother that you make a concession and give it back to them. I could arrange for the correct type of representations in the negotiations ... I don't think Labour can make Britain more prosperous. Don't let them convince you now you have the cards in your hand. And Mexican Litvinoff could act as mediator... Do not send anything back unless you consult me, as to the method and how it will have to be effected, including transportation etc. I have no more to write at present and am yours sincerely."

On the last page there are Greek characters and then the sentence: "Please don't ask me why fish and chips is cheaper at the restaurant or vice versa?" The last sentence is: "This was a lucid 60 seconds and five more or more."⁵⁴⁵³

Tsafendas never spoke to any of the witnesses the author interviewed about writing such a letter, but this does not mean that he did not write it. The author read its contents to forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas. None of them believed that Tsafendas

⁵⁴⁵² The Cape Argus, 19 October 1966: 1-2, 'He wrote to the British Premier...'

⁵⁴⁵³ The Cape Argus, 19 October 1966: 1-2, 'He wrote to the British Premier...'

wrote the letter or, if he did, that he meant it seriously. They included people who knew him extremely well, such as Father Minas Constandinou, Father Nikola Banovic, Father Michalis Visvinis, Katerina Pnema, Mary Eendracht, Andreas Babioulakis, Costas Chagios, Irene, Antony and John Michaletos, Michalis Vasilakis, Nikolas Kambouris, Reuben O’Ryan, Elias Constantaras, Manolis Mastromanolis, Ira Kyriakakis, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Costas Poriadis, Fotini Gavasiadis and Alexandra Vaporidis.

Between leaving Istanbul in December 1961 and being arrested in September 1966, Tsafendas wrote regularly to Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola stated that “all his letters were very normal; they were nothing like this ... he never wrote anything strange. These are like the letters of someone else. It couldn’t have been Dimitri’s unless he had gone mad by then which I very much doubt, as in seven months he never said or did anything to suggest that he was mad.”⁵⁴⁵⁴

Tsafendas also corresponded regularly, from 1942 until 1963 and then again from 1964 until his arrest, with his family, his first cousin, Mary Eendracht, and his good friend, Ira Kyriakakis. Often, the letters to his family included a post-card and sometimes a small souvenir, or even, though rarely, a picture of Tsafendas himself from wherever he was at the time. According to Mary Eendracht, Ira Kyriakakis and his half-sister Katerina Pnema, all of Tsafendas’s letters were perfectly normal and nothing like the gibberish letter to the prime minister. His friends and relatives are adamant that Tsafendas could not have written what appeared in the London letter; or if he did, that he couldn’t have meant it – he must have done it to gain something.⁵⁴⁵⁵

Katerina Pnema remembers that Tsafendas sent at least two letters to his father from London. One was in 1962, shortly after his father had died, which Tsafendas had not heard about. His step-mother then wrote to tell him of his father’s demise. Pnema is not certain when the other letter was sent to his father but it had to be before his death in 1962. Since the only other time Tsafendas was in London was 1959, that would most likely be when the letter was sent. Pnema remembers the letter clearly because Tsafendas included a small painting of the Tower of London, which is still in the possession of her family. She does not remember ⁵⁴⁵⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁴⁵⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

what he had written in any of these letters, but she is certain that there was nothing unusual or anything to suggest that her half-brother had a mental problem. "All his letters were the same as usual," she said.⁵⁴⁵⁶ Eendracht and Kyriakakis are not sure whether they received any letters from Tsafendas from London, but they both got letters from many different countries and none of them contained anything abnormal. They cannot believe that Tsafendas wrote the letter in question but say that if he did, he must have had a reason.⁵⁴⁵⁷

A strong indication that Tsafendas wrote the letter in question to support his act is evident from the following where one could clearly see his thinking and his manoeuvres. Tsafendas confided the truth about the tapeworm to Father Minas Constandinou and explained about the trial and his abuse in custody. However, he asked him to tell the prison staff that he talked about the tapeworm all the time and that he was "very mad," so they would "leave him alone."⁵⁴⁵⁸ Tsafendas also asked Rika Nikolatos and Father Minas to bring a double portion of food and to lie to the guards that he had asked for two portions because he wanted to feed the worm too.⁵⁴⁵⁹

In addition, while Tsafendas was in prison in the 1960s and 1970s, he wrote several letters to the prison authorities, all of which contained references to the tapeworm and bore some vague similarities to the London letter. Tsafendas signed most of these letters as Mimikos Demitrios Tsafantakis von Willem de Kanhume.⁵⁴⁶⁰ Mimikos is the same as Dimitris, which is how he was known as a child, before the family name Tsafantakis. The rest is presumably his maternal grandfather's surname.

Later, during the 1980s, when Father Minas visited Tsafendas in Pretoria Central Prison he always asked him if he wanted anything and he always got the same reply, "No." One day, however, Tsafendas asked if the priest would write letters to some of his friends to see if they were all right. He said he preferred not to write himself because they might feel uncomfortable to get a letter from prison and he did not want the police to note his association with them. The letters were to go to Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul, Manuel in Lourenço Marques, John Michaletos in Athens and Patrick O'Ryan in Cape Town. Tsafendas gave the priest their addresses and apologised for being unable to pay the postage. Father ⁵⁴⁵⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁴⁵⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁴⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁴⁵⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁴⁶⁰ Tsafendas's Correctional Service File in NASA.

Minas wrote to the four men, who replied eagerly that they would like to correspond with Tsafendas direct. However, Tsafendas declined. He gave no reason to Father Minas, simply saying that “it would be better if you write them and post them.”⁵⁴⁶¹

Sometime in 1994, but after the elections of April 27 that year, when Tsafendas was in the Pretoria Prison hospital, Father Minas visited him again. Tsafendas asked if he would post some letters he wished to write and mentioned that he would use the hospital address for correspondence if they wanted to write back. Surprised, the priest asked why he was now ready to write the letters himself. Tsafendas explained that in the 1980s any letters he wrote would have been read by prison censors. Since the authorities regarded him as a lunatic who believed he harboured a tapeworm, they would expect the letters to contain evidence of his insanity, including perhaps references to the worm. Tsafendas said that if he had written letters of that nature to his friends, they might conclude he really had gone mad.⁵⁴⁶²

Subsequently, Tsafendas started writing normal letters again, signing them with his name and not mentioning the tapeworm or anything else that would suggest he was insane. These letters were perfectly logical and similar to those he wrote before he was imprisoned, without, of course, any mention of the tapeworm or any other absurd claim. Father Nikola Banovic received a few letters from Tsafendas in the 1990s and they were exactly like the ones he would write to him in the 1960s.⁵⁴⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou, Mary Eendracht, Helen Grispos, and Ira Kyriakakis also received letters from Tsafendas in the 1990s and they were also perfectly normal, just as before.⁵⁴⁶⁴

Furthermore, when in jail, Tsafendas talked perfectly normal to fellow prisoners and to people who visited him, including Professor Renfrew Christie, James Mange, Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Father Spiros Randos, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Ioannis Tsaftaridis, Father Michalis Visvinis and Dimitris Skoularikis.⁵⁴⁶⁵

The fact that Tsafendas wrote bizarre letters to the prison authorities, many times

⁵⁴⁶¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁴⁶² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁴⁶³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁴⁶⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁴⁶⁵ Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 7 March 2010; Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

referring to the tapeworm and sometimes offering a softer line on Dr. Verwoerd, while in private conversations he talked in sober political terms, denouncing Dr. Verwoerd as a tyrant and a dictator, suggests that his letters to the prison officials were to convince them he was still mad and so the guards should “leave him alone,” as he told the priests. If Tsafendas believed the content of his letters, he would have said the same to those who talked to him. The fact that what he told these witnesses was the same as he told tens of witnesses before the assassination proves these were his true ideas and not anything he said in his letters.

Significantly, when apartheid collapsed and he was transferred from prison to a hospital, he wrote freely to his friends, never mentioning anything he had written to the prison authorities. All this suggests that the letters Tsafendas wrote while in prison, knowing very well that they were going to be read by the prison authorities were deliberate attempts to convince them that he was still insane. Naturally, he had to keep his guard up. He had already been tortured though officially considered to be insane, and he would have been well aware of the prospect of renewed torture should the authorities discover that he was sane and expressing anti-Verwoerd sentiments to his friends.

As for the London letter in question, for Tsafendas to spend time writing such a missive seemed an incongruous use of his energies and hardly reflective of his mental state at a time when he was deeply involved in politics, in the British anti-apartheid movement and other anti-fascist organizations, participating in many anti-apartheid, anti-fascist and anti-colonialist demonstrations. According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, Tsafendas, while in London, “was noticed in the company of leftists,”⁵⁴⁶⁶ he attended political meetings in Hyde Park, Labour Party meetings at London’s Caxton Hall and many others organised by the Committee of African Organisations as well as anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations.⁵⁴⁶⁷ According to the Commission’s report, Tsafendas tried to “recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa.” Tsafendas admitted to the Commission that he tried to recruit people for an uprising, but his aim was “confined to the Territory of Mozambique.”⁵⁴⁶⁸ These activities are hardly the things a schizophrenic man would get up to in his spare time.

The reasons why Tsafendas was hospitalised in this hospital have been extensively ⁵⁴⁶⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 31. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁴⁶⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁶⁸ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 32. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

discussed in Dr. Cooper's testimony. The question is: Why would Tsafendas write an incomprehensible letter to the British Prime Minister in 1959 from a hospital in north London? He later wrote letters to the authorities seeking to convince them he was insane. It seems that this was done with the same intention; to strengthen his claim to mental instability with the doctors. That the letter was never posted but ended up in the doctors' hands was very convenient for Tsafendas. It meant that it was read by the doctors. If he seriously wanted to post the letter, he could have done so, as he did with his first letter to the PM. That it ended up with his own doctors instead strongly suggests he wrote it to support his claim to be insane. The fact that the Prime Minister's acknowledgement of his first letter was addressed to Tsafendas by name indicates that he used his proper name in the first letter. It is also highly unlikely that the Prime Minister's office would have replied to the first letter if it was of the same type as the one in question.

Furthermore, Tsafendas, while at this hospital, was looking for work and often wrote off for jobs. It seems highly likely that to write such letters, which would certainly end up in the hospital's possession, was the perfect camouflage. Seeing Tsafendas writing so many letters could have made the doctors curious about their contents. A schizophrenic man sitting in hospital writing out job applications was not a regular sight. However, this is a hypothesis on the author's part, as we do not know exactly what did happen at that time. It must be said that Tsafendas's behaviour and attitude in similar situations in the future makes this scenario a very possible one.

It is also worth mentioning here that the defence could simply have asked Tsafendas if this letter was his and since it was found in his medical file, according to the defence, it would have been accepted by the court without the need of a handwriting expert. Since Tsafendas had not contested the fact that he had written the letter, what was the point of having someone examine it? The defence could have just submitted it as evidence. A graphologist is used only in cases when something written is contested. Since Tsafendas did not contest that he had written the letter, what was the point of appointing someone to examine his letter? This suggests that Bernheim was simply used as a "show witness" for the defence, purely with the aim of creating an impression.

Another issue that should be raised about this letter is whether Bernheim's opinion was wrong. Although there is no evidence to suggest this, the possibility cannot be ruled out. Like certain members of the judiciary and doctors in South Africa who "conspired with the security police to keep torture and murder under wraps,”⁵⁴⁶⁹ there is little doubt that some handwriting experts did the same. An infamous case was to occur ten years later involving a student activist and a suicide note. Mapetla Mohapi, aged twenty-five, a former official of the South African Students' Organisation and of the Black People's Convention, was arrested on July 15, 1976 near East London. Twenty-one days later, the police announced that Mohapi had committed suicide in his cell, leaving a note in his handwriting. K. Landman, a South African handwriting expert, said he had no doubt that Mohapi's suicide note was in the same handwriting as another document written by Mohapi. However, two world renowned graphologists disagreed and declared the note a forgery.⁵⁴⁷⁰ By big coincidence, Wilfrid Cooper, Tsafendas's advocate, was also the advocate for Mohapi.⁵⁴⁷¹

It is worth mentioning here that on September 9, 1966, the Daily Dispatch carried a reproduction of Tsafendas's signature and an analysis by Dr R.M. Schweitzer of East London, who it described as a graphologist of thirty years' standing. Dr. Schweitzer managed to portray Tsafendas quite accurately based on his handwriting, indeed more accurately than any psychiatrist would do at his summary trial. He suggested the writer “experienced difficulty in accepting discipline, had unsteady working habits, showed evidence of vindictiveness, but was idealistic, a person of great enthusiasm and a quick thinker.” By studying loops, whirls and letter shapes, Schweitzer concluded that the signatory was “intelligent” and “capable of learning and thinking logically and can at times co-operate,” but he also nurtured emotional inhibitions and needed more sympathy in his emotional life. By underlining his signature three times, the writer signalled that he could be extremely vain.⁵⁴⁷²

CONCLUSION

There is no doubt that the letter in question makes no sense. However, none of the people who corresponded with Tsafendas over the years ever received anything in the same vein from him. The fact that Tsafendas wrote letters to the prison authorities in a similar confused style aimed at confirming his insanity to them suggests that he did the same while at the St. Pancras hospital. When Tsafendas was in prison, he never mentioned to his fellow inmates or to the priests who visited him any of the things he wrote about in his letters. He later asked ⁵⁴⁶⁹ Quoted in Bizos, 1998: vii.

⁵⁴⁷⁰ Motala, 1987: 34-35.

⁵⁴⁷¹ For more about the case see: Motala, S. (1987) Behind Closed Doors

⁵⁴⁷² Daily Dispatch, 9 September 1966: 1, ‘The hand the killer wrote.’

two priest visitors to assure the prison warders that he was mad and talked about the tapeworm all the time, so that they would leave him alone. In addition, when Tsafendas was in London, he wrote perfectly sensible letters to his family, while the evidence of his many political activities further suggests that he was perfectly fine while he was there.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 16: ABRAHAM AUBREY ZABOW

DR. ZABOW'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Dr. Zabow, a psychiatrist practising at the time at the Medical Centre, Cape Town, having qualified as a doctor in December, 1949 with M.B. and Ch.B. from the University of Cape Town. After completing his internship year, he practised as a general practitioner for eleven years. Because of his interest in psychiatry since his student days, he took a full-time post at Valkenberg Mental Hospital as a clinical assistant for a year, from 1962 to 1963, and then a further year as a registrar in the Department of Psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital. During this time, he took certain examinations: the Diploma in Psychological Medicine at the University of Cape Town, and the Fellowship of the Faculty of Psychiatrists of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of South Africa, and eventually registered as a specialist psychiatrist.

For administrative reasons, Dr. Zabow joined the staff of Groote Schuur Hospital as a consultant in June, 1964, but did not register with the Medical Council until November or December of that year. Then, in January, 1965, he started in private practice and remained a part-time consultant in psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital; he also took on the post of part-time consultant in psychiatry to the Somerset Hospital. Dr Zabow declared that he had seen, certified and treated schizophrenics in the course of his practice and felt competent to express his opinion in the Court.⁵⁴⁷³

DR. ZABOW'S TESTIMONY⁵⁴⁷⁴

DR. ZABOW'S FIRST EXAMINATION ON TSAFENDAS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have interviewed the accused at the request of Mr. David Bloomberg, the attorney for the defence?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I was asked by Mr. David Bloomberg to see the accused, and I saw him on three separate occasions. The first time was on 30th September, when I saw him on my own, except that Mr. Bloomberg was there. There were no other psychiatrists present.

⁵⁴⁷³ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁴⁷⁴ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you do that deliberately?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I wanted to be able to see this man on my own and form an independent clinical opinion of him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: After you had had that interview did you, again independently of other medical witnesses, communicate your opinion to the defence?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I formed an opinion at the first interview and communicated that verbally to Mr. Bloomberg at the time, and then in writing as well, and I have had no reason to change my opinion since then.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The subsequent interviews were on which days?

DR. ZABOW: They were on the 4th October and the 11th October, and at these interviews Drs. MacGregor and Cooper were also present.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How long did the first interview last?

DR. ZABOW: Each of the interviews lasted approximately an hour and a half, I didn't time them exactly. All in all I was with the accused for at least four and a half hours.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: At this stage, on the basis of these interviews alone, what opinion did you form?

DR. ZABOW: On the basis of these interviews alone, I formed the opinion that the accused was suffering from schizophrenia. At my first interview I was satisfied that he was psychotic and schizophrenic, but I was not yet able to be sure into which category of schizophrenia he fell. Subsequent interviews have enabled me to form the opinion that although he is not a textbook case of any particular variety, he falls mainly into the category of a paranoid schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your first interview with the accused, how did it go? Will you tell us, so that the Court can for itself see how a psychiatrist sets about his job of determining the mental state of the patient?

DR. ZABOW: May I stress to the Court, with respect, that in interviewing a patient for psychiatric examination one tries to be as systematic and review certain systems in the same way as a physician undertakes a medical and physical examination. One does not just look at the man, listen to him talk, and then form a sort of general opinion. In the same way as a physician would look at the general condition of the patient and then examine his various systems - the respiratory system, the cardio-vascular system, and so on - the psychiatrist tries to examine the various systems which make up the behavioural pattern and the overall mental picture of the person whom he is seeing. So that the first impression, naturally, is the first sight of the patient.

JUDGE BEYERS: You mean he has got a sort of set procedure like Dr. Muller has when he looks me over?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is what I mean.

JUDGE BEYERS: How is my pulse, and does my liver hurt?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: And you do the same thing with the mind?

DR. ZABOW: That is right.

JUDGE BEYERS: Then I know what you are talking about.

DR. ZABOW: My first impression was of a man who - remember that I knew that he had been alleged to have assassinated the Prime Minister, and I was expecting certain things, and what I was struck by was the incongruity of my first meeting with him. Mr. Bloomberg introduced us to each other. He was not very tidy, he hadn't shaved - one could say that this was because of the circumstances that he was in. But then I asked him: "How are you?" I can look up my exact words, but I asked him "How are you?", and I have in the course of my experience seen other people who had been held for murder, and conducted psychiatric examinations on them, and this was quite an unexpected reply. I said: "Tell me, how are you feeling?" He said: "I always feel tired and exhausted. I just feel as usual, tired and exhausted, and my appetite is always good and my bowel movement is regular." Now he had been introduced to me as a psychiatrist, and one would have expected him to take the issue, well, this is the man who is supposed to be coming to help him, and yet this was the pattern of incongruity, and many times in that interview and subsequent interviews there was equal incongruity.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S FIRST EXAMINATION ON TSAFENDAS

Dr. A. Zabow acknowledges that Tsafendas was untidy and unshaven because of the circumstances. What he did not know was that Tsafendas was being tortured regularly and left in dirty, wet clothes for days. Tsafendas said that he was allowed to have a shower and change clothes only when he was visited by his lawyers or the psychiatrists.⁵⁴⁷⁵ Obviously Dr. A. Zabow was not in position to know that.

Dr. A. Zabow stated that he interviewed Tsafendas three times, with each session lasting about an hour and a half, making it “at least four and a half hours.” The most important thing that Dr. A. Zabow said was that he diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic “on the basis of these interviews alone,” that is, without any additional information about him. Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, Reyner van Zyl and Professors Tuviah Zabow, cousin of Dr. Aubrey Zabow, Alban Burke, Kirk Heilbrun, Robert L. Sadoff, and Phillip Resnick highlighted to the author the importance of collecting as much information as possible about the patient by talking to people who knew him, such as his family and friends, and by consulting his medical and criminal record.⁵⁴⁷⁶

However, that was not the case here. Dr. A. Zabow relied only on what he heard from Tsafendas and what Tsafendas told him was entirely different to what he told some two hundred relatives, friends and acquaintances who were interviewed by the police, by the Commission and by the author. Dr. A. Zabow found incongruity in Tsafendas, but none of the aforementioned witnesses noticed incongruity. Indeed, the witnesses who were interviewed by the author denied any incongruity in Tsafendas's everyday life.

TSAFENDAS'S “THOUGHT DISORDER”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What were your major findings? We have had Dr. Cooper give evidence at great length, and we have had lots of other evidence given here. What were your major findings?

DR. ZABOW: My major findings were that this man suffered from a clearly recognised and ⁵⁴⁷⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁴⁷⁶ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

recognisable mental illness known as schizophrenia. Now in schizophrenia there are certain clearly defined disorders of mentation, of thought processes, of emotional life, of contact with reality and of perception, which one can look for in the course of one's systematic examination, and I found many of them there, and particularly I found many important ones, so important that certain authors, particularly Kurt Schneider, would say that even the presence of one of them is sufficient, in the absence of organic disease of the brain, to diagnose schizophrenia.

For instance, I found thought disorder. This thought disorder consisted of an inability to pursue the point of a question and answer sequence. Several times, in the course of my first interview and in the course of other interviews as well, he could not - he appeared not to be able to deal with - what was being asked, and we arrived, not merely at the point in a roundabout way - some people are circumstantial - but in his case we just never got there at all. Sometimes he went off at a complete tangent; sometimes he just petered out; and on one occasion I remember specifically asking him "Now what did I ask you?", and he looked a bit dazed, perplexed, and was not really able to say. If the Court wishes it, I could quote this passage. It runs into about three or four pages of typed foolscap, and I think it took a good few minutes for the accused to ramble through it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Well, unless the Court wants the exact passage, give the Court the substance of the passage?

DR. ZABOW: This was in the course of our third interview. Drs. MacGregor, Cooper and myself were present, and Drs. Cooper and MacGregor had been asking the accused questions, and then I went on and asked him, "You don't know what this is about? The sequence of events is, of course, that you planned to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd and that you did murder him. What we are trying to understand is just how that came about."

JUDGE BEYERS: That is what you said?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is what I said to him. He said to me: "Yes. I er.... (I am going to try and put in the pauses, my Lord, with the hesitations, because I feel this is important to understand how he spoke to us).

ASSESSOR: Is this a transcript of a recording?

DR. ZABOW: This is a transcript of a recording. I also have my own written verbatim notes which are fairly substantially the same, but my handwriting in taking it down was not so good: "Yes. I don't know how that came about exactly, but I can tell you how I got quite a few people have asked me questions of how I got to Cape Town and I gave them er... quite a few versions of how I got to Cape Town but er. My mind.... my memory went bad a bit as to how I came to Cape Town and one of the influencing factors was.... that made me come to Cape Town as I was working there as a casual interpreter, was the fact that I received a letter through someone in my Church, through a person in my Church, through one of the people, a pastor in my church, and this pastor was in Cape Town. He is known as Willy Clarke. And I received the letter while I was in Cape Town or he received it, I mean, through somebody. It was not posted to him. It was brought to him by someone personally from Cape Town.

It was brought. It had no stamp on it. It was I think that I can remember. It was brought and handed to him and he called me over to his house and I went to get the letter. And the letter had been opened. It had been tampered with. And he gave me the letter. Oh, there's a mistake here.

Excuse me, I'm sorry. The pastor's name was Willy Clarke. He did not call me to his house to give me the letter. I had never been to his house and I went one day to visit him and when I got there he gave me this letter. He said he had received it from somebody that came from Cape Town. The envelope was opened and (long pause) I took the letter and we spoke for a few minutes and then I left. Later on, as I was going down the road, I passed through the race course" (this was in Durban, my Lord) "and there must have been the ... what you call it? The July handicap. I had never been to horse racing in all my life because we don't go to racing but I ... as I was passing by ... I like animals ... so I stopped and I went to look at the horses running round the course and they were getting near the bend"

JUDGE BEYERS: I wish that was all I did. (Laughter.)

DR. ZABOW: "And two jockeys I remember fell off and when I saw that accident."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just repeat that to his Lordship.

DR. ZABOW: He may not have been able to hear it.

JUDGE BEYERS: Two jockeys fell off? "Two jockeys I remember fell off."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What year was that?

DR. ZABOW: It must have been 1965, I presume. "I saw that accident and the animals went right round the racecourse and I had a look at them - so it must have been the July Must have been in the month of July that I received the letter. I then ... I left and I went home and I must have read the letter later on. Must have read the letter later on. The letter stated, this girl stated, her name was Helen Daniels, that she had heard about me when she was on holiday in Brakpan in the Home. There were some Christians living in the Transvaal on the Rand," My Lord, it goes on. If I could just point out ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Does he ever get back to what you asked?

DR. ZABOW: No, In fact, this goes on now to something about an identity card, then working for Marine Diamond, and then I said to him ...

JUDGE BEYERS: Before you interfere again, before you interpose a question again, does he ever get back to it?

DR. ZABOW: No, never at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does he ever get back to killing the Prime Minister and why?

DR. ZABOW: No, not at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: He has now rambled through the Durban July and I don't know what all, but does he ever get back to the Prime Minister?

DR. ZABOW: I will just make quite sure. I will read the last few words: "They did not care very much about papers out on the barges isolated." (This was because he had no identity- card. You will remember, he had given that in and had a receipt instead.) "They took on anybody, outlaws, criminals, they a receipt like that I was considered before this happened I was considered (pause) something like that. So they did not mind. They did not mind (pause) accepting me out there and they accepted me. They..." - and then I interrupted him. I said: "May I ask you something else, Mr. Tsafendas. What were you trying to tell me now?" Then he said "Er" and there was a long, long pause. And then he said "Concerning what?" Then I asked him, "You know, we asked you about the Prime Minister." He said: "I was trying to tell you how I got to Cape Town. What made me ... er ... what was the influencing factor that made me come to Cape Town. Then after that I lost ... after I got here ... after what happened after I got here about getting married ... I had lost the intention that made me come to Cape Town," (Because originally he was trying to say he had come to Cape Town to meet this Helen Daniels.) "I kept on wandering around. You know, I got this job" - and once again we still cannot get back to the point. If I could put this into technical terms, this is a variety of schizophrenic thought disorder in which the patient is unable to follow the main trend of thought, and various side issues obtrude themselves on to his thinking, and he is not able logically to discriminate between the primary object of his discourse and the secondary intruding factors. I could go on to the other aspects now.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just a little comment. The fact that he tells you about the pastor as Willy Clarke, and then he comes back and he has forgotten about it again and he talks about Willy Clarke, what is that indicative of?

DR. ZABOW: I am not altogether sure of the point.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is indicative of thought disorder?

DR. ZABOW: Of thought disorder, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Which is the first symptom you look for?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

DR. ZABOW'S DIAGNOSIS OF "THOUGHT DISORDER"

Dr. Zabow stated that he diagnosed "thought disorder" and that Tsafendas was unable to deal with what he was asked and properly answer a question. This is something that Dr. Cooper also diagnosed, but it is something that none of the about two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police, by the Commission of Enquiry and by the author ever noticed in Tsafendas. More importantly, Tsafendas was questioned twice by Major Rossouw while he was in custody. When Major Rossouw appeared in front of the Commission of Enquiry, the following dialogue followed between him and Judge van Wyk:

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth. I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

By also looking at Tsafendas's two statements to the police, we see that he did not have the problem Dr. Zabow noted and all of his answers and his narration are perfectly clear without any sign of “thought disorder.” If such a problem was noted by Major Rossouw or General van den Berg, presumably they would have raised it.

In addition, Tsafendas attended many interviews in his working life and appeared perfectly capable of answering questions or he would not have got the jobs. More importantly, he was examined and interviewed twice by two state doctors for his South African permanent residency permit and neither of them noticed any “thought-disorder,” though they were not psychiatrists:

- On November 11, 1963, Tsafendas was medically examined by Dr. C. Been for his permanent residence application and was found “not to be mentally or physically defective in any way,” and “generally in a good state of health.”⁵⁴⁷⁷ Dr. Been would later examine Tsafendas again “for burns on his body whilst employed at Pooles.” Again nothing about his mental state would be noted.⁵⁴⁷⁸
- On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the permit by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote “a favourable report” and subsequently a certificate for permanent residence was issued for him.⁵⁴⁷⁹

In addition to these two doctors, Tsafendas was examined by another ten physicians, none of them psychiatrists, over the course of three years, and no one noticed any signs of thought disorder or an inability of answering questions:

- On March 15, 1965, Tsafendas was examined by a South African Railways’ medical officer whose name is indecipherable in his report. He was found to be perfectly healthy, without any issues and therefore capable of working at the company.⁵⁴⁸⁰
- On September 25, 1965, he was examined by Dr. G.C. Baker, a casualty officer, and nothing was reported about his mental state.⁵⁴⁸¹

⁵⁴⁷⁷ Demitrio Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁵⁴⁷⁸ Dr. Been statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁷⁹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demitrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

⁵⁴⁸⁰ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

⁵⁴⁸¹ Dr. G.C. Baker Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. No date. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4, NASA.

- On November 19, 1965, Tsafendas was medically examined to insure that he was able to work for City Tramways in Cape Town. He was found fit to work and duly hired.⁵⁴⁸²
- On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and underwent a medical check-up that same day. The doctor who examined him⁵⁴⁸³ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.⁵⁴⁸⁴
- On April 18, 19 and May 3, 1966 Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Goldman, a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon. He reported nothing about his mental condition.⁵⁴⁸⁵
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work.⁵⁴⁸⁶
- Dr. Ralph Kossew examined Tsafendas only half an hour after the assassination. His testimony is highly important due to its timing. Dr. Kossew found Tsafendas “not confused ... he answers questions guardedly but does not appear to be confused ... he didn't appear anxious ... He may have been a little bit nervous but not in any marked degree... He was calm...”⁵⁴⁸⁷
- From April 19, 1966 to May 15, 1966, Tsafendas was under the medical supervision of Dr. Leon Solomon at Groote Schuur Hospital, suffering from “a deviated nasal septum and epistaxis,” and underwent surgery on his nose. Dr. Solomon during this period did not report any mental disability and found Tsafendas to be fit to return to his work at Marine Diamond Corporation.⁵⁴⁸⁸

⁵⁴⁸² Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁴⁸³ The doctor's name in the medical report is indecipherable.

⁵⁴⁸⁴ Demitrio Tsafendas's Marine Diamond Corporation Application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

⁵⁴⁸⁵ I. Eisenberg Statement. RE: Demitrio Tsafendas. GS.H. 65/014-181. N.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴⁸⁶ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

⁵⁴⁸⁷ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁴⁸⁸ Dr. Leon Solomon's medical report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA; Medical certificate issued by Dr. Solomon for the Employment Insurance Act, 1946. 7 June 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: 1/1 Departement van Arbeid. NASA.

- Dr. S. Michelson, a specialist physician, examined Tsafendas in the Neurology Department of Groote Schuur Hospital on 3rd June, 1966 and nothing was reported to be wrong with his mental state.⁵⁴⁸⁹
- Finally, Dr. Darby, a casualty officer, examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination but did not report anything to be wrong about his mental state.⁵⁴⁹⁰

Like a normal worker, Tsafendas was interviewed for jobs and other applications and again no one noticed anything amiss, for example:

- Petrus Schuin, the head messenger at the Parliament, was also one of the three men who interviewed and appointed Tsafendas. He told the Commission of Enquiry that “there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.”⁵⁴⁹¹
- Sydney Wiehand, who was also one of the three messengers who had interviewed him at the Parliament, said about Tsafendas, “he was a quiet man. He wasn’t the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.”⁵⁴⁹²
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁵⁴⁹³
- Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s employer in Frankfurt, Germany, at the heavy engineering company Fries and Son, characterised Tsafendas “as extremely nice and friendly ... He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on... we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.” Tsafendas “left on ⁵⁴⁸⁹ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 64. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁴⁹⁰ Dr. T.A. Darby. Statement re: Demitrio Tsafendas. G.S.H. NO. 65/014-181, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁴⁹¹ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁹² Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁵⁴⁹³ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

his own wish” although Hartmann “would have liked to keep him.”⁵⁴⁹⁴ Tsafendas was given a reference by Hartmann, so his work there must have been satisfactory.

- Tsafendas got a reference from this job, so his work there must have been quite satisfactory.
- Ian Boswell, administrative assistant at the Department of Labour in Cape Town. He interviewed Tsafendas three times in 1966 and testified to the police that “he was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over-talkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.”⁵⁴⁹⁵
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour in Cape Town, interviewed Tsafendas twice. He testified to the police that Tsafendas was “neatly dressed” and he “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”⁵⁴⁹⁶
- Gideon Cloete, also employed at the Department of Labour, interviewed Tsafendas twice. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “had a neat appearance and made a good impression.” He did not notice any “signs of abnormality” and “appeared totally normal” to him.⁵⁴⁹⁷
- Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen was Tsafendas’s tram instructor in December 1965 and January 1966. He testified to the police that “I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal.”⁵⁴⁹⁸
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the ⁵⁴⁹⁴ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

⁵⁴⁹⁵ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁵⁴⁹⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

⁵⁴⁹⁷ Gideon Jacobus Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, NASA.

⁵⁴⁹⁸ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁵⁴⁹⁹

Tsafendas was also interviewed, and hired after a week's trial, by Limasollu Naci, the owner of the private language college that bore his name in Istanbul. He worked there for five-six months. Newly interviewed, Mrs. Adviy Vedia Limasollu, Mr. Limasollu's widow, who also worked at the college at the time, believes that it would have been impossible for her late husband to hire a man who talked in the way described by Dr. Zabow; equally impossible that no-one should notice for six months.⁵⁵⁰⁰ Tsafendas left the college of his own will and got a very good reference, which he used to get the job in the House of Assembly in Cape Town.

Furthermore, just a few weeks after Dr. Kossew diagnosed him as schizophrenic and just two months before the assassination, in July 1966, Tsafendas gave a seventy-five-minute interview to a journalist named N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as an “anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship.”⁵⁵⁰¹ Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal. He had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. According to Hartford, Tsafendas spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in his conversation.⁵⁵⁰²

None of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and by the Commission mentioned anything about Tsafendas's way of speech. They all said he spoke perfectly well, like a normal person. Indeed, several were impressed by him:

- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”⁵⁵⁰³
- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine to ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, testified to the police that he “never got the slightest impression that he was ⁵⁴⁹⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵⁰⁰ Adviy Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

⁵⁵⁰¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

⁵⁵⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁵⁰³ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁵⁵⁰⁴

- Patrick O’Ryan said “he was well-spoken and had good vocabulary.”⁵⁵⁰⁵
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁵⁵⁰⁶
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas’s landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”⁵⁵⁰⁷
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas. He told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”⁵⁵⁰⁸ He later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative.”⁵⁵⁰⁹
- Violet Irene Manning was Tsafendas’s landlady for almost two months in 1965. She told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas “was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. From his general appearance he appeared to be a businessman.”⁵⁵¹⁰
- Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul in Beira “was often in the company of the subject and others had several conversations with him.” He considered Tsafendas to be “a normal and very intelligent person.”⁵⁵¹¹
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and ⁵⁵⁰⁴ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁵⁰⁵ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁵⁰⁶ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁵⁰⁷ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

⁵⁵⁰⁸ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁵⁰⁹ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁵⁵¹⁰ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

⁵⁵¹¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

German, very courteous and quiet. I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease.”⁵⁵¹²

Furthermore, none of the forty-four witnesses the author interviewed noticed any signs of thought disorder or of an inability of answering questions and no-one ever got the impression that Tsafendas suffered from thought disorder. Every friend or acquaintance contacted was surprised that anyone could believe Tsafendas was unable to answer a question properly and spoke as Dr. Zabow described. Fotini Gavasiadis and Mary Eendracht used the same word, “ridiculous.”⁵⁵¹³ Of course this was not Dr Zabow’s fault, as he simply repeated what Tsafendas had told him.

Mary Eendracht, his first cousin, who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was constantly with him for nine months in 1963-1964, “Dimitri always spoke very well. He sounded like a very educated man. There was nothing wrong with speech or his thoughts; they were both excellent. He could argue with you for hours and hours for politics. He was very good with words and his brain was bigger than most people’s.”⁵⁵¹⁴

Fotini Gavasiadis, who was very closed to him and practically lived with him for nine months in 1963-4. She told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could buy and sell you and he could do that at any time during a conversation, in the first ten minutes, then again after thirty minutes or an hour and then again after two hours. He wouldn’t let you get up from the chair until he had made you agree with what he was saying, especially when talking politics ... He was very convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him ...

In those nine months, I saw him and spoke to him every day and not even once did he appear to have an issue with his speech or his thoughts. He was always the same. We spent hours and hours talking and his speech was never incoherent, disjointed, blocked or whatever ⁵⁵¹² August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵¹³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁵¹⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

else, it was always perfect. He never gave me even the slightest indication that he might be having the issues you mentioned.”⁵⁵¹⁵

Fathers Ioannis, Michalis and Minas who met him in prison and in the hospital in the 1970s, the 1980s and the 1990s and spent hundreds of hours with him are positive that Tsafendas did not suffer from thought disorder, that he was able to participate perfectly in a conversation and that he never talked in a disjointed manner.⁵⁵¹⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis said:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don't believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”⁵⁵¹⁷

Father Michalis Visvinis told the author regarding Dr. Zabow's comment,

“No, no, this is not true; he did not talk like this [with gaps in his speech]. He never spoke like this with me, his speech was always absolutely fine. I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He always spoke absolutely fine, like a normal man. [His speech] was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. This comment is also entirely false.”⁵⁵¹⁸

⁵⁵¹⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁵¹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵⁵¹⁷ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁵¹⁸ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best and longest. They all insist that Tsafendas never appeared to be suffering from thought disorder in front of them:

- Alexander Moumbaris;⁵⁵¹⁹
- Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's half-sister;⁵⁵²⁰
- Father Nikola Banovic who lived with him at the same house for four months in 1961 and then lived right next to his house for another three;⁵⁵²¹
- His first cousin Mary Eendracht, who grew up with him and was constantly with him for nine months in 1964;⁵⁵²²
- Ira Kyriakakis, who also grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁵⁵²³
- Andreas Babiolakis, who knew him since they were children, who lived with him for two months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;⁵⁵²⁴
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days;⁵⁵²⁵
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest;⁵⁵²⁶
- Irene Michaletos, who knew him for more than a year (1964-1965) and whose house he often visited;⁵⁵²⁷
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met ⁵⁵¹⁹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁵⁵²⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁵²¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁵²² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵⁵²³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁵²⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵⁵²⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵⁵²⁶ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵⁵²⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in Mozambique.⁵⁵²⁸

- Costas Poriassis who met him in 1965 in Beira;⁵⁵²⁹
- Alexandra Vaporidis, who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961,⁵⁵³⁰
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964,⁵⁵³¹
- Panagiotis Peroglou and Costas Chagios who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁵⁵³²

As for the story Tsafendas told Dr. Zabow about the horses, the author interviewed all the witnesses who knew Tsafendas at the time, but no one remembers him ever mentioning such a story, though it could not be ruled out. The author read the above story and how Tsafendas spoke to several of the witnesses who knew Tsafendas for a very long time and spent a lot of time with him, and not one of them recognises Tsafendas talking this way. People like Father Minas Constandinou, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Katerina Pnema, Andreas Babiolakis, Mary Eendracht, Father Nikola Banovic, Nikolas Kambouris, Michalis Vasilakis, Manuel Mastromanolis, Elias Constantaras, Costas Chagios, Ira Kyriakakis, Irene Michaletos, John Michaletos, Antony Michaletos, Nick Papadakis, Father Michalis Visvinis and Alexandra Vaporidis were all adamant that Tsafendas could never have talked like that unless he did it deliberately.⁵⁵³³

⁵⁵²⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁵²⁹ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁵³⁰ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵⁵³¹ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁵³² Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁵⁵³³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

COMMENTS CONCERNING HOW TSAFENDAS GOT TO CAPE TOWN

Tsafendas himself stated clearly to the police when he was interrogated how he came to Cape Town from Durban and said nothing like the things he told Dr. Zabow:

“... While I was still living at the Durban Men's Home I was trying to obtain a lift to Cape Town. I managed to get a lift with a director of a cardboard factory in Cape Town in a Ford Sedan car. I got a lift with this man as far as Port Elizabeth. From Port Elizabeth I bought a train ticket Cape Town. I arrived in Cape Town during September or October, 1965. When I arrived in Cape Town I went to stay at 1 San Sauci Street, Belville with the family of a girl who was staying there and who had written to me previously to say that she wanted to marry me. Her name was Helen Daniels, a Coloured woman. She belonged to the same church as me, i.e. 'The Christian Church.' I did not, want to get married. This was her idea. I stayed there for almost two months while I was searching for a job. I found work at the Table Bay Power Station. When I found work, I paid the Daniels family for my board and lodging.”⁵⁵³⁴

Almost thirty years later, Tsafendas would repeat to Father Minas Constandinou the exactly same reasons and how he got to Cape Town from Durban, without mentioning any of the things he told Dr. Zabow.⁵⁵³⁵

THE TAPEWORM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Would you proceed?

DR. ZABOW: The other symptoms which I looked for were evidence of delusional thinking, and associated with this evidence of feelings of passivity or feelings of influence from an agency. Here is a play on words, because in Schneider's writing he talks about influence from an external agency, and one could argue that the tapeworm is internal, but I think we could agree that in fact it is an external agent which has an animus of its own.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is obviously external to the motivation of the man himself?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

⁵⁵³⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵³⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

JUDGE BEYERS: Other than the man himself would be external means?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. Other than the man himself. So that here is another primary symptom of schizophrenia, one which Schneider would say, in the absence, once again, of organic brain disease, would make the condition of schizophrenia the diagnosis. It is not a question now of deciding what other conditions could do this. Once one has excluded organic brain disease - and he has had an E.E.G., he has had a Wasserman done and he has had a full neurological examination by a physician - then we are left with schizophrenia. I don't want to labour the point, because you have heard this so often, but I just want to stress that these were the things that I looked for and found. So that I now had thought-disorder, delusions, feelings of influence. One of the other important features of schizophrenia, although not diagnostic, is the presence of hallucinations in a setting of clear consciousness. There are many conditions in which there are hallucinations when the patient's level of consciousness is lowered, but once again there are very few conditions, in the absence of organic brain disease, in which there can be hallucinations, other than schizophrenia, in a setting of clear consciousness. The typical hallucination which one would expect a schizophrenic to complain of is an auditory one, and at no time has the accused complained to me of that. But there are other hallucinations, and in his case there has been the disordered perception of some activity going on inside him. To me he has described it as a feeling, at various times, of pain or discomfort, or, in more clear terms, as the tapeworm unwinding when it smells food and then coming up to smell the food, and then after it has fed the tapeworm settles down again. The tapeworm rests, and then Tsafendas may rest as well.

Now, it is not very important whether one were to call this a visceral hallucination or a tactile hallucination, or even, for that matter, an illusion. In other words, there may be some - now and then everybody has experienced the sensation of peristalsis, of a wind travelling in the abdomen, or a hunger-pain, or something, but these are normal physiological sensations, and when a man describes it in the terms in which Tsafendas has described it, then it becomes either a hallucination, or perhaps one could call it an illusion, but I would prefer perhaps even to call it a delusional percept: he is perceiving something in terms of his delusional system.

The other, I think, important aspect of his disorder which I found was his autism, that is his lack of contact with reality. The accused basically, although he does understand words when one speaks to him and, as has been shown repeatedly in this Court, he is an intelligent person, his grasp of reality is such that he is not basically in the same world as we are. His world is a world dominated by an agency which at times causes him discomfort, at times causes him to behave in embarrassing ways, and he has described to me how at times the tapeworm has caused him to utter embarrassing statements. It is a world in which his sensitivity and perception of other people is altered. He has described to me how he is more sensitive to the feelings of other people and understands how they feel. When he says that, he says it in a - not in the sense that one may talk of empathy, but rather that he has an altered perception. But more prominent that this was the fact that when at one stage we tried — or rather, I asked him in one interview - I can't remember exactly how it led up to it, but I can give you the - it was towards the end of our last interview with him. It seemed that he wasn't altogether really with us as to why we were there. Now we were three psychiatrists. He had already seen each one of us individually, and then he had seen myself and my two colleagues on two previous occasions together. Then he was seeing us again for the third time together, and from the way he spoke it seemed that he wasn't altogether aware of why we were there or what was going on. And if I, with your permission, my Lord, could tell you what this sequence was (witness refers to page 11 of the transcript of the recording he made): I asked him: "You said a while ago, I gathered, that you appreciate the fact that we are assisting you. In what way do you feel that we are assisting you?"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that the question you put to him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. "Well, I gathered the fact that you were, I mean, giving me this attention, I mean, that's what I meant, concerning this matter." "Which matter?" "I beg your pardon?" "Which matter in particular?" "Well, er ... concerning this matter about the tapeworm about ... and all this ... er. "We have had a few talks with you together, what do you feel has been the object of our talks? What do you feel we are trying to do?" "I ... er ... I don't know what exactly. But I feel I feel the pain and I want to convince you people to get me the tapeworm out. That's what worried me. Even if it meant a surgical operation or something in the bowels. I'd be willing to undergo a surgical operation and the bowels to be opened in two or three places ... large and small intestines ... but these can be sewed up again and that would prove whether I ... that will be definite proof that I had a tapeworm, furthermore (pause) trying to find something to see what is there because the X-ray department are obsolete as far as tapeworms and other things are concerned", and then he went on to describe this machine which I think is similar to what Dr. van Zyl described in his evidence this morning.

Then I asked him: "What is Mr. Bloomberg's function in this whole situation?" (He was with us at the time.) "I don't know what ... er ... whether Mr. Bloomberg is an assistant attorney but ... er and he has (pause, and then he started to laugh) I am very indebted to him for what he has been trying to do for me I don't exactly know what ... er ... I want to thank him for especially getting those ... er ... documents from overseas and other things." And then he was asked - I say "he was asked", because I am not sure if it was I or one of my colleagues who asked him: "Where do we fit in with Mr, Bloomberg?" "Er" "Or do we fit in with him at all?" "Well, I think Mr. Bloomberg has been nominated by the ... by the Court... and so has Mr. Cooper and another man, Mr. Burger. But I ..." "But where do we come in?"(that is, us doctors) "Well, I think you are private physicians. I don't think you are Government physicians. I think you are private physicians." "For what reason do you think we are here?" "Well, I ... er ... to assist me I think." "In what way?" "Well, to find out what has been the cause of what ... how this matter took place or something, I really don't know ... I ... I really don't know why you people ... I know you are investigating ... er ... I don't know whether it's just research work or whether it's just ... er ... I ... that I can't say ... I ... (then a very long pause)" "What sort of doctors do you think we are? You said physicians, what sort of a doctor?" "I know you are a psychiatrist" - he addressed that specifically to me - "I know you are a psychiatrist. And ... er ... I think Dr. MacGregor is ... I think you said you were a medical practitioner and er ... Dr. Cooper, I thought you were a lawyer. I ... well I just thought so because of your questions ..." "Why should you feel that Dr. Cooper is a lawyer asking these questions?" I said: "Yes, but we all, you included, address him as 'Doctor'." Then there was a very long pause: "Well, I call lawyers also doctors. I also call lawyers of advocates lawyers." "Isn't one of your lawyer's names actually Cooper?" I asked him. "Well, er ... yes."

Then I said: "Is he Mr. Cooper of Advocate Cooper?" "No, he is Advocate Cooper. He's er ...he was er ... something to do with." Then I put in "Dr. Cooper?", and then there was a long pause. And then he was asked: "What I am trying to find out is, is there anything because they have the same name that made you feel that Dr. Cooper is a lawyer." This was not merely punning, my Lord; this is a recognised variety of schizophrenic thought-disorder as well - I will come back to the autism, but may I just add this - in that schizophrenics often relate similarities to the predicate of a sentence instead of to the subject. For instance, they may say that a table and a dog are the same because they both have legs. Their logical classification breaks down, and they do not think logically, as ordinary people do. I am not labouring the point, because this only happened once in all the times that I saw him, but it may have been significant here, because both the advocate and one of the psychiatrist's names were Cooper, that he seemed to be confused as to the function of the psychiatrist, Dr. Cooper. To come back to the autism which this had to do with: Here is a man who is on trial for murder, a man who has been seen by his defence attorneys, his advocates, by several doctors. We all asked him how he came to murder the late Prime Minister, what he felt about it. We have all taken pains to, I think, exclude malingering or simulation. And yet, after three joint interviews and several individual interviews, we arrive at the fact that we are interested doctors who are interested in helping him about his tapeworm and are listening to him talk about his tapeworm. He didn't seem able to connect our presence there with our functions at all.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say you have dealt with other people under similar circumstances, people referred to you, who are up for trial for murder?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Do you feel that even the intellectually much more ordinary man we usually get on murder would by that time have known exactly what you were there for?

DR. ZABOW: In my experience, which includes both at Valkenberg and in private practice, I have at no time, in any racial group, or even having to use an interpreter, had any difficulty in directly engaging the accused in discussion about the crime, the circumstances of the crime, and I have never found any one of these people to be unaware of what my function was. In fact, if anything at all, they were only too pleased that I was there and could try and put something across to them.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was Tsafendas grateful? Did he express his gratitude for the attention that you and the other two doctors had given him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. This was another aspect of it. He expressed his gratitude to the three of us for taking so much notice of his tapeworm, because, as has been said in Court before, no-one really paid attention to him. He complained about it, he was sent off to psychiatrists, they gave him shock treatment. No-one had ever patiently sat and listened to his tale of woe about the tapeworm, which, I must add, I haven't burdened you with the details of everything he said about it, but he gave me chapter and verse about visiting the chemist in Lourenço Marques anything on a pail of water. It was all there, as it has come up repeatedly.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What did he call it, the tapeworm?

DR. ZABOW: At various times he called it - in my presence, apart from what has been said in other people's presence - a tapeworm, a demon and a devil. In fact, I asked him whether by demon he actually meant anything supernatural, and he explained to me that what he meant was that as in the Middle Ages, when someone was possessed by something which influenced his life, so he felt himself to be possessed by this demon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you consider whether this was merely hypochondriacal, this talk about the demon and about the tapeworm?

DR. ZABOW: I considered it, but not for very long, because it was so patently not a neurotic hypochondriasis. It was a delusion of much greater proportion. It was part of a psychotic illness, and it just did not have the characteristics of what we normally understand by hypochondriasis.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S TESTIMONY REGARDING THE TAPEWORM

The issue of the tapeworm has been examined in Dr. Cooper's and Patrick O'Ryan's testimonies, so it will not be examined again here. However, we will examine Tsafendas's statement to Dr. Zabow that the tapeworm often made him "behave in embarrassing ways."

The author read those parts of the above testimony where Dr. Zabow recited Tsafendas's words to him to twenty people who knew Tsafendas very well and to another ten who were with him for forty-two consecutive days up to three days before the assassination. Most of them laughed in derision and all said they could not believe that Tsafendas had spoken that way. They said they were sure that Tsafendas talked in such a fashion deliberately in hopes of being found insane. Every one said he never spoke like that and would never have done so in normal circumstances. The question of Tsafendas's talking in such a way has been discussed earlier and witnesses' detailed comments have been included in Chapter Four as well as earlier in this Chapter, in Dr. Cooper's testimony. Therefore, the author will list here only the names of those who were read these extracts and made the comments set out above:

- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister.⁵⁵³⁶

⁵⁵³⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

- Father Minas Constandinou who knew him since 1963 and visited him in Pretoria Central Prison and later in the prison's hospital and in Sterkfontein Hospital.⁵⁵³⁷
- Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who visited him in Pretoria Prison hospital and in Sterkfontein Hospital.⁵⁵³⁸
- Father Michalis Visvinis who visited him very regularly for five years (1989-1994) in Pretoria Central Prison and in Zonderwater prison.⁵⁵³⁹
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas's first cousin, knew him since he was five years old and grew up with him in Mozambique. She spent a lot of time with him in Pretoria in 1964, when they occupied the same house for two or three months.⁵⁵⁴⁰
- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months.⁵⁵⁴¹
- Fotini Gavasiadis who spent every day for nine months with him.⁵⁵⁴²
- Ira Kyriakakis, who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend.⁵⁵⁴³
- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year.⁵⁵⁴⁴
- Costas Poriassis who met him in 1965 in Beira.⁵⁵⁴⁵
- Antony Michaletos
- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965.⁵⁵⁴⁶
- Antony and John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousins and sons of Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt and his father's sister who brought him up in Egypt. They first met Tsafendas in 1951 in Lourenço Marques and got to know him between 1963 and 1965 in ⁵⁵³⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁵³⁸ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁵⁵³⁹ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵⁵⁴⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵⁵⁴¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁵⁴² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁵⁴³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁵⁴⁴ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁴⁵ Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁴⁶ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

Mozambique.⁵⁵⁴⁷

- Alexander Moumbaris who spent three months in a cell next to Tsafendas's in Pretoria Prison. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard.⁵⁵⁴⁸
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children and had lived in the same house as him in Beira for about two-three months.⁵⁵⁴⁹
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964,⁵⁵⁵⁰
- Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, who knew Tsafendas for about two years.⁵⁵⁵¹
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961.⁵⁵⁵²
- Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest.⁵⁵⁵³
- Helen Grispos was another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques, and her mother was the best friend of Tsafendas's step-mother.⁵⁵⁵⁴
- Ten of the sailors of the Eleni saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days and up to three days before the assassination.⁵⁵⁵⁵

Dr. Zabow stated that Tsafendas appeared unable to understand why all the psychiatrists were there and that he thought that they were just trying to help him with the tapeworm. How did he come to this conclusion? Because Tsafendas told him so and Dr. Zabow, just like the other psychiatrists, took it at face value. However, Tsafendas was ⁵⁵⁴⁷ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁴⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁵⁵⁴⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵⁵⁵⁰ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁵⁵¹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁵⁵⁵² Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵⁵⁵³ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵⁵⁵⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁵⁵⁵⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

perfectly able to understand what was happening when he was questioned by the police, where twice he stated clearly why and how he killed Dr. Verwoerd. He was also perfectly able to understand and described what happened even thirty years later. Then suddenly, he is lost and unable to understand what is happening. It is obvious that Tsafendas is lying to Dr. Zabow.

Tsafendas told the police that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his racial policies,” because he was not the real representative of ALL the South African people and because he hoped that a change of policy would take place after his death. He said exactly the same things to at least five witnesses after the assassination (Fathers Ioannis, Minas, Spiros, Alexander Moumbaris, Liza Key), while he was in the prison and later in the hospital.⁵⁵⁵⁶ The only people that Tsafendas spoke to in an insane way about the assassination were the psychiatrists, his lawyers and the prison authorities.

If Tsafendas was insane at the time of the assassination and when he was examined by the psychiatrists, his situation should have deteriorated while he was in prison. He was denied medication and for at least thirteen years was brutally and systematically tortured. However, in prison and later in the hospital, Tsafendas did not speak the way he did to Dr. Zabow and the other psychiatrists to those he knew and trusted. On the contrary, he gave these people, the same reasons he gave to the police about the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd and even went further, discussing details which he had not revealed to the police. According to Professor of Forensic Psychiatry Tuviah Zabow, if Tsafendas was really a schizophrenic, it would not have been possible for him to recover without receiving medical treatment, especially because of torture and harsh treatment he revived in prison.⁵⁵⁵⁷

None of the about two-hundred witnesses who were interviewed by the police and the Commission and a further forty-four who were interviewed by the author said that Tsafendas behaved in “embarrassing ways.” They stated that he was perfectly fine and behaved normally. We will not list all the witnesses who testified to that, plus the cases of Barbeau, Martincich and Johnston, as they have been covered in detail in Dr. Cooper’s testimony. Many that the author spoke to had spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and knew him since he was a child, such as his half-sister Katerina Pnema, his cousin Mary Eendracht, Andreas ⁵⁵⁵⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 April 2015; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁵⁵⁵⁷ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016.

Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Helen Grispos. All grew up with Tsafendas and none remembers Tsafendas doing anything embarrassing or abnormal. They insist that he always behaved like a normal man.⁵⁵⁵⁸

His half-sister Pnema, considered some of his behaviour to be an embarrassment, but this was not necessarily how it would be perceived by people who were perhaps less conventional or conservative. For example, her half-brother tried to organize a strike by workers at the dock where he was employed. What was embarrassing was that Katerina and her husband had asked the owner to give Tsafendas a job there. She considered embarrassing the fact that when he was refused entry to Lourenço Marques, Tsafendas pretended to be suffering from appendicitis, was taken ashore to a hospital and then fled. She was embarrassed that Tsafendas denounced as fascists some guests at her sister's wedding in 1941 although they were indeed Nazi supporters. That Tsafendas often argued loudly about politics and was a self-proclaimed Communist and radical who opposed apartheid and the Portuguese colonialists was embarrassing for her. As were his frequent denunciations of Greeks and whites who supported apartheid, and whites in Rhodesia and the Portuguese in Mozambique he called "foreigners who had stolen the land." Those were the embarrassing incidents that Pnema could recall. "Apart from this, his behaviour was perfectly normal," she said. "He was a normal and intelligent man. You could tell he was intelligent after a five-minute conversation with him. He was the cleverest of us all. He got the brain from my dad."⁵⁵⁵⁹

People like Fotini Gavasiadis, Father Nikola Banovic, Alexandra Vaporidis, Andreas Babiolakis, Nick Papadakis, Costas Chagios, Reuben O'Ryan, Joyce Dick, Stanley O'Ryan, Pamela Abrahams, Elias Constantaras, Irene, Costas and Antony Michaletos, and Panagiotis Peroglou, all of whom knew Tsafendas for more than a year, do not recall any embarrassing behaviour by Tsafendas; on the contrary, all say his behaviour was always perfectly normal. The other witnesses interviewed by the author, although they did not spend as much time with Tsafendas, also cannot recall any embarrassing incident caused by him and they all maintained that Tsafendas was well-behaved and never did anything in the slightest embarrassing.

Finally, Dr. Zabow testified that at one point, while Tsafendas was talking about ⁵⁵⁵⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁵⁵⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

David Bloomberg's role, Tsafendas started laughing. Tsafendas later said that he often wanted to laugh, over what he heard about himself in court and over the things he told the doctors.⁵⁵⁶⁰ He said he had to try very hard to be calm while he was talking "like this," i.e. insanely, and not to laugh. Presumably on this occasion, he failed to control his amusement.

COMMENTS CONCERNING THE WAY TSAFENDAS SPOKE TO DR. ZABOW

The author read the transcript of Tsafendas's interview by Dr. Zabow, as read in the court, to forty-four people who knew Tsafendas. None of them recognised Tsafendas as talking in such a fashion; they said if he did, or pretended to do so, then he did it for a purpose. All declared that Tsafendas talked perfectly clearly and everything he said always made sense. The comments of the witnesses this time were less detailed since they had already listened to what Tsafendas told Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky. Therefore, to avoid repetition, the author will only state the names of thirteen witnesses who knew Tsafendas extremely well. All strongly denied that Tsafendas could have said all this. They were: Fotini Gavasiadis, Katerina Pnema, Mary Eendracht, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Costas Chagios, Andreas Babiolakis, Alexandra Vaporidis, Father Michalis Visvinis, Antony, Irene and John Michaletos, Nick Papadakis, Reuben O'Ryan and Elias Constantaras.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TAPEWORM DELUSION

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of a delusion?

DR. ZABOW: The significance of a delusion is that it is a symptom. It is not an illness in itself. It is a symptom of a disordered state of mind, a breakdown in functionings of the mind, which in all of us correlates our input of information, our memory, our processes of logical thinking; co-ordinate this with our emotional life,. When a man has a delusion of this nature, when he experiences feelings of passivity to do with this delusion, one cannot say that he is functioning in the ordinary way. He is not able to use logical thought processes, because his whole associational processes in his mind have broken down. I think this is particularly important, that the delusion is a symptom of mental illness. It is not in itself a disease. It is a symptom of a severe mental illness. If I may draw once again a physical analogy, it may help.

⁵⁵⁶⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

One can be breathless for a number of reasons. One can be breathless because of unaccustomed exertion, or one can be breathless because of severe heart disease. Breathlessness in itself is a symptom. The severe heart disease is a serious condition. A delusion of this variety - chronic, over 20 years - sorry: the delusion itself I know of for not 20 years. I am sorry. Mental disorder for 20 years. I think the delusion was first mentioned out 1959, that I can remember for the moment, but that is already six years. Feeling of passivity. These are more than just isolated things. This is a general mental disease, in which all the functions of the mind become affected, so that one cannot expect a man with this sort of illness to exercise judgment, to be able to weigh up issues, to attach the correct amount of importance to particular things which are happening to him and around him.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: If the evidence is that he had this delusion in 1955, then it is a long-standing delusion?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. It is a long-standing delusion. It is in many ways just more evidence of what I have just said.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In relation to the charge against the accused, what role did this delusion play?

DR. ZABOW: From my interviews I tried to ascertain just how the delusion fitted in to the murder. It was extremely difficult to get a clear-cut account, in the sense that I don't think that there is a clear-cut account; I don't think that this man is able for himself to know what precisely happened. One went so far as to say: "Look, did the tapeworm tell you to commit the crime?" He says no. And he says that if he was not infested with a tapeworm he would not have committed the crime. Then, in another sequence, he talked about the tapeworm being right in the middle of it.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is a phrase Dr. Cooper used, I remember?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, this was at a joint interview. "Right in the middle of it." So that rather than say that the delusion caused the crime, the way that I understand schizophrenia I would say that the delusion is part of the mental illness. The crime is a result, in my opinion, of the mental illness. Rather than to say that the delusion caused the crime.

JUDGE BEYERS: I follow. You could get delusions which are far more closely associated with murder than this delusion?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, in the classical paranoid ...

JUDGE BEYERS: It could be linked to the object that you are killing?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You didn't get this sort of direct, that the late Prime Minister and this animal or creature he describes were at one stage delusionally the same?

DR. ZABOW: No. In fact, we actually put it the other way and asked him if he felt that the late Prime Minister was responsible for his infestation, JUDGE BEYERS: But you could get a delusion which is strong enough to that a man is killing another human being and thinks it is a dog?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. Even there, there is usually other evidence of mental disorder, but certainly the paranoid delusion may appear to be more directly related to the crime than in this instance.

JUDGE BEYERS: I follow you entirely.

COMMENTS ON THE TAPEWORM'S SIGNIFICANCE ACCORDING TO DR. ZABOW

According to Dr. Zabow, Tsafendas was unable to exercise judgment and assess what was happening to him and around him. However, Tsafendas's life proves the exact opposite:

- Tsafendas seemed to be perfectly aware in 1947/1948 of the creation of Israel and donated money and even sold his clothes to a fundraiser to support the event.⁵⁵⁶¹
- In Istanbul during the second half of 1961, he volunteered to teach English to poor Greek and Turkish children. At the same time, he managed to get a full-time job as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Istanbul. He stayed for nearly six months before resigning to move on.⁵⁵⁶²
- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated his blood to earn some money in order to survive.⁵⁵⁶³

⁵⁵⁶¹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015.

⁵⁵⁶² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; ⁵⁵⁶³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

- In 1964 in Mozambique, he became aware of that a colleague was in difficulty and worked voluntarily with him to build an extra room on his house so the man's daughter could get married.⁵⁵⁶⁴
- In the 1930s and in 1964, also in Mozambique, Tsafendas taught English and History to poor children believing that education was the most important tool in someone's life.⁵⁵⁶⁵
- In 1964 in Durban, he was very well aware of the difficulties faced by some poor White people and frequently gave them money.⁵⁵⁶⁶
- In 1965, for the five months he lived with Patrick O'Ryan, he frequently bought food for everyone, knowing the family was poor. When O'Ryan complained that this embarrassed him because he was the head of the house, Tsafendas told the children that it was their father who was buying the food.⁵⁵⁶⁷
- He also seemed to be perfectly aware of what he needed to say when applying for employment or for the permanent residency permit where he simply lied about his past, saying he had never been hospitalised, arrested or imprisoned. In November 1963, he managed to hide his past from three officials of the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him for his permanent residency application.⁵⁵⁶⁸
- Tsafendas seemed to be perfectly aware of the politics in Mozambique and the situation with the Portuguese. From Britain he smuggled anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid books in order to conduct propaganda for the independence of Mozambique. Although he was arrested twice accused of conducting subversive propaganda, he avoided a lengthy prison term by putting on one of his mad acts, in this case pretending to be Saint Peter. Before that, he had the courage to tell his Portuguese interrogators that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that ⁵⁵⁶⁴ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁵⁶⁵ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁵⁶⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.'

⁵⁵⁶⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁶⁸ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie.NASA.

Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”⁵⁵⁶⁹

- Tsafendas also appeared perfectly aware of the situation in South Africa and the importance of Dr. Verwoerd, whom he believed was the “brains behind apartheid,” which is why he decided to kill him, believing that “a change of policy would take place” or at least it would be a stepping stone towards the fall of apartheid.⁵⁵⁷⁰

The author could include other incidents that disprove Dr. Zabow's testimony, but they are clearly set out in Tsafendas's biography. Finally, Tsafendas again denied that the tapeworm told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, although he says that the tapeworm was in the middle of it. This matter has been examined in detail in Dr. Cooper's testimony. However, we will state again that what Tsafendas told the police concerning his motive and his beliefs about Dr. Verwoerd are entirely compatible with what he told several witnesses before and after the assassination. On the other hand, what he told Dr. Zabow is the opposite of what he told the witnesses and compatible only with what he told his psychiatrists and lawyers.

TSAFENDAS: “NOT WRONG FOR ME TO KILL DR. VERWOERD”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Does he feel that it would have been wrong for anybody else, for instance, to have killed the Prime Minister, or would it have been right for somebody else to have killed the Prime Minister?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. In my first interview, bearing in mind the purpose of the interview, I asked him questions which might apply to McNachten rules, and I asked him whether he knew that killing another person was wrong, and he qualified it and said yes, in peace time it is wrong. Then I said “it wasn't it wrong of you to kill the late Prime Minister?”, and then he said: “No, for me it wasn't wrong. For anyone else it would have been wrong. For me it wasn't wrong.” I must put this in its context. This was all part of the conversation, trying to sort out whether there was a political motive, whether this man was able to form - whether he was in fact psychotic - and it was in the process of asking him these questions. This transcript came out very badly, and I am going to refer to my own written notes.

JUDGE BEYERS: You are looking for something to show why it would have been wrong

⁵⁵⁶⁹ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁷⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

for somebody else to do it but not him?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I just want to put that in the actual context. (Witness looks at his notes.)

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We might come back to it at a later stage.

JUDGE BEYERS: It is rather an important one, Mr. Cooper. You don't remember his answers?

DR. ZABOW: I am just trying to put it in the context. As I said, he said "For me it wasn't wrong", but I just want to put it into the context. It was the natural outcome of all these things put together", his tapeworm, his mental illnesses in the hospital where one of the nurses had told him that he had schizophrenia. We had been talking about his previous psychiatric history. "It was the natural outcome of all these things put together. This was not something that was done in a day. It took many years for all the build-up to get to the stage where I got to murder Dr. Verwoerd. It was not wrong in my eyes, what I was doing. When I did it I wasn't one of the public. I was my individual self." And then he went still, paused, and then I asked him: "Now, do you know that you can hang for murdering someone?", and he said: "I can't pronounce myself on how I feel" - but, my Lord, not as clearly as I have said it to you. This was a series of "ers" and disjointed thoughts, but one had the feeling all the time that he could not give - and repeatedly one tried at subsequent interviews and during that interview to get him to give a clear account of what happened, why it happened and how it happened, and t no time could he follow this logical pattern. It always tied up with not being well, being physically ill, mentally ill, the influence of the tapeworm, always tired, not being able to work, and so on. This was the context of the interview.

COMMENTS CONCERNING TSAFENDAS'S CLAIM THAT IT WAS NOT WRONG FOR HIM TO KILL DR. VERWOERD

With regard to the assassination, Tsafendas was unable to give Dr. Zabow a clear account of what happened, why it happened or how it happened. However, he gave a perfectly clear account of his motivation and how he planned and killed Dr. Verwoerd in both of his statements to the police. In nether statement did he say anything that bore the slightest resemblance to what he told Dr. Zabow. In addition, what Tsafendas told the police is exactly what he told several witnesses after the assassination.⁵⁵⁷¹ Nothing that he told Dr. Zabow bore even the slightest similarity to what he told the police or the other witnesses later.

As we have seen, Tsafendas also gave the police and later witnesses clear political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd. He even characterised Dr. Verwoerd's possible assassination as justifiable even before it happened, on the basis that it was morally acceptable to slay a tyrant and a dictator, an action that is known as "tyrannicide." He repeated the same argument to several witnesses after the assassination. The issue of Tsafendas's motive and how he killed Dr. Verwoerd have been extensively discussed with the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky. The fact that Tsafendas gave a completely different account of the assassination is not questioned in court by the Attorney-General.

DISCUSSING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL HISTORY WITH HIM

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Are there any other factors which you feel - before we come to our assessment - are important and which weighed with you - that is, just from your interviews with the accused?

DR. ZABOW: From my interviews?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: From the interviews, yes.

DR. ZABOW: I think I have covered behaviour, thought disorder, delusions, feelings of passivity, autism. His own account of his life and his own account of his psychiatric and medical history obviously helped me to come to an assessment. Here was a man who told me how he had been in various hospitals in various parts of the world. He described having had shock treatment. He described having escaped from, I think, at least one hospital. He described having been told at one stage that he had schizophrenia. And, once again to draw an analogy between physical and psychiatric medicine, one is most concerned with the history of the patient and his illness in order to assess the degree of illness and the prognosis of the illness.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: One factor which you can help the Court on is the accused's emotional level?

⁵⁵⁷¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

DR. ZABOW: The accused's emotional level I found to be rather blunt at most points. He displayed very little - in fact, I must say to me he displayed no anxiety when I spoke to him. He did not seem overly concerned with his predicament, but only with himself and his difficult sensations and his discomfort, but not with his situation.

JUDGE BEYERS: Mr. Cooper, I have had quite a lot of this now, and I will take some more if you wish to feed it to me. I am interested in the work that has been done, but don't you think that you are overburdening the Court with details?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: My Lord, my difficulty is JUDGE BEYERS: I know your difficulty, and you must appreciate mine and I cannot at this stage tell you that you are doing so. I just want you to consider whether you aren't perhaps giving us a bit of indigestion.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: My difficulty is that it has not been put crisply to any of my experts what the State says.

JUDGE BEYERS: I agree with you. I have been looking for that myself. I agree with you. It hasn't been put.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Therefore I can't take anything for granted.

JUDGE BEYERS: No, of course not. I can't tell you to take anything for granted, but I want you to be intelligent too.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: They say a nod is as good as a wink.

JUDGE BEYERS: I want a conclusion to this, and I think the details we have had quite long.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: May I just put the position? I will try to curtail my examination now, but naturally, should something arise in the State's.

JUDGE BEYERS: If you ask me to call Dr. Zabow back, I undertake to say "Yes." Just shortly, did you find thought blocking?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, there were times when I found thought blocking, when he would, in fact, be talking about one thing, there would be a pause and he could not continue talking about it at all. I actually asked him at the first interview whether he had any of the other disturbances of thought in the past. I asked him had he ever felt himself flooded with thoughts, or his thoughts suddenly cutting out, and he told me that at times this had happened. Once again, an important aspect of schizophrenic thought disorder.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW DISCUSSING TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL HISTORY WITH HIM

Dr. Zabow states here that he came to the conclusion that Tsafendas was schizophrenic also by taking into account Tsafendas's medical history as it was described to him by the accused himself; he accepted without question an alleged schizophrenic's own account of his medical history. It seems though that Tsafendas told Dr. Zabow only parts of his medical history, omitting his hospitalization in Beira, where he was also diagnosed as schizophrenic after he claimed to be Saint Peter, and that he was caught out faking mental illness in the USA.

The author is not in position to know for certain if Tsafendas mentioned these incidents, but given that Dr. Zabow did not refer to it, we could assume that Tsafendas omitted them. Why would Tsafendas do that? Presumably because as an experienced "schizophrenic," he was aware that it would raise suspicion if it was found out that just about two years before the assassination, Tsafendas also believed himself to be Saint Peter. Presumably, Tsafendas also failed to mention that he was medically examined at least ten times the past two and half years and none of the doctors who checked him spotted any of the alleged symptoms as described in the court.

It is surprising that Dr. Zabow took for granted Tsafendas's own account of his medical history and did not seek to double-check it. Professor Kirk Heilbrun disagrees with the method used by Dr. Zabow to diagnose Tsafendas and the fact that he relied on what his patient told him. He told the author that if he was in his position he "would have sought information from the second and third domains [collateral interviews with people who knew Tsafendas and his medical and criminal record] rather than additional information from the first domain." He added he did not believe it possible to make an accurate diagnosis about a patient, especially in a forensic case, after observing him for only three one-and-a-half-hour sessions.⁵⁵⁷²

Dr. Zabow mentions again that Tsafendas suffered from thought disorder and had admitted to him that this was something that had happened in the past, too. However, none of the forty-four witnesses who were interviewed by the author and who knew Tsafendas noticed anything like that about him and that it never happened while they were present.

⁵⁵⁷² Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

Since we have discussed the issue before, for more about it see Dr. Cooper's and Dr. Sakinofsky's testimonies. Tsafendas himself never mentioned anything resembling thought disorder to people who knew him nor to any of the nine doctors who examined him while he was in South Africa for jobs or permanent residency applications. As for the issue of Tsafendas not being concerned about his fate, this is something that we have discussed extensively in the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Mr. van Zyl.

DR. ZABOW'S CONCLUSIONS REGARDING TSAFENDAS

JUDGE BEYERS: As a result of these investigations you carried out, are you quite satisfied that the accused is a schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: I am absolutely satisfied that the accused is a schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: The degree? Would you say he was a certifiable schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I would. Would you like me to say why?

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, I would?

DR. ZABOW: First of all, I diagnosed.....

JUDGE BEYERS: I will put my question differently. Are you satisfied, as a result of your investigations, that he is mentally disordered for the purposes of Section 2 of the Mental Disorders Act?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I am satisfied that he suffers from a mental disorder, that he is unable to care for himself, that he needs control and treatment. That he is a danger to himself, I am not sure of, but to others. But I would put him mentally disordered in terms of the Act, that he falls into the first sub-group of mental disorder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: And where should he be kept?

DR. ZABOW: He should be kept in a suitable institution where he could be adequately controlled and even at this late stage of his illness I feel that he should get treatment for whatever worth that may be.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the prognosis?

DR. ZABOW: Unfortunately, for recovery, the prognosis is poor. For a reasonable degree of control under supervision, there may be, but for recovery after a 20-year history of schizophrenia, I would be most surprised - having taken into account his mental state as I have seen it and having heard facts presented in this Court - to hear that he would ever recover completely. I would always regard him as being a chronic psychotic, a chronic schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: You use the word 'chronic' - it has been used several times. What exactly does chronic mean in that context?

DR. ZABOW: In that context I only mean a schizophrenic who has had the illness for a long time and that the illness has been present during the time that he has had it. There has been no total remission.

JUDGE BEYERS: There must be many people walking around who have in some degree certain elements of schizophrenic conditions - I am not sure we haven't all got bits and pieces of it - but there must be lots of people that have them?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, not all schizophrenics are in mental hospitals, if that is what you mean.

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes. Would you suggest that all schizophrenics should be in mental hospitals?

DR. ZABOW: No, I would not suggest that all schizophrenics should be in mental hospitals.

JUDGE BEYERS: This becomes a matter of degree?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: In this man's case is the degree such that you think he should be?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I think - and I would like to stress this - that presuming he presented at an out-patients' or clinic which I were doing, and he had not been accused of murder (because I don't want the Court to feel that I am basing this on the murder) I would take the history with the mental examination - I don't say that I would straightaway certify him and put him into a mental hospital, but I would certainly institute treatment. I would want to know his social background, I would want to know whether he is able to live adequately on his own, earn a living and hold down a job adequately; in other words, whether he can look after himself, or not. I might, if I felt it indicated, ask a social worker or the Community Nurse to call at the places where he lived and find out what sort of person he is, how he relates to the people around him. This is where I would, if possible - and I don't guarantee that I would be right - try and assess whether he is, in fact, a danger to himself or to the community. Then, eventually, I would have to come to a decision after a period of investigation and possibly out-patient treatment, as to whether to hospitalize him, or not. So that it would be an overall investigation. On the evidence presented to this Court - and I sat in the Court since the proceedings started - I think that I have found out very much what the social worker and the Community Nurse would have found out, and that was that he can't hold down a job, that he is a drifter and that he certainly needs, at least, treatment and possibly control.

ASSESSOR: The evidence led from Mr. Daniels and his wife and the witnesses that followed, the people with whom he lived, rather confirms your diagnosis?

DR. ZABOW: Yes. I was particularly struck by the description of this man; the way he walked in with this parcel of meat, with the blood dripping down him, and was only pre-occupied in feeding the worm. Everything else went by the board. Now, one may say that a navy-type, a labourer, an uncouth person might behave in such a way. But then we must take the overall picture into account; remember, this is a man of intelligence; this is not an unintelligent, feeble-minded person; so that it would add weight to the fact that he is not able to live, what we would call I suppose, a normal sort of life.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think we are approaching this wrongly. In answering the question whether you would certify him, I was concerned with this man's mental condition today. I am not concerned with his mental condition at the time when he committed the murder. I am concerned with his mental condition today. So in telling me whether today this man is a person who falls within the definition of the Mental Disorders Act, you must not disregard the murder, you must take it into account. The murder is probably one of the most important factors that you should take into account in expressing an opinion?

DR. ZABOW: With respect, I misunderstood the emphasis of your question. Certainly, up till the last time that I interviewed the accused - that was on the 14th of the month - I felt him at that time to be mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act, and certifiable. I am sorry, I used the word 'murder.' It is the killing. To be precise, on the 11th October, when I last examined this man psychiatrically I regarded him as being mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act, and I would have no hesitation in signing a Mental S.2 to support that opinion.

JUDGE BEYERS: You'd sign it today?

DR. ZABOW: Up to yesterday. In terms of the Act I must have examined him within seven days.

JUDGE BEYERS: If I asked you yesterday or the day before?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I would

JUDGE BEYERS: You would have no hesitation?

DR. ZABOW: In completing a Mental S.2 as a specialist psychiatrist.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have seen this letter, Exhibit E?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: I don't want to deal with it at all but what is your comment on that letter?

DR. ZABOW: My comment on this letter is that it shows schizophrenic thought disorder and is the sort of letter which could well be used in a text book of psychiatry to illustrate schizophrenic thinking.

COMMENTS ON DR. ZABOW'S CONCLUSIONS REGARDING TSAFENDAS

Dr. Zabow's conclusions about Tsafendas show more clearly than anywhere else how wrong he was in his diagnosis of Tsafendas.

TSAFENDAS BEING UNABLE TO CARE FOR HIMSELF AND NEEDING CONTROL AND TREATMENT

Several of the diagnoses of Tsafendas have been off the mark in this summary trial, such as Dr. Cooper's that Tsafendas is unable to function on a reasonable level, and this is equal to it. If Tsafendas was unable to care for himself, how did he manage to survive the forty-eight previous years of his life? A man who, although penniless most of the time, managed to travel to sixteen countries where he knew no-one yet never spent an evening without a bed. A stranger in all these countries, he always managed to find a job and sometimes he even thrived, as he did in Istanbul, where he worked for almost half a year at the Limasollu Naci College.

Tsafendas always seemed to find a way of achieving his goals. During the Greek Civil War, he managed to join the Democratic Army of Greece, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party, and he survived. Arrested five times by the Portuguese police because of his political ideas and political activities, he managed to secure his release each time. Banned from entering Mozambique due to his anti-colonialist beliefs and activities, he convinced the Portuguese that he was harmlessly mad so they allowed him to return. Tsafendas attended several job interviews and no one noticed anything wrong with him, and that included three officials at the Ministry of the Interior who interviewed him three times over his application for permanent residency in South Africa. PIDE would not have held a detailed 130-pages file on Tsafendas and withheld from South Africa information on his political activities if he was a man who was not able to look after himself.

The author asked forty-four relatives, friends and acquaintances if they ever got the impression Tsafendas was not able to care for himself. Not a single one agreed. Again, we list opinions by those who knew him well:

- Fotini Gavasiadis, who was with Tsafendas every day for nine months in 1963-1964, was shocked and asked, “Are you serious? Are you sure the doctor said this about Dimitri? He must have examined a different man.”⁵⁵⁷³
- Mary Eendracht, his cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique, characterised the comment as “ludicrous” and “for laughs.”⁵⁵⁷⁴

The following are some incidents and statements which are indicative of Tsafendas's character and ability to care for himself:

- Reuben O’Ryan, Patrick’s son: “We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house.”⁵⁵⁷⁵
- Peter Pappas, owner of a Greek café in Durban, said when Tsafendas had some money he would give “a few cents to the white down-and-outs of the city.” Pappas said, “When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me.”⁵⁵⁷⁶ These are hardly the things that someone who is unable to look after himself would do.
- Jacobus Bornman was Tsafendas’s flatmate. When he was broke, Tsafendas lent him five cents and when Bornman tried to return the money, Tsafendas refused to take it back.⁵⁵⁷⁷
- On January 25, 1965, Tsafendas was released after three months’ imprisonment in Beira

⁵⁵⁷³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

⁵⁵⁷⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 18 March 2016.

⁵⁵⁷⁵ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵⁵⁷⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

⁵⁵⁷⁷ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

for subversive propaganda. Penniless as without a roof over his head, Tsafendas asked if he could sleep at the Beira fire department premises and the fire-fighters agreed. He slept there for ten nights, making sure that “he arrived at mealtimes, when he was invited to share in the food.”⁵⁵⁷⁸

- Tsafendas was penniless when he arrived in Istanbul in June 1961. He went to a hospital and donated his blood to earn money for food and bed.⁵⁵⁷⁹
- When he was arrested in Beira by the Portuguese police with a suitcase full of anti-fascist and anti-colonialist books, but also some Bibles, he was accused of pretending to be a missionary spreading the word about religion, while in reality preaching “under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”⁵⁵⁸⁰ Questioned in custody, Tsafendas came up with the idea of pretending to be Saint Peter, which fitted perfectly with his story of Christian missionary preaching. The Portuguese thought he was mad and released him.⁵⁵⁸¹
- When he was ordered to fulfil his duty of compulsory military service in the Portuguese army, he pretended to be mad and got away with it.⁵⁵⁸²
- In 1964 in Beira, John Emmanuel Marvis lent him twenty escudos, which Tsafendas paid back a few days later.⁵⁵⁸³
- In 1963, he managed to convince the Portuguese that he was a “reformed man,” no longer a Communist or a supporter of the independence of Mozambique, but just a little bit mad and harmless, so they granted him amnesty and allowed him to return to Mozambique

⁵⁵⁷⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁵⁵⁷⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵⁸⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁸¹ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Conclusion, signed by António Fernandes Vaz, 22 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁸² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁵⁵⁸³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

after twelve years of exile.⁵⁵⁸⁴

I could go on listing evidence to prove how wrong Dr. Zabow's testimony was, but I feel that this particular statement is best disproven by reading Tsafendas's biography in Chapter Two, everything else that has been discussed in this chapter and more importantly all the statements of the people who knew Tsafendas. For more about Tsafendas's ability to care for himself see his biography (Chapter Two).

TSAFENDAS BEING UNABLE TO LIVE ADEQUATELY ON HIS OWN

Interestingly, Dr. Zabow stated that he would like to have known Tsafendas's social background, whether he was able to live adequately on his own and how he related to the people around him. This could easily have been discovered if Dr. Zabow had spoken to people who knew Tsafendas, or easier, if he had read any of the one hundred and fifty statements that the police took from people who knew him. He would have seen that Tsafendas was more than able to live on his own, as he did for two years in Mozambique (1937-1939), two years in Greece (1947-1949), three years in Portugal (1955-1958), nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964, three-four months in Beira in 1964, three-four months in Istanbul in 1961.

According to Mary Eendracht and Fotini Gavasiadis, Tsafendas was perfectly fine living on his own in Pretoria in 1963-1964 for eight months. Both were surprised by Dr. Zabow's comments and believed they were completely off the mark.⁵⁵⁸⁵ According to Alexandra Vaporidis and Father Nikola Banovic, who met him in Istanbul, Tsafendas managed perfectly well living for three-four months on his own.⁵⁵⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriadis, Nick Papadakis, Antony, Irene and John Michaletos, Marina Tsihlakis and Ira Kyriakakis, who knew Tsafendas while he lived on his own in Mozambique, both in Lourenço Marques and in Beira, stated to the author that he was perfectly competent to live ⁵⁵⁸⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁵⁸⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁵⁸⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

alone and nobody ever thought otherwise.⁵⁵⁸⁷

Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis also remembered Tsafendas living in his father's house in Lourenço Marques from 1937 to 1939 on his own. They both remember him being excited at having the whole house to himself, although he often told them that he missed his family. Both said Tsafendas managed perfectly well, living his own at age nineteen. Babiolakis said Tsafendas was happy to be on his own because he was able to bring his girlfriend Stella to the house any time he wanted to. He even allowed some of his friends to take their girls to his house because they were still living with their parents.⁵⁵⁸⁸ Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, stated to the author that "if he was not capable of living on his own, my dad would have never left him on his own. Its absolute nonsense the doctor's comment."⁵⁵⁸⁹

Further proof of Tsafendas's ability to live adequately on his own comes by reading his biography. He travelled all around the world on his own, he visited countries where he was a complete stranger and still managed not only to survive, but on many occasions to live the "normal life" the doctors claimed he did not have - in Hamburg, for example, where he lived for a couple of years with his German girlfriend. Presumably Tsafendas lived on his own for two years in Greece (1947-1949) and Portugal (1951-1953, 1960-1963).

TSAFENDAS BEING A "DRIFTER"

Calling Tsafendas a "drifter" is like calling Odysseus a drifter. Tsafendas never travelled aimlessly or just for the sake of it. Wherever he went was for a purpose. Remember he was banned from South Africa and Mozambique and was prosecuted in Portugal. As result of this, he travelled either to find employment (Sweden, Germany, England), or because these countries were on the way to his destination (Syria, Lebanon, France, Spain, Denmark, Italy), or simply for a holiday (Bulgaria, Rhodesia, Greece again).

Dr. Zabow seems to be unaware that Tsafendas was forced to spend the years from ⁵⁵⁸⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 03 April 2015.

⁵⁵⁸⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

⁵⁵⁸⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

1951 to 1963 in exile, having been banned from Mozambique, the country of his birth, because of his pro-Communist and anti-colonialist activities. At the same time, he was barred from South Africa because he was a Communist “half-caste” who was suspected of being engaged in Communist propaganda when he lived in Mozambique. In the years up to 1963, Tsafendas made nine applications for permanent residence in South Africa and all were rejected; he made at least six to be allowed to return to Mozambique, all of which were turned down.

Mozambique was then a Province of Portugal and Tsafendas was officially a Portuguese citizen. However, not only was Tsafendas banned from Mozambique, he was prosecuted and imprisoned in Portugal. The authorities objected to his past political activism in Mozambique and the fact that he was a Communist who opposed the dictatorship of Premier Antonio Salazar. As for drifting around the world, Mozambique and South Africa were the only countries Tsafendas lived in prior to being banned from them, although as a child, he had also lived for a year in Egypt. While serving the Allied cause as a merchant seaman in World War Two, he was stationed in Canada and in the United States. In 1947, he was deported from America to Greece and it was then that his odyssey began. With Mozambique, Portugal and South Africa inaccessible, he tried to find a place to live.⁵⁵⁹⁰

The fact is Tsafendas was travelling because he was not allowed to live where he wished to live, in Mozambique and South Africa. “Forced globe-trotting,” he called it.⁵⁵⁹¹ If one of his visa applications had been successful, he would have gone there immediately. It is true that Tsafendas travelled much more widely than most people, but an analysis of his journeys and intentions comprehensively disproves Dr. Zabow’s characterization of Tsafendas as a “drifter.” He spent the first twenty-three years of his life in Mozambique, Egypt and South Africa. He lived in those countries because that was where his family was. From 1941 to 1947, he lived in the United States or, during the Second World War, at sea serving in American Liberty Ships. In 1947, and against his will, he was deported to Greece because of his Greek origins, although he wanted to return to Mozambique.

While in Greece, he joined the Democratic Army, the military wing of the Greek ⁵⁵⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵⁹¹ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Communist Party, and fought with them in the civil war. When it was obvious that the Communists had lost and the war was coming to an end, Tsafendas applied for a visa to return to South Africa. In his application he wrote, "I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs and languages."⁵⁵⁹² The application was turned down. He decided to try Mozambique, via Portugal. He managed to do this by taking ship from Greece to France, then travelling on foot to Portugal through Spain.⁵⁵⁹³

In Portugal, in November 1949, Tsafendas was arrested because the authorities had questions about his identity. It was discovered that he was indeed a Portuguese citizen, but had not served his compulsory term in the military and that he had been dismissed twice from jobs in Mozambique for Communist activities.⁵⁵⁹⁴ Tsafendas spent the next year in prison but was then released and boarded a ship to Mozambique. He arrived there in October 1951 but was refused entry because he was listed in official files as a Communist and suspected of involvement in subversive activities.⁵⁵⁹⁵ This refusal led to his next twelve years being spent in exile. In January 1952, he was back in Portugal and was arrested in Lisbon. The police discovered that he was a Communist and an avowed anti-colonialist who was under suspicion of "unclear activities" during his time in Mozambique and put him in jail again.⁵⁵⁹⁶

Upon his eventual release a few months later, with his chosen destinations South Africa and Mozambique unattainable, he decided to go to Sweden, where he had heard he could get a job as a welder. He travelled there through Denmark, and eventually got a job as a carpenter.⁵⁵⁹⁷ He did not stay in Sweden long as the weather was too cold and the money too little, so he moved to Hamburg, Germany. Tsafendas remained in Germany from early 1954 to June 1955. During his time there, he sent off applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and to South Africa. All were rejected and in mid-1955 he returned once more ⁵⁵⁹² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁵⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁵⁹⁴ PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁵⁹⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵⁵⁹⁶ Diario Popular, 9 September 1966, 'E conhesido em Lisboa o assassino do Dr. Verwoerd.'

⁵⁵⁹⁷ Ochsensall Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

to Portugal and spent the next three years working as a hawker in Lisbon.⁵⁵⁹⁸

Weary of constant PIDE supervision and police harassment, Tsafendas decided in 1958 to leave Portugal, and he travelled to Brussels to sell embroidery at the international exhibition, Expo 58. From there, he went back to Germany and spent the next year and a half in Frankfurt, working for one and half months at Fries and Son, six months for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers, and then another six months at a US Army printing works.⁵⁵⁹⁹ During his time in Germany, he lived on his own but had a relationship with a German girl who was a Communist.⁵⁶⁰⁰

In May 1959, Tsafendas travelled to Britain, hoping to find a job. He was refused a work permit and took “clandestine” jobs to survive.⁵⁶⁰¹ While in London, once again, he applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form dated August 4, 1959 to the Union’s immigration attaché in London. A note attached to his file at the embassy stated that Tsafendas had sought permanent residence status in South Africa several times without success, that in 1941 he entered illegally and was fined; it said he had Communist leanings and had threatened to enter without permission if he was denied again. The diplomat dealing with the application wrote, “Refusal is suggested!” On September 11, 1959, “Demetrio Tsafandakis, alias Demetrio Tsafendas,” was blacklisted by the South African Department of the Interior, meaning that he could receive no passport or admission facilities without the consent of the Department’s head office.⁵⁶⁰²

In London, Tsafendas also became politically active with anti-apartheid and anti-fascist organisations. He was discovered to be in the country illegally and in December 1959, the British sent him back to Germany, where he spent the next six months working in a tractor factory in Munich.⁵⁶⁰³ In March 1960, he read about the Sharpeville massacre and decided to return to South Africa and “do something” against Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid.⁵⁶⁰⁴

⁵⁵⁹⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁵⁹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰⁰ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

⁵⁶⁰¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁶⁰³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Convinced by now that he would not be allowed to enter the country legitimately, he decided on an illegal route, “through the African states south to South Africa.” The first stage took him through the Balkan States to Piraeus, Greece, then he took a ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. There his passport expired and he was unable to renew it or replace it, but with the help of the Red Cross, he managed to get to Beirut and Jerusalem.⁵⁶⁰⁵

With his Africa North-to-South plan blocked, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain range and reached Ankara, Turkey in May 1961. A month later, he arrived in Istanbul, where he worked as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Turkey at the time, the Limasollu Naci College.⁵⁶⁰⁶ In December 1961, he left to visit a former comrade from the Greek Civil War who lived in Sofia, Bulgaria. His visit lasted two weeks and then he went to Greece to spend Christmas with his good friend John Michaletos and his family.⁵⁶⁰⁷ In January 1962, he travelled to the island of Crete to meet his relatives and see where his beloved father and his hero great-grandfather were born. From Greece, he travelled to Italy, then took the train to Lisbon, where he arrived in February 1962.⁵⁶⁰⁸

Tsafendas worked as a welder in Lisbon until July 1962, when he went back to England and again participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations. In late 1962, he learned that his father had died and he determined to visit his grave in South Africa. After several more unsuccessful applications for a visa for Mozambique and South Africa, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government relented. Convinced by an “act” he put that he was mad but harmless, and “reformed” in terms of his political ideology, the authorities gave him amnesty and permission to return to Mozambique.⁵⁶⁰⁹

In October 1963, Tsafendas arrived in Mozambique and a month later, with the help of his family, he was back in South Africa in Pretoria. He remained in Pretoria until July 1964, working for five months for F.A. Poole Engineering and the rest of the time at his half-

⁵⁶⁰⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁶⁰⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁰⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

sister's café. He crossed into Rhodesia to visit another half-sister he had not seen since 1941, and from there went again to Mozambique. He remained in Beira from October 1964 until November 1964, working for the Hume Pipe Company,⁵⁶¹⁰ before being arrested by the Portuguese police for “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁵⁶¹¹ After three months in jail in Beira, he left Mozambique for Durban in March 1965. He remained there until October 1965, working off and on as an interpreter at the Durban Court, as a welder at Fraser and Chalmers for two months and for a month for South African Railways. After receiving a letter from Helen Daniels who said she wanted to meet and marry him, he travelled from Durban to Cape Town, where he met her. He remained in Cape Town from October 1965 until September 1966.

None of the above travels can be described as aimless. Tsafendas himself, as already mentioned, characterised them in his affidavit as “forced globetrotting”⁵⁶¹² and he was right. Several countries happened to be on the way to his destination, like France, Italy, Spain, Syria, Lebanon, Denmark and Turkey. Naturally, he spent little time there because he was just passing through. This does not apply to Turkey, where he got a teaching job and stayed for seven months. He visited Greece for the second time, Rhodesia and Bulgaria for holidays. For business and work, he travelled England, Belgium and Sweden, while one of the Liberty ships during the Second World War also took him to Canada. Apart from places where he stayed only weeks or a few months, this is his life story:

- Six years in Egypt, all in Alexandria (1919-1925)
- Seventeen years in Mozambique: 16 years in Lourenço Marques and one in Beira (1918-1919, 1925-1939, 1963-1964)
- Five years in South Africa: approximately two years in Pretoria, one in Johannesburg, one in Cape Town and a eight months in Durban (1939-1941, 1963-1966, plus school in Middleburg)

⁵⁶¹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 12 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁶¹¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶¹² Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

- Six years in the USA in Boston and New York, a lot of this time at sea (1941-1947)
- Two years in Greece, all in Athens (1947-1949)
- Six years in Portugal, all in Lisbon (1951-1953, 1955-1958, 1962-1963)
- Three years in Germany, all in three cities, Munich, Frankfurt and Hamburg (1953-1955, 1958-1959)
- Seven months in Turkey in Istanbul (1961)⁵⁶¹³

This is not drifting, it is the odyssey of a man who was forced to live in exile from the country where he was born (Mozambique) for twelve years, who for sixteen years was not allowed to enter the country where his family lived (South Africa) and who was prosecuted and imprisoned because of his political beliefs in the country of his official nationality and where, after Mozambique, he spent most of his time (Portugal). Wherever he was, he always applied for permission to return to Mozambique and South Africa. Had he been allowed to return to either country or left in peace in Portugal, this vast Baedeker of travel would never have been opened.

Tsafendas travelled through so many countries mainly for two reasons:

- In search of a better place to stay and work
- He needed to cross through many countries to reach his destination.

Tsafendas's desperate efforts to return to Mozambique or South Africa and find a place to live and work without being followed by the police do not constitute "drifting." His peregrinations recall those of Odysseus, who travelled for ten years through many different places to reach his destination.

Finally, it might also be noted that a person who travels from place to place, finds work where he stops and then moves on, is not necessarily a schizophrenic. On the contrary, several highly successful people, especially exponents of the arts, have lived such a life. During his thirties, the renowned and influential French poet, Arthur Rimbaud travelled the world, moving from country to country and sustaining himself with jobs along the way. He did so because he wanted to explore lands and cultures outside of his French experience. History has not labelled Rimbaud as a schizophrenic or an aimless drifter. Unlike Rimbaud, ⁵⁶¹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

however, Tsafendas did not keep moving for pleasure, but usually because he was barred or deported from a country and was forced to travel elsewhere. He made the most of his enforced sojourns, learning new languages and investigating cultures, but his life's aim was always to settle down, at first in Mozambique and later South Africa.

TSAFENDAS'S INABILITY TO HOLD DOWN A JOB AND HOW HE RELATED TO PEOPLE AROUND HIM

Tsafendas's ability to find and hold down a job has been discussed extensively in Dr. Cooper's testimony. As to how Tsafendas related to people around him, this could be seen by the people's own statements that have been used in this study. Furthermore, it could also be seen in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

DR. ZABOW'S PROGNOSIS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S CHANCE OF RECOVERING

As for Tsafendas ever being able to recover from his schizophrenia, all those who knew him while he was in prison and in the hospital strongly believe that he was not schizophrenic and that he was perfectly all right when he was talking to them. None of these witnesses ever thought that Tsafendas might be a schizophrenic and he never told them any of the things he told his defence team and those who examined him during the summary trial. These witnesses include Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, Father Spiros Randos, Liza Key, Father Minas Constandinou, Father Michalis Visvinis, Rika Nikolatos and Dimitris Skoularikis.⁵⁶¹⁴

⁵⁶¹⁴ Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 7 March 2010; Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015; Father Spiros Randos in a personal interview, 5 January 2004; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that the finer feelings in regard to family and friends are the first to be affected in a schizophrenic?

DR. ZABOW: I would agree that they may be one of the earlier signs, but if you are asking me to say that it is a sine qua non then I can't say that.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Doesn't such a person lose sympathy and regard for their people?

DR. ZABOW: It depends on the phase and the activity of his illness, it depends what sort of contact you are referring to. I am not altogether sure that I understand. If you could explain to me, with respect, what particular relationship you wish me to deal with.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He enquired about his friends while he was in gaol. Has that got any significance?

DR. ZABOW: Well, we have heard in Court from people who knew him that he had friendships with them: the Daniels' the O'Ryans. The Daniels' commented - I think it was the Daniels or the O'Ryans - one of the families commented on his fondness of the children. I have taken that into account in coming to my formulation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you think that there is emotional blunting?

DR. ZABOW: I have observed some emotional blunting, but I would like to stress that emotional blunting is not the symptom of schizophrenia, it is rather a disorder of emotion which may at times be blunted, at times incongruous, and at times there may be rages or depression, very often in keeping with the inner phantasy life, the autistic life of the patient, and not necessarily with outer reality.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: In what sub-class of schizophrenia do you put the accused?

DR. ZABOW: In this morning's evidence I mentioned I felt he fell most closely into the paranoid group, but that he was not a typical paranoid schizophrenic.

JUDGE BEYERS: The sub-classes are very fluid, aren't they?

DR. ZABOW: That is the point I wish to make.

JUDGE BEYERS: They are not species of the same genus. They are emanations and they intertwine and they show signs of one and signs of another. Isn't that so?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is so.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is how I understand the subject. I don't know much about it.

DR. ZABOW: That is correct. One doesn't always get a textbook picture of a particular typo.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you agree that one gets periodic schizophrenics?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, there is a condition described more correctly than periodic schizophrenia, as periodic catatonia, which is a specific variety of schizophrenia described by a Scandinavian psychiatrist Jessing, which he has attempted to relate to the activity of the thyroid gland. It is not the sort of illness that this man presents with, which has to do with catatonic disorder, which is more particularly a motor manifestation of schizophrenia, either acute excitement or catatonic stupor. I would not class the accused in that group at all and I may add that, although Jessing has described this group and it is mentioned in most text books it is not necessarily accepted by all authorities.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Do you get remissions in regard to this condition?

DR. ZABOW: Which condition? Remission in regard to which condition?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: In regard to the condition you have just described?

DR. ZABOW: Periodic catatonia?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Yes?

DR. ZABOW: I believe that the text books describe remissions. I have not personally seen this.

JUDGE BEYERS: What on earth is remission? Is that a time when you do not show the thing?

DR. ZABOW: Well, that would be either a time - it depends there on the definition of the remission. It may either mean, in some people's view, that the disease was no longer present, or perhaps in other people's view, that the disease is no longer manifested,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: To what extent do you think the accused could plan, if there is a serious thought disorder?

DR. ZABOW: Once again I must stress and think of the intelligence itself of the patient, I must stress that although he has once been diagnosed as hebephrenia, we must now accept that it was not a pure hebephrenia anyway, and that there is a certain amount of ego function intact. It is not uncommon for paranoid schizophrenics to be able to plan very ably, but in keeping with their autistic view of the world. Let us say, as they see the world they plan, and the plan itself may be a reasonably complex one, although I am not sure that buying two knives in the morning and stabbing someone the same day is necessarily a complex plan. One could even credit a paranoid with planning something more complex. So that I don't see any contradiction between what has been described to the Court in this man's actions and his mental condition.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused give you a detailed account of how he planned to kill the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: I attempted to get an account from him on several occasions. At times he described to me, as has been described to the Court, how he stabbed the, and how, had he not been held back, he would have continued to stab the deceased. At other times he got so far off the point, as I outlined in my this morning's evidence, that it was impossible to get a coherent account of what had led up to the killing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he first decided to kill the Prime Minister early in August, 1966?

DR. ZABOW: I hesitate. I am not sure that he told me directly, or if I heard it in evidence in Court, but I am aware of it. He did tell me about a gas pistol. I think this was the occasion when he had considered it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Before we get to that, did he tell you that he originally planned to shoot the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, that is why I say the 2.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did he say that he arranged to buy a Beretta pistol from a seaman on the tanker 'Eleni'?

DR. ZABOW: Once again I must say I am not sure if the accused told me this, or if I heard it in the Court here.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he waited for his salary at the end of August, 1966, before buying the pistol?

DR. ZABOW: He didn't tell me that, no

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: And did he also tell you that he intended escaping on the ship

'Eleni' after shooting the deceased?

DR. ZABOW: When I questioned the accused about escape it was mainly in relation to the escape at the time of the alleged offence, and at that time it seemed to me that I could not - in fact, not seem to me, it was so - that I could not get a clear answer from him. He said that he was not aware of the situation and had not a plan to escape. At a subsequent interview I tried to ascertain whether there was any question of him trying to make a sacrifice of himself, and once again there was no logical answer; it got tied up with the tape worm and his whole mental condition.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you how he came into possession of this gas pistol?

DR. ZABOW: I say once again I do not recall asking him specifically. My emphasis, in interviewing him, was on assessing the mental state, the motivation and rather the circumstances of the actual event than the plan which came to no good. I didn't enquire into all that detail.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he say that he changed his plans after he had purchased the pistol which was not suited to his purpose?

DR. ZABOW: The same answer applies. I don't know that I can say.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he decided to kill the Prime Minister by stabbing him?

DR. ZABOW: Well, I am not sure that he used the words 'by stabbing him' but he certainly did tell it to me because he told me about buying the knives, so that I was aware of it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused also tell you that on the morning of the 6th September, 1966, he changed his uniform in Parliament and put on a suit to go down town?

DR. ZABOW: Yes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he say that he left Parliament and went to buy two daggers at different shops round about 9.00 a.m.?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, I have an idea that I may even have the name of the one shop in my notes. It was a gun shop, or something, I think he said. But in any case, I was aware of that too.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did he tell you that he stabbed the Prime Minister in a minute or two when his body-guard was going around to the public gallery?

DR. ZABOW: No, he did not tell me that. As he described that to me, he told me that he was in a sort of a, almost dazed condition; that he came to when he found the people were restraining him, and he said to me that had they not restrained him he would have continued stabbing the deceased repeatedly. At that time he also (for the record) displayed a certain amount of incongruity in telling me this, when he couldn't understand why he was restrained so violently, nor could he understand the reaction of the people around him, and the injuries that he received. He didn't seem to be able to appreciate, you know, he would be restrained.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Did the accused tell you that he hid the daggers in his locker?

JUDGE BEYERS: What is the relevance of all this? The only relevance I can see: Is it possible for a person suffering from schizophrenia to plan, and to plan quite elaborately, to do something?

DR. ZABOW: The answer to that question is 'Yes.' It is possible. All this goes to show that he planned it,

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You say that he could plan, he could plan carefully, even if he was in that condition?

DR. ZABOW: Yes, he could plan. I have said that I feel he could even have planned more complexly than has been described to us, and I would still say that this is in keeping with his schizophrenic illness.

JUDGE BEYERS: Of course, assuming he is a chronic schizophrenic, then his planning would also be related to the unreal and shadow world in which he lives, rather than to the world of reality? I am putting a plain question, I am not being clever.

DR. ZABOW: No, I think one must divide it into the mechanics of the planning and the motivation of the planning. The mechanics obviously - the fact that a knife will kill a human being - he has accepted that part of the real world. But the overall motivation, the whole situation in his mind which led to this plan and to the carrying out of this act, was planned in terms of his autistic life, rather than in terms of reality of the world in which he lives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Does the accused give a good account of his actions?

DR. ZABOW: If counsel would tell me what he means by a 'good account'?

JUDGE BEYERS: The witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: "Did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?" He read pages of the account.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Would you have expected that the accused could have performed his job in Parliament efficiently?

DR. ZABOW: That would depend on the nature of the work the accused was expected to perform.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: He was a messenger?

DR. ZABOW: A messenger could have unskilled or skilled duties. It would still depend on the nature of the actual work, not- the designation of the post.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

Dr. Zabow, just like Dr. Cooper, was unable to get a coherent account from Tsafendas about his killing of Dr. Verwoerd. However, as we have seen in Dr. Sakinofsky's testimony, Tsafendas was well able to give a perfect and detailed account of what led up to the killing and the killing itself twice to the police, but also thirty years later to several witnesses.

Dr. Zabow also stated that Tsafendas told him that he "was not aware of the situation and had not a plan to escape." He said, "At a subsequent interview I tried to ascertain whether there was any question of him trying to make a sacrifice of himself, and once again there was no logical answer; it got tied up with the tapeworm and his whole mental condition." However, Tsafendas gave a perfectly clear and logical answer to the police regarding his escape and about 'sacrificing' himself. More importantly, he discussed the subject in detail thirty years later with three different witnesses on different occasions. Both the issue of escape and "sacrifice" have been discussed in detail in Dr. Cooper's testimony.

Van den Berg's incompetent and irrelevant questions continued with Dr. Zabow. He first asked him whether Tsafendas gave "a good account of his actions." Judge Beyers had to intervene again to remind him that "the witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: "Did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?" He read pages of the account." Naturally van den Berg then dropped the subject.

What was extraordinary about the Attorney-General's handling of the issue was not so much his incompetent and irrelevant questioning as the fact that once again he did not use the plethora of evidence he had in his possession, including the report of Professor van Wyk, his own expert-witness, which flatly contradicted Dr. Zabow's assessment. Prof. van Wyk said that after he had examined Tsafendas three times, he had found that "he is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation."⁵⁶¹⁵ Though van den Berg had this critical report in his possession, he chose not to use it but to waste time with footling questions.

Van den Berg's next question was whether he expected Tsafendas to work in the Parliament efficiently. Again, this is a completely incompetent question, though it would have been relevant before Gerald Shaw's testimony. Shaw had testified to the court just a few hours before that he found Tsafendas's work in Parliament to be inefficient, so what is the purpose of asking his opinion about it? Van den Berg's question would have been perfectly relevant and competent if he had followed up the issue and brought evidence to support his initial argument that Tsafendas's work was efficient. Since he did not do that, what was the purpose of the question? No matter what Dr. Zabow's answer was, it would have made no difference. This question offered nothing at all to the State's case, while it strengthened further the defence's.

The Attorney General's cross-examination of Dr. Zabow was arguably the weakest in the entire summary trial. It was pointless, aiming nowhere and going nowhere, adding nothing of substance to the State's case and posing no challenge to the witness, despite the volumes of evidence the South African police had in its possession.

⁵⁶¹⁵ Bloomberg, 2007: 81.

CONCLUSION

Dr. Zabow diagnosis is almost identical to those of Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Cooper. Naturally, therefore, it contains the same mistakes. You don't have to be a psychiatrist to see that Dr. Zabow's diagnosis is miles from the real Tsafendas, the Tsafendas described to the police and to the author by two hundred witnesses. Tsafendas is presented by Dr. Zabow, after four hours and a half of examination, as a man who was not able to look after himself and live adequately on his own, although at the time he was forty-eight years old and had travelled to sixteen countries, most of the time with very little money, countries where he knew no one, but still managed to work and survive. He is also called a "drifter," which is like calling Odysseus a drifter because of his travels. Tsafendas's odyssey is misunderstood and characterised as drifting by Dr. Zabow, who is clearly not aware of the circumstances of his travels

Dr. Zabow admitted that he based his diagnosis entirely on what he heard from Tsafendas, without receiving any other information from friends, family or even his medical records. The fact remains that Dr. Zabow's diagnosis on Tsafendas is very wide off the mark, as two hundred witnesses can verify. Tsafendas remembered Dr. Zabow until he died. Dr. Zabow and Dr. Sakinofsky were names Tsafendas remembered in later life, always with fondness.

DEFENCE WITNESS No. 17: DR. JAMES WILLIAM MACGREGOR

DR. MACGREGOR'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

A specialist psychiatrist and neurologist since 1937 practising in Cape Town. Qualified in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1937 and worked in a general hospital, then in a mental hospital. Took his Diploma of Psychological Medicine in London in 1938, then went to Oxford. In 1939, Dr. MacGregor joined the British army and in 1940 was appointed an acting specialist psychiatrist and neurologist. Two years later, he was made a full psychiatrist and neurologist and worked in a head injury unit throughout the war. In 1945, he was made consultant neurologist and psychiatrist to the South East of England for the Army. In 1947, he took membership of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh and in 1949, membership of the Royal College of Physicians of London. He came to South African in 1949 and since then had been a specialist neurologist and psychiatrist on the register of the South African Medical Association, working at the Groote Schuur Hospital and in private practice. For the last three years, head of the Neurology Department at Groote Schuur Hospital and a lecturer at the University of Cape Town in neurology. In the course of his professional life, saw many schizophrenics.⁵⁶¹⁶

EXTRACTS FROM DR. MACGREGOR'S TESTIMONY⁵⁶¹⁷

EXAMINING TSAFENDAS AND TAKING "SHORTCUTS"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You were asked by Mr. Bloomberg, attorney for the defence in this case, to examine the accused who is now before Court?

DR. MACGREGOR: I was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: With a view to determining his mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

⁵⁶¹⁶ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁶¹⁷ Dr. James William MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Shortly, how many examinations did you make?

DR. MACGREGOR: I had three examinations. On the 29th of September this year, and on the 4th and 11th of October of this year. All in Caledon Square. Each one lasting approximately an hour and a half or so.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Your first interview was conducted in the presence of Mr. Bloomberg?

DR. MACGREGOR: It was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: There were no other medical practitioners present?

DR. MACGREGOR: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: It was your purpose to establish independently of the opinions of other medical practitioners what you felt the accused's mental condition was?

DR. MACGREGOR: It was.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Correct?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Were you, on the basis of that interview alone, able to form a firm opinion as to the accused's mental state - present mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: I was. I formed a firm opinion, and I put it in writing, and I gave it to Mr. David Bloomberg, saying that I considered this man was suffering from schizophrenia of the paranoid type, and that he was probably certifiable. I was not absolutely certain of this, and I wanted to have other interviews in order to be quite certain about that.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Tell the Court, shortly, and just give the salient features of your first interview?

DR. MACGREGOR: I thought I had to - time was a little bit precious; I had to take shortcuts. I accepted what was given to me about this man's life history, various dates and to which countries he had been. I told him that I was a psychiatrist and I wished to see what his mental state was. I then divided my psychiatric interview up in the usual way. I asked him questions about his childhood; asked him questions about his adult life, his interests, his views on life, his aims, his religion, his political views, and then, finally, coming down to the murder, the motives for the murder and his feelings about the murder.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Approaching the matter and analysing the position – you have analysed it. Will you deal with those heads? First of all his thinking or disturbance of thinking?

DR. MACGREGOR: He showed considerable disturbance of thinking. His thinking was woolly and disjointed. He gave birth to delusions concerning a tapeworm. I can go into more detail about this, but the Court has had a great deal about this, but I await your instructions, my lord, as to whether I should enlarge on this. But it was very much the same matter about the tapeworm which he has told other psychiatrists, and which has been related here.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you have to prompt him on it?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, I knew nothing about this tapeworm before I saw him. And within, I should think three minutes of asking him about his childhood, this story of the tapeworm started to come out.

JUDGE BEYERS: Was this a new one to you? Have you ever heard this one before?

DR. MACGREGOR: I have never heard this one before.

JUDGE BEYERS: A man being almost under the machinations and control of a tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: No. At first I didn't even know whether it was relevant.

JUDGE BEYERS: Have you ever seen it anywhere?

DR. MACGREGOR: I have known schizophrenics who believed that they had spirits and demons within them, yes, but not a tapeworm.

JUDGE BEYERS: That is a completely new one?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In your initial interview did you try and lead him away from the tapeworm? Did you get him to talk about something else?

DR. MACGREGOR: Well, at first I tried to lead him away from it, but then I wasn't aware that it was of much importance. But it didn't take very long to realise that this was the central theme of his thought. Very early on he told me that this tapeworm had changed his whole life. Again at first I approached it as a purely medical matter, and asked him what tests had been done, what sort of tapeworm it was, and how he thought it was there, and we got the same kind of replies that had been given to other people, that this was a special tapeworm. He called it in that particular interview a demon, a snake and a devil. He described it in grossly exaggerated terms as a very large tapeworm, probably 20 or 30 feet long, probably related to an East African species. Such was the command of his language that he used the term "serrated," "with serrated edges."

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where did he feel that he could obtain treatment for this bizarre tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: He told me at that interview that he thought the only place where he could be treated satisfactorily was in South America.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Has he since expressed any other opinion as to how he could be treated for the tapeworm?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. He thought that he might go to Glasgow and be treated with this machine which was described earlier on this morning. But he still thinks perhaps in South America he would get the best treatment.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did he also consider whether he may not go to a surgeon to have it cut out?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. He has told me that it is incurable, except by surgery, and that this machine that he mentioned was probably only a diagnostic method of discovering the whereabouts of this worm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Again, this is repetition, but it is important; this is a serious enquiry, it is a serious charge. What is the importance of this delusion, if I may call it that?

DR. MACGREGOR: It seems to me that it has disorganised his whole personality, his whole relationship with the real world.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What has it done to his personality?

DR. MACGREGOR: I don't know what the delusion has done to it, because this is, I think part of a schizophrenic process. But it has altered his actions in certain ways in that he is forever thinking of food for this tapeworm, and forever being careful, he told me this, not to pass too close to shops with delicacies in the windows in case the tapeworm smelt this and would crawl up underneath his chest and start causing him pain. He further me that the pains caused by this tapeworm are so terrible that, if it had not been for his religion, he would be dead.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S ABOVE TESTIMONYON TAKING "SHORTCUTS" DUE TO THE LACK OF TIME

Like Dr. Zabow, Dr. MacGregor also spent a total of four and a half hours with Tsafendas. Dr. MacGregor admitted something that went unmentioned by the other psychiatrists although it affected them too, and appeared quite understandable in the circumstances. This was that under pressure of time, he was forced "to take shortcuts" in his examination and accept what was given to him by Tsafendas about Tsafendas's own life history without the opportunity to check it further. This admission by Dr. MacGregor says a great deal, not only about his diagnosis and how he came to it and how reliable it could be, but also about the way things were done by all those involved with Tsafendas's defence due to the pressure of time.

THE TAPEWORM

The issue of the tapeworm, as Dr. MacGregor observed, was extensively discussed earlier in this chapter and in this report, so it is not going to be discussed here again. However, we should mention that Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm in relation to his childhood and only three minutes after Dr. MacGregor had brought up his childhood. As we have seen before, Tsafendas never mentioned the tapeworm to anyone when he was a child, not even to his family.⁵⁶¹⁸

Dr. MacGregor conceded he had never heard of anyone hallucinating about a tapeworm and that it was something "completely new" to him. This is exactly what Tsafendas said about why he used the tapeworm ploy - because it was unique and everyone took an interest in it and believed him. He later said, "Everyone hears voices or pretends to be Napoleon, but who would ever suspect anyone who believes he has a tapeworm?" Tsafendas had been impressed by the way the psychiatrists treated Tom Tuff, who supposedly had a tapeworm, and the amount of attention he was receiving from them. This was the reason Tsafendas adopted the tapeworm idea – its uniqueness.⁵⁶¹⁹ The author is not in position to know whether Tom Tuff really believed he had a tapeworm or not, but it was he who inspired Tsafendas to use it.

⁵⁶¹⁸ For more about the issue look at Dr. Cooper's testimony.

⁵⁶¹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

TSAFENDAS'S "ONLY WISH"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Have you put to him what he would like, what one wish he had in life?

DR. MACGREGOR: At the end of that first interview I put it to him that if he were to be granted one single wish in life what would it be, and I expected him to say that he would like to be out of the Police cells, a free man, but to my surprise he said he wanted to get rid of the tapeworm. I then thought I would give him an alternative, and I said slowly and carefully to him that if he had an alternative between two wishes, either to get rid of the tapeworm or to avoid this terrible tragedy, to avoid all the fuss and horribleness of being a prisoner awaiting trial, with his life in danger, and avoid the murder, avoid all the consequences of the murder, if he had a choice between that and getting rid of the tapeworm, which would he choose, and, without any hesitation, he said there would be no point in being free unless he got rid of the tapeworm.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: How did you find his emotional balance?

DR. MACGREGOR: I thought his emotional balance was extremely poor. He showed great ferocity of emotion. I put to him that he was accused of murdering a man - not only that he was a politician, but that he was a man who was a father and a husband - and what did he think of this, and he said yes he had thought about it. And this was the one time when he used a word which he mispronounced he said it has caused me "misery", and I believe he meant "misery." And I said "Tell me further, what do you think about this? - What do you think about the Prime Minister's wife?" And he said "Yes, I thought about her." Then there was a long pause. I asked him again what has he thought about her, and he said "I would not like to meet her face to face." I said "Have you thought anything else about her?" and he said "Yes, I wouldn't like to live in Cape Town." I said why would he not like to live in Cape Town, "I am asking you what have you thought about the consequences of this murder?", and he said yes, he would not like to live in Cape Town because he didn't think he could face up to people, and he would prefer to go to South America and to start cultivating the ground there, he would like to be in the jungle. And then there was a whole ramble about having a pool, he would like there to be fish in the pool, and he could work there, and work hard.

COMMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS'S "ONLY WISH"

When Dr. MacGregor asked Tsafendas about a wish, he replied that his only wish was to "get rid of the tapeworm." We won't discuss the tapeworm again, but just to show how this answer was a "performance" for the psychiatrists, we list the following incidents. In 1996, Tsafendas was visited in prison by Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris. When they asked him if there was anything he wanted, he replied, "my freedom."⁵⁶²⁰

When Tsafendas was frequently asked by Father Minas Constandinou, Rika Nikolatos, Father Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis who visited him in prison and later in hospital if there was anything he wanted, he always gave the same answer, "my freedom." He never asked them for help to "get rid of the tapeworm."⁵⁶²¹ In 1993, Tsafendas wrote a letter to his good friend John Michaletos "kindly requesting" him to endeavour to have him released from prison.⁵⁶²²

TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES AND DR. VERWOERD BEING "THE RIGHT MAN"

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In this context, you remember that a Mr. Smorenberg said that Tsafendas worked under him at the power station. You heard Mr. Smorenberg say that?

DR. MACGREGOR: I did.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Mr. Smorenberg said they were one day below the surface, 40 feet down I think, or something like that, in an eerie chamber which he likened unto a dungeon, and then this little conversation took place. Tsafendas suggested there that it would be a good thing if all the Coloured people were brought into the chamber, the chamber closed, and a door opened and the seawater then drown then. That remark. On the other hand we have it that Tsafendas was very fond of the O'Ryans and the Daniels, and that from time to time he thought about becoming a member of the Coloured community. What is your comment on this?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think this shows an ambivalence, a variation, a plus and minus sign ⁵⁶²⁰ Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 27 June 2014.

⁵⁶²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁶²² Letter of Dimitri Tsafendas to John Michaletos, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

so to speak about his attitude towards the Coloured. And this kind of ambivalence is very typical of the attitudes of schizophrenics. They are inconsistent in their attitudes and outlooks.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You have it there that on that occasion he thought Dr. Verwoerd was a good man - I think he put it that he was the right man?

DR. MACGREGOR: I heard the witness say that, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Now you have it subsequently that he goes and stabs Dr. Verwoerd, the person whom he two months previously called the right man. What is your comment on that?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think that probably is an example of this very kind of ambivalence again, when schizophrenic swings from one extreme to the other.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S TESTIMONY ON TSAFENDAS'S RACIAL PREFERENCES AND DR. VERWOERD BEING "THE RIGHT MAN"

Dr. MacGregor attributed Tsafendas's dislike of Coloureds, according to an incident reported by Owen Smorenberg, to schizophrenia. He said: "I think this shows an ambivalence, a variation, a plus and minus sign so to speak, about his attitude towards the Coloured. And this kind of ambivalence is very typical of the attitudes of schizophrenics. They are inconsistent in their attitudes and outlooks." However, as we have seen, it was not Tsafendas who was inconsistent in his views, but Smorenberg's statement. Smorenberg's statement has been analysed and dismissed by the author as inaccurate for various reasons, which were obviously unknown to Dr. MacGregor.

The issue of whether Tsafendas liked or disliked Coloureds has also been examined at length in the testimonies of Dr. Cooper and Smorenberg himself, so these issues will not be discussed again here. However, the surprising thing here is that Smorenberg's contradictory statement is taken as "ambivalent" behaviour by Tsafendas by Dr. MacGregor, who is obviously unaware of Tsafendas's political ideas and character. The fact that the statement is contradictory is attributed to schizophrenia and not that Smorenberg might have misunderstood.

Advocate Cooper then carefully and intelligently manipulates Tsafendas's alleged words and from Dr. Verwoerd being the "right man," he becomes a "good man." Thus,

Advocate Cooper asks how Tsafendas could have killed someone he thought he was a “good man.” The issue of the “right man” has also been extensively discussed in Smorenberg’s testimony. Dr. MacGregor, obviously unaware of Tsafendas’s beliefs about Dr. Verwoerd, attributes it to “ambivalence” again, “when a schizophrenic swings from one extreme to the other.” However, as we have seen repeatedly, Tsafendas did not swing from one extreme to the other. More than a hundred witnesses testified to this study, to the police and to the Commission that Tsafendas opposed apartheid, while more than twenty testified that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, Hitler’s best student, not the real representative of all South African people etc. Not a single one of the three hundred witnesses who were questioned by the author and by the police at the time said anything about Tsafendas considering Dr. Verwoerd to be the “right man.” Of course, Dr. MacGregor was not in position to know that and could only comment on what was given to him, as he himself admitted.

The fact that Smorenberg’s statement is a contradiction to Tsafendas’s actions and to what was testified by the O’Ryans and the Daniels about him, is taken as “ambivalent” behaviour by Tsafendas without anyone considering the possibility that Smorenberg’s statement was inaccurate. Dr. Macgregor was not aware of the inaccuracy of Smorenberg’s statement, but the Attorney-General must have known since he would have been in possession of the one hundred and fifty statements the police gathered from people who knew Tsafendas, the two statements that Tsafendas gave to the police and several other evidence gathered by the South African police that could have easily broken down Smorenberg’s testimony. The fact that van den Berg failed to use them when Smorenberg testified gave the defence the opportunity to use this false testimony to further support their line. The Attorney-General remained in his seat, offering no challenge.

TSAFENDAS HAVING “NO AIM IN LIFE,” “ACHIEVED NOTHING WORTHWILE IN HIS LIFE” AND “NO FRIENDSHIPS OF LASTING DEPTH”

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Similarly, you have here the incident when at seven o’clock in the morning, at the Daniels’s, he knocks them up, he has a bag of meat which could feed about two people, tomatoes and eggs etc., and he wants a pan and he wants a little stove to make a meal, but he eats this meal in a gargantuan way, if I can say it.

JUDGE BEYERS: Don’t look like that about a rare done T-bone steak, Mr. Cooper. You are pulling a face about something which I wouldn't mind having tonight.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: He eats it with the blood, and then he says he is feeding the worm. What is your comment on that?

DR. MACGREGOR: Well, I think this illustrates how this delusion about the worm disorganised his life and his realistic approach to life.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find any disturbance of volition?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. I think this great stubborn persistence after years of investigations in the belief that he still had the tapeworm - no one could shake him about this - this is a very good example of this stubbornness, the negativistic attitude of the schizophrenic. His whole drifting life in which, as far as I can make out, he never achieved anything worthwhile, any concrete act, concrete position that is worthwhile - he never seemed to achieve any friendship of lasting depth, and he had no particular desires to achieve anything. He had no aim in life except to get rid of this tapeworm. This too is typical of the lack of volition, the lack of pattern, the lack of drive of the schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is this "borne out" by the history that we have of him in Cape Town between the 28th of August and the time of his arrest? Going from one job to another, being unemployed and visiting hospitals?

DR. MACGREGOR: That is consistent with his state, but I would not have diagnosed schizophrenia just on that alone. It is perfectly consistent with a schizophrenic state.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS HAVING "NO AIM IN LIFE," "ACHIEVED NOTHING WORTHWILE IN HIS LIFE" AND "NO FRIENDSHIPS OF LASTING DEPTH"

The above is an identical diagnosis to that of Dr. Cooper and as we have seen in his testimony, is entirely inaccurate. Tsafendas's friendships and relationships with people have been covered at length in comments on Dr. Cooper's testimony, as have the other two claims, but due to their importance and in order to show how wrong Dr. MacGregor was, they will be discussed here again, although not in such detail. The issue of the steak at Daniels's house and the "feeding the worms" comment have been discussed extensively in Peter Daniels's testimony.

According to Dr. MacGregor, Tsafendas had achieved nothing and had no aims in his life. The fact that PIDE had a 130-page file on him since he was twenty and that he was forced into exile from Mozambique and prosecuted in Portugal for his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities give the lie to Dr. MacGregor's assessment of a life lacking in aims and achievements. As for doing something "worthwhile," Tsafendas taught English without charge for six or seven months to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul, and also on two occasions to poor children in Mozambique. This was because he believed education was "worthwhile." That he was an active member of the British anti-apartheid and anti-fascist movements, participating in demonstrations and that he smuggled anti-apartheid literature into South Africa would certainly be considered "worthwhile" by many, though undoubtedly not by everyone, especially in South Africa in 1966.

This supposedly aimless man toured villages in Beira, seeking to raise awareness of the independence cause and for this suffered imprisonment and torture.⁵⁶²³ Working for Mozambican independence at the cost of arrest, imprisonment and torture by the Portuguese Police is an achievement rooted in conviction. The fact that the Director-General of PIDE in Portugal instructed the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique that "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities,"⁵⁶²⁴ can also be seen as an achievement for Tsafendas. That he joined the Greek Communist Party and its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War and fought for a cause was the achievement of an aim.

Finally, he taught at Turkey's best private language college for about half a year. That was an achievement not everyone could have managed. Whether one agrees or disagrees with Tsafendas's political ideas, it cannot be denied that the activities listed above are many more than most ordinary people achieve. Yet that does not make these people non-achievers or schizophrenics.

Tsafendas did enough during his lifetime to render significant service to society, the question of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination being debatable. Far from having no aim in life, he had well-defined goals. He wanted "to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa" and ⁵⁶²³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶²⁴ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

was willing to “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”⁵⁶²⁵ He fearlessly told the PIDE agents who were questioning him that he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation,” and that he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique.⁵⁶²⁶ Furthermore, Tsafendas did not simply cherish these as hopes for Mozambique’s future, but worked actively to secure them by campaigning for independence and by “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”⁵⁶²⁷ For his political beliefs and his efforts to raise awareness of the independence issue, he was five times arrested, imprisoned and tortured and forced to live on exile for twelve years.

However, the most glaringly obvious aim of Tsafendas’s life was right there in front of Dr. MacGregor and he failed to see it. Tsafendas wanted apartheid to end, he wanted to see a government in South Africa that would represent all the South African people and he wanted Dr. Verwoerd removed so that national policy would change, as he told the police in his statement⁵⁶²⁸ and later repeated several times.⁵⁶²⁹ However, Dr. MacGregor was not in possession of Tsafendas’s statement, or the statements given to the police by people who knew him or of any other information to apprise him of who Tsafendas really was. Thus, as he openly admitted, he simply took what was given to him at face value.

THE IMPORTANCE OF VAN ZYL’S TESTS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: We also had the evidence of the psychologist, Mr. van Zyl, this morning. What is the significance of his findings and his observations?

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe this finding of scatter, as it is called, is very significant and indicates strongly, tends to indicate a schizophreniform process. And furthermore his inability to deal adequately with abstract situations. He finds it easier to deal with concrete ⁵⁶²⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶²⁶ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶²⁷ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶²⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶²⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

situations. It is quite typical of a schizophrenic.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So you find that important evidence?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, I do. Confirmatory but not diagnostic.

JUDGE BEYERS: More or less a cross check?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. I don't think anyone would diagnose schizophrenia on that alone.

COMMENTS ON THE IMPORTANCE OF VAN ZYL'S TESTS

Dr. MacGregor found van Zyl's tests as "confirmatory, but not diagnostic." However, as this study has already shown, van Zyl's tests were inaccurate and his conclusions wrong. Since this issue has been discussed extensively in van Zyl's testimony, it would not be discussed here again.

TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Isn't the work of the clinical psychologist helpful in trying to remove the possibility of all this being simulated?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, I think so. Very much so. And, taking that point, all of us of course wondered whether this man might be simulating, and I went there prepared to deal with a man that might be simulating, because I knew very little about him, except what I had read in the papers. But you know, when one put things to him which, if he was simulating, he could have clutched at, he didn't take them. When one asked whether he heard voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear, he denied this. But I am not sure whether he doesn't actually hear some kind of voice. But we know schizophrenic people often deny that they have hallucinations. When I asked him whether he had any sense of unreality, no.

COMMENTS REGARDING TSAFENDAS SIMULATING

The issue of simulation has been discussed in detail in Dr. Cooper's testimony. However let us briefly examine what was said here. Dr. MacGregor stated that he considered whether or not Tsafendas was simulating. He tried the same "trick" that Dr. Cooper tried. He asked him if he heard "any voices, which is a common thing, for mad people to hear." As with Dr.

Cooper, Tsafendas did not fall into the trap, denying any such thing. Why did Tsafendas react in this way? Because twenty years earlier, he had pretended to hear voices and he was then discovered to be simulating. The Grafton State Hospital report also stated that in 1946 Tsafendas heard voices from the radiators.⁵⁶³⁰

The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and (the Commission) therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁵⁶³¹ Of course the Commission of Enquiry was in possession of most of the documents gathered by the police, plus others. Dr. MacGregor was unaware of anything about Tsafendas except what he heard from him.

Given that Tsafendas was experienced with psychiatrists, it was to be expected that he did not take Dr. MacGregor's bait. It is also evident that Dr. MacGregor was not aware of the contents of the Grafton State Hospital report, where it said that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” and had claimed to hear voices from the radiators.⁵⁶³² Naturally, Tsafendas's experience with psychiatrists had increased since 1946 and he did not make the same mistake of claiming to hear voices. Dr. MacGregor was not aware of this, unlike the Commission of Enquiry, the South African police and presumably the State.

TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Was he influenced by people? Did he feel himself under pressures from outside agencies of any kind?

DR. MACGREGOR: No. All these questions were not put at once. One had to slip them in unobtrusively. When I asked whether he thought he was mentally unbalanced, he denied this firmly - not in any way. If one said to him “Why have you been in so many mental hospitals?” then we got all kinds of reasons, including the reason that at least on one occasion ⁵⁶³⁰ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵⁶³¹ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁶³² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

he was put into a mental hospital in Lisbon because the doctors were so poorly paid that the only way they could supplement their earnings was to take patients from the tropical hospital, where he was being investigated for a tapeworm, keep their clothes and belongings, and put them in a mental hospital. This he told me was well known, and it was told to him by the cook, nurses and by many people outside. When I said this was a ridiculous statement because, if it was true, it would become public, he said no, the corruption was so great that no one could ever make this public.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S HOSPITALIZATIONS

The issue has been examined extensively in Dr. Cooper's testimony and therefore it would not be discussed here again.

TSAFENDAS'S MANNERISMS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: His face - what were his facial mannerisms?

DR. MACGREGOR: Most of the time throughout these interviews he looked in a bland, rather disinterested, way. From time to time he would make a grimace, which I think Dr. Cooper referred to, which is half a smile, half a snarl. He pulled down the corners of his mouth and showed his teeth. This seemed to be irrelevant to the subject that was under discussion at the time. From time to time he rocked backwards and forwards, and, particularly at the last interview, he seemed to scratch himself continuously. When I asked whether there was any reason for this, he paid no attention and just went on scratching.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the significance of this?

DR. MACGREGOR: I think these are mannerisms such as are common in schizophrenic patients. I saw no other reason. Stereotyped repetition of these movements, which were not very noticeable, particularly the rocking wasn't particularly noticeable, but, particularly at the last interview, it went on the whole time.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S MANNERISMS

The report from Grafton State hospital also stated that Tsafendas demonstrated peculiar mannerisms.⁵⁶³³ However, none of about two hundred people who were interviewed by the author, by the Commission or by the police at the time mentioned anything about peculiar mannerisms. The author specifically asked forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas well about this, and no one ever saw him do anything like Dr. MacGregor described. It would be unnecessary and not practical to name every person who was asked about this, particularly since names are given in the introduction of the study. Here is a short selection from the many knew Tsafendas very well and spent a lot of time with him and denied ever noticing grimaces or rocking or scratching or suchlike by Tsafendas:

- Katerina Pnema, his half-sister.⁵⁶³⁴
- Father Nikola Banovic, in 1961, lived in the same house as Tsafendas for four months and in a house next door for another two or three months.⁵⁶³⁵
- Father Michalis Visvinis who very regularly visited him for five years in prison (1989-1994).⁵⁶³⁶
- Fotini Gavasiadis spent every day for nine months with him.⁵⁶³⁷
- Reuben O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas in the same house for five months and kept in touch with him for another year.⁵⁶³⁸
- Stanley O'Ryan lived with Tsafendas for five months at the same house and kept in touch for another year.⁵⁶³⁹
- Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas's first cousin.⁵⁶⁴⁰
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and remained a lifelong friend.⁵⁶⁴¹

⁵⁶³³Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵⁶³⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁶³⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁶³⁶ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵⁶³⁷ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁶³⁸ Reuben O' Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

⁵⁶³⁹ Stanley O' Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

⁵⁶⁴⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁵⁶⁴¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

- Irene Michaletos was very close to Tsafendas between 1964 and 1965.⁵⁶⁴²
- John Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousin, met him in Lourenço Marques in 1951, and saw a lot of him in Mozambique between 1963 and 1965.⁵⁶⁴³
- Antony Michaletos, Tsafendas's cousin, met him in Lourenço Marques in 1951 and saw a lot of him in Mozambique between 1963 and 1965.⁵⁶⁴⁴
- Andreas Babiolakis knew Tsafendas since they were children.⁵⁶⁴⁵
- Costas Chagios knew Tsafendas from 1965 until his arrest.⁵⁶⁴⁶
- Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six-seven months in Istanbul in 1961.⁵⁶⁴⁷
- Joyce Dick, one of Helen Daniels's best friends and member of the Christian Church.⁵⁶⁴⁸
- Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board.⁵⁶⁴⁹
- Miltiades Kaldis knew Tsafendas for about a year, having met him in 1965 in Cape Town.⁵⁶⁵⁰
- Elias Constantaras met him in 1965 in Cape Town and saw him almost daily until his arrest.⁵⁶⁵¹
- Helen Grispos, another who grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques.⁵⁶⁵²
- Peter Peroglou ate at the same place as Tsafendas for several months in 1966.⁵⁶⁵³
- Pamela Abrahams knew Tsafendas for several months in 1966.⁵⁶⁵⁴
- Nick Augustides, the son of the owner of Mike's Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission for about two months in 1966.⁵⁶⁵⁵

⁵⁶⁴² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁶⁴³ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁶⁴⁴ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

⁵⁶⁴⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵⁶⁴⁶ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

⁵⁶⁴⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵⁶⁴⁸ Joyce Dick in a personal interview, 6 August 2016.

⁵⁶⁴⁹ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 3 August 2016.

⁵⁶⁵⁰ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

⁵⁶⁵¹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵⁶⁵² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

⁵⁶⁵³ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁵⁶⁵⁴ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁵⁶⁵⁵ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

- Ten of the sailors of the Eleni saw Tsafendas every day for forty-two days and up to three days before the assassination.⁵⁶⁵⁶

TSAFENDAS'S E.E.G.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: An E.E.G. was taken?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. That was perfectly normal. That was done in my department at Groote Schuur.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is that?

DR. MACGREGOR: An electro encephalogram. That was perfectly normal.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is that finding inconsistent with your diagnosis of the accused's condition?

DR. MACGREGOR: It is perfectly consistent with schizophrenic process. It is not likely to be - one is not likely to have a normal E.E.G. In fact I think it is practically impossible to have a normal E.E.G. in a mental picture due to some years of organic process in the brain. In other words if this picture was due to brain damage back in 1959 we would have an abnormal E.E.G.

JUDGE BEYERS: Or if it was due to epilepsy?

DR. MACGREGOR: Or if it was due to epilepsy.

JUDGE BEYERS: You would see it there?

DR. MACGREGOR: We would almost certainly see it. I specifically got the technician to get him to overbreathe, flash lights at him which are ways of simulating the abnormal waves, and bringing them out if epilepsy is present.

JUDGE BEYERS: If I understand anything of what I have heard, and understand anything about the subject of schizophrenia, you would find nothing?

DR. MACGREGOR: That is the usual finding, yes, in my experience. There are other people who say that they are rather abnormal waves, but this depends on the degree of dementia. If the schizophrenic patient is very demented, then you may get abnormal, rather irregular waves - not epileptiform waves. But when the personality, when the intellect is not too far deteriorated, the picture is nearly always a normal one, unless there is some other factor present, isn't the dysrhythmia of the waves caused "by the electric impulse passing through the tissues? Mustn't you by that time have a physiological change taking place?

⁵⁶⁵⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

DR. MACGREGOR: There must be a physiological change, yes. And this is one of the arguments which many psychiatrists put forward to the fact that they believe that schizophrenia is primarily

JUDGE BEYERS: It may have an organic background?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

TSAFENDAS'S THOUGHT-BLOCKING, PAST MEDICAL RECORDS AND DR. MACGREGOR'S PROGNOSIS

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Did you find thought blocking?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes. In my first interview, not very much thought blocking. He paused. I was not very happy about putting this down as thought blocking. But in the second, and particularly in the third interview, he showed very marked thought blocking. On one occasion there was absolute silence for a timed period of just on two minutes. There were very many occasions when he stopped speaking for ten seconds, and would then go off at a complete tangent.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In short then, what is the accused's present mental state?

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe that he is suffering from schizophrenia. I would put I think it into the paranoid type. Dr. Sakinofsky put it in the paraphrenic type. I would not quarrel with this. A paraphrenic type is a subdivision of the paranoid type. I don't think one needs to be too exact as to which category one puts it in. That he is suffering from schizophrenia I have absolutely no doubt at all. That he is certifiable within the meaning of the Act I have also no doubt at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Is it a long standing disease?

DR. MACGREGOR: I believe in his case it has gone on from at least 1946 or 1947, yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is the prognosis?

DR. MACGREGOR: I agree with the others in thinking the prognosis is hopeless. But it would be worthwhile giving him treatment, but I would not give it with any sanguinity.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Where should this Court, in your opinion, send the accused?

DR. MACGREGOR: My opinion isn't worth very much, but, if I were asked, I would say he must be sent somewhere where he can be very closely watched and guarded, because he told us that on at least two occasions he has escaped from mental hospitals, once in Germany and once in Lisbon.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Should he be sent to an asylum?

DR. MACGREGOR: I don't think any ordinary asylum would hold this man for any length of time.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Finally, do you see any purpose whatsoever in having any further medical examination of this man?

DR. MACGREGOR: Not unless the Court were to ask me - I myself would not see any further purpose at all.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Just finally, you have seen the information from overseas concerning this man's past medical history and mental history?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: What is your comment on that? How important is that information?

DR. MACGREGOR: If that information is correct, I think it is absolutely consistent and confirmatory of the fact that this man has had chronic paranoid schizophrenia for many years.

COMMENTS ON DR. MACGREGOR'S ABOVE TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS'S MEDICAL RECORDS

Dr. MacGregor states here that he has seen some "information from overseas" concerning Tsafendas's "past medical history and mental history." He then, surprisingly maybe, states that "if this information is correct ..." which suggests that he is unsure whether or not the information is correct. The author is not in a position to elaborate further on the subject as it does not know which information Dr. MacGregor is talking about. However, the likelihood must be that the information regarding Tsafendas's medical history was given to him verbally by the police and the defence, as in the case of van Zyl.

It seems unlikely that if he had seen a medical report from a British or an American hospital with his own eyes he would have asked if this information was correct. What seems likelier is that he was merely told of some of the contents. That he learned about Tsafendas's past history from Tsafendas himself can be adduced from his statement that Tsafendas "told us that on at least two occasions he has escaped from mental hospitals, once in Germany and once in Lisbon." This argues strongly that his source was Tsafendas, not any medical report. Most likely, as with van Zyl, he was given the summary of a medical report stating just that Tsafendas was diagnosed in such and such hospital as being a schizophrenic.

Furthermore, Dr. MacGregor was not aware of very important information regarding Tsafendas's medical history, such as the fact that he had faked mental illness before, that he claimed to hear voices in the early 1940s and that on at least four occasions he had shown signs of mental illness while being interrogated in detention. This again suggests that he had not seen the report with his own eyes and was probably told about the diagnosis only. Furthermore, the fact that he did not personally see any medical reports is also suggested by his statement at the beginning of his testimony that "time was precious" and he had "to take shortcuts. I accepted what was given to me about this man's life history, various dates and to which countries he had been." Dr. MacGregor also stated that he made his diagnosis on the basis of his interviews with Tsafendas alone without mentioning consulting any medical reports.

We should also mention here again that at least the report from the Grafton State Hospital did not become available to the defence before, at best, the 5th of October, when Dr. MacGregor and all the defence's expert witnesses, apart from Dr. Sakinofsky and van Zyl, had already examined Tsafendas twice and concluded that he was a schizophrenic.

DR. MACGREGOR'S PROGNOSIS

Dr. MacGregor's prognosis was that Tsafendas's condition was "hopeless," with doubts that treatment could help him. However, thirty-three years later witnesses declared that Tsafendas was perfectly fine. In all that time, he had received no treatment (at least not for the first twenty-eight years); for at least twenty-three years he was kept in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours per day, in a cell right next to the death chamber, often forced to watch the executions; he was frequently and severely beaten, deprived of books and newspapers and even contact with his fellow prisoners.

That Tsafendas was perfectly normal after that was testified by Alexander and Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Dimitris Skoularikis, Liza Key, Rika Nikolatos and Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos, Ioannis Tsafaridis and Michalis Visvinis. All these people visited or saw Tsafendas in prison or in the mental hospital to which he was eventually moved, and spent considerable time with him. None ever got the impression that Tsafendas was insane or "hopeless" in the way described by Dr. MacGregor and by the other psychiatrists at this summary trial. More importantly, after his long incarceration, Tsafendas explained in detail everything regarding Dr. Verwoerd's assassination and his life. What he told these witnesses is entirely compatible with what two hundred people told the police and the author and completely incompatible with Dr. MacGregor's and the other psychiatrists' testimonies.

COMMENTS ON TSAFENDAS'S THOUGHT-BLOCKING

The issue has been discussed extensively in the testimonies of Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE ASSISTANT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

BRUNETTE: Can you perhaps remember when it was that you saw the accused for the first time?

DR. MACGREGOR: Yes, on the 29th September. At about 6.30.

BRUNETTE: You say he was not certifiable on that day?

DR. MACGREGOR: I say I wasn't very happy about considering him certifiable.

JUDGE BEYERS: The doctor never said anything of the kind. He said on the strength of the first interview he had with him he would have been doubtful whether he would at that stage certify him, which is quite different from your telling him that he says that at that stage he was not certifiable.

BRUNETTE: You would not have been prepared to certify him on that day?

DR. MACGREGOR: If I had been pressed to certify him on that day I would have asked for a longer interview. But I had about an hour and a half with him, and I knew there was no need to certify him on that day, and I knew I was going to have further opportunity of seeing him, so I thought to myself that I would just bide my time, but I did say in my report that I thought that he was probably certifiable.

BRUNETTE: You also mentioned that schizophrenics do move from one extreme to the other. So do you concede that you get remissionary periods?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, that is not what I meant, moving from one extreme - one extreme of emotional attitude - one extreme of an attitude towards a person, a negative attitude, perhaps disliking them, distrusting them, to a more positive attitude of liking them and trusting them. This has nothing to do with remissions. It is all part of the schizophrenic process.

BRUNETTE: Do you concede that there are periodic types?

DR. MACGREGOR: I concede that there are periodic types, but I would also agree with the last witness that - in my opinion these are virtually always the catatonic type. And I don't believe this patient is a catatonic type of schizophrenic. He had no evidence of catatonia when we saw him.

BRUNETTE: Did you get any information in probing the history of the accused that he had simulated suicide before?

DR. MACGREGOR: No, I knew nothing about any simulation of suicide.

JUDGE BEYERS: Simulated suicide - what on earth does that mean? He pretended to commit suicide?

BRUNETTE: He pretended. Feigned suicide.

JUDGE BEYERS: What does that mean, that he committed suicide but was not successful?

BRUNETTE: Unsuccessful, yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: Simulated suicide would mean that he pretended to commit suicide but didn't try it.

BRUNETTE: Perhaps I can put it in a better way: any of simulated abnormality?

DR. MACGREGOR: I know nothing in the reports that say that he simulated abnormality.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The only matter that remains at present is the subject that I raised at the commencement when I outlined my case, if I might call it that, and that is the taking of evidence on commission, I have prepared an application which I now want to formally place before your Lordship.

JUDGE BEYERS: This is not the stage to do it, nor will I deprive you of the right to do it. Should it, after evidence is led by the State, be necessary, I will allow you to make the application, and I will consider it on its merits. But obviously in granting or not granting leave to take evidence overseas, the first consideration is whether the evidence can assist the Court, if it is not necessary it obviously cannot assist the Court, I think you should wait, but I will allow you to make the application again, if necessary.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Subject to that, I have no further evidence to lead.

COMMENTS ON THE CROSS-EXAMINATION

The most astonishing part of Brunette's cross-examination is his reference to Tsafendas having simulated abnormality before. Even more extraordinary, although it is not spelled out, is that Brunette suggests that such information is in Tsafendas's medical records. It is unclear what Tsafendas is supposed to have done on this occasion and where this information came from, but the important thing here is that the State had in its possession such vital information and it had not been used, especially with the defence's psychiatrists. It seems that the State did not consider it important enough or for some reason deliberately did not bring this issue up when challenging the defence psychiatrists who had examined Tsafendas, even when the issue of simulation came up. As for Brunette's cross-examination, neither he nor the Attorney-General nor the judge saw fit to pursue the simulation angle and the matter was allowed to drop.

The Attorney-General's assistant refers initially to Tsafendas having simulated suicide. Although the author cannot be certain to which incident Brunette refers, this is probably in Hamburg when Tsafendas turned up at the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital claiming falsely that he had attempted suicide by taking twenty sleeping pills. The fact that Tsafendas was lying does not appear anywhere in the reports from this hospital, so if this was the incident Brunette is referring to, how did he know about it? Tsafendas never discussed this particular incident with anyone who was interviewed by the author. However, he discussed the issue of suicide in philosophical and religious terms several times with the priests who visited him.

Tsafendas firmly believed that only a very brave man could commit suicide and considered himself not brave enough to do so. That was why, he said, he never contemplated suicide, not even when he was tortured in custody or in prison. Also, he considered suicide to be seriously sinful and since he was very religious, this was another reason why he never contemplated such an act.⁵⁶⁵⁷ If he did not contemplate suicide at some of the worst times of his life, why would he do so in Hamburg? It is not impossible but very unlikely that the suicide attempt mentioned in Dr. Bieser's report was genuine. The more likely scenario, which would fit with Tsafendas's life style and ideas, is that being penniless and homeless in Hamburg, he admitted himself to the Tropen Krankenhaus Hospital claiming he had a tapeworm; when he was discharged, since no tapeworm was found, he was still penniless and homeless and so admitted himself to another hospital, lying that he had taken the twenty sleeping pills. It is possible that Brunette was referring to this incident, although the author did not find any evidence to support or contradict the possibility. It is merely the author's opinion based on Tsafendas's beliefs and modus operandi with the hospitals. If Brunette was referring to this incident, he got the information from a source that was not found in the archives or anywhere else by the author.

The only other reference to suicide in Tsafendas's medical records is from the United States in 1943, when he told the US Immigration he would commit suicide if he was deported. However, that was just a threat and obviously never carried it out. As for "simulating abnormality," the South African police were very well aware that Tsafendas had done such thing at least twice. The first was the report from the Grafton State Hospital which said that in 1943 Tsafendas had faked mental illness to avoid being shipped out; the second was when Tsafendas pretended to be mad so as to avoid compulsory service in the Portuguese Army in 1952, which was known to the police from witnesses' statements.

⁵⁶⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

CONCLUSION

Dr. MacGregor's testimony and diagnosis are very similar to those of the three other psychiatrists. He comes to the same conclusions and therefore the same misdiagnosis. There is a major difference to the other psychiatrists' testimonies, however, and this is that Dr. MacGregor admits freely that he was pressed for time and took "shortcuts" in order to complete his diagnosis, which was based exclusively on four and a half hours he spent with Tsafendas, without consulting any additional information.

The most important thing we learn from Dr. MacGregor's testimony is that the State was aware that Tsafendas had "simulated abnormality" before, but had not found it important enough to bring up with all the other defence witnesses. Another important element in his testimony is that he refers to "information from overseas," as if this information is inevitably correct. He is unlikely to be referring to actual medical reports, as he would have known they would be right. More likely, he is referring to information about Tsafendas's medical history that was given to him verbally, as was the case with van Zyl and very probably with the other psychiatrists, too. Dr. MacGregor's diagnosis and conclusions are entirely wrong, but he is hardly to blame since he made them only by talking to Tsafendas and without any supplementary information. Once again, the Attorney-General did nothing to challenge testimony despite the plethora of evidence which the South African police had in its possession.

Tsafendas remembered Dr. MacGregor warmly in later years, referring to him as "the Scottish psychiatrist." Father Minas does not remember exactly what Tsafendas said, except that he referred to him in positive terms, as he did with Dr. Zabow and Dr. Sakinofsky.⁵⁶⁵⁸ ⁵⁶⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DAY 4: 20 OCTOBER 1966

PROSECUTION WITNESS No. 1: JACOBUS ANDREAS JOHANNES ERASMUS

INTRODUCTION

Jacobus Erasmus, a clinical psychologist with an M.A. in Psychology, was working at the time at Weskoppies Hospital in Pretoria; he was the State's first expert witness.⁵⁶⁵⁹

EXTRACTS FROM JACOBUS ERASMUS'S TESTIMONY⁵⁶⁶⁰

BRUNETTE: On the 28th and 29th of September 1966 did you interview the defendant?

ERASMUS: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Did you perform certain tests?

ERASMUS: Yes.

BRUNETTE: Explain to the Court what these tests were - The Wechsler-Bellevue IQ Test; the Wechsler Memory Scales; the MMPI; the T.A.T. and the Rorschach Tests. Are these tests the same as those described to the Court by Dr. van Zyl?

ERASMUS: Yes, except that I did two additional tests.

BRUNETTE: What were your findings from the tests?

ERASMUS: I first did the Wechsler- Bellevue test. My findings were that his intellectual capacity was classified within the upper limits of the average. His IQ was 109. Whereas he has a higher potential intellectual capacity, this is diminished by restricting factors revealed by the patterns of the sub-tests of the Wechsler-Bellevue tests and the large difference between the verbal IQ of 117 and the practical IQ of 100.

⁵⁶⁵⁹ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus' testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁶⁶⁰ Jacobus Andreas Johannes Erasmus' testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

In order to determine these factors it is necessary to analyse the different sub-tests. Here there is a lowering of both the concentration capacity and the visual-motor coordination. This diminished concentration and attention capacity are attributable to the fact that the subject has difficulty in keeping his thoughts to one subject, his anxiety state, general anxiety and debilitation and depression. This would explain why the subject, Tsafendas, frequently repeats the questions put to him and is inclined to be long-winded. He would therefore find difficulty to direct his thoughts to one subject only because of these other possible problems. This could also derive from the acutely psychotic patient's being unable to concentrate. A prior psychotic episode could also lead to diminished capacity and poor concentration. Although this cannot be eliminated in this instance, it is unlikely given the good achievements in some of the other sub-tests and the absence of spread within the sub-tests.

The poor visual-motor coordination is due to the generalised apathy, slowness of the patient in performing motor tasks. He was unable to consistently perform the practical tasks in the given time. This phenomenon frequently occurs with patients who are in a debilitating state of anxiety and psychological disintegration. There is a formulary for psychological disintegration which is used in this test and it is 21%. At the patient's age, the expected level is 11%, which should then be corrected and then the rate of disintegration level of 10% for intellectual capacity, which places him on the borderline- which raises the doubt of whether he has disintegrated or not.

If it was higher than 10% one could have confirmed this. Although possible indications of disintegration were found, this was uncertain, and could have been explained with reference to his age or the presence of psychic tension.

Then I also used the Wechsler Memory Test in which he achieved an IQ of 106, which places him above the average of 100. The Wechsler Memory Test purpose is to test the memory and is equivalent to the IQ test, but has a memory quotient. Here Tsafendas had a good result, he had no defect in his memory.

Then I also performed the Rorschach Test where the results did not reveal any bizarre response distortions or perseveration or any other tendencies to disintegration. The responses were reasonably appropriate for the stimuli, but only minimal responses were given, which indicates a blockage or inability to react freely. The responses were also stereotypical. This test shows a weak ego development and an insufficient control of the tendency to act impulsively.

The subject therefore cannot strive towards adult objectives and often resorts to fantasy. He shows a strong tendency towards withdrawal from his surroundings. As a result of this, his evaluation of his surroundings is primarily subjective and he is incapable of objectivity. This is connected to and combined with his unfulfilled need for acceptance.

According to the Rorschach Test, the subject's personality development is on an infantile level, with a tendency to withdrawal; a stereotypical tendency towards a general withdrawal from reality. As a result of the small amount of responses given in this test because of the existing blockages in the subject, it is difficult to do an accurate analysis of this test.

There were 10 cards and he only responded to 7 or 8.

The above conclusions about the Rorschach Test were confirmed by the T.A.T. Test in which he gave logical responses showing a good insight into the motivations of the figures. He displayed a good grasp of the connection between self and the outside world and no distortions were found. Although the subject, (D.S.) connected well with the outside world, he was always reworking reality in terms of his own dream and fantasy world, without being involved in a realistic way.

Tsafendas sets extremely high ideals for himself, but is unable to take positive steps to achieve them, and rather believes in his own fantasy world and that his ideals would be achieved through supernatural and magical means.

JUDGE BEYERS: Is this not a textbook definition of a schizophrenic?

ERASMUS: Yes, it does fit in with that definition. Interpersonal interactions in the T.A.T. Test were acknowledged while these took place. However, because of the undertone of depression, these interactions were not experienced as satisfactory by D.S.

The M.M.P.I. Test is the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory Test which is a personality questionnaire containing many different items, including hypochondria, psychopathy, paranoia, schizophrenia. The subject is questioned and graded on each of the above scales. This test also has an invalid scale. When the subject does not answer the questions consistently, the test is invalidated and the result cannot be used. This is the case here with Tsafendas, who was careless and inconsistent in his answers and the result was thus invalid.

The high levels in the various scales were those of schizophrenia, depression, hypochondria and psychopathy. He achieved low scales for paranoia and manic tendencies. But I reiterate that the test results can be accepted because he was inconsistent in his answers.

JUDGE BEYERS: What is your conclusion after all your tests?

ERASMUS: What these tests especially show is that there are clear signs of schizophrenia from the signs of the blockages encountered, the poor capacity for concentration is often found, and the strong fantasy world. There are also aspects of the sub-tests which do not entirely fit in with the Wechsler-Bellevue Tests, particularly the various sub-tests with picture arrangement, where he did well and where his insights were also good. On the other hand, it is to be expected that the schizophrenic's intellectual capacity would not be affected and that the intelligence would remain on which level. Also, the history of the accused should also be considered, in which case it will be accepted that schizophrenia is present.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE DEFENCE COUNSEL

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you not contest the opinions of Drs. Zabow, Cooper and Sakinofsky that the accused before the Court is schizophrenic?

ERASMUS: No, I do not contest this.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he is untreatable?

ERASMUS: No.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he should be sent to an institution?

ERASMUS: In the light of the history...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: In the light of the evidence which has been presented to the Court?

ERASMUS: Correct, I do not contest it.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: The Court can only come to one conclusion, do you agree?

ERASMUS: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he is mentally disturbed? Correct?

ERASMUS: Yes.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: That he ought to be certified? Correct?

ERASMUS: No answer...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: You just said so - yes - correct?

ERASMUS: Is it necessary that I give an opinion? ...

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes, it is very necessary. I want an unanimous conclusion.

ERASMUS: Yes.

COMMENTS ON ERASMUS'S TESTIMONY

TSAFENDAS BEING "UNABLE TO DIRECT HIS THOUGHTS TO ONE SUBJECT ONLY"

According to Erasmus, Tsafendas "frequently repeats the questions put to him and is inclined to be long-winded. He would therefore find difficulty to direct his thoughts to one subject only. This is very similar to Dr. Cooper's diagnosis which said that Tsafendas was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes.

Major Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town and a highly experienced interrogator, was the officer in charge of Tsafendas's interrogation. Rossouw questioned Tsafendas on several occasions over at least twenty days and the transcripts of two of these interrogations were found in the NASA and have been examined here. The first of these sessions lasted two days and the second seems to have taken a few hours. The second transcript contains Rossouw's questions and Tsafendas's answers. Rossouw told the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas "told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously" and he was "totally prepared to answer everything."⁵⁶⁶¹

Rossouw made no mention to Erasmus's comment that Tsafendas "frequently repeats the questions put to him ..." Indeed, reading both of the transcripts makes clear that there was no repetition. If something of the sort was observed by Rossouw, an experienced interrogator, he would have almost certainly mentioned it to the Commission and most probably called in a psychiatrist to examine Tsafendas. However, none of that happened.

Major Rossouw was not the only one who failed to observe the symptom mentioned by Erasmus. None of the two hundred or so witnesses questioned by the police and the ⁵⁶⁶¹ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Commission of Enquiry observed it either. Some expressed exactly contrary views. For example:

- Ralph Lighton, who worked with Tsafendas for nine-ten weeks at the Marine Diamond Corporation, “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers.”⁵⁶⁶²
- Gillian Claire Lieberman, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation, whose office Tsafendas often visited, “I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. ... I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation.”⁵⁶⁶³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for Mike’s Outfitters for forty-two days in July and August 1966, frequently driving him to the tanker Eleni while it was docked in Cape Town. Of Tsafendas, he told the police that he “never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers.”⁵⁶⁶⁴
- Cornelius Rudolph, the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban appointed Tsafendas as a Portuguese and Greek interpreter. Rudolph used him “on several occasions” in a period of six months and “got to know him pretty well.” He testified that “I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.”⁵⁶⁶⁵

The author asked forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas if they thought that Erasmus’s diagnosis was correct and whether they had noticed anything of the sort with him. They all strongly disputed Erasmus’s conclusions. For example, Father Michalis Visvinis who visited Tsafendas for five years in prison (1989-1994) and got to know him very well, told the author:

“He [Tsafendas] was always very alert. I was actually surprised that his mind was so alert after so many years in prison. Most of our conversations lasted about an hour and a half ⁵⁶⁶² Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁶³ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁶⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁶⁶⁵ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

and he never lost track, nor did I feel that he was struggling to cope with our discussion... I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. I never noticed that, it never happened [Tsafendas being “unable to direct his thoughts to one subject only”]. I don’t think that this is true. His speech was always absolutely fine. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly.”⁵⁶⁶⁶

Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis told the author:

“[Tsafendas] could speak for hours, telling you things about his life, his thoughts and his ideology, but he could also participate in a dialogue. We spoke for hours about politics, religion and history and he was one of the most knowledgeable people I ever met in all these subjects. He was very argumentative and insistent, especially about politics. He never got lost in the conversation and he would never drop a subject until I had agreed with him. He would never give up a conversation if you disagreed. He never, not even once, seemed to have difficulty expressing himself or talked incoherently. Every single time, everything he said made sense and was perfectly stated. I don’t believe for a moment that he could have talked in the way described by the psychiatrists unless he did it deliberately. He spoke and argued even better than most people. His speech and thought were perfectly fine.”⁵⁶⁶⁷

For reasons of space, the study will list only a few of the other witnesses who were interviewed by the author, those who knew him best or longest:

- His half-sister Katerina Pnefma;⁵⁶⁶⁸
- Ira Kyriakakis who grew up with him and spent a lot of time together in 1964 and 1965;⁵⁶⁶⁹
- Andreas Babiolakis who knew him since they were children, lived with him for two ⁵⁶⁶⁶ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

⁵⁶⁶⁷ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁶⁶⁸ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁶⁶⁹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

months in 1964 and associated with him for about a year then;⁵⁶⁷⁰

- Alexander Moumbaris who spent three months in a cell next to Tsafendas's in Pretoria Prison in 1972. They spoke every day for an hour when they exercised together in the prison yard. They met again in March 1996 at Sterkfontein Hospital;⁵⁶⁷¹
- Thirteen crewmen from the Eleni who saw him every day for forty-two days in 1966;⁵⁶⁷²
- Elias Constantaras who lived under the same roof for two months in Cape Town in 1966 and knew him for more than a year;⁵⁶⁷³
- Irene Michaletos who was very close to him for more than a year (1964-1965), when he often visited her house in Beira;⁵⁶⁷⁴
- John Michaletos, Irene's husband, Tsafendas's cousin and the son of Artemis's (Tsafendas's aunt who brought him up in Egypt), met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, getting to know him very well.⁵⁶⁷⁵
- Antony Michaletos, John's brother, met Tsafendas in 1951 and associated with him in 1963-1965, getting to know him very well.⁵⁶⁷⁶
- Alexandra Vaporidis who knew him for about six months in Istanbul in 1961;⁵⁶⁷⁷
- Nick Papadakis, who knew Tsafendas for two-three months and lived with him for two months in Mozambique in 1964;⁵⁶⁷⁸
- Panagiotis Peroglou, Stratis Vamvarapis, Antonis Nichas and Costas Chagios, who were Tsafendas's friends in Cape Town for more than a year.⁵⁶⁷⁹

⁵⁶⁷⁰ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

⁵⁶⁷¹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

⁵⁶⁷² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 19 January 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

⁵⁶⁷³ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

⁵⁶⁷⁴ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁶⁷⁵ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

⁵⁶⁷⁶ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

⁵⁶⁷⁷ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

⁵⁶⁷⁸ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁶⁷⁹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015; Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016; Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016; Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016; Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

TSAFENDAS "CANNOT STRIVE TOWARDS ADULT OBJECTIVES AND OFTEN RESORTS TO FANTASY," SHOWS A "STEREOTYPICAL TENDENCY TOWARDS A GENERAL WITHDRAWAL FROM REALITY," AND HE "SETS EXTREMELY HIGH IDEALS FOR HIMSELF, BUT IS UNABLE TO TAKE POSITIVE STEPS TO ACHIEVE THEM, AND RATHER BELIEVES IN HIS OWN FANTASY WORLD AND THAT HIS IDEALS WOULD BE ACHIEVED THROUGH SUPERNATURAL OR MAGICAL MEANS"

Erasmus's above testimony is completely inaccurate. Tsafendas cherished many adult objectives which were more serious and highly principled than most peoples. For example, he was strongly in favour of the independence of Mozambique and wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation."⁵⁶⁸⁰

Tsafendas campaigned constantly for independence, distributed books and leaflets and tried to raise awareness of this goal, while in 1938 he had attempted to raise awareness against Portugal's forced cotton policy. For these very public efforts and other political activities in Mozambique, he was arrested five times and imprisoned three times by the Portuguese. More importantly, PIDE considered him to be a "partisan for the independence of Mozambique."⁵⁶⁸¹

Another major objective was an end to apartheid; Tsafendas wanted to see "a government that would represent all South Africans,"⁵⁶⁸² he wanted to bring about "a change of policy" in South Africa,⁵⁶⁸³ to "create a resistance to the regime of South Africa" and was even willing to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power."⁵⁶⁸⁴ He strove to achieve this goal by smuggling anti-apartheid literature into the country, asking foreign visitors not to spend any money so as not to contribute to the apartheid economy.

Finally, he took the most drastic of measures to achieve his objective (or "fantasy" according to Dr. Erasmus) by killing the man he believed had created and was "the brains ⁵⁶⁸⁰ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶⁸¹ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁶⁸² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁸³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁸⁴ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

behind apartheid,”⁵⁶⁸⁵ in the hope that “a change of policy would take place.”⁵⁶⁸⁶ Certainly, independence for Mozambique and an end to apartheid in South Africa were “adult themes” as Tsafendas strove tirelessly to achieve both goals. Of course, Erasmus was unaware of all this and diagnosed him according to what he was told by Tsafendas himself and the results of the tests he gave him.

None of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry at the time reported anything with the slightest resemblance to what Erasmus said. Furthermore, none of forty-four witnesses interviewed by the author agreed with Erasmus’s diagnosis. People who knew Tsafendas well said that far from being withdrawn from reality, he was a firmly grounded yet highly principled idealist. We feel it is not necessary to include all the statements as we have seen the comments in previous testimonies. Was Tsafendas a dreamer living in a fantasy world because he wanted to see an independent Mozambique and to bring an end to apartheid? To paraphrase John Lennon, “you may say he was a dreamer, but he was not the only one...”

TSAFFENDAS “SHOWS A STRONG TENDENCY TOWARDS WITHDRAWAL FROM HIS SURROUNDINGS”

According to Erasmus, Tsafendas showed “a strong tendency towards withdrawal from his surroundings. As a result of this, his evaluation of his surroundings is primarily subjective and he is incapable of objectivity.” Again, this is completely inaccurate. Two witnesses out of around two hundred who testified to the police said Tsafendas “did not mix freely and kept to himself most of the time,”⁵⁶⁸⁷ and that he was “not very talkative.”⁵⁶⁸⁸ The vast majority declared the opposite:

- William Mare Volbrecht, a friend and schoolmate at the English Medium Primary School in Middleburg, testified to the police that Tsafendas was “never a loner and freely mingled with us.”⁵⁶⁸⁹ Tsafendas’s half-sister, Katerina Pnema, his first cousin who grew ⁵⁶⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁵⁶⁸⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁸⁷ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁸⁸ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁸⁹ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

up with him in Egypt and Lourenço Marques, Mary Eendracht, and Ira Kyriakakis, Helen Grispos and Andreas Babiolakis, who also grew up with him, agreed with Volbrecht's comment and said that from childhood Tsafendas was sociable, friendly and very talkative.⁵⁶⁹⁰

- An unnamed "respected member of the Press gallery" in the House of Assembly "who knew Tsafendas well" spoke to Rene MacColl, of the Daily Express, about Tsafendas. He said that "far from being a withdrawn sort of man, he seemed to be intent on impressing his personality on one. There was always the big smile, the ready chat and an almost obsessive intention to make you remember him. There couldn't have been a less grey or faceless figure."⁵⁶⁹¹
- Keith Martincich who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation testified that Tsafendas "spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type."⁵⁶⁹²
- J. Willemse was Tsafendas's landlord for one month in 1965. He characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."⁵⁶⁹³
- Hulse who worked with him at the Marine Diamond Corporation for nine or ten weeks said "Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his..."⁵⁶⁹⁴
- Ian Boswell of the Department of Labour, in his description of Tsafendas, included the phrase, "aside from being over talkative ..."⁵⁶⁹⁵
- Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys, employment officer at the Department of Labour, testified that "he was very talkative."⁵⁶⁹⁶
- Owen Smorenberg who worked with him for five-six weeks, testified that "Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to ⁵⁶⁹⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁶⁹¹ Daily Express, 9 September 1966: 2, 'Was it murder incorporated?'

⁵⁶⁹² Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁹³ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. 'Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.'

⁵⁶⁹⁴ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; The edge of the document was not copied, so the word is missing.

⁵⁶⁹⁵ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

⁵⁶⁹⁶ Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages.”⁵⁶⁹⁷

- Albert Vercueil, his boss at F.A. Poole Engineering for five months found him to be a “very friendly, social and talkative person.”⁵⁶⁹⁸
- August Karel Oestrich worked with Tsafendas for five months at F.A. Poole in Pretoria. He found him to be “very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet.”⁵⁶⁹⁹
- Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden worked with Tsafendas for some three months at the Marine Diamond Corporation and testified that “he was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.”⁵⁷⁰⁰
- Jacobus Bornman, his flatmate for two months, summed Tsafendas up as “a friendly and plausible person.”⁵⁷⁰¹
- Jose Lopez Baltazar a fireman in Beira, testified that “when Tsafendas was in the presence of Whites he said little or nothing, but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu.”⁵⁷⁰²
- Reginald Maile, shipguard on the Eleni, testified that Tsafendas was “on very friendly relations with the crew.”⁵⁷⁰³
- Neville Judson worked with Tsafendas for two months and testified to the police that he had “a very friendly way of talking.”⁵⁷⁰⁴ He later said that Tsafendas was “overly talkative and sociable.”⁵⁷⁰⁵
- Michaelis Augustides, Tsafendas’s employer for two months, also found him to be ⁵⁶⁹⁷ Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

⁵⁶⁹⁸ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁶⁹⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁷⁰⁰ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁰¹ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁰² Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

⁵⁷⁰³ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁷⁰⁴ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

⁵⁷⁰⁵ Lambley, 1980: 241.

“overly talkative and sociable.”⁵⁷⁰⁶

- Panagiotis Peroglou who knew Tsafendas for about a year, testified to the police but his statements have gone missing, However, in a personal interview, he and his wife Pamela Abrahams, who had also met Tsafendas, characterised him as “very talkative, courteous and friendly.”⁵⁷⁰⁷

Fotini Gavasiadis also said that while Tsafendas worked at her brother’s café, he “was always with a smile in his mouth, chatting and joking with the customers... he was very popular, especially with the older customers. Some of them were coming to the café just to talk to him. They were quite old and had no else to talk to. Dimitris patiently listened to their stories or whatever they had to say. He always had a comforting word for them and for those who needed it.”⁵⁷⁰⁸

Perhaps the most convincing proof that Tsafendas did not tend to “withdraw from his surroundings” as Erasmus suggested, comes from the following two incidents:

Guenter Haafe was the doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked for six weeks in 1958. Haafe was interviewed eight years later, shortly after the assassination, and vividly remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.” Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas’s chief on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman.”⁵⁷⁰⁹ “We liked him ... always laughing, a good worker.”⁵⁷¹⁰

While in Beira in 1964, Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, probably from Naples, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. Everyone thought he was about to deliver a speech. He did indeed deliver a very short speech wishing the ⁵⁷⁰⁶ Lambley, 1980: 241.

⁵⁷⁰⁷ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

⁵⁷⁰⁸ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁵⁷⁰⁹ The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

⁵⁷¹⁰ Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin.’

newly-weds well, but then, in a ringing baritone, he launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks among the guests were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and rhythmically pounding the table with their fists or spoons. When he finished he received huge applause and Vittorio and some of his friends called for another song. Tsafendas obliged with a second Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.⁵⁷¹¹

As well as the witnesses questioned by the police, the forty-four interviewed by the author characterised Tsafendas as very friendly, very sociable and very talkative. None agreed with Erasmus's diagnosis. Their testimonies cannot be listed here for reasons of space, but the words of those reproduced above clearly prove Erasmus was wrong.

CONCLUSION

Erasmus's diagnosis is mostly based on the tests he conducted on Tsafendas. These showed Tsafendas as a completely different person to the one described by two hundred and fifty people to the police, to the Commission and to the author. Again, Erasmus did not have any other information about Tsafendas apart from what he heard from him. Some thirty years later, Tsafendas characterised the psychological tests he took while he was in custody as "childish stuff."⁵⁷¹²

Asked by the author to comment on the psychological tests, Professor Burke said:

"Back in those days, the psychological tests were very unsophisticated, so you could have had results, and it could have been argued one of two ways to say it proves or disproves. It was never an exact science. Whether the interpretation was right or wrong, the Rorschach ink blot test was never a scientific tool, it was mainly a projective test, and, as in psychology, there are many approaches to things. So by saying it was incorrect, you could also say, 'It was not the way I would have done it,' so whether it was correct or incorrect doesn't really matter.

The fact is that those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation. You could have done it, come to me with the results, and I would have looked at the same results and I would have come up with a different conclusion, so whether it was done correctly or incorrectly, is neither here nor there. The test could, at most, say that there is a possibility of schizophrenia, at the very most, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis. There are people who would argue that you could, but you could never make an accurate diagnosis of schizophrenia based on that test, or on any test for that matter.

⁵⁷¹¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁷¹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

I still think that your best instrument for making a diagnosis like this is what the people around you say, and your assessment of the functioning of the person; that gives you the best idea. The psychological tests would confirm what you have picked up, so what you would always have with any kind of diagnostic assessment is, you would have your observations of the patient, the information you get from the people around, and your psychological tests, and then you pick up themes. If you pick up the same themes in those three areas, then you say, 'This is the diagnosis.' If it's only in one of those areas, you can't confirm the diagnosis until you've got some kind of confirmation from other areas, as well, so it's a weak way of making a diagnosis."⁵⁷¹³

However, the most important thing here is not Erasmus's testimony as it was given to the court, but the fact that he had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic from the 29th of September. This is highly significant because it means that since he was one of the State's two expert witnesses, he must have been given his diagnosis to the Attorney-General, the man who appointed him in the first place, before he testified in the court. What makes this even more important is the fact that the State's other expert witness, Adolph van Wyk, a Professor of Psychiatry, had also found Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic. Therefore despite the fact that both of the State's experts found Tsafendas to be insane, thus agreeing with the defence, the Attorney-General appeared to be "sceptical" about the defence's witnesses, questioning them extensively, when his own experts had already come to the exactly same conclusion. The issue will be discussed in detail in Professor van Wyk's testimony which follows.

⁵⁷¹³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

PROSECUTION WITNESS No. 2: PROFESSOR ADOLF JOHANNES VAN WYK

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY AS RELATED BY HIM TO THE COURT

Adolf Johannes van Wyk qualified as a physician in 1938, with the degrees M.B., Ch.B., and worked in general practice until 1949. He then began specialising in psychiatry, gained the DPM diploma and was placed on the register as a specialist-psychiatrist. From that time, he worked solely in the field of mental disorders and psychiatry. Professor van Wyk was appointed consulting psychiatrist in the prisons, carried out many observations for the State and testified often in court. His prison work included occasionally interviewing prisoners who had been sentenced to death on behalf of the State President. His appointments included Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pretoria, head of the Department of Psychiatry, Senior Psychiatrist of the General Hospital, and also Adjunct Commissioner of Mental Health of the Republic of South Africa.⁵⁷¹⁴ Professor van Wyk, as State's expert witness, had also examined John Harris.⁵⁷¹⁵

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S TESTIMONY⁵⁷¹⁶

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Have you observed the accused?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, I saw the accused on five occasions: on 23 September, on 24 September, on 4 October, on 13 October and on 14 October.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: You were in the Court all the time that the psychiatrists for the defence testified, is that so?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, I was present the whole time and I also possess certain reports of his illnesses overseas, which I also studied. The last one which I received from the Ochenzoll Hospital in Hamburg is also in my possession.

⁵⁷¹⁴ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷¹⁵ Cooper, 2016: 107.

⁵⁷¹⁶ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I would like you to give your conclusions to the Judge and his learned assessors.

PROF. VAN WYK: If one undertakes to observe and study a particular case, particularly if it is current, the first thing to consider is simulation. It is something which one should definitely distinguish, and then, even if one finds a psychological problem, in the second instance one must determine – even if there is a psychological problem, that does not imply irresponsibility – is the accused so affected by the mental state that he is not responsible for his deed?

And these were the two things which were uppermost in my mind the whole time that I had the accused under observation. During the first two observations, on the 23rd and the 24th, I was a little uncertain, because the man was very evasive, and one could not really place him, to determine to what extent there was simulation, and I felt at that time that I definitely would not certify him with the information and with the interviews which I had had with him until then. I wanted to know more about his background; I wanted to know more about the motivation for the act, would he be able to give this? Although he was evasive in that respect, it could also be a schizophrenic symptom. They often say “I don’t know. It may be.” That is a disturbance in thought processes. Because they cannot adequately express their thoughts, they answer in a seemingly evasive way. To what extent had he tried to evade giving the real reason? And I wanted to know more about the background.

On the 4th of October I found a symptom in the accused which definitely appeared spontaneously and which made me definitely decide that he was schizophrenic and that it was a disturbance of the self, of a passivity phenomenon, in the sense that the person blames influences outside himself for his thoughts, emotions and actions.

JUDGE BEYERS: Does one call this, the impassiveness, passive/passivity phenomenon?

PROF. VAN WYK: Passivity phenomenon?

JUDGE BEYERS: Yes, or a disturbance of the self? He regards himself as a sort of instrument?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, as a robot operated by someone else. I can give a good example. I dealt with a non-white young woman who kicked over fire buckets and had fights and then said that it was not she, but her late brother who had done it. In other words, she was totally passive and was taken over by an outside influence. Something happened which persuaded me that it was not simulation. This came out after Mr. Bloomberg was present at the interview and I asked him about the tapeworm – and I definitely put leading questions to him and he had the chance, should he have wanted to simulate, that he could have done so. Then I asked him: can you tell me why you travelled around so much in the world? He pondered this for a while and then he said to me: “You know, doctor, in the beginning I thought I did it myself. It was voluntary, it was by myself, but you know now I realise that it was the tapeworm that made me travel over the whole world.” Then I followed this up in the afternoon, without Mr. Bloomberg – it was perhaps unauthorised, but I felt concerned. So that afternoon I again interviewed him from 3 to 4 and then I focussed more on this and gave him more chance to talk and that afternoon he said to me,: “Doctor, sometimes I say things (this came out spontaneously) sometimes I say things to people and they get annoyed with me and actually it is not I who says these things, but the tapeworm which forces me to say those things.”

That is definitely a cardinal symptom of schizophrenia. But until that time I had not realised the extent of the schizophrenic condition and to what extent and whether it rendered him certifiable. And whether the tapeworm was just a secondary delusional- imaginary interpretation of the passivity phenomenon.

It happens that a person can display the passivity phenomenon, and then he begins to explain the passivity phenomenon by saying that he has been hypnotised, or another influence is at work on him. Is it in the passivity that the tape worm manifests? Or is it just a delusional- imaginary interpretation of a passivity phenomenon?

But after later on, after one had heard the person's history here in the Court, I had to come to the conclusion that it – the tapeworm - is actually a primary delusional imaginary thing, and that it was not just an imaginary interpretation of his passivity manifestations.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think I follow you.

PROF. VAN WYK: And with taking this into consideration, the mental disturbance which in the beginning was vague, later with more interviews – and we all know that thought disturbances in schizophrenia are often difficult to find. When one has an interview with a patient on his own you may not find any thought disturbance. When he is on his own and is at ease and feeling good, he does not have to show you a thought disturbance. But if you encounter him where he has to talk in front of an audience or in a situation where there is a certain amount of emotion, the thought disturbance phenomenon is displayed. Often it manifests typically and very nicely. And with the first interviews he only displayed roundabout statements and long-windedness and evasiveness and I was not sure what this was all about – was it just a thought disturbance or was it just evasiveness?

But during my interviews with him on the 13th and 14th – and I should have wanted to see him again on the 15th, but it was not possible for me, the defence needed to see him and I was unable to do so – it became clear to me that there was definitely a measure of thought disturbance present with him. And with all the information available to me, beside the fact of the murder, as consulting psychiatrist, if I had encountered this person with all the information now available, I would have had to certify him. There was no question but that it fell within the ambit of the Mental Health Act of 1916.

JUDGE BEYERS: You say that other than the murder, but the murder itself meets one of the requirements, namely that he is a danger to others?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes.

JUDGE BEYERS: So, at the moment, if today this problem was put forward to you and this man was sent to you today and you were asked: “Must he be certified, yes or no?” - would you have any doubt today?

PROF. VAN WYK: No, there will be no doubt at all. He can commit a crime but it does not have to be as a result of his mental illness, and I felt – after all that one has heard – that, he said to me for example “There was a pressure building up” and I had the feeling that it was because of the tapeworm, and he said: “ It had to break out some time”, and then he became a little evasive about this situation, and it kept on building up, this mental illness of his, and he said to me that he never knew that it would manifest in such a manner, and to a certain extent he blamed the doctors. At one stage he said to me that he had consulted the doctors and that they never put him in a hospital or put him into an institution. He said that if they had done so, this would never have happened.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY THE DEFENCE COUNSEL

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Do you agree, on the fourth day of this enquiry, with the opinion that Dr. Cooper so stoutly defended on the first day of this enquiry?

PROF. VAN WYK: That the man is certifiable under the Mental Disease Act?

DEFENCE COUNSEL: Yes, that he suffers from schizophrenia?

PROF. VAN WYK: Yes, but it is not a conclusion which I have only reached today. I came to that conclusion before.

DEFENCE COUNSEL: So you also agree with Dr Zabow, Dr MacGregor, and Dr Sakinofsky?

JUDGE BEYERS: But this witness has already said what you want. Can you possibly get more? It says much for you that you took a time in coming to your conclusion. One does not make up one's mind hastily about these things. It is a responsible task and it redounds to your honour that you did not come to a hasty conclusion but that you took your time and gradually reached your conclusion. I appreciate it.

COMMENTS ON PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S DIAGNOSIS

Before we examine this development, we should examine Professor van Wyk's testimony. Professor van Wyk stated that he wanted to know more about Tsafendas's background and "motivation for the act." However, instead of seeking additional information from Tsafendas's friends and family, as Dr. Sakinofsky and Professors Tuviah Zabow, Burke, Heilbrun and Resnick all recommended, Professor van Wyk attempted to get the information from Tsafendas himself, just like Dr. Cooper, Dr. Aubrey Zabow and Dr. MacGregor. He, too, accepted what he was told without question. He could very easily have found what he was looking for in the two statements Tsafendas gave to the police. He could also have got much information from the about two hundred statements the police and the Commission of Enquiry took from people who knew him.

Professor van Wyk also states that he was in possession of "certain reports" from overseas hospitals and that the last one he received was from Ochenzoll Hospital in Hamburg. There is no mention of the Grafton State Hospital report, which was certainly in the possession of the South African police since September 16,⁵⁷¹⁷ or of the report by the Government Hospital in Beira. The author is not in position to know whether these reports were in Professor van Wyk's possession. If they were, as they should have been, he never referred to Tsafendas faking mental illness while in the USA and that he believed he was Saint Peter just two years ago in Mozambique.

⁵⁷¹⁷ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

In his diagnosis, Professor van Wyk stated that he gave Tsafendas the opportunity to simulate by offering him leading questions which Tsafendas did not fall for. Professor van Wyk seems unaware or ignored the fact that Tsafendas had been caught pretending to be mad and that he was experienced with psychiatrists. The Commission of Enquiry, which had no psychiatrist, noted that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and (the Commission) therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁵⁷¹⁸ Although this was evident to the Commission, it was not evident to Professor van Wyk, who was a psychiatrist and accepted everything Tsafendas said.

We will not examine the tapeworm again, but we should look at two of the things Tsafendas told Professor van Wyk about it: “Sometimes I say things to people and they get annoyed with me and actually it is not I who says these things, but the tapeworm which forces me to say those things” and “You know, doctor, in the beginning I thought I did it myself. It was voluntary, it was by myself, but you know now I realise that it was the tapeworm that made me travel over the whole world.”

Firstly, Tsafendas repeatedly called his travels “forced globetrotting.” He used this description with several people and even on his affidavit. He said he had to live “like a gypsy” because he was exiled from Mozambique, barred from South Africa and continually persecuted in Portugal. He never mentioned the tapeworm as a reason for his travels to anyone, not even to the police. Both of the alleged tapeworm statements were read by the author to forty-four witnesses who knew Tsafendas very well. Not even could accept that Tsafendas believed what he was saying. Since the issue with the alleged statements has also been discussed before, I would not again list the people’s reaction to them.

Professor van Wyk also said in his testimony: “when one has an interview with a patient on his own you may not find any thought disturbance. When he is on his own and is at ease and feeling good, he does not have to show you a thought disturbance. But if you encounter him where he has to talk in front of an audience or in a situation where there is a certain amount of emotion, the thought disturbance phenomenon is displayed.” This is an inaccurate diagnosis. Again, all of the forty-four witnesses who were asked about the above statement strongly deny that this was the case with Tsafendas. Since it would be impractical to include everyone’s statement, the study will present only the following five examples contradicting Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis.

⁵⁷¹⁸ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

From the mid-1930s to 1939 and then again in 1964 Tsafendas voluntarily taught English and History to Greek and Mozambican children in Mozambique.⁵⁷¹⁹ Ira Kyriakakis one of his students, strongly dismisses Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis. Kyriakakis said, “Dimitris really loved teaching. You could tell. He was a natural talent. Of course he did not have any issue talking in front of us. How would he have taught if he had a problem?”⁵⁷²⁰

In 1961, Tsafendas worked for about six months as a teacher at the best private language college in Turkey. Naturally, he had to talk in front of an audience five days per week and clearly this was no problem since the owner of the college, Mr. Limasollu Naci, tried to keep him on his staff and when he left gave him a positive reference. Furthermore, for six or seven months also in 1961, Tsafendas taught English to Greek and Turkish children in Istanbul. Father Nikola Banovic and Alexandra Vaporidis were often present at the lessons, which were held in a room near the Greek Orthodox church of Panagia in the city’s Pera Taxi district.

Asked about Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis, Father Nikola said:

“No, we never understood anything like this. (Tsafendas) loved teaching and he was clearly enjoying it. He was really good, really, really good. He was funny and witty and at the end of each lesson, he would tell the students a story about his travels. All the students waited for that. I was not present at the classes he had at Mr. Limasollu’s college, but I was told by Mr. Limasollu that he was exactly the same with the students there. They all adored him. He made a very positive contribution to the Greek community here and after he left, we all missed him, especially the children... For many years, they asked, ‘When is Mr Dimitris ⁵⁷¹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

⁵⁷²⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

coming back?' He never showed any thought disturbance while he was teaching or any time he was with us. He was always perfectly fine."⁵⁷²¹

Alexandra Vaporidis also lived in Istanbul at the time. She did not know Tsafendas well, but her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was very close to him. Tsafendas had dinner once in her house and she often spoke to him at church and was present at some of his classes. "I saw him teaching many times although we only spoke briefly each time at the end of the lesson. I never noticed anything to be wrong with him while he was teaching or any other time. He seemed to enjoy teaching and the children enjoyed it too. They were all very sad when he left."⁵⁷²²

Andreas Babiolakis and Nick Papadakis went often with Tsafendas at the Scala Café in 1964 in Beira, where many Greeks gathered. Both strongly deny that Tsafendas had any kind of thought problems and insist that he enjoyed talking in front of an audience about politics. Both remember an incident in Gondola when Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. He delivered a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well and then in a ringing baritone, launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and pounding the table. When he finished, Tsafendas received huge applause and Vittorio called on him to sing another one. Tsafendas duly sang another Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.⁵⁷²³

Fotini Gavasiadis also strongly denies that Tsafendas had any such issue. She said that when Tsafendas worked at her brother's coffee shop for nearly nine months, "he talked constantly with the customers. A lot of them, especially very old men, would come to the shop just for him, to talk about history, religion and his travels. He avoided talking to them about politics because he believed they were all or most of them supporters of apartheid. No, he had no problems talking in front of an audience. He was perfectly fine, as he was at all other times."⁵⁷²⁴

⁵⁷²¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁷²² Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 10 October 2015.

⁵⁷²³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

⁵⁷²⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 11 June 2016.

Professor van Wyk also stated that Tsafendas's "thought disturbance" becomes evident with "a certain amount of emotion." However, while Tsafendas was in custody in Caledon Square, which certainly could be classified as a time of high emotion, he displayed no signs of disturbance, certainly not in his two statements. Speech and thought processes are entirely logical. It had been the same in November 1964 when Tsafendas was interrogated by PIDE agents in Mozambique accused of conducting propaganda for the independence of Mozambique. He was questioned by PIDE's Sub-Inspector, Joaquim Piçara Sabino, Brigade Chief Augusto de Sousa Maia, and agent Virgílio Francisco.⁵⁷²⁵ He told them clearly and logically that he wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the mother nation."⁵⁷²⁶ Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who was in charge of the police cells where Tsafendas was kept characterised him as being "intense anti-white" and convinced that "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for its non-whites." He added that Tsafendas was "normal" and he regarded him "as a very intelligent person."⁵⁷²⁷

PROFESSOR VAN WYK'S DIAGNOSIS AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Professor van Wyk was the last witness to testify in the summary trial, bringing it to an "abrupt end," as David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper rightly said.⁵⁷²⁸ It was abrupt, because no one expected the State's main witness to give such evidence. The defence team was under the impression that Professor van Wyk had diagnosed Tsafendas as being able to follow the trial proceedings and would not mention anything about schizophrenia.

Professor van Wyk's report, written before October 6, probably on October 4, although the exact date is not known to the author, had said:

"He is orientated. He gives a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation. The tests indicate that his intellectual abilities are above average. He maintains that he is infested with a tapeworm, and that this influences his life. He denies that he suffers

⁵⁷²⁵ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁷²⁶ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁷²⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁵⁷²⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 98.

from hallucinations. I have found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence.”⁵⁷²⁹

This report was given to the defence team on October 6. By that time Professor van Wyk had seen Tsafendas three times (September 23, 24 and October 4). The other State witness, Erasmus, the psychologist, had testified just a few minutes before Professor van Wyk that he had examined Tsafendas on September 28 and 29 and his tests had revealed “clear signs of schizophrenia.” However, Professor van Wyk’s report says nothing about signs of schizophrenia and states the tests showed that Tsafendas was “very intelligent.”

The question is: why did Professor van Wyk not include in his initial report that the other State witness had found signs of schizophrenia? He must have discussed the case with him as they were both State’s expert witnesses and the psychologist’s job was to perform the tests and support the psychiatrist’s diagnosis. It seems highly unlikely that van Wyk was unaware of Erasmus’s tests, as he specifically refers to tests that showed Tsafendas’s intelligence. These were the tests carried out by Erasmus, as he testified a few minutes earlier. There are seem to be five possibilities:

- The tests were differently interpreted at the time and Erasmus did not find “clear signs of schizophrenia” then; that would explain why this is not in Professor van Wyk’s report. Perhaps Erasmus later changed his mind regarding the interpretation of the tests, maybe also influenced by Professor van Wyk’s diagnosis, and discovered the “clear signs of schizophrenia.” That would explain what he told the court and why such information was absent from Professor van Wyk’s report. It would also agree with Professor Burke’s statement that the “those tests and the interpretation of those tests, were always open to interpretation.”⁵⁷³⁰
- Erasmus told Professor van Wyk that the tests showed that Tsafendas as very intelligent but forgot to mention that there were also “clear signs of schizophrenia.”
- Erasmus told Professor van Wyk that there were “clear signs of schizophrenia” in the tests and the Professor forgot to include it in his report.
- Professor van Wyk did not consider the tests as accurate and dismissed them, accepting ⁵⁷²⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 81.

⁵⁷³⁰ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

only results of the intelligence tests.

- For some reason Professor van Wyk deliberately omitted it from his report.

The author cannot think of any other reason why Prof. van Wyk's initial report did not contain the findings of Erasmus' tests as they were presented in the court and it does not mention anything about Tsafendas's alleged schizophrenia. Very importantly he found Tsafendas to be "orientated," giving "a good account of himself. His comprehension is good and his answers are relevant. His emotional responses are adequate and apt. His discourse is coherent. At times he is discursive, but not vague and he never strays from the main point of conversation." The above diagnosis completely contradicts the diagnosis of Dr. Cooper, Dr. Sakinofsky and Dr. Zabow.

However, Professor van Wyk also stated that he later, on October 4, he changed his mind and diagnosed Tsafendas as a schizophrenic. This was confirmed when he examined Tsafendas twice more on October 13 and 14, four and three days before the beginning of the trial. Since both of the State's witnesses had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, therefore agreeing with the defence's line and experts, which was known at the time to the State, the question is: Why did the Attorney-General appear so sceptical of the defence's witnesses? The State was aware of the defence's line since the 6th of October, so if van den Berg disagreed or doubted the diagnosis of his two expert witnesses, which was identical with the defence's line, and really believed that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, he could have very easily appointed additional psychiatrists and psychologists to examine him. However, he did not do such thing and the reason must have been because he must have accepted his witnesses' opinion.

Both David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper were surprised by this as they believed that since the State's experts had already agreed with the defence's experts, there was no need for this line of questioning. Bloomberg said about the incident: "One presumed that the Attorney-General knew what evidence his psychologist and psychiatrist would be giving. If that was the case, why did he challenge, in cross-examination, the evidence of the defence witnesses, when he knew that his own witnesses agreed with them, and allow Dr Harold Cooper, in particular, to be tested so vigorously and sceptically by the judge?"⁵⁷³¹ Gavin Cooper, son of Wilfrid Cooper, also wrote about his father's surprise: "... they were left puzzled as to why, if the State had known what their experts were going to say when they took the stand, the Attorney-General had cross-examined Dr. Cooper so aggressively on the first day of the inquiry to try to prove that Tsafendas was able to stand trial. Was the State as surprised as the defence with the testimony of their key witnesses?"⁵⁷³²

⁵⁷³¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 98.

The question here is whether there was any possibility that the State did not know what evidence its two main witnesses were going to give? If the State was aware, which is almost certain, why did the Attorney-General behave as he did during the summary trial? If the State did not know, then it would explain such behaviour, but is it really possible that the State's two main and only expert witnesses had not informed the Attorney-General about the evidence they were going to give? That is impossible, according to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard.⁵⁷³³ Then, we are back to the previous question; why all this then? The issue will be discussed further along with the role of the Attorney-General.

After Professor van Wyk's testimony, to general surprise, the Attorney-General announced that he had no further questions and that the case for the prosecution was concluded.

FOR THE STATE

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: A request was made on behalf of the defence that the Court in terms of Article 28 (2) of Act 38 of 1916 that the accused is mentally ill and that in addition the Court must insist that he, depending on the availability of the State President, be placed in an institution. The Court has heard the evidence about this, and the Court noted the overwhelming nature of the expert witnesses. Even the witnesses for the State recommended without any doubt that the mental state of the accused was such that he falls within the ambit of Article 28 of the Act. It is necessary for the Court, in the light of all this evidence, that they give the required order and judgement if it agrees that the evidence justifies it.

But I wish to make a submission: Should the Court make such a judgement in terms of Article 28 (2), then I ask that you rule that the accused should not be kept in an institution, but that he should be kept in a prison.

⁵⁷³² Cooper, 2016: 123.

⁵⁷³³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

JUDGE BEYERS: You don't have to address this to me. Apparently it should be a prison. I think that as I have noticed that in the Pratt case, prison is indicated. Should I rule that he should be detained at Caledon Square until the State President has made his ruling, or what do you want?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I do not think it is necessary.

JUDGE BEYERS: The Afrikaans text is still in the Netherlands (Dutch) language and I find the English is easier: "A gaol or institution." I am not now sure whether it is necessary for the Court to determine the first "gaol." Afterwards, obviously, it will be the State President who is to rule on what is to happen with the man and where he will go.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Under Article 30 the Minister has certain powers.

JUDGE BEYERS: I think it will be sufficient if I say "a gaol."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL: That is my submission.⁵⁷³⁴

THE SEQUEL

Judge Beyers then adjourned the hearing until 10.45 a.m., pending a decision on whether he would give judgment then or announce it later. David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper, were shocked by what both described as the "abrupt end" to proceedings. Following what they were told by the Attorney-General on October 6 where he had also handed them Professor van Wyk's medical report on Tsafendas, where it stated that he had "found no indications that he is incapable of following the court proceedings or that he is unable to exercise his rights and privileges and instruct his legal advisers and assist them in the conduct of his defence," and given the line of questioning by the Attorney-General during the inquiry, they expected the State would continue seeking to prove that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial.⁵⁷³⁵

⁵⁷³⁴ Professor Adolf Johannes van Wyk's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷³⁵ Bloomberg, 2007: 81-82; Cooper, 2016: 123.

THE VERDICTTHE STATE VERSUS DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS⁵⁷³⁶

Judge Beyers: The Court is clear in its mind as to what its order should be in this case, and under the circumstance I can see no justification for prolonging the proceedings. If I had taken time to consider this judgment it would probably have gained something in elegance of language, but in substance the case is clear, and I think it is incumbent upon me to give judgment now, which I propose doing.

The case before the Court is one in which a man called Demitrio Tsafendas is charged with the crime of murder. He stands arraigned before this Court upon an indictment which charges that upon the 6th September, 1966, and at Cape Town, in the district of The Cape, he did wrongfully, unlawfully and maliciously kill and murder Dr. The Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa.

This Court is no less conscious of the momentous background to this case than is anyone less in this country. Once, however, a case is brought in a court of law these considerations of the immensity of the crime and the effects it has upon the people of this country really disappear. Once, as I have said, a case of this nature comes into a court of law, the law takes command, and considerations other than legal ones are not and should not be allowed to come into the picture at all. The elements of the crime of murder and the legal processes employed in trying such a crime remain the same and in no wise differ whether the victim of the alleged crime is the Prime Minister of the country or the lowest of the low. Murder is murder, and its elements remain unchanged. To allow anything else to cloud this approach would be to supplant law and order by anarchy and chaos. It would mean that one dethrones responsibility and replaces it with primitive emotion. That I do not understand to be my function and that is something to which, happily, I do not believe that this country would wish me to lend myself.

Because of the deep issues underlying this case, which, as I have already said, are for the purposes of the law really irrelevant but which obviously obtrude themselves and cannot be ignored, I in approaching this case thought fit to appoint senior counsel, with junior counsel to assist him, with attorneys to assist him, to represent the accused. This is a civilized, and, if I may proudly say, a highly civilized country, and when a man is charged on a capital charge this country sees to it that, at the expense of the State, he is represented.

⁵⁷³⁶ Judge Beyers' verdict on Tsafendas's summary trial, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Having regard to the emotional stresses that underlay this particular case, I thought fit to see that in this case he be represented as well as I was able to provide for. My first duty, I think, is to express to senior and junior counsel and their attorneys the deep appreciation of this Court for the work they have done. To them it has meant - and I think it should be understood — that without any meaningful remuneration they took upon themselves the unenviable and unpopular task of defending this man. Not for a moment did they demur to make the sacrifice of time, and the considerable financial sacrifice that goes with it. I think I need say no more than that by their conduct they have graced the profession to which they belong and that they have acted in accordance with the highest traditions of the legal profession of this country.

I - and again because of the nature of this case - introduced what is probably, as far as I know, an innovation in this country, in that I appointed as one of my assessors, to assist me as psychiatrist. I do not know if that has been done before. It was certainly of great assistance to the Court, and I wish to express my gratitude to Dr. Henning and my gratitude to my other assessor, Mr. Baker.

I can now go on with the case.

Before the Court is an enquiry. It is a different kind of procedure from the ordinary. It is a procedure in which, as I see it, there is neither plaintiff nor defendant, there is neither prosecutor nor defending counsel. It is an enquiry which if necessary has to be conducted mero motu by the Court itself. It is an enquiry which rests upon the simple civilized human principle that a court of law does not try a madman. That is the simple proposition which underlies the enquiry upon which I am presently embarked. I shall refer in a moment to the 1916 Act, the Mental Disorders Act. But, of course, the enquiry upon which I am embarked, does not flow from the Mental Disorders Act. The principle is centuries old, that madmen are not tried, and the enquiry at the moment is: is the man before me a man who can be tried by a court of law? Irrespective entirely of what his mental condition was, what animus he was capable of at the time when he committed the crime. One can have cases in which a person could be wholly sane and commits a crime, but after the commission of the crime - let me assume for a moment that after the commission of a crime a man has a serious motor accident, and if, because of that motor accident, he sustains brain damage which means that his mind becomes disordered, then that man cannot be tried in a court of law, whether he was completely sane at the time he committed the crime or was not sane at the time he committed the crime. As I understand the law, the crime with which this man is charged is also entirely irrelevant. The enquiry, while definitely it would have been loaded less with emotional stresses, would have been exactly the same if it was a person tried for any other crime, if it was a person tried for theft, or for a parking offence. It is a preliminary enquiry which precedes all further proceedings in a court of law, and that is: is the person before the court a man sane enough to be tried by a court of law? That is how I understand it. And that is why I have said that at the moment there is before me no prosecutor and no defending counsel, but merely persons who are trying to help the Court to arrive at a conclusion on this enquiry.

The enquiry has been codified for this country. As I have stated, it is ancient law, but it has been codified in Section 28 of the Mental Disorders Act of 1916 I referred to that section, but I will refer only to the portiere of that section which are relevant to the present enquiry. The relevant portions of this section read as follows: "If, on the arraignment of any person charged with a criminal offence, it appears to the judge presiding at the trial that such person is mentally disordered, the question of such a person's mental condition shall be enquired into by such Court."

Then sub-section 2 proceeds: "If such Court finds, after hearing evidence, which shall include medical evidence, that such person is mentally disordered, the presiding judge shall record that finding and issue an order committing such person to a gaol pending the signification of the Governor-General's decision." (This has subsequently been amended to read: "the decision of the State-President.")

It will be seen from the wording of this section that the Court has no discretion in these matters, that it is to embark upon this enquiry, and that it is forced to come to a conclusion. I also am of the opinion that in law this enquiry rests upon no onus on either side, because the section goes on to say that if the Court is in any doubt - it does not say that the doubt will be to the benefit of the accused or it will be against the accused - the Court must resolve those doubts by committing the person to a proper institution for proper investigation, and when that is over the Court has just got to answer the question one way or another.

In this case I don't believe any good purpose will be served by the further remittal to an institution of any kind, and the Court is by law, of which it is but a servant, conjoined to give a finding.

The enquiry presently before this Court is exactly the same as the enquiry which came before the Court in the Transvaal, presided over by my very distinguished learned brother Rumpff J.P., as he then was, in the case of Rex vs. Pratt (1960(4) S.A.L.R., 743). There the exact same enquiry had to be conducted upon a man who had shot this same victim - fortunately for us, fortunately for this country, unsuccessfully, and we had the benefit of the leadership of the late Prime Minister for what might prove to be vital years thereafter. In this case - I am referring to the bottom of page 746 - the learned Judge says: "It is clear that whatever anomalies may flow from the law as it stands the legislature has decided that epilepsy in certain circumstances is a disease of the mind and that if an epileptic is a danger to himself or others or is incapable of managing himself or his affairs, he should not be tried. He must be regarded as mentally disordered or defective in terms of the Act. It is not for me to disagree with the legislature. That being the case, it is necessary to consider whether on the evidence the accused is an epileptic and a danger to himself or others."

His Lordship then, having considered all the evidence, comes to the conclusion that the accused in that case, Pratt, was an epileptic, and he gave the order which Section 28 conjoins. I am embarking upon exactly the same enquiry, with this exception only: that the man presently before me, presently arraigned before me, is said to be a schizophrenic and not an epileptic. That is the only difference.

It is not disputed by anyone that schizophrenia is a mental disorder, that it is a mental disorder such as envisaged in the Mental Disorders Act, and that, if of a sufficient degree to make the person suffering from that disorder a danger to himself or to others, or to make it impossible for him to properly look after himself or his affairs, then he is a mentally disordered person in terms of the Act.

As I have stressed, the enquiry is not into what was Tsafendas mental state on the 6th September, 1966, but what it is today. Today we know that he is certainly a danger to other people, and probably also to himself. The only enquiry before the Court therefore is – and it is the only enquiry that is left - is the Court satisfied that he is a schizophrenic.

In the course of this case reference was made to this man's prior history. Really the events therein referred to are not evidence in this Court. Application was made by Mr. Cooper for evidence to be taken overseas so that these matters covered in his history could in fact and indeed become evidence in a court of law, and had the evidence not been as clear as it is I would have had to deal with that application.

I want to make very brief reference to that history. Everybody seems to have accepted it, and although I think the truth of every statement need not be in it, I think one cannot approach this case without realising that this man has a long history of mental disorder. I merely touch on one or two of the experiences which are recorded here.

It is now 1966. As early as 1935 there is on record that this man was already preoccupied with this extraordinary, bizarre tapeworm delusion of his. That is thirty years ago. He has been in mental hospitals. I find here, glancing through it, that in 1943 he was detained in the Psychopathic Hospital of Boston. He was then transferred to the Metropolitan State Hospital. In 1944 I find him in the United States General Army Hospital in England. Again in 1944 I find he is diagnosed as suffering from psychosis and he is detained in the Roper Hospital. There is then a special board of enquiry instituted in the Roper Hospital, and as a result of that enquiry this man is declared, in 1944, as insane. In the same year he tries to get back into the United States and he is detained in the medical hospital - the other side of it. In 1946 he is detained in the Boston Psychopathic. That year again he is certified insane in the Grafton State Hospital in the United States. In that same year, in 1946, after a United States Department of Justice hearing at North Grafton State Hospital, the man before me is diagnosed as a schizophrenic, hebephrenic type, with deterioration and prognosis poor. He eventually, in 1949, gets to Portugal. There he is detained in a state hospital. He is given shock treatment. He then gets to Germany in 1954, and there he is detained in the Ochsenzoll Hospital and is again given shock treatment. He gets back to London and there he is at St. Pancras Hospital, London, definitely once more, in 1959, diagnosed as paranoid schizophrenic. He is then detained in the Whitecroft Hospital in the Isle of Wight with a diagnosis of delusional psychosis. That is the history of this individual before he comes here.

In 1963, to our extreme misfortune, this man returns to South Africa. He is in and out of jobs, leading an unsatisfactory life. I will only refer to one other very important matter: in June, 1966, he comes before the District Surgeon of Cape Town, Dr. Kossew, applying for a disability pension. District surgeons are busy people, as was stated in evidence. They are not psychiatric experts, and have never pretended to be, and I don't suppose that district surgeons are chosen for the ease with which they give away State pensions. Although the District Surgeon saw this man only for a short time, only as one of many that passed through his hands, it is to his great credit that in the short time he had at his disposal he could see through this man and diagnosed him as schizophrenic. Perhaps I should also mention, briefly, that the ordinary people, the ordinary everyday people with whom he came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected. One of the strongest pieces of evidence in this case is that of Mr. Smorenberg, a down-to-earth foreman. I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.' It was obvious to Daniels and his wife. Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man.

Of course thoughts must arise, have arisen and must continue to arise, as how it could have been possible that a man like this, a man with this history, a man so obviously deranged, could find his way into an assembly where the leaders of our people are busy in Parliament. Those are questions that do not concern this Court. We have no concern with it, but it is almost unavoidable that the question arises in one's mind.

I have had before me a number of eminent psychiatrists. May I be allowed, in parenthesis, to say that I have been informed that each of the medical men in this case has given his services, to assist this Court, free, they have given their time free, and I can only say that it once again shows that this country, and its people, is something of which one can be proud. I am grateful to you gentlemen, I am grateful for the sacrifice. I am not surprised: I expected no less. The Court thanks you.

Now before me came a whole host, if I may call it that, of psychiatrists. The first one was Dr. Cooper. A court of law does not lightly sit back and allow a man who has committed a grievous crime to get away on a plea or an enquiry of this nature. Dr. Cooper led the van, and at that stage it was obvious that this Court was prepared to resist, as far as it could, that this man was not responsible for his actions, and, if Dr. Cooper got it, that is what the first tank over must expect. It became clear, however, as psychiatrist followed psychiatrist, that there can be no doubt whatever in this case that the man before me is a schizophrenic; that he is a lunatic - in more direct terms - or, as Roman Law would have had it, that I had before me a furiosus. A furiosus is something which I cannot try. I can as little try a man who has not got at least the makings of a rational mind as I could try a dog or an inert implement. A man who is mentally disordered can perform no legal act. He couldn't possibly plead. Pleading in a Court of law is an act in law which has results. The acts of a mentally disordered person have no consequences in law.

I have before me, on the evidence, clearly a man with a diseased mind, a mind subject to delusion, a mind which is so trammelled, if not guided, by irrational forces, that obviously I cannot even begin to find whether he is guilty or not guilty of a crime at law. The process cannot even start, you cannot get to the provisions of the Criminal Law. You cannot get to Section 164, or any other provision of the Criminal Law until you have decided that the man presently before you has a sufficiently rational mind that he is capable of being tried. So that I don't believe it is necessary for me to go into any other of the provisions of the Criminal Law. I am satisfied, and indeed, I could not other than be satisfied, on the pre-history of this man, on the evidence of the psychiatrists, one after the other (I don't think that any purpose will be served in mentioning them by name) who have agreed that here we have, not a criminal, but a sick person; mentally sick, mentally disturbed, mentally irresponsible.

In this enquiry on which I was embarked it was the duty of the State, no less than of the Defence, to assist the Court, and I am grateful also for the evidence of Mr. Erasmus and the evidence of Professor van Wyk. They have made my task an easy one because, appearing at the behest of the State, they have also said that the man before me is certifiable and that he should be sent to an institution. So that really, I have no option in the matter. There is really nothing for me more left to decide, and I and my two learned assessors find ourselves in the position where we cannot otherwise than, in terms of Section 28 (to which I have already made reference) say that the person presently before us is found by us to be mentally disordered.

That is really the end of it all, but I think it would not be amiss if I said a few words more about this whole matter, and for reasons of my own I choose to say them in Afrikaans. The application that was submitted to me has now been resolved and the order of the court should be made accordingly.

The case of the State versus Demitri Tsafendas, for the time being at any rate – and in all probability for all times – has come to an end. As I've said previously, as far as this court is concerned, this is a murder case and nothing more. We deal with murder cases on a daily basis and it is, with regard to the legal aspects of this case, just another murder case. And because it is a murder case and a case in a Supreme Court, this Court would not fulfil its duty, and would not be worthy of the trust put in it, if it would act differently from the provisions in the law that this Court, like any other citizen of this country are obliged to obey.

In fact, if this Court were to act differently than in accordance with the strict provisions of the judicial process it would, in my opinion, not be worthy of the name of Supreme Court. If it, in contradiction to the admonishments and the provisions of the law, sentence a person to death who was on trial, then this court would be guilty of the crime of murder. This is what this Court would do if it deviates from the law and sentence someone to death.

We and our forefathers in this country are orderly and law-abiding citizens. We are an orderly people. I understand fully that people in this country have deep feelings regarding this case. I fully understand when people say: "Why? Can it be true that an insignificant human being could have done what he did?" I know that the first reaction of every community throughout the centuries have always been a sense of revenge and retribution. I share that feeling with the rest of the country.

It is recognized, and it's an opinion that I strongly share, that one element of a judgement in a criminal case is to give organized expression to the sense of retribution and revenge by the community and I know that if the Law does not do it, the community tends to eventually do it themselves. I am fully aware that when people trust that retribution will take place in an organized way, you won't get violence and it's one of the reasons why we, in this country of ours, never experienced "lynch law."

I am fully aware of all the undercurrents but one should also consider understanding these matters to a greater extent. By paying with his life, that person can do nothing for us. Even if he is executed or not, it would make no difference to our loss. But what would have had a huge impact was if he, through his actions, was able to get a Supreme Court to disregard the law of this country, then he would indeed have caused a greater harm to our survival as a nation than he has already succeeded in so far. Then he would, by sacrificing his useless life, shake the foundations of our nation's institutions, and then we would give an importance to this creature that he does not deserve. He would, if we had tolerated such a thing, caused us much more harm than what he has already succeeded in doing. In fact, people come and people go, but if this people, this nation, loose its trust in the judicial institutions and in its judicial bench then you would indeed have a humiliation and a shame that is irreparable and would rest like a blot on this country.

One of the assessors made the observation that a leader of the people such as the deceased listed in this indictment, if he understood the situation, without a doubt would not have wanted it otherwise. Of that I have absolutely no doubt. We must continue in the deep realization that, by granting this man a defence, that by providing him with the best legal and medical assistance, through the instruction I'm obliged to make, the honour and glory and the good name of our country, to act correctly remains unblemished and stay the foundation on which we build an orderly community, unshaken and unharmed.

I am also of the opinion after considering the matter – although I can understand that it may immediately generate a certain degree of dissatisfaction and shock in certain people – I'm certain that after due consideration by all right-minded people in the country they will realize that the matter could not be dealt with differently, that it is not humane, that it is not Christian, to condemn the mentally ill; that the man who sits there is a sick person, deeply sick in spirit; that when the law says he is not responsible for his actions, then it's not only legally true but also humanly true. You cannot continue to have feelings of revenge in respect of a sick person and on the basis of the evidence presented to this court, the only conclusion that I can come to is that the accused is deeply and immensely disturbed, and is deeply and extremely ill, and that his actions does not arise from a rational state of mind, which is the first requirement before anyone can be punished, or is guilty of any crime. It is therefore my duty to recommend that the person, Dimitri Tsafendas, be taken from here to a prison and that he is detained there, pending the determination of the State President of this country.

COMMENTS ON JUDGE BEYERS' VERDICT

When Judge Beyers appointed Wilfrid Cooper as Tsafendas's advocate, he warned him that his client would "swing" unless he was found to be insane.⁵⁷³⁷ Tsafendas was duly found insane and escaped the gallows. It is necessary to stress, however, that Judge Beyers based his verdict on the evidence presented to him and was almost certainly unaware of evidence gathered by the South African police.

At the same time, it is important to mention that in David Pratt's case, Judge Frans Rumpff, who presided, heard the case for the defence, including testimonies by the psychiatrists, then sent the accused for fourteen days of psychiatric evaluation at the Weskoppies hospital for mentally disturbed persons.⁵⁷³⁸ There, Pratt was observed daily during this period by Dr. Lamont, who was in charge of evaluating Pratt's mental state.⁵⁷³⁹ Judge Beyers did not find it necessary to send Tsafendas for similar observation, even though Dr. Cooper and Prof. van Wyk spent only about six hours each with him while each of the other psychiatrists spent about four and a half hours. Nor did Judge Beyers appear concerned about the environment in which the examination took place. Pratt was observed in the clinical surroundings of a hospital, while Tsafendas was seen in custody in the Caledon Square police station. Professor Tuviah Zabow considers that this is an important issue and that Tsafendas should have been taken to a hospital for observation and proper examination.⁵⁷⁴⁰

⁵⁷³⁷ Wilfrid Cooper in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997

⁵⁷³⁸ Maisels, 1998: 105.

⁵⁷³⁹ Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, 'Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.'

Another important difference was that Dr. Lamont interviewed six people who knew Pratt well, including relatives, friends and one of his employees.⁵⁷⁴¹ None of those who examined Tsafendas spoke to a single person who knew him. Judge Beyers nevertheless accepted their diagnoses, clearly believing that no further examinations were necessary. He also praised Dr. Kossew, who, although not a psychiatrist, had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic after an examination that lasted “a little bit longer” than ten minutes. His conclusion apparently was that the evidence to hand was sufficient to make a judgment on Tsafendas.

Let us examine his verdict.

SOUTH AFRICA, “A HIGHLY CIVILIZED” COUNTRY

Judge Beyers characterised South Africa as a “highly civilized country.” While acknowledging that such a characterisation is entirely subjective, the author considers it to be a most debatable, if not wholly inaccurate, description of South Africa in 1966. Apartheid was in full force, 79% of the country’s citizens were governed by the 21%, deprived of basic rights and subjected to inferior education system, designed by Hendrik Verwoerd himself, to ensure that non-whites “knew their place” in a racist society and would never dare to dream of a better life, as the architect of apartheid himself had infamously declared:

“The Bantu must be guided to serve his community in all respects. There is no place for him in the European community above the level of certain forms of labour. Within his community, however, all doors are open. For that reason, it is of no avail for him to receive a training which has as its main aim absorption in the European community, where he cannot be absorbed. Until now he has been subjected to a school system which drew him away from ⁵⁷⁴⁰ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 2 September 2016.

⁵⁷⁴¹ Prof. Lamont’s report about David Pratt: Accused reaction to information gleaned from documents, friends, relatives and employees in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, ‘Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.’

his own community and misled him by showing him the green pastures of European society in which he was not allowed to graze.”⁵⁷⁴²

This was a country where 79% of the population had no land rights, were forced to live in designated areas and were forbidden to enter “whites only” territory; a country where the White people, 21% of the population, owned 87% of the land, forcing the 79% who were not White onto the remaining 13%; a country which was effectively a police state, where the law allowed police to hold a person in custody for 180 days without access to a lawyer, where political opponents of the government were impassioned, exiled, tortured, persecuted and banned. Professor John Dugard has expressed “outrage and shame” about the South African legal system during apartheid,⁵⁷⁴³ characterising it as “abnormal.” He wrote:

“A legal system that excludes 70% of its population from the franchise, that excludes 70% of its population from owning land in 87% of the country, that arbitrarily deprives 8 million people of their nationality, that has forcibly relocated many millions of people on account of their race, that formally executes some 160 persons per year, that authorizes repression in the name of national security and that permits international aggression, [is] . . . a grossly abnormal one.”⁵⁷⁴⁴

Furthermore, a society that allowed the flogging of humans as a form of punishment could hardly be described as “civilized.” In 1965, just a year before Judge Beyers’s verdict, reliable figures showed that 64,905 strokes were inflicted on 15,756 persons.⁵⁷⁴⁵ In an era when more and more nations were turning away from capital punishment, 194 men were hanged in South Africa between 1963 and 1965, representing 47% of all the world’s executions. South Africa was the world’s “busiest hangman,” said Albie Sachs, anti-apartheid activist and former judge at the Constitutional Court of South Africa.⁵⁷⁴⁶ These and other anti-democratic aspects of South African society at the time are widely known. If such a society was Judge Beyers’ idea of a civilized country, it tells us a lot about his definition of civilization and arguably what kind of a person he was himself.

Judge Beyers’ next sentence appeared intended to demonstrate the civilized nature of South African society: “(If) a man is charged on a capital charge, this country sees to it that, ⁵⁷⁴² Bunting, 1986: 260; Dubow, 2014: 55-6; O’Meara, 1996: 73; Lipton, 1985: 24; Schadeberg, 1990: 81.

⁵⁷⁴³ Klug, 2000: 660.

⁵⁷⁴⁴ Klug, 2000: 659-660.

⁵⁷⁴⁵ Sachs, 1970, 3-5.

⁵⁷⁴⁶ Sachs, 1970, 1-3.

at the expense of the State, he is represented.” This is true in that Tsafendas was indeed represented at the expense of the State. However, he had asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos, well-known at the time for his involvement in two major political trials, the Rivonia and the Bram Fischer proceedings. He was also the son of Tsafendas's good friend, Antonis Bizos. Instead, the State appointed lawyers of its own choice in David Bloomberg, Wilfrid Cooper and Willie Burger. A truly civilized country would have complied with the accused's request and given him the lawyer of his choice. It is very possible though that Judge Beyers was not aware of Tsafendas's request for Bizos when he named these three lawyers. It cannot go unmentioned though that David Bloomberg was the son of Abe Bloomberg, who was a good friend of Judge Beyers⁵⁷⁴⁷ and who had publicly praised and defended Dr. Verwoerd's policies just a year earlier.⁵⁷⁴⁸

The “civilized” nature of South African society might be questioned in view of the treatment Tsafendas received after his summary trial. Officially recognised by the state as a schizophrenic in need of medical treatment, Tsafendas was entitled to accommodation in a psychiatric hospital and to treatment, as the law required, for those who are mentally ill. Instead, he was kept for twenty-three years in a cell on Death Row in a maximum security prison and he never received any medical treatment for his stated problem.

THE TAPEWORM

Judge Beyers goes on to state that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935. However, he was simply repeating what he heard about the tapeworm during the summary trial and was not in position to know anything beyond that. It was indeed claimed that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since 1935, when according to Louisa O’Ryan, his step mother removed and destroyed six feet of the creature which Tsafendas had excreted. However, Tsafendas's step-mother denied to the Commission of Enquiry that such an incident ever took place and stated that she never heard her stepson say anything about a tapeworm. Tsafendas's whole family denied to the Commission that Tsafendas ever mentioned a tapeworm and maintained that he was “definitely not insane.”⁵⁷⁴⁹

⁵⁷⁴⁷ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁵⁷⁴⁸ The New York Times, 23 May 1965: xi, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa.’

⁵⁷⁴⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

However, Judge Beyers was not aware of this. He was also unaware that not one of the approximately two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission ever said they heard Tsafendas talking about a tapeworm and that included people who knew him in 1935 and after. Furthermore, Judge Beyers did not know that Tsafendas had told Patrick O’Ryan that he had made up the tapeworm story, nor that Wilfrid Cooper had asked O’Ryan and his wife Louisa to “talk up” the tapeworm and exaggerate some stories about Tsafendas in order to save his life.⁵⁷⁵⁰

THE HOSPITALS

Judge Beyers then mentions the hospitals where Tsafendas was treated. He sets out all of his hospitalizations in the United States but does not mention the reasons for them, probably because he is unaware of them. As we have seen, Tsafendas, while in the USA, was hospitalized for two reasons: he was taken there by authorities while he was in custody or he admitted himself when he had no money and nowhere to stay. No reference is made to the fact that Tsafendas was hospitalised after showing signs of mental illness while in custody, something that would happen again and again. For example in 1943, he was arrested on charges of contravening US immigration laws.⁵⁷⁵¹ While in detention, he “showed symptoms of mental disorder” and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, from where he was transferred on April 23, 1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital.”⁵⁷⁵² While there he was found to be faking mental illness,⁵⁷⁵³ something Judge Beyers was unaware of since it was not mentioned during the summary trial.

Of equal importance is that Beyers was ignorant of the opinion of the US Immigration Department about Tsafendas. The US Immigration authorities had dealt with him for five years and had his medical history and recorded that Tsafendas “is understood to have shown ⁵⁷⁵⁰ Patrick and Louisa O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

⁵⁷⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁷⁵² The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵⁷⁵³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)⁵⁷⁵⁴ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations.”⁵⁷⁵⁵

The Judge then refers to Tsafendas's hospitalization in Portugal in 1949 and the fact that he was given shock treatment. What he does not mention, because he is unaware of it, is that Tsafendas was hospitalized after he showed signs of mental illness while in police detention,⁵⁷⁵⁶ and that on another occasion he was hospitalized after pretending to be mad so as not to serve in the Portuguese Army.⁵⁷⁵⁷ Finally, he refers to the hospitals in England and Germany, unaware that Tsafendas admitted himself to these hospitals.

DR. KOSSEW

Judge Beyers says that “district surgeons are busy people, as was stated in evidence. They are not psychiatric experts, and have never pretended to be, and I don't suppose that district surgeons are chosen for the ease with which they give away State pensions. Although the District Surgeon saw this man only for a short time, only as one of many that passed through his hands, it is to his great credit that in the short time he had at his disposal he could see through this man and diagnosed him as schizophrenic.” The Judge here praises Dr. Kossew, who diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic, although he was not a psychiatrist, examined him only for “a little bit longer” than ten minutes and stated that his aim was to determine Tsafendas's “physical condition” and not his mental state.

However, as we have seen, Dr. Kossew's testimony was extremely weak and was left unchallenged by the Attorney-General when it could so easily have been broken down. Judge Beyers is unaware of the fact that Tsafendas was examined ten times by nine different doctors, none of them a psychiatrist, over the last three years, none of whom noticed anything wrong with him or perceived any of the symptoms mentioned in court. On all of these occasions, Tsafendas wanted to be found sane and healthy and this is how he was found; with Dr. Kossew he wanted to be found insane in order to qualify for the disability grant he had ⁵⁷⁵⁴ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

⁵⁷⁵⁵ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

⁵⁷⁵⁶ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁵⁷⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

applied for, and that is how he was found. Judge Beyers was not aware of any of this because the Attorney-General had failed to present any such evidence and Dr. Kossew's testimony, instead of being now exposed as weak, unreliable and false, was accepted and praised by the Judge.

"EVERYDAY PEOPLE" AND TSAFENDAS

Judge Beyers made the most inaccurate of his statements when he said that "ordinary everyday people with whom he came into contact did not take long before they could see that this man was mentally affected." Again, he is unaware that of the about two hundred people questioned by the police and the Commission only three commented negatively on Tsafendas's mental state: Caroline Barbeau who got the impression that Tsafendas "was not all there,"⁵⁷⁵⁸ Keith Martincich who thought that there "was something mentally wrong with him" because Tsafendas sometimes mumbled to himself,⁵⁷⁵⁹ and James Johnston, who also testified in the summary trial, who considered Tsafendas to be "slightly mentally unbalanced."⁵⁷⁶⁰

We have examined these statements and the reasons for their opinions so it will not be discussed here again. The rest of the witnesses had stated clearly that Tsafendas appeared perfectly sane and they never noticed anything wrong with him including the symptoms mentioned in court. Once again, the Judge was not aware of these two hundred statements the police and the Commission had taken and took under consideration only what it was presented to him.

OWEN SMORENBERG

Judge Beyers was noted in the legal community for having a photographic memory and not keeping notes during trial proceedings. However, in at least one case, he mis-remembered the evidence given at the summary trial. He characterised Smorenberg as a down-to-earth foreman and said, "I shall not forget that when he was asked: 'What did you think of this ⁵⁷⁵⁸ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁵⁹ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁶⁰ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

man?' his answer was: 'I don't like to call any man mad, but he is definitely barmy.' However, Smorenberg did not say that. What he said was, "Well, I wouldn't say he is mad, but he seems a little bit barmy."⁵⁷⁶¹

The Judge also characterised Smorenberg's testimony as "the strongest piece of evidence." As we have seen, Smorenberg's testimony was well off the mark; none of the aforementioned two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission had said anything that bore the slightest resemblance to Smorenberg's testimony, while the vast majority of them contradicted his claims. The Attorney-General could easily have broken down Smorenberg's testimony using the evidence gathered by the police, but he did not do so, leaving Judge Beyers to take the remarks seriously.

THE O'RYANS, JOHNSTON AND THE DANIELS

Judge Beyers' mistaken recollection of Smorenberg's words was not his only inaccuracy. He also said that "it was obvious to Daniels and his wife. Daniels said that this man is mad. It was obvious to O'Ryan and his wife. It was obvious to Mr. Johnston that this was a queer, strange man." In fact, while Patrick O'Ryan might have testified to the lunacy of the tapeworm, he did not state that Tsafendas was mentally affected. On the contrary, he said, "I never actually doubted his mental state, since to me he had a mind that the majority of people have."⁵⁷⁶² The court also heard O'Ryan's statement to the police where he said that Tsafendas "was not spiritually or mentally disturbed ... I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind."⁵⁷⁶³ This the Judge seems to have overlooked.

Judge Beyers said it was obvious to Johnston that Tsafendas appeared to be a strange man. The Judge is unaware that Johnston had spoken to Tsafendas for only twenty minutes in his life and that he also said, "I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background, but otherwise he appeared to be all right."⁵⁷⁶⁴ ⁵⁷⁶¹ Owen Smorenberg's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷⁶² Patrick O'Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷⁶³ Patrick O'Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷⁶⁴ James Johnston's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Peter Daniels did indeed characterise Tsafendas as “mad,” but this was due to things Tsafendas did which he perceived as mad. However, as we have seen, none of the things mentioned by Daniels and his wife would be considered the actions of a mad man by most people. After all, it was Peter Daniels who thought that Tsafendas was “mentally deranged” because he “tried to cool the fowls down” with a hosepipe. Judge Beyers himself retorted that this was the right thing to do in hot weather and Tsafendas’s act was certainly not that of someone who was mentally deranged.

Although all the other incidents described by the Daniels couple were of a similar type, the Judge nevertheless took their testimony seriously. This was mostly down to the Attorney-General’s failure successfully to challenge their testimonies and expose the lies, although substantial police evidence was available. Mr. and Mrs. Daniels portrayed Tsafendas as a tramp for whom they felt sorry and who foisted himself upon them, while hiding the fact that Helen Daniels asked to meet him so he could marry her, even claiming that it was Tsafendas who had taken the initiative with regard to Helen.

THE VERDICT

Judge Beyers’ conclusion that Tsafendas was unfit to stand trial and mentally disordered as defined in the Mental Disorders Act was based strictly on the evidence presented before him. However, to commit him to a prison, pending the decision of the State President, instead of to a psychiatric hospital where he was entitled to receive treatment as a certifiable schizophrenic, was a direct contradiction of his claim that South Africa was a “highly civilized county.” David Pratt, in a similar situation was detained in a hospital.

Dr. Sakinofsky had suggested Tsafendas be detained in an asylum,⁵⁷⁶⁵ but Judge Beyers did not refer to this statement in his verdict. It is possible the Judge was influenced by Dr. MacGregor’s comment, “I don’t think any ordinary asylum would hold this man for any length of time,”⁵⁷⁶⁶ although that remark itself does not bear scrutiny. Certainly, Tsafendas had left or “escaped” from a psychiatric hospital, but then he was a patient not a prisoner who had murdered someone. The apartheid authorities certainly had the means to keep Tsafendas locked in a psychiatric hospital. The Fort, at Bloemfontein, was a maximum security mental institution, and if it was thought special facilities were needed for an especially dangerous man, these could easily have been created in a secure hospital environment.

⁵⁷⁶⁵ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁵⁷⁶⁶ Dr. James William MacGregor’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Furthermore, although not related to the verdict but relevant to the “highly civilized country” comment, it is worth noting that although he was declared to be a schizophrenic, Tsafendas received no treatment whatsoever while he was in prison, at least for the first twenty-plus years. Hardly the behaviour of a highly civilized country.

THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT OF 1944

When the summary trial ended, Tsafendas's defence team spelled out to him the 1944 Amendments to the Criminal Procedure Act, which ruled that since mental illnesses might prove temporary, the charge in cases such as his could never be abandoned or withdrawn. This meant that Tsafendas could be tried again if his mental state was deemed restored.⁵⁷⁶⁷ Tsafendas got the point; he had to remain insane at least for as long as apartheid existed.⁵⁷⁶⁸

⁵⁷⁶⁷ Daily Dispatch, 27 September 1960: 1, ‘No trial for David Pratt’; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 1, ‘Pratt will not stand trial: mentally disordered’; The New York Times, 27 September 1960, ‘Assailant of Dr. Verwoerd found mentally unfit’; The Star, 1 October 1960: 1, ‘Pratt is unfit to plead.’

⁵⁷⁶⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafataridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

THE ROLE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL IN THE SUMMARY TRIAL

Officially, the Attorney-General believed that Tsafendas was not a schizophrenic and thus was fit to stand trial, and proving that contention appeared to be his main objective during the summary trial. It was also what he told David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper on October 6, when Tsafendas was remanded for the trial proceedings. To support his stance he gave the defence team Professor van Wyk's medical report on Tsafendas which made no mention of schizophrenia and contended that Tsafendas was fit to be tried. However, the Attorney-General's conduct during the summary trial was puzzling, especially the fact that both of his own expert witnesses testified that in examinations conducted before October 6 they found Tsafendas to be schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial.

Professor van Wyk, the State's principal expert witness who was appointed by the Attorney-General himself, said that initially, after two examinations, he believed Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. However, after examining him again on October 4, he changed his mind and concluded he was schizophrenic. He confirmed this opinion during his next two examinations on October 13 and 14. In the meantime, Mr. Erasmus, a clinical psychologist, the other State witness appointed by the Attorney-General, had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic from September 29, according to his testimony to the court.

Therefore, the diagnoses of both of the States' witnesses agreed with the defence's line. In that case, the question is why the Attorney-General appeared to question the defence's medical witnesses so strongly while trying to prove Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. As David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper rightly wondered, why did he allow Judge Beyers to question all their witnesses, especially Dr. Cooper, so vigorously?

Let us first examine the diagnoses of the State's two expert witnesses and their relations with the Attorney-General. The first question is whether van den Berg was aware of their diagnoses. According to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard it is impossible to believe that his witnesses did not inform him of their findings. Thus the Attorney-General had two options:

- a. He did not agree with their diagnoses.
- b. He agreed with their diagnoses.

Let's examine both scenarios:

A. HE DID NOT AGREE WITH THEIR DIAGNOSES

If the Attorney-General did not agree with his expert witnesses' diagnoses that would explain his what appeared to be hostile questioning and the fact that he remained mute while Judge Beyers adopted a similar approach. However, it does not explain why he did not produce evidence to support his assertion that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, as well as his line of questioning at times.

First and perhaps mostly importantly, if the Attorney-General had doubts about his two experts or lacked confidence in them, he could have appointed more psychiatrists and psychologists to examine Tsafendas. Arguments as to limited time are not valid. Erasmus carried out his tests on September 28 and 29, thus the Attorney-General had three weeks to appoint another expert to examine Tsafendas. Professor van Wyk initially diagnosed Tsafendas as fit to stand trial, but on October 4 formed the opinion he was schizophrenic, giving the Attorney-General two weeks to appoint a second psychiatrist.

Furthermore, the Attorney-General could easily have found medical and non-medical witnesses to support his case. About one hundred and fifty people were questioned by the police and not a single one of them backed the defence's line. On the contrary, several could have challenged the defence, having described Tsafendas variously as a dangerous Communist, an opponent of apartheid and colonialism, and someone who considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator. Witnesses had also testified that Tsafendas characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as "justifiable." None of those who made these statements was called, although this might simply have been because the police did not make these testimonies available to van den Berg. Another possibility is that he was given witness statements which included nothing of importance. However, the Attorney-General must have known that the police would have questioned Tsafendas. Did he not ask to see these statements? Did he not think of asking what Tsafendas told the police during the forty-days he was in their custody? He could not have believed the accused man did not talk to the police at all during this period.

The Attorney-General seems to have knowledge of Tsafendas's movements prior to the assassination and of its planning. Such information could have come only from Tsafendas himself. Since Tsafendas had told the police about his movements and his planning in both of his statements, the fact that the Attorney-General was aware of these matters suggests that he was given Tsafendas's statements. However, if this was the case, he did not use the more important information in the statements which concern Tsafendas's motives. Tsafendas had given clear and logical reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd: that he was "disgusted with his policies," considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of ALL South African people and he hoped that by killing him a "change of policy would take place."⁵⁷⁶⁹ It cannot also be excluded that the Attorney-General was not in possession of the full statements given by Tsafendas, but had been given only chosen extracts.

The Attorney-General appeared to try his best to prove that Tsafendas was politically motivated but he did not use any of the statements Tsafendas gave to the police, nor any of the evidence the police gathered regarding his political activities especially those which led to his arrests by the Portuguese, nor did he use any of the many statements by people who characterised Tsafendas as a Communist and anti-apartheid. Instead, he used the report by Dr. Sakinofsky which referred to "delusional" ideas, such as the Cape-Cairo Union, and pronounced Tsafendas to be a schizophrenic. The use of Dr. Sakinofsky's report was an extremely clumsy way of trying to prove that Tsafendas's motive was political. The report referred to "confused and delusional" ideas held by Tsafendas and, more importantly, diagnosed Tsafendas as a schizophrenic. Who would ever try to prove a man is sane by using a report which argues that he is a schizophrenic? This was like trying to put out a fire with gasoline.

The Grafton State Hospital report, which was in the possession of the police since September 16,⁵⁷⁷⁰ stated that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in the 1940s.⁵⁷⁷¹ And six witnesses testified to the police on October 12 that Tsafendas had pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army.⁵⁷⁷² The author is not in position to know whether the Attorney-General was in possession of this evidence, but certainly it was not used to advance his case. The Attorney-General was also aware that Tsafendas had "simulated abnormality" before but did not think of raising the issue with any of those who examined Tsafendas. It was only brought up by the Attorney-General's assistant with Dr. MacGregor, the last of the ⁵⁷⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁷⁷⁰ Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

⁵⁷⁷¹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵⁷⁷² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

defence witnesses, and even then, it was quickly brushed away.

Even if the Attorney-General was not given all the evidence by the police, he must have considered Tsafendas's colleagues at Parliament as witnesses who could testify to his work and his mental state up to the assassination. This would have supported the assertion he made to Dr. Cooper and Dr. MacGregor that Tsafendas's work was satisfactory. However, he produced no evidence to support his claim and was left looking embarrassed when the defence appeared to prove that Tsafendas's work was not satisfactory. Not even at that point did he produce anything to support his argument, leaving the defence's witness unchallenged.

If the Attorney-General did not agree with his expert witnesses' diagnoses, that would explain his line of questioning, but it does not explain his failure to produce any substantial evidence to support his opinion and it also does not explain why he did not appoint additional psychiatrists to examine Tsafendas. It would also not explain his bizarre attempt to use Dr. Sakinofsky's report to prove that Tsafendas was politically motivated. The fact is the Attorney-General did not use any evidence to support the argument that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial, so why did he even attempt to prove such a thing, especially since his two own experts appeared to agree with the defence that the accused is schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial? He couldn't really have expected a successful challenge to the defence without any evidence.

B. HE DID NOT AGREE WITH THEIR DIAGNOSES

This would mean that he accepted Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial, which would certainly explain his failure to produce any evidence to challenge the defence. However, it does not explain his line of questioning and his apparent attempt to prove that Tsafendas was not a schizophrenic and that this was a political act. Furthermore, if he had accepted his witnesses' diagnosis, he should have prevented Judge Beyers from being so aggressive towards the defence witnesses, as David Bloomberg and Wilfrid Cooper correctly pointed out. Despite the fact that the State and the defence were in agreement, the Attorney-General allowed the trial to be turned into a showcase.

C. OTHER SCENARIOS

The question is: which of the above options was correct? Did the State accept the diagnoses of its own witnesses or did it not? Either way, there are questions left unanswered. However, there are three other scenarios involving the Attorney-General that would explain everything, including his attitude and actions during this inquiry:

- The Attorney-General is incompetent. He fails to evaluate correctly the importance of the evidence gathered by the police. His questioning is irrelevant, pointless or self-defeating. He fails to call evidence to support his case and challenge the defence. Incompetence would explain his behaviour during the summary trial. That, however, would probably make him the most incompetent Attorney-General ever.
- The Attorney-General is not aware of the evidence gathered by the police. The police gave him selective evidence and therefore he did not have the right information to challenge the defence. This option, along with the incompetence theory, would explain his line of questioning and the lack of evidence to challenge the defence and support his claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial.
- The Attorney-General appears to challenge the defence's line, seeking to prove that Tsafendas is fit to stand trial and that the assassination was a political act, but he is actually just pretending. That would explain everything that happened during the summary trial; it would explain his line of questioning, his failure to produce any evidence to challenge the defence and why he appeared to be questioning the defence witnesses while the State's two expert witnesses had already agreed with the defence.

OTHER ISSUES WITH THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CONDUCT

Let us examine some aspects of the Attorney-General's strange behaviour:

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE

This is the area which most clearly suggests that the Attorney-General is merely pretending to challenge the defence case or possibly that he has not been given all the evidence. He heard each of the defence's psychiatrists state that Tsafendas was not politically motivated and that he killed Dr. Verwoerd out of “frustration” and because of the tapeworm. However, Tsafendas had not said anything like that in his statements to the police; instead, he gave clear and logical political reasons for his act. These motives were never mentioned during the summary trial and certainly, for whatever reason, they were not used to challenge the defence. It is true that the Attorney-General had knowledge of things that were in Tsafendas's statements to the police, but this does not prove that he had access to the whole statements. People who knew Tsafendas for lengthy or for shorter periods told the police that they heard him say he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant and a dictator, that he was a communist and anti-apartheid. None of their statements was led in evidence by the Attorney-General.

What points to scenario C as the likeliest reason for the Attorney-General's apparently bizarre conduct is his attempt to challenge Dr. Cooper's claim that the killing was not politically motivated by using Dr. Sakinofsky's report. Even if van den Berg was not in possession of Tsafendas's statements or any other evidence where his political ideology was mentioned, he could never have expected to challenge Dr. Cooper's testimony with a medical report whose diagnosis was schizophrenia. Furthermore, Tsafendas's alleged ideas set out in this report were plainly idiotic, and the Attorney-General could not have expected anyone to take them serious as political motives. Still, not one of the 150 people who were questioned by the police at the time said anything about Tsafendas that bore the slightest resemblance to the things mentioned in this report, and this should have been known the Attorney-General. He should have known that Tsafendas was a Communist and an opponent of apartheid, as several witnesses had testified. He was also well aware that Tsafendas was a former member of the SACP.

Even if the Attorney-General believed that these outlandish ideas at Dr. Sakinofsky's report constituted Tsafendas's motivation, did he actually consider them to be the beliefs of a sane man? Dr. Sakinofsky had diagnosed Tsafendas as schizophrenic precisely because of these ideas. The Attorney-General may not have been given all the statements taken from people who knew Tsafendas, but he must have seen that not one witness mentioned such ideas. Fortunately for the Attorney-General, he was stopped by Judge Beyers before he continued further with Dr. Sakinofsky's report, and the damage he was doing to his own case was limited. However, just the next day Dr. Sakinofsky spoke at length about Tsafendas's alleged motive as given to him by Tsafendas himself, and presented them, clearly and convincingly, as “deluded” and “confused.”

The Attorney-General might have the excuse that he was not in possession of Tsafendas's statements to the police or any other evidence he could use to challenge the question of motive. However, as leading counsel for the State, he had no excuse for attempting to challenge Dr. Cooper with Dr. Sakinofsky's report. This was a move which, if not stopped by Judge Beyers, would have reinforced from the very first day of the summary trial the idea that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic without any political motive, thus supporting the defence and ruining the State's own case.

TSAFENDAS'S ABILITY TO WORK

The Attorney-General sought to challenge Dr. Cooper's opinion that Tsafendas could not hold down a job or work efficiently by stating that there was evidence that Tsafendas's work at Parliament was satisfactory. However, he not only failed to produce evidence to support his claim, he did open the issue of Tsafendas's efficiency at Parliament for discussion. The next day, defence witness Gerald Shaw, a Parliamentary correspondent, testified that Tsafendas's work was unsatisfactory, confirming Dr. Cooper's testimony and damaging the Attorney-General's claim. The Attorney-General did nothing to challenge Shaw and again produced no evidence to support his initial claim. Then, just a few hours after Shaw's testimony, he again raised the issue of Tsafendas's working ability when he cross-examined Dr. Zabow and once again, he failed to produce any supportive evidence.

By returning time after time to the question of Tsafendas's work, the Attorney-General managed to reinforce the defence's line that the accused was incapable of handling even menial jobs. What is extraordinary is that abundant evidence existed that would not just challenge such a claim, but would destroy it completely. Two simple examples: in 1961, Tsafendas worked for six months as a teacher of English at the best private language college in Istanbul. Even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of Tsafendas's statement about his time teaching in Istanbul or the fact that he used a reference from the college to get his job at Parliament, the South African media had reported this.⁵⁷⁷³

If the Attorney-General had moved to discover these facts, he could have posed a virtually unanswerable question to Dr. Cooper: "How is it that the man you say cannot hold down a simple job, actually worked for six months as an English teacher at a prestigious private college?" However, even if the Attorney-General was unaware of the teaching job, he certainly knew that Tsafendas had worked for six years at the Vulcan Iron Works and for two years at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane. More importantly, he was in possession of testimonies from the Vulcan Iron Works that Tsafendas had "performed his duties in a satisfactory manner." Van den Berg made no mention of such important evidence, although he had included this information in his memorandum about Tsafendas on October 3.⁵⁷⁷⁴

⁵⁷⁷³ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, 'Tsafendas taught Turks English'; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas taught English in Turkey.'

Finally, no apparent effort was made by the Attorney-General to contact Tsafendas's colleagues in the House of Assembly as to his working abilities. Five of them had already testified to the police and to the Commission of Enquiry and none of them had said anything negative about Tsafendas, his work or his mental state, on the contrary he was characterised as a normal man who did his work just like any other messenger.

STATEMENTS OF DEFENCE WITNESSES WERE LEFT UNCHALLENGED WERE THEY COULD HAVE EASILY BEEN BROKEN DOWN

As we have seen, there was a plethora of evidence gathered by the police which could have been used to challenge statements by defence witnesses. These included absurd claims that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloureds, that he was a supporter of Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid, that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, that he forced his way into the Daniels's house and several others. Not one of these claims was challenged and though it is certainly possible that the police withheld evidence that would have been useful to the Attorney-General, they could not know before the trial what evidence a witness would give and therefore could not have removed statements that could have been used in the trial. They could have withheld evidence about Tsafendas's political activities and ideology, but not other statements that did not contain references to his political ideas.

A clear example of the above is the one concerning the marriage issue between Helen Daniels and Tsafendas. Tsafendas and Helen Daniels both testified that she had proposed to him that they should meet and get married.⁵⁷⁷⁵ Caroline Barbeau testified that Tsafendas ⁵⁷⁷⁴ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁵⁷⁷⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

wanted to be reclassified in order to marry Helen Daniels.⁵⁷⁷⁶ However, this was not mentioned during Peter Daniels's testimony. In that, he claimed that they allowed Tsafendas to stay in their home simply because he was a member of their Church and that Tsafendas appeared like someone who practically forced himself onto the family.

Tsafendas is portrayed in a negative way by both Peter and Merle Daniels and the Attorney-General does not ask them about Helen's marriage proposal to Tsafendas. Helen Daniels had testified that Tsafendas was recommended to her by fellow members of their sect. Helen was a highly respected preacher and naturally the other members of the sect would not have recommended Tsafendas if he was the type of person described by the Daniels. Helen Daniels herself, who knew Tsafendas better than her brother and sister-in-law, as she had lived under the same roof with him, had testified to the police that Tsafendas was not insane. Neither this nor anything else from her statement was used during the cross-examination when it could have shattered the Daniels's weak testimony.

Several witnesses testified that Tsafendas preferred Coloured people to Whites. For example, his flatmate Jacobus Bornman testified that Tsafendas "stood up a lot for the Coloureds" and Inspector Horacio Ferreira, of the Portuguese Security Police in Mozambique, testified that Tsafendas was "intensely anti-White."⁵⁷⁷⁷ However, Smorenberg's opinion and claim was left unchallenged and was attributed to Tsafendas's ambivalence. These and other claims could easily have been challenged but no move was made to examine them.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S LINE OF QUESTIONING

Apart from his cross-examinations of Dr. Cooper, Patrick O'Ryan and Dr. Sakinofsky, the Attorney-General did little to challenge defence witnesses and often when he did, his questions were pointless and seemed to go nowhere. Often they were just repeats of statements by the witnesses, as in "Did you say it was the 26th" or they were irrelevant or pointless, adding nothing to the State's aim. For instance, when the Attorney-General cross-examined Dr. Zabow, he asked if Tsafendas had given "a good account of himself." This was ⁵⁷⁷⁶ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁷⁷ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

after Dr. Zabow had spoken at length about that very subject and had even read lengthy extracts from Tsafendas's statement to him to demonstrate that Tsafendas was not able to give a good account for himself. Judge Beyers had to intervene again, saying: "the witness has told us at length about the garbled, nonsensical, stupid, disjointed account which the accused did give him when he asked him the question. He has read out at length the account he gave him when he asked him: 'did you kill the Prime Minister, and why?' he read pages of the account."⁵⁷⁷⁸ Only then did van den Berg drop the question.

On occasions, his questioning was more harmful than beneficial to the State. One example was using Dr. Sakinofsky's medical report on Tsafendas to challenge Dr. Cooper. Another was the question of Tsafendas's efficiency as a Parliamentary messenger. A third was asking Patrick O'Ryan, a witness who had spoken positively about the accused, if he felt that Tsafendas was sponging on him. That was the sort of question that should have been asked by the defence counsel, not by the State which is supposedly challenging the emerging picture of Tsafendas as a hopeless case.

What is more, the Attorney General did nothing to challenge Peter Daniels's important testimony which sought to portray Tsafendas as someone who virtually forced his way into the Daniels's home and was chasing Peter Daniels's sister. Although both claims were untrue and could have been easily challenged by Helen Daniels's testimony to the police, this did not happen. Instead, the Attorney-General asked about statements Peter Daniels had already made, a point which the Court highlighted, or asked him irrelevant or unimportant questions such as how many suitcases Tsafendas had, whether he used his welding kit and if he received and wrote letters. Daniels twice said that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965, but the Attorney-General still asked if it was July 10. Helen Daniels had testified to the police that Tsafendas arrived on August 28, 1965. Van den Berg did not suggest that August 28 might have been the wrong date, so why press it?

Finally, although at times the Attorney-General's cross-examination appeared to be fierce and insistent, as with Dr. Cooper and Dr. Sakinofsky, and to some extent, Patrick O'Ryan, in reality it failed to challenge any of the testimonies. It did not come close to exposing or destroying the evidence offered. What is surprising is that there was a massive amount of evidence gathered by the South African police that could have been used to challenge every single testimony, but this simply did not happen. Once again, however, this could be because the State was not in possession of all the evidence.

⁵⁷⁷⁸ Dr. Abraham Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

THE VERGOS ISSUE

On October 12, the story of the day in South Africa was that Nikolas Vergos, the man who had fought with Tsafendas at Mandini and was a sought-after witness, was finally located. “KEY WITNESS FOUND” announced the front page of the Daily Dispatch,⁵⁷⁷⁹ while The Cape Times bannered “IMPORTANT WITNESS TRACED.”⁵⁷⁸⁰ Justice J.T. van Wyk, chairman of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death, had appealed to the media earlier for help in locating Vergos, who was thought to have “vital information” regarding Tsafendas. Six hours later, Vergos walked into the office of the Rand Daily Mail in Johannesburg and was later questioned by the police and the Commission.⁵⁷⁸¹

Vergos, although characterised as a “key” and “important” witness who had “vital information” about Tsafendas, was not asked to testify at the summary trial. He gave a statement to the police and testified before the Commission, but he was not asked by either the defence or the State to appear at the summary trial. Why was such an important witness not required to appear?

Let us examine Vergos and his relationship with Tsafendas for a possible explanation. They both worked at Frasers and Chalmers in Mandini. There was an argument after Vergos refused to pay two African workers he had employed illegally. Tsafendas defended them and asked him to pay them and a fight began.⁵⁷⁸² Vergos then asked his superiors to fire Tsafendas because he was “a kaffir and a Communist.”⁵⁷⁸³ He even described him as “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa”⁵⁷⁸⁴ and a “Communist bastard.”⁵⁷⁸⁵ All these statements were in the possession of the South African police.

⁵⁷⁷⁹ Daily Dispatch, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key witness found’, ⁵⁷⁸⁰ The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

⁵⁷⁸¹ The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

⁵⁷⁸² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

⁵⁷⁸³ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁸⁴ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁷⁸⁵ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Clearly, Vergos would not have been a suitable witness for the defence, who were trying to portray Tsafendas as a man without any political ideas and who was even “unsympathetic towards the Coloureds,” but he would have been the perfect witness for the State if it really wanted to challenge the defence line. Vergos twice described him to his boss and to a security officer as a Communist and had even fought with him after Tsafendas defended the two Black South Africans. However, as we have already noted, the word “Communist” was never heard at the summary trial.

THE STATE-WITNESSES

As we know, the Attorney-General before the trial refused permission to the defence to speak to people on the State's witness list. The defence lawyers appealed to Judge Beyers who gave them permission to do so.⁵⁷⁸⁶ Why did he do that, especially when he did not call even one of them to support his stated belief that Tsafendas was capable of standing trial? There were more than a hundred witnesses able to challenge the defence's line and its witnesses and support the Attorney-General's alleged claim, but not one was called.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S LIE

Let us now examine an incident that tells us much about the Attorney-General's integrity and reliability, but also about his role in the case. As already stated, the word “Communist” was never heard during the summary trial, although the police had a plethora of evidence that Tsafendas was a devoted and passionate Communist, had been a dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party at a time when it was legal, had fought with the Communists during the Greek Civil War and was suspected of distributing Communist propaganda while in Mozambique. What makes the actions of the Attorney-General in the summary trial strange and suspicious is the following incident.

On October 30, ten days after the end of the summary trial, The Post revealed on its front page that Tsafendas used to be a member of the South African Communist Party. A Post journalist had interviewed the Attorney-General and asked him if he was aware that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party. At this point in time, it had not become known to the Press or to anyone else that Tsafendas was a former member of the Communist Party. Van den Berg's bare-faced reply to the journalist was: "This is news to me – I certainly had no knowledge of it until this very moment when you brought it to my notice."⁵⁷⁸⁷

⁵⁷⁸⁶ Cooper, 2016: 106-7.

It was an outright lie. On 3rd October, two weeks before the start of the summary trial and twenty-seven days before this interview, the Attorney-General had written a detailed memorandum regarding Tsafendas. In paragraph 3 of the memorandum he wrote: "In a statement to the South African Police on 19 September 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas admitted that he had joined the Communist Party shortly before World War II. He also attended their meetings and paid the fees but denied the he had any further association with the Communists after he left South Africa in 1942."⁵⁷⁸⁸

Thus, even if the Attorney-General was not in possession of any other evidence gathered by the police as to Tsafendas's Communist beliefs or activities, he was certainly aware that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party; after all, that was why he included the information in his memorandum. However, then, when questioned by The Post journalist, he pretended that it was the first time he heard about it. Why would he lie? We cannot know for certain, but the likeliest explanation seems to be that if he had admitted knowledge of Tsafendas's membership, then the question everyone would have asked was, "How come this was not brought up in the summary trial?" Tsafendas was portrayed as man with very little interest in politics and confused political ideas. The next question then would have been, "was other important information suppressed?" No matter what the Attorney-General's reasons were, the fact is that he lied. This raises large questions about his integrity and creates further suspicion about his role during the proceedings.

It should be mentioned here that during apartheid it was not unusual for the State to lie or to fabricate evidence. By coincidence, while Tsafendas's summary trial was taking place, another major trial was also taking place in Johannesburg, the Theron Trial. Johannes Andrias Theron, a head warder at the Cinderella Prison, Boksburg, was accused of twelve charges under the Commissioner of Oaths Act and the prisons Act-including two of publishing information about prisons in a newspaper and two of inciting people to do so.⁵⁷⁸⁹ Theron had revealed to newspapers some of the atrocities and brutal torture that was used in ⁵⁷⁸⁷ The Post, 30 October 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas: I was a communist.'

⁵⁷⁸⁸ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

⁵⁷⁸⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 18 October 1966, 'Amazing liar says Utar.'

his prison against prisoners in order to extract information; one of them being the use of electric shocks.⁵⁷⁹⁰ The prosecutor of the case was the infamous Percy Yutar, who was characterised by Israel Maisels as “plus royaliste que le roi – more royalist than the king,” because of his blind support for apartheid.⁵⁷⁹¹ Yutar was also at the time Deputy Attorney-General of the Transvaal. According to Benjamin Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who covered the trial, Yutar’s “unscrupulous alliance” with the police turned “day into night,”⁵⁷⁹² so the defence team, which included Arthur Chaskalson and Joan Coaker, described the State case as being “riddled with perjury from top to bottom.”⁵⁷⁹³

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL’S ROLE

All of the above issues make the position of the Attorney-General look awkward, to say the least, especially because the police had in their possession ample evidence to break down the defence’s line which was not used during the proceedings. However, his illogical behaviour can be explained perfectly if we accept that he was only pretending to challenge the defence, or that he was incompetent or that he was not in possession of all the evidence. It would explain:

- a. Why he appeared to question some witnesses rigorously, while his two own experts had come to the same conclusion as the defence.
- b. Why he used only certain extracts from Tsafendas’s statements to the police, ignoring the most important ones, especially about motive.
- c. Why he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper by using Dr. Sakinofsky’s report, thus raising yet more “delusional and confused” ideas of Tsafendas.
- d. Why he attempted to challenge Dr. Cooper by claiming that Tsafendas’s work at the Parliament was efficient. He did not produce any evidence and the next day a defence witnesses easily rebuffed his claim, stating the exact opposite. Nevertheless, he attempted to challenge Dr. Zabow by making the same claim.

⁵⁷⁹⁰ Pogrund, 2000: 168.

⁵⁷⁹¹ Maisels, 1997: 319.

⁵⁷⁹² Pogrund, 2000: 173-4.

⁵⁷⁹³ Rand Daily Mail, 21 October 1966: 4-5, ‘Perjury in State case alleged’; For more details about the case see Pogrund, B. (2000) War on Words: Memoirs of a South African Journalist.

- e. The fact that none of the evidence gathered by the police which could have challenged the defence was used.
- f. The Attorney-General's pointless, repetitive and irrelevant questioning of some of the witnesses. On occasions, not only did it offer nothing to the State's cause, it seriously harmed it, as with Dr. Sakinofsky's report, the claim about Tsafendas's work inefficiency and the "sponging" comment with O'Ryan. Add to these, asking Dr. Zabow if Tsafendas was able to give a good account of himself and the exchanges with Peter and Merle Daniels.

Of course, these scenarios are only suppositions, and a combination of incompetence and lack of evidence could also explain everything. That, however, would make van den Berg just about the most incompetent lawyer ever to hold down the post of Attorney-General. Professor John Dugard believes that the police may have withheld the evidence from the Attorney-General, but that it is also possible that van den Berg was pretending to challenge the defence. He notes that during apartheid the "prosecutors were never independent." He is "quite sure" that van den Berg knew what he had to do in this case and it is possible that he "could have suppressed" the evidence.⁵⁷⁹⁴

Advocate George Bizos also believes that both scenarios are feasible and stated that during apartheid, in "serious political cases", often the "public prosecutor was the last wheel of the car (A Greek expression meaning the person of least importance)."⁵⁷⁹⁵ Denis Goldberg also believes that both scenarios are very possible. He has no doubt that the Attorney General could very well have withheld the evidence and lied to the court. He mentioned as an example Percy Yutar, the public prosecutor in the Rivonia Trial: "He would actually make false statements; the prosecutor would make false statements deliberately."⁵⁷⁹⁶ No matter what the reasons were, or the political climate at the time, the fact is that the police had abundant evidence to break down the defence case and none of it was used by the Attorney-General.

⁵⁷⁹⁴ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁵⁷⁹⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

⁵⁷⁹⁶ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

AFTER THE TRIAL

Tsafendas's trial did not dispense with all the concerns relating to Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. Minister of Justice Mr. P.C. Pelser said that the Government accepted the trial findings and urged the public to do likewise,⁵⁷⁹⁷ while he also announced that a Commission of Enquiry would be appointed to "thoroughly investigate the effectiveness of the existing legal rules applicable to cases of this type."⁵⁷⁹⁸

On November 6, Judge van Wyk, who was still at work as the sole member of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death, called for the establishment of registers listing people with dangerous mental disorders, as well as those known to be drug addicts or alcoholics. Van Wyk urged that a record be maintained of people who had been treated at mental hospitals and were potentially harmful. Their details should be contained in a confidential central register to which the Security Police would have access. A second register would be of "known alcoholics or people suffering from drug addiction or similar mental disorders." Van Wyk said such people could be banned from driving "and this could have an effect in cutting the rate of road accidents." The psychiatric profession was shocked by these proposals.⁵⁷⁹⁹

An insight into the Government's true beliefs concerning the assassination and Tsafendas emerged a few months after the trial, when Dr. J. D. Vorster, brother Prime Minister Vorster, spoke to an anti-Communist symposium in the United States sponsored by the Church League of America. Vorster said, "Your President Kennedy and our Dr. Verwoerd were both killed by Communists."⁵⁸⁰⁰ The Sunday Times front-paged Vorster's statement with the headline "Premier's brother drops a bombshell."⁵⁸⁰¹ There was no mention of schizophrenia or of the hopeless, wandering, and friendless man without political interests who so dominated the trial. Vorster was clearly aware of Tsafendas's Communist beliefs, and probably his activities, too, no doubt courtesy of his brother or his brother's close friend, General van den Bergh.

As for Tsafendas: shortly after the trial, he was taken to Robben Island. He was the only prisoner ever held there to be classified as "White." He remained there for four months

⁵⁷⁹⁷ Pretoria News, 20 October 1966, 'Pelser asks public to accept verdict.'

⁵⁷⁹⁸ The Cape Times, 21 October 1966: 1, 'Mad killer can still stand trial if cured.'

⁵⁷⁹⁹ Sunday Times, 6 November 1966: 17, 'Judge says: Register dangerous mental cases.'

⁵⁸⁰⁰ Bunting, 1986: 76; Sunday Times, 'Premier's brother drops a bombshell.'

⁵⁸⁰¹ Sunday Times, 'Premier's brother drops a bombshell.'

before being moved to Pretoria Central Maximum Security Prison in February 1967.⁵⁸⁰²

There, warders had built a “cell” in the Death Row section especially for him. Bernard Mitchel, a former inmate told the British Guardian in 1968:

“They built a special cell – a flat they called it – for him in the death block in Pretoria Central Prison ... they put a screen around the landing in front of the cell and “exercised” Tsafendas there... a screw would stand in each corner and Tsafendas’s exercise would consist of dodging their truncheons as they threw him from one side to the other. We used to exercise in the yard below his cell and you could hear him screaming.”⁵⁸⁰³

Tsafendas’s file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, described him as “A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape.”⁵⁸⁰⁴ These words hardly fit the Tsafendas described by the psychiatrists – someone unable to function on a reasonable level and unfit to stand trial. However, the description fits perfectly with the way Tsafendas was described by people who knew him well. Vorster’s remark and Tsafendas’s prison file suggest that the high authorities were well aware of the real Tsafendas as opposed to the caricature that was put on trial.

⁵⁸⁰² Tsafendas’s transfer order from Robben Island to Central Prison, Pretoria. 3 February 1967. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁵⁸⁰³ de St Jorre (The Observer), 1 December 1968: 7, ‘I was glad that cancer got me out of Vorster’s jail.’

⁵⁸⁰⁴ Marais, 1992: 208.

SUMMARY TRIAL CONCLUSION

The most striking thing about the summary trial was not the distorted way in which Tsafendas was portrayed, but the fact that the Attorney-General did so little to challenge the profile when he could have broken it down very easily by using evidence gathered by the South African police. The vision of Tsafendas presented to the court was a travesty of the truth: a schizophrenic, incapable of looking after himself, unable to function on a reasonable level, a loner, withdrawn and without political interests. Not mentioned were the facts that he was a committed Communist, a former dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party and a street-level activist, that he was exiled from Mozambique for twelve years due to his Communist and anti-colonialist activities, and that he boldly displayed an intense life-long interest in political ideology. Instead, he was shown as a deluded and confused outsider who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm that supposedly lived inside him. The court accepted the defence's insanity plea and found Tsafendas unfit to stand trial. On the surface, the defence case appeared strong, but it could have been exposed by dutiful examination of witnesses and their statements and by other evidence gathered by the police.

THE DEFENCE WITNESSES

Naturally, the defence chose witnesses to support its line. This must have been a difficult task since no one of the two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the Commission of Enquiry could convincingly fulfil such a role. The defence's desperation to offer suitable testimony was obvious with the selection of witnesses like Johnston, Lieberman, Shaw and Cloete, who had minimal contact with Tsafendas. Individuals who had a passing acquaintance with Tsafendas, such as Shaw, or who had spoken to him for just twenty minutes in an entire lifetime, like Johnston, were chosen in preference to family and friends. However, those witnesses who did take the stand were chosen because each one could support something from the defence's line or the psychiatrists' diagnoses, which they did very well.

The O'Ryans spoke about the tapeworm, Smorenberg about Tsafendas being unable to hold down a job and being unsympathetic towards Coloureds, Johnston said he found him to be a strange man, the Daniels spoke about his supposed oddities. These were weak testimonies, especially by those who scarcely knew him, but they were taken seriously and went largely unchallenged by the Attorney-General despite a plethora of contrary evidence gathered by the police.

WITNESSES NOT USED

Apart from Patrick and Louisa O’Ryan, none of the defence witnesses knew Tsafendas well; clearly and correctly the defence wanted only witnesses who would support the insanity plea. While it is understandable that the defence did not call witnesses who knew Tsafendas well, it is surprising that the State did not produce even one witness to support its claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. Especially since there were many who could have done so. Indeed, the police and the Commission of Enquiry had interviewed about two hundred people who would have been useful witnesses for the prosecution.

Tsafendas’s efficiency as a Parliamentary messenger was discussed extensively, but none of his work colleagues was asked to testify, although five of them had already spoken formally to the police and testified to the Commission of Enquiry. All would have been excellent witnesses for the State as they flatly contradicted the defence’s claim that Tsafendas’s work in the Parliament was not good enough.

Nikolas Vergos, who was much sought after by the Commission of Enquiry and the South African police and who was characterised by the South African media as a “key witness,”⁵⁸⁰⁵ did not testify. Again, although he would not have been useful for the defence, he would have been extremely helpful to the State because he could have challenged the defence claim that Tsafendas was unsympathetic towards Coloured people and was bereft of political thought.

The Eleni crew could not appear in court since they were outside the country, but their statements were taken by the South African police in Venice on the 12th of October and should have been very useful to the State. Some of the seamen told police that Tsafendas was a Communist who had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War, and, more importantly, that he had characterised a possible assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as “justifiable” because he was a tyrant and a dictator. That Dr. Verwoerd’s death was being discussed on the Eleni three days before the assassination was a major issue for the Commission of Enquiry, but it was never mentioned during the summary trial.

⁵⁸⁰⁵ Daily Dispatch, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key witness found’; The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

However, the most important of the missing potential witnesses were Tsafendas's family. All of them had stated that he was "definitely not insane" and none was aware of the tapeworm.⁵⁸⁰⁶

THE TAPEWORM

The main focus of the summary trial was the tapeworm. The court was told two different stories about its origins though this was not picked up by anyone. According to Dr. Cooper, Dr. Muller and Mr. van Zyl, Tsafendas had it since 1935 or 1936, while according to Louisa O'Ryan it was since he was a little boy. Tsafendas was seventeen and eighteen years old in 1935 and in 1936, no "little boy."

Furthermore and more importantly, according to Louisa O'Ryan, Tsafendas's step-mother removed six feet of a tapeworm, which he had excreted as a boy, and destroyed it, and since then, Tsafendas believed the rest of the worm was living inside him. However, when examined by the Commission of Enquiry, the step-mother flatly denied that any such incident ever took place and insisted that she had never heard anything about a tapeworm. She further maintained that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane." The other members of Tsafendas's family also denied that he told them anything about a tapeworm and all declared that he was "definitely not insane." For the rest of their lives, Marika and the family insisted that Tsafendas invented the tapeworm story and that none of the things he claimed in relation to it ever happened. The police and the Commission questioned two hundred witnesses at the time, including people who knew Tsafendas very well, some since childhood. Not one of them mentioned anything about the tapeworm.

The O'Ryans did testify in court about the tapeworm, but they admitted later that this was at the suggestion of Wilfrid Cooper to prevent Tsafendas being sentenced to death. Patrick O'Ryan was one of the 150 witnesses questioned by the police before the summary trial and he did not mention a tapeworm then. He had also told the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane.

⁵⁸⁰⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

All the psychiatrists who testified said Tsafendas told them that the tapeworm did not direct him to kill Dr. Verwoerd, although he told Dr. Cooper that the “tapeworm was right in the middle of it.” However, the psychiatrists concluded that since the tapeworm had virtually taken over Tsafendas’s life, it was responsible for the killing. Finally, very soon after the assassination, Tsafendas was examined by three doctors, one of them Dr. Kossew and another Dr. Sakinofsky, and both testified for the defence. Tsafendas did not mention the tapeworm to any of these three doctors.

THE PSYCHIATRISTS AND THE PSYCHOLOGISTS

Five psychiatrists and two psychologists examined Tsafendas on behalf of the defence and the State and found him to be schizophrenic. However, although this was a forensic case, none of the psychiatrists was a forensic psychiatrist. Dr. Sakinofsky even suggested during the proceedings that a forensic psychiatrist “should be called by the court,” but this did not happen. It is scarcely credible that in such an important criminal case, none of those who examined the accused was a forensic psychiatrist.

Furthermore, all the examinations of Tsafendas took place while he was in custody in Caledon Square police station. In David Pratt’s case, after the defence had led its evidence, including the medical evidence by the psychiatrists, the accused was sent to Weskoppies, an institution for mentally disturbed persons, for psychiatric evaluation for fourteen days.⁵⁸⁰⁷ Fourteen days of observation in a clinical institution for Pratt contrasted with four and a half hours which each of the psychiatrists spent with Tsafendas, in a police cell (except for Dr. Cooper and Prof. van Wyk, who spent around six hours with him). Apparently this was enough for Judge Beyers to decide it was not necessary to send Tsafendas for further evaluation at a mental hospital or being examined by a forensic psychiatrist too.

In addition, Prof. Lamont, apart from observing Pratt, interviewed five people who knew Pratt very well.⁵⁸⁰⁸ By contrast, none of the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas spoke to anybody who knew him. What Tsafendas told the psychiatrists was the antithesis of what two hundred people had told the police and the Commission about his character and his political ideas, but the psychiatrists were not in position to know that. More importantly, what he told them flatly contradicted what he told the police when he was in custody, but these statements were not given to the psychiatrists and were never mentioned at the court. Several of the psychiatrists' claims were easy to challenge, but the Attorney-General failed to act.

⁵⁸⁰⁷ Maisels, 1998: 105; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, ‘Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.’

⁵⁸⁰⁸ Prof. Lamont’s psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, ‘Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.’

It is also worth pointing out that after their initial inspection, for reasons unknown to the author, all the defence psychiatrists except Dr. Sakinofsky examined Tsafendas for a second time on October 4. Dr. Cooper, Dr. MacGregor and Dr. Zabow examined Tsafendas that day, each separately and for ninety minutes. In addition, Tsafendas was also examined that day by the State psychiatrist, Professor van Wyk. Thus, Tsafendas was seen in one day by four different psychiatrists on four different occasions, meaning that he spent six hours that day talking about the same things, and answering the same questions. It would seem more logical for each psychiatrist to have examined him on different days so they could observe his functioning at different times, but surprisingly this did not happen. The third and final examination by the defence psychiatrists took place on October 11; this time the psychiatrists were all together.

Were the psychiatrists to blame for misdiagnosing Tsafendas? Clearly not. Dr. MacGregor said he had to "accept what was given to him" and that he "had to take shortcuts" due to the limited time before the court sitting. It was the same for the other psychiatrists. They took for granted what Tsafendas told them and had no way of double-checking it. Some, like Dr. MacGregor, even accepted Tsafendas's medical history as it was told by the accused himself. The psychologist Reyner van Zyl told the author that he and very probably some of the psychiatrists were given Tsafendas's medical history verbally and saw none of his medical records.

The psychiatrists were not given the statements Tsafendas made to the police while in custody nor any statement taken from people who knew him. Dr. Cooper was discouraged from probing too deeply into Tsafendas's background and his activities prior to the assassination. He was told that this was the job of the police and was given the impression by the police and the defence that this was a straightforward case. Van Zyl was given the same impression. The fact that none of the experts who examined Tsafendas sought collateral information about him from family and friends seems to confirm this.

None of them was aware that Tsafendas had faked mental illness at least twice in the past and that he was experienced with regard to hospitals. None of them was given some of the records of Tsafendas's hospitalizations, such as the report from the Government Hospital in Beira where he was admitted after claiming to be Saint Peter. Had they accessed this document, they would have seen behavioural inconsistencies that were not normal for a true schizophrenic. None of them read the Grafton State Hospital report which stated that Tsafendas had faked mental illness in 1943. Furthermore, this report also contained several behavioural inconsistencies in contrast to the symptoms noted during the doctor's observations of Tsafendas while in custody.

Tsafendas's mental state apart, none of those who examined Tsafendas seemed concerned with his physical condition at the time. He was in police custody for twenty days before he was examined by the defence and all the examinations took place inside the police station where he was in custody. Although David Bloomberg found him twice with bruises and Tsafendas himself later described in detail how he was tortured while in custody, none of those who examined him makes any mention of his physical state, which could have affected his state of mind. It seems highly unlikely that the psychiatrists did not wonder about how Tsafendas was treated while in custody. Given the reputation of the South African police for brutality, they could hardly have expected him to be handled with kid gloves. It is curious that the doctors met with Tsafendas on several occasions yet appeared to remain ignorant of his physical conditions. They may not have known about the torture, unlikely as that seems, but they must have been aware of the conditions of his cell by his lawyers who had seen it. Without a bed, he was forced to sleep on the concrete floor. Yet none of the doctors seemed curious about Tsafendas's physical state or that he was in custody for twenty days before anyone examined him.

Furthermore, Tsafendas's treatment differed markedly from that of David Pratt after his defence lawyers claimed he was unfit to stand trial. Pratt was given an extended period of observation and investigation at Weskoppies Mental Hospital. After two weeks, a report was prepared by the head physician and Pratt was returned to court. He was then found insane and not fit to stand trial and he was committed to Bloemfontein Mental Hospital.⁵⁸⁰⁹ Tsafendas, by contrast, was examined for periods of no more than four and half hours inside the police station where he had been detained since the assassination.

⁵⁸⁰⁹ Prof. Lamont's psychiatric report on David Beresford Pratt in Regina vs. David Beresford Pratt, 26 September 1960. The State versus David Beresford Pratt. 712-60. NASA; Maisels, 1998: 102-107; The Cape Argus, 26 September 1960: 2, 'Judge rules Pratt is mentally disordered.'

Finally, Tsafendas had the impression that all the psychiatrists, especially those of the defence, were eager to find him to be schizophrenic. That is why he thought that it was very easy to convince them as they also did not push him as much as they probably could have. He thought that on some occasions, he could have been put in a difficult position because of clear inconsistencies in his stories, but the psychiatrists did not do that and just let it go.⁵⁸¹⁰ Naturally, it was also not that difficult to convince them as all the information they got about him was from himself, and they had no means of confirming it.

THE DIAGNOSES

The psychiatrists and the psychologists presented Tsafendas as a hopeless loner, unsociable and withdrawn, a man without any serious political consciousness. However, the vast majority of the witnesses had described Tsafendas to the police and to the media as exactly the opposite. For example, Tsafendas was characterised by the medical experts as a “withdrawn and isolated individual.” Compare this with the testimony of Guenter Haafe, a doorman at the Frankfurt factory where Tsafendas worked in 1958:

“He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker (room) to say Hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met, and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”⁵⁸¹¹

Horst Hartmann, Tsafendas's boss on the Frankfurt job, said Tsafendas was “well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman.”⁵⁸¹² All of the psychiatrists' statements could have been exposed as inaccurate by using testimonies such as those of Haafe and Hartmann, but this did not happen.

Those who examined Tsafendas claimed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, unable to give a coherent account of himself, talked in a disjointed manner and suffered from thought ⁵⁸¹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

⁵⁸¹¹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

⁵⁸¹² O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

blocking. However, none of the two hundred witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission or the forty-four who were interviewed by the author, ever noticed any of these symptoms. On the contrary they described him as an intelligent man, perfectly able to carry on a conversation and with excellent reasoning powers. Is it possible a man to have all these symptoms as set out in the court and no-one ever notice? According to Professors Alban Burke, Phillip Resnick, Robert L. Sadoff and Tuviah Zabow, it is extremely unlikely, and very close to impossible.⁵⁸¹³ Reyner van Zyl, who examined Tsafendas for the defence, told the author that it was “highly improbable,”⁵⁸¹⁴ while Professor Phillip Resnick found it “extremely unlikely.”⁵⁸¹⁵

Father Nikola Banovic told the author:

“Everything this doctor [Dr. Cooper] has been saying is inaccurate; it’s not true about Dimitri. He was nothing like this, it’s like he had either examined a different person or he was a bad doctor.”⁵⁸¹⁶

Fotini Gavasiadis told the author:

“Everything you have been telling me [as to what Dr. Cooper and the other doctors said] is gibberish. Everything that they were saying is gibberish. Everything. I don’t know how they came to these conclusions and how they managed to get away with it. It’s absolutely gibberish. Dimitris must have had a lot of fun sitting [in the court] and listening to all this gibberish about him. I can imagine him [in the court] laughing inside him ... I am sure he must have had enjoyed it ... especially since he succeeded in fooling them and getting away with it.”⁵⁸¹⁷

The psychiatrists based their diagnoses wholly on what Tsafendas told them without any third-party information, and apart from Dr. Sakinofsky, no-one attempted to get more information about him. Even Dr. Sakinofsky was able to get only very limited details about Tsafendas from some of his medical records and did not speak to anyone who had met him. All of the examinations took place in the police station at Caledon Square after Tsafendas had ⁵⁸¹³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 17 December 2016; Professor Robert L. Sadoff in a personal interview with the author, 12 August 2015; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 10 October 2016.

⁵⁸¹⁴ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

⁵⁸¹⁵ Professor Phillip Resnick in correspondence with the author, 7 May 2017.

⁵⁸¹⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

⁵⁸¹⁷ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 22 April 2016.

been held there incommunicado for twenty days. This was not considered worthy of comment, perhaps understandable since South Africa at the time was a virtual police state.

Leading forensic psychiatrist Professor John Macdonald said that “simulation is more frequent when a suspect faces the death sentence.” Tsafendas’s “symptoms” were seen in several cases where the accused faked mental illness. Professor Macdonald mentions the case of an accused man who asked his friends to testify in court in order to save his life, saying that he “gave the impression of being unstable, irrational and unsettled, that he would always lose interest in things he was doing, that he would begin a conversation and suddenly stop in the middle of it and start roaming, that he would sit and stare into space for long periods of time and pay no attention to those about him.”⁵⁸¹⁸

What is surprising is that the police and even the Commission were aware that Tsafendas was well read about psychiatry and mental illnesses. The police had found two medical books in his possession, one about insanity and psychiatry, the other concerning intestinal disorders.⁵⁸¹⁹ The Commission of Enquiry noted that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders — he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and (the Commission) therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁵⁸²⁰

In addition, the police found evidence that in at least two cases Tsafendas faked mental illness in order to from his predicaments. None of these facts was made available to those who examined Tsafendas, although they should have been. The doctors did not use any third-party information about Tsafendas in order to confirm or question what he was telling them, simply taking him at his word. As Tsafendas would later admit, he knew very well what to tell his examiners and how to behave with them.⁵⁸²¹

It is inconceivable that a court in any democratic society today would accept psychiatrists’ diagnoses of an accused in a criminal case based on only three interviews, ⁵⁸¹⁸ Macdonald, 1958: 61.

⁵⁸¹⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

⁵⁸²⁰ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁸²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

lasting a total of four and a half-hours, and lacking any third-party information. The medical experts concerned seem to have accepted what they were told, that it was a straightforward case and Tsafendas was a schizophrenic with a long mental history. More surprisingly, only two of those who examined Tsafendas had seen some of his medical records, while the others were told verbally of their content. Professor Alban Burke told the author that the diagnosis of schizophrenia “was based on very little evidence.”⁵⁸²²

Professor Kirk Heilbrun agreed in personal interview with the author that such diagnoses would not have been seen as credible in an American court. He said:

“It [Dr. Cooper’s diagnosis] would not be given much credibility in a U.S. court. Many of the points we have discussed [above] would be incorporated into cross-examination to challenge the credibility of the opinions based only on self-report.”⁵⁸²³

TSAEFNDAS’S MEDICAL HISTORY

Although Tsafendas’s medical history was fundamental to the defence case, references to his medical past were spotty and incomplete. A more careful examination would have shown that Tsafendas was not an authentic schizophrenic but a person who pretended to be one. In addition, a great many medical documents which could challenge or contradict the psychiatrists’ judgments were not used.

Importantly, at least some of those who examined Tsafendas were told verbally that he had a long medical history of schizophrenia, but they never saw any records. They accepted the verbal assurance as a fact, without seeing inconsistencies in these reports which signalled clearly that Tsafendas could not have been a schizophrenic. The fact that he had faked mental illness at least twice was known to the South African police, but it was not mentioned during the summary trial. The US State Department’s report which accompanied Tsafendas’s medical record from Grafton State Hospital stated clearly that the US Immigration authorities had found Tsafendas, after dealing with him for about five years, to be “unstable, but not insane.”⁵⁸²⁴ Again, this crucial statement was not referenced. Nor were the inconsistencies in his medical history, for example that he appeared not only to believe he had a tapeworm, but that he had other delusions, too: that he believed himself to be Saint Peter in 1964, that he could hear voices from the radiators, and that he believed people were being poisoned by food in the lodgings where he was staying, just two months before the assassination.

⁵⁸²² Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016.

⁵⁸²³ Professor Kirk Heilbrun in a personal interview with the author, 15 January 2017.

⁵⁸²⁴ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

The fact that every time he was arrested he showed signs of mental illness, while otherwise he functioned perfectly well in life, was not picked up. Nor was the curious fact that the only times he entered hospital he had either been arrested or admitted himself. A fact that was overlooked by everyone is that none of the doctors who examined Tsafendas in previous years had found him to be as described by the doctors at the summary trial, and none of them had found him to be certifiable. If his condition had deteriorate since 1959 when he was last hospitalized about the tapeworm, someone must surely have noticed this, including the ten doctors who examined him between 1963 and 1966 or some of the two hundred or so witnesses who were questioned by the police and the Commission.

That he was examined ten times by nine doctors in South Africa over the last three years and found in every case to be mentally sane and physically healthy did not see the light of day at the summary trial. On the other hand, the diagnosis of schizophrenia by Dr. Kossew, a district surgeon who was not a psychiatrist was taken seriously. This despite the fact that the examination had taken only “a little bit longer” than ten minutes and focussed primarily on his physical condition. No-one pointed out that the reason Dr. Kossew examined Tsafendas was to adjudicate on Tsafendas's application for a disability grant, for which he needed to be found incapable of working.

Equally, no-one raised the issue the previous times when Tsafendas was examined by doctors and had to be found sane and healthy in order to get a permanent residency permit or a job he had applied for. It was evident that when Tsafendas needed to be found sane he was found sane and when he needed to be found insane, he was found as such. The medical records confirm Tsafendas's claim that he was capable of doing this, and that he was hospitalised only for two reasons – when he appeared to be mad (a pretence to get out of custody or to be free of torture) or because he had no money and/or place to stay.

It is also surprising that Tsafendas's medical records were not placed before the Court. Although Defence Counsel offered to submit them, Judge Beyers decided that was not necessary, and now these records cannot be found. It seems strange by any standards that medical records which played a crucial role in a case pivoting on the issue of insanity were not submitted as evidence and the Court only heard extracts read from their contents. However, as we have seen, two of the records used by the defence team were manipulated by it to support the defence case. The other startling thing is that the State did not bother examining them.

OMISSIONS FROM THE SUMMARY TRIAL

In an effort to save his life, Tsafendas was presented as an anti-social person without friends or political convictions, a sponger and someone who was unable to function on a reasonable level. The defence did an excellent job in presenting its case with carefully selected witnesses, helped of course by what Tsafendas told the psychiatrists, as none of this would have been possible without his "participation."

However, there were several important facts about Tsafendas which were known to the South African police and would have been extremely useful for evidence but were not used. For example, that Tsafendas worked for some six months as a teacher of English at the most prestigious private language college in Istanbul, the Limasollu Naci. This fact was known to the police as Tsafendas had told them about it when he was interrogated, and the South African Press had also written of it. However, it was not mentioned during the inquiry and Tsafendas was presented as a man unable to do even the simplest of menial jobs.

TSAFENDAS'S MOTIVE

The greatest omission from the summary trial was Tsafendas's real motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. Although the court heard much discussion of Tsafendas's possible motives for killing Dr. Verwoerd, what was never brought up was his avowal to the police that he murdered the Prime Minister because he was "disgusted with his racial policies," considered him a dictator and hoped "a change of policy would take place" by removing him. Several people said they heard Tsafendas characterise Dr. Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student," a tyrant and a dictator, but their statements were not produced. Tsafendas's declared willingness to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power"⁵⁸²⁵ was also never mentioned.

⁵⁸²⁵ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Instead, Tsafendas appeared to have no idea why he killed Dr. Verwoerd and was unable to explain his reasons. What took centre stage was the tapeworm. Tsafendas insisted that the tapeworm did not ask him to kill Dr. Verwoerd and the psychiatrists admitted as much, but it was their conclusion that the tapeworm was ultimately responsible because it strongly influenced his life and thoughts. The Attorney-General could have overturned the psychiatrists' claims as to Tsafendas's motive simply by reading the statements he made to the police which were entirely compatible with what several witnesses had told the police and the Commission and quite incompatible with what was heard in the court. Needless to say, these statements were never heard. What the court did hear was a claim that Tsafendas actually liked Dr. Verwoerd.

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL IDEAS

The second greatest omission from the summary trial were Tsafendas's political beliefs and his past political activities. Although the evidence gathered by the police, including several witnesses who testified that he was well-versed in politics and was a political animal,⁵⁸²⁶ he was presented, astonishingly, as a man without any interest in politics. His political activities in England, Mozambique and South Africa are never mentioned and he is instead presented as a deluded simpleton who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm that lived inside him.

Several witnesses had told the police that Tsafendas was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and a Communist. Tsafendas himself had admitted this when he was interrogated. Two men, Vergos and Father Probst, had reported him to a security officer and to the South African police respectively, one year before the assassination, specifically as a dangerous Communist. It was also known to the police that he had become a member of the anti-apartheid movement in Britain and had been associated with the leading anti-apartheid activists David Gardener, Solly Sachs and the Rev. Canon John Collins. He participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations and meetings in London and was willing to do "anything that would get the South African regime out of power." It was also known to the police that Tsafendas established a friendly relationship with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, ⁵⁸²⁶ For example Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society in London and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement.

More importantly, it was known to them that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party and that he had fought with the Communists during the Greek Civil War. It was also known to the South African authorities that he was banned from Mozambique and lived in exile until 1963, when he received an amnesty from the Portuguese government. It was known that he was arrested at least twice in Mozambique, and was suspected another two times, for conducting Communist and anti-colonialist propaganda. None of this was mentioned.

THE KILLING

All the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas stated that he was unable to describe the killing and its planning. In fact, Tsafendas had described the planning and the act in detail to the police twice - on September 11 and then again on the 19th.⁵⁸²⁷ The Attorney-General failed to challenge this, although he must have had Tsafendas's statements. Even thirty years later, Tsafendas was able to give a good account of the planning and the killing.⁵⁸²⁸

GENERAL APPEARANCE OF TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas was presented as a drifter who lived an aimless life, taking advantage of people, dirty, rude at times, unable to look after himself, a low-life. Abundant evidence existed from statements by people who knew Tsafendas, which flatly contradicted this characterisation and could easily have been used to destroy the distortion. Unmentioned were Tsafendas's political activities, his stints as a volunteer teacher of children in Istanbul and ⁵⁸²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁸²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Mozambique,⁵⁸²⁹ the fact that he was extremely well read⁵⁸³⁰ and soft-spoken,⁵⁸³¹ that he stood up for the Coloureds,⁵⁸³² that, though himself poor, he gave money to down-and-outs,⁵⁸³³ that he had “excellent reasoning powers”⁵⁸³⁴ and that he was “able to reason in conversation.”⁵⁸³⁵

The Daniels's testimonies played an important role in the false portrayal of Tsafendas and though easy meat for the Attorney-General, he failed to engage with them. Both Daniels presented Tsafendas in a very negative way, perhaps on instructions from Wilfrid Cooper, as he had done with the O'Ryanes. Their evidence painted the picture of a sponger who practically forced his way into their home and batted off the family. They indicated that they allowed him to stay out of charity and because he belonged to the same Christian sect.

What they did not say was that Helen Daniels, Peter Daniels's sister, had written first to Tsafendas asking to meet him and even proposing that he should marry her. She sent him five letters plus a photograph of herself. Tsafendas, like most normal men, agreed to meet her, but reserved any decision about marriage until they met face to face. The two family members were asked to testify since Helen, who knew Tsafendas much better, had already told the police that Tsafendas was perfectly sane. Obviously this ruled her out as a witness for the defence, but she could have been a very useful witness for the prosecution as her statement to the police contradicted what her brother and her sister-in-law testified. Omitted was also the fact that Tsafendas was recommended to Helen as a prospective spouse by fellow members of the sect. This is important since Helen Daniels was a preacher and a highly respected sect member. Her fellow Christians would hardly have urged her to see a person such as the one described by her brother and her sister-in-law.

⁵⁸²⁹ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

⁵⁸³⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁵⁸³¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2014.

⁵⁸³² Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁵⁸³³ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.'

⁵⁸³⁴ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁵⁸³⁵ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

EVIDENCE NOT USED

The South African police collected a massive amount of information about Tsafendas from a wide variety of sources, including people who knew him and documented reports from all over the world. These latter included reports from the Portuguese security police which were incomplete because “any information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique” was omitted.⁵⁸³⁶ Nevertheless, the totality of evidence showed Tsafendas as a completely different person from the one portrayed in court by the psychiatrists, both in personality and in political ideas.

The police knew perfectly well that Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator, an evil man, the brains behind apartheid, and Hitler's best student; they knew that he hoped that by killing him a change of policy would take place and that he wanted to do anything to get the apartheid regime out of power; they knew that he was against slavery and colonialism, that he was a committed Communist, a former paid-up member of the South African Communist Party who had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil war, and that he was imprisoned by the Portuguese because of his political activities.

Despite all these things being known to the South African police, they were not used to challenge the defence. Instead, the State remained mute, tolerating the picture put forward by the defence of a schizophrenic who believed he harboured a life-controlling tapeworm, who was unsympathetic towards the Coloureds, and who assassinated the prime minister because he was “frustrated” by his life.

As stated before, the author is not in a position to know whether the Attorney-General turned a blind eye to the evidence, whether he was never given it or whether he was simply incompetent. According to Professor John Dugard and Advocate George Bizos, both scenarios are very feasible. It is possible that van den Berg suppressed the evidence since prosecutors during apartheid were never independent. It is also possible, however, that van den Berg was not given the evidence by the police as it would not have been the first or last time that this happened during apartheid. The police always did whatever was necessary to protect apartheid's interests.⁵⁸³⁷ For example, Gordon Winter stated that General van den Bergh asked him to not reveal to the Commission of Enquiry that Tsafendas was a Communist and to downplay his political activities.⁵⁸³⁸ After the Sharpeville massacre, the police went to the hospitals and removed the bodies of victims to hide the fact that the police had used the banned dum-dum bullets. Then the police conveniently "lost" evidence about the use of dum-dums and "misplaced" evidence as to the ammunition rounds issued. All in all, an effective cover-up of the use of dum-dums.⁵⁸³⁹ Since the police were able to "misplace" evidence in 1960, they were surely capable of doing so again six years later.

⁵⁸³⁶ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Finally, the withholding and concealment by the authorities of evidence which contradicted apartheid's interests became legal three years after the assassination. Prime Minister John Vorster and General van den Bergh engineered legislation which allowed them legally to withhold and conceal any documents and evidence in the pursuit of apartheid's interests. In 1969, the General Law Amendment Bill (the so-called 'BOSS' law) was passed, whose notorious Clause 29 authorised the Prime Minister or his nominee (i.e. van den Bergh) to prohibit oral testimony or the production of any document before any court or statutory body should they believe the evidence or document would be "prejudicial to the interests of the state or public security." In reality, this permitted the police and the security forces to conceal or ensure the unavailability of any document or evidence which might jeopardise their cause and made it possible for them to continue use the courts for the punishment of offenders but to disregard the courts for all other purposes.⁵⁸⁴⁰ Tsafendas's case exemplified such a situation, when statements and documents contradicting the evidence presented in the court were concealed.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

The Attorney-General's attitude was somewhat bizarre and he damaged rather than helped his case with incompetent questioning. Examples of this were his attempt to use Dr. Sakinofsky's report to challenge Dr. Cooper that Tsafendas was politically motivated or his claim about the existence of evidence that showed that Tsafendas's work in the Parliament was satisfactory.

⁵⁸³⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁵⁸³⁸ Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

⁵⁸³⁹ Frankel, 2001: 147-8; 154-6.

⁵⁸⁴⁰ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 11; Sachs, 1973: 256.

Every single testimony could have been challenged and broken down quite easily by the State, although the Attorney-General failed to do so possibly for the reasons we examined previously.

It is also surprising that he failed to produce any evidence to support his claim that Tsafendas was fit to stand trial. What makes it even more surprising is that the South African police had gathered enough evidence not only to seriously challenge the insanity plea but to break it down. The evidence regarding Tsafendas's political activities and beliefs was overwhelming, although none of it was used.

However, the most astonishing aspect of the Attorney-General's conduct of the case was that his two main witnesses had concluded two weeks before the summary trial started that Tsafendas was a schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial. In doing so, they agreed with the case for the defence. Despite his witnesses' conclusions, the Attorney-General gave the impression throughout the proceedings that he did not accept the defence's plea and that he was seeking to challenge it. Everyone, including the defence team, was stunned to hear the evidence given by the State's two expert witnesses. It was the Attorney-General who allowed what should have been a simple and straightforward case, since both sides were in agreement about the accused, to be turned into a show trial. Further evidence of the Attorney-General's duplicitous role in the proceedings came just ten days after the summary trial when he lied to The Post about his knowledge of Tsafendas once being a member of the South African Communist Party. He claimed that he had just found that out from the Post journalist when in fact he knew about it at least from the 3rd of October because he had mentioned in a memorandum about Tsafendas which he wrote that day.

THE DEFENCE TEAM

Judge Beyers rightly praised the lawyers who defended Tsafendas, as they had indeed "graced the profession." Their handling of the case was the opposite of the Attorney-General's. Evidence from psychiatrists and from people who had met Tsafendas, along with some medical records, made for a convincing case, even though things were not as they appeared to be. The picture could have been very different if the State had used the evidence gathered by the police to challenge Tsafendas's defence, but the fact is the State did not do so and the defence team deserved credit for the solid-looking case it presented. David

Bloomberg told the author that at the end of the trial Tsafendas was “very grateful for everything that was being done for him. He kept on thanking us.”⁵⁸⁴¹

David Bloomberg in particular devoted a huge amount of energy to the case, succeeding, in a very limited time period, in finding suitable witnesses and evidence to support the defence's insanity plea. A gargantuan effort involved an international search for information from hospitals, government institutions and individuals long before the era of computerised communications technology and the invention of aids such as the internet. Wilfrid Cooper, too, with his highly intelligent and competent questioning of the witnesses, presented the defence's line with confidence and conviction. Cooper chose his words carefully and intelligently when presenting the case, especially with regard to Tsafendas's medical records and the scientific witnesses. Bloomberg and Cooper, along with their colleague Willy Burger, put together what seemed to be an extremely strong and convincing line, which they presented to the court with professional aplomb and conviction.

TSAFENDAS

Tsafendas was not the first or last person to pretend to be mad in order to escape punishment. It happened down the centuries. In Homer's Trojan War, Ulysses feigned insanity in order to escape going to the war. In the Bible, there is a description in the First Book of Samuel of David's successful pretence of madness to avoid punishment by the King of Gath. In fiction, pretending to be crazy is a regular novelist's device. For example in The Count of Monte Christo, imprisoned Abbe Faria pretended to be mad so that his guards would not take him seriously while he worked on his escape. In 1960, in South Africa, after the Sharpeville massacre, witnesses were advised to “play the fool” to avoid police abuse.⁵⁸⁴²

There is little doubt that the defence would have failed to prove their case without Tsafendas's “cooperation.” Although Tsafendas had given the police a perfectly logical political explanation for the killing, he changed his tune entirely with his defence team. The fact that he was not allowed to see his defence lawyers until twenty days after the assassination should be taken under consideration. As should the fact that he had specifically ⁵⁸⁴¹ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

⁵⁸⁴² Frankel, 2001: 194.

asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos and his request was not accepted, although it is possible that it was never transmitted to the State by the police.

Why did Tsafendas talk to his defence team in exactly the opposite way he spoke to the police? What he told the police in his two statements was wholly compatible with the evidence gathered by the police and the Commission, including the two hundred statements taken from people who knew him, as well as statements made to the author by forty-four people. What he told his defence team was completely incompatible with the above evidence. Tsafendas changed his tune because he could no longer take the pain and feared that an “undignified death” was waiting for him in the police station where he was held. He was not afraid to die, he had told the police, but he was terrified of being hanged in his cell by a plastic wire around his neck, and appalled at the lack of dignity associated with such a death. The torture he had endured over three weeks, especially the electric shocks and the mock hangings, also convinced him to simulate madness as he had done with the Portuguese police. The possibility of spending the rest of his life in a hospital must have seemed infinitely preferable to being hanged in his cell.

THE JUDGE AND HIS VERDICT

Judge Beyers' comportment throughout the summary trial was perfectly in accordance with the circumstances. Naturally, he questioned all of the defence witnesses and tried to find out more about Tsafendas. His judgment, too, was based on the evidence presented before him and he probably had no way of knowing about the abundance of evidence collected by the police and the Commission which contradicted the defence's insanity plea. Although he seemed to manipulate, or not remember correctly, some of the evidence presented in court, as with the O'Ryans and Smorenberg, his verdict could not have been anything else based on the evidence before the court.

The judge's verdict was that Tsafendas was mentally disordered, as defined in the Mental Disorders Act, and therefore he should be detained in a prison pending a decision by the State President as to his future disposition. Sending him to a prison, instead of to a hospital, where officially he belonged since he had been diagnosed as mentally disordered, is not an act that would be expected of a “highly civilized” country, which was Judge Beyers' own description of South Africa. Even less “civilized” was the subsequent decision by the State President that Tsafendas, officially a schizophrenic, should be detained without medical treatment on Death Row in a maximum security institution, Pretoria Central Prison.

REACTION OF THOSE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS

Anyone who knew Tsafendas well was stunned to read in the newspapers that he was schizophrenic and believed he had a tapeworm since he was a child. Not even one of the forty-four people questioned by the author believed at the time, or now, that Tsafendas was schizophrenic and thought he had a tapeworm. All were convinced that he made the whole thing up so as not to be executed. The reaction of some of these people has been included earlier in this chapter.

END NOTE

The doctors described in the trial a Tsafendas that had not the slightest resemblance to the person that some two hundred and fifty witnesses described to the police, the Commission and the author. It seems extremely unlikely that none of the people who knew Tsafendas, some extremely well, ever noticed that he was unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes or that he spoke in a disjointed manner. They must have been naive or very unobservant, unless the symptoms were simply not there; because Tsafendas made them up when talking to the doctors.

It is impossible to believe that a judge in a serious criminal case today would accept the diagnoses of five psychiatrists based wholly on what they were told by the person they were examining without any additional information to verify what they were told. However, that is what happened fifty years ago in apartheid South Africa. Was Tsafendas capable of convincing the psychiatrists that he was a schizophrenic? That he had done so in the past with the tapeworm story and the Saint Peter act suggests that he was. He also told three priests later that it was not difficult because both State and defence wanted to find him insane. He was pushing at an open door. Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry said in his final report that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore (the Commission) adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”⁵⁸⁴³

Although Judge van Wyk was able to acknowledge this, no-one seemed to take it into consideration during the summary trial. Furthermore, the State must have been aware, as were the police and the Commission, that Tsafendas had faked mental illness before, but this, too, was never mentioned. Finally, Advocate George Bizos believes that with the evidence at their disposal, “the police and the authorities of the time could have very easily built up a case (against Tsafendas), but they withheld it in order to find him insane.”⁵⁸⁴⁴ He also found the evidence showing Tsafendas to be politically motivated and not insane to be “overwhelming and unquestionable.”⁵⁸⁴⁵

⁵⁸⁴³ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁵⁸⁴⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

⁵⁸⁴⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

CHAPTER SIX

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE DEATH OF THE LATE DR. THE HONOURABLE HENDRIK FRENCH VERWOERD⁵⁸⁴⁶

INTRODUCTION

This chapter deals with the Commission of Enquiry which was appointed to investigate the circumstances of the death of Dr. Verwoerd and its “findings,” but more importantly with what it concealed. The Commission is examined here on the basis of the information it had at its disposal and not on further evidence collected by the author. Nevertheless, the Commission’s Report is materially very different from the evidence that was available to it and this is mostly due to the frequent omission of important information. Before we proceed further with this chapter, we should first examine the entity known as a Commission of Inquiry and its role during apartheid.

COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY

A Commission of Inquiry (COI) can play an important role in determining who is accountable in a crisis, and in creating new policies to avoid a similar situation in the future. In theory, a COI can be a challenge to serving politicians. In practice, they appear to propose change, while really upholding the status quo. By exploring how and why COI are appointed, we can learn about where and how politics, accountability and policy learning collide. Multiple studies demonstrate that when governments decide to appoint a COI, they are motivated less by a genuine desire to make people accountable and learn from past mistakes, and more by the need to avert blame, give a good impression to the media, and bolster their popularity.⁵⁸⁴⁷ ⁵⁸⁴⁶ Hereafter cited as Commission or COE or van Wyk Commission.

⁵⁸⁴⁷ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, 2010: 613.

WHAT IS A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY?

A COI can be defined as:

- An ad hoc institution put together for a specific task that ceases to exist when it has been carried out;
- Which is, at least officially, not part of the government or other executive body;
- Brought into existence by the government or a government minister;
- At their discretion;
- With the principal purpose of carrying out an investigation;
- Of events that have taken place in the past.⁵⁸⁴⁸

THE PURPOSE OF A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

A COI is assembled following a crisis to figure out what went wrong, who is responsible for decisions and actions taken, and how policy can be changed in response.⁵⁸⁴⁹ By definition, they explore the unusual – crises and events that do not usually occur and that cannot be managed via ordinary regulation and governance. In this way, institutions of sovereign power can “pose questions to themselves about the scope, limits and aims of governance.”⁵⁸⁵⁰

Commissions of Inquiry are portrayed as providing an “impartial assessment” and as independent of biased, partial governments.⁵⁸⁵¹ When they explore situations with the potential for civil or criminal liability, procedures need to resemble ordinary legal procedures to give the impression of fairness, and so that the public will ultimately accept its findings as legitimate. Inevitably, Commissions of Inquiry are political tools, used for political ends,⁵⁸⁵² as their determinations are relevant to governance and policy-making, and reduce public outrage and media interest by instigating a slow-moving process of the gradual emergence of data intended to avoid apportioning blame to the authorities,⁵⁸⁵³ that can delay meaningful change.⁵⁸⁵⁴

⁵⁸⁴⁸ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, 2010: 615.

⁵⁸⁴⁹ Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 3-7

⁵⁸⁵⁰ Sitze, 2013: 132-138.

⁵⁸⁵¹ Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 10-17.

⁵⁸⁵² Bishop, 2014: 19-23.

⁵⁸⁵³ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, 2010: 613-618.

⁵⁸⁵⁴ Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 17; Johns and Inwood, 2014: 46-48.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

A COI is composed of a Commissioner, its staff and its researchers. These bodies interact with the public and the media. In theory the Commissioner is impartial. Appointees are presented as non-partisan,⁵⁸⁵⁵ and are often charismatic, influential individuals who often lend their names to the COI.⁵⁸⁵⁶ Staff are sourced from elite groups in government, academia, and the private sector, unlikely to operate outside the existing order.⁵⁸⁵⁷

DISCOURSE OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY

Commissions of Inquiry have historically been used in a wide range of settings to nullify the rights of indigenous and ethnic minority peoples by giving the superficial impression of fairness and open-mindedness, and whitewashing often horrific state actions. Rather than challenging colonial structures, they tend to be governed by them. Thus, Commissions of Inquiry rarely pose any meaningful challenge to the status quo. While they often record large quantities of data regarding people who were mistreated or killed, they rarely lead to prosecutions. Thus, colonial governments were granted a mechanism whereby they could declare sorrow and regret for state actions, while doing nothing to prevent recurrence. Many Commissions of Inquiry were carried out in colonial settings, especially as independence movements got underway, including Trinidad, Ireland, Barbados, Rhodesia, Sierra Leone, and India. Invariably, they concluded that the government should tweak policies to avoid future “tragedies”, rather than identifying a problem with colonialism per se. They deferred the self-representation of “native” people with the idea that “native” peoples were simply unable to represent themselves at all.⁵⁸⁵⁸

HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

Commissions of Inquiry are rooted in pre-revolutionary England, when they emerged as a way in which rulers could figure out why their policies were not working as they wanted them to.⁵⁸⁵⁹ They have even been traced to 1085, and William I’s mandate to create the huge ⁵⁸⁵⁵ Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 10-11; Johns and Inwood, 2014: 35-36.

⁵⁸⁵⁶ Sitze, 2013: 138.

⁵⁸⁵⁷ Bishop, 2014: 22.

⁵⁸⁵⁸ Sitze, 2013: 148-150.

⁵⁸⁵⁹ Sitze, 2013: 11-12; Frankel, 2006: 141.

survey of England known as the Domesday Book.⁵⁸⁶⁰ By the early nineteenth century, Commissions of Inquiry were ways in which authorities could explore how they governed, why they governed as they did, what the outcomes were, and how to achieve a more favourable outcome,⁵⁸⁶¹ and had become one of the tools of Britain's colonial empire.⁵⁸⁶²

During the modern colonial period, colonised populations (as in the colonies of Britain, France, etc.) were considered essentially as resources or units of labour. Thus, when colonised peoples rebelled, their actions were not seen as a demand for autonomy, but as a hindrance to productivity.⁵⁸⁶³ This was typically the case even when Commissions of Inquiry genuinely attempted to understand natives' viewpoints.⁵⁸⁶⁴ The often brutal efforts of colonial administrations to suppress unrest were seen as necessary, if regrettable. "Experts" typically came from the same elite whose transgression (often heavy-handed governance or policing) was being investigated, while their work was presented as benefiting all of society.⁵⁸⁶⁵

Of course, Commissions of Inquiry have not been developed purely in the colonial context. Other examples include the Warren Commission following the assassination of John F. Kennedy in 1963, the Widgery and Saville Inquiries into the Bloody Sunday massacre in Northern Ireland in 1972, the Scott Inquiry into British arms sales to Iraq, and the 9/11 COI following the terrorist attacks on New York in 2001.⁵⁸⁶⁶

COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY IN SOUTH AFRICA

From the colonial period, throughout the apartheid era, and into the democratic era, Commissions of Inquiry have played a role in South Africa in being "used to fight political battles between parties, hide government embarrassment, and take the pressure off beleaguered state institutions."⁵⁸⁶⁷ Commissions of Inquiry can be delayed by third parties, including those being investigated, who wish to delay conclusions and adverse findings. Frequently, the terms of reference can be framed so that the desired findings are essentially a foregone conclusion. The primary audience is the government, and how the government will ⁵⁸⁶⁰ Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 5.

⁵⁸⁶¹ McDowall Clokie and Robinson, 1969: 54-79.

⁵⁸⁶² Inwood and Johns, 2014a: 5-10.

⁵⁸⁶³ Badiou, 2012: 38-41.

⁵⁸⁶⁴ Kostal, 2005: 91.

⁵⁸⁶⁵ Sitze, 2013: 138; Stoler, 2009: 141.

⁵⁸⁶⁶ Sulitzeanu-Kenan, 2010: 613.

⁵⁸⁶⁷ Bishop, 2014: 2, 19.

react is always brought to bear on how a COI is carried out, and how extensive its findings will be.⁵⁸⁶⁸ The outcome is heavily influenced by who can take part. Participation often calls for legal representation, which is difficult for the average citizen to access. When participants cannot take part on an equal footing, it is likely that the COI will fail to uncover the truth, while also being anti-democratic, and consistently using language that posits atrocities as “tragedies.”

Throughout the apartheid era, South Africa engaged in COI, typically on the topic of race relations,⁵⁸⁶⁹ often with a focus on state violence. While Commissions of Inquiry took evidence from a wide range of witnesses, this was invariably viewed from the authorities’ perspective, as White “experts” spoke on behalf of the “natives.”⁵⁸⁷⁰ While they often investigated matters of huge importance to Blacks, their voices were often replaced by those of the “experts.” “Native” people were listened to only in the context of the desire to “restore law, coherence, and order to colonial rule,”⁵⁸⁷¹ never truly threatening the status quo.⁵⁸⁷²

The Sauer COI in 1949 recommended complete apartheid and the 1960 COI into the European Occupancy of the Rural Areas recommended that Blacks be placed in “native reserves,” leading to forced removals.⁵⁸⁷³ Commissions of Inquiry thus helped to determine how governments formed and enacted policies. Issues were typically represented as “problems” to be remedied with firm state action. Various laws were passed indemnifying the police and security forces from legal action. Thus, indemnity and Commissions of Inquiry need to be considered as two parts of the same whole. If it was found that the authorities, or bodies acting on their behalf, had erred, there were rarely any repercussions. Often, Commissions of Inquiry functioned to justify what was essentially martial law after the fact; many were exempted from prosecution for their involvement in atrocities such as the Sharpeville massacre,⁵⁸⁷⁴ and by 1960 South Africa’s Statute Book was filled with laws indemnifying a wide range of public officials from prosecution.⁵⁸⁷⁵

⁵⁸⁶⁸ Bishop, 2014: 21-22.

⁵⁸⁶⁹ Stoler, 2009: 142.

⁵⁸⁷⁰ Ashforth, 1990: 1-4.

⁵⁸⁷¹ Sitze, 2013: 142-143.

⁵⁸⁷² Johns and Inwood, 2014: 25; Inwood and Johns, 2014b: 285.

⁵⁸⁷³ Mamdani, 1996: 31-32, 48-49.

⁵⁸⁷⁴ Sitze, 2013: 25.

⁵⁸⁷⁵ Hahlo and Kahn, 1960: 147n61.

Commissions of Inquiry under apartheid quickly became closely associated with scandals arising from state violence, and efforts to restore the public's confidence,⁵⁸⁷⁶ which retained the constitutional right to appoint Commissions of Inquiry to look into the president as well as provincial premiers.⁵⁸⁷⁷ Often, atrocities were reconfigured, emerging as unpreventable "tragedies." For example, the government slaughter of the Bondelzwart people in 1921 was presented as a tragic, but inevitable, outcome of their "simplicity."⁵⁸⁷⁸ Furthermore, as we have already seen, the Commission of Inquiry into the Disturbances in Eastern Pondoland absolved the police of any blame for the killing of eleven unarmed protestors. Instead, its report accused the ANC of being the moral instigator of the massacre. The eleven dead, it said, "were the victims of the insidious propaganda of the African National Congress and associated organizations."⁵⁸⁷⁹

According to Adam Sitze, Associate Professor of Law at Amherst College, commissions under apartheid generally failed in their stated aim to open contentious events to scrutiny and public debate, serving rather to disguise or conceal state crime and its methods. They were an integral part of apartheid's repressive and propaganda machine and very often hid more than they revealed. A typical example, he wrote, was the Sharpeville inquiry which transformed itself from a fact-finding device into a "whitewashing machine."⁵⁸⁸⁰ He added:

"As would become painfully evident in apartheid South Africa, the more that Commissions of Inquiry would be created to investigate state massacres, the less they would produce public debate and discussion (...), and the more they would reduce public debate, by obfuscating or even concealing altogether the ways and means of state crime. Here [referring to the Sharpeville COI], the COI was not a fact-finding device; it was a 'white washing' machine."⁵⁸⁸¹

Professor John Dugard told the author about the Commissions of Inquiry during apartheid:

"One of the most disgraceful things about South Africa during this period was the way in which judicial commissions were manipulated, and also the way in which inquest ⁵⁸⁷⁶ Bishop, 2015: 7.

⁵⁸⁷⁷ Constitution s 127(2)(e).

⁵⁸⁷⁸ Sitze, 2013: 133.

⁵⁸⁷⁹ Badat, 2013: 117; Wylie, 2011: 197-201, 206.

⁵⁸⁸⁰ Sitze, 2013: 157, 311.

⁵⁸⁸¹ Sitze, 2013: 157.

inquiries were conducted and the magistrates just ignored the evidence. And it was quite clear that the Sharpeville Inquiry and the Langa Inquiry, that the... I can't remember who the Langa Inquiry judge was... but they were both conducted by judges who were political appointments. And they knew how to make a finding that would help the government. That was very clear.”⁵⁸⁸²

The COI into the Sharpeville massacre in 1960 speculated that the shootings might have contributed to a minimising the loss of life and whitewashed the role played in the massacre by the police and state,⁵⁸⁸³ determining that it was a “tragedy” to which both the victims and their killers had contributed.⁵⁸⁸⁴ The Sharpeville COI created a template for further Commissions of Inquiry. The 1976, so-called Cillie COI which investigated the Soweto uprising, was carried out primarily from the police’s perspective. According to Professor Sitze, it was a “sham and a charade,”⁵⁸⁸⁵ that failed to account for missing bodies and attempted to shift blame from the police to their victims and their parents.⁵⁸⁸⁶ According to Benjamin Pogrud, it was “... an effort to blame anyone except from the government.”⁵⁸⁸⁷ In 1986, following violence in Langa after a local funeral,⁵⁸⁸⁸ the investigating judge, Kannemayer, omitted evidence that he considered “background information,” but which included vital data about living conditions and police conduct in the townships in a clear attempt to whitewash the police.⁵⁸⁸⁹

Commissions of Inquiry did not disappear when apartheid ended. Although often the objects of controversy and conducted at great expense, they became a regular aspect of the political scene⁵⁸⁹⁰ (in 2014 no fewer than six were running at the same time⁵⁸⁹¹). Most notable was the Truth and Reconciliation Commission established in 1996 which investigated abuses carried out during apartheid by both the state and its opponents.⁵⁸⁹² The aim was to ensure ⁵⁸⁸² Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁵⁸⁸³ Lodge, 2011: 328.

⁵⁸⁸⁴ Bishop, 2014: 24-25.

⁵⁸⁸⁵ Sitze, 2013: 182.

⁵⁸⁸⁶ Pohlandt-McCormick, 2000: 30-34.

⁵⁸⁸⁷ Pogrud, 2000: 276.

⁵⁸⁸⁸ Forty-seven Blacks were shot dead by the police, of whom thirty-five had been shot from behind (Baldwin-Ragaven et al, 1999: 57).

⁵⁸⁸⁹ Haysom, 1986: 494.

⁵⁸⁹⁰ Bishop, 2014: 3. For more about the role of the Inquiries in the democratic South Africa see Michael Bishop (2014) An Accidental Good: The Role of the Commissions of Inquiry in South African Democracy.

⁵⁸⁹¹ Bishop, 2014: 1-3

⁵⁸⁹² Dugard, 1998b: 293; Dugard, 1997: 260.

that South Africa moved from a racist regime to democratic governance without recourse to revenge and violence.

EXAMPLES OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY DURING APARTHEID

To understand better how Commissions of Inquiry operated during apartheid, we will briefly examine some typical examples. All of them, especially the inquiry into the Sharpeville massacre, have parallels and similarities with the Dr. Verwoerd Commission of Enquiry in terms of police methods, attitude towards witnesses, evidence, findings and concealment of evidence and facts.

THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO THE OCCURRENCES AT SHARPEVILLE (AND OTHER PLACES) ON THE 21ST OF MARCH 1960

On 24 March, 1960, just three days after the Sharpeville Massacre,⁵⁸⁹³ Dr. Verwoerd moved quickly to announce that a one-man Commission of Inquiry would be appointed to investigate the incident.⁵⁸⁹⁴ The person chosen to investigate was Judge Wessels.⁵⁸⁹⁵ The then police Captain H.J. van den Bergh was appointed as Police Chief Investigator,⁵⁸⁹⁶ tasked with determining who fired the first shots and who shouted “shoot.”⁵⁸⁹⁷ In the aftermath of the shooting, van den Bergh was detailed to Baragwanath hospital. There he directed a team of Black and White policemen to drag from their beds patients who had been shot at Sharpeville, handcuff them and transport them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, sprayed with water and ordered to dress again in their blood-stained clothes which they were ordered to wear unchanged for months. They were told it was punishment for their “agitation.”⁵⁸⁹⁸

There was a great need to convince the world that it was business as usual, and that South Africa was still a good place in which to invest. Of course, Dr. Verwoerd’s government would have to hope that external observers would not notice, or would not care about, the extent to which the government controlled the judicial system.⁵⁸⁹⁹ Dr. Verwoerd met with his Minister of Justice, then Frans C. Erasmus,⁵⁹⁰⁰ and other senior officials, in an emergency ⁵⁸⁹³ For more about the incident see Chapter One.

⁵⁸⁹⁴ Daily Dispatch, 24 March 1960: 1, ‘Official Inquiry into the riots.’

⁵⁸⁹⁵ Reeves, 1960: 81.

⁵⁸⁹⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 22 July 1960, ‘Sharpeville Magistrate.’

⁵⁸⁹⁷ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 154; Roux, 1972: 408.

⁵⁸⁹⁸ Frankel, 2001: 194-195.

⁵⁸⁹⁹ Coniglio, 2012, 499-500.

⁵⁹⁰⁰ (1896 - 1967) Minister of Justice from 1959 to August 1961; he also served as Minister of Defence from 1948 to 1959 and as South Africa’s Ambassador to Italy after his term as Minister of Justice (Beyers et al, 1987: 246-248).

meeting to decide what to do in both the short- and the long-term. Within an hour it had been decided that a Commission of Inquiry would be held. It was clearly vital that the state be seen to be in full control of the situation and its aftermath – both in order to inhibit the wave of panic now sweeping the country and to head off any sympathy demonstrations and protests that could reasonably be expected in the wake of public reaction.⁵⁹⁰¹

The government had to tread carefully. If the Commission was chosen to produce a report that completely absolved the authorities, it would be an obvious whitewash and attract foreign criticism while reducing Dr. Verwoerd's government's credibility in the eyes of potential trading partners. On the other hand, if it led to a harsh criticism of the authorities, the government would look bad when Dr. Verwoerd was trying to present apartheid as a humane, fair and just way to administer a racially diverse nation.⁵⁹⁰²

Dr. Verwoerd and his government tried desperately, as usual, to turn black into white, and to convince the world that the apartheid policies did not cause the massacre. He maintained that the demonstration had nothing to do with opposition to apartheid but was the result of a Communist conspiracy. It was the Communists and not the police — and most certainly not the government — who bore responsibility for the deaths, he declared. He even claimed that the demonstrators had shot first, although no weapons were found among them.⁵⁹⁰³ The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Eric Louw, known as “South Africa's Goebbels” because of his pro-Nazi propaganda and resemblance to the German Nazi,⁵⁹⁰⁴ claimed that “40,000” Africans had protested, and asserted that if the police had not shot they would have been murdered.⁵⁹⁰⁵ He was echoing remarks made by a sergeant involved in the massacre immediately afterwards: “We were only a handful against very many. If the men had reached us, I am sure they would have wiped us out.”⁵⁹⁰⁶

In London, the High Commissioner, van Rhyen, stated that a hostile crowd of about 20,000 had attacked the police with firearms, forcing the police to shoot them in self-defence.⁵⁹⁰⁷ At the United Nations, South Africa's delegate, B.G. Fourie, gave his government's official version of what happened, which blamed “Bantu extremists,” as

⁵⁹⁰¹ Frankel, 2001: 186-187

⁵⁹⁰² Martin, 2007: 13.

⁵⁹⁰³ Mandela, 2013: 281; Loveland, 1999: 383; TIME, 4 April 1960: 19, ‘South Africa: The Sharpeville massacre’; The Illustrated London News, 9 April 1960: 590, ‘South Africa: The issues appraised.’

⁵⁹⁰⁴ Pogrund, 1990: 157

⁵⁹⁰⁵ The Cape Times, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘No more Sharpeville says Louw.’

⁵⁹⁰⁶ The Cape Times, 13 April 1960: n.p., ‘Sharpeville Sergeant on surging mob.’

⁵⁹⁰⁷ Reeves, 1960: 81.

follows: “A splinter organisation of extremists had started some time ago to organise a mass demonstration to protest against the carrying of reference books ... At Sharpeville some agitators immediately adopted a threatening attitude towards the police. Attempts were made to arrest some of the violators — but the crowd became more belligerent and the police were attacked with a variety of weapons: pangas, axes, iron bars, sticks, knives and firearms. Indeed shots were fired at the police before the police returned fire in order to defend their own lives and also to forestall what might have led to even greater and more tragic bloodshed... No government can allow hundreds of thousands of its citizens to be intimidated by extremists, as the Bantu in South Africa often are: to be threatened with the most dire consequences, if they proceed with their daily occupations and disobey the instructions of this militant group referred to.”⁵⁹⁰⁸ Thus, at this point, most of the outside world seemed to have accepted the official South African version of events as accurate.⁵⁹⁰⁹ Not everyone, though: the London Times, for example, called Dr. Verwoerd “a liar” and his policy “manifestly bankrupt.”⁵⁹¹⁰

The official version was also flatly contradicted by observers such as Rand Daily Mail reporter Benjamin Poggrund, who saw everything first hand,⁵⁹¹¹ and by Bishop Ambrose Reeves, whose detailed rebuttal resulted in his eventual deportation. A statement by Bishop Reeves said there was no evidence that shots were fired by the protestors, nor that they attempted to charge the police, nor that weapons had been left behind as they fled. The bishop said the police shot into the backs of the fleeing crowd long after there were any signs of impending violence. The action was “punitive” and the force used excessive, he said.⁵⁹¹² The bishop’s challenge to the official version of Sharpeville resulted in his being declared a threat to national security. Fearing that he would be arrested and “silenced,” he fled to the British Protectorate of Swaziland in South Africa,⁵⁹¹³ from where he sent sworn statements by eighteen Africans injured in Sharpeville to New York lawyer Allard Lowenstein. The statements affirmed that victims were shot in the back while running away from the police station. Their depositions were distributed to delegates at the United Nations.⁵⁹¹⁴

⁵⁹⁰⁸ The Guardian, 9 April 1960: 7, ‘Sharpeville- the official version: Mr. Fourie blames Bantu trouble-makers.’

⁵⁹⁰⁹ Poggrund, 2000: 10.

⁵⁹¹⁰ de Villiers, 1975: 67.

⁵⁹¹¹ Knight, 2000.

⁵⁹¹² The Canberra Times, 15 June 1960: 7, ‘Sharpeville shooting ‘punitive’, Bishop tells Inquiry.’

⁵⁹¹³ The Canberra Times, 6 April 1960: 1, ‘Bishop will speak elsewhere.’

⁵⁹¹⁴ The Star, 11 April 1960, Sharpeville Reports going to UNO; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Bishop sends documents on Sharpeville.’

After receiving government assurances as to his safety, Bishop Reeves returned to South Africa and submitted to the Wessels Commission a memorandum that was severely critical of the police actions at Sharpeville. Weeks later, he was picked up, bundled onto an airplane and deported to Britain.⁵⁹¹⁵ His expulsion was denounced by the British media as “a clumsy attempt to silence him.”⁵⁹¹⁶ The result, however, was a book, Shooting at Sharpeville, in which Bishop Reeves set out in detail the events of the massacre.⁵⁹¹⁷ In South Africa, his account was condemned as “conspicuously prejudiced,” “irrelevant” and full of “blatant lies and fabrications.”⁵⁹¹⁸ It was not until the Truth and Reconciliation Commission met three decades later that Shooting at Sharpeville received the recognition it deserved as an historic document detailing one of apartheid’s most vicious crimes.

Far from evincing discomfort over the massacre, the government promised similar armed responses in the future. On the day that the Sharpeville Inquiry began, Foreign Minister Eric Law stated: “If 20,000 Africans were again threatening 130 policemen, as at Sharpeville, the police in maintenance of law and order, and in their own defence would be obliged to fire. We are now alerted, and this sort of thing will not happen again. In Cato Manor this year, nine policemen were hacked to pieces by Africans. There was not much fuss in overseas newspapers about that. You can’t handle gangsters with kid gloves. If it is necessary to use strong arm methods to deal with gangsterism, we are not different from any Government in the world.”⁵⁹¹⁹

The Wessels Commission of Inquiry began on Monday, 11 April, twenty-one days after Sharpeville and two days after David Pratt’s assault on Dr. Verwoerd. In the courtroom at Vereeniging, there were more policemen and journalists than witnesses, and of the 20,000 Africans at Sharpeville when the police opened fire, only fifteen were willing to give evidence. Harold Hanson, the lawyer representing many of the victims, made a bold attempt to have the hearing postponed, citing restrictions on his actions under the then current state of emergency, the unavailability of some witnesses and the fear of others to testify to the truth. Hanson said, “I am not certain how far I will be able to go with what I consider the proper ⁵⁹¹⁵ Daily Dispatch, 14 September 1960: 1, ‘Reeves expulsion clearly illegal’; Daily Representative, 12 September 1960: 1, ‘Reeves deported in secrecy’; TIME, 26 September 1960, ‘South Africa: Off goes the bishopp’; The Star, 12 September 1960: 1, ‘Bishop Reeves deported in great secrecy.’

⁵⁹¹⁶ The Cape Argus, 13 September 1960: 2, ‘Deportation a clumsy way to silence Reeves says British Press.’

⁵⁹¹⁷ Reeves, 1960.

⁵⁹¹⁸ Frankel, 2001: 192-193.

⁵⁹¹⁹ Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘News girl seized.’

cross-examination of witnesses, having regard to the present state of emergency.”⁵⁹²⁰

Further, he said, some witnesses with material evidence were incommunicado, some of the injured were detained after being discharged from hospital and others were frightened to come forward. “And if they come forward, will they speak without fear or favour?” Hanson asked.⁵⁹²¹ Urging a postponement at least until the state of emergency had ended, Hanson also cited the absence of scores of his witnesses. He told the Commission, “You are without the evidence of 180 persons. The 180 are the wounded. They are in hospital, all accused or suspected in a case of public violence...”⁵⁹²²

What you have to bear in mind at this state, Mr. Commissioner, is whether you will have the evidence on both sides of the scale before you. The body of evidence might be given until the present conditions had subsided. The people who had been injured or bereaved should be able to give evidence freely and unafraid.”⁵⁹²³ Finally, Hanson said the evidence of some witnesses would be that the Sharpeville shooting was unprovoked, that the crowd was not hostile, and that if the shooting was necessary, the police acted beyond what was necessary. Such evidence, Hanson said, could well be regarded as inciting members of the public against the authorities.⁵⁹²⁴

Hanson’s application was opposed by Mr. P. S. Claassen, Q.C., Attorney-General of the Orange Free State, who argued that Hanson was imagining “possible difficulties” and suggested that witnesses could be protected by prohibiting publication of certain evidence or by holding some parts of the inquiry in camera. Claassen also told the Commission that he would call evidence that the police opened fire “after shots had been fired at them and they had been threatened.” It was in the public interest that the inquiry should proceed as a matter of urgency, he said.⁵⁹²⁵

⁵⁹²⁰ Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘The missing witnesses’; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry: request for delay’; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 2, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville disturbance’; The Guardian, 12 April 1960: 9, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry opens’; The Star, 11 April 1960, ‘Judge asked to postpone inquiry’; The Star, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Official inquiry starts: Policemen describe Sharpeville events.’

⁵⁹²¹ The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 2, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville disturbance’; The Guardian, 12 April 1960: 9, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry opens’; The Star, 11 April 1960, ‘Judge asked to postpone inquiry.’

⁵⁹²² Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘The missing witnesses’; Daily Express, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Satisfactory’; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry: request for delay’; The Star, 11 April 1960, ‘Judge asked to postpone inquiry.’

⁵⁹²³ The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 2, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville disturbance.’

⁵⁹²⁴ The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 2, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville disturbance’; The Guardian, 12 April 1960: 9, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry opens’; The Star, 11 April 1960, ‘Judge asked to postpone inquiry.’

⁵⁹²⁵ The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 2, ‘Inquiry into Sharpeville disturbance’; The Guardian, 12 April 1960: 9, ‘Sharpeville Inquiry opens’; The Star, 11 April 1960, ‘Judge asked to postpone inquiry.’

Not unexpectedly, Judge Wessels refused Hanson's application and the inquiry went ahead without the evidence of Hanson's many missing witnesses.⁵⁹²⁶ The judge said he decided "after anxious thought" to let the inquiry proceed because he believed, as Claassen had also suggested, that this was in the best interests of the public. He said that because the Inquiry concerned events that led to the state of emergency, "the Commission's report may consequently have a direct bearing upon the circumstances in which the state of emergency was proclaimed." Regarding Hanson's witnesses, he said, "Every power at my disposal will be used to ensure that intended witnesses will be able to come forward freely." However, he added that he would not be "able to provide absolute security" for them. It was up to the witnesses whether they wanted to come forward, he said, acknowledging that it would take "people of some courage" to do so.⁵⁹²⁷ That the Commission chairman himself raised the point of the witnesses' safety and warned that he could not guarantee it, must surely have made many potential witnesses even more reluctant to come forward.

An early police witness, Sergeant J.L. Grobler, set out the evidence template which the police witnesses followed. Grobler, who was the officer in charge of Sharpeville police station, said, "Stones were being thrown by the crowd; there were about 15,000 natives, armed with kerries and irons, and 100 to 150 policemen. No tear-gas was used, the wind was in the wrong direction; there was nothing else they (the (police) could do but fire. We were a handful against so many. If the mob had reached us, I am certain they would have wiped us out."⁵⁹²⁸ The remaining police witnesses said much the same.

Despite the preponderance of evidence along these lines, the case put before the Commission did not support the government's version of events as described orally by the police and in van Rhyen's and Fourie's statements. The police had fired seven hundred rounds into the crowd, while showing no greater proof of weapons than a small assortment of sticks and umbrellas. Many official documents had been destroyed by the police after the massacre, and the official documents often did not identify the Black policemen who had been there properly, referring to them only by their first names. This "removal" of the Black policemen from the record gave the impression that there had been far fewer police than there actually were, suggesting that just 130 officers were surrounded by a vast mob. In fact, there were at least 160 White officers with firearms, and 130 Black officers with “knobkerries” (a sort of truncheon) and other weapons, and armoured vehicles and a large body of armed police in the general area.⁵⁹²⁹

⁵⁹²⁶ Pretoria News, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Sharpeville inquiry to go on'; The Star, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Inquiry must proceed judge rules 'after anxious thought.'

⁵⁹²⁷ The Star, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Inquiry must proceed judge rules 'after anxious thought.'

⁵⁹²⁸ Daily Dispatch, 13 April 1960: 1, 'Nothing else to do but fire'; The Star, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Official inquiry starts: Policemen describe Sharpeville events.'

Much of the evidence that came before the Commission was weak, and there were many gaps in the record. The Commission never fully investigated the shooting and tended to avoid exploring many of the “important technical and brutal aspects of the killings,” such as the type of ammunition used and how the Black policemen acted. The pressure on the investigators to produce a report within a short period was unhelpful in this regard.⁵⁹³⁰

Black protestors were very reluctant to testify. Some were still in police custody and feared police violence, and all were subject to intimidation. They were also under pressure from the PAC to follow its “party line” that the police had committed premeditated murder rather than slaughtering the protestors in a chaotic scene that owed much to poor leadership and heightened fears.⁵⁹³¹ Moreover, Judge Wessels tended to favour police testimony over that of victims or witnesses. He described a police officer, Captain Cawood, as making a “favourable impression” and possessing qualities including “reflection, initiative and humanity,”⁵⁹³² and took at face value Cawood’s testimony about having shot dead the African leader of a group of protestors who had been throwing stones at him and then “stormed” him.⁵⁹³³ At the same time, he was dismissive and suspicious of the African witnesses, such as Sidwell Kasa, asserting that the crowd had had “ample opportunity to disperse” before the police resorted to violence.⁵⁹³⁴

In general, Wessels had a poor view of the PAC. He quoted the chairman of the local branch as saying, “there is no freedom without bloodshed” and stated that while it did not appear that the PAC had had the explicit plan to engage in violence, they had at least been prepared for the possibility. In this way, he emphasised any association between the PAC and ⁵⁹²⁹ Frankel, 2001: 97-98.

⁵⁹³⁰ Frankel, 2001: 192.

⁵⁹³¹ Martin, 2007: 17.

⁵⁹³² Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 28.

⁵⁹³³ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 33.

⁵⁹³⁴ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 31. Kasa was later imprisoned for three years and subsequently banished (Lodge, 2001: 21-22).

violence. The report deals at length with violence and the intimidation supposedly used by the PAC in order to force people to participate in the demonstration, criticising the organization's supposed violence more than the police's actual violence.⁵⁹³⁵

A chaotic picture emerged, in which it was shown that not all the police had fired, and that those who had were mostly in subordinate positions. Police who fired claimed that they had heard shots from the crowd, that the crowd was "rushing the fence" that separated them from the police station, that they were throwing stones, and that a mob was rushing through the gate of the precinct. None of this was supported by Africans' evidence, or by photographic or forensic evidence,⁵⁹³⁶ although it is likely that many of the police sincerely believed that the crowd had been heavily armed.⁵⁹³⁷ The testimony of Africans and police was often contradictory; African witnesses described a festive scene greeting the arrival of the armoured Saracen vehicles, while police described a crowd that was "grim, savage and ruthless."⁵⁹³⁸

A White constable who lived in a nearby suburb said that if the officers had not acted "the Blacks would have killed us – and then gone on to slaughter our women and children."⁵⁹³⁹ It seems that not all the police questioned realised the gravity of the situation. Asked by the Commission if he had "learned any useful lessons," the officer in charge, Lieutenant Colonel Pienaar, replied "well, we may get better equipment," and that "the Native mentality does not allow them to gather for a peaceful demonstration. For them, to gather means violence."⁵⁹⁴⁰

The Commission was told that 496 rounds were fired in total, and that an "inflammable" crowd had threatened to kill the policemen.⁵⁹⁴¹ Police authorities insisted that there was no evidence of the use of anything other than "normal" bullets. To conceal their use, the police had told the medical staff, who had seen the injuries, that it would not be in the national interest for them to make "exaggerated" disclosures.⁵⁹⁴² When the injured victims started to arrive at hospitals for treatment police officers were already in place to inspect ⁵⁹³⁵ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 20.

⁵⁹³⁶ Reeves, 1960: 81-88.

⁵⁹³⁷ Frankel, 2001: 99.

⁵⁹³⁸ Frankel, 2001: 90.

⁵⁹³⁹ Frankel, 2001: 122.

⁵⁹⁴⁰ Reeves, 1960: 93-95.

⁵⁹⁴¹ The Cape Times, 21 April 1960: 1, '476 Shots by policemen at Sharpeville.'

⁵⁹⁴² Frankel, 2001: 149.

those who were dead and remove bodies that had been very badly damaged by explosive ‘dum-dum’ bullets. An estimated twenty-four dead bodies were spirited away and buried in secret so that no post-mortems could be carried out on them. The Commission sided with the police, anyway, agreeing that no “dum-dums” were used and declaring that the dead were all killed by ordinary bullets.⁵⁹⁴³

As far as the Commission was concerned, the evidence that the crowd showed “no real hostility... could not be accepted.” This was despite testimony from Colonel Spengler that he did not think the crowd likely to attack the police station. Wessels maintained that though the crowd “could not be regarded as an armed one” the situation was indeed “inflammable” because of the “size and the mood of the gathering.” He said that the police’s shooting was at least partly prompted by the shots they heard from the crowd “and a sudden flooding of the Bantu” across the boundary of the station compound and that it might have prevented even greater bloodshed.⁵⁹⁴⁴

According to Bishop Reeves “much of the police evidence about the crowd can only be described as untruthful” and completely inconsistent with the press photographs. Moreover, the police’s evidence was completely contradicted:

- By the absence of defensive preparations by the police against the attack.
- By the fact that there was no attack on the police before the arrival of the Saracens.
- Because a considerable part of the crowd was only at the Police Station by reason of intimidation.
- By the experience of at least three White men who passed among or through the crowd at one o’clock or shortly after one o’clock, namely Berry – the Drum photographer, Hoek – the Rand Daily Mail photographer, and Labuschange, the superintendent of the Sharpeville Township.⁵⁹⁴⁵

Ultimately, the Commission’s 218-page Report failed to lay down a definitive judgment and simply related events as unfolded by “evidence” before it.⁵⁹⁴⁶ Judge Wessels “concluded” that he could not find anyone culpable nor whether or not the shooting was ⁵⁹⁴³ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal. 1960: pp. 128, par. 209.

⁵⁹⁴⁴ Lodge, 2011: 329.

⁵⁹⁴⁵ Reeves, 1960: 82-84.

⁵⁹⁴⁶ Daily Dispatch, 24 January 1961: 1, ‘No findings on Sharpeville.’

justified,⁵⁹⁴⁷ but merely presented the evidence that had been given to it.⁵⁹⁴⁸ It reported that although there had been no organised attempt to attack the police, the police had sincerely believed that their lives were in danger, and had shot in good faith:⁵⁹⁴⁹ “... the Commission, to its very end, avoided, circumvented, or lightly touched upon many of the important technical and brutal aspects of the killings – such as the type of ammunition used by the SAPS and the actions of the black police whom the SAP, in their official history of the events of the sixties, admit “occasionally acted without self-restraint and in an undisciplined manner.”⁵⁹⁵⁰

Wessels tended to agree with the police’s contention that they had been facing a hostile crowd, insisting that there was “no doubt” that the night before had featured “violence and threats of violence” from the PAC, aimed at the residents of Sharpeville. Most of the residents who provided evidence had been coached by the state’s lawyers, and stated that they had had no knowledge of the PAC’s involvement and had gone to the protest out of curiosity or because they had been intimidated. Wessels agreed that the shooting had been prompted at least partly by shots from the crowd and by a sudden charge of Black protestors towards them.⁵⁹⁵¹

Although Wessels included some very mild criticism of the police and how they were deployed by Lieutenant Corporal Pienaar, he agreed with their claim that they had no option but to respond with violence;⁵⁹⁵² he had no problem with the police characterisation of the protestors as a “frenzied mob.”⁵⁹⁵³ He included lengthy testimony from the police, but only perfunctory evidence from witnesses, many of whom were in police custody and had been coached under intimidation to provide monosyllabic answers to questions that bolstered the state’s position. Wessels repeated the dehumanising terms the police used to refer to the Black protestors, referring to them as a “throng,” and as “prancing about,” “massed together,” and “frenzied.”

The judge also overlooked and concealed clear lies. For example, the police had denied carrying skamboks (a type of whip) although the few photographs of the massacre, by ⁵⁹⁴⁷ Lodge, 2011: 328.

⁵⁹⁴⁸ The Cape Argus, 23 January 1961: 1, ‘Sharpeville: no findings on responsibility.’

⁵⁹⁴⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 24 January 1961: 1, ‘Sharpeville, Langa report findings.’

⁵⁹⁵⁰ Frankel, 2001: 192.

⁵⁹⁵¹ Lodge, 2001: 329.

⁵⁹⁵² Lodge, 2011: 328.

⁵⁹⁵³ Sitze, 2013:179-180.

Ian Berry,⁵⁹⁵⁴ the photographer for Drum magazine, clearly show that they were. Berry's photographs also showed that the higher estimates for the crowd, as favoured by the police, were unlikely to be accurate, but Wessels accepted these estimates despite the photographic evidence.⁵⁹⁵⁵ The police also denied that any shots had been made from their Saracen tanks. This position was taken to support the notion that the police had been unable to assess the real level of danger from a vantage point at ground level and had made the best possible decision in light of what they knew. This evidence was demonstrated as false by photographs that showed that the police had shot at the crowd from their armoured carriers.⁵⁹⁵⁶ The police claimed that they had helped wounded victims after the massacre. By this point, British cameramen were actually filming the events before them, and the footage shows that the police did essentially nothing to assist the wounded, while photographs show a police officer using a spade to shovel up brain tissue.⁵⁹⁵⁷

Professor Phillip Frankel describes the report that ensued from the Commission as being “so densely unintelligible, so ridden with double-talk, qualifications, and refutable logic as to defy both legal reasoning and ordinary comprehension,” and points out the vast amount of forensic evidence that was available to him during his archival research in 1999, but which was apparently “either unknown or unavailable to the Commission.”⁵⁹⁵⁸ Quite simply, the whole point of the Commission was to create the impression that the state was investigating the massacre, while actually whitewashing the record. The police operated within a system in which they “had” to be found in the right or to have acted only under severe provocation. The general state of fear among the wider white population meant that the police could “confidently walk into the white legal system virtually assured of little more than a sharp slap on the wrist,”⁵⁹⁵⁹ because there was no will in government or among most Whites to curtail their brutal activities.

The evidence included that more than 700 shots had been made into the crowd and that more than half of those shots were made by eleven policemen.⁵⁹⁶⁰ Although Judge ⁵⁹⁵⁴ (1934-) A British photojournalist and the only photographer to document the massacre at Sharpeville. According to Tom Lodge (2011: 229), his contribution was critical in amplifying Sharpeville's impact, as his pictures were crucial in turning opposition to apartheid into an international public cause.

⁵⁹⁵⁵ Lodge, 2011: 328-329.

⁵⁹⁵⁶ Frankel, 2001: 197.

⁵⁹⁵⁷ Lodge, 2011: 107.

⁵⁹⁵⁸ Lodge, 2011: 329.

⁵⁹⁵⁹ Frankel, 2001: 13-14.

⁵⁹⁶⁰ The New York Times, 24 January 1961: 6, 'Sharpeville findings inconclusive.'

Wessels found that the massacre was essentially an avoidable tragedy, the medical evidence showed that 70% of the sixty-nine killed and 186 injured were shot from the back, and just 15% (at most) of the injuries had been inflicted on the front, while only three policemen had been injured by stone-throwing, and that very slightly.⁵⁹⁶¹ If the crowd had been rushing towards the police, most injuries would have been to the front of victims' bodies. Even the Commission had to confirm that no more than 30% of the victims had been shot while facing towards the direction from which the bullets had been travelling.⁵⁹⁶²

Intimidation by the police was very effective in limiting testimony to the Wessels Commission. Black witnesses reported intimidating behaviour, having to share the “non-white” bathrooms with Black policemen who had been involved in the massacre, and being questioned very aggressively in Afrikaans, which many did not speak fluently. One witness, Petrus Mokoena, reported being advised by his friends to “play the fool” and give his evidence in a way that suggested that he was unintelligent. By playing into widespread assumptions about Blacks' inferior intelligence, it was easier for witnesses to survive the gruelling experience without police abuse.⁵⁹⁶³

This message was not lost on Black and Coloureds in South Africa, who knew that often the easiest way to escape a brutal punishment was to play into the prevailing prejudice of non-Whites as stupid. Years later, members of the police force who had been involved at the time recalled that they had not even had to use torture to make their point; all they had to do was circulate rumours among bereaved families and friends that anyone who testified was likely to be placed in custody as a “precautionary measure” and that anyone found to have “lied” to the inquiry would be locked up.⁵⁹⁶⁴

Likewise, cover-ups and intimidation reduced the Commission's access to information,⁵⁹⁶⁵ while the police felt completely free to lie, knowing they would never be punished. While practically every police witness stated that there had been no order to shoot, nobody admitted to being among the first, and while many of the victims near the fence had heard the order to shoot, all of the police insisted that they had heard no such thing.

⁵⁹⁶¹ Pogrand, 2000: 83.

⁵⁹⁶² Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 272.

⁵⁹⁶³ Franke, 2001: 194.

⁵⁹⁶⁴ Frankel, 2001: 194.

⁵⁹⁶⁵ Martin, 2007: 15.

Moreover, even though the victims' lawyers called on the testimony of many experts, the police had had ample opportunity to tamper with the evidence in the field immediately after the killings, allowing them "hegemony over what was concealed and what was discovered."⁵⁹⁶⁶

A Detective-Sergeant Fourie, whose job it was to collect forensic information, remembered years later that he had been told to leave the site by the security police and that it was much more important to find subversives and get them to confess than to focus on "scientific krap."⁵⁹⁶⁷ Captain Coetzee testified that he was sure that none of his men fired any shots. It was later proved that two constables under his command did shoot, but the Judge did not believe that Captain Coetzee "wilfully misled the Commission" and thought that he was simply unaware of this fact.⁵⁹⁶⁸

The Commission's Report, tabled in Parliament on January 23, 1961, came to no conclusions, declared no winners or losers, no guilty or innocent, no liars or witnesses to the truth, and certainly did not find the police responsible for what it termed the "tragedy" at Sharpeville. It simply related events as unfolded in evidence before the Commission, in line with Wessels' opinion that "it is not the duty of the Commission to report on the responsibility of people for their actions and omissions... the task of the Commission is simply to inform your Excellency of the incidents referred to in your terms of reference."⁵⁹⁶⁹ One who won praise from Judge Wessels for his hard work on the inquiry was the then Captain van den Bergh, the investigator who failed to discover who fired the first shots, who had shouted "shoot" and who covered up the illegal use of dum-dum bullets.⁵⁹⁷⁰

That the judge was not able to issue a report completely whitewashing the police can in large part be attributed to the swift response to the shooting by Bishop Ambrose Reeves who immediately afterwards arranged for lawyers to rush to the hospitals where the wounded

⁵⁹⁶⁶ Frankel, 2001: 197.

⁵⁹⁶⁷ Frankel, 2001: 197.

⁵⁹⁶⁸ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 169-170.

⁵⁹⁶⁹ Daily Dispatch, 24 January 1961: 1, 'No findings on Sharpeville'; The Cape Argus, 23 January 1961: 1, 'Sharpeville: no findings on responsibility'; The New York Times, 24 January 1961: 6, 'Sharpeville inquiry inconclusive.'

⁵⁹⁷⁰ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 10, 154.

were being kept under guard and to take their statements.⁵⁹⁷¹ Wessels' report recapitulated the police evidence in detail. Black witnesses, whose testimony was relatively scarce, were referred to only occasionally and without detail. White evidence tended to corroborate the police, especially in the case of those who were in detention when they appeared before the Commission, often as witnesses coached and prepared by the police's lawyers.⁵⁹⁷²

Judge Wessels suggested that the long duration of the shooting had been the result of different officers beginning to shoot at different times.⁵⁹⁷³ The use of "dum-dum" bullets, which caused horrifying exit wounds, was not addressed and, as stated above, the Commission lacked the testimony of many Black witnesses, while police lied, hid and fabricated evidence.⁵⁹⁷⁴ Major van Zyl and Colonel Pienaar lied when they told the Commission that no dum-dums had been used, but their word was accepted.⁵⁹⁷⁵ In addition, the police had removed bodies with evidence of dum-dum attacks, had lifted dum-dums from the field, and had removed surviving dum-dum victims from hospitals.⁵⁹⁷⁶ Local tradition maintained (although it remains unproven) that many corpses displaying evidence of dum-dums were dumped in the local dam.⁵⁹⁷⁷ The police conveniently had "lost" evidence about use of dum-dums, "misplaced" evidence on the ammunition rounds issued, used and not used. No experts on dum-dums were called. All in all, cover-up of the use of dum-dums was quite effective.⁵⁹⁷⁸

Ultimately, the Commission's report served to bolster the idea that while the events at Sharpeville were tragic, they did not result from government policy but from an unfortunate lapse in discipline.⁵⁹⁷⁹ Wessels used the term "tragic occurrences," with the clear implication that nobody was really to blame; he even suggested that perhaps the police's actions had resulted in fewer deaths than might otherwise have been the case.⁵⁹⁸⁰ There was no recognition of the fact that the police were the product of a society steeped in racial injustice and hatred.⁵⁹⁸¹ The whitewash created by the Commission resulted in a concerted effort to ⁵⁹⁷¹ Pogrand, 1990: 136.

⁵⁹⁷² Lodge, 2011: 328.

⁵⁹⁷³ Frankel, 2001: 192.

⁵⁹⁷⁴ Martin, 2007: 13.

⁵⁹⁷⁵ The Star, 13 April 1960: 1, 'Sharpeville Inquiry: Get evidence of some detainees, says judge.'

⁵⁹⁷⁶ Frankel, 2001: 147-148; 154-156; Martin, 2007: 14.

⁵⁹⁷⁷ Frankel, 2001: 148.

⁵⁹⁷⁸ Frankel, 2001: 147-148; 154-156.

⁵⁹⁷⁹ Sitze, 2013: 180-181

⁵⁹⁸⁰ Sitze, 2013: 180.

⁵⁹⁸¹ Frankel, 2001: 169-172.

silence anyone trying to tell the truth. As for Judge Wessels, he was rewarded for his services to apartheid with promotion to the post of Judge President of Natal, although he was only sixth in terms of seniority and had joined the Natal bench just a year earlier.⁵⁹⁸²

How seriously can we take the findings of the Commission? According to Professor of Law Adam Sitze, “the Commission of Inquiry was not a fact-finding device; it was a “whitewashing” machine” that it had been set up to present the government in the kindest light possible while attempting to give the impression of even-handedness.”⁵⁹⁸³ The Commission remained vague on most points and reached a “balanced” conclusion that found fault both with individual policemen and with the protestors. Afterwards, in the Senate, GJ Suttor stated that the report left him “no better off than he was” and that “The judge does not say that the police were right or that the police were wrong. He does not say the natives asked for it or they did not ask for it.”⁵⁹⁸⁴

In general, the report had a “paralyzing” effect on readers and the Commission’s findings, characterised a “mixed blessing”,⁵⁹⁸⁵ and even contributed to a conspiracy theory that the PAC had actually intended to provoke the police to commit a massacre for propaganda purposes.⁵⁹⁸⁶ Sitze pointed out that the Wessels Commission was specifically designed to quell investor concern in apartheid police tactics.⁵⁹⁸⁷

The “balanced” findings of the Wessels Commission could not be considered a faithful or loyal account of the events of Sharpeville as the Truth and Reconciliation Commission proved. The Commission’s failure to properly address the massacre contributed to both the whitewashing of the appalling attitudes and lack of preparedness that led to it, while creating the narrative that the government had deliberately conspired to kill a large number of people so as to teach the Blacks a lesson.⁵⁹⁸⁸ It was broadly successful in terms of silencing discussion, and a more complete picture of events would emerge only a full generation later as part of the work that was carried out by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Until that time, the “official” version created by the Wessels Commission was generally accepted, at least by Whites.

⁵⁹⁸² Rand Daily Mail, 19 January 1961: 9, ‘Sharpeville judge is tipped for Natal post.’

⁵⁹⁸³ Sitze, 2013: 157.

⁵⁹⁸⁴ Republic of South Africa, Debates of the Senate, 15 June 1961 col. 5342.

⁵⁹⁸⁵ Sitze, 2013: 180.

⁵⁹⁸⁶ Frankel, 2001: 179.

⁵⁹⁸⁷ Sitze, 2013: 187.

⁵⁹⁸⁸ Frankel, 2001: 119.

In 1985, Henry R. Pike, in History of Communism in South Africa, described the massacre as the result of mass hysteria among the inhabitants of Sharpeville, the result of the efforts of “professional agitators” and the victims as armed with “sticks, clubs, bottles, knives, iron pipes, assegais, pangas, needle swords and other weapons.” A similar account was published in The Police Station, a memoir by JPJ Coetzer, a senior official in the Department of Justice.⁵⁹⁸⁹ Without the Wessels Commission, such appalling untruths would not have been allowed to hold such weight.

According to Professor Frankel:

“A pliant (or partially pliant) commission which confirmed the vicious intent of the Sharpeville mob and presented police responses as a natural, if over-reactive, case of self-defence could connect very positively with the prevailing persecution mentality among white South Africans in the aftermath of the massacre — including many who would not, other than in these exceptional circumstances, lend their support to the Nationalist government ... Ultimately, a sympathetic commission — indeed any commission— was essential to smoothing the panic and fears of a vast array of international interests with stakes in a post-Sharpeville South Africa... The bland outcome of the Commission of Inquiry contributed to the culture of impunity that gained strength, exemplified by the ongoing desecration of the cemetery in Sharpeville by white supremacists and their collaborators among the police.”⁵⁹⁹⁰

It now seems more than clear that the primary function of the Commission of Inquiry was to give the world the impression that justice was served in South Africa. For a whole generation many commentators discussed the horrifying events as if they were indeed the no-fault tragedy the Commission claimed. Sadly, this is par for the course for investigations carried out while a conflict is still ongoing. Globally, it is typical for such investigations to come up with findings that are partisan, at best, and often outright propaganda.⁵⁹⁹¹

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission held hearings in the area in 1996, beginning with a series of testimonies about the Sharpeville Massacre. This was when the full truth (or as full a truth as can be obtained so many years after the event) began to emerge.⁵⁹⁹² The evidence presented to the TRC clearly showed that the police had actually deliberately fired on an unarmed crowd after failing to give them adequate warning to leave, and that ⁵⁹⁸⁹ Lodge, 2011: 330.

⁵⁹⁹⁰ Frankel, 2001: 13, 152.

⁵⁹⁹¹ Campbell, 2012: 262.

⁵⁹⁹² Lodge, 2011: 338.

excessive force was used, resulting in the large number of deaths among protestors mostly unaligned with any political pressure group, but simply opposed to the pass laws.

The TRC also found that many of the wounded were subsequently treated like criminals, placed under police guard in hospital and “released” into prison where many were detained for a long time before appearing in court and having the charges withdrawn – facts that did not make it into the commission’s report. Ultimately:

“The commission finds the former state and the minister of police directly responsible for the commission of gross human rights violations in that excessive force was unnecessarily used to stop a gathering of unarmed people. Police failed to give an order to disperse and/or adequate time to disperse, relied on live ammunition rather than alternative methods of crowd dispersal and fired in a sustained manner into the back of the crowd, resulting in the death of sixty-nine people and the injury of more than 300.”⁵⁹⁹³

The findings of the TRC were utterly contradictory of the Wessels Commission, essentially overruling everything the earlier document had stated. Jeremy Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who had seen the massacre at first hand, stated that while there were many accusations of police torture and brutality, they were invariably protected by the National Party from all charges. The Sharpeville Massacre was in a way the inevitable result of this degree of impunity, brutality having become standard practice.⁵⁹⁹⁴

The experience of the Commission of Inquiry after Sharpeville makes it abundantly clear that any results emanating from such state bodies were not to be taken seriously. Its work makes no sense until we examine it in the context of apartheid South Africa, and consider the many constraints it was under.⁵⁹⁹⁵ As in the case of the Commission that investigated the Broederbond, the Soweto uprising, the shootings at Langa (see below) and many other incidents, the real agenda was never to find out the truth, but to produce a series of outcomes showing the government in the best light possible while besmirching its detractors, and allowing its reign of terror to continue, while not dissuading actual or would-be investors in the South African economy. According to Benjamin Pogrund, the Rand Daily Mail journalist who witnessed the massacre, every time there were accusations of brutality and torture, the ⁵⁹⁹³ Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 1998: 537.

⁵⁹⁹⁴ Pogrund, 2000: 87.

⁵⁹⁹⁵ Frankel, 2001: 193.

Nationalists protected their police from all charges of wrongdoing, steadily, brutality came to be accepted as the standard modus operandi.⁵⁹⁹⁶

The Sharpeville experience is a prime example of how the various elements of the apartheid machine could come together and present a lie as truth and make people believe it. Government officials such as van Rhyen and Fourie, along with the police and the Commission, played significant roles in misrepresenting the horror of Sharpeville. The same three institutions performed precisely the same functions with Soweto in 1976 and the Langa shootings in 1984.

The Sharpeville Commission of Inquiry was not a fact-finding device but a “whitewashing” machine and it would have certainly been even more favourable towards the police if it was not for Bishop Reeves’s brave stance.⁵⁹⁹⁷ Some of the police methods used during the Sharpeville Inquiry, for example the misplacing and concealing of evidence, will also be used by the police in the van Wyk Commission. Judge van Wyk himself would also adopt a similar attitude with that of Judge Wessels with the witnesses, the evidence and his portrayal of events and Tsafendas’s character.

The findings of the two Commissions are identical in absolving the police of blame, misrepresenting the cases and the truth and producing results the government wanted, but they also shared another important common factor: H.J. van den Bergh. As a police captain in 1960, he was the Police Chief Investigator for the Sharpeville Commission, and in 1966, by then a General, he was in charge of the Tsafendas investigation which came before the van Wyk Commission. Finally, the Sharpeville Commission not only whitewashed the police, but created a template for further investigations. For instance, following the uprisings in Soweto in 1976, the so-called Cillié Commission was appointed to investigate the incidents, while the Kannemayer Commission took place following similar events in Langa in 1984.

⁵⁹⁹⁶ Poggrund, 2000: 87.

⁵⁹⁹⁷ Sitze, 2013: 157.

THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE RIOTS AT SOWETO AND ELSHEWHERE⁵⁹⁹⁸

The Soweto uprising was in reality a series of protests by students which began on the morning of 16 June 1976 but continued sporadically until early 1978, involving thousands of young people and resulting in hundreds of deaths. The spark was the imposition of Afrikaans, widely resented as the language of apartheid, to be the medium of instruction in schools, although it was known to few teachers and fewer students. On that mid-June morning, classes from numerous high schools in Soweto Township took to the streets, growing to an estimated 20,000 individuals. Police met them with fierce armed brutality, but the protests spread beyond Soweto to other townships and neighbourhoods, resulting in hundreds of school closures.⁵⁹⁹⁹

Throughout the many months of demonstrations, students chanted slogans against Vorster's government, two of which were dedicated to Tsafendas, already a prisoner for ten years. One chorus asked, Where are you now that we need you, Dimitri Tsafendas? It was an adaptation of the anti-Nixon chant during Watergate, *Where are you now that we need you, Harvey Oswald?*⁶⁰⁰⁰ The other slogan was Tsafendas Inyanga Yezizwe (Tsafendas healer of the nation).⁶⁰⁰¹

The heavy-handed police response led to ever larger and more violent riots and numerous student deaths. The initial government claim was that "only twenty-three students" were killed by police, but the true figure was between 600 and 700.⁶⁰⁰² John Kane-Berman, Chief Executive of South African Institute of Race Relations, arrived at a death toll of 661, based on figures compiled by the South African Institute of Race Relations (SAIRR). Twenty-three people were said to have died in Port Elizabeth, 153 in the Western Cape, and 442 in the Transvaal, of which Soweto accounted for between 350 and 400. There were also 43 other deaths due to unknown circumstances.⁶⁰⁰³ Eighty-nine of the dead in the West Rand ⁵⁹⁹⁸ For a very detailed account of the accuracy and charade of this Commission, see Pohlandt McCormick, H. (2000) "I Saw a Nightmare...": Violence and the Construction of Memory.

⁵⁹⁹⁹ Kane-Berman, 1978.

⁶⁰⁰⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁶⁰⁰¹ Martin, 25 October 2013, retrieved from:

http://www.christianmartin.co.za/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=93:request-to-declare-gravesites-of-hf-Dr.-Verwoerd-and-dimitri-tsafendas-as-historically-heritage-sites&catid=36:articles&Itemid=62;

Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

⁶⁰⁰² Brink et al, 2010: 9; Harrison, 1981: 143; Kane-Berman, 1978: 27-28; Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 25-28.

⁶⁰⁰³ Kane-Berman, 1978.

Area were under twenty years old, twelve below age eleven.⁶⁰⁰⁴ Many of the victims were children and adolescents, while at least 1,000 were injured. Only a handful of victims were White.⁶⁰⁰⁵

Shooting and killing schoolchildren caused international outrage and the Vorster government scrambled to cover its tracks. First, it sought to disparage the victims, hiding their ages and identities, disposing of bodies, belittling their actions and claiming deaths were fewer than they were. Officials spread misinformation as to the intentions of the protestors and gagged witnesses and any voices raised in their support.⁶⁰⁰⁶

Second, Vorster did exactly what Dr. Verwoerd did after Sharpeville, he appointed an investigating commission. Justice Petrus Cillie⁶⁰⁰⁷ was named chairman of the Commission of Inquiry into the Riots at Soweto and Elsewhere from the 16th of June 1976 to the 28th of February 1977. Leading evidence at the Inquiry to “investigate the incident,”⁶⁰⁰⁸ was Percy Yutar, supporter of apartheid and the government, and the prosecuting lawyer in the Rivonia Trial. This permitted the government to invent a version of the uprising which suited its purposes and have it published as an official Report. The way it dealt with allegations of police misconduct such as removing bodies, became the template for apartheid’s methods of rewriting the truth and thus the historical memory at Commissions of Inquiry.⁶⁰⁰⁹

The challenge facing the Cillie Commission was considerable: effectively it had to demonstrate that the authorities were justified in killing schoolchildren.⁶⁰¹⁰ Benjamin Pogrund attended all of the Commission’s hearings and openly criticised the Commission in the Rand Daily Mail: “while commissions can serve an invaluable purpose, there is need to guard against assassination of character and a great responsibility rests on those conducting the inquiry to protect uninvolved innocent people. This kind of erosion, we believe, has been manifesting itself this week in the Cillie Commission. A number of people have been named ⁶⁰⁰⁴ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 26.

⁶⁰⁰⁵ TIME, 28 June 1976: 12, ‘The Soweto uprising: A soul-cry of rage.’

⁶⁰⁰⁶ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 25-29.

⁶⁰⁰⁷ Justice Piet Cillie, a supporter of the apartheid government, was at the time Judge President of the Transvaal and had also served as Judge in the Prisons Trial. According to Lord Joel Joffe, Cillie “was elevated to the bench at a time when he had very limited legal experience, having by-passed the normal routine of long experience as an advocate and senior counsel” (Joffe, 2009: 142). Of course such a “by-passing” was standard practice under apartheid for loyal supporters of the regime.

⁶⁰⁰⁸ Pogrund, 2000: 276; TIME, 28 June 1976: 12, ‘The Soweto uprising: A soul-cry of rage.’

⁶⁰⁰⁹ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 29.

⁶⁰¹⁰ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 25-29.

by witnesses, sometimes in relation to specific events of last year, and at other times seemingly in a more passing way.

The witnesses concerned are current Terrorism Act detainees, freed only temporarily and in a formal sense from their incommunicado detention where they are wholly at the mercy of their captors. As their names are concealed by order of the commission, it is difficult to evaluate their testimony and anyone who considers himself injured certainly faces obstacles in seeking redress. The problem is aggravated because of the absence of normal court safeguards where evidence can be challenged by defence counsel. Thus the way could be opened to character assassination. That, of course, cannot be the commission's intention. But the situation must cause disquiet."⁶⁰¹¹ Pogrund later wrote that "at best, it was an inquiry into the obvious, and at worst an effort to find someone to blame – anyone except the government."⁶⁰¹²

Throughout the Soweto uprising and in the years after 1976, the government portrayed the students as a bunch of out-of-control extremists whose opposition to the Afrikaans language policy was short-sighted and irrational. This was the formula to which the Cillie Commission loyally adhered, reiterating the State's case that the police were blameless because it was the students who, for no good reason, attacked white people, government property and the forces of law and order.⁶⁰¹³

The Commission did acknowledge that the country's non-Whites may have had a reason for their anger. "Virtually all legislation regarding relations between races is separationist and seen by Blacks and Coloureds as unjust and discriminatory," the report said, adding that some blame attached to ordinary Whites as much as officials. "The manner in which so many whites treat blacks is of great importance," it said. "The objections do not end with the actions of officials or the police. Dissatisfaction is also caused by the action of ordinary citizens in everyday situations." The Commission emphasized the importance of communication between Blacks "and those whites concerned with the black wellbeing." The Commission listed the number of deaths as 575.⁶⁰¹⁴

However, insofar as events on the ground were concerned, the Commission generally followed the police's point of view, demonstrating an evident bias. Systematically, the ⁶⁰¹¹ Pogrund, 2000: 276-277.

⁶⁰¹² Pogrund, 2000: 276.

⁶⁰¹³ Nieftagodien, 2014: 20-21, 81.

⁶⁰¹⁴ The New York Times, 1 March 1980: 3, 'South African judge says racial justices caused Soweto riots.'

Commission misrepresented victims' ages, suppressed evidence, suggested that children had been engaged in violence that made it necessary to shoot them, and presented a false version of events. Stone-throwing children were represented as a serious threat to police officers' lives, making their deaths the result of a reasonable show of force in response. In fact, many had been shot in the back as they fled.⁶⁰¹⁵ Forensic evidence was twisted to present a distorted interpretation of how victims had been killed, suggesting that they had been bending over to pick up stones to throw when the evidence suggested that they were shot in the back.⁶⁰¹⁶

The Commission highlighted anything that might portray victims in a negative light (as the Sharpeville Commission did and as the van Wyk Commission would do extensively with Tsafendas). It stressed that some had been drinking (after doing blood alcohol tests on corpses), and claimed that traces of paint on bodies suggested that paint was used as an incendiary device. It manipulated evidence and intimidated witnesses, interrogated the parents of child victims, even obstructed some parents from locating their children's bodies. It strove to prove that the policemen's lives were endangered by the stones thrown by students and that it was only then that the police opened fire. This was a deliberate attempt to obscure the fact that the use of deadly force against students lacking deadly weapons was wholly inappropriate. Oral testimonies collected from many participants demonstrated how the police lied, but these were omitted by the Commission. These descriptions of the events of 16 June and publications based on them demonstrate vividly how the authorities subverted the truth and the Commission turned a blind eye to the fact.⁶⁰¹⁷

Ultimately, it was abundantly clear that the official explanation for the protests/riots, as "uncovered" by the Commission, was simply "an attempt by the apartheid state to exonerate itself of responsibility for its ill-conceived policies and the murderous intent of its security forces,"⁶⁰¹⁸ a "sham and a charade,"⁶⁰¹⁹ and "another inquiry into the obvious, and at worst an effort to blame anyone except from the government."⁶⁰²⁰ The official narrative may have been accepted by ardent apartheid supporters but few among the general public gave it any credence.⁶⁰²¹

⁶⁰¹⁵ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 29-34.

⁶⁰¹⁶ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 30.

⁶⁰¹⁷ Nieftagodien, 2014: 82.

⁶⁰¹⁸ Baines, 2007: 284.

⁶⁰¹⁹ Sitze, 2013: 182.

⁶⁰²⁰ Pogrand, 2000: 276.

⁶⁰²¹ Nieftagodien, 2014: 21.

One of the ironies of Soweto was the introduction of legislation to protect the police from any repercussions resulting from their actions in similar situations. In January 1977, Justice Minister James Krueger placed before Parliament an Indemnity Bill under which the State and its servants were indemnified against civil and criminal prosecutions of any kind for acts committed “in good faith with the intent of suppressing or terminating internal disorder.” Krueger told the Parliament, “Those who gave rise to the unrest, and had a part in it, and in the process were injured or suffered damages, cannot expect to load the police with defending unfounded claims.” The Bill became law in August 1977.⁶⁰²² Retrospectively, the violence in Soweto in 1976 was claimed as an important turning point in the anti-apartheid movement.⁶⁰²³

COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY ON THE LANGA SHOOTINGS⁶⁰²⁴

In 1984, violence broke out in impoverished black townships in the East Cape and Witwatersrand. It was met with strong police action, leading to a number of deaths, all of which occurred in the context of police harassment and assaults against both activists and ordinary black families. Considering funerals of victims to be important flashpoints for further violence, the government ordered that such proprieties should take place on workdays to minimise attendance.

When it became apparent that workers intended to leave work en masse to go to funerals, they were prohibited. When protestors in the township of Langa held a march in protest, they were confronted by the police, who opened fire. Twenty protestors were killed, and forty-three were injured. The Minister of Law and Order promptly claimed that the police had feared that their lives were in imminent danger. To international outrage, the government decided to appoint a Commission of Inquiry under Justice Kannemeyer.⁶⁰²⁵

As the Commission went to work, it quickly became apparent that the police were not prepared for crowd management and had been equipped only with weapons of lethal force. Survivors testified that they had been taunted by the police and that victims, including a ⁶⁰²² Amnesty International, 1978: 102.

⁶⁰²³ Pohlandt McCormick, 2000: 25-28.

⁶⁰²⁴ All the information regarding this Commission has been taken from Nicholas Haysom’s 1986 journal article The Langa Shootings and the Kannemeyer Commission of Enquiry. Haysom is at the time of writing the United Nations Secretary-General’s Special Representative and head of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, and in the past has held high-level positions with both the United Nations and the Government of the Republic of South Africa in the post-apartheid period.

⁶⁰²⁵ Haysom, 1986: 494-501.

fifteen-year-old boy, had been shot without provocation. The Commission stated that “one can only conclude that this failure to equip the police patrols was the result of a policy deliberately adopted.” It went on to state that “at what level this decision was taken, and who was responsible cannot be determined from the evidence heard by the Commission.” What it did not do was seek to discover who took the fateful decision, although the Commission had the power necessary to call for such evidence.⁶⁰²⁶

Justice Kannemeyer announced that he would not hear “background evidence” about conditions in the black townships, even though it included allegations of rape and other violent behaviour on the part of the authorities, and how the police reacted to violence in the townships. This decision meant that crucial information about black living conditions was disregarded and the Commission relied solely on the police to provide evidence on this important aspect of the flare-up. Thus allegations about police misbehaviour went unheard and were omitted from the Report while the Commission listened to police witnesses describing incidents of violence and property damage in the Uitenhage area.⁶⁰²⁷

One of the more sensational aspects of the Langa shootings was the claim by eye-witnesses that the police had placed stones among the bodies of those who had fallen in the shooting. Justice Kannemeyer, apparently unable to believe that the police could fabricate evidence, accepted their denials on this point. He argued, without supporting evidence, that the locals would have picked up the stones when they were confronted.⁶⁰²⁸

Finally, the Report criticised the decision to ban funerals, but did not find anyone responsible for the massacre. In general, the Commission tended to accept police testimony, including their contention (unsupported by the evidence) that stones had been thrown at them, causing them to fear for their lives and even concluding that some of the evidence given by the police was so “bizarre” that it must be true, as nobody would have made it up.⁶⁰²⁹

Nicholas Haysom described Kannemeyer’s approach to evidence as ad hoc and in places “extremely unsatisfactory.” He argued that the Commissioner found against the police only when this could not be avoided and that when required to choose between two versions of an incident, “he seemed to lack the courage to find against the police.” He said ⁶⁰²⁶ Haysom, 1986: 500-503.

⁶⁰²⁷ Haysom, 1986: 494-497

⁶⁰²⁸ Haysom, 1986: 506.

⁶⁰²⁹ Haysom, 1986: 505.

Kannemeyer seemed subconsciously to bring his own perception to what happened and how the police and the township residents acted.⁶⁰³⁰

The Sharpeville, Langa and Soweto Commissions concealed more than they uncovered.⁶⁰³¹ They were aspects of a judicial system that was, “the world’s most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds.”⁶⁰³² None of these Commissions could disguise what happened in Langa in 1984, or retrospectively Sharpeville in 1960 or Soweto in 1976. What they did was provide a convenient forum in which events could be presented in a way that was convenient to the government. This was the case not only for the three Commissions mentioned above but for quite a few set up during the apartheid years. It could be argued that the state compounded the physical violence originally directed at the victims by distorting and hiding evidence and misrepresenting incidents before the Commissions in an attempt to clear the government and police of blame. As we will see, the treatment of evidence at the Tsafendas Commission was perhaps the worst of all.

THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO THE BROEDERBOND

In 1958, when Dr. Verwoerd became Prime Minister, the Broederbond acquired new, extensive powers as he granted it “co-responsibility with the party to prepare the electorate” for nationalist policies.⁶⁰³³ Dr. Verwoerd’s government sought candidates for top government posts and through the secretive organisation the men running the army, government departments and important state-owned bodies such as the railways, many were Broederbond appointees.⁶⁰³⁴

A. Hertzog and N. Diederichs became members of his cabinet and they were both former Broederbond colleagues who had served on the organisation’s Executive Council.⁶⁰³⁵ In 1959, Dr. Verwoerd appointed Piet Meyer,⁶⁰³⁶ a close friend, as chairman of the South

⁶⁰³⁰ Haysom, 1986: 503-509.

⁶⁰³¹ Sitze, 2013: 311.

⁶⁰³² Turk, 1982: 146.

⁶⁰³³ Asmal et al, 1996: 153-154.

⁶⁰³⁴ Morris, 2004: 160.

⁶⁰³⁵ The New York Times, 27 November 1964: 11, ‘Dr. Verwoerd gets wider support.’

⁶⁰³⁶ Aside from Betsie, his wife, Meyer was the only one allowed to visit Dr. Verwoerd in hospital in 1960 when he was recovering from Pratt’s assault (Serfontein, 1978: 87). Mayer had served as propaganda chief of the OB (Moodie, 1975: 230) and was an influential Nationalist Party member who would later become head of the Broederbond (Grundy, 1973: 4). He was the chairman of the South African Broadcasting Corporation until 1980 (Booth, 1998: 38). In 1934, while touring on Germany, he met several Nazi officials, gone skiing with Rudolf Hess, Hitler’s Chief of Staff (Furlong, 1991: 80) in order to see Hitler up close (Furlong, 2010: 70). A fanatical Nazi, he named his son Izan, Nazi spelled backward (Booth, 1998: 38; Frye, 1970: 100).

African Broadcasting Corporation.⁶⁰³⁷ Meyer was a fanatical Nazi and a member of the Broederbond and later became head of that organisation.⁶⁰³⁸ In 1964, the General Secretary of the Broederbond, Piet Koornhof, was also elected to government in a move that was seen as reflecting widespread acceptance of the Broederbond in government and of its hold over South African political life in general.⁶⁰³⁹

Before long, some members of parliament queried if the Broederbond was intimately involved in affairs of the state (no doubt knowing very well that this was the case) and Dr. Verwoerd was asked about his membership status. The United Party had identified the Broederbond as a potential weak point for the National Party and would not cease to demand an investigation in the hope that it would weaken them and strengthen the opposition.⁶⁰⁴⁰ At the same time, a growing number of churchmen were also expressing reservations of the Broederbond.⁶⁰⁴¹

Feeling under political pressure, and perhaps horrified by Beyers Naudé's "treachery" (Naudé was the son of Jozua François Naudé, one of the founders of the Broederbond and its first chairman),⁶⁰⁴² Dr. Verwoerd announced the appointment of a one-man Commission to inquire into the secret activities of the Broederbond, the Freemasons and the Sons of England. The inquiry, which was to be carried out by Justice D.H. Botha⁶⁰⁴³ of the Appellate Division, would be carried out secretly and would investigate if any of the above-named societies were guilty of:

Any form of subversion, treason or intrigue, directed at obtaining for itself domination of or unlawful influence over the people or the state, or any of its organs such as the central government, the provincial authorities or the administration of justice;

Anything which might weaken the determination and will of the people of South Africa in the fight for their survival;

The acquisition of funds from hostile sources, of the use of its own funds, for the financing of subversive action against the Authority of the State, or of any threats to the security, peace

⁶⁰³⁷ Booth, 1998: 38.

⁶⁰³⁸ Grundy, 1973: 4.

⁶⁰³⁹ The New York Times, 27 November 1964: 11, 'Dr. Verwoerd gets wider support.'

⁶⁰⁴⁰ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 321.

⁶⁰⁴¹ The New York Times, 30 April 1963: 10, 'Ministers oppose secret group.'

⁶⁰⁴² Harrison, 1981: 89; (Soggot (The Guardian), 8 September 2004, 'The Rev. Beyers Naudé').

⁶⁰⁴³ The judge was not member of any secret organization (Wilkins and Strydom, 1978: 326).

and order of the people; or for the overthrow of the government by impermissible and undemocratic methods;

Nepotism or interference in appointments and promotions in the public service, the Defence Force, the police in such a way that people were appointed or promoted for reason other than merit;

Attempts to subvert the relations between the English and Afrikaans-speaking people with the object of bringing about strife and national discord, and undermining national unity;

Improper or objectionable activities which harmed, prejudiced or undermined the rights, liberties or interests of persons or groups;

Subversion in any form of the morals, customs and way of life of the people of South Africa by circumventing or transgressing the country's laws, or by any other means;

Become a serious danger to the peace and order in the body politic by exerting influence in an impermissible manner in the economic and cultural spheres;

Attempts to dominate the Prime Minister, Ministers, Administrators or any other persons in authority in an effort to use him or them in service of an organization such a manner that, as far as the performance of his or their official duties was concerned, loyalty was in the first place shown to other organization and not to the state.⁶⁰⁴⁴

There were some objections from the opposition and from elements in the press about the fact that the Commission would carry out its work in secret. The Rand Daily Mail queried Dr. Verwoerd's assertion that no crime had been committed when one of the main points of the inquiry was to consider the use of funds obtained from "hostile sources" and "subversive activities."⁶⁰⁴⁵ On June 19, 1964, the well-known apartheid critic Stanley Uys pointed out in the Sunday Times that the Commission had been set up by Dr. Verwoerd to investigate the potential criminal acts of an organisation of which he himself was a member and that this was a very clear conflict of interest.⁶⁰⁴⁶

When the Inquiry was first mooted, Dr. Verwoerd had had to deal with complaints from the Broederbond, as there were many things they did not want brought to light. Prior to the Commission, Dr. Verwoerd had guaranteed to Broederbonder Meyer that the Commission would not look into anything that might cause the organisation problems, after which Meyer reassured the Broederbond that they could trust Dr. Verwoerd.⁶⁰⁴⁷ They were indeed reassured. Dr. Verwoerd was greatly indebted to the Broederbond for the work that they had done towards passing the referendum that saw South Africa become a republic (discussed below) and he knew it.⁶⁰⁴⁸

⁶⁰⁴⁴ Serfontein, 1978: 87; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 321.

⁶⁰⁴⁵ Serfontein, 1978: 94.

⁶⁰⁴⁶ Serfontein, 1978: 95.

The Broederbond reacted bullishly, stating that they welcomed the investigation and were prepared and delighted to give evidence. They stated their pleasure that two other organisations were also going to be investigated.⁶⁰⁴⁹ The Broederbond cooperated and made all its information completely available. Judge Botha was given full access to the organization's minutes, newsletters, study material, etc., where these were relevant, as well as its membership lists.⁶⁰⁵⁰

However, in a circular to its members, the Broederbond told them that the investigation resulted from an attempt by their enemies to take away the power of the Afrikaner people. Members were instructed that they should not reveal their names to the Commission without permission from their leaders, and that the leaders would do likewise. They were also told to have faith in Dr. Verwoerd, with the assertion that he would never do anything to damage the organisation; certainly a barely-encoded message that Dr. Verwoerd would ensure that nothing unflattering came to light. Dr. Verwoerd knew that the investigation had to go well, from the Broederbond's point of view. He owed them an enormous debt in the role that they had played in persuading their members to vote for a republic, and in securing him a successful political career.⁶⁰⁵¹

The Commissioner simply did not look at a great deal of the material that was relevant to the project, including speeches that stirred up sentiment against English-speaking South Africans, and it chose never to explore the comments made by Hertzog in 1935 that condemned the Broederbond's machinations and how it had infiltrated the education system; a significant blind spot. Unsurprisingly, on March 1965, the commission reported that the Broederbond and the other two organizations were innocent of any of the above

⁶⁰⁴⁷ Serfontein, 1978: 96-97.

⁶⁰⁴⁸ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 323.

⁶⁰⁴⁹ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 321-322.

⁶⁰⁵⁰ Pelzer, 1979: 87-88.

⁶⁰⁵¹ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 321-324.

accusations,⁶⁰⁵² despite the fact that the tentacles of the Broederbond stretched into every aspect of the state apparatus.⁶⁰⁵³

The fact that Dr. Verwoerd had elevated many Broederbonders to government positions was ignored. Judge Botha reported that he could reveal little of what he had learned because he had been given all the information in confidence and the public was supposed to simply accept this. Moreover, the investigation was carried out in secret (the first such case in the history of South Africa), and was allowed to present unsubstantiated findings. Moreover, Dr. Verwoerd had ensured that the remit of the investigation did not include a clause that had been mooted originally, to cover groups “which may interfere in politics secretly.” Had this inclusion been left in, it would have been very difficult for the investigation not to rule against the Broederbond.⁶⁰⁵⁴

The judge presented his conclusion that the Broederbond was certainly innocent of any of the “irregular” activities of which it had been accused. More than that, his conclusion even commented very positively on much of its work,⁶⁰⁵⁵ claiming among other things that “through its resistance to communism and other ideologies inimical to the nation, the Bond has already done much to steel the will of the people to fight for its survival with all the means at its disposal.”⁶⁰⁵⁶

Furthermore, paragraph 41 of his report states:

“I believe that it is unnecessary for the purposes of this report to outline here the achievements of the Bond, as it is clear from the documents submitted. The Bond itself does not boast in it. It is sufficient, I think, to state that the achievement of the Bond, in the relatively short span of its existence, is impressive, especially in certain areas, such as bringing together or uniting Afrikaners, the Afrikaans language, culture and traditions, the Afrikaners’ part in the national economy and the business world, and the promotion of good relations between whites and the non-white groups in South Africa. A well-founded dynamic organization like the Bond, who in its 14 study groups or task forces has the finest experts in various fields, in a favourable environment, could hardly have been expected otherwise.”⁶⁰⁵⁷

⁶⁰⁵² Ngcokavane, 1989: 122.

⁶⁰⁵³ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 331.

⁶⁰⁵⁴ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 331.

⁶⁰⁵⁵ Pelzer, 1979: 89.

⁶⁰⁵⁶ Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Secret Organization, 1965: p. 7.

⁶⁰⁵⁷ Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Secret Organisations, 1965: p. 5.

After the findings were presented, Judge Botha thanked JPJ Coetzer, who had led the evidence before the Commission, and CM Van Niekerk, the secretary of the Commission, for all the hard work they had done towards completing the inquiry. Some years later, the two men would go to serve as, respectively, Secretary and Undersecretary of Justice, and as members of the Broederbond.⁶⁰⁵⁸

The Commission had given Dr. Verwoerd the result he needed, because the bottom line was that it was there to serve the government, and not the people, even if that meant misrepresenting reality. Only three years later, in 1968, Piet Meyer, Chairman of the Broadcasting Corporation, personally appointed to this position by his close personal friend Hendrick Verwoerd, and vice chairman of the Broederbond's Executive Council, confirmed that the organisation had been intimately involved with the government under Dr. Verwoerd, stating: "... because of our active participation in the realization of our republican ideal, the Afrikaner Broederbond aligned itself closer in practice with the national organising of the political struggle ..."⁶⁰⁵⁹

The Commission, ignoring all the evidence (in particular the fact that Dr. Verwoerd had given government positions to many Broederbonders), provided the result the government wanted, and a template for future Commissions of Inquiry under the corrupt apartheid government.⁶⁰⁶⁰ In general, after the Commission of Inquiry, the Broederbond continued to grow and spread its influence, now secure in its knowledge that the National Party would never try to interfere. Why would it, when so many of its members were also Broederbonders? While the Broederbond's power to impact on decision-making at governmental level is well-known, its influence at grass-roots level, in communities, schools, agricultural bodies and local chapters of the National Party, was also considerable,⁶⁰⁶¹ and membership of the organisation grew enormously during Dr. Verwoerd's reigns as Minister for Native Affairs and Prime Minister.⁶⁰⁶²

⁶⁰⁵⁸ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 332.

⁶⁰⁵⁹ Serfontein, 1978: 87.

⁶⁰⁶⁰ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 324.

⁶⁰⁶¹ Serfontein, 1978: 188.

⁶⁰⁶² Pirie et al, 1980: 99.

After Dr. Verwoerd's death his successor, Balthazar Johannes Vorster,⁶⁰⁶³ would transform the organisation into a tool of the National Party.⁶⁰⁶⁴ Essentially, the Commission of Inquiry provided Dr. Verwoerd with an "invaluable smokescreen" behind which the government and the Broederbond could operate as before, immersed in "political intrigue and manipulation."⁶⁰⁶⁵

THE BOSS INQUIRY AND THE "INFORMATION SCANDAL"

In 1971, faced with pressure from the Press, the public and some eminent judges about the BOSS activities and extensive powers, Vorster appointed, as usual, a one-man Commission to inquire into all aspects of state security. The Commission was called Commission of Inquiry into Matters relating to the Security of the State, and the Judge who was appointed was Justice H. J. Potgieter.⁶⁰⁶⁶ Vorster said about it "I do this because it is of vital importance that the Republic should have the best machinery at its disposal to guarantee its security, and secondly to give all persons who have recently expressed misgivings or have launched attacks on BOSS and the legislation concerned the opportunity to lay their points of view and objections before the Commission."⁶⁰⁶⁷

The first part of the Commission's brief was belated and largely superfluous while the second was clearly a concession to the critics. In the event, the Potgieter Commission proved, like many such commissions, to have been merely a device for deflecting protest. Once it was appointed, the noisy objections tailed off, leaving General van den Bergh and BOSS free to carry on with their appointed tasks. In the end, the Potgieter Report found BOSS innocent of any illegalities and recommended that phone tapping and mail interception be authorised by legislation.⁶⁰⁶⁸ The Rand Daily Mail commented about the decision "It seems ironic that a Commission which was appointed to allay public anxieties that the powers of BOSS were too sweeping should in the end recommend that those powers be extended."⁶⁰⁶⁹

⁶⁰⁶³ (1915-1983) A lawyer and a pro-Nazi politician who was among the founders and generals of the Ossewabrandwag. For participation in the organisation, he was imprisoned for two years (1942-1944). He was a hardliner who supported apartheid with ruthlessness. In 1961 Dr. Verwoerd made him Minister of Justice. From 1966 he also filled the role of Minister of Police and Prisons. He became South Africa's Prime Minister after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination in 1966, remaining in the post until 1978. He served as President of South Africa from 1978 to 1979 (D'Oliveira, 1977). For more about Vorster: D'Oliveira, J. (1977) Vorster – the Man.

⁶⁰⁶⁴ Callinicos, 1995: 30.

⁶⁰⁶⁵ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 333.

⁶⁰⁶⁶ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 6, 12.

⁶⁰⁶⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 12-13.

⁶⁰⁶⁸ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 13-20.

⁶⁰⁶⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 8 February 1972.

Despite the supine record of the Commissions examined above, not all such bodies and not all judges were servile supporters of apartheid, and one in particular, Judge Anton Mostert, risked his career in the cause of truth. In 1978, just seven years after the BOSS Inquiry whitewash, Judge Mostert, the sole member of a Commission of Inquiry into exchange control regulations, discovered evidence of widespread government corruption at the Ministry of Information. It became known as the “Information Scandal,”⁶⁰⁷⁰ or more commonly “Muldergate,” after Information Minister Cornelius Mulder. Sensationally, Prime Minister John Vorster and General van den Bergh were named as being involved. What was not known was that two years earlier, in 1976, Vorster and van den Bergh ordered the destruction of all “unnecessary documentation” that would have disclose their involvement.⁶⁰⁷¹

Then, in 1977, these two, with the co-operation of Mulder, pressured L.S. Reynders, who was investigating the Department of Information, to produce a document declaring them innocent of any involvement in unconstitutional or illegal activities. Investigator Reynders’ findings duly offered Vorster, van den Bergh and Mulder the whitewash they wanted.⁶⁰⁷² Despite the fact that the newly elected Prime Minister, P.W. Botha tried to stop him, Judge Mostert proceeded with his inquiries and discovered the evidence. He said, “I have endeavoured to discover what particular interest of the state is furthered by suppression, albeit temporary, rather than disclosure of the evidence. I have been able to find none.”⁶⁰⁷³

Judge Mostert then disclosed the evidence, despite intense government pressure, at a Press conference. He said that Mulder’s Information Ministry, seeking ways of influencing public opinion in favour of apartheid, collaborated closely and covertly throughout the 1970s with van den Bergh’s BOSS, presumably with Vorster’s knowledge and agreement.⁶⁰⁷⁴ For making his disclosures public, Judge Mostert was dismissed and his Commission of Inquiry was disbanded.⁶⁰⁷⁵

As a result of the scandal, the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate the irregularities in the Department of Information. In June 1979, the Erasmus Commission issued three reports which implicated Vorster and Mulder in misleading ⁶⁰⁷⁰ For more about the scandal see: Rees, M., Day, C. (1980) Muldergate: The story of the info-scandal.; Rickard, C. (2012) Thank You, Judge Mostert!

⁶⁰⁷¹ Sanders, 1999: 62.

⁶⁰⁷² Pollack, 1981: 31.

⁶⁰⁷³ Smith, 1979: 43.

⁶⁰⁷⁴ Burns, 1980: 3; Hachten and Giffard, 1984: 243-244.

⁶⁰⁷⁵ The Globe and Mail, 6 April 1979: 6. Secret life of Pretoria.

Parliament about secret funding of The Citizen newspaper. It laid responsibility for extensive financial irregularities on Mulder and van den Bergh.⁶⁰⁷⁶ When L.S. Reynders was questioned by the Erasmus Commission, he said he had produced his “whitewash” under fierce pressure from van den Bergh. He said he feared that if he had opposed him, the general would “pulverize” him because “few people in this land realise what power van den Bergh possesses.”⁶⁰⁷⁷ Subsequently, van den Bergh was forced to resign and retire.⁶⁰⁷⁸

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE ROLE OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY DURING APARTHEID

As we have seen, the aforementioned Commissions and many more during apartheid were mere whitewashing machines whereby the government and police could avoid responsibility for their illegal or extrajudicial actions and secure results which the State desired. They were part of a judicial system that has been described as “the world’s most elaborate legal structure for the repression of political resistance of all kinds.”⁶⁰⁷⁹ The Sharpeville, Soweto and Langa investigations in particular demonstrate how right Professor John Dugard was when he spoke of the way judicial commissions “were manipulated, and also the way in which inquest inquiries were conducted and the magistrates just ignored the evidence.”⁶⁰⁸⁰ This was how the apartheid machine worked, hiding the truth from the world and presenting an account of history which suited its self-image. In essence, these so-called investigations hid more than they exposed.⁶⁰⁸¹

History has now consigned the above Commissions, Erasmus apart, to the dustbin. It is notable, however, that the Verwoerd Enquiry has never been seriously examined or questioned. Given the apartheid regime’s dismal record for truth-telling, state institutions’ unflinching instinct for secrecy and knowledge of the tokenist inquiries of the past, one would expect a questioning and sceptical approach to the Verwoerd Enquiry. Crucially, is the Commission’s portrayal of Tsafendas a truthful one and how accurate is its account of events surrounding Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination? Strangely, scholars and writers who are ⁶⁰⁷⁶ Leonard, 1983: 163.

⁶⁰⁷⁷ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, 1978: chap. 11, par. 385.

⁶⁰⁷⁸ Sanders, 2006: 64, 77, 161.

⁶⁰⁷⁹ Turk, 1982: 146.

⁶⁰⁸⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁶⁰⁸¹ Sitze, 2013: 311.

researching the relevant period and the assassination seem generally to accept the van Wyk Report without question.

However, as we will shortly see, the Dr. Verwoerd Commission was no more objective or honest than any of the inquiries mentioned above. Indeed, it is arguably worse than its predecessors in that it concealed important facts about Tsafendas so as to maintain the fiction that he was a mad outcast without any serious political interest who killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm. It went further than this, doing everything possible to belittle him in the eyes of the public so that no-one could think that Tsafendas was capable of committing a political crime.

INTRODUCTION TO THE COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY INTO DR. VERWOERD'S DEATH

On September 14, 1966, eight days after the killing, South Africa's new Prime Minister, John Vorster, announced in Parliament that a judicial investigation, a one-man Commission of Enquiry, would be launched immediately "into all aspects of the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd." The process would be led by Justice Jacques Theodore van Wyk, South Africa's representative at the World Court in The Hague. Vorster urged anyone with information about the matter, however trivial, to come forward and lay it before the Commission.⁶⁰⁸²

Back in Parliament eight days later, Vorster officially proclaimed the formation of a Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. The Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd.⁶⁰⁸³ He affirmed that Judge van Wyk, who was present in the Distinguished Visitor's Gallery for the occasion, would be the chairman and sole member of the Commission.⁶⁰⁸⁴ Since the Commission would be a judicial one, it would come under the authority of the Minister of Justice, Mr P.C. Pelser.⁶⁰⁸⁵

BACKGROUND ON JUDGE JACQUES THEODORE VAN WYK (1913-1975)

As we have seen, when the National Party came to power in 1948, a minority of judges were members of the Party. Most, however, were relatively independent, and many supported the old United Party. The new government decided to appoint judges who would support its goals, creating a legal system that was decidedly biased in favour of Afrikaners' interests and the apartheid state. One of them was Jacques Theodore van Wyk.⁶⁰⁸⁶

Jacques Theodore van Wyk, a native of Vanrhynsdorp, Western Cape, was an enthusiastic nationalist and supporter of apartheid.⁶⁰⁸⁷ As is evident from the following incident, he was also a racist. In the early 1950s there was just one Black member of the Cape Town Bar, a man called Ndhlovu. Because the Group Areas Act had just come into force, he was prohibited from taking chambers in Temple Chambers, as this was a building in a ⁶⁰⁸² The Cape Argus, 1 September 1966: 1, 'Judge will probe Dr. V's death'; Daily Dispatch, 15 September 1966: 1, 'Premier's killing full inquiry.' ???

⁶⁰⁸³ Government Notice, No. 1435, 23 September 1966.

⁶⁰⁸⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 22 September 1966, 'Killing inquiry to be secret.'

⁶⁰⁸⁵ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 22 September 1966, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry in camera.'

⁶⁰⁸⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Sachs, 1973: 257.

⁶⁰⁸⁷ Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/600000008317660124>

“white” area. On the occasions when Ndhlovu was present in the common room, van Wyk refused to enter it.⁶⁰⁸⁸

Professor John Dugard, who knew van Wyk well, had this to say about him:

“Van Wyk was a very austere, strict man. He took his professional duties very, very responsibly. So he would not speak to any of the advocates while we were in Calvinia, which is a small town. We were all staying in the same hotel. There was only one hotel. But all the top senior advocates from Cape Town then, you knew them all socially. But he said to me, ‘I do not want to be seen talking to any of these advocates because the local people will think that I am biased.’ So, for two weeks, van Wyk and I were virtually incommunicado. He didn’t speak to anyone else. He only spoke to me. We used to go for long walks in the country. So I know van Wyk very well. Professionally he was very austere, but politically van Wyk was very much a party person. He supported the National Party and was very much in favour of the government... he was, intellectually, one of the better judges. He and Beyers were intellectual giants, so to speak, amongst the National Party judges... they were certainly both political persons, and they owed their appointments to the government.”⁶⁰⁸⁹

Van Wyk represented the apartheid government in a number of high profile trials. In return for his service and loyalty, he was given a number of swift promotions. Aged just thirty-six, he was appointed KC in 1949, making him the youngest in South Africa to hold this position. He was promoted to Judge in October 1955.⁶⁰⁹⁰

One of van Wyk’s landmark achievements was representing the apartheid government in the Harris case in 1958⁶⁰⁹¹ concerning the removal of Coloured voters from the Electoral Roll.⁶⁰⁹² He was noted during proceedings to react viciously if any junior lawyers in the Cape Bar argued against the move. The voters’ attorney, Pilkington-Jordan, wrote to United Party leader J.G.N. Strauss that both Beyers and van Wyk had treated the court with “scant courtesy” and that they had been “thoroughly rude” to Graeme Duncan KC, the leader of the ⁶⁰⁸⁸ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 8-9.

⁶⁰⁸⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁶⁰⁹⁰ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 73; Francois Marais quoted in Geni.com. Retrieved from <https://www.geni.com/people/Jacques-Theodore-Van-Wyk/600000008317660124>

⁶⁰⁹¹ The issue of legal favouritism became particularly pressing during the 1950s, when there was a dispute about the government’s disenfranchisement of Coloured voters. In fact, this policy could ultimately be enacted because the government had appointed favoured judges to an enlarged Appellate Division. Among the new, partisan appointees were Beyers and van Wyk (Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016).

⁶⁰⁹² Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 8-9.

legal team representing the voters. He said: “They really are monkeys in dinner jackets and the sartorial elegance of that garb does not in the least conceal the barbarian beneath ...”⁶⁰⁹³ Separately, van Wyk also served as an advisor to the Rhodesians in their talks between their Prime Minister Ian Smith and British Prime Minister Harold Wilson.⁶⁰⁹⁴

Van Wyk was elevated to the Appellate Division in January 1962, and was rewarded for his services with a position in The Hague. There, between 1962 and 1966, he served as an ad hoc member of the International Court of Justice, hearing the Ethiopia and Liberia v. South Africa case when the former collectively claimed to have a mandate to control South West Africa.⁶⁰⁹⁵ His counterpart, representing both Ethiopia and Liberia, was Sir Louis Mbanefo, a Chief Justice from Nigeria.⁶⁰⁹⁶

South West Africa was a former German colony that had been captured by South Africa during the First World War, and administered by it following the war. After the Second World War, the area was supposed to come under the jurisdiction of the United Nations and to start the process of becoming independent. However, the then Prime Minister of South Africa, Jans Smuts, objected and stated the view that it should instead be absorbed into South Africa.⁶⁰⁹⁷ From 1949, Whites from South West Africa were represented in the South African parliament, and apartheid law was applied throughout the area. The case arose when the applicants to the court maintained that South Africa was engaging in discrimination, which ran counter to its obligation to “protect to the utmost” the well-being of the area’s residents, and also claimed that South Africa was legally bound by international law not to practice discrimination, which it claimed had been established as an international norm, citing the official, stated practice of the United Nations, among other international bodies.⁶⁰⁹⁸

Van Wyk roundly rejected the idea that any organ of the United Nations had the right to “bind a dissenting minority” to the decisions it took, and firmly stated that no body of the UN had any such competence, as well as his view that it should not pursue it in any application or interpretation of the relevant legal Article. Van Wyk stated, in a comment described a few years later as “depressing” and “disappointing” but “not unexpected” that: “Applicants’ contention involved the novel proposition that the organs of the United Nations ⁶⁰⁹³ Davis and le Roux, 2009: 25.

⁶⁰⁹⁴ Wood, 2012: 569-573.

⁶⁰⁹⁵ Wiechers, 1968: 408.

⁶⁰⁹⁶ International Court of Justice, 1962: 865.

⁶⁰⁹⁷ Higgins, 1970: 43.

⁶⁰⁹⁸ Higgins, 1970: 43-46.

possessed some sort of legislative competence whereby they could bind a dissenting minority. It is clear from the provisions of the Charter that no such competence exists ...⁶⁰⁹⁹ Essentially, his argument was that, for any UN ruling to be valid, every member would have to agree with it. Clearly, this view implied van Wyk's (and the South African government's) position that South Africa had the legal right to ignore any international ruling that it did not like about apartheid or any other internal matter. He stated that the applications to the court had not even tried to show any example of international practice that was consistent with the "alleged norm" and that they relied, instead, on statements rather than practice, and on criticism of South Africa.⁶¹⁰⁰

Judge van Wyk further argued that there was no proof that other states did not discriminate, that their official statements to the UN were not worth anything, and that in discriminating against its own citizens, South Africa was doing nothing wrong or indeed out of the ordinary. What is striking is that, while certainly he was correct in asserting that many other states practiced discrimination, South Africa was proud to do so, and had made said discrimination a matter of policy.⁶¹⁰¹

On July 16, 1966, the Court eventually ruled in South Africa's favour, dismissing the application of Ethiopia and Liberia on grounds that they had no specific legal right or interest in the performance of the Mandate for South West Africa. It was a triumph for van Wyk and apartheid, especially as Ethiopia and Liberia had attacked South Africa's apartheid policies in the hope that South Africa would be abandoned by the United Kingdom and the United States, and despite the fact that the United Nations did not endorse South Africa's racist policies, as the government had hoped.⁶¹⁰² Judge van Wyk's provocative manner of celebrating the Court's decision offended and angered many Africans. A number of African representatives at the United Nations decided they would celebrate Dr. Verwoerd's assassination in 1966, partly in response to the unseemly way in which van Wyk and the South African delegation had celebrated the rejection of Ethiopia's and Liberia's claim. Eventually, however, they decided against any kind of public demonstration.⁶¹⁰³

⁶⁰⁹⁹ Higgins, 1970: 43-46.

⁶¹⁰⁰ Higgins, 1970: 47.

⁶¹⁰¹ UN General Assembly, res n° 2154 (XXI), 17 November 1966. Available at <http://www.un.org/documents/ga/res/21/ares21.htm>

⁶¹⁰² Wiechers, 1968: 408-428.

⁶¹⁰³ Le Courrier d'Afrique, 9 September 1966: 2, 'A eleição do sucessor.'

The Tsafendas case was held in 1966, by which stage van Wyk had more than demonstrated his ability to support the National Party, and invariably come up with the judgement that it wanted. Beyers and van Wyk were appointed to oversee the case in a move that Professor Dugard interprets as the government taking care to ensure that the outcome would be in its favour: “I suspect that the government was very careful when it came to appointing judges to hear the Tsafendas case, and so that would explain why both Beyers and van Wyk were involved. They were certainly political persons and they owed their appointments to the government.”⁶¹⁰⁴

The Tsafendas case resolved to the government’s satisfaction, van Wyk continued to pass judgements that suited the State. For example, in 1970 he ordered a member of the opposition not to reveal the contents of a statement that had been banned from publication on the grounds that it contravened South Africa’s Official Secrets Act and could “prejudice State security.”⁶¹⁰⁵ Together with two other judges, in 1974 van Wyk also presided over a case taken against the prominent anti-apartheid writer André Brink, who had written a book that “offended” apartheid sensibilities. The court found the book, which was published in Afrikaans in 1973, objectionable on a number of grounds, with van Wyk stating that it was “undesirable” on “moral, political and religious” grounds. Brink’s book, Kennis van die Aand, which told the story of a Coloured actor who is in prison awaiting execution for the murder of his White lover, explicitly discussed sexual relations between people of diverse racial backgrounds in a contemporary (late 1960s/early 1970s) setting, was critical of the behaviour of South Africa’s security police, mentioned real-life incidents that had resulted from apartheid such as the Sharpeville Massacre, and described White South Africans as being cruel to Blacks.⁶¹⁰⁶

Van Wyk, who had stated in Die Transvaler that the book contravened South African law because it ridiculed the white section of the population,⁶¹⁰⁷ determined that the state had a clear interventionist role to play in keeping South African literature within the parameters that the racist state considered acceptable, arguing that the “likely readership” of the book was composed of people who were vulnerable to corruption by it.⁶¹⁰⁸ Whereas the other judges assessing the book were also in favour of banning it, van Wyk’s view that it should be ⁶¹⁰⁴ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

⁶¹⁰⁵ South China Morning Post, 25 February 1970: 20.

⁶¹⁰⁶ De Lange, 1997: 46.

⁶¹⁰⁷ De Lange, 1997: 48.

⁶¹⁰⁸ Allo, 2015: 289.

banned on all three of the criteria listed above was, in fact, a minority opinion. He stated that, although the book was fictional, it was written in such a realistic way that readers were likely to assume that it was based on fact.⁶¹⁰⁹ André Brink characterised van Wyk as an “arch-conservative, narrow-minded rightist with a number of axes to grind with liberals.”⁶¹¹⁰

In August 1973, van Wyk rose to the position of Judge President, replacing the newly retired Judge Beyers, and held this position until 11 November 1975. He died from cancer five days later.⁶¹¹¹ Of van Wyk, Dennis Davis, a High Court Judge in South Africa, and Michelle le Roux, an advocate of the High Court of South Africa, wrote: “Whereas Beyers was a man of pronounced personality and sometimes humanity, van Wyk possessed none of the latter. He did have a formidable intellect which was evenly matched by a parsimonious and mean-spirited view of the world, a true apartheid ideologue. Unlike Beyers he never showed an inch of compassion when confronted by the inhumane consequences of apartheid.”⁶¹¹²

THE PURPOSE OF THE COMMISSION

A Government Notice set out the Commission’s purpose in the following terms: “To enquire into and submit a report on all aspects relating to the death of the late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd which the said Commission deems to be in the public interest.”⁶¹¹³ Judge van Wyk stated that the Commission would investigate twenty-eight different aspects of the assassination, including:

- The history of Tsafendas.
- Tsafendas’s motives.
- Circumstances surrounding Tsafendas’s entry into South Africa.
- Tsafendas’s appointment as a messenger in the House of Assembly.
- Security arrangements in the Assembly.⁶¹¹⁴

⁶¹⁰⁹ De Lange, 1997: 48-9.

⁶¹¹⁰ Brink, 2009: 224.

⁶¹¹¹ Friedman and Gauntlett, 2013: 28, 77.

⁶¹¹² Davis and le Roux, 2009: 18.

⁶¹¹³ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁶¹¹⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 13 October 1966, ‘Murder of Dr. V-probe widens.’

THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION

The timeline of the various judicial proceedings following the assassination is as follows: September 26, 1966, the Commission begins preparatory work in Cape Town; October 17-20, 1966, Tsafendas's summary trial takes place at the Cape High Court; end November, 1966, the Commission concludes its work. Thus the Commission at times was interviewing witnesses who had already spoken to the police and in some cases had given evidence at the trial. In order to comply with its terms of reference, the Commission trawled far and wide for information about Demitrio Tsafendas.⁶¹¹⁵

A questionnaire was drawn up and given extensive publicity on Press and radio, and any individual with relevant information was requested to advise the authorities. Government departments, foreign embassies, banks and business houses were advised of the Enquiry's needs. As a result, the Commission received a large number of affidavits and numerous letters, as well as the statements made to the police by Tsafendas and by people who knew him, while all government departments declared their files open for inspection. One hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas, gave oral evidence before the Commission.⁶¹¹⁶

EVIDENCE GIVEN IN SECRET

On September 22, four days before the Commission began its work, Vorster announced that evidence would be presented behind closed doors because the case was too serious for all the evidence to be heard in public.⁶¹¹⁷ He declared that the integrity of Judge van Wyk was sufficient guarantee that the people of South Africa would hear the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.⁶¹¹⁸

On October 10, Judge van Wyk stated that it was his initiative that evidence be given in secret. Although he repeated Vorster's reasoning for the decision, he also offered a more credible sounding explanation. He said, "South Africa, more than other countries, has to see that nothing is done to prejudice the course of justice. It is not desirable that an inquiry of this kind should take place in public while criminal proceedings are pending. I did not think it is desirable to wait until after the completion of any criminal proceedings before starting this ⁶¹¹⁵ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁶¹¹⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁶¹¹⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 22 September 1966, 'Killing inquiry to be secret.'

⁶¹¹⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 22 September 1966, 'Killing inquiry to be secret'; The Canberra Times, 23 September 1966: 5, 'South Africa: Assassination Inquiry.'

inquiry. A lot of evidence may be stale by then. As a great deal of the Enquiry relates to security matters, I do not think it would be wise for these matters to be heard in public.”⁶¹¹⁹

This meant that the public would not hear what people said about Tsafendas, which was most convenient for Vorster and van den Bergh since by this time, as we have seen earlier, the police had heard from witnesses and discovered from other evidence that Tsafendas:

- was a passionate and committed Communist,
- a former dues-paying member of the South African Communist Party,
- had fought with Communists in the Greek Civil War,
- was a strong supporter of the independence of Mozambique and was arrested several times for his anti-colonial actions in Mozambique,
- was anti-apartheid, had joined the British anti-apartheid movement and had participated in anti-apartheid demonstrations in London. While in London, he had met such leading anti-apartheid activists as the Rev. Canon John Collins and Solly Sachs.
- considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and “Hitler’s best student.”
- was a political animal and “a fanatic on politics” who “seldom spoke of anything else”
- had described the “United Party and National Party officials and members as capitalistic roughs.”
- was reported more than a year before the assassination by two different men as a dangerous Communist,
- had been characterised by another party as the “biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”
- had engaged in distributing Communist propaganda both in South Africa and in Mozambique and was deported from Mozambique due to his Communist and anti-colonialist beliefs and activities.

More importantly, the key witness was Tsafendas himself, who would testify not once, but twice. Tsafendas had already told the police that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, anti-slavery and in sympathy with the people fighting racialism, that he was a former member of the South African Communist Party, that he considered Dr. Verwoerd not to be the real representative of all South Africans, that he wanted to see a government representing all the South African people, and most importantly that he was disgusted with Dr. Verwoerd's racial policies and had killed him in the hope that a change of policy would take place after his death. Tsafendas was not going to have the chance to say all these things at his summary trial, so clearly the state could not permit him to repeat them in front of the Press and public at the Enquiry, when he was supposedly mad and killed Dr. Verwoerd because of a tapeworm.

⁶¹¹⁹ The Sunday Tribune, 9 October 1966: 3, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Judge explains.’

Vorster would have been aware of all this information about Tsafendas since his closest associate, General van den Bergh, was in charge of the investigation. Vorster had already made a blunder when he declared just two weeks earlier that the police had no file on Tsafendas. As it turned out and was confirmed by the Commission, the police had four files on Tsafendas, one with his name on the Government's Stop List. Both men would have been desperate to conceal two elements in particular from Tsafendas's statements: first, the embarrassing revelation that he penetrated the security system for which they were responsible, and secondly that he was a Communist and anti-apartheid who demonstrated the existence of a dangerous opposition to the apartheid system. It would be much better for them and for apartheid if the assassin was a deluded lunatic rather than a political activist, particularly a Communist.

In addition, since the police investigation was still ongoing, Vorster and van den Bergh were not to know what else might be discovered and they could not leave this to chance. Better to control the information, releasing only what was convenient for them. As it turned out, the blocking of information proved crucial for Vorster and van den Bergh since new revelations from Tsafendas added to the picture of an intelligent political activist. They will discover that while in London he had associated with David Gardener, leading anti-apartheid activist and member of the Labour Party and the ANC representative there, Tennyson Xola Makiwane.⁶¹²⁰

More importantly, that just three days before the killing, Tsafendas had discussed with friends a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as being morally justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator who oppressed his people. The ANC contact and the assassination conversation were omitted from the Commission's Report and did not become known then or even later. Whatever evidence was given behind closed doors to the Commission was entirely beneficial to Vorster and van den Bergh.

⁶¹²⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

THE PRESS

On September 24, 1966, Judge van Wyk ordered all of South Africa's newspapers to submit to the Commission all of their "files of reports published on the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, as well as the names of the writers and sources of information."⁶¹²¹ Newspapers duly obliged, sending to the Commission everything they had published about Tsafendas and the assassination, including the names of article writers and their sources. Several news articles, plus documents listing requested names, were found at the NASA.

That the Commission had knowledge of all that was carried by the written Press is very important because van Wyk's Report omitted several important and accurate news reports, most importantly statements by people who knew Tsafendas but also references to his political activities. This issue will be discussed in detail later in this chapter.

THE REST OF THE COMMISSION'S WORK

The Commission sent questionnaires and letters to all government departments and parastatals, requesting details of any dealings they may have had with Tsafendas. Completed questionnaires and related documents started arriving at the Commission after September 27. On October 9, van Wyk said he was pleased with the responses.⁶¹²² The Commission received copies of evidence collected by the South African police, the PIDE and the British police, as well as witnesses' statements. It was given secret communications between South Africa's embassies and foreign governments, information from different government departments, reports by officials and embassies of foreign governments, and the documented judicial process, plus all records relating to Tsafendas's movements in foreign countries, including his various hospitalisations. Overall, the Commission conducted what was effectively a detailed forensic audit of the movements of files and folders between different government departments and officials.

⁶¹²¹ The Cape Times, 24 September 1966: 1, 'Press ordered to disclose facts'; Rand Daily Mail, 24 September 1966, 'Questions on Dr. V's death.'

⁶¹²² The Sunday Tribune, 9 October 1966: 3, 'Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Judge explains.'

MISSING STATEMENTS

According to the Commission's Report, "One hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission."⁶¹²³ However, only forty-one of these statements were found in the archives. According to the Commission's interview schedule and its Report, Tsafendas gave evidence twice, on October 25 and on November 11. Neither of these statements was found in the archives and nor were the Dictaphone recordings which were supposed to accompany them. The system was that the words on a Dictaphone recording would also be set down in written form. It was discovered that whenever a written statement was missing, the Dictaphone version was missing, too, thus setting aside that statements went missing through carelessness or mishandling.

Tsafendas's two statements to the Commission are not his only ones missing from the archives. As we saw in the Investigation chapter, his first statement to General van den Bergh is also missing. The content of the two statements to the Commission remains entirely unknown, although, as we will see, the Commission makes references to the way Tsafendas answered questions. However the references are extremely vague and no extracts are used.

The issue of missing evidence was also a factor in the police investigation, as we discussed earlier in chapter Four, and it is indisputable that several statements disappeared at some point from the archives, for example, Patrick O'Ryan's statement to the police. During his cross-examination at the summary trial, the Attorney-General read substantial parts of the statement he gave to the police on September 17.⁶¹²⁴

The interview schedule of the Commission was found at the archives. However, it is inaccurate as to the dates of when some of the interviews took place. For example, according to the schedule, Father Probst was down to give evidence on 19th October, but actually, according to the date on his statement, he testified on the 13th October. Gordon Winter was scheduled for 14th October, but according to the date on his statements, gave evidence on 6th and 12th October. In addition, some witnesses who were not listed in the schedule gave evidence to the Commission, such as N.D. Hartford of the Cape Argus. It is clear from the ⁶¹²³ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁶¹²⁴ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

Commission's Report that Hartford gave evidence at some point after Tsafendas's summary trial, but his name was not on the schedule.⁶¹²⁵ His statement was also not found in the archives.

Another example is Mogamat Isaacs, who gave evidence to the Commission on 21st October⁶¹²⁶ but is not listed on the schedule. It is clear that the interview schedule cannot be considered as a reliable source for the dates when the interviews took place, nor as a record of unlisted witnesses who also gave evidence. The issue of the missing statements and other evidence will be discussed in detail later in this chapter.

⁶¹²⁵ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

⁶¹²⁶ Mogamat Isaacs statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

THE COMMISSION'S HEARINGS

INTRODUCTION

The Commission began hearings behind closed doors on 5th October, 1966 in the Thomas Boydell Building in Cape Town,⁶¹²⁷ with Judge van Wyk setting out a proposed schedule. He said, "We hope to hear all evidence, with the exception of evidence from witnesses who may be called to give evidence at the summary trial of Tsafendas, by the end of the month. After the trial has ended, the Commission may call witnesses who gave evidence at the trial."⁶¹²⁸ Eventually, at least one of these witnesses, Patrick O'Ryan, would give evidence to the Commission presumably after the end of the trial, as there is no date on his statement. We will start the examination of these testimonies with the most important of them, that of Tsafendas's family. The various members gave evidence on October 21, 1966, just one day after Judge Beyers had delivered his verdict at Tsafendas's summary trial. Most of the family were interviewed together. This is their testimony:

REPORT REGARDING VISIT TO FAMILY MEMBERS OF DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS, PRETORIA, 21 OCTOBER 1966⁶¹²⁹

Nicolas Vlachopoulos

This person is married to a half-sister of Tsafendas and is the owner of Proclamation Hill Café, 600 Church Street West, Pretoria. Mr Vlachopoulos says that he had seen Tsafendas about two years ago. Whilst in Pretoria Tsafendas worked at Poole's and City Engineering. He stayed in about 20 places. Tsafendas never made any friends. A Bible and two medical books – one about stomach ulcers – belonging to Tsafendas was in Vlachopoulos' possession and these he had handed over to Lt. Strumpher of the SA Police.

According to Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas had visited him at the Café. He was always bankrupt because he always used all his money to buy food. He habitually ate a huge amount of food but never mentioned a tape worm. They never actually conversed with each other and ⁶¹²⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 5 October 1966: 1, 'Assassination probe begins.'

⁶¹²⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 13 October 1966, 'Murder of Dr. V-probe widens.'

⁶¹²⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

they never discussed politics. Tsafendas often disappeared for two or three days and then returned to the café where he would sit and read a newspaper for an hour or two, after which he would disappear again. He always had a Bible in his pocket.

The wife of Vlachopoulos also saw Tsafendas for the first time in Pretoria. She had never seen him before. The members of the so-called "Christians" sometimes fetched Tsafendas to attend their services. He sometimes went to Johannesburg for two or three days to do so. Tsafendas never went to the cinema. He claimed that he was religious and that it was forbidden by his religion.

Victor Tsafandakis

This person worked as a draughtsman at Iscor Steel Works in Pretoria. He was Tsafendas's half-brother. According to him, Tsafendas had lived in Johannesburg about 23 years ago. During 1963 his half-brother encountered him in Lourenço Marques when he went there with a cousin to discuss affairs with the step-mother. Victor went there to fetch his mother and took Tsafendas back (to Pretoria) at the same time. Tsafendas worked in Pretoria for about six months and then disappeared again.

When he arrived in Pretoria he stayed with Victor for about two days, but he did not want him there any longer as he was a "disturbing personality." Tsafendas would rise at five in the morning and then move around. Tsafendas never complained about anything. However he seemed to have problems with his stomach and that must have been because he always ate too much. He never mentioned a tapeworm. Tsafendas always walked around with a Bible in his hand.

Victor Tsafandakis said that on occasion he said to Tsafendas that South Africa was a wonderful country. Tsafendas agreed and said it was progressive. As far as Victor could recall, Tsafendas never commented when Victor said that integration was not a good thing. He was vague and could easily be contentious. Victor could not recall that Tsafendas ever complained about the government. However, he did complain that he had to work for too little money. It was obvious that Tsafendas worshipped his father. He also said that even if he was handed R1.000, he would spend it all on food. According to Victor, Tsafendas was looking for too much but had too little to give. He described him as "shrewd" and "peculiar."

Marika Tsafandakis (stepmother)

Mrs. Tsafandakis (wife of Victor Tsafandakis)

Mrs. Vlachopoulos

Mrs. Nissiotis

Victor Tsafandakis

These five people were interviewed together.

Tsafendas's stepmother said that Tsafendas could not speak Portuguese when he arrived in Lourenço Marques from Egypt as a six-year-old, and could speak only Greek. He was sent to a Portuguese school once he had learned the language. She had no knowledge of an Anglican Mission School in Lourenço Marques.

Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and sent to Middelburg because Portuguese children could only receive a proper education either there or in Swaziland. After he returned from Middelburg, he was again sent to a Portuguese school. He started working in a restaurant in 1933 or thereabouts. She remembered that he attended boxing lessons at night. Between the ages of 15 to 17 he worked in Lourenço Marques. Thereafter he worked for a British aircraft company. His stepmother had heard from someone else that he had developed appendicitis and was hospitalised during that period. Mrs Tsafandakis later went to South Africa for her children's schooling. She had heard that Demitrio had worked at a café, but that he only worked intermittently and that he had been sent back to Lourenço Marques around 1937 or 1938 after the Police had been summoned as he had been accused of being a Communist.

Tsafendas returned to South Africa in 1939 at which time he worked for British Mining Supplies. From around 1940 until 1963 none of the family saw anything of him. Tsafendas only wrote to them when he needed money. In 1963 someone phoned Mrs Tsafandakis from Lourenço Marques to tell her that Demitrio had asked her to intervene in bringing him back to his family. She had felt it to be her duty to do so as his father had died. After his stepmother had fetched him he had stayed with his family for a while and then hired a room. He refused to commit himself to any work. The family were of the opinion that he had returned because he thought that his father may have left a legacy. He searched all the cupboards for anything that belonged to his father. He remained in Pretoria for about 6 months, after which the family lost all contact with him.

Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tapeworm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria. According to his stepmother, Tsafendas only learned that he had coloured origins when he looked for work at the aircraft factory. He had grown up as one of her children. He was depressed after he had learned about this, but never said anything about it. The stepmother vehemently denied that she had arranged for him to be raped as he had claimed. Her brother had only arrived from Egypt in 1928. Mr Victor Tsafandakis thanked the Government and the police on behalf of his family for the way they had treated them.

COMMENTS ON VLACHOPOULOS'S TESTIMONY

According to Fotini Gavasiadis, Vlachopoulos's sister, who spent every day for nine months with him in Pretoria in 1963-1964, and to Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas's cousin who grew up with him in Egypt and Mozambique and was also in Pretoria in 1963-1964, Tsafendas always wanted to discuss politics, but the family were reluctant because they were afraid of the apartheid system. Tsafendas constantly criticised apartheid and everyone in the family kept telling him to "keep your mouth shut."⁶¹³⁰

Furthermore, according to both women, Vlachopoulos had a very good relationship with Tsafendas and was closer to him than any of his other in-laws. He went along with Marika and Victor to Lourenço Marques from Pretoria, keen to meet Tsafendas, of whom he had heard so much from his wife. He assumed he could not meet him in South Africa since he was a banned person. In Mozambique, it was Vlachopoulos who provided the money to bribe J.J. van den Berg, the responsible officer at the South African consulate, to ignore the fact that Tsafendas was on his government's Stop List. Upon their return to Pretoria, Vlachopoulos gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment and offered him work in his café.⁶¹³¹

According to Gavasiadis and Eendracht, Vlachopoulos often discussed politics with Tsafendas, as he sympathized with his radical ideas, but he never discussed such things in public and he continually urged him to following the same course.⁶¹³² Gavasiadis was aware ⁶¹³⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶¹³¹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶¹³² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

that her brother told the police that they never discussed politics. "He lied," she said and added:

"Everyone in the family did the same. They were all very afraid to admit that he was a Communist and against apartheid. Everyone knew Dimitri's political ideas ... after the assassination, Nick and the others in the family tried to distance themselves as much as possible from Dimitri. They just couldn't admit that Dimitri was a Communist and against apartheid. They all said we knew nothing about it. They were terrified, absolutely terrified. They did not know what would happen to them. My brother had helped him come to South Africa and was very close to him and he was more afraid than anyone. I have never seen him so scared in his life."⁶¹³³

Mary Eendracht's memory is also that Tsafendas's family was well aware of his political stance and that he often discussed it with them, especially Nick Vlachopoulos. She said:

"Everyone in the family said that they were not very close to him and knew nothing about his political ideas. They all said the same because they could not tell the police they knew he was a Communist and anti-apartheid and they had helped him to come to South Africa. Communists were persecuted at the time and they would have been in serious trouble if it had become known that they had helped someone they knew was a Communist to enter the country."⁶¹³⁴

Vlachopoulos stated that Tsafendas had "stayed in about 20 places" while in Pretoria. According to Tsafendas's half-sister Katerina Pnema, Gavasiadis and Eendracht this is entirely untrue.⁶¹³⁵ The rest of the family members would also testify to the Commission, as we will soon see, that Tsafendas "always had proper accommodation in Pretoria."⁶¹³⁶ Vlachopoulos was well aware of this as he was the one who had given Tsafendas a rent-free apartment. Vlachopoulos farther had previously given this apartment free to Antonis Bizos, ⁶¹³³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶¹³⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁶¹³⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹³⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

the father of Advocate George Bizos. Nick Vlachopoulos was a good friend of Antonis Bizos and Tsafendas was introduced to Antonis Bizos by him.⁶¹³⁷

According to Eendracht and Gavasiadis, Tsafendas did not just visit Vlachopoulos's café shop, but worked there voluntarily for almost nine months, another fact that Vlachopoulos hid from the police. Gavasiadis said "My brother was initially not very keen on having him there because he was told that he would start arguing with customers over politics, but he never argued with anyone as long as he was there." Tsafendas worked voluntarily at the café and he was so good at the job that Vlachopoulos offered him permanent employment with good wages, but Tsafendas refused because he felt obligated since he was given a rent-free apartment. He worked full-time at the café when he was unemployed, and part-time when he was at F.A. Poole Engineering.⁶¹³⁸

Gavasiadis said her brother's comment about Tsafendas not making friends was also a lie. She considered herself to have been a very good friend of Tsafendas and spent practically every day for nine months with him. They lived together for a few weeks and then they would often go to each other's apartments since they were in adjoining buildings, while they would often go out in the evenings. She believes that she was Tsafendas's best friend during the nine months he was in Pretoria. However he also had other friends to whom he introduced her. Gavasiadis also said her brother's claim that Tsafendas did not go to the cinema because it was forbidden by his religion was untrue. She could not understand why he said such a thing because he knew it was a lie. She said on the contrary, Tsafendas was a movie fan and went often to the cinema, with her and his half-sister Eleni, Vlachopoulos's wife.⁶¹³⁹

It is also a lie that his half-sister had seen him for the first time in Pretoria in 1963. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 in Lourenço Marques at a time when Tsafendas lived with the family. Furthermore, she was six when Tsafendas left South Africa and from 1939 to 1941, he had also lived with the family in Johannesburg. Tsafendas adored Helen as a baby and when she was older they corresponded regularly. Tsafendas would often send her gifts from overseas along with his letters. Vlachopoulos either lied about seeing him for the first ⁶¹³⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁶¹³⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶¹³⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

time, or he meant the first time she was an adult.⁶¹⁴⁰ Finally, it was Nick Vlachopoulos who Tsafendas named as his next of kin when he took up residency in E.R. Carney, Clair Wood.⁶¹⁴¹

COMMENTS ON VICTOR TSAFANDAKIS'S STATEMENT

According to Katerina Pnema, Victor's sister, and Irene and John Michaletos, his cousins, Tsafendas and her brother were exact opposites. Tsafendas's father had talked to Demitrio about politics and history as he was growing up, but he did not do the same with Victor. Tsafendas's mother, Marika, seeing that Tsafendas was becoming rebellious, frequently urged her husband not to bring up Victor the same way. However, Victor and Tsafendas had a good relationship and they wrote regularly to each other when Tsafendas was away.⁶¹⁴²

Pnema said Victor had volunteered to drive his mother in Lourenço Marques to meet Tsafendas, but he strongly opposed bribing van den Berg and threatened to return to South Africa without them. He was the most fearful of all the family after the assassination because he had brought Tsafendas back to South Africa in his car and he feared the police would find out about the bribe. He had even considered leaving South Africa and had a packed suitcase at the ready in case he had to leave suddenly.⁶¹⁴³

Tsafendas stayed in Victor's house but he left after Victor discovered to his horror that Tsafendas had a large amount of anti-apartheid and Communist literature in his suitcase. According to Gavasiadis, Pnema and Eendracht, Tsafendas left after he was asked to throw them away. The atmosphere in the house was tense over the suitcase, but also because of the bribery and Tsafendas's political outspokenness. Victor's wife did not know about the bribe, but she was terrified on account of the literature and Tsafendas's political ideas.⁶¹⁴⁴

Pnema, Gavasiadis and Eendracht dispute the claim that Tsafendas told Victor South Africa was a "progressive country." They said Tsafendas held exactly the opposite point of ⁶¹⁴⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

⁶¹⁴¹ Casper Andries Willemsse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁴² Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁴³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁴⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

view and that Victor lied. Elizabeth Groves, Tsafendas's landlady in Cape Town in 1966, agreed with the three women. She said Tsafendas had characterised Afrikaners to her as a "backward nation."⁶¹⁴⁵ According to the three women, fear made Victor lie about the things which he claimed Tsafendas said. They said Victor was often present when Tsafendas spoke against apartheid and he always pleaded with him to "not talk like this."⁶¹⁴⁶ Eendracht also said that when Tsafendas talked about politics, Victor always asked him to lower his voice.⁶¹⁴⁷

COMMENTS ON THE FAMILY'S COMMON STATEMENT

The most significant part of the above statement is that the family, including Marika, knew nothing of any tapeworm. This is highly important, because during the summary trial, it was stated that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since he was a small boy and that Marika was involved in an incident with it: "... he told me that a while back, when he was a little boy, about six feet of it came down. The doctor gave him something and six feet of it came down. He was sitting on a bucket. And then he fainted on the bucket, and his mother removed it and she destroyed it, and since then nothing has ever come down."⁶¹⁴⁸

Until the day she died, Marika denied any knowledge of a tapeworm. She confided to close family members that she was certain Tsafendas made it up to escape the death penalty. This was actually what the whole family thought, and they knew Tsafendas very well.⁶¹⁴⁹ Furthermore, the family stated clearly that Tsafendas was "definitely not insane" and this is what they all still believe. All the members of the family who knew him well always maintained among themselves that Tsafendas was pretending to be mad so as to escape the death penalty. None of them ever believed that he really thought he had a tapeworm or that he was insane.⁶¹⁵⁰ Gavasiadis and Eendracht also confirmed that the family did not disclose their knowledge of Tsafendas's political ideas and tried to distance themselves from him out of ⁶¹⁴⁵ Elizabeth Magdalena Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁴⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁴⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁶¹⁴⁸ Louise O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

⁶¹⁴⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁵⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

fear. Equally important is that none mentioned knowing that Tsafendas was banned from South Africa.⁶¹⁵¹

According to Katerina Pnema, her mother deliberately did not tell the police about Tsafendas's Communist and anti-apartheid ideology or that he had been a member of the South African Communist Party. She told the author:

“We all said the same thing [that] he never discussed politics with us ... how could she and us have told them that he was a Communist? That he was anti-apartheid? That he was anti-colonialist? That he called Dr. Verwoerd ‘bastard,’ and ‘Hitler’s student’ and ‘dictator? That he had been getting us into trouble because of politics since he was child? They [the police] would have said ‘Why did you bring him here then [to South Africa]? Why didn’t you report him to the police?’ They might have even thought that we had the same ideas as him.

Remember, these were very difficult times for anyone who was even suspected of being a Communist and anti-apartheid. The Communist Party was illegal at the time in South Africa ... my mother had not only known that he was a political animal, but she had helped him to come to South Africa. Can you imagine what would have happened to her and to us if they knew that we knew that he was Communist and anti-apartheid and we helped him to come to South Africa? My poor mother was so terrified that they might find out they had bribed this guy in the embassy in Lourenço Marques and that they would all go to jail. None of us told the police that he [Tsafendas] was a Communist and anti-apartheid. How could we have said such things then? They might have deported us all or even worse ... who knows what they could have done to us if they had found out that we knew. Even so, it took another twelve years before our application to reside permanently in South Africa was accepted. We had to hire lawyers and appeal several times. We spent a fortune ...”⁶¹⁵²

Marika in her family statement confirms that Tsafendas was treated as an equal member of the family and was even favoured over the other children when he was sent to South Africa for schooling, which is entirely true. This contradicts the picture Dr. Cooper gave of Tsafendas in the summary trial, where he claimed that he did not have a “normal family background.”⁶¹⁵³ Several witnesses, including Tsafendas himself, confirm Marika's

⁶¹⁵¹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

⁶¹⁵² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁵³ Dr. Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

statement that Tsafendas was “brought up as one of her children.”⁶¹⁵⁴ The fact that she travelled to Lourenço Marques to meet him is alone sufficient to render the picture developed at the summary trial and would also be developed by the Commission as a travesty.

Marika states that Tsafendas learned about her not being his biological mother when he worked at the aircraft factory. This was in 1935, when Tsafendas was aged seventeen, not a child as implied at the summary trial. His reaction, one of depression then silence, would fit the reaction of an adult to such news. Marika’s account about how he found out is compatible with what Tsafendas told some witnesses.

Tsafendas claimed in one of his police statements that his step-mother asked her brother to rape him when he was nine.⁶¹⁵⁵ In 1946, in Grafton State Hospital in the United States, he spoke extensively about his sexual life and past sexual “traumas,” all of which he invented, but he did not mention the alleged rape.⁶¹⁵⁶ Tsafendas brought the rape story up with Dr. Cooper when he examined him for the defence at the summary trial. The author is not in position to know if such a rape occurred. What is almost impossible to believe is that his step-mother asked her brother to do such a thing and that Tsafendas really believed it happened. He spoke negatively about his relationship with his step-mother to various psychiatrists, but never to anyone else. On the contrary, he often described how loving she was and how she treated him as her own child.⁶¹⁵⁷ Tsafendas never spoke about the alleged childhood rape to anyone else but given the seriousness of such a claim and perhaps the embarrassment attaching to it, it was probably natural that he did not do so, always assuming it really happened.

Later in life, Tsafendas said two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- a. To have a family history of insanity and
- b. To have a childhood trauma.⁶¹⁵⁸

⁶¹⁵⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁶¹⁵⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

⁶¹⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

⁶¹⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

The above would explain why Tsafendas said negative things about his step-mother to the psychiatrists, but not to anyone else. It is very possible that Tsafendas made the rape claim to the police because he knew he might need to pretend madness to avoid torture or worse as a consequence of killing Dr. Verwoerd. If a mad act became necessary, having a childhood trauma in his past would add authenticity. The fact that he had talked about sexual traumas at the Grafton State Hospital back in 1946 would further strengthen his claim. However, the author has not been able to establish for a fact why Tsafendas made a claim of rape or whether such an incident ever occurred.

The family also testified that Tsafendas “only wrote to them when he needed money.” However, according to Katerina Pnema, this is not true. She told the author that as far as she could remember, Tsafendas never asked for any money. On the contrary, his father, who was concerned for Demetri’s welfare abroad, regularly asked in letters if he needed money or any other help. Pnema believes that the family made the money reference to highlight the fact that Tsafendas was overseas writing letters and thus did not have a close relationship with them. Pnema said Tsafendas regularly corresponded with her father and her sister Eleni and he often sent presents for everyone in the family, including his step-mother.⁶¹⁵⁹ Some of these gifts are still in the family’s possession. Mary Eendracht, also strongly denies that Tsafendas wrote to the family asking for money and confirms that he often sent presents along with his letters from overseas.⁶¹⁶⁰

According to the family, Tsafendas “refused to commit himself to any work.” This is entirely untrue. Tsafendas worked over the Christmas-New Year period, December 9, 1963 to February 3, 1964, for City Engineering and Carron Limited,⁶¹⁶¹ and from February 7, 1964, to July 10, 1964 for F.A. Poole Engineering.⁶¹⁶² In addition, throughout this period, in his spare time, he worked voluntarily at Nicolas Vlachopoulos’s café.⁶¹⁶³

On the question of Tsafendas’s return to South Africa, the opinion of some family members was that he had done so because he believed his father would have left him a legacy. They testified that he “searched all the cupboards for anything that belonged to his ⁶¹⁵⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁶⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

⁶¹⁶¹ Report by D.G. Gallard of City Engineering and Carron Limited regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the Commission of Enquiry, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

⁶¹⁶² Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

⁶¹⁶³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

father.” Marika Tsafantakis gave quite a different reason for her stepson’s repatriation when she was questioned by the police on September 7. She then said: “When he returned [to Mozambique] during 1963 he told me that he wanted to settle down and he wanted me to help him. I then caused him to come to South Africa and he subsequently got permanent residence in the Republic.”⁶¹⁶⁴ According to family members who were interviewed by the author, namely Katerina Pnefma (half-sister), Fotini Gavasiadis (sister-in-law), Mary Eendracht (first cousin) and John and Antony Michaletos (first cousins), what Marika told the police on September 7 was the truth, that Tsafendas returned because he wanted to settle down, not because he thought his father had left him a legacy. He knew his father was not a wealthy man and he could not have expected to receive anything substantial.⁶¹⁶⁵

Tsafendas did ask if his father had left him anything and did indeed search the cupboards for anything that belonged to his father. However, according to all these family members, he was not looking for money or valuables but for personal belongings of his father. He worshipped Michalis and wanted to keep items, such as hats and books that he had sent to him from Europe. Michalis Tsafantakis had an extensive collection of anarchist and revolutionary literature and Tsafendas wanted to take it, not for sale, but to ensure its safekeeping. He knew how much the books meant to his father and he was well aware of how they had been a constant source of friction with Marika, who did not share his political ideas. Marika had already destroyed most of Michalis’s literary hoard because she did not want her grandchildren to find it, but also because she saw no value in such books. Tsafendas searched diligently for any volumes she may have missed and kept safely whatever he found. Before he left South Africa for Rhodesia in 1964, he gave all the literature to Nick Vlachopoulos for safekeeping, telling him to “look after it like it is his own eyes.”⁶¹⁶⁶

⁶¹⁶⁴ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁶⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

⁶¹⁶⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

SYDNEY WILLIAM WIEHAND⁶¹⁶⁷

INTRODUCTION

The following is significant testimony because Sydney Wiehand was one of the messengers who interviewed Tsafendas for employment at Parliament. He described in detail how Tsafendas was appointed. Questioned by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk, Wiehand stated that he was a senior, permanent messenger and had worked in Parliament for eight years. He said his work consisted of supervising, looking after stores and handling complaints. If he received a complaint, he would take it to his superior, the chief messenger, Mr Burger, who would act on it. Wiehand said he made the rounds of Parliament once a day to ensure that everything was in order.

SYDNEY WIEHAND'S TESTIMONY

Evidence adduced on 5.10.1966

TERBLANCHE: Now, when people are appointed as messengers, or temporary messengers, have you anything to do with it?

WIEHAND: Yes well, we are called in, Sir, the three of us, to see what takes place.

TERBLANCHE: Now, who are "we"?

WIEHAND: We are also given a chance to question these people...

TERBLANCHE: Who are the "three"? You said the "three"?

WIEHAND: The three is Mr, Burger, the Chief Messenger, and the - well, I shouldn't say the "second in charge" but the third in charge is Mr. Schuin, and then myself.

TERBLANCHE: Who?

WIEHAND: S-c-h-u-i-n. And then myself, Sir. That is, the Chief Messenger and his three assistants.

TERBLANCHE: Now, the Chief Messenger - you've now named two assistants?

WIEHAND: Yes, because the other one is not there. He's sick.

⁶¹⁶⁷ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TERBLANCHE: I see, but usually the three of you?

WIEHAND: Usually it is the three of us, yes.

TERBLANCHE: But when this man Tsafendas was considered, and interviewed, it was only the three of you?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: The Chief Messenger, you yourself and Mr. Schuin.

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Why are you, the three assistants, called in by the Chief Messenger?

WIEHAND: That is, if anything happens. Who knows what happens to the Chief - if he's not there one day, that we can take his place. We know exactly what to do. The question is to ask.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, can you remember what questions were put to Tsafendas when he was interviewed?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

VAN WYK: Yes?

WIEHAND: No. I — he must be of sober habits. He must be always neat, and then also we ask him if he's got any sickness, or anything like that, then he must tell us. If so, then he must get a report from the doctor that he is fit for duty. Then we tell him: "The normal hours of working is long, but the work is not hard."

TERBLANCHE: Anything else asked from him?

WIEHAND: Well, then we ask him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: No, but what happened in the case of Tsafendas?

WIEHAND: When he came for an interview, he wasn't taken on straight away.

TERBLANCHE: But were you present when he was interviewed?

WIEHAND: Yes, yes.

TERBLANCHE: Well, what did you ask him then?

WIEHAND: Well, I asked him also about the other places where he had worked -

TERBLANCHE: You asked him where he worked?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And what did he tell you?

WIEHAND: He told me he worked in Durban at some firm there. He worked about eleven months there, or something to that effect.

TERBLANCHE: In Durban?

WIEHAND: In Durban somewhere.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, and what else?

WIEHAND: And he said it was because of a reduction of staff.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Because - of course, then we asked him if he had an unemployment card - Identity Card.

TERBLANCHE: And did he have an unemployment card?

WIEHAND: He had an unemployment card. He had an Identification Certificate, which number -

TERBLANCHE: What is an Identification Certificate?

WIEHAND: Well, it is almost like these papers when you haven't got your Identification Card yet.

TERBLANCHE: I see.

WIEHAND: We took that and compared it with the number on the - his Identity Number on the unemployment card. It corresponded, and then also if he had any references to show to us.

TERBLANCHE: And did he have any references?

WIEHAND: He had some references. There was one —

TERBLANCHE: What were these references?

WIEHAND: They were from different firms -

TERBLANCHE: Pardon?

WIEHAND: From different firms. One or two of them. I just can't remember how many, Sir

-

TERBLANCHE: One or two?

WIEHAND: Yes, and then he had one - I think it was from a school — where he went to school, somewhere in Natal or the Transvaal. I can't remember, Sir. There's such a lot that I see.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, are there any notes kept of these interviews?

WIEHAND: Well, no Sir. The only thing on our records that we keep is a sheet that we make cut with his name, his Identification Number, the date he starts to work, the date he ends -

TERBLANCHE: Is this the type of sheet you are referring to? (Sheet of particulars shown to witness).

WIEHAND: That's right. This is one yes, Sir.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Just identify that?

WIEHAND: This is the one I made out.

TERBLANCHE: What is the annexure number?

WIEHAND: Beg your pardon?

TERBLANCHE: Annexure 'D', page 24, Exhibit 'I'? Yes?

WIEHAND: And then speaking to him, Sir, he said to me he speaks twelve languages, six fluently and six broken, but I never asked him what the languages were. I think if you look underneath, on that form, Sir, you'll see I've made a note there.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, there is a note. It didn't occur to you to ask him what languages he could speak?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: If he had told you he could speak Russian, would that have made you suspicious?

WIEHAND: Well, then I would have asked him, perhaps. I don't know. The man hadn't any - I mean, the appearance that he had wasn't anything like that. But just out of curiosity, I think, I asked him if he spoke languages, or whether he told me - I can't remember that.

TERBLANCHE: Wasn't it slightly strange for a man who could speak so many languages to - ?

WIEHAND: I did. I commented on it, Sir. I said to him: "It is rather strange that you come here to work as a messenger, whereas you can get a better position as a translator somewhere else? He said to me - then he had - he was a translator, or something, in a Durban Court, or something.

TERBLANCHE: Yes? An interpreter?

WIEHAND: An interpreter, yes.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Then I said to him: "What is the good to come and work here? I mean, you can find a better position? He said, well, he can't find any work at the moment, and he must fill his stomach.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't it strike you as strange that a man of his age, and his ability, should be penniless?

WIEHAND: Well, Sir, the thing is - we get so many of them there, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: So many of what?

WIEHAND: These people. I mean, they've got good qualifications. Their ages count against them.

TERBLANCHE: What was that?

WIEHAND: Their ages count against them. I take it from myself, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: When I left my employment, I had to find new employment. I knew I wouldn't be able to -

TERBLANCHE: What are your qualifications?

WIEHAND: My qualification was - I was in charge of a cabinet workshop.

TERBLANCHE: A what?

WIEHAND: A cabinet workshop.

TERBLANCHE: And what are your educational qualifications?

WIEHAND: Well, I went to six, Sir, and then I went to seven, and then I went away and I came back, and I went to the next one higher up, but I don't I ever stayed to pass that -

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: Well, that was the end of my interview where he was concerned.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, you also had before you, at that time, or didn't you - Annexure "By page 22 of Exhibit "I" Unemployment Insurance?"

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, according to that - that is on page 22 - according to that he had been employed by the City of Cape Town, Electrical Department, from the 13th of September, 1965, to the 25th of October, 1965 - a little more than a month, and he'd been employed by "Marine Diamond Corporation" from the 3rd of February, '66, to the 30th of March, 1966. That's for about two months. Didn't that give you a feeling that this man was not, perhaps, a very good worker?

WIEHAND: Well, no Sir. I don't - no, Sir. Not that. We get quite a good few like that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Who has been from one job to the other?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir. And they turn out quite good.

TERBLANCHE: You realised that he was going from one job to another?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Did you ask him in what capacity he was employed by these firms?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. The only one about which he actually told me, was the one where he was an interpreter.

TERBLANCHE: At Durban?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And why did he say did he terminate his employment there?

WIEHAND: That I can't remember, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: And did anybody ask him anything about his employment in Cape Town?

WIEHAND: I'm not quite sure, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Did anybody ask him what his Nationality was?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Who asked him?

WIEHAND: I also asked him that one, and so did my Chief, and my other colleague.

TERBLANCHE: You all three - ?

WIEHAND: Yea.

TERBLANCHE: Why did you all three ask him?

WIEHAND: Well, I mean – we're all there. I take it for granted we've all got the same idea.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but did only one put the question?

WIEHAND: Well, one put the question, but I mean we would all like to put the same question. Everybody that was there, and he said he was a naturalised South African.

TERBLANCHE: And did he produce any proof that he was a naturalised South African?

WIEHAND: Well, we took it for granted that it was true, because of his identification.

TERBLANCHE: What was his identification?

WIEHAND: The slip that I've told you about, and when we took it and compared it with his unemployment card number.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't you know that foreigners also have identification cards?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Didn't you know that?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Not the one that he showed me - the one that he said he was waiting for his card to come. He applied for one.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but didn't you know that foreigners are also issued with identification cards - ?

WIEHAND: For coming into the country, Sir?

TERBLANCHE: No, no. And when they're here they get a "Persoonskaart" Didn't you know that?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Are you really qualified then to make these appointments, if you don't even know - ?

WIEHAND: Well, that is why we learn, Sir. We get trained for that.

TERBLANCHE: But how can you be trained, if you're not told that the fact that a person has an identification card is no proof that he is a South African?

WIEHAND: Well, Sir, in one instance we had one young fellow there. He was naturalised. He had his paper. I should say he had a form -

TERBLANCHE: Who was naturalised?

WIEHAND: Well, we had one young fellow there by the name of Barber, but he was a young boy.

TERBLANCHE: What is his name?

WIEHAND: Barber. I took it he should have had the same as that? (Just a minute, Sir. Just let me think). (Witness remains quiet for some seconds).

TERBLANCHE: Why are you taking such a long time? What are you trying to think about?

WIEHAND: No, Sir – the thing is this. He had some papers with him - quite a few. Now that I am thinking about Barber, I think he had a paper similar, to that –

TERBLANCHE: I'll show you another paper here, Mr. Wiehand. Annexure "A," page 21 of Exhibit "I"? Is that the paper you are referring to?

WIEHAND: I think it was something like this, Sir.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but you see, that is no proof that he is a South African. It merely proves that he's got an identification number.

WIEHAND: Yes well, I mean, the man was employed all over the show. I mean, in Cape Town also.

TERBLANCHE: So why couldn't he be a foreigner and employed in Cape Town?

WIEHAND: It could be, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Well, so you only had his word that he was a South African?

WIEHAND: He had the things that we asked for. We asked him if he was naturalised - whether he is a naturalised South African, so he said yes. And then we asked for the - TERBLANCHE: Why did you ask him whether he was naturalised? Why couldn't he have been born in South Africa?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. According to him - he said he came from Lourenço Marques.

TERBLANCHE: He said he came from Lourenço Marques.

WIEHAND: Yes, so then I asked him. He said, no, he was born in Lourenço Marques, but he was brought up in the Transvaal.

TERBLANCHE: And you asked him whether he was naturalised and he said yes?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And were any further enquiries made to find out whether he was actually naturalised?

WIEHAND: Not that I know of, Sir. It could be. Then it falls out of my hands -

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, the making of appointments is really not your concern. You are only present at the interview, in order to learn?

WIEHAND: That is right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, do you know that only South Africans - South African citizens - can be appointed as messengers, or temporary messengers? You know that?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, Mr. Wiehand, after his appointment - or rather, did you afterwards discuss this man between the three of you?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir. Not after his appointment! Before his appointment.

TERBLANCHE: I mean, after the interview?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: After he had gone, you three discussed him at length. What was the nature of this discussion that took place between you?

WIEHAND: Sir, we had to take into consideration the way he spoke, his mannerisms, how he dressed, and we couldn't find anything wrong. I mean, according to what we need there, for doing the work, and so forth, and coming into contact with the Members.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Were you ever required to make any check as to whether there was any security risk attached to a particular individual?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. We never had it before.

TERBLANCHE: You were never asked to make sure whether this man was not a security risk?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: You were never asked?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: And that you never discussed?

WIEHAND: We never discussed that, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: As long as he could do the work that he was employed for, that was all that you were concerned with?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Afterwards, did you come into contact with him again, whilst he was working there?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir when I go on the rounds, checking up each point, asking if there were any complaints, I used to come across him and I would ask him how was he doing, and he'd say, no, he was doing fine, and I asked him if he liked that type of work, and he said yes.

TERBLANCHE: And what impression did he make on you during all this time?

WIEHAND: Well, he was a quiet man. He wasn't the rough type, or anything like that. He was quiet - quietly spoken, well-mannered.

TERBLANCHE: Did he ever tell you anything about his previous history?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: Nothing?

WIEHAND: Nothing.

TERBLANCHE: He never told you about places he went to?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: Where he travelled - ?

WIEHAND: No, I never had the opportunity of speaking to him for so long.

TERBLANCHE: He never mentioned this during the interview -?

WIEHAND: Never. Nothing.

TERBLANCHE: So, that all you knew about him, really, was that he was born in Lourenço Marques?

WIEHAND: Yes, well that he told himself.

TERBLANCHE: That he grew up in the Transvaal, and you didn't know that he had ever left the country at all?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: As far as you were concerned, since he came to the Transvaal, when he was young, he had been in the Republic, ever since?

WIEHAND: Yes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you not ask him whether he had any previous convictions?

WIEHAND: No.

TERBLANCHE: You didn't ask him what he'd done in all his life? You didn't ask him what he'd done before he was an interpreter, and that sort of thing?

WIEHAND: No, I didn't ask him that.

TERBLANCHE: Nobody else did, either?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. My Chief may have asked him, afterwards.

TERBLANCHE: Did you have a messenger called Carroll - Houses of Parliament, "Carroll"?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Not as far as I can remember, Sir.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS

SYDNEY WILLIAM WIEHAND'S SECOND STATEMENT TO THE COMMISSION⁶¹⁶⁸

Evidence adduced on 13.10.1966

Sydney William Wiehand: (Duly Sworn, states): (recalled)⁶¹⁶⁹

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, you have already given evidence in this?

WIEHAND: Yes, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: Now, it is being alleged here in evidence before the Commission, that a certain complaint was made to you in regard to the way in which Tsafendas did his work as temporary messenger. Is that correct?

WIEHAND: No complaint that I can remember, unless the complaint is that - shall I have to say it in Afrikaans?

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes well, do?

WIEHAND: The complaint - well, I didn't treat that as a complaint. I was told that: "the man stuffs himself with food." It was: "stuffs himself with food, sits and sleeps."

TERBLANCHE: That was Mr. Pienaar, I think?

WIEHAND: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: And he asked you to remove him?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: He didn't ask you to remove him?

WIEHAND: He didn't. My reply was to him when he said that to me, was: "do not worry, I shall make sure that he is on his feet."

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Wiehand, why didn't you consider that as a complaint?

WIEHAND: Well, I mean there is quite a few of them at lunchtime - they have something to eat and they sit and sleep, until they are ready.

⁶¹⁶⁸ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁶¹⁶⁹ This is Venter's second statement to the COE, the first being on October 5.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where do they sit and sleep?

WIEHAND: Well, where they have there what's name - meal.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Aren't they on duty then?

WIEHAND: Well, they are actually on duty all the time. There's no off-duty there with us. They have their meals as they can, until such time as when the rush starts, and then they get busy.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And that's quite usual?

WIEHAND: That's quite usual. I myself, Sir, after I have something to eat, and it is not actually time for me to go upstairs, I shut my eyes there, Sir, because I've got to work every night.

TERBLANCHE: But then, what did you mean by saying that you'll see that "he's on his feet"?

WIEHAND: Well, see that he has work, by shifting him to a different position - in between the two positions - then he must work upstairs and he won't get time to sit down,

JUDGE VAN WYK: If he's doing something that is quite usual, and not objectionable, why do you then say you'll do something about it?

WIEHAND: Well, they didn't like it, perhaps, there Sir - or whatever it is. I don't know, but I said that he mustn't worry. I'll see that he gets on his feet, because maybe he is right in the public eye there, because they are right up there on the Gallery.

TERBLANCHE: Now, on the 6th of September, were you on duty in, or close, to the - ?

WIEHAND: The foyer?

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

WIEHAND: I was in the foyer, yes.

TERBLANCHE: You were in the foyer? And what were you doing in the foyer?

WIEHAND: My job is that I must guide the public, and also help the visitors.

TERBLANCHE: Help the visitors to do what?

WIEHAND: That they go in the right direction. That they do not follow their M.P.'s into the Chamber.

TERBLANCHE: So, you had to see that no unauthorised persons went into the Chamber?

WIEHAND: That's right, Sir,

TERBLANCHE: Where were you standing, Mr. Wiehand?

WIEHAND: I was standing at the one pillar near to the passage.

TERBLANCHE: And did you move from there to another?

WIEHAND: No, I stood there all the time. My back was towards the Chamber and my face was towards the big doors.

TERBLANCHE: Weren't you supposed to move up to the one side of the screen at a certain stage?

WIEHAND: I'll move when the bell stops ringing, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: When the bell stops ringing?

WIEHAND: Then before I move from there I'll ask for silence, and then I move to the walk in between the wall and the screen to stop any member from entering the Chamber while the Speaker's procession is coming along.

TERBLANCHE: But before you move there, do you watch the door to the Chamber to see that nobody - no unauthorised person enters?

WIEHAND: Well, now and again I look that way, Sir. If I see strange faces there, you always follow their movements.

TERBLANCHE: Now, I want to put this to you, Mr. Wiehand, if you had seen Tsafendas entering the Chamber at that stage, would you have done anything about it?

WIEHAND: No, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: I take it the reason being the same as the others have testified to, that any messenger can enter the Chamber at that time?

WIEHAND: That is right, Sir.

TERBLANCHE: And no check is kept on the messengers to see that they, are in fact, taking messages to members, etc.?

WIEHAND: No, Sir. Sometimes these messages are given at the last minute.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS EXCUSED

GORDON WINTER'S STATEMENT TO THE COMMISSION⁶¹⁷⁰

This is s statement by Gordon Winter, a reporter employed by POST newspapers in their offices at 14 Upper Darling Street, Cape Town.

I, Gordon Winter, swear on oath that the following statement by me is completely true:

Monday, September 26, 1966, I visited Mr. Omar Vallie, aged 65, at his cafe, "The Star Cafe" in Tennant Street, District Six, Cape Town. I asked Omar Vallie if he was the father of one Isak Vallie. Omar Vallie said he was the father of Isak. I asked Omar Vallie to direct me to Isak. Omar told me that Isak was working. I asked Omar to give a message to Isak. I asked Omar to tell Isak that I wished to speak to him. I gave Omar my telephone number at work (25601 Cape Town) and asked him to tell Isak to telephone me. Omar said he would do this.

Next day, on Tuesday, September 27, 1966, a man telephoned me. He said his name was Isak Vallie. I told him that I wished to interview him in connection with rumours which I had heard concerning Demetrio Tsafendas, the alleged assassin of Dr. Verwoerd. Isak told me that he would talk to me but not on the telephone. I asked Isak where he was speaking from. He said a shop in Upper Darling Street. I went to this shop and met Isak Vallie. I told him that I had heard a rumour that he had met a man named Tsafendas. I said I understood that Tsafendas had described himself as a Russian sailor (To Isak Vallie). Isak told me that this was true.

Isak then told me that Demitrio Tsafendas had entered his father's cafe in Tennant Street, at about 10:30 one morning about three or four weeks before the death of Dr. Verwoerd. Isak said he had been present when Tsafendas sat down in the cafe and was offered a cup of tea by his father (Mr. Omar Vallie.) Isak told me that Tsafendas had spoken of liking Indian food. Isak told me that Tsafendas had laboured this point and that he, Tsafendas had asked how the food was cooked. Isak told me that he was of the opinion, at the time, that Tsafendas was trying to "scrounge" free food.

⁶¹⁷⁰ Gordon Winter's statement to the COE, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

Isak told me that Tsafendas had said he was off a Russian ship and that he was from Russia. Isak said Tsafendas had spoken of living in Woodstock. Isak said Tsafendas had spoken of looking for a job. Isak said he was behind the service hatch at one point when he saw Tsafendas talking to a man named "Berny." Isak said he had later heard Tsafendas tell "Berny" that he, Tsafendas, had had "dealings" with Russian fishing vessels off the coast of Walvis Bay. I asked Isak how this subject had been broached. Isak said, and I quote him, "He volunteered the information that he had had dealings with the Russian ships. He (Tsafendas) said he had changed clothes for food." (I took it that he meant Tsafendas changed clothes for food with the Russian fishermen.)

I then asked Isak to introduce me to his father, Omar Vallie. Isak walked with me from the shop in Upper Darling Street, and took me to his father's cafe in Tennant Street. There, I asked Omar Vallie if he had met Tsafendas. Omar Vallie said he had done so. Omar Vallie confirmed exactly what his son Isak had told me with one exception. Omar Vallie told me that he had not heard Tsafendas talk about having dealings with Russian fishermen in Walvis Bay. At this point, a man who I was later to learn was Isak's brother, Sulaiman Vallie, entered the cafe. He was introduced to me. He then joined the conversation.

I then told Omar Vallie and his two sons, Isak and Sulaiman, that I intended publishing their story in POST. They said they did not want the story in POST. I persuaded them to let me publish the story when I explained that the Prime Minister had suggested that any person having information, however trivial, about Tsafendas, should come forward. Isak told me, in front of his brother Sulaiman and his father, Omar Vallie, that the family had not reported the matter to the police. Isak said: "No, we were scared of getting involved because my brother and I have had problems with the Security Branch in the past and we were afraid we might be suspected of being mixed up with Tsafendas...."

Isak then told me that Sulaiman had just finished serving a 12-month jail sentence in connection with the possession of explosives. Isak said Sulaiman had been released from jail in early August. Isak also said he had been involved with the Security Branch some time ago in connection with the smuggling of letters from prisoners on Robben Island. Isak said he had been questioned by Security Branch men who had also visited the shop where he works. I remember that Isak said something about the shop address being used as a "cover" address.

I asked Omar Vallie and Isak Vallie how they knew for sure that the man who came into their cafe was, in fact, Demetrio Tsafendas. The two men told me that they had recognised Tsafendas's photograph in the newspapers just after the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. They said they were quite positive about their identification of Tsafendas and that "Berny" had also identified Tsafendas. I asked if I could interview "Berny." Isak sent someone to look for "Berny" I gather, because shortly afterwards a little boy entered the cafe and spoke to Isak. Isak immediately told me that "Berny" was not at home. I dropped the idea of speaking to "Berny" because I was satisfied that Omar and Isak Vallie were telling me the truth. I could see no reason why they should be lying about meeting Tsafendas because they had already indicated that they did not want the matter publicised. I asked Mr. Omar Vallie to pose for a picture. He refused and I was unable to persuade him to pose. I asked Isak to pose and he refused. I finally persuaded him to pose and I took several pictures of him in the doorway of the cafe. In the background of my pictures the figure of his brother can be seen, (his face is clear and proves that he was present when I took the pictures.)

Isak does not know that his brother Sulaiman is also in the picture, I should imagine, so it would be interesting to see if he, Isak, admits that his brother Sulaiman was present when I took the photographs.) Omar Vallie was rather unhappy about me taking pictures but his son Isak talked him into letting me publish the pictures and my story. The old man (Omar) made it clear that he was worried in case the police were, "suspicious" about the family connection with Tsafendas. I pointed out that it was better for the family to admit knowing Tsafendas, rather than face the possibility, that Tsafendas might, conceivably, mention that he knew them (in court evidence). This point was made by me to influence the Vallie family into letting me publish their story. Isak grabbed at this and said to his father that it would "look bad" if Tsafendas stated in court that he knew the Vallie family. Omar Vallie agreed that if he was a policeman he would also be suspicious.

At about 3 p.m. Isak Vallie came into my office on the third floor of Qranje House, 14 Upper Darling Street. He asked me NOT to publish the article about his family having met Tsafendas... I immediately realised that the family were getting worried of possible repercussions. With this in mind I carefully read through my notes of my interview and asked Isak Vallie if they were correct. Isak confirmed that my notes were correct and he substantiated everything I had written. This is very important because two others were present in the office when I read my notes to Isak Vallie. The two men were; MR. MIKE NORTON, Cape Editor of POST and Mr. David ANDREWS, a freelance reporter, for POST.

I talked to Isak Vallie at length and persuaded him to let me publish the article. When he left the office I made a careful point of asking Mr. Norton and Mr. Andrews to remember that Isak had quite clearly confirmed my notes of my interview with him. I pointed out that Isak Vallie might possibly deny my article after it was published. (I have experienced this dozens of times in the last six years while I have worked in South Africa as a journalist.) Earlier in the day I had asked Isak to sign a statement permitting me to publish my article just in case he DID try to deny it.)

On my return to my office I asked Mr. Norton to witness this by placing his initial to it. He did so. It would be interesting to discover if Isak Vallie DENIES having signed this piece of paper. Next day, on Wednesday, September 28, Isak Vallie came into my office again. He again asked me not to print the article. Mr. Norton was present during this interview. I had already written my article and I allowed Isak Vallie to read it in the presence of Mr. Norton. After Isak Vallie had read the article I made a special note of asking him (Isak Vallie) if I had made any mistakes. He said my article was 100% correct and factual but he asked me to delete the mention I had made of his being questioned by the Security Branch in connection with the smuggling of letters from prisoners on Robben Island.

I asked Isak Vallie why he wished me to delete this part. He said he was worried about the Security Branch. I pointed out to him that the Security Branch ALREADY knew about this because he had been questioned by them— so why should he worry? The logic of this baffled Isak and he agreed, rather reluctantly, to let me leave this in. Isak asked me not to publish his picture. I also talked him out of continuing in this vein by stating that I would telephone Johannesburg to request that his picture be held out. (In all truth, I misled Isak and had no intention of telephoning Johannesburg to make this request.) Before Isak left my office I made quite certain that he again confirmed the accuracy of my article— in Mr. Norton's presence. Isak definitely agreed that my article was completely factual.

When Isak had gone I asked Mr. Norton to keep the matter fresh in his mind because I said I was convinced that Isak would deny my story later. Today, October 5, 1966, I was telephoned by Sergeant van Wyk of the Security Branch. He asked me to visit him in his office. I did so at 3 pm. Mr. van Wyk told me that he had taken an affidavit from Isak and also an affidavit from Omar. Mr. van Wyk asked me to give him my version. I gave Mr. van Wyk all the details and showed him the signed permission to publish by Isak Vallie. Mr. van Wyk was quite clearly doubtful about my side of the story. I asked him point-blank if he believed me or if he believed the two Vallie men. Mr. van Wyk made no bones about it. He said he believed the two Vallie men. I asked him why. He replied "I have two affidavits." I then offered to make an affidavit. Mr. van Wyk said he was "not interested." I explained how I had talked to Isak Vallie, and gone through my interview again, in the presence of Mr. Norton—and that I would ask Mr. Norton to sign an affidavit supporting me. Mr. van Wyk said he was "not interested." Mr. van Wyk said he had "completed his investigations into the matter" and that he intended to hand the "file" over to Mr. Justice J.T. van Wyk, who is heading the COE into Dr. Verwoerd's death.

I pointed out to Mr. van Wyk that his "file" would be rather one-sided if he did not include my affidavit and the affidavits-of my witnesses. I also pointed out that I would like him (Mr. van Wyk) to take a statement from Sulaiman Vallie to see if it checked with what Isak Vallie and Omar Vallie had said. Mr. van Wyk replied: "That is a waste of time. Sulaiman would only tell the same story as his father and brother." I pointed out to Mr. van Wyk that I thought him clever enough to find out if Sulaiman's version was true or not. But Mr. van Wyk again repeated that he had closed his investigation and that he was "not interested" in seeing Sulaiman. I asked Mr. van Wyk to call in Sulaiman Vallie and let me question Sulaiman in his (Mr. van Wyk's) presence. Mr. van Wyk said he was not interested in doing this. I asked Mr. van Wyk if he would believe me if I made an affidavit. In the presence of a witness, Mr. van Wyk replied: "No." I then pointed out that Mr. van Wyk was clearly of the opinion that I would lie on oath and that this was defamatory of myself.

At this point the witness, I think he is also a Security Branch man, walked away. During my interview with Mr. van Wyk I told him that I had not written the Tsafendas article simply for sensationalism. I told Mr. van Wyk that I was of the opinion, after speaking to Isak and Omar Vallie, that I was entitled to think the matter of some importance — even if later it was to be ascertained that Tsafendas was merely lying to the two Vallie men. Mr. van Wyk made a great play on my use of my phrase "I was of the opinion" and he told me; "You are not entitled to write your opinion." I take strong exception to Mr. van Wyk's attitude in this whole matter and for this reason, I submit this sworn statement.

Signed ... Gordon Winter

Agreed to & witnessed ... (Indecipherable name)

Agreed to & witnessed... (Indecipherable name)

6/10/1966

The following is part of the second statement by Gordon Winter to the Commission. This is only the second page of the statement as its first page was not found at the archives.

GORDON WINTER'S SECOND STATEMENT TO THE COMMISSION⁶¹⁷¹

I asked Isak if he wished me to delete this part. He said he did because he was "worried" about the Security Branch. I pointed out to Isak that the Security Branch already knew because they had questioned him on the matter so why should I leave that out of the story? The logic of this appeared to bemuse Isak because he then reluctantly, allowed me to leave it in.

Isak asked me not to publish a photograph of him. I told him that it was rather late because my firm printed its Cape edition on Wednesday. But I told Isak that I would put a telephone call through to Johannesburg and ask them not to use the photograph. Isak appeared satisfied by this and after some discussion - during which I said he must not be afraid of the Security Branch (if he was tailing the truth) Isak agreed that the story be published. He left us with the impression he was not happy about the publication of the story however and that he had been "talked into it" by me.

Just before he left I again got him to confirm that my article, as read by him, was factual. In Mr. Norton's presence, Isak agreed that my story was completely correct. When Isak had left the office I asked Mr. Norton to keep the matter fresh in his mind because, I said, I was convinced Isak would deny my story when he read it in the newspaper. Norton asked me if I intended telephoning Johannesburg to ask them to take out the photograph of Isak. I told Mr. Norton that I was not going to make the request and that when I made this remark to Isak, I had had no intention of doing so.

I wrote my article in good faith, firmly believing that I was entitled to bring the matter into the open. It may be ascertained that Tsafendas, if he did make the statements as alleged by Omar and Isak Vallie (to me), was deliberately telling them lies. On the other hand he may not have been. I was of the opinion, when I wrote my article, that this was a matter for the police to thrash out. I would like, at this stage, to make it quite clear that I realised the Security Branch would approach me- after the publication of my story. I pointed this out to Mr. Norton BEFORE the article was published. For this reason, I submit that it is clear that I could hardly have fabricated the statements which Omar and Isak Vallie have now repudiated.

⁶¹⁷¹ Gordon Winter statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

Signed ... Gordon Winter

Agreed to as correct as far as I am concerned.... M. Norton.

Agreed-to as-correct as far as I am concerned ... (indecipherable name)

Cape Town. 12.10.66.

Sworn to before me at Cape Town this 12th day of October 1977.

D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of Oaths.

PIET BESTER BURGER⁶¹⁷²

Questioned by: Mr. Terblanche

Date: 13/10/1966

Mr. Burger is the head messenger at the Assembly. He worked there for almost twenty-three years at the time of the case and accordingly, he interviewed Demitrios Tsafendas for a messenger position at the Assembly. Burger approved Tsafendas for the position and appointed him. There were two colleagues, Piet Schuin and Sydney Wiehand, who were present when Burger conducted the interview. These two colleagues were always present when conducting interviews for the reason being that if they notice something about the person being interviewed, they could bring it to Burger's attention.

⁶¹⁷² Piet Bester Burger testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

The messengers have to not only deliver messages but they must also stand at the entrance of the National Assembly when the First Minister passes by. These messengers stand there to close the door when the Speaker and his procession enter the National Assembly. Burger and his colleagues, an assistant and two seniors, are responsible for stopping any unauthorized person from entering the boardroom where the Assembly is held. Once the Speaker and his procession have entered the boardroom, only certain messengers may be inside the boardroom.

However, before the Speaker and his procession have entered the boardroom, any messengers, even temporary messengers, were able to be inside the room. The press or the private secretary often used temporary messengers to quickly deliver a message inside the boardroom. It was assumed that the messengers always had a message to deliver if they were seen inside the boardroom before the meeting begin, but, as soon as the Speaker and his procession entered the room, Burger ensured that only the allowed messengers are present inside. Thus, concerning the messengers, there was no control over who entered and left the room before the Speaker and his procession.

Burger stood on the second step to look over the assembly and to see that no one enters the boardroom who was not allowed. Next to Burger stood a temporary messenger, whom Mr. Burger himself called from the reading room. This messenger stopped any members of the Assembly from leaving before the procession. There was a screen where Burger stood to meet the Speaker. Burger and Wiehand were both there on the 6th of September. Burger had not seen Tsafendas on that day.

Dr. Verwoerd was going to speak at the Assembly, so many members stood outside to finish their cigarettes because they knew they were going to be inside for a long time. The door to the room was still open even when the bells rang. The corridor to the room was closed when the Speaker left his office.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Nothing in the remaining testimony is relevant to Tsafendas or the assassination.

PETRUS ROBERT SAMUEL SCHUIN⁶¹⁷³

Questioned by: Mr. Terblanche

Date: 13/10/1966

Mr. Schuin was a head messenger at the parliament. He had been working there since September, 1953; a total of thirteen years. Schuin only reached standard 6 at school, after which he joined the parliament, working under Mr. Burger. On the 6th of September, Schuin was on duty and declared that by the time he entered the boardroom, Dr. Verwoerd was already seated.

He also declared that he saw Tsafendas as he was coming up to the table of the Assembly. Tsafendas was more or less at the head of the table of the Assembly by the time Schuin saw him. This occurrence, not being anything strange to Schuin, he noticed him and knew that it was his duty to be there if there would be any message to deliver and was expecting that Tsafendas would have a message for him (Schuin). The Parliament was not in sitting, nor has the Speaker and his procession arrived yet. Schuin was on the right-hand side of the speakers' chair and saw what happened.

Mr. Schuin noticed, during Tsafendas's interview, that there was nothing out of the ordinary about him. He noticed that Tsafendas was the same as any other person that had worked there.

CAPTAIN MARX⁶¹⁷⁴

Cape Town, 13 October 1966.

On 5.3.1964, Sergeant Warrant Officer Bezuidenhout and I received a letter from Mr. Howard of the Department of Home Affairs. This letter as I could remember, was directed to the Honourable Minister of Home Affairs and written by Tsafendas. It was about bribery in respect of the issuance of passports. The author acted as informer and had no self-complaint.

⁶¹⁷³ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin testimony to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁶¹⁷⁴ Captain Marx statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

The persons named in the letter were spoken to by Sergeant Warrant Officer Bezuidenhout, in the presence of the informer. They both denied that they had paid bribes to any person. A letter was written by me on 03/20/1964 to the secretary of Home Affairs, Pretoria, and read as follows:

Attached letter addressed to his honourable, the minister of Home Affairs, was handed to Captain Marx by Mr. J. Howard on 03/05/1964. The author was interviewed and an investigation was made, but no evidence could be obtained to connect any person with his allegations. The persons who are claimed by the writer of the letter, to have the bribes, were questioned in his presence but denied the allegations. No file was opened in this regard, as no specific complaint could be found. As far as can be remembered, the accusation was that the two people who were spoken to, paid bribes to officials at the Department of Home Affairs. This information is largely supplied from memory as little supporting documentary proof is available.

HANNO PROBST⁶¹⁷⁵

C/o Mangete Catholic Mission Station. Mangete Zululand

I am a European male born in Germany and am at present the Priest in charge of the Mangete Catholic Mission station in Zululand. Sometime during 1965, I cannot remember the exact date, but it must have been during June, I went to the town of Mandini to collect mail and do some purchases at the Mandini store. At the Mandini store, as I emerged I noticed a person, who appeared to me to be a coloured, sitting on a bench in front of the store. I noticed that this person's one arm was wrapped in bandage and as he looked rather lost, I approached him to find out whether I could be of any assistance. I immediately realised that this person was not a South African because of his dark complexion and general appearance. I even told him that he was not a South African but that he came from Mozambique. He appeared to be much surprised at this remark I passed and asked me how I knew he came from Mozambique. I told him that I had travelled a lot and knew, by his appearance that he was actually a Mozambique citizen. This person thereupon informed me that he too, had done much travelling and that he could speak eight different languages.

⁶¹⁷⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I tried him out in different languages and found that he could speak Spanish, Czech, Italian, German, the Munich Dialect of German and English fluently. During our conversation he also mentioned to me that he had been to Germany and actually stated that he had visited Munich in Germany. Because very few people in South Africa can speak or understand the Munich Dialect of German I spoke to him in this dialect. I was surprised to hear that he could speak this dialect so well. I gained the impression that this person was very well trained in the different languages and I actually said to him that he must have had very good teacher in Moscow to be able to speak the different languages so well. To my surprise he admitted have been in Moscow.

During our conversation, this person asked me to what church I belonged apparently because he recognised me as a priest. I informed him that I was attached to the Roman Catholic Church. He then suddenly started to swear at the Roman Catholic Church and also at the Portuguese Government in Mozambique, stating that the Nuns in Mozambique Hospitals inject the natives to get rid of them and that the Portuguese Government approves of this. I became annoyed at his groundless accusation and told him that he was a communist and that he reacted like a Zimba of the Congo. I told him what the Catholic Church does for the natives and that it definitely not to get rid of them, but on the contrary to help them. I told him that we have a law against Communists in this country and that he would not get far in South Africa and that it would be better if he returned to Mozambique. I then left him. This person did not introduce himself to me and at that stage I did not know what his name was or where he was employed.

The following morning I again went to Mandini. As I had given the matter thought (I refer to my meeting with the European the previous day) I decided to bring the matter to the attention of the security officer at Mendini Paper Factory (SAPPI). I spoke to a Mr. van Vuuren at this Factory and told him what had transpired between me and the other person the previous day. I told Mr. van Vuuren that this man was a Communist and a dangerous person. I did not know who he was because he did not introduce himself to me but I gave Mr. van Vuuren a description of him. I cannot remember that I pointed him out to Mr. van Vuuren at his office. I can however, recollect that this person told me during our conversation that he worked for Roberts construction at Mendini.

After the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, I heard on the radio that the assassin was of Portuguese origin and that he could speak eight different languages. Mention was also made of the fact that he used to work at Mandeni. I immediately realised then that the person I had occasion to meet at the Mandini Store must be the assassin, I have seen this man only once, on this particular day at the Mandini store and never again. After the murder of Dr. Verwoerd I saw a photo of the alleged assassin in some newspapers and recognised the man of which the photo was published, as the same person I had spoken to at the Mandeni store. The name of this person was given in the newspapers as Demetrios Tsafendas.

On a certain day, subsequent to my meeting with Tsafendas at the Mandini Store, I spoke to Coloured male Gladstone Dunn who resides in the Mangete Reserve. I mentioned the incidence at the store to him and also gave him a description of Demetrios Tsafendas. He then informed me that the same man had on one occasion visited him and had stayed with him overnight. I have not seen Demtrios Tsafendas in the Mangete Reserve or at any other place, except Mandini on that one occasion. I however suspect that he must have had some influence on the inhabitants of the Mangete Reserve. I say this because, during the period Demetrios Tsafendas stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly end aggressive. This, however, is only suspicion because since the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable. I have reported the incidence with Demetrios Tsafendas only to Mr. van Vuuren at the Mandini Paper Factory. I have not reported to the South African Police or to any individual Policeman. The first time I have mentioned the incidence to the South African Police was on 9.9.1965 when I was approached by D/Sergt. Els of the Security Police Empangeni to whom I have made a statement.

Mangete. 13.10.1966 at 11.30 am.

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable name) Captain

MAJOR DANIEL JACOBUS ROSSOUW⁶¹⁷⁶

Testimony taken 14.10. 1966

Daniel Jacobus Rossouw (Declared under Oath):

Questioned by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk

TERBLANCHE: Major Rossouw, are you the Chief of the Security Police in Cape Town?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am.

TERBLANCHE: Were you also here in the Cape from 1962?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No, I started here on the 26th of September 1963.

TERBLANCHE: What was your rank at that time?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Captain.

TERBLANCHE: Was a certain Captain Rossouw here before you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, a Captain Rossouw was here some years, but I cannot remember exactly which years they were.

TERBLANCHE: Who was that?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Brigadier – he is now Brigadier Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: And you did not take over from him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What is your rank now?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Major

TERBLANCHE: Do you know someone by the name of Hendrik Mulder?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

TERBLANCHE: He claims that he spoke to a Captain Rossouw last year.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I do remember someone by that name calling me last year.

⁶¹⁷⁶ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TERBLANCHE: What did he say to you? Why did he call you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: He called me on two occasions. The first time he wanted to report that he had overheard two Coloured people working in a factory in Paarden Island discussing how to kill the children of the Security Police and even how to kill the Police. On the second occasion he told me that his wife had run away and asked me to help him find her.

TERBLANCHE: Did you investigate the first report Major?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, and it was found to be groundless.

TERBLANCHE: Did he call you on any other occasion?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No.

TERBLANCHE: Did he ever tell you that certain people had told him that the Prime Minister would be killed and that he had told you about this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I have no knowledge of this whatsoever

TERBLANCHE: He never said this to you?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No he never said that to me.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know someone called Nagel?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: At the moment he lives in Port Elizabeth – I do not know his rank - No I do not know this person.

TERBLANCHE: Did anyone call you after the death of the Prime Minister and tell you, “Major (or Captain) Mulder told you that this would happen” and that you replied that you do recall something like that?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I deny this – I know nothing about this.

TERBLANCHE: I want to move on to something else now - in your investigation did you find certain evidence about certain parcels for Tsafendas at the Post Office?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, this was brought to my attention during the investigation from the Woodstock Police that a Mrs “Taizer” had handed him a document. A member of the police brought this slip to my office at my request and I then sent a staff member to retrieve the parcel from the Post Office and found that it was not a parcel but a letter – a pamphlet containing Bible texts.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where is the pamphlet now?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I gave it to Tsafendas.

TERBLANCHE: Can you recall the origin of the letter?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes, it came from America.

TERBLANCHE: Can you remember who sent it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No, but I wrote it down and it is in my office.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was this handed over to a Code expert to determine whether it contained a code?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I examined it myself and am confident that there was no code in at all Your Honour.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes but even though it was a printed document it could still have been in code?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: True, but I found several more of these texts addressed to him and am satisfied that none of them were in code – they were just Bible texts with the quotations from the verses of the Bible

JUDGE VAN WYK: You are aware that the Bible is often used for code purposes, the order of the texts and so on?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am perfectly aware of that, but in this case I am certain this is not the case. I deal with these matters frequently and am confident that in this case there were no codes in the pamphlets.

TERBLANCHE: Was the name of the sender perhaps Barandella?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No. The name Barandella is known to me and it is not Barandella. This was someone in America – I cannot recall it now

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes but there is also a Barandella in America

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I am not aware of this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: There is a Barandella.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: The Barandella of whom I know is a young Coloured girl.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes she has an uncle in America

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I am not aware of that Your Honour. I will be able to find out the name for you.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes I should like to see those pamphlets which you found

MAJ. ROSSOUW: If Tsafendas still has them. I do not know whether he still has them because we gave them to him shortly after his arrest and I think he has nothing with him in the cell but I shall try to determine whether he still has them.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes it will be better that the Commission should see it.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Certainly I shall do my best to get hold of this but I really do not know that it will be available.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are you the person who took a declaration from Tsafendas in the prison cell?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I took a declaration from him.

TERBLANCHE: Did you question him later?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I did and wrote the questions and the answers.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What language did you use with him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: English.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And was it read out to him afterwards?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did he admit everything

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes and he was satisfied and signed it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you get the impression that what he said was the truth or did you think that sometimes he was sly?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I thought that he told the truth. I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was he totally prepared to answer everything?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes

JUDGE VAN WYK: What was your impression – how does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I shall answer you to the best of my ability – when I originally questioned him I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered, “That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!” At a later stage I asked him whether he regretted his deed yet and he answered that he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am aware of that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you come across anyone who had said that he had been told about the plan by Tsafendas?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No he denies this strenuously. I have asked him repeatedly whether he had told anyone of his plan to murder the Prime Minister and he had always specifically said that he had never told anyone about this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: All the statements thus far have concurred that he did not drink, but one person stated that sometimes he would drink a whole bottle after which he became very talkative. Are you aware of any of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: He always told me that he did not drink at all; although I have come across one or two who said that they had seen him drink beer.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have the Security Police ever found old Communist member lists dating from the 1940's?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: No I am not aware that such lists have been found. I do know that with the Rivonia trial such lists were found but they were new lists, not the old ones.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Around 1953 when the anti-Communist Act was promulgated, and the Communist Party was banned and even before then, the police did have documents relating to it and I wonder if they still exist and whether it would be possible to find them.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes although I was obviously not attached to the Security Police when the Communist Party was banned, but we do possess old files which should indicate whether there are such name lists of members.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Tsafendas said that he was a member for ten years from 1936 and I should want to obtain those old files.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I shall investigate whether I can find such old files. But we also compiled files on all the people who were brought to our attention and if any such files contained his name then we would have opened a file on him and we do not have such a file, not locally in the Cape.

JUDGE VAN WYK: No not just in Cape Town – he would not have been a member here – but the liquidator of the Communist Party would have such a complete list of all Communists.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes we do possess those lists and I shall investigate this and bring the information to you.

TERBLANCHE: Is Evidence “T” which is a photocopy, the first statement that you took from him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Is Evidence “U” the other further questioning that you conducted with him?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

Handed in as evidence.

TERBLANCHE: Major there is a memorandum here that you presented in which the name of the person who sent the registered letter to is “Vaughan A. Tomkins”?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes that is the name.

TERBLANCHE: Of “38 Walnut Street, Arlington F.4, Massachusetts, U.S.A.?”

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes.

COMMENTS ON MAJOR ROSSOUW’S TESTIMONY

This is a very important testimony as Major Rossouw was the police officer who questioned Tsafendas while in custody. Major Rossouw was not a psychiatrist, but he was a senior police officer, with extensive experience of questioning prisoners, and thus a natural choice as Tsafendas’s lead interrogator. As such, he must certainly have been able to tell whether Tsafendas could follow a conversation for more than fifteen minutes, whether he talked in a disjointed manner or suffered from thought-blocking. These were the characteristics imputed to Tsafendas in court, in effect that he was someone who could not answer questions or gave vague or irrelevant responses. However, Rossouw made no mention of any such issues in his testimony, saying instead that Tsafendas did not evade any questions and replied spontaneously to everything he was asked, while this was after he interrogated Tsafendas for many hours on several separate occasions.

More to the point, Rossouw got the impression that Tsafendas told the truth. It is important here to look at compatibility. What Tsafendas told Rossouw is compatible with what he told several witnesses before and after the assassination; it is also compatible with the evidence gathered by the police. However, it is not compatible with what was heard in the court about him or the way he was described by the Commission, particularly in regard to his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. However, as we will see, although the Commission was in possession of Tsafendas's statements to the police and the testimony of the officer who questioned Tsafendas and recorded those statements, its Report ignored what Tsafendas had to say about his motive. Instead the Commission turned to speculation, presenting a quite inaccurate and obscure picture of what it purported to believe was his motive.

A very important issue discussed by the Commission and Rossouw concerned the reported exchanges about Dr. Verwoerd's death at the Eleni. The Commission asked him, “Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder, people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?”

It is clear the Commission attached great importance to this incident. Rossouw replied that he knew of the incident but was unable to shed any light on it as Tsafendas denied that he had discussed his plans with anyone and he had no other information. The Major was telling the truth because most of those involved in the conversation were no longer in South Africa but had sailed on the Eleni. The South African police would subsequently question all the Eleni sailors and find out why and how this discussion had taken place that Friday morning. However, their evidence would be omitted from the Report and instead the Commission would speculate fruitlessly about what might have taken place when the sailors had told the police exactly what happened.

Another important aspect of Rossouw's testimony is that he makes no mention of the tapeworm. Indeed, nowhere in his testimony does he say anything to suggest that he thought Tsafendas to be insane, quite the opposite. As for the tapeworm, if Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm and this had something to do with the assassination, would he not have told Rossouw, who questioned him so many times?

A final issue highlighted by Major Rossouw is that Tsafendas not only failed to show any remorse about the killing, but appeared to be happy and proud of it. When Rossouw accused him of being "a horrible murderer," Tsafendas replied, "That is what you think, but the world thinks differently." This remark clearly reflects Tsafendas's conviction that several people in South Africa and around the world would see his action as he saw it, namely as the justifiable killing of a tyrant.

OMARJEE VALLIE⁶¹⁷⁷

Indian male, owner of the Star Café in Cape Town.

About three to four weeks before Dr. Verwoerd was murdered, I was standing in my café when I noticed a white man standing outside in the street. He stood there for some time and I then called him inside. He entered the café and I offered him a cup of tea. While he was drinking the tea I asked him where he came from and he told me that he came here with a steamer. I asked him what kind of a steamer and he told me a Russian Steamer. I then asked him when and he told me a long time ago. He then told me he was staying in Woodstock and that he was looking for a job. Some customers then entered the shop and I attended them. The white man finished the tea and left the café without saying anything.

After the murder, I saw a photo in a newspaper and identified it as the photo of the man who was in my café. The name underneath the photo was given as Demetrio Tsafendas. My son, Isaac Vallie, was not in the café at the time but when I saw the photo in the paper I told him that I gave this man Tsafendas a cup of tea. About a week ago, a reporter of the "Post" called at the Café and my son Isaac then told him what happened. I was present when my son talked to the reporter. He never told the reporter that we overheard Tsafendas talking to another man, telling him that he had dealings with seamen from Russian fishing vessels. I never knew Tsafendas was working at S.W.A. or Walvis Bay. Tsafendas never talked to anybody while he was in the café. I only had the conversation with him because when I saw him outside, I thought he was a member of the C.I.D. looking for somebody. The reporter never asked me whether I made a report to the police and I never told him that I did not report it because the police will have suspicions about him meeting my family.

⁶¹⁷⁷ Omarjee Vallie statement to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

I never reported Mr Tsafendas's visit to my shop to the police because I did not think that his visit could help them in their investigations. To me it seems silly to use the words "Tsafendas posed as Russian sailor" because nothing of that sort was ever said by Tsafendas and it was also never mentioned during the conversation with the reporter. The fact that Tsafendas told me that he came to the Republic on a "Russian steamer" does not mean that he said he was a sailor on a Russian ship and the reporter was never given to understand that it was the case.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) D/Sgt.

ISAAC VALLIE⁶¹⁷⁸

I am an adult Indian man living at 1 Greatmore Street, Woodstock. I have just been shown the newspaper "POST" by the Police. The person Demitrio Tsafendas is totally unknown to me. I was not in my father's café on the day when, it is alleged, he came in to drink a cup of tea. I am indeed aware of the report which appears in the Post newspaper. About 14 days ago I did have a conversation with someone who works for Post and told him that my father told me that Tsafendas was in our café once. About a week ago Mr. Gordon Winter, a reporter at the Post came to see my father and I and I did talk to him then after he said that he wanted to write a story about Tsafendas. That was when I told him that my father says that a white man, whose photo he had seen in a newspaper was recognized by him as Tsafendas; this was about 3 weeks before the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd. He was standing in front of our café and my father invited him inside and served him with tea. Upon my father's question about where he lived, he answer that he lived in Woodstock and that he had arrived in the Republic of SA from a Russian ship. I did not Mr... (The second page of the statement is missing).

⁶¹⁷⁸ Isaac Vallie statement to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

WILLEM NEL VISSER⁶¹⁷⁹

No.29097 Sergeant.

I am a sergeant in the South African Police stationed at Durban Central where I was in charge of the Immorality section.

On a date before the 11th of September I was spoken to by Mr. Brian Rudden who is connected to the Sunday Times as a reporter. Mr. Rudden wanted to know if I knew the alleged assassin - Mr. Tsafendas - of Mr. Dr. Verwoerd. I shared that I knew Tsafendas simply as an interpreter in the Regional Courts of Durban where he (Tsafendas) worked as interpreter in a fornication case I handled. Mr. Rudden wanted to know what Tsafendas's attitude towards the Immorality Law was and I notified him the following: "That Tsafendas have asked what people say when I arrest them under the Immorality Law and whether I catch a lot of these cases. That Tsafendas was interested no more and no less in such business than a normal member of the public is interested when they hear what kind of cases I deal with." Mr. Rudden also wanted to take a portrait of me to publish in the "Sunday Times" which I refused to allow, because of Captain du Toit, my commanding officer, had not given permission. The report of Mr. Rudden is mere sensationism and untrue.

Durban. 17/10/66. 1.35 p.m.

⁶¹⁷⁹ Willem Nel Visser statement to the COE, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

HELEN STRUTHERS⁶¹⁸⁰

White woman, aged 32 years, Greyville, Durban.

I am an adult White woman, resident and employed at the above address.

During late June or early July, 1965, on a Sunday evening, a White male who had the appearance of a Greek, paid a visit to me. He introduced himself to me as Demetrios. I accepted that he was Mr Demetrios.

I have seen a photograph of the assassin of the late Dr. Verwoerd and identified the photo as being the same person who paid the visit to me in 1965 and who will be referred to as Demetrios hereafter. Mr Demetrios said that he had come to thank me for having visited with him whilst he was in hospital. At that stage, his hand was bandaged. I pointed out to him that he was mistaken and that I had never visited him. Mr Demetrios said that he belonged to our faith, The Fellowship of Christ, and I accordingly invited him into my house. We did not discuss anything along political lines and Mr Demetrios did not make his political beliefs known to me. He asked if he could see me again, apparently to promote a personal relationship, but I rejected his request and I also rejected to correspond with him. After about an hour, Mr Demetrios left my house and that was the first and last time that I had ever seen or heard from him. Mr Demetrios did not relate his travels to me and there was very little else that we discussed.

Helen Struthers.

The above statement was taken by ... (Indecipherable name) ... 40205 D/Sgt.

Durban. 12.50 p.m. 19/10/66

⁶¹⁸⁰ Helen Struthers statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

DR. WILLEM LODEWICUS DANIEL MATTHYS VENTER⁶¹⁸¹

Adult White Male, N.G Minister, Parow.

On 06/09/66 at about 2:18 pm I was in the Assembly. The bells had already rung and we waited for the Speaker to enter. My position is near Dr. Verwoerd (deceased's) chair. While there were still members walking past, Mr. Jan Visse made the remark - "Look, that guy is not properly dressed yet." He referred to the messenger (D. Tsafendas), now the accused. I saw accused fiddling with his clothes near his pants, where you usually tie your suspenders. I saw him take something shiny from his pants and pointed Mr. Visses' attention to it. By then Dr. Verwoerd was already in the hall and had taken his seat.

Accused very quickly approached from the big door heading in the direction of Dr. Verwoerd. I was under the impression that he wanted to pass behind the Speaker's chair before the Speaker came. When the accused was right behind Dr. Verwoerd, he bent over and disappeared from my sight. Immediately after that, I observed an expression of shock and surprise on deceased's face. I saw the accused partially behind Dr. Verwoerd and noticed that his hand was moving up and down swiftly. I saw no knife until Dr. Verwoerd slightly fell forward and I then saw the accused with a knife in his hand, and he then again brought his hand down and stabbed Dr. Verwoerd in the neck.

Several other members and I jumped up. Chaos ruled. Some people grabbed the accused and someone shouted "Get the knife." Accused was thrown to the ground halfway across the bench and his hand with the knife was near me. I grabbed the hand and forced the fingers open to take the knife. His fingers were clenched around the knife. After the accused was overwhelmed, I put the knife on the table in front of the Speaker chair, where the police had taken it.

Cape Town. 19/10.1966

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

⁶¹⁸¹ Dr. Willem Lodewicus Matthys Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

MOGAMAT ISAACS⁶¹⁸²

Sirs, Mr. Gordon Winter, of our staff, has asked me to confirm that I gave him the tip-off about the Vallie family having met Demitrio Tsafendas and that they had stated Tsafendas had mentioned that he was a Russian. This is correct. I told Mr. Winter these facts on September 24, 1966. I told him that he should go to see Isak Vallie because there might be a story for him there. Mr. Winter asked me for more details. I told him that I had spoken to Isak Vallie and that Isak Vallie had told me that Demitrio Tsafendas had once visited his father's cafe, The Star Cafe, in Tennant Street, District Six, Cape Town. I told Mr. Winter that Isak claimed that Tsafendas had spoken of being from Russia and that he (Tsafendas) had also spoken of having had some dealings with Russian fishing vessels off Walvis Bay.

Mr. Winter asked me why I did not write the story. I told Mr. Winter that the Vallies did not want me to write the story. Mr. Winter then said Post would still want the story and that I should go and get it. I told him that I did not want to get involved with the Vallie family because I knew that they had good connections in the underworld. I also told Mr. Winter that the Vallie family were associated with Sherif Khan, the well-known Johannesburg underworld figure. I told Mr. Winter that there was a risk that I would be beaten up if I wrote a story which the Vallies did not want publishing.

Mr. Winter then said he would go and get the story from the Vallie family because he was not scared of being beaten up. I told Mr. Winter the address of the cafe (The Star Cafe in Tennant St.) and I drew a sketch for him so that he would find it easily. Since Mr. Winter's article appeared on our front page, on October 2, 1966, I have deliberately avoided the Vallie family just in case they may blame me for the fact that Mr. Winter wrote about them — apparently against their wishes.

I SWEAR THAT THIS IS THE TRUTH, THE WHOIE TRUTH, and NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH, SO HELP ME GOD.

Signed ... Mogamet Isaacs

Witnessed ... Gordon Tobin

⁶¹⁸² Mogamat Isaacs statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

VIOLET IRENE MANNING⁶¹⁸³

E/F/A. Cape Town

I am a housewife residing at the above address. I let rooms at No. 7 Prince Street.

Approximately October-November 1965 I had rooms advertised at the latter place and Demetrio Tsafendas answered my advert and came to see me. He rented Room 3 next to the Ferreiras. It was a serviced room but I found him making his own bed. When he came to me he was well-dressed, well-spoken, and gave a good impression. I thought him to be a Greek. For a few weeks he attracted no unfavourable attention, until Mrs Ferreira came to me to complain that he was a nuisance. She said he was going into her kitchen to fetch water and that he was spilling water on the floor. I spoke to Tsafendas, but after some time, the Ferreiras complained again. When he was interviewed, he said that Mrs Ferreira was blackmailing him, I had given him instructions not to go into her kitchen, so I gave him notice to leave at the end of the month, which was two days later. He returned my keys at the end of the month and left.

During his stay, I regularly inspected his room. I also spoke to him. He told me he had just come from Mozambique and that he was looking for a café or catering business to buy. From his general appearance, he appeared to be a businessman. When he paid me, he had a bundle of notes and I took him to be a man of means. During the days he went out, I thought to look for a business. He never spoke politics that I know of. In his room I saw two good suitcases, a box with pots and pans, a good briefcase etc. He received no visitors that I know of.

V.I. Manning. Cape Town. 21/10/66.

Statement taken by me. D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

⁶¹⁸³ Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

JOHANNES CHRISTOFFEL BROODRYK⁶¹⁸⁴

I'm a Captain in the South African Police stationed at The Grays, Johannesburg and attached to the security police.

On Friday, October 21, 1966 at about 11 am I was present when Brigadier Bester interviewed Rowley Israel Arenstein at office Nr. 505, The Grays, Johannesburg in connection with the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd. Arenstein denied knowing Tsafendas, that Tsafendas ever was a client of his or that he at any time granted him an interview. During the interview it was clear that he was completely honest with the police in connection with this matter. He also stated that his secretary, Mrs. Suddes would know if Tsafendas was at any time in his office. He sent a letter to Mrs. Suddes, directing her to give me all possible help, and handed the letter over to me.

Saturday afternoon, 22 October 1966, I interviewed Mrs. Suddes in Durban. I took an affidavit from her. It was clear to me that she was completely honest with me and gave all possible assistance. She told me that she did not share the political views of her employer, Mr. Arenstein, but was not willing to mention it in her statement as she was still in his employ. From past experience, I know that Mrs. Suddes is fully aware of all matters relating to this law firm. I showed her a file containing various newspaper photographs.

Johannesburg 24.10. 1966.

MAURICE KLEIN⁶¹⁸⁵

25 October 1966.

Mr. Maurice Klein, the owner of Wm. Rawbone en Kie, a local hardware store, claimed that Mr. Tsafendas was in his shop on September 6th 1966. Mr. Klein said that Mr. Tsafendas entered his shop and requested the price of a sheath knife which was in the showcase. Mr.

⁶¹⁸⁴ Johannes Christoffel Broodryk statement to the COE, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁸⁵ Maurice Klein testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Klein told him it was R3.30 and Mr. Tsafendas bought the sheath knife. The blade of the knife was approximately 5½ inches long. Mr. Klein did not ask Mr. Tsafendas what his purpose was with the knife, even though he knew it was a dangerous weapon. Mr. Klein was not aware of Article 10 Act 54 of 1949, which entails that the owner of the shop has to enquire to the reason why a client wanted a knife. Mr. Klein stated that he has never seen Mr. Tsafendas before.

ALBERT VERCUAL⁶¹⁸⁶⁶¹⁸⁷

25 October 1966.

Mr. Vercual; a foreman at F.A. Poole, an engineering firm, personally knew Mr. Tsafendas. F.A. Poole was also the place where Mr. Tsafendas worked from 7th February 1964 until 10th July 1964 under Mr. Vercual's management. Mr. Vercual claimed that Mr. Tsafendas was an intelligent man, just untidy and lazy in rounding off his work. He also said that Mr. Tsafendas was a very friendly, social and talkative person, but he was always looking to quarrel with the white workers. Mr. Vercual would usually receive complaints from the other (white) foremen, but never from the black workers. Mr. Vercual would always reprimand Mr. Tsafendas, but Mr. Tsafendas would normally just not respond.

On one occasion Mr. Vercual had an argument with Demitrio about his poor workmanship and he (Demitrio) was very angry about it. Later Mr. Vercual got reports that Demitrio wanted to fight with the foremen. Mr. Vercual went to him and told him: "You are always causing trouble. I want you to leave." Demitrio walked off. And later returned to Mr. Vercual's office asking why he had to leave. Mr. Vercual again asked him to leave, this causing Mr. Tsafendas to turn around and grabbing the door handle – his knuckles turned white – and he said to Mr. Vercual: "You are like your bloody Government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too!"

Mr. Vercual stated that he never got the impression that Mr. Tsafendas wasn't right in his mind. F.A. Poole moved from their warehouse and Mr. Tsafendas was tasked with ⁶¹⁸⁶ Albert Vercual statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶¹⁸⁷ His surname in his statement to the police is given as Vercoueil.

organizing the move and he handled it effortlessly. Mr. Tsafendas was busy sawing of the letters which made up the company's name and then dropping the letters to the ground, upon which Mr. Vercual saw this and told him not to drop the letters as they will be re-used. Mr. Vercual walked on and heard Mr. Tsafendas say: "The bloody foreman does not know what he is doing." Mr. Tsafendas never spoke of his worm. His threat against the First Minister was the only incident that Mr. Vercual knows about.

JOHANNA HENDRIEKA MULRENAN⁶¹⁸⁸

U/W/Vrou – Woman, Green Point.

I reside at the above address; I am a housewife and rent out 5 rooms in the house to men.

During September 1965 Tsafendas stayed with me for 1 or 2 weeks. The room was advertised. Although I accepted him as a boarder in one of the rooms, I soon observed that he was not neat in his room and told him to look for another place. He prepared food in my kitchen and was a big eater. He also never removed his big hat and wore a coat all the time. He worked at the power station during his stay with me. Apart from the fact that he was messy, he never drank and that sort of thing. He said was from overseas, was Portuguese and spoke many languages. I know nothing more of his movements or anything else about him.

J.H. Mulrenan. Cape Town. 26/10/1966.

N.D. HARTFORD⁶¹⁸⁹

In July, 1966, Tsafendas had a long interview with Mr. Hartford of the Cape Argus. They had already met at the beginning of the year when Tsafendas came to enquire whether there was any news of the so-called freedom fighters of Mozambique. He described himself as a rebel from Mozambique. Mr. Hartford thought that he might be able to provide material for a ⁶¹⁸⁸ Johanna Hendrieka Mulrenan statemet to the COE, 26 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

⁶¹⁸⁹ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

magazine article and asked him to return later for an interview. This interview was postponed a few times until it took place sometime in July. It lasted about 75 minutes. Tsafendas recounted inter alia, how he had entered the Union illegally in 1936. He made no secret of his strong anti-Portuguese feelings, but did not utter a word against the South African Government. He complained, inter alia, that he still suffered from headaches as a result of the treatment he had been given by the Portuguese in Lisbon after the war. Mr. Hartford's impression was that Tsafendas was normal; he had no reason to believe that he was mentally defective. This witness had listened to the evidence in the Supreme Court on Tsafendas's condition after the death of Dr. Verwoerd and his impression was that his condition must have deteriorated since the interview for, when he interviewed Tsafendas, the latter spoke fluently without any noticeable gaps in the conversation. He added, however, that after he had heard the evidence, it occurred to him that Tsafendas had in fact sometimes evaded his questions, but not to such an extent as to arouse his suspicions about his mental condition.⁶¹⁹⁰

CHRISTO VAN⁶¹⁹¹ MALEN⁶¹⁹²

I am an adult white man presently awaiting trial at the Dundee Prison. I make this statement willingly well-knowing that I do so under oath.

In 1964 I was a hard labour prisoner in Standerton Prison. During September of that year I escaped from that prison. I then went to Pretoria where I did odd jobs at private homes. I boarded with Mr Cilliers whose house was behind new flats called Lampfopolis Heights. Before that I boarded with Mr Pretorius in Pretoria West. I also did odd jobs at overseas ambassadorial houses situated against Meintjieskop in Pretoria, so I knew the area very well. I worked as a welder. I also knew the area around Libertas (PM's residence) and often spoke to police guards.

⁶¹⁹⁰ This testimony was not found in the archives, but according to the Commission's Report, the interview took place on November 11, 1966.

⁶¹⁹¹ It might be 'von' instead of 'van.' This is a handwritten statement and the name is not very clear.

⁶¹⁹² Christo van Malen's statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

From 1959-1961 I had my own business as welder and plumber and during that time Dennis Stafunus worked for me as a welder and I do not know whether he was Greek or Portuguese or where he lived. I also stayed at Lampfopolis Flats while I had my business and later stayed with Mr Pretorius and then with Mr Cilliers after I escaped from prison and thence to Durban. When I spoke to the police guard at Libertas I often saw a black Dodge car driving past Libertas. There were always three men in the car and one of them was Dennis Stefanus? I do not know the name of the police guard.

In November 1964 at midday while walking in the road about 100 ft. from Libertas the same car with three men sitting in the front stopped next to me. One of the men was Dennis Stefanus who introduced me to the other men and he asked me if I work in the area. One of the other men spoke to Dennis Stefanus in an unknown language which was not Greek or Portuguese with which I am familiar. Dennis Stefanus asked me whether I had access to government departmental houses and I replied that a permit from the Dept. of Public Works was only given to employees, otherwise the premises were out of bounds. I was then asked to help them gain entry as they had seen that I was friendly with the police guard but I told them this was impossible. On the rear seat of the car I noticed a camera with a long attachment in front.

Approximately 3 or 4 days later when I returned to my boarding house sometime between 5 and 6 pm I saw the same parked in the road outside. When I went inside I saw the same three men sitting on a couch in the back porch which was behind my room. They greeted me and then followed me when I entered my room and talked for a while with Dennis Stephanus acting as interpreter and I was asked to help them and that it was not hard work and I would be well paid. One of them then opened a black leather attaché case and took out a sketch pad, asking me to draw a plan of the late Dr. Verwoerd's house and also the house of the Minister of Justice. They again said that they would pay me very well and took out a roll of banknotes which they would give me immediately with more to come once I had given them the plans.

I refused because I thought they were up to no good and were trying to entice me into a trap. I asked them to leave my room after which there was an argument and while I accompanied them to the car Dennis Stephanus attacked me and stabbed me in my face, left arm and also in my back. I do not know who actually stabbed me because it was dark. Mr Cilliers, the landlord then phoned the police, the three men drove away. I was taken to the hospital by the Sunnyside police but I did not want to lay a charge because I was an escaped prisoner and did not want to be identified. I recently heard that Mr Cilliers had died in a police cell in Pretoria. When I returned to the boarding house and was walking to my room I noticed something lying on the ground where the fighting had taken place. I picked it up and when I got to my room I saw that it was photos of Chinese or Asiatics which I could also tell from the writing on the back of the photos. My wife has them and will give them to the police.

In February 1965 I moved from Pretoria to Durban where I lived with Mr Botha in Umbilo, Durban. I was known to the Bothas as Eddie van Malen. Two months after I arrived in Durban I met Dennis Stefanus and Demetry Tsafendas (sic) and accompanied them to their room in a private hotel near to the Durban Railway Station. I have seen photos of Tsafendas (after the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd and recognised him as the man introduced to me by Dennis Stefanus in Pretoria and also as one of the men in the black car. A month after I had told them where I lived, Tsafendas approached Mr Botha who agreed to let a room to him for two nights. Tsafendas again spoke about the plans but I ignored him. I moved to another place, but when I subsequently saw Mr Botha he told me that Tsafendas and other strangers often returned to search for me and asked where I was but he never disclosed my whereabouts to them.

PATRICK O'RYAN⁶¹⁹³

9 Westminster Road, Lansdown. Teacher at Bishop Lavis High School.

Yesterday K/S/S Gray, stationed at Epping who was stationed at Epping, was with him and told me that he was often in personal contact with Tsafendas. Tsafendas stayed with him from November 1965 to February 1966. He stayed with him for free, as he was broke. He was still a letting agent in 1965. Tsafendas asked him for a room. Tsafendas always behaved like a normal person, except that his interpretations of the Bible differed from his. He believed implicitly that he was a Christian but could not understand that Jesus was first in Heaven and afterwards came to Earth through Maria. He believed that he had a worm in his stomach. He often ate a great deal and also often just lay in bed all day. He also often used the Lord's name in vain unnecessarily and then I told him that a Christian does not do that.

⁶¹⁹³ Patrick O' Ryan statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Sometimes he went to church with them on Sundays and participated in the services. He never gave a proper spiritual interpretation of the scriptures. Nobody ever visited him there. Letters were delivered to him there. There was one from the Meat Board in which they asked him to interpret at a conference. That was about 3 months ago. He did not go.

He also worked at the City Tramways but his probation time there was not approved. He worked at Diamond Marine Corp. He said that the person who should have trained him did not do so and he became very angry. He called the person a "bastard." He said this to everyone born in South Africa like that. He apparently nearly lost his life on one occasion when on the boat taking them to the "Barge" and this frightened him and he asked me to pray with him. When he prayed he burst into tears. After that he was normal again. He also recounted that while he was somewhere in a Portuguese prison that he had been hit on his head and how someone else was also hit like that until he died. He never wanted to repeat that story in front of other people. He said that he had stayed at two places in Observatory. They took him to a place in Devon Street in Woodstock where he then stayed. He also apparently lived in Mouille Point and Vredehoek, and also at a hotel, which name I cannot remember. He applied to the French Consulate for work. They must have his references. He said that his mother was non-white. He received a letter from a John Machletos from overseas which had been forwarded to him from Marine Diamond. He did not smoke or drink to his knowledge.

THE MULDER CASE

Hendrik Johannes Mulder had given a statement to the police on October 5. He had testified that he was offered £20,000 by three men to eliminate Dr. Verwoerd but he refused. The offer was renewed twice by telephone, where they called and said they had a fool-proof method of killing Dr. Verwoerd – by arranging a job for him in the Houses of Parliament. At another time, he had said a customer at a garage where he worked asked him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. Mulder also said two different men offered him a large sum to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building and that on another occasion he was blindfolded and taken to a meeting in a block of flats. Mulder was not able to describe any of these contacts with any precision. On October 14, Mulder and two policemen who were involved in his case – Laubser and van Wyk – gave evidence to the Commission. Mulder's testimony was similar to the one he gave to the police.

HENDRIK JOHANNES MULDER'S TESTIMONY TO THE COE⁶¹⁹⁴

Declaration under oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr Mulder where do you live?

MULDER: I live in Heathfield, Galway Road.

TERBLANCHE: And where do you work?

MULDER: For a firm called Decoza Knitting Mills in Cape Town

TERBLANCHE: And what is the nature of your work?

MULDER: Costing Accountant.

TERBLANCHE: Are you a South African citizen, were you born in this country?

MULDER: Yes

TERBLANCHE: Where do you come from?

MULDER: From Uitenhage, sir

TERBLANCHE: Have you been overseas?

MULDER: Yes, I was in Venezuela, South America for 7 years

TERBLANCHE: What did you do there, Mr Mulder?

MULDER: I worked for Sekoni Mobil Oil as a career diver

TERBLANCHE: And did you encounter firearms in your work?

MULDER: Well, not actually firearms, but I learned a lot about explosives. We often had to open areas with explosives, with fuses, know how to cut certain lengths, because when one is under water, at a certain depth, there must be enough time to get away before the explosion.

⁶¹⁹⁴ Hendrik Johannes Mulder testimony in the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

TERBLANCHE: What kind of firm was it?

MULDER: An oil company – many of our oil mines were beneath the water of Lake Maracibo

TERBLANCHE: Did you also learn self-defence?

MULDER: Yes, I am an expert in Kung-fu which is the Chinese version of Karate.

TERBLANCHE: Where did you learn this, Mr Mulder?

MULDER: In Maracibo. I encountered it in one of the JoJo's of clubs where this art was practised. I am the only man in the Republic who can slice two bricks in half.

TERBLANCHE: How do you do this?

MULDER: It can be done with the heel of the hand or with the side of the hand. Like this TERBLANCHE: Would you describe yourself as an expert in dangerous explosives?

MULDER: Not exactly an expert, but "I can make any gimmick" to explode things. On one occasion I wanted to add something to my petrol tank, but someone had put sand in my engine. One of the security police told me to walk away from the situation, and not meddle with explosives – so I walked away from the situation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you want to put sand in again to blow up the car?

MULDER: No I just wanted to give him a fright.

JUDGE VAN WYK: There was a report about this in the Burger newspaper not so?

MULDER: Yes, I gave a shooting demonstration to the Burger.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are you a good shot?

MULDER: Yes I would always be successful in shooting someone.

TERBLANCHE: What kind of weapon do you use?

MULDER: My favourite is the American M.1911-45, which is an automatic pistol.

TERBLANCHE: Are you better with a pistol than with a shotgun? Or vice-versa?

MULDER: Well, I am handier with a pistol than with other firearms. I am accurate with all firearms, but am more comfortable with a pistol, certainly as regards speed.

TERBLANCHE: Special holsters are made especially for them, but you probably don't wear them, like the cowboys, do you?

MULDER: No, they are worn under one's shoulder, with a strap over the back of the shoulder and the holster is totally open, but there is a spin which holds it in place. This is so that one does not have to lift up the pistol, one can just pull the trigger by taking hold of the jacket with a fingertip, then take hold of the handle, pull it forward and the point of the holster is fastened to part of the pants so that the holster cannot move out of place with the pistol.

TERBLANCHE: Are your pistols specially prepared for you?

MULDER: No, not at all.

TERBLANCHE: Are they just the normal types?

MULDER: Yes they are normal but the one I previously mentioned is not obtainable in the Republic anymore today.

TERBLANCHE: While you were in South America did you also visit Argentina?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: What happened to you while you were there?

MULDER: At that time in Argentina someone shot Evuart (sic) Peron and several of us were held in prison on suspicion that we were responsible for shooting him and while in prison one of the others made it look as if he had hung himself and when the guards came in to investigate, we overcame them and managed to escape from jail.

TERBLANCHE: So you escaped, and how did you get away from there?

MULDER: With the boat of one of the Argentinians called a gunboat which is very fast.

TERBLANCHE: Did they find you?

MULDER: No, they could not find us, because we then returned to Venezuela, from which we could not be extradited.

TERBLANCHE: How did you get to Venezuela?

MULDER: We returned with one of the gunboats.

TERBLANCHE: Did you go there with one of the gunboats?

MULDER: No we went by aeroplane, but returned using the gunboat because we were trying to escape detection at all the airports, and rail connections because they would all have been alerted about us.

TERBLANCHE: How did you get to the gunboat?

MULDER: We knew from our tour through Buenos Aires that the gunboats were at anchor there.

TERBLANCHE: So you stole one?

MULDER: Yes we did steal one.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Were you detained although you were innocent?

MULDER: Yes, we were detained while we were entirely innocent. We were just strangers, and they just grabbed onto the nearest person, as often happens.

TERBLANCHE: You said you spent 7 years there?

MULDER: Yes. 7 years.

TERBLANCHE: Which years were those?

MULDER: Not exactly 7 years – from 1944-1950.

TERBLANCHE: When did you return to South Africa?

MULDER: I returned in January 1951.

TERBLANCHE: Where did you live after your return?

MULDER: I went to Port Elizabeth.

TERBLANCHE: How long did you live there?

MULDER: I lived there to 1955 or '56.

TERBLANCHE: Did you then go to Cape Town?

MULDER: Yes, I went to Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: Have you been in Cape Town ever since then?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: Were you not away from there at all?

MULDER: No, never left Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: Which year was it that the article in the Burger referred to by the Judge appeared in print?

MULDER: I really cannot recall – I am not a collector and I do not keep these things.

TERBLANCHE: Give us the approximate year.

MULDER: Around August 1960.

TERBLANCHE: Please tell the Commission the gist of the article please.

MULDER: The article was about my method of shooting, the method of carrying my pistol and my accuracy – such as being able to shoot a penny from between someone's fingers; and also my method of throwing a knife and ability to fight with a knife.

TERBLANCHE: Did photos of you appear in the article?

MULDER: Yes, there were a few photos of me.

TERBLANCHE: After the publication of this article did anything happen because of it?

MULDER: Yes, one evening while I was practising my Kung-fu in the garage, someone knocked first at the front door where my wife directed them to the garage at the back of the house. They did not want to enter into the house, but went around the back and knocked on my garage door but did not want to enter it. They called me to go outside and congratulated me on the fact that I am such a wonderful shot and so on.

TERBLANCHE: You 'they' – how many people were there?

MULDER: Three people.

TERBLANCHE: Did you know them?

MULDER: No, I had never seen them before.

TERBLANCHE: And what language did they speak?

MULDER: They spoke English, but one of them spoke Afrikaans remarkably well, the few times that he did speak.

TERBLANCHE: Were they white people?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: You say they congratulated you?

MULDER: Yes, they congratulated me on being such a good shot and asked me where I had learned to shoot and so on. I thought that perhaps they were interested in a demonstration or something like that.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know how they got there?

MULDER: They had a motor car there which was parked on the corner and they walked a short distance to the house. When they left I did not want to go with them as I was wearing exercise clothes, but I saw them walk around towards the Main road and get into a car. I remember it was one of the 1956-57 Dodge cars, a green colour but I could not see the registration number or any other details as it was already dark.

TERBLANCHE: What did you talk about?

MULDER: They asked me if I like money.

TERBLANCHE: Can you tell us about the conversation in the same language in which it was conducted?

MULDER: The man asked me: "Do you like money?" So I said to him: "Well, who doesn't". Then he said: "Would you like to earn some money?" To which I answered: "It all depends". He then said: "Well, you can earn quite a substantial amount". Then I said to him: "But what's the job?" He then said to me: "Oh, it's a very easy job, and it's not so easy. It all depends on how you are going to go about it". Then I was naturally totally confused and he next said to me: "We want to get this bastard Verwoerd out of this world. Do you think you can eliminate him?" Then I said: "What are you talking about? I don't know what the hell you're talking about". He then said: "Look, we're offering you an amount of 20,000 pounds to eliminate him". I said: "By what method?" So he said: "Well, you're a good shot. Shoot him". He said: "We will pay you the amount of 10,000 pounds now, and you sign a contract to the effect that you will shoot him. Once you have completed the job, we will pay you, or your wife and children, a further 10,000 pounds".

At this point, following a short interruption after the arrival of the Speaker, Terblanche continued with the questioning.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Mulder, we got to where you told us about the offer which the three people made to you, please tell us what your answer was to them?

MULDER: My first answer was: "Don't you think the amount of 20,000 pounds is a little money for such a big man?" That was my first answer. Then I also said to him: "Look here, I am a married man". At that time I only had one child, a little boy, and then I said: "I am not interested in your offer."

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did it not shock you that people wanted to do such a thing?

MULDER: I do not know how you would feel, but I did not feel good about the whole idea. I wanted to deceive them, to put it bluntly, by accepting the first 10,000 pounds, but they wanted me to sign a contract and obviously they did not want to disclose in the contract what the organisation was or to whom I was responsible.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How did you want to do this?

MULDER: I tried to get hold of the first ten thousand pounds by saying to him: "Alright, I'll sign the contract--(and so- and- so) (sic) "but who am I responsible to?" Then they said, "No, never mind. You just sign the contract. We'll give you the ten thousand pounds".

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did they have the contract with them?

MULDER: Yes, they had the contract with them and they wanted me to sign it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was it a typed document or handwritten?

MULDER: No, they would not show it to me. I again asked him: "Who am I responsible to?" but they would not answer my question.

TERBLANCHE: And when you told them.

MULDER: When I told them that I was not interested, they left.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where did the conversation take place?

MULDER: At my home, at the back next to my garage.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you describe the men? How old would you say they were?

MULDER: I cannot remember now. The one man I shall be able to recognise easily if I saw him today. He was short, I estimate about five foot six. He was well set. He had a large face, but it was not fat and he spoke fluent Afrikaans. He had curly hair, light curly hair, not exactly blonde, but light curly hair and this is the one I can remember very well.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Light curly hair?

MULDER: Light curly hair. The other one was a rather tall man – almost as tall as Detective van Wyk.

JUDGE VAN WYK: We do not know what he looks like!

MULDER: He was tall but he was wearing a hat. I could not see him very well. He was very slim. I cannot recall the third person anymore. The Security police took the descriptions from me at that time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but I want to know about the tall man with a hat. Did he have a dark or a light complexion?

MULDER: I really cannot say – as I said before, it was dark and they would not go into the garage where the light was on – everything was done outside.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But the other man which you could see?

MULDER: The other man I saw half-and-half, because the garage light fell on him at one stage.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what were they wearing?

MULDER: The one person whom I can remember – I cannot remember at all what he was wearing. The other one I know was wearing a hat and a suit. And one was wearing sports clothes.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When they left did you not think: “Good Heavens, I must report these men to the Police?”

MULDER: Yes, I did think so, and I did it the next day – I immediately phoned the Security Police and told them what had happened.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, and then?

MULDER: The following day the Security Police came to see me and I made a statement in that regard.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And were the footprints of the men still visible?

MULDER: No, my back yard is completely tarred.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And where their car had been parked?

MULDER: The spot where their car had been parked was also tarred and there were no footprints either.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did any of the men smoke?

MULDER: No, none of them smoked while we were standing there.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And did you ask them how they would pay you? Cash, or whatever?

MULDER: No, I did not ask the, as I was so shocked about the offer. I never thought that the little article in Die Burger would land me in such a situation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Which Police came to see you? Can you remember?

MULDER: To the best of my memory, I may be wrong, but I remember the names Erasmus, van Wyk and Conradie. I cannot recall accurately.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did they come to see you the next day?

MULDER: Yes they came to see me the next day. I had telephoned them immediately to inform them.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And you say it was in 1960?

MULDER: Yes it was in 1960 – I think in November.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When was the first attempt on Dr. Verwoerd's life?

MULDER: I think it was in April, 1961, not so?

TERBLANCHE: Yes, the Rand Easter Show in 1961 in April I think.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Could one then say that it was 5 months later that he was shot?

TERBLANCHE: What about a member of the Security Police, Erasmus?

MULDER: I think I met Erasmus recently when was working in Main Road as an instructor in self-defence for the Police, and he came in and tried to smash my bricks in half. He then asked me if I was committed, because he wanted me to join him where he was then working, but he did not tell me what it was that he was doing at that time.

TERBLANCHE: Where were you living at that time? At the same address?

MULDER: Yes at the same address.

TERBLANCHE: Is that the address which you gave us?

MULDER: Yes.

TERBLANCHE: How long have you been living there?

MULDER: About six years.

TERBLANCHE: Did those men again try to contact you?

MULDER: I do not know whether the Police followed it up.

TERBLANCHE: You do not know? These people?

MULDER: Yes, they phoned several times at work at that time

TERBLANCHE: How long after this incident? After this first incident which you have just told the Commission about?

MULDER: It was about a year later that they called me again. Eight months or a year later they phoned me again asked whether I had not yet considered their offer.

TERBLANCHE: At your place of work?

MULDER: Yes, at work.

TERBLANCHE: And then, what did you say?

MULDER: I just told them: "Look, I told you that I am not interested", and I put down the phone.

TERBLANCHE: Did you report that incident to the Police?

MULDER: Yes, I did report it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How did they know where you worked? How did they find out?

MULDER: I cannot remember. Someone probably asked me where I worked that night –but they had my home address – they got that from Die Burger. They told me that. I could in all probability have told them where I work. I really cannot remember. It was such a long time ago. I can imagine that one of them had asked me where I worked should they want to contact me again. I would have told them but also added that they should not do so, as I was not interested.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if you had the plan to deceive them in order to get hold of the ten thousand pounds, then you must have been a little bit interested, not so?

MULDER: The thing is that one gets such a fright in that instant, about that sort of offer; I mean, murder is not a thing that one normally contemplates.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if you were thinking about the ten thousand pounds?

MULDER: I did think about the money and that I would trick them, but I did not much want...

JUDGE VAN WYK: But if they were prepared to give you the ten thousand pounds, then you could easily afterwards say to them that you knew nothing of ten thousand pounds! They could not after all sue you!

MULDER: Yes, but I also thought that if I did that, then could afterwards come after my wife and child.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you tell your wife about this that night?

MULDER: My wife knows about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: What did she say?

MULDER: She said I should stay away from such things.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Is your wife a South African?

MULDER: Yes, she is a Boer. She comes from Worcester.

TERBLANCHE: And were these the only two occasions that these people or any other person got in touch with you?

MULDER: No, someone phoned me about a year ago.

TERBLANCHE: Where were you when this person called you?

I was then working at Stewarts & Lloyds and I have no idea how they knew I was there.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

MULDER: They asked me if I had reconsidered the offer. Then I said to them: "Look chaps, I have told you once before, I am not interested".

JUDGE VAN WYK: What did they say?

MULDER: They said to me: "We have a fool proof method by which you can actually eliminate Dr. Verwoerd. Then I said to him: "How" Then he said to me "We can arrange it that you get a job in the House of Parliament.” Then they said to me that in that instance I would be close to Dr. Verwoerd on many occasions.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And then?

MULDER: My answer was short and to the point. I just said: “No dice” and I threw down the phone.

JUDGE VAN WYK: “No dice?”

MULDER: Yes, “No dice”! and then I threw down the phone – it is a slang word.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but did you not then think: “But I must get the man to come to me, then I can set it up so that the police can catch him while he is with me”, for instance?

MULDER: Your Honour, I have given certain information to the Police. We will come to one instance later. When they phoned me at Stewarts & Lloyds, I phoned the Security Police and told them about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: That is the matter about which you have just told us?

MULDER: Yes, I told them, and I think in that instance I spoke to a Captain Rossouw at the Security Police in the city.

TERBLANCHE: You spoke telephonically?

MULDER: Yes, telephonically. I called them with the purpose that they could possibly take a declaration from me, or that we could possibly make a plan by which if they should phone me again, we could ‘trap’ them by tracing the phone from which they were speaking.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but why did you not then do so when he made the offer again?

MULDER: Yes, but the whole office was full of people.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So then you did nothing further – did you just talk?

MULDER: No, then I phoned him

JUDGE VAN WYK: You phoned him to tell him about?

MULDER: I phoned him and told him that I want to tell him about it and I said to him: “This is what the offer was about and the next attack on Dr. Verwoerd’s life will take place in the Parliamentary building.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Was it Rossouw to whom you said this?

MULDER: Yes, I think so.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And so?

MULDER: His response was: "Mr Mulder, you do not have to worry. Our Prime Minister is very well protected. We cannot do anymore."

TERBLANCHE: Did you suggest to him that you would help to catch those people?

MULDER: Yes, I wanted to work with the Security Police to catch them when they come to me again.

TERBLANCHE: But did you say this to the person with whom you spoke when you phoned him?

MULDER: No, no, I did not speak to them about at all again – I was very short and to the point with them.

TERBLANCHE: No, no, no! When you spoke to the Police?

MULDER: Oh with the Police?

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, when you phoned Mr. Rossouw?

MULDER: Well, when he answered me in that way I thought oh well, they are not interested. I am not either. I am just making a fool of myself.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You just said that you think it was Captain Rossouw?

MULDER: Yes, I think is Capt. Rossouw.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you not say so with certainty?

MULDER: I cannot say so with certainty, but a while ago someone phoned him, just after Dr. Verwoerd was murdered and then it was mentioned to him. Then he said yes, he could remember such an incident. He said he is also not certain.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Who called him?

MULDER: A friend called Nagel.

JUDGE VAN WYK: A friend of yours?

MULDER: I do not want to involve him here.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but we would really want to know this. Nagel phoned Rossouw?

MULDER: Yes, he phoned Rossouw and said to him: “You see what happened? Mulder warned you.” Then Capt. Rossouw said to him: “Yes, I know Mulder – I can remember something like that.”

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you also tell Nagel about this?

MULDER: Just after I had made the declaration and after I had called Capt. Rossouw, I told Nagel about the incident and I said: “They are not at all interested. Now they must just do whatever they want to do.”

TERBLANCHE: Did he work with you at that time?

MULDER: No, he was just a friend. He is now in Port Elizabeth or one of those places. I do not know exactly where he is. He was here a while ago when he came to say goodbye and that he was going away.

TERBLANCHE: What did he do here in the Cape?

MULDER: He worked at a newspaper or something like that, if I am not mistaken. I had met him at one of the “clubs”.

TERBLANCHE: Which club was that?

MULDER: One of our practice clubs. I was also an Instructor at the Technical College.

TERBLANCHE: So it was at the Technical College that you met him?

MULDER: I am not sure where I had met him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How long after the conversation where people had told you that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the Parliamentary building did you tell this information to Nagel?

MULDER: I think it was within a week of the incident – the murder of Dr. Verwoerd.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you see him again after that?

MULDER: No, I did not see him again after that, but just after Dr. Verwoerd's murder he called me again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: From which place did he call you?

MULDER: He called me from here in the city. He was here in the city.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say to you?

MULDER: He said: "Hennie, your prophecy came true". But at that time I did not actually even know what had happened.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So you did not know what he was talking about?

MULDER: That is correct – I did not know what he was referring to, so I asked him: "What do you mean?" And then he said: "Dr. Verwoerd was murdered this morning"

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where were you when he called you?

MULDER: I was in the office where I am now working.

JUDGE VAN WYK: How long have you been working there?

MULDER: For about 4 months.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But how did he know that you work here if he has been away for such a long time?

MULDER: I wrote to him from time to time and his father probably gave my letters to him, but I had not heard from him for a long time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And where did you write to him – what address?

MULDER: I addressed the letters to the National Printers. His father worked there – but I do not know if he is still there.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Does he not now have his own printers firm?

MULDER: I have no idea. He had problems with his wife and then he began drinking and so forth and moved on.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So he phoned you and said to you?

MULDER: "Your prophecy has come true".

TERBLANCHE: Did he say anything else when he phoned you?

MULDER: I cannot remember.

TERBLANCHE: Did he call you again after that?

MULDER: No, he did not call me again, but someone else did call me one day.

TERBLANCHE: I am asking you this because you said that he had talked to Capt. Rossouw.

MULDER: Yes, he apparently had talked to Capt. Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: Then I want to know how you know that?

MULDER: He said so to me. He said that he had phoned Capt. Rossouw.

TERBLANCHE: In the same conversation?

MULDER: In the same conversation and asked him if he remembered if he knew me. Then Capt. Rossouw said to him: "yes, we know Mulder." Then he said: "Now I remember that he had warned you a year ago about an attack on Dr. Verwoerd in the Parliamentary building. Then Capt. Rossouw said yes he could remember something like that. He just was not absolutely sure, because so much water has flowed under the bridge.

TERBLANCHE: You also wanted to say something about 14 days ago?

MULDER: No, quite a while ago someone phoned me just after Dr. Verwoerd's death. I just do not know how they knew where to get hold of me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where did you get the phone call?

MULDER: They called me at work.

JUDGE VAN WYK: An English or Afrikaans-speaking person?

MULDER: English – the same voice as before.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say?

MULDER: "You see, Mulder, we had no need for you anymore. Somebody else did the job for us. And I can predict now that Advocate Vorster won't last another six months". Whether someone was playing the fool or not, I don't know, but that is what happened.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Mulder, when you saw in the press that the Commission had been established, did you then put yourself forward to make a declaration?

MULDER: These declarations had already been made by me to the Police.

TERBLANCHE: Yes, but did you do so again?

MULDER: Yes, I made a declaration again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Tell me, when did the three people contact you for the first time?

MULDER: It was in 1960.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So, in 1960, apart from your wife and the Police, did you tell anyone else?

MULDER: No, I never told anyone else. I never told anyone else, because I just felt it was none of their business and they might think I was playing the fool.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did you not feel a little bit insulted that those people had thought that you would have been prepared to commit such a deed?

MULDER: Well, to tell the truth, I did not feel insulted immediately, but I was shocked. I was shocked that people could come to me with such an offer. After all, a married man with a wife and a child – to come to a man with such an offer just because he is a good shot and can fight well – this is just ridiculous. To tell the truth, I regard the incident as a farce. I thought they were playing the fool.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But after all they were strangers, so why would they play the fool with you?

MULDER: Yes, but I thought maybe they were just trying to test me, or something like that, because my name had appeared in the newspaper. Many people who come to see me say: “You are the bloke I saw in the paper who smashes bricks. Can you smash a brick?” I say, “Of course I can”. Then they go outside and pick up bricks and say: “Smash this brick for me”. And I say: “Alright, for five pounds I’ll do it for you.” It is unbelievable. They just do not believe it and many people do it just for a joke.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But have other people not also approached you to commit other murders? You know, to use your skills for other occasions – your firearm and so on?

MULDER: No, people like detectives have come to me. Quite a number of detectives and policemen that I have trained in Kung-fu – that is a deadly method of self-defence – all that kind of thing is what I do naturally.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Are there not people who are your enemies?

MULDER: Well, I think I have enemies – for instance quite a number of my family-in-law, who I have assaulted a number of times, but I do not think that I actually have enemies who want to land me in trouble.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Do you think that there are people who are opposed to you and perhaps have sent these people to you to get you into trouble?

MULDER: Possibly, quite possibly.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you ever felt that you are being watched or that people are following you?

MULDER: No, I have not felt that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Possibly you feel that you have enemies and that they will do anything to get you into trouble?

MULDER: No, I have never had such a feeling.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And not in this instance, when the people came to you, did you not think that perhaps they wanted to get you into trouble?

MULDER: No, I have never had such an idea.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You did think it was a case of people “playing the fool”?

MULDER: I actually thought it could have been a prank.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But to be safe did you not think to protect yourself?

MULDER: For safety, to cover myself, in case anything happened, I always called the Security Police. I felt revulsion and very hurt the morning that I found out that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered in Parliament, because I had already given them the warning a year earlier.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Apart from this Nagel, who else did you tell that Dr. Verwoerd – about the people who told you that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered?

MULDER: No, I never told anyone else.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did you not say?

MULDER: I can tell you that after that incident a year ago when I phoned Capt. Rossouw, that I simply felt that I would be making a fool of myself to disclose these things. I just felt that they had not taken any steps, and so I would be making a fool of myself. I thought, leave it alone, what will be, will be and I shall not get myself involved in such things.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but you did then tell Nagel a week later?

MULDER: Yes, I did tell him about the little incident.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but why just Nagel and not your wife as well?

MULDER: He was a very good friend and he is the kind of person who would keep it to himself. He is not the sort of person who would go to others and say Hennie said so and so.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So, it was only him?

MULDER: Yes, I only told him.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did he leave the Cape?

MULDER: Well, I do not know – about ten or fourteen days after Dr. Verwoerd after he phoned me – it was the same day that Dr. Verwoerd was murdered, not afterwards. Then he left again.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you see each other again?

MULDER: No, I did not see him at all, but I was only in touch with him telephonically.

JUDGE VAN WYK: So what did he come here for?

MULDER: I have no idea, Your Honour, I have no idea at the moment what Basil does, or where he works, or whether he works for himself. He talked about starting his own business for a long time, but he does not want to work in the Cape, he wants to get away from the Cape. So I think he just took to the road. But I think there is a Nagel in the Cape who worked at the Commercial printers and who had his own business. Perhaps it is his father.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where does his father live?

MULDER: No, I do not know. His father did live in the city for a while, but I do not know as I never went to his house.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You just met him at the Club?

MULDER: This fellow Nagel I met at the Club. He told me he worked at the Commercial Printers.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But he was actually a good friend?

MULDER: He was a good friend of mine – in the sense that he was very interested in self-defence and so on and in physical exercise.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But you also have good friends amongst the Police too?

MULDER: Yes, I have several friends in the Police. For example Sybrand Hitchcock.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But why did you not tell them “What is wrong with the men that they do not want to negotiate?”

MULDER: Yes, but at that time when this incident happened, there were not any of the police with me in the Club.

JUDGE VAN WYK: I see. When did you start with them?

MULDER: Sybrand Hitchcock has only been with me for the last six or seven months. There were a few other police officers, like Odendaal and so on, who came to the club, but they could not deal with the hard physical exercise, so they soon left.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you get the call that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the House of Assembly? When was that?

MULDER: Just a short while before he was murdered. After his murder, someone called me about Advocate Vorster.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but did you then tell Hitchcock about it?

Yes, I did tell him about it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: You told Hitchcock about Advocate Vorster?

MULDER: Yes, I told him and then he said: “Why do you not go to the Security Police?” So I said: “No look, I did so a year ago when I warned about Dr. Verwoerd and I just made a fool of myself”.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And when was it that you warned them about Dr. Verwoerd?

MULDER: Around November 1960 – I may be wrong as the dates are no longer so clear for me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But when did you warn them?

MULDER: I warned them the same day that the people came to see me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but when you warned them that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in the House of Assembly?

MULDER: That was a year ago.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Yes, but when exactly?

MULDER: Around August of last year. The people who had come to see me originally said that there was a new movement starting up which is financed from England and that is called "The South African Freedom Army". And I gave the police this information about two months before they became aware of it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you give them this information?

MULDER: No, I cannot remember that anymore.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Did you give that information to the Police?

MULDER: Yes, to the police.

JUDGE VAN WYK: The Security Police?

MULDER: I told them that there is in the Republic a movement which is financed in England and the name is The South African Freedom Army and I believe that they dispersed those people.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you give the information to them? Can you remember?

MULDER: No, Your Honour, I cannot remember anymore.

JUDGE VAN WYK: When did you get the information about the South African Freedom Army? When did you get it?

MULDER: No, I cannot remember. The Police have all the records of the information which I gave them, but I remember that two months.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did the same people come to you more than once?

MULDER: No they were only at my house on one occasion.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Then that must have been the occasion when they told you about the Freedom Army or was it when they phoned you?

MULDER: No these people told me about the SA Freedom Army at that time.

JUDGE VAN WYK: The same people?

MULDER: The same people told me that at that same time. Yes it was at the same time that they told me about the Freedom Army and then I told them – the Security Police. The same time that I made the declaration about the offer.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Oh?

MULDER: And two months after that there was a press report about a movement called the South African Freedom Army. I think the morning that I spoke to Sergeant van Wyk and then I asked him whether he had seen the press report and whether he remembered that I had told him about it a short while previously. Then I referred him to my declaration.

JUDGE VAN WYK: And what did he say?

MULDER: I cannot recall what Sgt. van Wyk had said – just that he had seen it.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Why should he know about it? Was he one of the policemen whom you had told about the incident?

MULDER: Yes, Sgt. van Wyk was one of the men attached to the Security Police of that time and who came to me and who took a number of declaration/statements from me.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS DISMISSED

JOHANNES PETRUS FRANCOIS VAN WYK'S TESTIMONY TO THE COE⁶¹⁹⁵

Declared under Oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, are you a Detective-Sergeant attached to the Security Section of the SA Police?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I am.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know the previous witness, Hendrik Mulder, who has just testified?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He is known to me.

TERBLANCHE: When did you meet him for the first time?

⁶¹⁹⁵ Johannes Francois Petrus van Wyk's testimony in the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: It was in 1961. I cannot remember the precise date.

TERBLANCHE: Were you with someone or were you alone?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I was with the retired Detective-Sergeant Loubser (sic), also attached to the Security Police of that period.

TERBLANCHE: Why did you go to see him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Because he had on a previous occasion provided information to us about an intended sabotage action.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Which sabotage incident was this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He had stated that a proposition had been made to him about a fantastic amount of money which would be given to him if he was prepared to blow up the offices of "Die Burger" newspaper in Keerom St. in Cape Town.

TERBLANCHE: And that was the reason for your visit to him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: That is correct.

TERBLANCHE: What did he tell you about that proposition which had been made to him?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Well, he said that one evening two Jews went to his home and said that they had seen an article in "Die Burger"⁶¹⁹⁶ newspaper the supplement section – which dealt with his expertise with firearms.

TERBLANCHE: Yes?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: They apparently said to him that if he was prepared to blow up the offices of Die Burger newspaper in Keerom St. they would pay him a fantastic amount of money.

TERBLANCHE: Did he mention the amount?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I recall the amount of R20,000.00. It could have been either Rands or Pounds, but I do know that the amount was "twenty thousand".

TERBLANCHE: Did he mention how they wanted him to do it?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: They told him that it would be easy for him to gain entry to the offices by just going there and telling the Editor that he had another story to give them about his expertise with firearms, and that he should take along a parcel containing a time bomb. He should then leave the parcel in the offices and walk out. People who would later come across the parcel would simply assume that someone had forgotten it and leave it untouched.

⁶¹⁹⁶ Incorrectly spelled as "Bruger" throughout this testimony.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, did the two of you question Mr. Mulder about this statement?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I questioned him very thoroughly about his statement to us. He was very vague. He could not give a description about the two people, except that they looked like Jews. He said that they had arrived in a motor car, but could not provide the make, or colour or the registration number of the car, but emphasised that he definitely could identify them if he saw them again.

TERBLANCHE: Did you at that time make any arrangements with Mr. Mulder?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: We arranged that when the people visited him again he would notify us immediately.

TERBLANCHE: From what he had said did you think that those people would visit him again?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He said that he had told them that he would help them, but that he needed time to think it over. His excuse was that he would want to be able to have the time to report the incident to us. According to him they said that they would return in two or three days. That was why we asked him to contact us immediately when they did so.

TERBLANCHE: Apart from that arrangement with him did you do anything else?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Without saying anything to him we did actually keep the house under observation to see whether any people did indeed visit him. For almost ten days nobody visited him while we were there. So, we went to see him again, when he told us that the same two people had visited him again. That was during the time that we put his house under observation.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Why did he not inform you?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He only claimed that he had been too busy. I then remarked that this was strange because we had not observed the car at his house. His immediate reaction was to claim that the car had parked at the bottom of the road and that he had only seen the red lights as they drove away. I then repeated that it was strange that we had not seen the people enter the house, to which he replied that they had approached his house from behind the bushes which were behind the house.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Could he describe the people?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He could never give a description apart from adding that one of them was starting to go grey just above his ears. That was the only description he could give.

TERBLANCHE: Did you approach him again?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: We asked him to stay in touch with us on a regular basis, and a while later I went to see him again to enquire why he had not been in touch with us. By that time he had again changed employment and we had difficulty in tracing him. He then told us that the men had again visited him when he was alone at home, and that they persuaded him to get into a large car with them and then they had driven to Sea Point where they all went into a block of flats and entered a flat on the 5th floor where 7 people were assembled. I questioned him thoroughly about this incident but he could not give a description of the car which I said to him was strange, but his reply was that when they entered his house they blindfolded him, led him to the car and forced him into the back of the car while the two men sat in the front. Then I asked him how he knew it was a large car and he replied that he could feel that it was large car and therefore assumed that it was large.

I asked him to try to get the number of the car, or the names of the people and also while he did not peep out of the blindfold while he was sitting in the back of the car. He then immediately responded that he had peeped, by moving the blindfold while he was bending down to fasten his shoelace, but that he still could not see anything because he found that there were two black curtains on the inside of the car windows.

I then asked him how he knew they were in Sea Point if he was blindfolded and his reply was that the roads were very steep and thus he made that assumption. When I asked him how he knew that the flat was on the 5th floor, he said that he felt the movement of the lift which took a little while to reach the next stage and so he knew that it was block of flats and not a house. When I asked him how he knew it was the 5th floor, he said that the one person had said to the other that he should press the button for the 5th floor.

Once again he could not identify them because he was blindfolded and when I asked him how he knew that there were 7 people, he said because he could distinguish 7 voices, and then he added that he suddenly remembered, whilst he was talking to me, that while in the flat, he once again moved his blindfold a fraction and noticed that the one person had red hair and that was the only description he could give of all the 7 people. This story sounded altogether too fantastic and we thought it was entirely implausible.

TERBLANCHE: Mr. van Wyk, did he ever report to you that people approached him to murder Dr. Verwoerd?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Never. While he reported other things to me, he never mentioned an attack on Dr. Verwoerd.

TERBLANCHE: Have you ever spoken to his wife?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No, we never saw her and I never saw her.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know a person by the name of Nagel?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Well, I know several different people with that name.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He said it is a person who worked at the National Press to whom he had said that he had received a message about the murder on Dr. Verwoerd?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No your Honour, I do not know that Nagel. The Nagels that I know are all criminals. They have no connection with this Mulder.

TERBLANCHE: He said that he had in 1960 also told the two of you about the "South African Freedom Army" which is based in England and operates here.

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: The only time that the "Freedom Army" was heard about was in 1963 when it was actually known as "The African Resistance Movement."

TERBLANCHE: No, he says the name was The South African Freedom Army and that it is financed in England and that it was after he had told the Police about his information that people had asked him to murder Dr. Verwoerd and also that after he had told the Police about the South African Freedom Army that 2 months later the newspapers first reported about these rumours and that he had then said that to you remember? Did he tell you about the South African Freedom Army?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No he never reported this to me. He also never gave us any information about this subject and if he had given it to other members of the police force I would have heard about in the course of my work because it is those kind of files that I deal with personally all the time.

TERBLANCHE: Do you know a detective called Erasmus?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Yes, that is Captain Erasmus of the Diamond Section.

TERBLANCHE: Was he based here in the Cape?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: He was here from the 1st of January until the 31st of March 1963, with the Security Section of the Police.

TERBLANCHE: And after that? Where did he go?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Afterwards he served with the Diamond Section of the Police in different places.

TERBLANCHE: He told us that in 1960 he was offered R20,000.00 to murder Dr. Verwoerd. Have you any knowledge of this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No, your Honour. If he had given such information I should also have known about it.

TERBLANCHE: He said that they wanted to give 10,000.00 Pounds in advance and that then 10,000.00 Pounds after he had done it, but that he had to sign a document?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: No the first information from him was that which I have just given to you.

TERBLANCHE: Which information is this?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: About the sabotage at Die Burger offices.

TERBLANCHE: When he informed the Police?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Yes, he did give other information about other people in 1963.

TERBLANCHE: What was the information that he gave in 1963?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: It was information that he gave to me personally, about the investigation about Alexander and others, who worked in the High Court in Cape Town. It involved a man called "Enval Marnie". A typewriter that Dr. Alexander used for the typing of his documents was hidden by "Enval Marnie" who worked at 'Cape Oil Products' and Mr. Mulder worked at the same place and after it became known that Enval Marnie had given testimony in the case he reported to me that Enval Marnie held Communist meetings daily at his workplace and this was investigated and found to be false.

TERBLANCHE: Also found to be false?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Found to be totally false.

TERBLANCHE: And did he come to you with that information?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: Soon after the man had testified and this was reported in the papers I bumped into him and he said to me by the way you probably know Enval Marnie and after I confirmed this he gave me the above statement.

TERBLANCHE: He has also told us that he is an Instructor at Wynberg and that he trains the Police in "Kung-fu"?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I have no knowledge of this.

TERBLANCHE: He told us here that he has been working at the same place since about 1960. Do you know that he had worked at other places?

DT. SGT. VAN WYK: I know that at one time he worked at a place in Lower Main Road in Observatory. Unfortunately I am not now in a position to give the name of the firm. Afterwards he worked at a shop on the corner of Essik Street and Victoria Road in Woodstock. Then he worked for a while at Cape Oil Products in Maitland. Afterwards he worked at an engineering firm and now he is at another firm in Garfield Road in Claremont. He continually moves from one workplace to another. He makes a statement to us and then by the time we go to investigate it he has already moved to another workplace.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS EXCUSED

PETRUS GERHARDUS LAUBSER TESTIMONY TO THE COE⁶¹⁹⁷

Declared under Oath.

Examined by Mr. Terblanche and Judge van Wyk:

TERBLANCHE: Mr. Laubser, you were attached to the Security Dept. of the SA Police from September 1961 until 1963?

LAUBSER: Yes I was.

TERBLANCHE: During that period did you come into contact with a certain Hendrik Mulder?

LAUBSER: Yes I did.

TERBLANCHE: I assume that you saw him here this morning?

LAUBSER: Yes, I saw him.

TERBLANCHE: How did it happen that you came into contact with him?

LAUBSER: It was during 1962, when one day I received an assignment from Major van der Westhuizen to speak to him concerning certain information, so Detective-Sergeant van Wyk and I went to see him and when we got to his house he told us that three white men had gone to his house the previous night and made a certain proposition to him, but he could not give us a description of the three men –

JUDGE VAN WYK: What was the proposition?

LAUBSER: He said that the three men had apparently read an article on him in the "Klein Burger" (so called at that time) – about his expertise with firearms and Karate and that sort of thing, and the men made the proposition that he should return to the Burger as he knew people there, and that they would give him a time bomb which he should leave there to blow up the building – and at a later stage –

JUDGE VAN WYK: Would they have paid him to do this?

LAUBSER: Yes, they would have paid him a certain amount to do this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Can you remember what the amount was?

⁶¹⁹⁷ Petrus Gerhardus Loubser testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

LAUBSER: No, I cannot remember anymore, but it was a large amount. Well. He then said that he would think about it and that they should visit him again, and then on a later occasion he also said to me that the three men had made a proposition to him, in that they wanted him to act as an instructor to 20,000 volunteers which he had already recruited. The training would take place at a camp which was to be established and he was wanted because of his expertise with firearms.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But the three men never returned to him.

LAUBSER: We placed him under observation on various evenings to see whether the alleged car returned to his house. I spoke to him on another occasion at the end of 1962. This took place at a shop in Main Road, Woodstock where he then worked at a men's outfitter.

The subject of motor cars came up and he then told me that around the time that Dr. Verwoerd had just come into power, around 1959, when he was working as a motor mechanic at a certain garage in District Six which was owned by a Jew, that he and a client argued about the outrageously high price of the repairs. This person then made a proposition to him about shooting Dr. Verwoerd, but he declined, saying he was not interested. Think about this: the proposition was made to him in 1959 and it was only in 1962 that he first reported the incident to us.

TERBLANCHE: Did you question him about this man?

LAUBSER: Yes I did. He said the man is no longer there. The garage is closed. He could not provide the man's name, he could not give the name of the garage, he could not remember anything!

TERBLANCHE: Could he give you any definitive description of these people?

LAUBSER: No he could not although we asked him repeated occasions. He just said that he thought they were three Jews. He could not give a description of the car and he could not describe the number or anything – nothing!

JUDGE VAN WYK: Do you know anything about a message that he had sent about someone calling him on the telephone?

LAUBSER: Yes from time to time he said that people were allegedly calling him repeatedly. The strange thing about all this is that at the time that he gave us the information he was unemployed and had been without work for months. But then as soon as he allegedly started working somewhere then these people would call – and how they knew about his workplace so quickly is beyond strange.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But he let you know about these calls made to him on more than one occasion?

LAUBSER: I do not know about that. I only went to him on that one occasion on Major van der Westhuizen's instruction.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But then how did he come to tell you about the many places where calls had been made to him?

LAUBSER: He told that to me after I had seen him again that the people had been calling him repeatedly.

JUDGE VAN WYK: I see.

LAUBSER: But he does not know – he never knows – I still do not believe that he knows who these people are or where they can be found.

JUDGE VAN WYK: But did he not ever tell you that he had received a call telling him that Dr. Verwoerd would be murdered in Parliament?

LAUBSER: No, I know nothing of that – he never told me about anything like that.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you ever heard that he had made that statement?

LAUBSER: No.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Have you heard it now?

LAUBSER: No, nothing yet.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He has just told us that he had called Captain Rossouw to give his this information.

LAUBSER: I see him quite often and I do not remember him telling me about this.

JUDGE VAN WYK: Where do you see him regularly?

LAUBSER: I have seen him on a number of occasions in Woodstock when he has walked past me and greeted me and although he knows that I am connected with the Security Police, he never reported this to me.

JUDGE VAN WYK: He has just said that he again had a call from someone who said that Advocate Vorster would only last six months now that they have dealt with Dr. Verwoerd?

LAUBSER: No your Honour, I do not know anything about this. I think the man has a fantastic imagination. That is my opinion of him.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS-WITNESS DISMISSED

CONCLUSION

Detective van Wyk testified that in 1962 Mulder claimed that two men offered him 20,000 Rand or pounds to blow up the offices of Die Burger newspaper by leaving a time-bomb in the building in Cape Town. Mulder could not describe the men or their car. After Mulder reported the alleged offer to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building, the police secretly observed his house. Mulder later told him the two men had returned during this period, but the police watchers said no-one visited. Later again, Mulder claimed he was blindfolded and taken to a meeting on the 5th floor of a block of flats, a story which the police considered “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.”

Dt. Sgt. van Wyk said Mulder also claimed a man at his workplace held Communist meetings, an allegation which the police found to be false. As for the blindfolded visit to a block of flats, van Wyk said the police considered it “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.” Mulder also told Dt. Sgt. van Wyk in 1962 that three years earlier a man had asked him to assassinate Dr Verwoerd. The detective naturally stated that “the proposition was made to him in 1959 and it was only in 1962 that he first reported the incident to us.”

Laubser testified that he interviewed Mulder after he told police he had been offered a large sum of money to blow up the Die Burger newspaper by planting a time bomb, but he could not describe the men who made the offer. On another occasion, he said he was working as a mechanic at a garage when a customer tried to persuade him to shoot Dr. Verwoerd. He said he could not describe the customer and the garage itself was by now closed. Laubser concluded that Mulder “has a fantastic imagination.”

Mulder's story is far-fetched, full of inconsistencies and lies, as both policemen correctly noted. As to his connection with Tsafendas, the only remote connection was when Mulder claimed his contacts told him they could arrange access to Dr Verwoerd by securing a position in Parliament. That Tsafendas had reached Dr. Verwoerd by just such a method, as a Parliamentary messenger, had been all over the newspapers for more than a month. It is well within the bounds of possibility that an evident fantasist such as Mulder could have made up such a claim retrospectively to strengthen his story. The Commission quite rightly shared the two policemen's opinion regarding Mulder's testimony, and would not mention his case in its Report.

SYNOPSIS OF OTHER TESTIMONIES

The following are synopsis of testimonies or statement given to the Commission. They were found in the archives but have nothing or very little to say about Tsafendas and are of no importance:

THELMA BERYL SUDDER

Sudder was Rowley Israel Arenstein's secretary and was questioned by the police after they learned that Tsafendas often visited Arenstein's office in Durban. She testified on 22nd October that, "I was shown a police file containing several newspaper photographs of Tsafendas. I have never seen him in my office or with Mr. Arenstein. If Tsafendas did call to see Mr. Arenstein, I was the most likely person to attend to him. There was a rumour that Tsafendas had worked at the Court in Durban as an interpreter. Our offices are situated opposite the Court buildings (Supreme Court and Magistrate's Court). I had already discussed this fact before Capt. Broodryk had interviewed me, and I am therefor positive, as far as I am concerned, that he has never called at our office. To the best of my knowledge I have never seen him."⁶¹⁹⁸ ⁶¹⁹⁸ Thelma Beryl Sudder statement to the COE, 22 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

NICOLAI ROMANOFF (Crown Prince)⁶¹⁹⁹

This appears to be the statement of person who calls himself the ‘Crown Prince.’ He testified that Tsafendas was a hired assassin hired by someone called John Pascilly in Tangier where he was “given full training then given a one-year living, then sent out on a job. He was hired by Col. Nasser who paid R100,000 for the assassination. The object being to destroy the PMs conference held in England at that time.” He then went on to say that Tsafendas was also hired to assassinate Ian Smith, the Prime Minister of Rhodesia, on 21 September 1966, and then 5,000 guerrillas who were stationed in Zambia were going to invade the country.⁶²⁰⁰ The rest of the statement contains information along the same lines, some of it even more absurd which suggests that Romanoff’s statement cannot be taken seriously. The Commission and the police also did not appear to treat his statement seriously.

PETER CECIL VISSER

Visser was the assistant manager at the Mount Nelson Hotel, Cape Town, where it was rumoured that Tsafendas had applied for a job. Visser testified that “Tsafendas did not apply to our hotel for a position.”⁶²⁰¹

ANATOLE URBANIAK

Urbaniak was manager of the Grand Hotel in Cape Town and a member of the hotel Board. He testified that Tsafendas had made a job application to the hotel Board in Pretoria, which was turned down, but he had not applied to the Grand Hotel in Cape Town. He had no personal knowledge of him.⁶²⁰²

HENDRIK KLOPPER

Klopper was the Speaker of the National Assembly and was in charge of Parliament and its staff, including messengers and cleaners. Klopper’s testimony is sixteen pages long and involves discussion between him and the Commission on ways to improve security and ⁶¹⁹⁹ No date is given in this statement.

⁶²⁰⁰ Nikolai Romanoff statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶²⁰¹ Peter Cecil Visser statement to the COE, 3 November 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

⁶²⁰² Anatole Urbaniak statement to the COE, 3 November 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

which measures would work if implemented. None of it relates to Tsafendas or the assassination.⁶²⁰³

SAREL JOHANNES VENTER

He was a major in the South African police, attached to the staff of the Divisional Commissioner in Cape Town. His testimony concerns discussions he had in the past regarding security in the House of Assembly. It includes nothing about Tsafendas.⁶²⁰⁴

ROBERT JOHN MCFARLANE⁶²⁰⁵

⁶²⁰³ Hendrik Klopper testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol.: 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁶²⁰⁴ Sarel Johannes Venter's statement, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

⁶²⁰⁵ Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

McFarlane, Secretary to the House of Assembly, gave evidence twice to the Commission, but there is nothing in his statements relevant to Tsafendas, who is not even mentioned. His first testimony mainly concerned internal security arrangements such as the duties of police, reception of parcels and vetting procedures. McFarlane testified for a second time on October 25, 1966, answering questions from the Commission about security arrangements in the House. These ranged over the quality and availability of messengers, screening practices and the question of previous convictions. McFarlane said the current system had operated without fault since 1910 and the House had employed many thousands of messengers.⁶²⁰⁶ ⁶²⁰⁶ Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA; Robert John McFarlane testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

LETTERS AND MEMORANDA

The following are important letters⁶²⁰⁷ and memoranda sent to the Commission. Several others were found but they did not contain anything significant or that has not been said already.

GENERAL HENDRIK J. VAN DEN BERGH'S MEMORANDUM TO THE COE⁶²⁰⁸

Memorandum

Testimony of Major-General H. J. Den Bergh - Commentary by Lieutenant General J.M. Keevy, Commissioner of the South African police.

1. The circumstances surrounding the finding of S.A. Police file WD. 10/10/4102 are set out completely in the memorandum C. 8/66/4/1 of 14 October 1966 addressed to me by my Head Office, Pretoria, the original of which has already been submitted to the COE.
2. Paragraphs 2.1 and 2.2 of the same memorandum deals with SA Police Headquarters file C. 6/835/3697 (C. 6/1835/3697 is the correct reference number).
3. As a result of inquiries made by my Head Office, the indications are that this file was destroyed in 1963 when the Security Police moved from Wachthuis to Kompol building.
4. Destruction of files are maintained by the Archives Law 6/1962 which came into force on 14 May 1962 (see Proc. R103 of 1962) and the regulations issued thereunder (see Government Notice No. 1380 of 1963, published in Extraordinary Gazette 595 of 06/09/63). In addition to this the departmental instructions contained in Special Order 14A of 1961 (Annexure A) as read with Standing Order 340 (Annexure B) also applies.
5. In summary, the S.A. Police policy could be set out as follows:
 - a) General correspondence files from Head Office to division offices are kept under the Archives Law 6/1962 and regulations as they appear in Government Notice 1380 of 1963 published in Extraordinary Gazette 595 of 06/09/1963 and standing order 340 as amended. No correspondence files in the latter offices are thus destroyed unless proper authorization from the Director of Archives is obtained. Secret and confidential files are included. Of such files which are destroyed, proper record with archive authorisation affixed thereto, is kept.

⁶²⁰⁷ Witnesses who, for whatever reason, were unable to testify physically to the Commission, sent their statements by post.

⁶²⁰⁸ General H. J. Den Bergh memorandum to the COE, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File VDSO 17-64, NASA.

b) Standing destruction authorisation was obtained from the Director of Archives for the annual destruction of correspondence files in district and Station Commanders' offices, personal files, registers, forms, dockets, etc. in all offices, and it is in terms of the provisions of Order 340 and Special Order (A) 14A / 1961. This policy was also applicable for the year 1963.

6. Files at Headquarters, Pretoria, as well as Division Offices, of the nature of the missing Tsafendas file C. 6/1835/3697 (not C. 6/835/3697 as Home Affairs has it) should, according to existing orders be strictly treated by the provisions of the Archive Law and regulations. This means that a record must be kept of each file that was destroyed or transferred to an archive repository.

7. The S.A. Police maintains a uniform filing system, which however for obvious reasons cannot be used with the Security Police.

8. Concerning the reservation list of illegal immigrants, a list gets sent to Security Head Office, Pretoria, and all border posts which control the entering of persons in the RSA. This aspect has already been dealt with by way of a comprehensive memorandum submitted to the commission.

9. A list on which Tsafendas's name appears has been in the possession of the Security Police since 1965. The question whether they should not have established on 06.09.66 if his name appears on that list before unequivocally declaring that the police knew nothing of him, is an open one. The list covers persons prohibited from entering the country and as such the police accept that a person whose name appears on it, is not in the country.

10. Regarding the lack of safety measures at the Assembly, I want to explain that the whole matter is currently under consideration and review by all the parties concerned.

11. Finally, I refer to the desirability or otherwise that the names of the mentally deranged who could possibly be a threat to the country's rulers and the like, be given to the SA Police by the doctors who treat them. It could serve a useful purpose if their names are kept on file as applications from people who want to be employed in positions of security interest can be selected with greater thoroughness.

Signed by J.M. Keevy. Commissioner of the South African police.

Cape Town 18 October 1966.

GORDON TOBIN'S MEMORANDUM TO THE COE⁶²⁰⁹

20 October 1966.

Subject: Vallie article in POST.

Sirs, I was present in the Cape Town offices of POST on September 24 1966, when Mr. M. "Sharkey" Isaacs, (a POST reporter) told Mr. Gordon Winter that he did not want to write an article about Isak Vallie and Demitrio Tsafendas. Mr. Isaacs told Mr. Winter that, according to Isak Vallie, Tsafendas had once been to his father's cafe in Tennant Street, District Six and that Tsafendas had mentioned that he was a Russian and that he had had dealings, swopping food for clothing, with fishermen on Russian fishing vessels off the coast of Walvis Bay, SWA. Mr. Winter asked Mr. Isaacs why he did not want to write the article about this matter. Mr. Isaacs replied that he was scared of being beaten up by the Vallie family because the Vallie family did not want the article published. Mr. Winter then said he would go and interview the Vallie family and get the story. At that stage I left the office.

Signed ... Gordon Tobin.

Witnessed ... (indecipherable name)

A.J. HARRISON'S LETTER⁶²¹⁰

⁶²⁰⁹ Gordon Tobin memorandum to the COE, 20 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: die Post aangeleentheid, NASA.

⁶²¹⁰ A.J. Harrison letter to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

The person referred to arrived in the shop at approximately 9.05 a.m. on September 6th, just after I had opened - he was the first customer and no one else entered the shop whilst I was serving him. He wore grey, baggy flannels, a white shirt and a light-coloured jacket. His general appearance gave me the impression that he was either a fisherman or a merchant seaman. He spoke fluent English and asked me for the prices of the sheath knives displayed in the shop window. I showed him two sheath knives and after looking at the first one, he placed it on the counter and then removed the second one from the sheath, asking why the knife was so tight to remove. I explained that it was a metal sheath with a spring clip, which prevented the knife from slipping out.

He then replaced the knife in the sheath and slipped it on the inside of his trousers with the leather top of the sheath facing outwards. He then removed the knife and once more asked the price. He tendered a R10.00 note from his wallet in payment. Whilst I was getting his change, he looked at an advertisement of a pistol and enquired whether one needed to have a licence to purchase same. I informed him in the affirmative. I did not enquire his reason for purchasing the knife and he tendered no reason for doing so. This was the first time I had seen this person and when I was called to the Identification Parade, I was absolutely certain that the person I identified was the person who had purchased the knife from me and now known to our nation as Demitrio Tsafendas.

IN ADDITION:

- On the 15th November, the Liberal Party of South Africa sent a letter informing the Commission that the members of the party had no knowledge of Tsafendas.⁶²¹¹
- A list from the Department of Home Affairs was sent to the Commission with the names on the Stop List of the Ministry. Tsafendas appears as Demitrio Tsafandakis and Demitrio Tsafendas, born in Lourenço Marques or Delogo Bay in 14.1.1918, listed in group G, interior file no/SA Police reference B7771.⁶²¹²

⁶²¹¹ Letter of Mrs. Klugman, secretary of the Liberal Party, to the Commission. 17 October 1966. K150. Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

⁶²¹² Stop List of the Department of Home Affairs. K150, Vol. 3, File: Policie daraan. NASA.

ANALYSIS OF THE COMMISSION'S REPORT

The resulting Report, thirty single-spaced, double-column pages consisting of eleven chapters and two annexures, purports to give a detailed account of Tsafendas's life. It looks impressively detailed and convincing to someone who is unaware of Tsafendas's life and is reading the Report to find out about him. However, despite the huge input, it is a mishmash of often superficial information, lacking answers to crucial questions, at times evasive and invariably denigratory where Tsafendas is concerned.

Surrendering any pretence to even-handedness, the Report goes into considerable detail when dealing with something that might fit the picture of a schizophrenic or apolitical Tsafendas, but is significantly less forthcoming when facts contradict such an image. In addition, the language used to describe Tsafendas is frequently of a belittling nature, often misrepresenting his character and intentions. What highlights the dishonesty of the document is that the evidence gathered by the Commission is materially very different from that which appears in its Report. The purpose of this section is to examine the errors in the Commission's Report, including its omissions and distortions. Those parts of the Report which are not discussed are free of error or contain nothing relevant. This is the list, with the Report's chapters:

Chapter I: Introduction

Chapter II: The History of Demitrio Tsafendas

Chapter III: Demitrio Tsafendas's Motives

Chapter IV: Were there Accomplices?

Chapter V: The Permit for Temporary Sojourn

Chapter VI: The Permit for Permanent Residence

Chapter VII: The Visa to Visit Rhodesia and Mozambique

Chapter VIII: Demitrio Tsafendas's Return via Durban on 8th March

Chapter IX: The Removal Order

Chapter X: The House of Assembly

Chapter XI: The Police

CHAPTER II: THE HISTORY OF DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS

Chapter II of the Commission's Report deals exclusively with Tsafendas's life, from the day he was born to the summary trial. According to the Commission, Tsafendas's "history has been compiled from information obtained from the sources referred to above. A part is derived from statements which Tsafendas made to policemen and other persons. Where any material fact has been supplied solely by Tsafendas, this is stated explicitly in this report."⁶²¹³ Tsafendas's life story in terms of chronological order and his travels is mostly accurate, but there are some places which he visited that are not mentioned, for example his second visit in London in 1962.

The analysis of the Report is presented in two parts. In the first, we will examine some general topics that are mentioned throughout the Report, such as Tsafendas's employment, his political ideas, his mental state etc. The second part deals with specific incidents mentioned in the Report, for example the vitally important Eleni, his fight with Vergos and so on.

⁶²¹³ Chapter II A, Paragraph 1.

PART I: GENERAL SUBJECTS

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES AND IDEOLOGY

The Report ranges widely over Tsafendas's political activities, giving the impression that he was not as indifferent or "confused" about politics as he was portrayed at the summary trial.

The Report states:

- That Tsafendas was a member of the South African Communist Party from 1937 to 1942.⁶²¹⁴
- That the South African police had four files on him.⁶²¹⁵
- That he was dismissed from a job in Mozambique due to his Communist tendencies.⁶²¹⁶
- That he was suspected of disseminating Communist propaganda in Mozambique in the late 1930s.⁶²¹⁷
- That he was engaged in distributing Communist propaganda in South Africa in the early 1940s.⁶²¹⁸
- That he was on the Stop List of the Government because he was listed as Communist.⁶²¹⁹
- That his nine visa applications for entry to South Africa were all turned down because he was listed as a Communist.⁶²²⁰
- That the Department of Immigration had two files on him.⁶²²¹
- That he was reported by two different men to a South African security officer as a "dangerous Communist" and was also characterised as a "Communist bastard."⁶²²²
- That he expressed himself strongly against the South African Government and in favour of Communism.⁶²²³

⁶²¹⁴ Chapter II A, Paragraph 23.

⁶²¹⁵ Chapter XI, Paragraphs 4 and 5.

⁶²¹⁶ Chapter II A, Paragraph 19.

⁶²¹⁷ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

⁶²¹⁸ Chapter II A, Paragraph 26.

⁶²¹⁹ Chapter II B, Paragraphs 29-30. Chapter VI, Paragraphs 19-20.

⁶²²⁰ Chapter VI, Paragraphs 18 and 20.

⁶²²¹ Chapter IV, Paragraph 19; Chapter IV, Paragraph 20.

⁶²²² Chapter II C, Paragraph 29

⁶²²³ Chapter II C, Paragraph 32.

- That he was arrested and imprisoned by the Portuguese Public Security Police accused of making subversive statements.⁶²²⁴
- That he had attended several meetings of the Anti-Colonial Movement and the Anti-Apartheid Movement.⁶²²⁵
- That he tried to recruit people for an uprising in South Africa and Mozambique.⁶²²⁶

All of the above information is true, but every one of the points listed, apart from the last one, was already known to the public through the Press, therefore the Commission could not feasibly omit them. That Tsafendas was a former member of the SACP was something he admitted to the police when interrogated, was well-known to many of his friends and acquaintances and was published by The Post on 30th October, 1966 while the Commission was still collecting evidence. That Tsafendas was fired from a job in Mozambique because of his Communist tendencies, that he was placed on the Stop List because of his beliefs and that he was actively engaged in Communist propaganda while in South Africa in the early 1940s were all facts contained in various official documents and quoted by the South African Press.

However, Tsafendas's political activities were significantly more wide-ranging than those outlined by the Commission and extended over many years and many countries. The Commission omitted the majority of these activities while downplaying others. What was easy to ignore was information about Tsafendas given verbally to the police or to the Commission and this is perhaps one reason why so many statements have gone missing. Other important details may have been disregarded because the Commission thought them unimportant. What is likelier, however, is that a vigorous, politically engaged activist as suggested by this evidence was the very opposite of the vapid and pathetic figure the Commission persistently sought to present.

⁶²²⁴ Chapter III C, Paragraph 19.

⁶²²⁵ Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

⁶²²⁶ Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

OMISSIONS AND DOWNPLAYING OF TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Let us examine what has been said and what has been omitted or downplayed with regard to Tsafendas's political ideas and activities.

TSAFENDAS'S POLITICAL ACTIVITIES WHILE IN ENGLAND

*While in England, Tsafendas was noticed in the company of leftists. According to Tsafendas, some of these persons expressed the opinion in private discussions that the Prime Minister of South Africa should be shot, but he could not remember who had said so.*⁶²²⁷

According to Tsafendas he attended several political meetings in England, including meetings of the Committee of African Organizations, the Anti-Colonial Movement and the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

*Evidence was submitted to the Commission that Tsafendas had tried to recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa. He admits that he did in fact try to recruit people for an uprising, but says that his aim was confined to the Territory of Mozambique.*⁶²²⁸

The Commission here reveals that Tsafendas was politically active while in England. Once again, the information is correct, but the Commission has omitted important facts. The most significant of these concerns Tsafendas's political aims and activities at the time which are relevant to his motive for killing Dr. Verwoerd. Edward Furness, a South African living and working in London at the time, testified to the South African police that Tsafendas was "a regular visitor" to a Labour Party office which was used by members of the anti-apartheid movement, and that he had seen him there "in company of several members" of the movement. Furness testified that Tsafendas told him that he wanted to "create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power."⁶²²⁹

Not only was this testimony in the possession of the Commission, but Furness also gave evidence personally to the Commission. What is important is Tsafendas's reported willingness to do anything that would get the South African regime out of power. The statement demonstrates his eagerness to oppose apartheid a full six years before Dr.

⁶²²⁷ Chapter II B, Paragraph 31.

⁶²²⁸ Chapter II B, Paragraph 32.

⁶²²⁹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

