

REPORT TO THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE, ADVOCATE TSHILOLO MICHAEL MASUTHA, IN THE MATTER OF
DR. VERWOERD'S ASSASSINATION

By

Harris Dousemetzis¹

¹ Harris Dousemetzis is a tutor at the School of Government and International Affairs at Durham University, England and a Fellow of the Higher Education Academy. He holds a PhD in politics (The Presidency of Jimmy Carter and the Emerging Politics of Gay Rights and Evangelical Religion) from the same university. The Report was edited by Gerard Loughran, a retired foreign correspondent for the US news agency, United Press International, who also spent eleven years in senior editorial capacities with the Nation group of newspapers in Nairobi, Kenya.

INTRODUCTION

At 2.15 p.m. on September 6, 1966, Dimitri Tsafendas stabbed to death, at his desk in the South African House of Assembly, Prime Minister Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd, the so-called “architect of apartheid.” Some forty days later, in a summary trial before the Cape Town Supreme Court, Tsafendas was declared to be schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial for the assassination. It was stated that he believed a tapeworm lived inside him which controlled his actions, and that he did not have any political motive for assassinating the Prime Minister. A subsequent Commission of Enquiry confirmed the court’s verdict and reaffirmed the largely negative evidence given at the trial as to Tsafendas’s character and behaviour.

This report reveals that both the police and the Commission suppressed and manipulated evidence to provide a distorted picture of Tsafendas. It reveals that Tsafendas was nothing like the hopeless, shambolic person portrayed in Court and by the Commission of Enquiry. It demonstrates conclusively that Tsafendas was not schizophrenic and did not believe he had a tapeworm. That the tapeworm was a myth is shown by the fact that it is never mentioned in the transcripts of his interrogation; what these do show is Tsafendas giving clear political reasons for the assassination. Tsafendas considered Dr. Verwoerd to be not only a “tyrant” and a “dictator” but “the brains behind apartheid.” He reasoned, therefore, that if he was “removed,” the racist political system he had developed would collapse sooner or later and a “change of policy would take place” in South Africa. How the tapeworm came into the case, as well as how Tsafendas was declared to be schizophrenic, will be discussed in detail later. The study also shows the inaccuracy of the diagnosis of schizophrenia given by the doctors who examined Tsafendas before his trial.

The evidence shows that Tsafendas was a modest, thoughtful, if emotional, man; a Communist with a lively social conscience and profound political convictions. We will see that Tsafendas was deeply political from a very young age and remained politically active until the assassination. He was arrested several times in Mozambique and Portugal for promoting Communism and denouncing colonialism. Due to his political activities, the Portuguese security police, PIDE, created a file on him (Secret Criminal Record no 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis) as early as 1938, when he was just twenty-years old, when he was “suspected of distributing communist propaganda.”

PIDE's very detailed file on Tsafendas totalled some 130 pages at the time of the assassination. Two days after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, the Chief Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon sent a top-secret telegram to the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique, instructing him that any "information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities, despite the relations that exist between your delegation and the South African Police." PIDE played an important role in the case; this too will be examined here. The background and issues surrounding the assassination also appear in a markedly different light in the study. The study will reveal important and hitherto unknown information about Tsafendas's life and political activities, for example his participation in the Greek Civil War on the side of the Communists.

Work on this research started in 2009. It has examined at least 12,000 pages of documents found in the National Archives of South Africa, Portugal and Britain, the vast majority of which had never previously been consulted.² All the documents found in these archives are in the author's possession in digitalized form. Further research covered all the South African newspapers of the time which were still available, along with the leading contemporaneous newspapers from Australia, Britain, Canada, France, West and East Germany, Greece, Italy, Mozambique, Portugal, the Soviet Union, the United States and Zimbabwe. All the articles found in these newspapers are also in the author's possession in digitalized form.

The author has conducted interviews with 137 people, 69 of whom knew Tsafendas personally. They included persons who met him in the countries where he lived or which he visited, such as Germany, Greece, Mozambique, South Africa, Turkey and Zimbabwe. Some witnesses knew him exceptionally well and here speak formally about him for the first time; five of them had known him since he was a small child. Other interviewees included members of his family, workmates, housemates, fellow prisoners, visitors who talked to him in hospital and prison, clinicians who examined him before his trial, and two of his defence lawyers. All interviews with witnesses were recorded personally by the author. All interviewees are willing to provide a sworn affidavit or testify under oath at any court as to what they said and discussed with the author.

² All the documents found in the archives have been copied in the study exactly as they were found. The many spelling or grammar mistakes are of the original documents, not of the author.

In addition, several experts in fields relevant to this research were consulted on an ongoing basis; for example lawyers, judges, psychologists, psychiatrists, academics, high-ranking police officers and former secret agents. In order to properly examine the diagnosis of schizophrenia in regard to Tsafendas, the process followed, and all the medical aspects of the case, the author of the study collaborated with Professor Tuviah Zabow: forensic psychiatrist, former head of the forensic psychiatry unit at Valkenberg Hospital and former Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Cape Town. Furthermore, the author consulted several renowned psychiatrists and psychologists, including Professor Alban Burke, Head of the Department of Psychology at the University of Johannesburg; Professor Kirk Heilbrun, forensic psychologist and Professor of Psychology at Drexler University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Professor Phillip Resnick, forensic psychiatrist and Professor of Psychiatry and Director of the Division of Forensic Psychiatry at Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine in Cleveland, Ohio; and Professor Robert L. Sadoff, clinical Professor of Psychiatry and Director of the Center for Studies in Social-Legal Psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania, and former president of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law, as well as of the American Board of Forensic Psychiatry.

In addition, the author collaborated closely and on an on-going basis with several relevant legal experts, including advocate George Bizos; Professor John Dugard, former judge at the International Court of Justice; Krish Govender, former Durban State Attorney and co-chairman of the Law Society of South Africa; and Justice Zak Yacoob, former Constitutional Judge. All of these eminent jurists have read the report, seen the evidence and discussed all aspects of the case with the author. All have agreed with the report's findings.

Advocate George Bizos believes that this report is “of major historical importance for South Africa and as to our understanding of Verwoerd’s assassination.”³ He described the evidence gathered and presented by this report, proving that Tsafendas was not insane but politically motivated in killing Dr. Verwoerd, as “overwhelming and unquestionable.”⁴ He also characterised this report as “monumental,” describing it as “a mammoth enquiry into the steps taken by the government to declare him mad and to cover up his treatment. It’s absolutely amazing what the government did.”⁵

³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 18 November 2017.

⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

Professor John Dugard said about the Tsafendas case and this report:

“Many South Africans suspected that there was a political cover-up in the Tsafendas case. The apartheid regime had two reasons for portraying Tsafendas to be insane. First, the regime wished to suggest that no-one in his right mind could kill such a wonderful leader as Hendrik Verwoerd. Secondly, there was the security aspect. The security apparatus, led by the Minister of Justice and Police, John Vorster, wished to avoid accountability for allowing a political revolutionary to be employed in a position close to the Prime Minister. So it was that the media and the legal proceedings were manipulated to present Tsafendas as a mentally deranged person dictated to by a tapeworm.

This research confirms that there was a cover-up. It shows convincingly that Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid. Political assassinations seldom achieve their goal and this was no exception. But at least South African history should know the truth about Tsafendas. Dousemetzis has done South Africa a service by correcting the historical record.”⁶

Justice Zak Yacoob said he agreed “100 per cent” with all of the report’s findings and added:

“The historical record shows that comrade Tsafendas killed Verwoerd, that he pleaded insanity at the trial, his plea was upheld and he was, consequent to his plea, confined at the pleasure of the relevant authority. If he had spoken the truth, he would have been sentenced to death, so the tactic was a very good one in the circumstances. History does not record that he pretended to be insane to save his life. This is well brought out in the research. The research shows conclusively that he did a deliberate courageous anti-apartheid act but pretended insanity at the trial; understandably so. I think the research speaks for itself.”⁷

⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 8 September 2016.

⁷ Justice Zak Yacoob in a personal interview, 18 September 2017.

CONTENTS

Vol. I

Introduction.....	1
Chapter One: Dr. Verwoerd's Life and his Apartheid.....	9
Chapter Two: Dimitris Tsafendas's Biography.....	229
Chapter Three: The Assassination	371
Chapter Four: The Police Investigation	408

Vol. II

Chapter Five: Tsafendas's Summary Trial	785
---	-----

Vol. III

Chapter Six: The Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the Late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd	1495
Chapter Seven: David Pratt	1943
Aftermath and Conclusion.....	2101
Bibliography	2130
Appendix.....	2189

OVERVIEW OF THE CHAPTERS

Chapter One: Dr. Verwoerd's Life and his Apartheid

As we will see, Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “dictator,” “tyrant,” “fascist,” “racist,” “Nazi” and “Hitler’s best student.” He considered him to be “the brains behind apartheid” and believed that without him, a change of policy would eventually take place in South Africa. In order to judge whether Tsafendas was justified in these assumptions, we must examine Dr. Verwoerd’s character, background and political development. Thus, this chapter consists of a biography of Dr. Verwoerd, dealing with his personal life, his ideology and his political career, but mostly with the development of apartheid during his time as Minister of Native Affairs (from 1950 to 1958) and then as Prime Minister (from 1958 to 1966). It also examines his main “achievements” during this time, especially legislation which he orchestrated and several incidents and decisions that led him to become known as “the architect of apartheid.”

Chapter Two: Dimitris Tsafendas's Biography

This chapter tells the story of Tsafendas from his birth to the assassination. It examines his personal life, his ideology and his political activities. Many of the facts mentioned in this chapter have remained unknown until now.

Chapter Three: The Assassination

Here the study deals with Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination, including the national situation before the event, the act itself, the reaction in South Africa and around the world and the assassination’s immediate aftermath.

Chapter Four: The Police Investigation

This chapter provides a very detailed account of the police investigation that followed the assassination. It sets out all of the important evidence collected by the South African police, including all statements in full from people who were questioned by the police.⁸ An important issue discussed in this chapter is the role of PIDE in the investigation, something that has not been examined hitherto. All the top-secret documents of the South African police and PIDE found in the National Archives of Portugal and South Africa are included. This chapter also covers events such as the appointment of Tsafendas's defence team, Vorster becoming Prime Minister, certain announcements by Vorster about Tsafendas, and some press reports.

Chapter Five: Tsafendas's Summary Trial

This chapter considers all aspects of Tsafendas's summary trial. We see the preparations of both the defence team and the State ahead of the trial. Each witness's testimony is included, in most cases exactly as it was given, or after the removal of small talk or anything unimportant or not germane. Testimony is analysed in detail by comparing evidence gathered by the police which contradicted the testimony of witnesses, thus exposing inaccuracies. The analysis was much assisted by new evidence collected by the author. Forty-four of the witnesses who knew Tsafendas well were interviewed by the author and had parts of the testimonies heard in the court read to them and then offered their comments.⁹

Chapter Six: The Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the Circumstances of the Death of the late Dr. the Honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd

This chapter examines the report of the Commission of Enquiry which followed the summary trial of Tsafendas. It starts by explaining what a Commission of Enquiry is and then offers examples of how Commissions operated during apartheid. Some examples have been used, such as the Sharpeville Commission, in order to make clear how both the Commission and the police operated during apartheid. This is an important part of the chapter because of the many similarities between these previous Commissions and the one on Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. All the statements and important evidence collected by the Commission is presented. Several parts of the Commission's Report are examined in detail. The Commission is judged by the evidence it had in its possession at the time and not by evidence collected by the author. There is only one occasion where new evidence is presented.

⁸ Evidence found in the archives which was not directly related to the assassination or to Tsafendas or was of no importance has been reduced to summaries or omitted.

⁹ In total sixty-nine witnesses who knew Tsafendas were interviewed by the author. The author refers to forty-four witnesses who were asked specifically about issues which were raised during Tsafendas's summary trial and by the Commission of Enquiry. On several occasions, these witnesses were given extracts to read from the trial transcript and asked to comment on them. Most were people who knew Tsafendas as a free man before the assassination and were best placed to give an opinion on his behaviour and mental state. However, there were also important witnesses, like Liza Key, Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis, and Fathers Michalis Visvinis and Minas Constandinou, who came to know Tsafendas well during his time in prison or in hospital, when he confided extensively in them. The remaining twenty-five of the sixty-nine witnesses either did not know Tsafendas well enough to comment on the specific issues raised, or were members of his defence team, or had died before the author had the trial manuscripts in its possession.

Chapter Seven: David Pratt

This chapter deals with David Pratt's armed assault on Dr. Verwoerd in 1960, six years before he was assassinated by Tsafendas. It includes a biography and sets out what happened to him after his arrest. Some very important new information about Pratt is presented here for the first time. The study uses a large number of primary sources for this case, such as all the documents found in the National Archives of South Africa and Britain about Pratt and the case, the archives of the National Liberal Club in London, of which Pratt was a member for thirty-three years, his correspondence with some of his friends, his personal notes while in prison and in hospital and interviews with people who knew him. Many secondary sources have been consulted such as published material and reports in South African and foreign newspapers at the time.

Conclusion

This chapter offers a comprehensive but concise conclusion concerning everything discussed in this report.

CHAPTER ONE

DR. VERWOERD'S LIFE AND HIS APARTHEID

EARLY YEARS AND STUDIES

Hendrick Frensch Verwoerd was born near Amsterdam, Netherlands, at 4 p.m. on September 8, 1901. He was the second child of the deeply religious Wilhelmus Johannes Verwoerd, a partner in a grocery business, and Anje Strik. The young couple were strongly attracted to the Boer cause and Wilhelmus was member of a committee which helped South Africans who were coming to Europe for help during the Boer War (1899-1901). The family moved to South Africa in 1903 when Hendrik was eighteen months old.¹⁰ His father opened a grocery store in Wynberg, Cape Town, and spent much of his free time preaching the gospel to Coloureds¹¹ in the city.¹²

As a child he had initially attended an English school and lived in an English neighbourhood, being fully immersed in Afrikaner culture only from the age of sixteen.¹³ He was a strong-willed, intellectual youth, uninterested in sport, whose upbringing was quite different to his Boer peers.¹⁴ Verwoerd's foreign origins imbued him with a fanatical need to be "more Afrikaner" than the Afrikaners.¹⁵¹⁶ He seems always to have felt insecure about his status as an Afrikaner, having been born in Holland to Dutch parents. Many Nationalists referred to him as "die Hollander" and he apparently felt the need to constantly prove his loyalty,¹⁷ while he also felt that he was on a historical mission.¹⁸

In 1912, after nine years in South Africa, the Verwoerd family relocated to Rhodesia.¹⁹ His secondary education took place at Milton Boys' High School in Bulawayo, Rhodesia, and he later described being physically punished for stating his preference for ¹⁰ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, 'Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass'; Grobbelaar, 1967: 9.

¹¹ Coloured was considered to be someone "who is not a White person or a Bantu" (Dugard, 1978: 61).

¹² Uys, 1959: 4.

¹³ Sparks, 1990: 193.

¹⁴ Troup, 1975: 317.

¹⁵ O'Meara, 1996: 92.

¹⁶ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 7 September 1966, 'A prophet of racism.'; O'Meara, 1996: 92.

¹⁷ O'Meara, 1996: 92; Osada, 2002: 8.

¹⁸ Marx, 2011a: 282.

¹⁹ Now Zimbabwe.

living in Afrikaner South Africa.²⁰ In the words of one former classmate, the young Dr. Verwoerd was “an oddly lonely boy, a gawky, clumsy sort of lad with a strong guttural accent.”²¹

Rhodesia was then a British colony and the students were frequently required to sing the English national anthem, something young Verwoerd hated doing.²² Ironically, he received the best marks in the English Literature exam for the whole of Rhodesia and his name was added to the school's roll of honour. He was then awarded the Beit Scholarship, but had to decline it as his family was returning to South Africa.²³

When South Africa entered World War I and a section of the Boers rebelled, young Verwoerd expressed his desire to return to the country. The Principal was outraged that his student wanted to return to what he described as “the nest of rebels.” He “literally kicked” Verwoerd down the school corridor²⁴ to persuade him to stay because he was such an excellent student. When the Principal asked why he wanted to live in what he described as the “rebel province,” (the Orange Free State), Verwoerd replied, “But that is what we are, sir, we are rebels!”²⁵ Eventually, in 1917, Verwoerd and his family returned to South Africa.²⁶

This was a period when theories of eugenics were popular, and these ideas were seized upon and developed in South Africa, which already had a policy of segregation and where the idea that non-White races were genetically inferior was widespread.²⁷ Although Verwoerd had initially hoped to become a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, he eventually decided to become an academic.²⁸ He studied psychology and philosophy at Stellenbosch University, the seat of Afrikaans intellectual life, and in 1922 wrote his Master's thesis on these subjects.²⁹ The following year, he became a lecturer in psychology at the same university³⁰ and in 1924, aged twenty-three,³¹ he produced the first PhD thesis to be written

²⁰ Uys (Africa South), January-March 1959: 4, ‘Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa.’

²¹ Botha, 1967: 34.

²² Kenney, 1980: 23.

²³ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass’; Grobbelaar, 1967: 14.

²⁴ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass’; Uys, 1959: 4.

²⁵ Botha, 1967: 34.

²⁶ Grobbelaar, 1967: 13-15.

²⁷ Dubow, 2014: 23-26

²⁸ Prinsloo, 1981a: 5.

²⁹ Froneman, 2000: 401; Marx, 2013: 92.

³⁰ Marx, 2013: 92.

³¹ Marx, 2013: 92; Miller, 1993: 637.

in Afrikaans³² entitled “Die Afstomping van Gemoedsaandoeninge” (An Experimental Study of the Blunting of Emotions).³³

It was a significant time to be an Afrikaner student, with intellectual life centred in the flourishing Stellenbosch University. Students were exposed to nationalist thinking in a wide range of forms across the arts and humanities and were deeply involved with the National Party and its aims. The Student Representative Council, of which Verwoerd was a member and chairman for a term, believed that race separation was the only option for South Africa. The University and its components were also opposed to the idea of British culture being respected, and Verwoerd asked the conductor of the Cape Town Symphony Orchestra not to play the British national anthem at performances in Stellenbosch. Verwoerd was also a student activist in the area of providing support and access to cultural events with a nationalist angle to poor Afrikaners.³⁴

In 1925, Verwoerd moved to expand his international horizons. Along with 155 South African students of both sexes, he travelled to England for a tour lasting two months. The visit came under the echelon of the National Union of South African Students and it was Verwoerd who made the business arrangements.³⁵ The following year, Oxford University offered Verwoerd a R.1.800 Abe Bailey scholarship,³⁶ but he turned it down in favour of an offer worth half as, to study psychology in Germany.³⁷

During 1926 and 1927, Verwoerd spent one semester each in the psychological institutes of the universities of Leipzig (20 April to 26 July 1926), Hamburg (23 October 1926 to 18 February 1927), and Berlin (28 April to 8 August 1927). Verwoerd chose them because their specific emphasis was his main interest, applied psychology.³⁸ While in Germany, he was offered the editorship of a newspaper in South Africa, but he declined as he wanted to gain experience as a teacher. His ultimate aim at the time was to become a Minister of Education.³⁹

³² Lapping, 1986: 106.

³³ Gilroy 2001: 36; Marx, 2013: 92; Troup, 1975: 318.

³⁴ Froneman, 2000: 400-405.

³⁵ Western Daily Press, 29 December 1925: 7, ‘South African students.’

³⁶ Botha, 1967: 34; Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass’; Marx, 2013: 93; Uys, 1959: 4; Welsh, 2000: 448.

³⁷ Botha, 1967: 34; Cronje, 1964: 1.

³⁸ Furlong, 1991: 80; Marx, 2013: 93; Meredith, 1988: 70; Sparks, 1990: 163.

³⁹ Grobbelaar, 1967: 23.

Verwoerd's primary interest in studying in Germany was to acquire knowledge of the cutting edge of his subject, especially of applied psychology, there being many leading psychologists in Germany then. A side-effect of his stay was exposure to the ideas inherent in the German nationalism that was then a growing force; in Leipzig in particular, some of the most prominent members of the psychology department were politically right-leaning.⁴⁰ In addition, prevalent within the department was the "ethnopsychological" idea that people from "primitive" ethnicities were essentially child-like psychologically. This was explained with the theory that while African children developed at a similar rate to Europeans until puberty, at this point they diverged; Europeans began to develop their intellect in this phase, whereas Africans became overwhelmed with sexual instincts and remained psychologically stuck in puberty.⁴¹

It cannot escape notice that Verwoerd was in Germany at a time when Hitler was newly released from jail and had just published his life story and political manifesto, Mein Kampf (1925). National Socialism was the emerging force in German politics but it had not achieved the dominance it would acquire in the 1930s. That said, it was difficult for any thinking young person not to notice the "cross-currents of political change sweeping Germany."⁴² A report by the United Nations Centre Against Apartheid in 1976, claimed that Dr. Verwoerd had close ties with National Socialist circles. The report said, "Inter alia, he was said to have inherited his anti-Semitism directly from the racist Hitlerian theoreticians."⁴³

Leaving Germany in 1927, Verwoerd travelled back to the United Kingdom, then on to the United States. While there, in December of 1927, he was told that he had been appointed Professor of Applied Psychology and Psychotechnics at Stellenbosch University. He travelled back to South Africa immediately.⁴⁴ On his return to Stellenbosch, Verwoerd brought with him many of the ideas that he had acquired in Germany.⁴⁵ Broadly speaking, the views Verwoerd acquired during his student years remained constant throughout his career.

⁴⁰ Marx, 2013: 92-93, 100-103.

⁴¹ Marx, 2013: 112-115.

⁴² Hepple, 1967: 210.

⁴³ Italiaander, 1960: 175; Mzimela, 1980: 100; United Nations Centre against Apartheid and A. Kum'a N'dumbe, 1976: 7.

⁴⁴ Marx, 2013: 92; Miller, 1993: 637.

⁴⁵ Allighan, 1960: xx.

PERSONAL LIFE

At Stellenbosch, Verwoerd sat on the Students' Council with Elizabeth (Betsie) Schoombee, who was studying Afrikaans Nederlands literature and was a founding member of the Student Women's League. Born on May 17, 1901, Betsie, like Dr. Verwoerd, was a brilliant student, becoming one of the first women in South Africa to obtain an MA when it was rare for women even to go to university. In 1927, Betsie visited Verwoerd in Germany and they were soon married. Upon their return to South Africa, Betsie gave up teaching to and devoted herself to her husband's career while becoming a mother to seven children; five boys and two girls.⁴⁶

The Verwoerds practiced apartheid in their own home and they had no Black employees.⁴⁷ Betsie educated her children at home to prevent them from having too much contact with "inferior negroes."⁴⁸ Gossip that Betsie might actually have some black ancestry was presumably known to the Verwoerds and may have contributed to this overcompensation.⁴⁹ While Betsie's primary occupation was raising their children, she was an articulate and ardent supporter of her husband's work and policies.⁵⁰ Dr. Verwoerd was also a keen sportsman, playing cricket, golf, tennis and rugby, while he also enjoyed swimming and mountaineering.⁵¹

⁴⁶ Froneman, 2000: 406; Grobbelaar, 1967: 20-23; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.'

⁴⁷ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid'; TIME, 29 July 1957: 23, 'South Africa: White man's God.'

⁴⁸ Italiaander, 1961: 105-106.

⁴⁹ O'Meara, 1996: 93.

⁵⁰ Kenney, 1980: 26.

⁵¹ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, 'Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass.'

EARLY CAREERACADEMIC

Dr. Verwoerd returned to South Africa in 1928 to take up a position as the Chair in Applied Sociology and Social Work at Stellenbosch⁵² where he was well-regarded.⁵³ He taught courses including “Introductory Psychology, Business Psychology, Law and Psychology,” the human personality, a laboratory course, and a course on community work.⁵⁴ In 1928, he published a learned paper in the South African Journal of Science on the psychology of newspaper advertisements. He drew attention to an advertisement for a stomach medicine, which showed a dog, with a child gripped safely in its jaws, standing sturdily in the middle of a rushing stream. The caption read “Saved!” A well-known South African journalist, Stanley Uys, saw this as a simple association of ideas: “Dr. Verwoerd has persuaded Afrikanerdom, presumably, that he is its saviour.”⁵⁵

In 1932, the university created the Department of Sociology and Social Work and appointed Dr. Verwoerd to run it. As he had no formal training in the subject, he had to teach himself. He tended to be descriptive, describing social conditions and making extensive use of statistics.⁵⁶ The department was intended to train social workers and social scientists in dealing with white poverty. Dr. Verwoerd’s approach was more pragmatic than theoretical. He was very concerned about welfare during the 1930s, particularly as it pertained to working class Afrikaners, the “poor Whites,” and he became active in this area.⁵⁷

Dr. Verwoerd first came to public attention at a conference in Kimberley in 1934 dealing with the problem of poor Whites. Later he served as chairman of the Voortsettings committee.⁵⁸ He also became a spokesman for education in the field of social work and deeply involved in non-governmental efforts to reduce white poverty.⁵⁹ In 1934 he organised a conference dedicated to the plight of the poor Whites.⁶⁰ In general, Dr. Verwoerd had an ⁵² Burke, 2006: 1.

⁵³ Beyers, 1981: 731; Marx, 2011a: 288; Miller, 1993: 637.

⁵⁴ Miller, 1993, 640-644.

⁵⁵ Uys, 1959: 8.

⁵⁶ Miller, 1993, 640-644.

⁵⁷ Beyers, 1981: 731; Foster, 1991: 205.

⁵⁸ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass’; Prinsloo, 1981a: 5.

⁵⁹ Miller, 1993: 644.

⁶⁰ Hepple, 1967: 25-27; Segal, 1961: 275.

important role in Afrikaner initiatives to use social welfare programmes to reduce white poverty.⁶¹

NEWSPAPER EDITOR, ANTI-SEMITE AND "TOOL OF THE NAZIS"

In 1936, a chartered ship, the SS Stuttgart, reached Cape Town carrying five hundred Jewish refugees from Nazi rule.⁶² Dr. Verwoerd, then still a professor at Stellenbosch University, campaigned fiercely against their proposed admission, arguing that Jewish immigration would bring about "the downfall" of South Africa.⁶³ With a group of other prominent Stellenbosch professors, including A.C. Cilliers, Con de Villiers, J. Basson and T.E. Donges, Dr. Verwoerd addressed large anti-Semitic protest rallies in the Cape area.⁶⁴ Jan Hofmeyr, a prominent liberal, condemned the professors, declaring that "the scientific spirit no longer lived in them."⁶⁵ Dr. Verwoerd presented a case against the refugees' admission to the then Hertzog⁶⁶-Smuts⁶⁷ government.⁶⁸ He and his fellow academics convinced the government and the refugees were denied permission to land.⁶⁹

Later that year, another seventy-five German Jews arrived aboard the Giulio Cesare. Dr. Verwoerd addressed another protest meeting and derided Hofmeyr in sarcastic terms.⁷⁰ It was about this time that Dr. Verwoerd agreed to appear as a "featured speaker" at the annual congress of the Afrikaanse Nasionale Studentebond (ANS). The ANS was an organisation of extreme nationalists founded in 1933 by Piet Meyer. Its president was Hans van Rensburg, a devoted supporter of Hitler who later became chief of the OB. As part of its programme of political propaganda, the ANS sponsored student tours of the Third Reich.⁷¹

⁶¹ Miller, 1993: 636.

⁶² Citino, 1991: 77-78; Hellig, 2009: 124-125.

⁶³ Henkes, 2016: 11.

⁶⁴ Moodie, 1975: 166.

⁶⁵ Paton, 1965: 193-194.

⁶⁶ (1866-1942) James Barry Munnik Hertzog served as a general during the Boer war, and was a determined Boer nationalist. He was South Africa's Prime Minister from 1924 to 1939 (South African History Online).

⁶⁷ (1870-1950) Jan Smuts, a former general who fought in the Boer War and the First World War and supporter of racial segregation. He served as Prime Minister between 1919 and 1924 and 1939 and 1948 (Cameron, 1994).

⁶⁸ Bunting, 1986: 60-61; Furlong, 1991: 61-64; Troup, 1975: 318; Uys (Africa South), January-March 1959: 1, 'Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa.'

⁶⁹ Hellig, 2009: 124-138; Weyl, 1970: 112.

⁷⁰ Paton, 1965: 194.

⁷¹ Furlong, 2003: 210-211.

In 1937, Dr. Verwoerd was approached by Johannes Gerhardus Strijdom,⁷² then the Nationalist leader in the Transvaal, and offered the editorship of the newly established newspaper and mouthpiece of the National Party, Die Transvaler.⁷³ Although he had no journalistic experience, Dr. Verwoerd accepted, leaving academic life to make his first foray into politics.⁷⁴ According to TIME magazine, with Dr. Verwoerd at the helm, Die Transvaler was "less of a newspaper than a political broadsheet."⁷⁵

The newspaper was often likened to Nazi propaganda sheets in Germany, "... raucous in tone, distorting news, spewing race hatred and hailing Hitler."⁷⁶ Dr. Verwoerd used the newspaper to promote a hyper-nationalist line, with editorials devoted to presenting non-Whites and Jews in a poor light, stressing the idea of South Africa as a republic.⁷⁷ He regularly used the derogatory term "Kaffirs" to refer to Black Africans,⁷⁸ and he declared that Jews, as a group, stood in the way of the Afrikaners' economic well-being.⁷⁹

Dr. Verwoerd's first editorial on October 1, 1937, was an anti-Semitic tirade.⁸⁰ He wrote a lengthy article entitled "The Jewish Problem Regarded from a Nationalist Point of View: A Possible Solution: Proportional Distribution in Trades and Businesses the First Great Necessity (Die Joodse Vraagstuk Besien vanuit Die Nasionale Standpunt)."⁸¹ The article brought the "Jewish problem" to the attention of the Afrikaners, saying that it was not a racial issue, but a question of a conflict of interest. Dr. Verwoerd insisted that the Nationalists "do not hate the Jew," that he was not "anti-Jew" but merely "pro-Afrikaner." He suggested that the involvement of Jews in business harmed Afrikaners economically since most commercial and industrial undertakings were mostly in "foreign" hands, "latterly mostly Jewish." Thus, he proposed a quota system that would bar Jews until they comprised not more than 5% of South Africa's commerce and industry (ewewigte verspreiding).⁸²

⁷² (1893-1958) A racist and a fervent supporter of racial segregation who was known as the "Lion of the North" (Pogrand, 1990: 80). He served as Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation before becoming Prime Minister in 1954. He died in 1958 and was succeeded by Dr. Verwoerd.

⁷³ Burger, 1961: 4; Vatcher, 1965: 61.

⁷⁴ Sachs, 1965: 239.

⁷⁵ TIME, 26 August 1966: 20, 'South Africa: The great white laager.'

⁷⁶ Sachs, 1965: 239.

⁷⁷ Hepple, 1967: 45; Wood, 1987: 154.

⁷⁸ Hepple, 1967: 45.

⁷⁹ Paton, 1965: 201.

⁸⁰ O'Meara, 1983: 105; Vatcher, 1965: 61.

⁸¹ Bloomberg, 1990: 149; Goodman, 2001: 144; Shain, 1994: 147.

⁸² Goodman, 2001: 144; Higginson, 2014: 325; Shain, 1994: 147; Shimoni, 2003: 14; Uys, 1959: 1; Wyman and Rosenzweig, 1996: 674.

As a result of his articles, Jewish businesses ceased advertising in his paper,⁸³ giving Dr. Verwoerd an excuse to launch a tirade against them.⁸⁴ During October of 1935, he wrote three articles for English-language newspapers focussing on poverty among Whites. He took the opportunity to laud Germany under the Nazis for highlighting the pride that could be found in manual work.⁸⁵ In another editorial, Dr. Verwoerd wrote: "both in Italy and in Germany the systems have done much that is good for these countries, although of course they are not without fault. . . The Nationalists would be very remiss if they did not study the conditions existing in Europe, where new methods of state organization and new objectives are born out of the pressures of nation-building."⁸⁶ That year the Nationalist Party called on the government not to recognise Yiddish as a European language and to restrict Jews from engaging in certain professions.⁸⁷

In his role as editor, Dr. Verwoerd played a key part in developing nationalist ideas about race and apartheid, and he used Die Transvaler as a soapbox from which to attack Jews, Blacks and the English.⁸⁸ When the British Royal Family visited South Africa in 1947 Dr. Verwoerd's paper simply did not cover it, to make a nationalist point,⁸⁹ despite the large, enthusiastic crowds greeting them.⁹⁰ On another occasion, combining three of his betes noires, he described South Africa's Parliament as the product of "British-Jewish liberalism."⁹¹ In addition, every day he published a local version of Hitler's "master race" ideology in his column, "Die Sake van die Dag" (The Affairs of the Day),⁹² leading (together with his extremist views) to his critics describing him as a "tool of the Nazis."⁹³ At times Dr.

⁸³ Uys (Africa South), January-March 1959: 1, 'Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa.'

⁸⁴ Hepple, 1967: 46.

⁸⁵ Furlong, 2003: 210.

⁸⁶ Mzimela, 1980: 100; Die Tranvaler, 4 October 1937: 4.

⁸⁷ Uys (Africa South), January-March 1959: 3, 'Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa.'

⁸⁸ Meredith, 1988: 70.

⁸⁹ Botha, 1967: 12; The Economist, 20 September 1958: 948, 'South Africa's new boss'; The Economist, 25 March 1961: 1166, 'Forward with Verwoerd'; Lapping, 1986: 107.

⁹⁰ Hepple, 1967: 102.

⁹¹ Botha, 1967: 11.

⁹² Gerhart, 1978: 53.

⁹³ Hughes, 1961: 176.

Verwoerd was too extreme even for Daniel Malan,⁹⁴ the leader of the National Party.⁹⁵ Nevertheless, the editorship gave him standing in the National Party.⁹⁶

During the early months of the Second World War when the Nazis were scoring victories in Europe, Verwoerd declared that "Britain has lost the war. That is not only my opinion, it is my wish."⁹⁷ Within weeks of the war beginning, German forces appeared on course to overrun the Netherlands in their dash for France, a possibility Verwoerd's paper derided as "British propaganda." He claimed that Britain was trying to use Afrikaners' fellow feelings for the Dutch to secure support for the Smuts government's anti-German policy. Of course the Nazis did invade the Netherlands, but Verwoerd never admitted he had been wrong.⁹⁸

Throughout the war, Dr. Verwoerd wrote editorials expressing approval of Allied defeats and disappointment over Nazi losses, consistently pressing the Nazi cause and metaphorically waving the swastika flag. In 1941 these increasingly intemperate editorials led to a high-profile court case, Dr. Verwoerd vs. Paver and Others. The Johannesburg newspaper The Star published an editorial entitled "Speaking Up for Hitler" accusing Dr. Verwoerd of falsifying the news to promote Germany's cause.⁹⁹ The Star set out a list of stories published by Die Transvaler, all of which carried errors which reflected positively on the Axis powers. It highlighted Die Transvaler's version of a report by the South African Information Bureau on how the Nazi regime promised not to interfere with South African affairs but had in fact done so. Die Transvaler omitted the main point of a broken promise and reported only the Nazis' reference to non-interference. The Star said such dishonesty identified Die Transvaler closely with Nazi propaganda, making it "a tool of malignant forces from which this country has everything to fear."¹⁰⁰

⁹⁴ (1874-1957) Minister in the Dutch Reformed Church, champion of Afrikaner nationalism and white supremacy, editor of the Die Burger, leader of the National Party and Prime Minister of South Africa (1948-1954) (Koorts, 2014; Kruger, 1969: 287). For his biography see: Koorts, L. (2014) DF Malan and the Rise of Afrikaner Nationalism; Robins, E. (1953) This Man Malan.

⁹⁵ Welsh, 2000: 448.

⁹⁶ Segal (The Spectator), 3 March 1961: 287, 'Dr. Verwoerd.'

⁹⁷ Botha, 1967: 12.

⁹⁸ Fobi, 2014: 90.

⁹⁹ Burger, 1961: 13; Gloucestershire Echo, 14 July 1943: 1, '£15.000 libel claim result'; Hepple, 1967: 215; Kenney, 1980: 64; Paton, 1965: 292-293; The New York Times, 25 July 1985: 22, 'Many of South Africa's leaders were pro-Nazi'; Uys, 1959: 5; Vatcher, 1965: 64.

¹⁰⁰ Fobi, 2014: 91-92.

As result of the editorial, Dr. Verwoerd sued for defamation, demanding damages of £15,000. However, The Star put up a robust defence, and the case was dismissed, with costs awarded against Dr. Verwoerd. The judge declared that:

“There have been proved two very grave cases of the publication of false news in reckless disregard of whether it was true or false; six cases, on the whole less serious but still clear cases of falsification where news, originally correctly reported, was falsely portrayed for the purpose of editorial comment; and two cases in which news was falsified by means of misleading headlines. On the evidence he, Dr. Verwoerd, is not entitled to complain. He did support Nazi propaganda, he did make his paper a tool of the Nazis in South Africa, and he knew it.”¹⁰¹

Dr. Verwoerd and his supporters attributed the result to the fact that the judge, Phillip Millin, was a Jew.¹⁰² When the United Party won the general election that year, Dr. Verwoerd decried the result as “a Jewish victory.”¹⁰³

In 1941, at a time when the Nazi war machine appeared unstoppable, Dr. Verwoerd, according to the New York Times, “triumphantly headlined every Nazi victory and rallied against ‘British-Jewish liberalism.’”¹⁰⁴ On August 8, 1941, he wrote, “The Afrikaner honours Germany’s achievements in many fields.”¹⁰⁵ However, two years later, as German forces began to suffer significant defeats, Dr. Verwoerd demonstrated a more guarded approach, which did not go unnoticed by the Nazis. A German secret agent, Trompke, cabled Berlin on 10 August 1943 that “The party Press is extremely reserved with regard to Germany since the military reverses. O L¹⁰⁶ recommend a frank explanation with the editor-in-chief Dr. Verwoerd.”¹⁰⁷

Dr. Verwoerd was not the only member of his family who supported the Nazis during the war. His wife, Betsie, was a member of the Ossewabrandwag,¹⁰⁸ a pro-Nazi paramilitary

¹⁰¹ Burger, 1961: 13; Gloucestershire Echo, 14 July 1943: 1, ‘£15.000 libel claim result’; Hepple, 1967: 215; Kenney, 1980: 64; Paton, 1965: 292-293; The New York Times, 25 July 1985: 22, ‘Many of South Africa’s leaders were pro-Nazi’; Uys, 1959: 5; Vatcher, 1965: 64.

¹⁰² Weyl, 1970: 112.

¹⁰³ Furlong, 1991: 66; Hepple, 1966: 146.

¹⁰⁴ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹⁰⁵ Mzimela, 1980: 101.

¹⁰⁶ The author does not know who the O L is.

¹⁰⁷ United Nations Centre Against Apartheid and A. Kum’a N’dumbe, 1976: 17.

¹⁰⁸ Ossewabrandwag (Oxwagon Sentinel) was a pro-Nazi paramilitary organisation formed in February 1939 (Marx, 1994: 195), largely of “true Afrikaner” members from the Broederbond (Adam, 1971: 50; Thompson, 2001: 184). The Ossewabrandwag was inspired by the “Great Trek” celebrations and the Hitler Youth movement (Beningfield, 2006: 35), and it was based on a “commando system” (Marx, 1994: 198), although it organization which opposed South Africa's participation in the war on the side of the Allies. Her husband did not join the group for fear its activities could compromise his position on Die Transvaler and in the National Party. However, he supported his wife in the activities required of her as commandant of a section within the Nazi organization.¹⁰⁹

Many years later, Betsie made the startling claim that the Ossewabrandwag had attempted to kill her husband on October 22, 1941, because he opposed it.¹¹⁰ As we will see later, this was not the last time that Betsie would reveal to a few selected people her claims of an assassination plot against her husband. A second (see in detail in Chapter Seven), according to prominent South African journalists David Beresford of the British Guardian and Desmond Blow of the South African Sunday Times, and one-time BOSS agent Gordon Winter, was a publicity stunt intended to increase her husband's popularity in the wake of criticism and a drop of his popularity after the Sharpeville massacre.¹¹¹ Thus, it would be unwise to take Mrs. Verwoerd at her word since she was a prominent member of the very organization she claimed tried to take her husband's life while Verwoerd, on his part, was pro-Nazi just like the OB.

claimed to be primarily interested in cultural matters (Barber, 1999: 119). Hitler's radio openly praised the OB, which also received help from German sources (Okoth, 2006: 160).

The OB grew with remarkable speed, attracting up to 30,000 people to its public meetings (Marx, 1994: 195), while by 1942 it claimed to have about 250,000 (or 400,000 according to other accounts) members, including its so-called "Stormjaers" (Storm Troopers) who carried out attacks of intimidation and sabotage (Beck, 2000: 121; Uys, 1989: 211). From February 1941, the OB was led by Hans van Rensburg, a dedicated admirer of Hitler, who was opposed to democracy, parliament and party politics, and hoped for a German victory. Increasingly militant, during the war years, the Ossewabrandwag engaged in sabotage to disrupt South Africa's war effort and help the Nazi cause (Worden, 2000: 104).

During 1940 and 1941, in the Witwatersrand area, the OB was responsible for twenty-five bomb explosions aimed primarily at newspaper premises, cinemas, shops and railway lines (Schonteich and Boshoff, 2003: 14), and state buildings, electrical and telephone lines, electrical substations and pylons (Marx, 2011: 434). Also during the war, OB members were involved in "Operation Weissdorn," which was ordered by Nazi Admiral Wilhelm Canaris, with the primary aim of overthrowing the government of General Jan Smuts, and the secondary aim of sabotaging South African infrastructure, including port installations and industries associated with the war (Visser, 1976: 54-56.) For more about the operation see: Strydom, H. (1982) For Volk and Fuhrer: Robey Leibbrandt & Operation Weissdorn; Visser, G.C. (1976) OB: Traitors or Patriots?. The Stormjaers also carried out a series of attacks against some their own members who they suspected of being traitors and assassinated at least two of them. (Marx, 2011b: 522-523). Because of the above activities, many Ossewabrandwag members were imprisoned during the war, including several who went on to have successful careers within the Nationalist Party (Meredith, 1988: 30-31).

For further reading about the OB see: Bunting, B. (1968) The Rise of the South African Reich; Furlong, P. J. (1991) Between Crown and Swastika: The Impact of the Radical Right on the Afrikaner Nationalist Movement in the Fascist Era; Marx, C. (1994) The Ossewabrandwag as a Mass Movement, 1939-1941; Marx, C. (2008) Oxwagon Sentinel: Radical Afrikaner Nationalism and the History of the Ossewabrandwag; Moodie, T. D. (1975) The Rise of Afrikanerdom; Visser, G.C. (1976) OB: Patriots or Traitors?

¹⁰⁹ Prinsloo, 1985b: 74.

¹¹⁰ Verwoerd, 2016: 47.

¹¹¹ David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Desmond Blow in a personal interview, 23 February 2015; Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

Dr. Verwoerd was explicitly described as “a Nazi” by Ezekiel Mphahlele, the renowned South African author and one of the founding figures of modern African literature.¹¹² Many of his actions confirmed Mphahlele’s views including, as we will see later in this chapter, his approach to the infamous influx laws and the tactics used to impose them, which resembled those employed by the SS in Nazi Germany.¹¹³ Although Dr. Verwoerd borrowed much from Nazi ideology, he believed strongly in the autonomy of the Afrikaner state and did not wish to import the fascist idea of a unitary state. In 1940 he had been careful to state that “The Afrikaner... will be as little a tool of Hitler as of Chamberlain.”¹¹⁴

Nonetheless, during the Second World War, Dr. Verwoerd was often harassed over the phone by people who rang to accuse him of being a “Hollander,” a “Nazi” and a “traitor.”¹¹⁵ However, Mary Pos, a close friend of Dr. Verwoerd, who would write his biography,¹¹⁶ claimed that Dr. Verwoerd considered Hitler a psychopath.¹¹⁷ Even so, if this was accurate, it did not stop Dr. Verwoerd from supporting the Nazi leader before and during the war and later copying some of his racial laws and applying them to non-Whites in South Africa.

In 1948, Dr. Verwoerd resigned as editor to launch his full-time career in politics by seeking election with the National Party in Alberton.¹¹⁸ Over the following years, he remained personally involved with the Press, serving as chairman of the Afrikaans-language newspaper Dagbreek;¹¹⁹ he even used his position as Prime Minister to advance his business interests. In 1966, at the time of his death, he was the head of two profitable publishing companies in Johannesburg, which produced two daily newspapers, a Sunday paper and a number of magazines. What cannot be overlooked is that over three years, his publishing interests secured government printing orders worth more than £12,000,000.¹²⁰

¹¹² Italiaander, 1961: 115.

¹¹³ Mbeki, 1991: 167.

¹¹⁴ Bloomberg, 1990: 151, 165.

¹¹⁵ Pos, 1967: 47

¹¹⁶ Wie Was Dr. Verwoerd (1967).

¹¹⁷ Pos, 1967: 91-92.

¹¹⁸ Grobbelaar, 1967: 39; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹¹⁹ Crowd and Revo, 1967: 41.

¹²⁰ The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Verwoerd created republic of white ascendancy.’

DR. VERWOERD AND THE BROEDERBOND¹²¹

Dr. Verwoerd had joined the Broederbond in 1937. He had gone on to be elected to the Executive Council in 1940 and remained there until 1950, when he became Minister for Native Affairs. He was an active member who missed just two of fifty-three meetings of the Executive Council during his time on it,¹²² and he had worked quickly on becoming Prime Minister to integrate the Broederbond into every aspect of government.¹²³ In 1943, Dr. Verwoerd, an increasingly important member of the National Party, and the member of a group of Broederbonders that had been drafting a republican constitution,¹²⁴ called on the organisation to “gain control of everything it can lay its hands on in every walk of life in South Africa.”¹²⁵ The following year he disclosed his membership in public, stating that he had “never made a secret of it.”¹²⁶

¹²¹ The Afrikaner Broederbond (Band of Brothers) was founded, ostensibly as a cultural association in 1918 (Gibbs, 1949: 208; O'Meara, 1977; Serfontein, 1977: 29; TIME, 21 November 1977: 85, 'Broederbond's big brother act.'). Originally called “Young South Africa” (du Toit, 1991: 630). It was initially dedicated to stressing “ideals and not persons,” to being non-political and to providing “mutual support in the economic field, and further Afrikaner art and culture” (O'Meara, 1977: 158-159). It adopted a formal constitution in 1920, and became a secret society in 1922 (Carter, 1958: 251). Its early aims included the nationalisation of South Africa under Afrikaans leadership and the establishment of schools that taught through Afrikaans (Gibbs, 1949: 209). In 1932 a secret message was circulated to all Broederbonders that called for the group to aim for an independent Afrikaner government (Meredith, 1988: 21). In 1933 the Broederbond created a document outlining their goal of complete segregation, including the forced resettlement of urban Africans. It shared many of the concerns of the Nazi party; the beliefs that Africans were naturally less intelligent, and that the offspring of mixed unions tended to be inherently feeble were widespread, backed up by dubious research (Dubow, 1992: 212, 229). In 1934, the Broederbond issued a statement affirming that its prime aim was for Afrikaners to reach their “ultimate destiny of domination in South Africa” (Mbeki, 1991: 19-20).

By the mid-30s, the Broederbond had become essentially a Christian-national organisation fiercely opposed to the merging of British and Afrikaner South Africans, as was happening in the new United Party. It focused on establishing itself as the ideological centre of the growing hyper-nationalism (Dubow, 1995a: 255). The return of intellectuals such as Dr. Piet J. Meyer and Verwoerd from studies in Germany provided a powerful impetus (de Klerk, 1975: 203). From 1938, the organisation focused attention on the White Workers' Protection Society, which accepted only white Protestants as members and aimed to gain control of white workers' unions, and prevent the growth of African and mixed unions (Hepple, 2011: 62). In 1944, the Broederbond published its deep conviction that Afrikaners had been placed in South Africa by God (Stultz, 1974: 53). When it listed its aims, including the promotion of Afrikaners' language and culture, it stressed that this was done with the understanding that, “the destiny of nations is guided by the hand of God” (Gibbs, 1949: 204). The Broederbond's clear implication was that all other South Africans, the Blacks, the Coloureds, and Whites of origins other than Afrikaans, had a lesser right to be there. Presumably to underline the organisation's religious claims, it was run (under three leaders) by a governing body of twelve men, referred to as the “twelve apostles,” who maintained contact with the small groups of ordinary members around the country (Gibbs, 1949: 212) and who were each responsible for a different sphere, such as “labour, religion, education, politics, the press” (Carter, 1959: 254).

¹²² Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 3.

¹²³ Asmal et al, 1996: 234.

¹²⁴ Moodie, 1975: 215.

¹²⁵ Barber, 1999: 91; Furlong, 1991: 222.

¹²⁶ Bloomberg, 1990: 191-192; Serfontein, 1978: 40.

Under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister the Broederbond acquired new, extensive powers and influence as he granted it “co-responsibility with the party to prepare the electorate” for nationalist policies.¹²⁷ Dr. Verwoerd’s government sought candidates for top government posts and through the secretive organisation the men running the army, government departments and important state-owned bodies such as the railways, many were Broederbond appointees.¹²⁸

Their chairman during this period was Piet Meyer (Broeder number 787¹²⁹), a fanatical Nazi supporter, who had even named his son “Izan” – “Nazi” spelled backwards,¹³⁰ one of Dr. Verwoerd’s closest and most trusted friends, whom he would later appoint chairman of the South African Broadcasting Corporation. Meyer was a highly influential individual, much-criticised by apartheid’s opponents.¹³¹ At the same time, Dr. Verwoerd came under pressure to set up a Commission of Inquiry into the Broederbond.¹³² This background of the case and the Commission will be examined in Chapter Six.

DR. VERWOERD’S IDEOLOGY

As it is impossible to separate Dr. Verwoerd’s actions from his ideology, the latter will be discussed in various contexts, but it is worth laying out some of the background to this topic here. Dr. Verwoerd insisted to no avail that his policies were “not based on people being inferior, but being different.”¹³³ In addition, according to Dr. Roberta Miller, a Senior Research Scientist at Columbia University, Dr. Verwoerd also seems to believe that there were no significant differences in intelligence between Whites and Blacks. Although Dr. Verwoerd had rejected the idea that Whites were inherently more intelligent, he did ascribe certain qualities, such as a tendency to be emotional, unstable or boring to national groups.¹³⁴

¹²⁷ Asmal et al, 1996: 153-154; Callinicos, 1995: 30.

¹²⁸ Morris, 2004: 160.

¹²⁹ Bell and Ntsebeza, 2003: 28; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: A159.

¹³⁰ Booth, 1998: 38; Frye, 1970: 100.

¹³¹ Callinicos, 1995: 30.

¹³² Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 321.

¹³³ Cell, 1982: 278; Rhodie, 1969: 76; Verwoerd, 1961a: 8.

¹³⁴ Miller, 1993: 648-651.

However, according to Nelson Mandela,¹³⁵ Dr. Verwoerd considered Africans to be “lower than animals.”¹³⁶ The way Dr. Verwoerd spoke about them and treated them seems to support Mandela’s opinion and contradict his own claim. Dr. Verwoerd regularly used the derogatory term “Kaffirs” to refer to Black Africans¹³⁷ and believed that God made the Black man to be in perpetuity a “hewer of wood and drawer of water” for the White man.¹³⁸ The fact that he held Blacks in contempt is clear from the following incident. Walter Stanford, an M.P. who represented Africans, was in Parliament quoting information he had received in his constituency, when Dr. Verwoerd called out, “and you believe a Native instead of my word?” A letter from a citizen in the Cape Times asked, “Could a short sentence reveal more clearly Dr. Verwoerd’s deep-seated contempt for the African people, or give the lie more effectively to his repeated protestations that this policy of apartheid can be reconciled with accepted Christian and human standards?”¹³⁹

Dr. Verwoerd strongly believed that the Afrikaners were South Africa’s master race, destined for supremacy, while other races were “privileged” to share South Africa with them, but in an inferior position;¹⁴⁰ “we whites must rule the blacks,” he declared in 1960.¹⁴¹ He even believed that South Africa’s Blacks should be grateful they were not wiped out by the colonising Afrikaners. In a 20 October 1960 interview with the German magazine, Die Zeit, Dr. Verwoerd posed the extraordinary question, “Why should the Afrikaner suffer because our forefathers did not shoot the blacks?” He went on,

“The experiences of our ancestors in this country were rather similar to those of the Americans and the Indians. But while the Americans annihilated the Indians as they advanced through the continent, the Boers allowed the blacks to live. Should we now suffer because ¹³⁵ (1918-2013) The best-known of all anti-apartheid revolutionaries, and a potent symbol of the struggle against apartheid. In 1962 he was arrested and subsequently convicted at the Rivonia Trial of conspiracy to overthrow the apartheid state. He would spend the next twenty-seven years in prison. He served as President of the ANC from 1991 to 1997, and was elected South Africa’s President in the first democratic elections in South Africa in 1994, holding the position until 1999. In 1993 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his enormous contributions to ending apartheid, for which he is considered “father of the nation”. For his autobiography see: Mandela, N. (1994) Long Walk to Freedom. For biographies see: Benson, M. (1986) Nelson Mandela; Lodge, T. (2006) Mandela: A Critical Life; Meer, F. (1991) Higher than Hope: The Authorized Biography of Nelson Mandela; Meredith, M. (2010) Mandela: A Biography; Sampson, A. (1999) Mandela: The Authorised Biography; Smith, D. J. (2010) Young Mandela; Stelngel, R. (2012) Nelson Mandela: Portrait of an Extraordinary Man.

¹³⁶ Mandela, 2013: 512.

¹³⁷ Hepple, 1967: 45.

¹³⁸ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, ‘The champion of apartheid.’

¹³⁹ Burger, 1961: 24.

¹⁴⁰ Hughes, 1961: 175.

¹⁴¹ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 50, ‘Exploding South Africa.’

our ancestors behaved in such a Christian and humane fashion? No, I tell you, this is a White country and any concessions to the Blacks only means demands for fresh concessions. It would be absurd to turn the blacks into imitations of Europeans and force a Western type democracy upon them. We plan to develop them along their own lines, using their own traditional communities and tribal chieftains.”¹⁴²

Thus, Dr. Verwoerd never gave in on any demands from Black South Africans. For example, he considered the idea of the Natal Provincial Council adopting an entrenched Bill of Rights to be unthinkable, on the grounds that guaranteeing rights would abolish parliamentary sovereignty.¹⁴³

Dr. Verwoerd also seems, just like most colonialists everywhere else in the world, to have believed that the Blacks were not civilized, and that he and the other Whites were going to “civilize” them, “protect” them, “help” them and “teach” them “democracy.” On February 8, 1961, he said, “We have lessons to teach the civilized world. We have services to render to Africa.”¹⁴⁴ On April 14, 1961, during a debate in Parliament, he said that the Progressive Party “must either accept that those 10,000,000 Bantu¹⁴⁵ will never all become civilized or they must accept that at some time or other they will all become civilized.”¹⁴⁶ On another occasion he said, “South Africa remains true to the duty laid up the white man. During past centuries the white man developed and spread Western civilization from Europe throughout the world.”¹⁴⁷

In a speech in the Senate in 1964, Dr. Verwoerd said, “It would have been much easier for all of us [Whites] . . . if we could have continued ... to govern the country as an undisputed White country in our possession . . . and treat the Bantu and the other Non-White groups as protected persons under our guardianship . . .”¹⁴⁸ About a year before his assassination, he said that the Natives “can develop their own areas to any level of independence they are able to achieve, [but they] will still remain under the control of White

¹⁴² Botha, 1967: 63.

¹⁴³ Klug, 2010a: 12; Klug, 2010b: 34-35.

¹⁴⁴ Pelzer, 1966: 494.

¹⁴⁵ Bantu was considered to be a person “who is, or is generally accepted as, a member of any aboriginal race or tribe of Africa” (Dugard, 1978: 61). The word “Bantu” correctly refers to the Nguni group of languages such as Zulu, Xhosa, Ndebele, and others. There are over four hundred ethnic groups in Africa, from South Africa to Cameroon, who speak these languages. Under apartheid, the term was chosen to refer to Bantu-speaking South Africans and was closely associated with apartheid’s policies (Nkabinde, 1997: 5; Wills, 2012: 7).

¹⁴⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 596.

¹⁴⁷ Pelzer, 1966: 321.

¹⁴⁸ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1965: 1.

South Africa for as long as it is still necessary to lead them to civilized self-government on a democratic basis.”¹⁴⁹ A few weeks before his death, Dr. Verwoerd said, “We are prepared to let them [Africans] develop to their full potentialities. The sky is the limit, but for their protections as well as ours, we must exercise a continuing control until they have proved themselves able to handle independence. We are going to set them free, but only at a pace they can handle.”¹⁵⁰

Dr. Verwoerd also often evoked divine authority for his edicts when he felt that this was necessary.¹⁵¹ Recovering in 1960 from the gunshot wounds inflicted on him by David Pratt (see Chapter Seven), he attributed his survival to divine intervention. During a visit to his bedside by opposition leader Sir de Villiers Graaff, Dr. Verwoerd referred to God more than a dozen times, insisting that the deity had chosen him to continue piloting apartheid. In the course of a two-hour conversation, he insisted that his survival was proof of the divine acceptance of his policies.¹⁵² When Major Richter visited him in hospital, Dr. Verwoerd depicted himself as an Afrikaner martyr for the apartheid cause. He said he held no grievances against anyone, adding, “I cannot even feel bitter towards Pratt” and described himself as “just one of the martyrs of the Afrikaner nation.”¹⁵³ At the same time, Dr. Verwoerd told his wife, “I heard the shots and then I realized that I could still think, and I knew that I had been spared to complete my life’s work.”¹⁵⁴

Betsie Verwoerd also saw her husband’s survival as “a sign to us that we are on the right path and God is with us.”¹⁵⁵ In his radio broadcast of May 20, his first public speech after the shooting, Dr. Verwoerd said, “I trust that I will be permitted to testify to my conviction that the protection of Divine Providence was accorded me with a purpose, a purpose which concerns South Africa too. May it be given to me to fulfil that task faithfully.”¹⁵⁶ Dr. Verwoerd later even told Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker that his survival “revealed God’s approval of the cause he had followed.”¹⁵⁷

¹⁴⁹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1966: 2.

¹⁵⁰ Drury, 1968, 460-466.

¹⁵¹ Schlemmer, 1970: 19.

¹⁵² Vatcher, 1965: 110.

¹⁵³ Scholtz, 1974: 153.

¹⁵⁴ TIME, 16 September 1966, ‘South Africa: Death to the architect.’

¹⁵⁵ Ingalls (The New York Times), 18 April 1960: 1, ‘South Africans said to consider sealing borders.’

¹⁵⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 396; The New York Times, 21 May 1960: 11, ‘Dr. Verwoerd asserts God saved his life’; The Sphere, 4 June 1960: 410, ‘The voice of the common.’

¹⁵⁷ The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Canada regrets death but stand still same’; The Vancouver Sun, 6 September 1966: 3, ‘Verwoerd assassination shocks world leaders.’

Dr. Verwoerd's followers fully agreed that he had been saved by God in order to fulfil his "duties" and that God had chosen him as his instrument to lead and forge the South African nation.¹⁵⁸ Die Transvaler wrote that Dr. Verwoerd was "called by God to a special task." It declared that, "although struck by two bullets, Dr. Verwoerd is still alive and all believing inhabitants of the Union will see the hand of God in this... he who holds the power of life or death has ordained that the attack should fail."¹⁵⁹ Die Burger wrote two days after the shooting, "In this miraculous escape all the faithful will see the hand of God and thank him that our country, which is already passing through troubled times, had been spared the greater horror of assassination of its head of state."¹⁶⁰

Even the TIME magazine wrote that the Afrikaners regarded his recovery as proof that God had chosen Dr. Verwoerd as his divine instrument to forge the South African nation.¹⁶¹ In the words of his biographer Jan Botha, Dr. Verwoerd "had suffered grievously in the cause of Afrikanerdom; the onslaught on his life was an onslaught on their cause, and the human sympathy that went out to him became, in the case of many, an enduring love for a hero who so miraculously survived the ordeal to lead them on."¹⁶² Dr. Verwoerd saw himself not only as a martyr, but also as a saviour of South Africa's Whites, particularly the Afrikaners, and summarily rejected calls for change after the Sharpeville Massacre. He said, "If I cannot save the country, then I would rather resign. I will never be an accomplice to the destruction of our people by abandoning our policy."¹⁶³

Dr. Verwoerd also believed the Bible gave sanctions for racial separation.¹⁶⁴ He represented his idea of "separate development" as consistent with the Bible's injunction that people should love one another, reasoning that "love" obliged the Afrikaners to grant the Blacks the land that they themselves possessed.¹⁶⁵ He believed that the situation in South Africa was a demonstration of God's will and that apartheid was divinely inspired.¹⁶⁶ On one occasion he stated, "It is the privilege of the leaders to be used by the Ruler of Nations and by

¹⁵⁸ TIME, 16 September 1966, 'South Africa: Death to the architect.'

¹⁵⁹ Daily Dispatch, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Premier called by God to a special task.'

¹⁶⁰ Roux, 1972: 411.

¹⁶¹ TIME, 16 September 1966, 'South Africa: Death to the architect.'

¹⁶² Botha, 1967: 67.

¹⁶³ Kenney, 1980: 186; Venter, 1999: 428-429.

¹⁶⁴ The New York Times, 17 March 1961, 'Symbol of apartheid: Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd'; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.'

¹⁶⁵ Waldmeir, 1997: 11.

¹⁶⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 92; TIME, 29 July 1957: 23, 'White man's God.'

their people as the vanguard in the fulfilment of His ideal [apartheid].”¹⁶⁷ He believed that establishing “Christian civilisation” in South Africa was the way in which Whites would acquire a permanent basis for reigning there,¹⁶⁸ and that in this way South Africa would shine as “a symbol of anti-Communism.”¹⁶⁹

Dr. Verwoerd believed that the Whites had been living in South Africa before the Blacks arrived. He said, “South Africa is so often misunderstood in the outside world because it is seen as a part of the continent of Africa, which is just like the other parts thereof, whereas this southern point of Africa, at that time vacant land, settled by the white man from Europe, in fact, became different from the rest of the African continent.”¹⁷⁰ In reality, the truth was that Blacks had been living in South Africa for thousands of years before Europeans ever came, and in the early years the latter had often had to beg the former to sell their cattle to them so that they could eat.¹⁷¹

In addition to believing that the Whites lived in South Africa before the Blacks, Dr. Verwoerd also argued that it was the Whites who created everything of value in the country, and generously allowed the Blacks to make use of these creations. In return, he felt, like all colonialists did, that Blacks should view Whites as their protectors against violence, disease and disruption.¹⁷² He said:

“The white man brought civilization to this country and everything that the Bantu is inheriting today with us, was created by the knowledge and the diligence of the white man. It is true that the black man took part in it, mostly as the labourer. We realize the value of that part and wish to see that he is repaid for what he has done for the country. But if we had not been here or cared for them throughout hundreds of years, they would have perished of hunger or murdered one another and might not have been in existence today. The white man of South Africa, the farmer on his farm, the father in his home has taken care of the health of the Bantu servant. The State has also made provision for his health as well as his education. In ever so many ways, the white man has been the guardian of the black.”¹⁷³

¹⁶⁷ Mzimela, 1980: 155; van Jaarsveld, 1977: 25.

¹⁶⁸ Loubser, 1987: 86.

¹⁶⁹ Verwoerd, 1963: 4.

¹⁷⁰ Pelzer, 1966: 426.

¹⁷¹ Khopung, 1972: 20.

¹⁷² Eades, 1999: 36.

¹⁷³ Pelzer, 1966: 377.

Furthermore, Dr. Verwoerd expressed his hope that other white nations, such as Britain, would “never lose their hold, intellectually and otherwise,” because if they did they would be overwhelmed by a “flood of colour.”¹⁷⁴

Dr. Verwoerd always maintained that people outside South Africa were unable to understand his policies because they also misunderstood apartheid. Apartheid, he said, was a “domestic affair” and people who did not live in the country could not understand its nature and its background. He insisted that “a vast number” of non-Whites approved his policies,¹⁷⁵ while the rest simply failed to understand that apartheid was really something good and that he was trying to do what was best for them. “The colour policy within the borders of the Union is still misunderstood,” he stated shortly after he became Prime Minister in 1958.¹⁷⁶ Two years later he insisted, “We in South Africa are trying to do our level best for all portions of our population... we have been misunderstood... we are not the barbarians we are supposed to be, we are Christians ourselves...”¹⁷⁷

Although he claimed he was doing his best for the Africans and that he was not a barbarian, paraphrasing Hitler’s remarks about Jews, Dr. Verwoerd warned that “Africans who disagree with our policy must be constrained, if necessary by force.”¹⁷⁸ He even believed that the Whites should rule over the Blacks because they were the minority and such power made them feel secure.¹⁷⁹ He argued that “The uninitiated in particular do not understand that apartheid or separate development is based on the principle that only in this way can the weak be protected from the strong, and the minority be made to feel safe.”¹⁸⁰

Like Malan, Strijdom and his successor Vorster, Dr. Verwoerd’s approach to ruling Black, Coloured and Asian South Africans was substantially the same as how they had been treated under colonial rule elsewhere in Africa.¹⁸¹ For Dr. Verwoerd, the Afrikaners were a “chosen people” whose appointed mission was to bring justice on the basis of “separate but ¹⁷⁴ Pelzer, 1966: 369.

¹⁷⁵ The Canberra Times, 25 May 1957: 6, ‘Dr. Verwoerd, South Africa’s ‘evil genius.’

¹⁷⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 161.

¹⁷⁷ Corriere Della Sera, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘L’apartheid’; Daily Mirror, 12 April: 5, ‘Misunderstood says Dr. Verwoerd’; The Chicago Daily Defender, 13 April 1960: 3, ‘South Africa not yielding on race’; The Star, 12 April 1960, ‘If people only realised that we are Christians.’

¹⁷⁸ Lapierre, 2009: 95.

¹⁷⁹ Pelzer, 1966: 161; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹⁸⁰ Pelzer, 1966: 161.

¹⁸¹ Jallow, 2014: 8.

equal.”¹⁸² He believed that the colonization of Africa was a positive development for the Africans as it brought them civilization and Christianity. He said, “The English-speaking people also realised that the Christianising process was necessary for Africa and that the supremacy of the white man was necessary in order to bring and extend civilisation and Christianity here in South Africa.”¹⁸³

Dr. Verwoerd felt that, as the Prime Minister of the only “white” African country, he had a role in providing leadership to other African nations.¹⁸⁴ He said on one occasion: “... (t)here is but one way of saving the white races of the world. And that is for the white and the non-white in Africa each to exercise his rights within his own areas...”¹⁸⁵ We have been planted here, we believe, with a destiny — a destiny not for the sake of the selfishness of a nation, but for the sake of the service of a nation to the world of which it forms a part, and the service of a nation to the Deity in which it believes. We are in South Africa but also of South Africa.”¹⁸⁶

Since his student days, Dr. Verwoerd had been a keen activist in the area of white poverty, a topic that had been the subject of his first student publication. The idea that Whites, particularly Afrikaners, were naturally entitled to a better standard of living than others was central to his ideology; he believed that white poverty was the result of cultural, rather than genetic, factors and that it could therefore be eradicated. He saw racial mixing, particularly prevalent when poor Whites and Blacks lived in the same area, as an enormous social problem that should be eliminated through a combination of the welfare state (for Whites) and segregation.¹⁸⁷

Although, as we will discuss, he would present his “homeland” approach as offering the prospect of a degree of black independence, his priority was invariably securing a comfortable future for Afrikaners. In order for his nationalist policies to work, he had to take every step necessary to avoid integration.¹⁸⁸ He stated that apartheid would give Blacks the ¹⁸² Abulof, 2015: 267.

¹⁸³ Pelzer, 1966: 257.

¹⁸⁴ Jaster, 1985: 44.

¹⁸⁵ Pelzer, 1966: 210.

¹⁸⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 494.

¹⁸⁷ Marx, 2011a: 288-292.

¹⁸⁸ Marx, 2010: 60-67.

opportunity to experience self-esteem and self-respect, rather than having to suffer the experience of being essentially “failed Whites.”¹⁸⁹

Dr. Verwoerd believed that his ideology was science-based, and that the application of science to politics would succeed.¹⁹⁰ In his vision of a successful South Africa there would be no room for a liberal party, as everyone would simply accept the necessity of the colour bar.¹⁹¹ In reality, there was little or no true “science” behind any of Dr. Verwoerd’s cynical approaches,¹⁹² and terrible penalties to pay for anyone who did not conform. One legacy of Dr. Verwoerd’s promotion of science and of himself as a scientist would be a lingering distrust of psychology and the sciences among the victims of apartheid.¹⁹³ Dr. Verwoerd claimed that apartheid was a policy of goeie buurskap (good neighbourliness);¹⁹⁴ in other words, apartheid was presented as a policy beneficial to all, while it was really a way to subdue the black majority population and protect the white privilege, status and wealth.¹⁹⁵

Throughout his career, Dr. Verwoerd insisted hypocritically that apartheid offered all the peoples of South Africa the best chance to advance in the context of “separate development,” while ensuring that Whites, about 21% of the population, owned 87% of the land.¹⁹⁶ According to Dr. Verwoerd, his twin policies of separate development and racial segregation provided a way to protect and care for “the Native in the land of the Afrikaner.”¹⁹⁷

On December 6, 1950, Dr. Verwoerd stated in Die Transvaler:

“The only possible way out... is that both accept separate development living apart from one another. The present government believes in overlordship (Baaskap) of the whites in their own territory, but it also believes in the overlordship of the Bantu in his own area. For the white child (the government) wants to create all the possible opportunities for his own development, prosperity and national service (Volkstdiens) in his own area, but for the non-

¹⁸⁹ Burke, 2006: 1.

¹⁹⁰ Marx, 2010: 58.

¹⁹¹ Magubane, 2000: 54.

¹⁹² Burke, 2006: 6.

¹⁹³ Arcot, 2015; Vontress and Naiker, 1995.

¹⁹⁴ Miller: 2016: 8; Smeulers and Grunfeld, 2012: 110; P.W. Botha, South Africa’s Prime Minister from 1978 to 1984 and State President from 1984 to 1989, also called apartheid a ‘policy of good neighbourliness’ (TIME, 3 December 1978, ‘South Africa: Putting a pretty face on apartheid’).

¹⁹⁵ Smeulers and Grunfeld, 2012: 110.

¹⁹⁶ February, 1991: 169.

¹⁹⁷ Burke, 2006: 1

white child, he also wants to create the opportunity for the fulfilment of his ambitions and the possibility of giving his service to his own people.”¹⁹⁸

Dr. Verwoerd's stated aim was that Blacks should be systematically segregated from Whites,¹⁹⁹ that “the nationalists must defend their racial policies like walls of granite,”²⁰⁰ and make apartheid “like a granite wall to defend white Christian civilisation.”²⁰¹ His use of these phrases, together with his determination to push through and implement his policies, earned him the nickname “man of granite.”²⁰² On February 5, 1960, Dr. Verwoerd said, “I believe in the supremacy of the White man over his people in his own territory and I am prepared to maintain it by force.” He then hypocritically claimed that the separation between Whites and non-Whites was not “physical” or “territorial”, but “political.” He said “the crux of the policy of separation is political separation. The basic standpoint is that the Bantu and the Whites will have their political future apart from one another . . . The Whites will be in this Parliament...”²⁰³

On January 25, 1963, in a speech in Parliament, Dr. Verwoerd said,

“We want to make South Africa white... Keeping it white can only mean one thing, namely white domination, not leadership. Not guidance, but control, supremacy. If we are agreed that it is the desire of the people that the White man should be able to continue to protect himself by retaining White domination ... we say that it can be achieved by separate development,”²⁰⁴ and, “our major task is to ensure that a white nation shall prevail here. Every nation has the unalienable right to safeguard that which it has built up for itself and for prosperity.”²⁰⁵

As for the voting rights of South Africa's Blacks, Dr. Verwoerd suggested that such people did not need them because “they know nothing of politics” and their living conditions were much better than those in other African states where people had the right to vote. Thus, he implied that a dictatorship was preferable to democracy if people had some basic living standards. The fact is South Africa's Blacks also lived in shacks and received low wages and ¹⁹⁸ February, 1991: 169.

¹⁹⁹ Lipton, 1987: 49.

²⁰⁰ Barber et al, 1990: 90.

²⁰¹ Jabavu, 1982: 154.

²⁰² Marx, 2011a: 283.

²⁰³ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1966: 1.

²⁰⁴ Dubula, 1965: 5; Frye, 1970: 30; United Nations Office of Public Information: 1969: 3-4; van den Berghe, 1966: 413; van den Berghe, 1967: 118.

²⁰⁵ Black, 1965: 151.

experienced frequent unemployment. It was invidious of Dr. Verwoerd to compare South Africa with other African countries, which were then mostly emerging as independent states after years of colonialism. South Africa was by far the richest and most developed of all the African countries, thus its citizens were justified in demanding more than a beggarly life in townships, often without running water or other public services.

Dr. Verwoerd's full statement was the following:

“A member of an African state can scarcely be accounted fortunate if he is in rags, with little to eat, with low wages, little continuous employment and only a shack to live in, if the only compensation for all that he lacks and suffers is that he has the vote. Does the vote satisfy and aid the people, particularly if the masses have to exercise this vote without much personal discretion because they know nothing of politics, or because a Black near-dictator, or politically minded half- educated clique demands blind allegiance to keep them in power? It is this distortion of values in the eyes of the prejudiced or blind critics from afar, judging according to their own privileged experience and advanced state, which makes for the unjust and undeserved condemnation of South Africa.”²⁰⁶

Dr. Verwoerd's vision was of a “grand apartheid”; “while we have a multi-racial population, we have no intention of developing into a multi-racial community.”²⁰⁷ He took inspiration from the work of people such as J. Howard Pim,²⁰⁸ who had expressed similar sentiments in earlier times. Many ordinary Boers were very responsive; a contemporary observer from an educated African background described them as “race-dedicated” and as “destroying the qualities of their own people, filling them with hate and envy.”²⁰⁹ He was adept at plugging into the narrative of victimhood that ran through Afrikaner nationalism; feeling themselves victims of the British, the belief that they were at constant risk of annihilation through being “swamped” was widespread.²¹⁰

Throughout much of history, most Europeans simply assumed that Whites were superior to others. Dr. Verwoerd brought this widely-held presumption, in concert with his ²⁰⁶ Verwoerd, 1961a: 8.

²⁰⁷ Browett, 1982: 20.

²⁰⁸ J. Howard Pim (1874-1934) proposed establishing exclusively black communities in which Blacks could handle their own affairs, and take care of their own ill and disabled, without costing Whites anything. Maurice Evans proposed some basic principles in 1911 saying that “the white man must govern” and that the races should be separated, to give each the chance to “build up and develop their race life” (Dubow, 1995b: 147-151).

²⁰⁹ Jabavu, 1960: 64.

²¹⁰ Terreblanche, 2002: 298.

Calvinistic ideas around predestination, to the extraordinary conclusion that the only way to deal with the reality of different races was to keep them firmly apart.²¹¹ The ideas of nationhood and volk that had formed in Europe in the eighteenth and nineteenth century and reached their apotheosis in Hitler's Germany were also central.²¹²

While Dr. Verwoerd came to power into a system in which the separation of Blacks and Coloureds from Whites was enshrined, he had huge conviction in the feasibility of creating a nation in which there was "separate development" (which he also called "co-existence"²¹³) at every level.²¹⁴ He believed above all in the rights of the Afrikaners as a nation, and stated in recollection of the 1934 Poor White Congress, which had been called to discuss the urgent matter of the many whites living in poverty, that it had "led me to one conclusion: the plight of my people cannot be remedied except by political machinery."²¹⁵

That Dr. Verwoerd's views went beyond nationalism to encapsulate racialism is exemplified in his comment "better poor but White than rich but Black."²¹⁶ Dr. Verwoerd also cracked down on the use of the words "Africans" and "natives," falsely stating that the Whites had arrived in South Africa around the same time as the Blacks, or even earlier. From now on, only "Bantu" was to be used as the correct term (the names of the Ministries of Native Affairs and Native Education were changed).²¹⁷

With respect to Coloureds, Dr. Verwoerd believed that as their numbers were relatively few they did not represent a threat to Whites, as he felt the Blacks did, while also stating that there must be no "intermingling" politically, at municipal or federal level. Attempts were made under Dr. Verwoerd to dismiss the reality that Coloureds were of white as well as black descent, to depict them as a biologically distinct group and to create a sense of ethnic identity.²¹⁸ He believed that they were "a race that has completely different racial characteristics (to the Whites)," and "a subordinate non-European race."²¹⁹

²¹¹ Ventner, 1999: 418.

²¹² Ventner, 1999: 440.

²¹³ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 5.

²¹⁴ Rogers, 1972: 4.

²¹⁵ Bloomberg, 1990: 98.

²¹⁶ Adam, 1971: 156.

²¹⁷ Lapping, 1986: 131; Neame, 1962: 157.

²¹⁸ Bloom, 1967: 142.

²¹⁹ Goldin, 1987: 174-175.

As for giving back the voting rights that his Party had taken away from them²²⁰ and enabling them to elect Coloured MPs to Parliament, that was out of the question for Dr. Verwoerd. Instead, he insisted, the Coloureds should choose a representative from among White candidates to protect their interests in Parliament. He assured them, though, that his Government would try to ensure that the Coloured voters, who elected four Whites to the Assembly, could “send to this Parliament those Whites who they believe will best represent the true and real interests of the Coloureds.”²²¹ Dr. Verwoerd was concerned that if greater rights were extended to Coloureds than Blacks, they could become “the tail that wags the dog.”²²² He stressed his view that the government should never relent and grant Coloureds the right to vote or any other enhanced rights, as he felt that this would lead inevitably to “biological assimilation.”²²³

In 1965, Dr. Verwoerd said of the position of the Coloureds in South Africa that if the “Bantu” were eliminated “from our political life . . . then the position is that we have a White majority in South Africa and two minority groups (Asians and Coloureds).” If granted the vote a minority group had very slight chance of getting into power — unless it held the balance of power between two equally strong parties, which was an undesirable state of affairs “Surely it is much better, then,” he continued, “to give such a minority group limited powers and opportunities. That is the basis of our policy . . . What is being given to them is self-government over matters which are of real importance to them.” He cited the fields of education, welfare, local government, Coloured settlements — even entertainment, expressing the view that if the Coloured and Asian peoples were moulded into communities they would not lose their leaders, and would have far better opportunities of holding responsible positions than would be possible in terms of a policy of integration.²²⁴

Dr. Verwoerd revealed a rare moment of uncertainty on the subject of apartheid when he was asked by a lawyer at The Hague where Coloured people rated in a system of separate destinies. The lawyer, himself an Afrikaner, pointedly added that, “They speak our language and share our culture.” Verwoerd hesitated, then volunteered that “There is no logical reason.” “What then of them?” he was asked. His reply: “Eventually, the Coloured will have ²²⁰ The Coloureds had the right to vote since the days of Colonial Office rule (Grey, 1949: 54) but it was revoked in 1956 (Adhikari, 2005: 4; Bunting, 1964: 144).

²²¹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1966: 2-3.

²²² Goldin, 1987: 174-175.

²²³ du Pre, 1994: 151.

²²⁴ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1966: 2-3.

to find his political future with the White, but the time is not yet right.²²⁵ As for Coloureds being ever integrated with Whites, Dr. Verwoerd stated flatly a few weeks before his death, “No they won’t be integrated with the Whites. Many of the Coloureds have already mingled with the Blacks. How can you integrate such a group?”²²⁶

Although the general trend around the world was towards increasing internationalism, Dr. Verwoerd remained stridently opposed to this, and advocated a strict Christian Nationalist approach. He often referred to South Africa as a “Christian republic.”²²⁷ He felt that liberalism and communism were influences that would come from overseas.²²⁸ Dr. Verwoerd was also interested in getting Whites together for a common cause. At a republican rally in 1960 he stated that all Whites, Afrikaans- and English-speakers, needed to stand together and work towards what he referred to as “a certain colour policy” and stated that a republic would give Whites the opportunity to come together and heal old wounds.²²⁹

DR. VERWOERD’S POLITICAL CAREER

THE 1943 AND 1948 GENERAL ELECTIONS AND THEIR AFTERMATH

In 1943 Daniel Francois Malan, the leader of the National Party, offered Dr. Verwoerd a safe seat in that year’s general election, but Strijdom persuaded Verwoerd to stay on as editor of Die Transvaler.²³⁰ The elections were of major importance in South African history as it was then that the term “apartheid” entered common parlance, thanks to the National Party’s campaign.²³¹ The term “apartheid,” although it had been used before,²³² had not been in a 1946 dictionary of Afrikaans.²³³

²²⁵ Moodie, 2017: 155.

²²⁶ Drury, 1968, 460-466.

²²⁷ Ngcokavane, 1989: 120.

²²⁸ Hepple, 1966: 218.

²²⁹ Norval, 1996: 184.

²³⁰ Worden, 2000: 104.

²³¹ Dubow, 1992: 211.

²³² The term “apartheid” was first coined in the 1920s (Grundy, 1991: 8). In 1929, Hertzog campaigned for election citing “black peril” as a reason to continue pursuing his plans for racial segregation, and stressed his view that if large numbers of Blacks were allowed to settle in urban areas, “bolshevism” would result (Worden, 2000: 87). The term “apartheid” was coined, predicated around segregation (van den Berghe, 1967: 115, 119). During the 1930s the term “apartheid” was used in discussions held by the Dutch Reformed Church (Dubow, 2014: 7-10), which provided rural Afrikaners with a focal point for ideas of ethnicity and belonging (Dvorin, 1952: 39).

²³³ Landis, 1961b: 1.

The National Party lost the 1943 general elections, but it emerged as the formal opposition party to the government, holding forty-three seats against the coalition (the United and the Labour parties) government's 107.²³⁴ Five years later, however, Dr. Verwoerd's parliamentary career began, campaigning as the National Party's candidate in Alberton in the 1948 general elections. In the elections, the National Party made widespread use of the term "apartheid"²³⁵ and its stated "highest goal" was the "maintenance of white race."²³⁶

Malan suggested that the Whites had a choice: "integration and national suicide," or "apartheid" and the protection of a "pure white race."²³⁷ Afrikaners were depicted as a belaboured ethnicity that had struggled to survive. The idea that they had arrived in South Africa to inhabit a mostly empty interior with almost no indigenous residents was promoted and various historical events were reimagined as displaying the Afrikaners as a noble people that fought against adversity.²³⁸

The National Party, in coalition with the Afrikaner Party (AP) of Nicolaas Havenga, won the election with 41.2% of the vote,²³⁹ though Dr. Verwoerd lost by just 171 votes²⁴⁰ to the United Party candidate.²⁴¹ Alberton being a Johannesburg suburb with a very small Afrikaner population, it was unsurprising that he failed to win there, but Dr. Verwoerd gained more votes than anyone would have expected.²⁴² Nevertheless, with the support of the Broederbond, he entered parliament as a senator instead,²⁴³ appointed by Prime Minister Malan at the insistence of Strijdom.²⁴⁴ His annual salary was £700, much less than he was making as editor of the Die Transvaler.²⁴⁵ Dr. Verwoerd subsequently became a member of the Rand Advisory Council of the National Party and Leader of the House.²⁴⁶

²³⁴ Worden, 2000: 104.

²³⁵ van den Berghe, 1967: 115; Apartheid quickly began to give rise to a considerable body of literature, including Dvorin, E.P. (1952) Racial Separation in South Africa; Keet, B.B. (1957) The Ethics of Apartheid; Peinaar, S. and Sampson, A. (1960) South Africa: Two Views of Separate Development; Pistorius, P. (1957) No Further Trek; Rhodie, N.J. and Ventner, H.J. (1960) Apartheid, A Socio-Historical Exposition of the Origin and Development of the Apartheid Idea; etc.

²³⁶ Giliomee and Schlemmer, 1990: 34.

²³⁷ Dubow, 2014: 8-17; Louw, 2004: 42; Study Commission on U.S. Policy toward Southern Africa, 1981: 41.

²³⁸ Dubow, 2014: 8-17.

²³⁹ Dubow, 2014: 2.

²⁴⁰ Botha, 1967: 13; Moodie, 1975: 257.

²⁴¹ Uys, 1959: 6.

²⁴² Kenney, 1980: 74.

²⁴³ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 24; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 197.

²⁴⁴ Troup, 1975: 318.

²⁴⁵ Giliomee, 2012: 52.

²⁴⁶ Italiaander, 1961: 105; The New York Times, 18 August 1965: 8, 'Architect of apartheid.'

After their win, Malan went on to form a Government coalition with the Afrikaner Party.²⁴⁷ He believed he was doing God's work and Die Transvaler, still edited by Dr. Verwoerd, put the election down to divine providence.²⁴⁸ He had said that "the fortunes of the Afrikaner People are not in the hands of men or of other Peoples but in the hands of God,"²⁴⁹ and identified the "black threat" as their greatest foe.²⁵⁰

The National Party's victory signalled the end of an era of relatively moderate Afrikaner leadership under Jan Smuts²⁵¹ as Malan²⁵² immediately began implementing the policy of "apartheid."²⁵³ Emerging from the hyper-nationalist ideas espoused by the National Party, the Broederbond, the Dutch Reformed Church, and many ordinary Afrikaners, and from the pre-existing ideas around race and segregation, the primary aim of Malan's apartheid was "to safeguard the racial identity and dominance of whites, by development along separate racial lines."²⁵⁴ Malan built on the laws that governed race relations; his new laws were a formalisation of the long-established segregation, which was rarely contested as it was in perfect sync with the economic interests of Whites and overseas investors.²⁵⁵

Malan's version of apartheid gave rise to unease; not only among non-Whites, but also among English-speaking South Africans.²⁵⁶ He introduced measures aimed at promoting Afrikaner unity and to reducing the domination of English speakers in economics and politics;²⁵⁷ for the first time since the Union, South Africa had a government with no Anglophones.²⁵⁸ He set about creating a system that would elevate Afrikaners and enrich ²⁴⁷ Dubow, 2014: 35; Vatcher, 1965: 75, 138.

²⁴⁸ Simons and Simons, 1983: 588.

²⁴⁹ Moodie, 1975: 247.

²⁵⁰ Herbstein, 2004: 10.

²⁵¹ Morris, 2004: 159.

²⁵² Malan is often characterised as being primarily interested in nationalism, but he was also dedicated to segregation and other racialist legislation (Beinart, 2001: 146), and had referred to Jews as "parasites" (Higginson, 2014: 322). He persisted in his anti-Semitism after the war, having described the situation in 1939 as one in which the "Jewish question" "hangs like a dark cloud over South Africa," and suggested that an organised cabal of Jews had "robbed" Afrikaners of their heritage (Vatcher, 1965: 61). However, he had no specific "blueprint" for apartheid, which continued to develop from what had gone before, and to react to current circumstances (Glaser, 2001: 97).

²⁵³ Apartheid quickly began to give rise to a considerable body of literature, including Dvorin, E.P. (1952) Racial Separation in South Africa; Peinaar, S. and Sampson, A. (1960) South Africa: Two Views of Separate Development; Pistorius, P. (1957) No Further Trek; Keet, B.B. (1957) The Ethics of Apartheid; Rhoodie, N.J. and Ventner, H.J. (1960) Apartheid, A Socio-Historical Exposition of the Origin and Development of the Apartheid Idea etc.

²⁵⁴ Barber, 1999: 140.

²⁵⁵ Doxey, 1963: 501; Schadeberg, 1990: 33.

²⁵⁶ The Economist, 29 September 1951: 753, 'Politics of Afrikanerdom.'

²⁵⁷ Schonteich and Boshoff, 2003: 15.

²⁵⁸ Calpin, 1951: 417; Denoon et al, 1989: 197.

them, while marginalising others, particularly Blacks and Coloureds, from power and from most opportunities of advancement.²⁵⁹ Malan also outraged war veterans by freeing several imprisoned “home front fascists” who had opposed South Africa’s participation in the war and supported the Nazis.²⁶⁰

More importantly, Malan sought to concentrate all national power into fewer and fewer hands.²⁶¹ Africans’ right to national political representation was denied while eligible Coloured voters were put on a separate roll that was abolished in 1956.²⁶² At the same time the National Party was exerting more control over black communities, destroying squatter camps, and creating planned black “townships” where black nuclear families would live and provide cheap labour in the urban areas.²⁶³

Apartheid developed quickly into a very complex system predicated on extremely repressive measures imposed on the Blacks by complete white domination of the political system. Everything Africans did was minutely controlled with the goal and effect of supplying white-owned industry and agriculture with cheap labour, facilitating the rapid development of industrial capitalism.²⁶⁴ Apartheid was a basic policy treated as though it were a serious philosophy on which to base a social system.

Malan insisted, just like Dr. Verwoerd would do later, that apartheid was not a policy of oppression²⁶⁵ and justified it by stating that it was a positive policy; it would allow Blacks to develop their own institutions and to exercise a degree of home rule within their reservations. However, there was never any real intention of granting them any significant freedom at all.²⁶⁶ The reality was that his government sought to ensure that enough Africans went into the cities to provide the requisite labour while not causing any problems for the White farmers who needed cheap labour;²⁶⁷ thus, it embodied a “foundational contradiction”; the very conditions that were essential to white economic well-being also gave rise to the conditions that threatened apartheid.²⁶⁸

²⁵⁹ Shaw, 2007: 1.

²⁶⁰ Dubow, 2014: 45.

²⁶¹ Gibbs 1949: 215.

²⁶² Adhikari, 2005: 4; Bunting, 1964: 144.

²⁶³ Bonner et al, 1993: 24-25.

²⁶⁴ Callinicos, 1992: 12.

²⁶⁵ Le May, 1995: 208.

²⁶⁶ Dubow, 2014: 32.

²⁶⁷ Morris, 1977: 62; Posel, 1993: 413.

²⁶⁸ Posel, 2011: 323.

Malan also suggested that apartheid was necessary to limit the influence of communism in Africa,²⁶⁹ while recognising that complete segregation would never work, as South Africa relied upon “native labour.”²⁷⁰ According to Govan Mbeki,²⁷¹ as the implementation of the National Party programme unfolded, “the hideous face of fascism under the local label of apartheid came into view.”²⁷²

AS SENATOR

As senator, Dr. Verwoerd gave his first speech to the government in 1948, stating that violence and unrest between Whites and non-Whites was stirring all over the country and stressing his view that apartheid was the only way to deal with burgeoning unrest.²⁷³ He defended apartheid and defined it as the realization that Europeans and non-Europeans were living in the same country.²⁷⁴ However, he also declared that South Africa was “a white man’s country and we must remain master here,” while suggesting rather vaguely that Blacks could be masters within their own homelands.²⁷⁵ He stated that apartheid was the only way to dispel the growing tension between the races and that it would get rid of “points of friction,” and he made some suggestions as to how already existing laws around segregation and representation could be extended.²⁷⁶ He described Blacks, Coloureds and Indians as “swarming everywhere, uncounted and uncontrolled” and “taking possession of the theatre and the streets.”²⁷⁷

In September 1948, Dr. Verwoerd stated that the new Nationalist doctrine would create new social relations and that, with time, the National Party would be able to see and fix its mistakes.²⁷⁸ In a speech in Parliament on September 3, 1948, shortly after becoming a member of the Senate, he also condemned a report of a Commission of Inquiry (Fagan

²⁶⁹ Berridge, 1992: 4.

²⁷⁰ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 50-51.

²⁷¹ (1910-2001) South African politician, ANC leader and leader of the Communist Party in South Africa. He was convicted at the Rivonia Trial on charges of terrorism and treason and was therefore imprisoned for twenty-four years in Robben Island. He served in South Africa's post-apartheid Senate from 1994 to 1997 as Deputy President of the Senate. He then served in the Senate's successor, the National Council of Provinces, from 1997 to 1999. Father of former South African President Thabo Mbeki (Gastrow, 1995: 190-192).

²⁷² Mbeki, 1991: 165.

²⁷³ Giliomee, 2011: 497.

²⁷⁴ Grey, 1949: 54.

²⁷⁵ Dubow, 2014: 64.

²⁷⁶ Brookes, 1968: 6-9.

²⁷⁷ Giliomee, 2012: 52.

²⁷⁸ Rich, 1989: 293.

Commission) set up by the Smuts government to consider the future direction of native policy. The report had recommended an incremental approach to economic and political integration, with which Dr. Verwoerd disagreed.²⁷⁹ Although rather unpopular with his peers, he was seen as the most likely to get the flagging apartheid project to succeed.²⁸⁰

The Government quickly set about building barriers between the people of South Africa. The purpose was that all potential opponents should be broken into so many racial or ethnic groups, that no one by itself could mount effective resistance to apartheid measures. This way all non-Whites like Blacks, Coloureds and Indians could not be together in one organization or group.²⁸¹ The National Party tried to propound the idea that ethnic differences and conflicts were just as great between the black tribes as between Blacks and Whites, paving the way for Verwoerd's "separate development" approach some years later.²⁸² When the National Party spoke of the need to deal with "two nations" in South Africa, they referred to the Afrikaners and people of British origins; Blacks and Coloureds were essentially considered "non-people."²⁸³

In 1950 the word "apartheid" was added to the Afrikaans dictionary for the first time defined as:

A political tendency or trend in South Africa based on the general principles

a) Of a differentiation corresponding to differences of race and/or colour and/or level of civilisation as opposed to assimilation.

b) Of the maintenance and perpetuation of the individuality (identity) of the different colour groups of which the population was composed, and of the separate development of these groups in accordance with their individual nature, tradition and capabilities, as opposed to integration.²⁸⁴

The dictionary also quoted Dr. Verwoerd's definition of apartheid which he said "means simply that each man should have his own proper place."²⁸⁵ The term was seized upon and used widely by Paul Sauer, who would become known as one of Dr. Verwoerd's

²⁷⁹ Pelzer, 1966: 12-13.

²⁸⁰ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 54-55.

²⁸¹ Bunting, 1986: 198; Mbeki, 1991: 34.

²⁸² Vail, 1989.

²⁸³ Tambo, 1964: 17.

²⁸⁴ Reeves, 1962b: 121.

²⁸⁵ Reeves, 1962b: 121.

“chief lieutenants.”²⁸⁶ Nevertheless, by the 1960s the word had become so “dirty” that Dr. Verwoerd tried to drop it.²⁸⁷

AS MINISTER OF NATIVE AFFAIRS

On October 19, 1950, two years after the National Party won the elections, Malan appointed Dr. Verwoerd Minister of Native Affairs, which was an enormous impetus to the apartheid project,²⁸⁸ although it was then seen as a rather low-status position.²⁸⁹ Dr. Verwoerd, however, was in no doubt as to the potential he could bring to the position and on receiving confirmation of his appointment he commented to his wife, “Yes, dear wife, I am now actually the great Induna!” (“Induna” is an African word meaning “boss”).²⁹⁰ Apparently, Malan was prompted to appoint him by the more extreme elements in the National Party.²⁹¹ A “sense of pragmatism [towards apartheid] was replaced by a sustained, ideological approach,”²⁹² as Dr. Verwoerd took to his role “like a giant unchained”²⁹³ and was fired with “Broederbond enthusiasm to save Afrikanerdom from being swamped with blacks in its own country.”²⁹⁴

Through his deep engagement with his new job, and his strident views on race and apartheid, Dr. Verwoerd was able to turn his ministry into one of the government’s most influential roles. He sought to centralise all issues regarding “natives” and was soon proposing and legislating for dramatic changes, intervening directly with labour, settlement, education, and a great deal more. Dr. Verwoerd’s “dynamic drive” speeded up the process of separation along racial lines while failing to provide alternative opportunities to the people discriminated against.²⁹⁵

Dr. Verwoerd recognised that a potential threat to segregation, but also an important tool for him was Whites’ desire to have a constant stream of cheap labour and in a speech to (Black) members of the Native Representative Council he sugar-coated this in a lengthy

²⁸⁶ The New York Times, 16 April 1960: 4, ‘Apartheid’s promoter: Paul Oliver Sauer.’

²⁸⁷ Addison, 1981: 3.

²⁸⁸ Badat, 2013: 22; Dubow, 1987: 11; Giliomee, 2012: 52-54.

²⁸⁹ Dubow, 2014: 59.

²⁹⁰ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Hendrik Frensj Verwoerd: A man under a cruel magnifying glass’; Hepple, 1967: 104.

²⁹¹ Beinart, 2001: 146.

²⁹² Barber, 1999: 141.

²⁹³ Posel, 1997: 64.

²⁹⁴ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 197.

²⁹⁵ Ballinger, 1969: 318-319.

explanation of how separate development would be good for the Blacks, while Blacks would continue to travel to work for Whites.²⁹⁶ The idea of Black workers as mere units of labour was one that would persist throughout the apartheid period.²⁹⁷ While Dr. Verwoerd openly supported Malan in his quest to encourage all Whites to stand together, privately he felt that Malan was too appeasing to the English.²⁹⁸ However, his main concern was racial separation. Jan Morris, a Welsh historian, described him in 1958 as having a “God-like zeal” that was “devoted entirely to dividing black from white from Coloured from Indian.”²⁹⁹

Steadily, apartheid infiltrated and dominated every aspect of life. In 1951, Dr. Verwoerd stated that it was the intention of the Party that all representation of Natives in Parliament should be hastily abolished, while stating that the “natives” were “easy prey to propaganda,” who could be swayed by talk of equality, such as many of them had heard when they were on military service abroad, during the Second World War.³⁰⁰ Dr. Verwoerd’s plan was to embed apartheid so thoroughly that it could never be undone.³⁰¹ Thus his aim was to achieve a complete “divorce” between Whites and Africans, including total territorial separation³⁰² – for the good of both, or so he claimed.³⁰³

Dr. Verwoerd’s vision for apartheid was predicated on grand apartheid, or the creation of separate living spaces or homelands for the different groups, and petty apartheid, or the multitude of ways in which every-day inequality was expressed.³⁰⁴ As many of the actions he took as Minister had a dramatic and profound impact on the development of apartheid in South Africa, these all form “Dr. Verwoerd’s Apartheid” as much as any decisions he took as Prime Minister; where initiatives were started by someone else, Dr. Verwoerd made them happen.

From 1950, Dr. Verwoerd’s department focussed on urban areas, and attacked what was seen as the liberals’ dangerous approach to managing Blacks in towns and cities. The Department of Native Affairs, “developed a brusque management style and an unapologetic racial discourse that transformed bureaucratic coercion into a racial imperative,”³⁰⁵ while ²⁹⁶ Clark and Worger, 2011: 136-141.

²⁹⁷ Asmal et al, 1996: 210.

²⁹⁸ Furlong, 1991: 237.

²⁹⁹ Morris, 1958: 171.

³⁰⁰ Jansen, 1951: 4.

³⁰¹ Sparks, 1990: 273.

³⁰² Rhoodie, 1969: 63.

³⁰³ Worger et al, 2010: 103.

³⁰⁴ Miller, 2014: 120.

³⁰⁵ Evans, 1997: 56-62.

insisting that the new policies were not repressive, but provided Blacks with full respect for their language and traditions while allowing them to develop at their own pace, and stating that Afrikaners could not be oppressors because they had been oppressed.³⁰⁶ The major legislation enacted by Dr. Verwoerd during this period is discussed in detail below.

In 1951, addressing the Native Representative Council about their concerns, Dr. Verwoerd made it very clear that they were there “to listen and keep quiet.”³⁰⁷ The same year, Malan attempted to remove the century-old voting rights from Coloureds, regardless of their level of education.³⁰⁸ This began a long legal battle between the Senate and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court over whether the Appellate Division could strike down as unconstitutional any attempt by Parliament to amend clauses entrenched in the South Africa Act. In 1956, the apartheid government succeeded in its plan,³⁰⁹ but only after it had enlarged both the Senate (in order to give itself the required two-thirds majority), and also the Appellate Division (by appointing judges who supported its cause).³¹⁰ A few years later, the National Party succeeded in passing legislation which lowered the age of voters from twenty-one to eighteen, hoping that this would increase their electoral power.³¹¹

In the 1953 general election Dr. Verwoerd was selected to stand for election in the safe seat of Heidelberg.³¹² Shortly before the election, he had been given the power to ban the ANC in the native reserves; a decision that had put “the racial problem” centre-stage, which was exactly what he wanted. Racial policies were so popular with White voters that the more moderate United Party, led by Sir de Villiers Graaff,³¹³ also campaigned with a racial agenda, stating that his party supported “white leadership with justice,”³¹⁴ although National Party supporters feared that they would eventually accept integration.³¹⁵

³⁰⁶ Neame, 1962: 78, 86.

³⁰⁷ Sachs, 1952: 34.

³⁰⁸ The Spectator, 28 March 1952: 188, ‘Dr. Malan’s crisis.’

³⁰⁹ Adhikari, 2005: 4.

³¹⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Dugard, 1978: 30-31; Sachs, 1973: 143-145.

³¹¹ The Round Table: The Commonwealth Journal of International Affairs, 1958: 88.

³¹² Uys, 1959: 6.

³¹³ (1913-1999) A lawyer who had fought in the Second World War (Uys (The Guardian), 11 October 1999, ‘Sir de Villiers Graaff’), de Villiers Graaff led the United Party during Dr. Verwoerd’s term as Prime Minister. Although he sometimes criticized and condemned some of the National Party’s policies, he supported apartheid and did not threaten the government’s plans for it (Mouton, 2014: 48-69). For his biography see: Graaff, D.V. (1993) Div Looks Back: The Memoirs of Sir de Villiers Graaff.

³¹⁴ Hunt, 1958: 5.

³¹⁵ Rydon, 1958: 30.

The National Party won 49% of the votes and 94 out of the 156 seats³¹⁶ on the back of their expanding racial policies and the Whites' dedication to the notion of themselves as eternal bosses of Blacks and other minorities;³¹⁷ they had talked little about South Africa becoming a republic, which Verwoerd was keen on, and had appealed to non-Afrikaner Whites on the grounds of their views on white supremacy, which very popular with most White voters.³¹⁸

In 1954, Malan resigned and was replaced by Johannes Strijdom, who was clearly more than ready to follow in his footsteps. Malan's advanced years were one reason for his resignation; another was his refusal to accept the new, more radical, vision of apartheid that was being promoted by the Broederbond, represented so well by the highly influential Dr. Verwoerd.³¹⁹ Verwoerd remained Minister of Native Affairs, but became even more important and central to governance and the development and application of apartheid.³²⁰ He quickly became known as one of the sharpest minds in politics, and perhaps the most hard-working politician.³²¹ He was generally considered to be second only to the Prime Minister in terms of power and influence,³²² and recognised as the man behind the policy of apartheid.³²³

Dr. Verwoerd was dedicated to his work, spending more than twelve hours at his desk every day and running his Ministry like a private empire.³²⁴ According to Christoph Marx, Professor of History at the University of Duisburg-Essen, Germany, Dr. Verwoerd "proved himself a politician of extraordinary political acumen, shrewdness, and an unbending will" as he transformed his previously rather unimportant ministry to the key department for the development of apartheid.³²⁵

On April 3, 1954, The Economist described Dr. Verwoerd as the only Member of Parliament who had a clear vision for what apartheid was.³²⁶ The same year, Dr. Verwoerd explained that "Apartheid comprises a whole multiplicity of phenomena. It comprises the political sphere; it is necessary in the social sphere; it is aimed at in Church matters; it is ³¹⁶ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 382; G. M. C. (The World Today), July 1958: 316; Rydon, 1958: 30.

³¹⁷ The Economist, 26 April 1958: 321, 'Afrikaner triumph.'

³¹⁸ Kruger, 1969: 311.

³¹⁹ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 18.

³²⁰ Kruger, 1969: 289.

³²¹ Italiaander, 1961: 103.

³²² The Economist, 19 March 1955: 1005, 'Mr. Strijdom's hundred days.'

³²³ The Economist, 21 May 1955: 647, 'South African Union, 1910-1955.'

³²⁴ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, 'The champion of apartheid.'

³²⁵ Marx, 2011a: 282.

³²⁶ The Economist, 3 April 1954, 'Notes from South Africa.'

relevant to every sphere of life. Even within the economic sphere it is not just a question of numbers. What is of more importance is whether one maintains the colour bar or not.”³²⁷

On May 18, 1954, Dr. D. L. Smit, former Secretary for Negro Affairs, charged Dr. Verwoerd that with his policies he was attempting to set up a black empire under his dictatorship.³²⁸ By the end of 1954, there were concerns that South Africa was becoming a police state, a charge Strijdom denied, while insisting that he and Dr. Verwoerd had “opened the road” for Black South Africans that would eventually lead to their becoming self-reliant and self-dependent.³²⁹ Shortly after Strijdom came to power, trains and post offices were segregated along racial lines and everywhere moves were taken to exert further control over Black South Africans. In 1955, he said, “Our task in South Africa is to maintain the identity of the white man; in the task we will die fighting.”³³⁰ That year a publication dedicated to the constitution of South Africa wrote of the Native Administration Act of 1927 that it had allowed a “unique system of extra-parliamentary government of one section of the population existing side by side with a democratic form of government for another section”; a system that was necessary because “the vast majority of natives are still so backward.... So easily influenced to mischief and agitation... so lacking in a sense of responsibility, that they may be described as children who require not only guidance but often firm direction in their own affairs.”³³¹

Dr. Verwoerd was at all times the driving force behind the hard line on segregation taken by Strijdom’s government, insisting that if his plans were carried out, most Blacks could eventually reside in “homelands” and take care of the bulk of their own affairs, while providing labour for white business and agriculture.³³² He was being hailed as the “heir apparent” of Strijdom, whose health was failing.³³³

Dr. Verwoerd would remain as Minister of Native Affairs until 1958. Under his leadership, the Ministry grew dramatically in power and scope, and he was criticised by fellow party members for creating “a state within a state” and for how he rammed through his own vision. By 1957, members of the opposition United Party was describing him as an “evil

³²⁷ Davenport, 1991: 339.

³²⁸ The New York Times, 29 May 1954: 3, ‘Dictatorial bid laid to an aid of Malan.’

³²⁹ The New York Times, 22 December 1954: 10, ‘Strijdom hints go slow policy.’

³³⁰ Dubow, 2014: 33.

³³¹ May, 1955: 301.

³³² Kruger, 1969: 298-299.

³³³ G. M. C. (The World Today), July 1958: 320; The Economist, 22 March 1958, 1022, ‘Election tactics.’

genius,”³³⁴ while Major P.V. G. Vanderbyl, a United Party member, said he believed that no man in South Africa’s history had done more to endanger white civilization than Dr. Verwoerd.³³⁵ As for some of his National Party followers, they just called him “Oom [Uncle] Henny.”³³⁶

AS PRIME MINISTER

Strijdom died on August 24, 1958, after almost four years in office, and just five months after leading the National Party to another election victory (albeit with fewer votes from the eighteen-twenty-one age group, voting for the first time, than they had hoped³³⁷), winning 103 seats against the United Party’s 53.³³⁸ Dr. Verwoerd, who had developed the reputation under Malan and Strijdom as someone who forged bold politics and enforced them ruthlessly,³³⁹ bid for leadership of the National Party. There was a brief but furious struggle for leadership within the National Party between Dr. Verwoerd, Dr. Eben Donges,³⁴⁰ who would later serve under Dr. Verwoerd as Minister of Finance, and Charles Swart,³⁴¹ who had been Minister of Justice under Strijdom.³⁴²

Dr. Verwoerd was Strijdom’s first choice as his successor, but then fearing there would be a split in the Party because NP leaders in Cape Town planned to put forward Donges, Strijdom chose Swart as a compromise candidate. However, the Transvaal Party leaders rejected Strijdom’s suggestion and the Cape leaders continued to press for Donges. The crisis led to Party elections,³⁴³ which took place on September 2, 1958, only a week after Strijdom’s death. In the first round, the results were Swart 41, Donges 52, Dr. Verwoerd 80,

³³⁴ Callinicos, 1995: 46; The Canberra Times, 25 May 1957: 6, ‘Dr. Verwoerd, South Africa’s ‘evil genius.’

³³⁵ The Canberra Times, 25 May 1957: 6, ‘Dr. Verwoerd, South Africa’s ‘evil genius.’

³³⁶ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

³³⁷ The Economist, 24 October 1959: 319, ‘Cold comfort for Dr Verwoerd.’

³³⁸ The Economist, 26 April 1958: 321, ‘Afrikaner triumph’; Welsh, 2000: 448.

³³⁹ Neame, 1962: 156.

³⁴⁰ (1898–1968) Minister of Finance from 1958 to 1967, he assumed the role of acting Prime Minister on 6 September 1966, when Dr. Verwoerd was assassinated. He remained in this post until the 13th of September when John Vorster became Prime Minister (Lentz, 1996: 698).

³⁴¹ (1894-1982) A supporter of the Nazis, member of the Broederbond and of the Ossewaybrandwag (Verwey, 1995: 237). As Minister of Justice he introduced the Immorality Act and the Suppression of Communism Act which outlawed the Communist Party (Lakeland Ledger, 17 July 1982: 15, ‘Charles Swart: Ex-South African leader.’). He served as acting Prime Minister in 1958, the last Governor-General and the first State President of the Republic of South Africa from 1961 to 1967 (Verwey, 1995: 238-240).

³⁴² Hughes, 1961: 177.

³⁴³ Vatcher, 1965: 125.

and in the run-off Donges 75, Dr. Verwoerd 98.³⁴⁴ Dr. Verwoerd celebrated his win by singing along with his supporters the traditional Dutch anthem, Let God's Blessing on Him Fall.³⁴⁵

Thus, Dr. Verwoerd became both Prime Minister and leader of the National Party,³⁴⁶ just months after reports that he was considered by many of his colleagues to be a dangerous extremist.³⁴⁷ On receiving the news of his victory, Dr. Verwoerd made a nationwide radio speech in which he depicted himself as God's choice: "It must be stated at the outset that we as believing rulers of a religious nation will seek our strength and guidance in the future, as in the past, from Him who controls the destinies of nations... in accordance with His will, it was determined who should assume the leadership of the government in this new period of the life of the people of South Africa."³⁴⁸ On another occasion, he said, and "I believe that the will of God was revealed in the ballot."³⁴⁹ The reaction of non-Whites to Dr. Verwoerd's election victory varied from "dismay" to "explosive resentment," while the Cape Times characterised it as a "disaster."³⁵⁰ The New York Times characterised his victory as "bad news" and reported that:

"there will be no rejoicing anywhere, not even among the majority of the South African people, that Hendrik Verwoerd has been chosen Prime Minister. This is an affliction which the unhappy people of South Africa will have to bear for a while... Dr. Verwoerd is an outstanding example of a gradually disappearing breed – the racist. In Hitler's days he was pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic. His passion and his role in South Africa today is that of the champion of an extremist white supremacy. He is the most fanatical exponent of apartheid."³⁵¹

³⁴⁴ Giliomee, 2012: 48; The Round Table: The Commonwealth Journal of International Affairs, 1958: 88-89; Uys, 1959: 7; van Roouen, 1976: 72.

³⁴⁵ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, 'The champion of apartheid'; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid'; TIME, 15 September 1958: 26, 'South Africa: God's man.'

³⁴⁶ O'Meara, 1996: 91; The New York Times, 3 September 1958: 1, 'Verwoerd becomes South Africa's head.'

³⁴⁷ The New York Times, 3 September 1958: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd becomes South Africa's head.'

³⁴⁸ Hepple, 1967: 134; TIME, 15 September 1958: 26, 'South Africa. God's man.'

³⁴⁹ Lapping, 1986: 130; Uys (Africa South), January-March 1959: 8, 'Dr. Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa.'

³⁵⁰ TIME, 15 September 1958: 26, 'South Africa: God's man.'

³⁵¹ The New York Times, 6 September 1958: 16, 'Bad news from South Africa.'

Dr. Verwoerd immediately tried to set a “good example” by having no Black servants in the Prime Minister’s residence;³⁵² the couple liked to boast that their children were never bathed or put to bed by Africans.³⁵³ As the new Prime Minister, he said:

“We cannot govern without taking into account the tendencies in the world and in Africa.... We must have regard to them. We are... taking steps to ensure that we adopt a policy by which we on the one hand can retain for the white man full control in his areas, but by which we are giving the Bantu as our wards every opportunity in their areas to move along a road of development by which they can progress in accordance with their ability.”³⁵⁴

Dr. Verwoerd stated that apartheid was “an ideal to aim at”³⁵⁵ and started to implement his Grand Apartheid plan.³⁵⁶ His era began with the government’s commitment to a measure of independence in native areas, and the “big push” to recreate South Africa as a republic³⁵⁷ and achieve complete segregation. Thus, Dr. Verwoerd quietly removed moderates from the government, replacing them with those who shared his views, members of the more “doctrinaire” or “extremist” group of Nationalists, and often members of the Broederbond.³⁵⁸ Shortly after his appointment he met the Broederbond and stressed his intention to involve the organisation much more closely with the intimate workings of government.³⁵⁹ He quickly put the Broederbond into a leadership position in the area of policy-making as he set about making his ideology of “national salvation” a reality.³⁶⁰

Dr. Verwoerd was quick to clarify that his ideas for apartheid were more complete and far-ranging than what had gone before.³⁶¹ Some loved his plans; one journalist commented that he was a “self-centred and self-satisfied Afrikaner.”³⁶² At an event that year to celebrate the anniversary of the defeat of Zulus by Afrikaners at a battle in Blood River in 1838, he described Whites as fighting for civilisation “with their backs to the wall.”³⁶³ It was ³⁵² Le May, 1995: 219; Sachs, 1961: 38; Serfontein, 1979: 84-85.

³⁵³ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, ‘The champion of apartheid’; The New York Times, 10 April 1960: 20, ‘Dr. Verwoerd played leading role in spurring apartheid policies.’

³⁵⁴ Moodie, 1975: 264.

³⁵⁵ Mbeki, 2001: 144.

³⁵⁶ Cachalia, 1990: 10.

³⁵⁷ Davenport, 1991: 353.

³⁵⁸ The Round Table: The Commonwealth Journal of International Affairs, 1958: 90; van den Berghe, 1967: 104.

³⁵⁹ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 3-4.

³⁶⁰ Waldmeir, 1997: 11.

³⁶¹ Buthelezi, 1974: 6.

³⁶² Myers, 1959: 23.

³⁶³ The Canberra Times, 18 December 1958: 6, ‘Whites may fail says Dr. Verwoerd.’

soon apparent that Dr. Verwoerd brought apartheid to a whole new level; compared to him, Malan was a “mild and benign old gentleman.”³⁶⁴

While apartheid had been in place since 1948, under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister the state started to pursue his vision of complete segregation with new vigour,³⁶⁵ and the political atmosphere in the country took a decided “turn for the worse.”³⁶⁶ The pace of change increased dramatically, with a considerable focus on the government’s policies of controlling urban blacks and creating “homelands.”³⁶⁷ Dr. Verwoerd’s apartheid was to involve “the massive restructuring of an entire society” that would involve huge expense, and the movement of enormous numbers of people.³⁶⁸

Dr. Verwoerd also moved away from a hard-line nationalist stance to adopt a conciliatory attitude towards English South Africans, naming two English politicians as cabinet members, and speaking increasingly in terms of more general white supremacy, stressing the need for order in South Africa.³⁶⁹ However, there were no English speakers on the government side in either the House of Assembly or the Senate.³⁷⁰

Already highly influential, the Broederbond became even more so under Dr. Verwoerd, who offered it shared responsibility with the party for his goal of turning South Africa into a republic; the organisation responded with a great deal of support, including spending its own funds on the campaign. It also set up think-tanks to explore every aspect of government policy.³⁷¹ Under Dr. Verwoerd, apartheid was transformed from the segregationist approach of Malan to an extreme system designed to deal with every single aspect of inter-racial relations in South Africa.

Dr. Verwoerd was very sure of himself and believed that he was always right. “I do not have the nagging doubt of ever wondering whether, perhaps, I am wrong,”³⁷² he said once. He was described by Dr. Jamie Miller, a Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of History at the University of Pittsburgh, as “eloquent, commanding, and captivating,”³⁷³ but he ³⁶⁴ Kepple-Jones, 1963: 202.

³⁶⁵ Grundy, 1991: 8.

³⁶⁶ du Preez Bezdrob, 2003: 75.

³⁶⁷ Foster, 1987: 19.

³⁶⁸ Furlong, 1991: 257.

³⁶⁹ Brotz, 1977: 42.

³⁷⁰ Uys (Transition No. 19), 1965: 16, ‘Opium of the Afrikaner.’

³⁷¹ O’Meara, 1966: 48.

³⁷² Bunting, 1986: 148; Dubow, 2014: 120; Evans, 1997: 56.

³⁷³ Miller, 2014: 114.

was also a difficult, autocratic man who treated even his ministers as though they were schoolboys.³⁷⁴ His Minister and close friend Paul Sauer³⁷⁵ said that “nothing in his Ministers’ Departments escaped Dr. Verwoerd’s attention. At Cabinet meetings he frequently knew more of their own affairs than the Ministers themselves.”³⁷⁶ Dr. Verwoerd was also, according to Lawrence Schlemmer of the South African Institute of Racial Relations, an inspiring and charismatic leader, whom many of his followers saw almost as a prophet.³⁷⁷ On the other hand, Verwoerd believed that he had been chosen by God to lead the Afrikaners and saw himself as a man on a divine mission.³⁷⁸

THE 1961 ELECTION

With three years as Prime Minister behind him and his government’s five-year term of office not due to expire until April 1963, Dr. Verwoerd decided to go for an early general election, in October 1961. He declared that “the basic point for this election is racial policy” and called for “national unity” among the White voters, warning that the outcome would affect not only the present condition of South Africa, but its long-term-future, too.³⁷⁹ In fact, Dr. Verwoerd was facing several problems which he believed an election would solve. He wanted to secure the support of many who were concerned about developments in the North; to eliminate waverers from the ranks of National Party MPs and exclude Progressives from Parliament altogether; and to secure his and his party’s position before the economic repercussions of leaving the Commonwealth became too marked.³⁸⁰

The 1961 general election, the first after South Africa became a Republic, turned out to be a triumph for Dr. Verwoerd and a sign of approval of his policies.³⁸¹ The National Party ³⁷⁴ Osada, 2002: 8.

³⁷⁵ (1898-1976) A member of the National Party, Minister of Lands and Irrigation (Rosenthal, 1966); he also served as governments chief spokesman in 1960 while Verwoerd was recovering from David Pratt’s assassination attempt (Pogrud, 1990: 157). The Paul Sauer Dam named after him was renamed Kouga Dam in 1995 (Water Wheel, 2011: 20-24).

³⁷⁶ O’Meara, 1996: 112.

³⁷⁷ Schlemmer, 1970: 19.

³⁷⁸ Barber, 1999: 161; Bunting, 1986: 147; Sachs, 1965: 7.

³⁷⁹ Dubow, 2014: 85; Standerton (The Cape Times), 21 October 1961, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: The basic point of this election is racial policy’; Stultz and Butler, 1963: 107.

³⁸⁰ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 14.

³⁸¹ For a detailed exploration of the election see: McConnachie, A. J. (1999) The 1961 Election in the Republic of South Africa and Stultz, N.M. and Butler, J. (1963) The South African General Election of 1961.

won 105 of the 156 seats³⁸² with 46% of the votes.³⁸³ Most of the English-speaking Whites responded to his plea for “national unity” and supported his ambitious plans to achieve complete segregation.³⁸⁴ Muriel Horrell of the South African Institute of Race Relations observed at the time that “White right-wing elements (English- as well as Afrikaans-speaking people) are increasingly aligning themselves behind Dr. Verwoerd, who is coming to be looked upon by them as the champion of White nationalism rather than of Afrikaner nationalism, as in the past. His image, in the minds of many White South Africans, seems to be that of a strong, determined man who will, for the time being at any rate, protect ‘White’ civilization in the southernmost State of Africa against the tide of Pan-Africanism spreading from the north.”³⁸⁵ Other reasons that contributed to the NP’s easy victory included the ban on Coloureds voting, the redrawing of rural voting areas to favour Afrikaans voters, and divisions in the United Party, which was still smarting from its defeat in 1958.³⁸⁶

While conservative elements in the United Party fretted that Dr. Verwoerd’s Bantustan policy would result in South Africa being broken up and losing power,³⁸⁷ from the liberal camp there was growing anxiety about “the Nazi line being taken by the party,” and of the risk that Dr. Verwoerd might take steps to “entrench” the position of the National Party in government.³⁸⁸ The United Party under Sir de Villiers Graaff did essentially nothing to combat apartheid at all and in that respect was an extremely cooperative opposition.³⁸⁹

One of the key issues on which Dr. Verwoerd campaigned was that of votes for Coloured South Africans, which he ardently opposed, regarding his colleagues who supported such measures as traitors to the cause of white supremacy.³⁹⁰ The 1961 election was an occasion of great debate about racial matters³⁹¹ and, when he won, Dr. Verwoerd rightly took this as indication of overwhelming support on the part of White voters for these policies,³⁹² despite anxieties about South Africa’s loss of standing in the international

³⁸² The United Party won 49 seats and the Progressive Party and the National Union Party one each (South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 21; Stultz and Butler, 1963: 102.)

³⁸³ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 21; Stultz and Butler, 1963: 102.

³⁸⁴ Dubow, 2014: 85; McConnachie, 1999: 123, 284; Stultz and Butler, 1963: 86-110; The Economist, 27 October 1961: 358, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s mandate’; Worden, 2000: 111.

³⁸⁵ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1964: 1.

³⁸⁶ Dubow, 2014: 85; McConnachie, 1999: 123, 284; Stultz and Butler, 1963: 86-110; The Economist, 27 October 1961: 358, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s mandate’; Worden, 2000: 111.

³⁸⁷ Debates of the House of Assembly, 2 June 1959: Cols. 7180-2.

³⁸⁸ Ingalls (The New York Times), 23 October 1961: 20, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s aide scored on speech.’

³⁸⁹ Mouton, 2014: 48.

³⁹⁰ Ingalls (The New York Times), 22 January 1961: 14, ‘Election seen for South Africa.’

³⁹¹ Heard, 1974: 120.

³⁹² The New York Times, 21 October 1961, ‘Dr. Verwoerd pledges unchanged policies.’

community, and the complexities that would be involved in achieving apartheid.³⁹³ Dr. Verwoerd felt that he had a mandate to crack down on any dissenters within the ranks of his own party.³⁹⁴

SOUTH AFRICA BECOMES A REPUBLIC

To “sever the British connection” was a “political catch-phrase” among Afrikaner nationalists at the time³⁹⁵ who had not forgotten their defeat in the Boer Wars.³⁹⁶ In 1944, Eric Louw, Verwoerd’s Foreign Minister, had given another reason for parting from the Commonwealth: “as long as we remain in the British Commonwealth, we shall continually be hindered by British liberalism in our efforts to solve the colour problem and the Jewish question.”³⁹⁷ Verwoerd had stressed his commitment to South Africa becoming a Republic³⁹⁸ and stated his view that the National Party was not just a political party, but a manifestation of the state itself; “A nation on the move.”³⁹⁹

Soon after he became Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd and Piet Meyer, chairman of the Broederbond, discussed the idea of South Africa becoming a republic, thus fulfilling their dream and the desire of many of their Afrikaner compatriots. On December 2, 1959, Dr. Verwoerd related the conversation to the Executive Council of the Broederbond. At this point, it was clear that the Broederbond would have to play a role in preparing the Afrikaner people for the republic to become a reality, but without drawing undue attention to its own role. Meyer and Dr. Verwoerd had agreed that each member of the Broederbond would join the National Party on an individual basis and play an active role in party organization in the event of successful outcome. When Meyer informed the Broederbond Council of this agreement, it instantly came on board with this plan, giving rise to an unprecedented period of enthusiastic Broederbond involvement in the National Party’s aims.⁴⁰⁰

When Dr. Verwoerd announced the referendum, the Broederbond’s Executive Council make a number of key decisions about how it would play a role. Its key members ³⁹³ Stultz and Butler, 1963: 97.

³⁹⁴ GVD, 1961: 540.

³⁹⁵ The Economist, 25 March 1961: 1166, ‘Forward with Verwoerd.’

³⁹⁶ Barkon, 1961: 104; TIME, 17 October 1960: 36, ‘South Africa. Ja for Verwoerd.’

³⁹⁷ TIME, 17 October 1960: 36, ‘South Africa. Ja for Verwoerd.’

³⁹⁸ Moodie, 1975: 283.

³⁹⁹ De Villiers, 1971: 370.

⁴⁰⁰ Pelzer, 1979: 160-164.

Piet Meyer, S. Pauw, J.F.W. Haak and A.I. Malan would serve as a committee to plan the Broederbond's involvement in the republic project, the Broederbond's management would have the authority to decide on the committee's recommendations, the committee would be funded by the Broederbond and other councils and would have propaganda pieces prepared and distributed and "informed" Broeders and members of the Executive Council would address regional Broederbond meetings on the subject of the referendum and the republican cause. In total, forty-five such meetings were held, and many "information pieces," including a brochure entitled Last Steps to the Republic, prepared by the Broederbond for distribution within the party and to the press and radio.⁴⁰¹

In 1960, Harold Macmillan, the Prime Minister of Britain, told the South African parliament when he was on an official visit that "the winds of change are blowing through the continent" and that aspects of their policies made it impossible for Britain to support them,⁴⁰² while also referencing the growth in "African consciousness" throughout the continent.⁴⁰³ In his official thanks to Macmillan, Dr. Verwoerd said: "We [Afrikaners] call ourselves European but actually we represent the white man in Africa.... We look upon ourselves as indispensable to the white world... We are the link; we are white, but we are in Africa. We link them both and that lays on us a special duty, and we realised that."⁴⁰⁴ The Cape Times ran a cartoon by David Marais showing Macmillan and Dr. Verwoerd walking past a diorama with a dinosaur behind them. Through the glass the caption read, "S.A. Museum – Europeans Only," anticipating Dr. Verwoerd's defence of apartheid against Macmillan's opposition.⁴⁰⁵

Dr. Verwoerd announced a referendum in which all the White voters would get the chance to decide whether or not South Africa should become a republic and leave the Commonwealth. Afterwards Macmillan would say that if Dr. Verwoerd had given some grounds to hope that apartheid would be relaxed, the Commonwealth would have accepted South Africa on the basis that there were possibilities of cooperation in the future. Non-White Commonwealth leaders indicated that they would have no problem with South Africa being a member once it abandoned its race policies.⁴⁰⁶

⁴⁰¹ Pelzer, 1979: 160-164.

⁴⁰² Barber, 1999: 161-163; Davenport, 1991: 354; Marquard, 1969: 24; Thompson, 2001: 213; Vatcher, 1965: 171; Welsh, 2000: 456.

⁴⁰³ Italiaander, 1961: 109.

⁴⁰⁴ Magubane, 1996: 24.

⁴⁰⁵ Coombes, 2013: 222-224.

⁴⁰⁶ Hughes, 1961: 173.

The referendum was held on October 5, 1960, but only for the country's 3,067,638 Whites. The remainder of South Africa's 15,841,128 population and the vast majority, 12,773,490 non-Whites, were declared ineligible.⁴⁰⁷ The question put to the vote was simple: A Republic, Yes (Ja) or No (Nee)? The Republic won by a respectable margin,⁴⁰⁸ 850,458 against 775,878⁴⁰⁹ or according to other sources 830.520 against 733.861,⁴¹⁰ thus 52.3% of the votes.⁴¹¹ For Dr. Verwoerd hailed the victory as "the beginning of a new era"⁴¹² and added in immensely racist terms: "The English-speaking and the Afrikaans-speaking sections have become like the new bride and the bridegroom who enter upon the new life in life to create together and to live together as life-mates."⁴¹³ British officials commented later that the outcome could have been very different if South Africa had offered even minor concessions.⁴¹⁴

The passage of the referendum was a great boost to Dr. Verwoerd's standing and a vote of confidence in his policies;⁴¹⁵ it was seen in some quarters as a long-overdue happy ending to the humiliating Boer War.⁴¹⁶ As soon as the results were in, he wrote to the Broederbond, thanking them for the role that they had played in achieving the result that he wanted;⁴¹⁷ it had been considerable.⁴¹⁸ He also said that he saw the hand of God in the referendum results.⁴¹⁹ Addressing the South African Society in London shortly afterwards, Dr. Verwoerd painted a picture of a valiant Afrikaner nation fighting for survival amid hordes of Blacks who wanted the good life that "civilisation" offered while being unable to provide it for themselves.⁴²⁰

Although Dr. Verwoerd had initially applied for South Africa to remain a member of the Commonwealth despite having become a republic, when the Prime Ministers of other Commonwealth countries raised their many objections to apartheid South Africa withdrew its ⁴⁰⁷ Burger, 1961: 11.

⁴⁰⁸ Davenport, 1991: 355; De Villiers, 1971: 383; Guelke, 2005: 102; Lodge, 2011: 175; TIME, 17 October 1960: 36, 'South Africa. Ja for Verwoerd.'; Welsh, 2000: 456.

⁴⁰⁹ Botha, 1967: 72; Burger, 1961: 11.

⁴¹⁰ Hanf et al, 1981: 99.

⁴¹¹ Stults and Butler, 1963: 87.

⁴¹² TIME, 17 October 1960: 36, 'South Africa. Ja for Verwoerd.'

⁴¹³ Moodie, 1975: 285-286.

⁴¹⁴ Lodge, 2011: 174.

⁴¹⁵ Giliomee, 2011: 525.

⁴¹⁶ De Klerk, 1999: 35; Landis, 1961a: 4.

⁴¹⁷ Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 133.

⁴¹⁸ Harrison, 1981: 161.

⁴¹⁹ Allighan, 1961: x.

⁴²⁰ Redeskie, 2009: 1-15.

application for ongoing membership.⁴²¹ Patronisingly, Dr. Verwoerd declared that these countries' attacks on apartheid and their calls for a boycott of South African goods were the result of their "immaturity."⁴²² He also cited as one reason why this was necessary the spectre of African and Asian countries that were also Commonwealth members trying to interfere in South Africa's private affairs.⁴²³

On his return to South Africa, Dr. Verwoerd was met by a mass of Black protestors, angry because the race issue had precipitated South Africa's departure from the Commonwealth.⁴²⁴ Explaining his position to the parliament of South Africa, Dr. Verwoerd said: "What they sought was not equality through coexistence and non-subordination in countries like South Africa, but domination of superior numbers in the name of full equality and, therefore, eventual victory over the whites by forcing out and swallowing up the whites. It was here we had to draw the line."⁴²⁵

Shortly after the referendum, Nelson Mandela sent Dr. Verwoerd a letter asking him to call a national constitutional convention, and warning that if he did not there would be a massive three-day strike. Mandela described South Africa as a "grim dictatorship" and said that activists were aware of the strict measures Dr. Verwoerd's government was likely to take.⁴²⁶ Dr. Verwoerd responded with a warning to anyone who was advocating a multiracial convention that doing so would be "playing with fire."⁴²⁷ Yusuf Dadoo of the South African Communist Party stated that the new events indicated that the world was "solidly against Dr. Verwoerd's racial policies."⁴²⁸

English-speaking South Africans were torn; some were upset about being separated from a country they still felt very connected to, while others found themselves drawn to the nationalist movement because of their horror at the decolonisation process that Britain was involved in,⁴²⁹ and growing acceptance in Britain that Blacks were no less able to rule

⁴²¹ Jeeves, 1971: 418.

⁴²² Verwoerd, 1961a: 5.

⁴²³ Jaster, 1985: 42; The Economist, 27 May 1961: 905, 'The one sane country.'

⁴²⁴ The New York Times, 21 March 1961: 3, 'Fight rages on streets.'

⁴²⁵ Devenish, 2012: 4.

⁴²⁶ Mandela, 2013: 305-306.

⁴²⁷ Sisulu, 2003: 182.

⁴²⁸ Bunting, 1981: 267.

⁴²⁹ Davenport, 1991: 362.

themselves than anyone else.⁴³⁰ Dr. Verwoerd hailed a new era and called for a new election.⁴³¹

Initially, after departure from the Commonwealth, the economy of South Africa deteriorated, largely because of uncertainty over the future. Foreign exchange reserves dropped from £96,000,000 to £91,000,000, while the value of shares in the Johannesburg Stock Exchange was slashed by £200 million.⁴³² However, the slump turned out to be temporary and soon the economy began to expand again, reaching excessive highs in 1964.⁴³³

DR. VERWOERD WORKS TO ESTABLISH HIS VISION

While Dr. Verwoerd had had much to do with the South African Bureau of Native Affairs (SABRA) he was much more pragmatic than its “visionaries.” He knew that it never be possible to completely eliminate the need for black labour, and that some ingress of Black workers into white areas would always be necessary. Dr. Verwoerd steadily removed members of SABRA from positions of influence,⁴³⁴ after having put them under pressure to remove their progressive members.⁴³⁵

Escalating protest and even an assassination attempt in April 1960 did not deter Dr. Verwoerd from strengthening apartheid in every single aspect of South African life. He believed that protest and radicalism were nothing to do with government policy but resulted from “the subversive doctrines of liberalism,” misinterpretations and misunderstandings.⁴³⁶ Dr. Verwoerd departed somewhat from his nationalist stance to urge Afrikaans and English speakers to unite, saying: “we grant all the nations of the world national pride, and the past from which they have sprung. But besides history there is the present, a present which passes quickly away, and then there is the future. In that future we see the revolution of Africa and the growing problems of South Africa. For the sake of the future we must stand together as whites.”⁴³⁷

⁴³⁰ MacMillan, 1950: 320.

⁴³¹ Barber, 1999: 173.

⁴³² The Economist, 22 April 1961: 361, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s hour.’

⁴³³ The Economist, 7 March 1964: 905, ‘Boom time in South Africa.’

⁴³⁴ Lazer, 1993: 364-365, 386.

⁴³⁵ Adam, 1971: 176.

⁴³⁶ Barber, 1999: 171.

⁴³⁷ Moodie, 1975: 278.

The economy grew and increasingly Afrikaners had an important part to play in it while their numbers continued to rise in the public sector.⁴³⁸ As South Africa became a more powerful international trading partner, international opposition to apartheid, at state level, tended to become more muted, and the relationship between Afrikaner and English South Africans improved. South Africa participated in the general trend towards the globalisation of multi-national investment, and there was a great expansion in the areas of heavy industry, while traditional sectors, including food and clothing, became less important. Britain was South Africa's most important trading partner, followed by Germany.⁴³⁹

Although apartheid was not a new phenomenon but a continuation and formalisation of age-old policy, it represented a dramatic departure by focusing on what Pierre L. van den Berghe refers to as "Macro-Segregation" or "the segregation of racial groups in discrete territorial units" – the so-called "homelands," discussed below.⁴⁴⁰ This occurred when the non-white elements were continuing to increase while, from 1948, the number of White immigrants into South Africa had dropped off sharply.⁴⁴¹ The Department of Native Affairs, which Dr. Verwoerd had caused to occupy such an important role, became ever more important under his Prime Ministership. It had its own sub-departments of Labour and Housing, and the Department of Economic Affairs became more marginalised in terms of dealing with the "homelands";⁴⁴² the Minister of Economic Affairs now occupied no more than an advisory role in this area.⁴⁴³

On September 18, 1958, just two weeks after he had become Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd set out his plans regarding the Native Question and the issue of the Republic:

"Once we can get away from the present struggle over the colour problem and the issue of freedom, by securing the safety of the White man and assuring South Africa's status as a republic, new party orientations will arise of their own accord. Indeed, in such a Republic where our colour policy will be generally accepted there will be no place for a liberal party which strives to establish joint rule by white and non-white."⁴⁴⁴

⁴³⁸ Meredith, 1988: 109.

⁴³⁹ Beinart, 2001: 172-175.

⁴⁴⁰ van den Berghe, 1966: 5.

⁴⁴¹ Fair and Schaffer, 1964: 266.

⁴⁴² Posel, 1997: 7.

⁴⁴³ Posel, 1997: 64.

⁴⁴⁴ Pelzer, 1966: 168.

After South Africa became a republic, Dr. Verwoerd used his growing confidence to press ahead with his vision. Ronald M. Segal, a prominent anti-apartheid activist, writer and editor who founded the Penguin African Library,⁴⁴⁵ wrote about Dr. Verwoerd in 1961:

“Above all, both as Minister and as Prime Minister, he has shown himself utterly ruthless in suppressing all forms of resistance. As Prime Minister he has ruled his party and the country with an undeviating intransigence. He is far from generally popular with the party; but he unquestionably commands the fear of those whose regard he does not enjoy. Those who believe that he is vulnerable to reason are ignorant both of his record and of his character. Like the Hitler he so admired during the last war, his policy is a manifestation of his character. Like Hitler he will not concede; he can only be defeated.”⁴⁴⁶

As apartheid become progressively more entrenched, Dr. Verwoerd continued to insist that separate development offered both Blacks and Whites the fairest way to get ahead and to find fulfilment as part of a nation.⁴⁴⁷ After 1961, his government was primarily concerned with legislation, and laws that either “filled in gaps” that allowed previously passed laws to be evaded, or passed new laws to give the government ever-greater powers, while chipping away at the already meagre rights afforded to non-White South Africans.⁴⁴⁸ All major elements of legislation are discussed in detail below.

In 1962, a propagandist “socio-economic survey” described Africans as “primitive races” and outlined why Dr. Verwoerd’s government believed strongly in separate development. The basis of all policy was the belief in European culture as “superior” and that African nationalism could threaten it. Dr. Verwoerd claimed that he planned to elevate the standards of living of all South Africans,⁴⁴⁹ and in 1963 he criticised other African nations that spoke badly of the apartheid system and referred to them as “bum and beggar” nations unworthy of respect. The same year, he indicated that he was quite prepared to abandon the rule of law to combat communism, if necessary.⁴⁵⁰

⁴⁴⁵ Herbstein (The Guardian), 26 February 2008, ‘Ronald Segal.’

⁴⁴⁶ Segal (The Spectator), 3 March 1961: 287, ‘Dr. Verwoerd.’

⁴⁴⁷ Verwoerd, 1963: 3.

⁴⁴⁸ Marquard, 1968: 261.

⁴⁴⁹ Andrews et al, 1962: 188-189, 210-211.

⁴⁵⁰ Bunting, 1986: 425, 529.

DR. VERWOERD'S "ACHIEVEMENTS"

LEGISLATION

Apartheid systematically stripped Blacks and, to a lesser extent, Coloureds and Indians of basic civil and human rights. Legislation extended deep into everyday life. In every aspect, Whites had superior facilities and opportunities, and Blacks inferior, when they had any at all.⁴⁵¹ The apartheid regime modelled many of its early laws, including how to define race groups and implement their separation, on legislation in use in the southern American states of Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi, even on occasion lifting the exact words.⁴⁵²

Dr. Verwoerd used this imported legislation as a starting point for a much wider approach to the race question, culminating in total racial segregation. His period as Prime Minister gave him the opportunity to expand and add to legislation with which he had been involved as Minister for Native Affairs, and we will look at the relevant major legislation in both periods below. Between 1948 and 1965, the National Party passed a total of fifty-five major laws that restricted Africans in every single aspect of their everyday lives.⁴⁵³

VOTING RIGHTS

Non-Whites were prevented from parliamentary representation. The Separate Registration of Voters Acts of 1951 and 1956, under Malan and Strijdom, had meant that Coloured voters were removed from the common roll and put on a special roll to elect their four White representatives in Parliament.⁴⁵⁴ The abolishment of the Native Representatives Council, one of Dr. Verwoerd's first acts as Prime Minister, severed ties of communication between African representatives and the parliament of South Africa although Africans would continue to be the parliament's subjects until or unless they reached a position whereby the authorities decided that they were "ready" to self-govern within their territories,⁴⁵⁵ a position that Dr. Verwoerd represented as highly ethical.⁴⁵⁶

Meanwhile, Blacks had no say on matters that did not apply exclusively to "native affairs." Dr. Verwoerd said, "It is not [the African's] task to consult with the white man on ⁴⁵¹ Hopkins, 2015: 242.

⁴⁵² Moodie, 2017: 153.

⁴⁵³ TIME, 5 November 1965: 42, 'South Africa: Champagne for whites.'

⁴⁵⁴ Conference Steering Committee, 1964: 97.

⁴⁵⁵ Ballinger, 1969: 358-364.

⁴⁵⁶ Posel, 1987: 433.

matters which also affect the white man." On the matter of what Africans themselves felt about having no representation in parliament, he said, "... we know that the great mass of the Bantu are not able to decide on a matter of this nature... It is... white policy coupled with fairness and justice because basically this point of view is essential for the survival of the whites..."⁴⁵⁷

RACE CLASSIFICATION

The Population Registration Act of 1950 divided South Africans into a range of racial classifications⁴⁵⁸ in a system comparable to the infamous Nazis' Nuremburg laws. This was complex as, after centuries of living side by side, most South African populations were much more genetically diverse than Dr. Verwoerd would have liked to think, and there were no reliable means to make a categorical assessment. In many families, children could look quite different to each other.⁴⁵⁹ Every single resident had to be registered with full details of their racial composition. A Board was created to make determinations in the case of people considered "borderline." It delved into their ancestry and inspected their physical characteristics with criteria including "appearance," "descent" and "social acceptance."⁴⁶⁰ It combed curly hair to see how tough it was to pull a comb through.⁴⁶¹

A designation as "Coloured" rather than "White" or "Native" could have devastating repercussions,⁴⁶² and often siblings from the same family were given different classifications.⁴⁶³ The Act also effectively tried to present "Coloureds" as a distinct ethnic group, a "nation" with a common past, which was not the case.⁴⁶⁴ White and Coloured children could not be educated together, and inspectors decided which children were White and which Coloured in a rather arbitrary way; in one case, twins were separated, with one being sent to a "white" and one a "coloured" school.⁴⁶⁵

⁴⁵⁷ Ballinger, 1969: 378-381.

⁴⁵⁸ Beinart, 2001: 148; Brookes, 1968: 19ff; Conference Steering Committee, 1964: 97; International Defence Fund for South Africa, 1983: 15; Hepple, 1966: 153; Marquard, 1969: 71; Neame, 1962: 89; Welsh, 2000: 430.

⁴⁵⁹ Dugard, 1978: 60-63; Landis, 1961b: 6.

⁴⁶⁰ Dubow, 2014: 38.

⁴⁶¹ Giliomee, 2011: 504.

⁴⁶² Tambo, 1964: 27-29.

⁴⁶³ Muller, 1981: 482.

⁴⁶⁴ du Pre, 1994: 3-4.

⁴⁶⁵ St. John, 1954: 38.

Six years after the passage of the Act, 90,000 South Africans still had not been classified. Things were made even more complex by the fact that government had issued differing and even contradictory racial classifications.⁴⁶⁶ To deal with the reality that many Whites also had Black or Coloured ancestors, there were legal loopholes such as, for instance, a law about which children were eligible to attend white schools. Children were to be accepted as European if they “looked” White, but if another family complained that they were actually Coloured they were obliged to provide proof. In one famous case a girl, Sandra Laing, was designated as Coloured although both of her parents had been categorised as White.⁴⁶⁷

Some schools were rigorous in seeking out and expelling students whom they suspected of having “coloured blood.” The case is cited of an adolescent who was called out of class to the principal’s office where his eyes, skin, and hair were examined, after which his parents were informed that he had signs of coloured blood and would therefore have to leave the school. One principal boasted that he had turned away more than twenty “suspects” already this year.⁴⁶⁸

The apartheid government did not know what to do about people such as Chinese, Japanese and Malays, and tended to lump them in with the Coloureds, but Japanese could apply to live as Whites and visiting Japanese tourists could get a visa to be treated as Whites for a period of ninety days, while Chinese patients in hospital were bleached whiter for the purpose of “rehabilitation” and to house them in the same ward as Whites.⁴⁶⁹ Amendments to the original act placed more emphasis on “appearance”; because there were so many mixed-race people in South Africa, there were pale-skinned people who could “pass” as White, despite having some Black or Indian heritage.⁴⁷⁰ The absurdities of the Citizens’ Classification system continued apace under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister.

It goes without saying that citizen classification impacted seriously on relations between people of different races. Two initiatives by Dr. Verwoerd, the Immorality Acts of 1950 and 1957, were aimed at keeping the European race “pure,” by widening the prohibitions on marriage and sexual relations. They were similar to the Nazis’ Nuremberg ⁴⁶⁶ Landis, 1961b: 6-15.

⁴⁶⁷ Attwell, 1986: 80.

⁴⁶⁸ Dugard, 1978: 60-63; Landis, 1961b: 11.

⁴⁶⁹ du Pre, 1994: 72-73.

⁴⁷⁰ Clark and Worger, 2011: 49.

Laws aimed at keeping the German nation "pure." "I will not be responsible for the bastardization of the Afrikaner people," he told his wife.⁴⁷¹

The first Immorality Act, passed in 1927, prohibited sex between Whites and Blacks. This prohibition was extended to "Europeans" and "non-Europeans" by the Immorality Amendment Act, 1950 (Act No. 21 of 1950), thus banning sexual relations between Whites and Coloureds and Whites and Asians.⁴⁷² Marriages between the races had been outlawed the year before, by the 1949 Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act.⁴⁷³

Legislation widening the prohibition on sexual acts and increasing the penalties came with the Immorality Act, 1957 (Act No. 23 of 1957; subsequently renamed the Sexual Offences Act, 1957), which repealed the 1927 and 1950 Acts. This Act prohibited not only sexual intercourse but any "immoral or indecent acts" between Whites and non-Whites. Partners in any such act faced an increased maximum penalty of seven years' imprisonment. Also banned under the 1957 Act were the keeping of brothels, procuring, and living off prostitution. Sexual intercourse with anyone under sixteen was also declared against the law.⁴⁷⁴

HOMELAND SYSTEM

When the National Party came to power in 1948 they had applied themselves to what van den Berghe has referred to as "meso-segregation" with their policy of "group areas," reducing contact between Whites and non-Whites in their largely rural society.⁴⁷⁵ Tens of thousands were expelled from their homes and "relocated" according to their pigmentation. The result was economically devastating for many non-Whites, including middle class Indian and Coloureds, but profitable for many Whites. Africans who were judged "redundant" and living in or near white areas were forcibly repatriated to the so-called "homelands,"⁴⁷⁶ where it was ⁴⁷¹ Scholtz, 1974: 171.

⁴⁷² Dugard, 1978: 68-71.

⁴⁷³ The 1949 Act was promulgated by the National Party soon after its ascent to power in 1948, becoming one of the first legislative initiatives of its apartheid policy. Making its implementation easier was the Population Registration Act of 1950, which directed that all South Africans must register as members of one of four race groups (Furlong, 1983; Hyslop, 1995: 57-81). For more about the Act see Furlong, P. J. (1983) The Mixed Marriages Act: An Historical and Theological Study and Hyslop, J. (1995) White Working-class Women and the Invention of Apartheid: 'Purified' Afrikaner Nationalist Agitation for Legislation Against 'Mixed' Marriages, 1934-9.

⁴⁷⁴ Dugard, 1978: 68-71.

⁴⁷⁵ Beinart, 2001: 201.

⁴⁷⁶ van den Berghe, 1966: 410-411.

harder to form unions and otherwise engage in behaviours that were considered disruptive to Afrikaners.⁴⁷⁷

Redundant Africans often included women and children of men working in the cities, also known as “superfluous appendages.”⁴⁷⁸ Any non-Europeans were to be segregated from the urban areas in which 90% of South Africa’s wealth was concentrated. Dr. Verwoerd was clear in stating that urban Africans could enjoy rights “only in the Bantustans from which they spring,”⁴⁷⁹ while Indians who did not wish to move to “their” new areas had the option of “repatriation” to India.⁴⁸⁰ In fact, Dr. Verwoerd encouraged South African Indians to “return” to India. More than 90% of the Indians in South Africa were born there⁴⁸¹ and were largely descended from people who had been in South Africa since the 1860s.⁴⁸² However, it was only under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister that special provisions were made for the Indians, who until 1961 were officially seen as “foreigners.”⁴⁸³

In 1950, the government edged closer towards residential segregation when it passed the Group Areas Act,⁴⁸⁴ described by Malan as “the kernel of the apartheid policy,”⁴⁸⁵ based on a series of legislations in the early twentieth century that reserved certain areas for non-Europeans,⁴⁸⁶ which would result (for example) in the displacement of around 100,000 non-European people in the western suburbs of Johannesburg; one of the primary targets of the Act was the Indian community, thought by the National Party to have a “stranglehold” on some areas.⁴⁸⁷ Dr. Verwoerd had stated that the government believed in the principle of “rule or mastery of the European in his area and the rule or mastery of the Bantu in his area.”⁴⁸⁸ He said that the government would withdraw from the Native area “when the Bantu has no further need of him”⁴⁸⁹ and that the new plans would lead “the Natives on the road to self-government in their own areas.”⁴⁹⁰

⁴⁷⁷ Posel, 1997: 203.

⁴⁷⁸ Farah, 1974: 74.

⁴⁷⁹ Okoth, 2006: 168.

⁴⁸⁰ Sachs, 1952: 67.

⁴⁸¹ Huntington, 1958: 43.

⁴⁸² Alden, 1996: 17.

⁴⁸³ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 200.

⁴⁸⁴ Dugard, 1978: 80; International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975b: 10; Marquard, 1969: 162-163; Neame, 1962: 93.

⁴⁸⁵ Harsch, 1980: 59.

⁴⁸⁶ Brookes, 1968: 131, 137.

⁴⁸⁷ Vigne, 1997: 100.

⁴⁸⁸ Benson, 1966: 136; Thompson, 2001: 222.

⁴⁸⁹ Walsh, 1970: 288.

⁴⁹⁰ Davis, 1987: 8.

In 1951, Dr. Verwoerd assured an anxious government minister that although the plan was to give parts of South Africa to Bantus as "homelands," these would remain under state control and would never be granted independence.⁴⁹¹ It was Cecil Rhodes who had pioneered the idea of creating reserves as a method to exploit the labour of Africans. In drawing up the principles of apartheid, Dr. Verwoerd was merely following his example.⁴⁹² To criticism that his plans for the native reserves resembled slavery, Dr. Verwoerd countered that he hoped "those natives who become able to serve their own people actually will migrate to the reserves."⁴⁹³

As well as separating Blacks from Whites in residential areas, the Group Areas Act, more importantly, took away their freehold rights. Dr. Verwoerd said that Blacks would only be entitled to thirty years' leasehold in the urban areas without the option of automatic extension.⁴⁹⁴ In the urban areas, Blacks would live in "locations." Dr. Verwoerd assured Parliament that Blacks would never own the locations, which belonged to Whites. "The natives who reside there reside there just as native farm labourers live on a farm of a European owner."⁴⁹⁵

Also in 1951, the Bantu Authorities Act replaced an earlier system, the Natives Representation Council, with government-approved authorities in the reserves which made no provision for the representation of Blacks living in urban or other non-designated areas.⁴⁹⁶ Dr. Verwoerd himself had demanded the abolition of representation for "natives."⁴⁹⁷ The Act's supposed aim was to "give the Bantu people the opportunity for enlightened administration of their own affairs in accordance with their own heritage and own institutions, adapted to modern conditions."⁴⁹⁸ Dr. Verwoerd announced that the "black spots" (by which he meant areas inhabited by Blacks) in and around Johannesburg had to be moved,⁴⁹⁹ and stated of Blacks that, "It stands to reason that White South Africa must remain their guardian... We cannot mean that we intend to cut large slices out of South Africa and turn them into independent States."⁵⁰⁰

⁴⁹¹ van den Berghe, 1967: 118.

⁴⁹² Magubane, 2000: 54.

⁴⁹³ Brookes, 1968: 15.

⁴⁹⁴ House of Assembly Debates (Hansard), 1952, Vol. 10, Cols. 3449, 3522, 3524; Mzimela, 1980: 193.

⁴⁹⁵ House of Assembly Debates (Hansard), 1954, Vol. 9, Col. 3204; Mzimela, 1980: 193.

⁴⁹⁶ Sachs, 1965: 91; Worden, 2000: 109.

⁴⁹⁷ Brotz, 1977: 35.

⁴⁹⁸ Tafira, 2017: 57.

⁴⁹⁹ Lapping, 1986: 118.

⁵⁰⁰ van den Berghe, 1962: 605; van den Berghe, 1966: 413.

There was considerable black opposition, and the decision was denounced in the Bantu World newspaper, while Black leader Dr. Alfred Bitini Xuma⁵⁰¹ formed a protest movement in response. However, Afrikaans newspapers Die Transvaler and Die Vaderland welcomed the decision, claimed it as a government victory, and hoped that the people would be moved quickly. Dr. Verwoerd presented the Bantu Authorities Act as a way in which Blacks could obtain more autonomy, by opting for self-government within the reserves.⁵⁰² He stated that, "The fundamental idea throughout is Bantu control over Bantu areas as and when it becomes possible for them to exercise that control efficiently and properly for the benefit of their own people."⁵⁰³ He made it clear that he was speaking of local self-government only.⁵⁰⁴ In the process, he drew on the historical experience of African women, many of whom had remained effectively trapped in rural areas while their husbands migrated to cities to work.⁵⁰⁵

In a move that established a system of "introverted colonialism,"⁵⁰⁶ Dr. Verwoerd's new Bantu Authorities System gave compliant local leaders more power, making them responsible for the forced removals and relocations of families from arable land as well as the continued culling of stock.⁵⁰⁷ This was a period of great uncertainty for South Africans, particularly those who expected to be relocated, and one memoirist recalls the many anxious conversations among people who felt that they could make no plans until a final decision had been made.⁵⁰⁸

In 1953, Dr. Verwoerd told Blacks that they would have more land and better facilities in the "homelands," and the opportunity to buy homes at cost price, rent them, or build their own. However, he had designed the homeland system to maintain white privilege,⁵⁰⁹ and "as a basic principle" no African would be allowed to have "ownership of ground." By the mid-1950s the repercussions were clear, and the proposals were strongly

⁵⁰¹ (1893-1962) The first Black South African to become a doctor, leader and president-general of the ANC from 1940 to 1949 (Gish: 2000). For his biography see: Gish, S.D. (2000) Alfred B. Xuma: African, American, South African.

⁵⁰² Davis, 1991: 216.

⁵⁰³ Carter, 1958: 90-92.

⁵⁰⁴ Ballinger, 1969: 321.

⁵⁰⁵ Marks and Trapido, 1987: 53.

⁵⁰⁶ Mbeki, 1991: 167.

⁵⁰⁷ Gevisser, 2007: 112.

⁵⁰⁸ Jabavu, 1982: 29-30.

⁵⁰⁹ Mandela, 2013: 223, 270.

objected to by activists, even while Dr. Verwoerd travelled the country meeting Africans and trying to explain how his approach to racial segregation would be for their own good.⁵¹⁰

In October 1955 and prior to implementation of the Bantu Authorities Act, Dr. Verwoerd set up a series of conferences for tribal chiefs and African leaders from all over South Africa to present them with the Bantu Authorities Act. Hypocritically, he claimed that the purpose of the conferences was to appraise the Act's supposed benefits and seek the chiefs' agreement. They were going to be first Africans to hear of the plans, which were going to happen whether or not they agreed with them. Dr. Verwoerd's hope was that they would endorse the new laws, permitting him to proclaim that the Blacks had accepted the legislation that would rule their lives. The day before the meeting in Zebediela, Transvaal, the ANC distributed leaflets explaining Dr. Verwoerd's plans to the people. At the meeting the following day, the chiefs roundly rejected his plans.⁵¹¹

At the conference with the chiefs of Natal and Nongoma, the Zulu chiefs, led at the time by Chief Buthelezi, requested time for consideration and to see the Act in place elsewhere before deciding whether or not to accept it, before eventually rejecting it.⁵¹² Abram Moilola, the Bafurutse chief, also rejected it and later said, "They just want us chiefs to sign a document which says 'destroy me, baas!' Let them destroy us without our signatures!"⁵¹³

Large numbers of Whites were against granting Africans any independence within their "homelands" while also feeling that the government was spending way too much money on the programme. The Tomlinson Commission, which incorporated several members of SABRA, had been put together in the 1950s⁵¹⁴ to draw up a plan for the homeland system. The Commission could see that homelands could only exist if the white minority injected a lot of cash into the system.⁵¹⁵ The "homelands" were characterised by the government as being where Black Africans had initially settled "after they had moved southwards" (depicting South Africa as a land that had been empty before the Europeans arrived), and described them as "clearly distinguishable from the land settled and converted into permanent white occupation by farmers and pioneers migrating from the South."⁵¹⁶

⁵¹⁰ The Economist, 29 October 1955: 378, 'Apartheid à la mode.'

⁵¹¹ Sisulu et al, 2001: 120.

⁵¹² Smith, 1982: 48-49; Temkin, 2003: 48-49.

⁵¹³ Desmond, 1971: 160.

⁵¹⁴ Lazar, 1993: 373.

⁵¹⁵ Rogers, 1972: 8.

⁵¹⁶ Rogers, 1972: 2.

Dr. Verwoerd did not agree with the Commission's recommendations⁵¹⁷ and insisted that Blacks had no greater claim to the land than Whites and that the Afrikaners had "settled in a country that was bare."⁵¹⁸ In the mid-1950s, they were nothing more than rural slums,⁵¹⁹ but Dr. Verwoerd objected strongly to the idea that he might deviate from the plan of total segregation.⁵²⁰ "We should live apart, as the lion and the elephant live apart," he said.⁵²¹ By this time, he had pushed through legislation that enabled him to remove Black workers from White-owned land at his discretion⁵²² (although there were times when the law had to be "bent" by the authorities such as, for example, when Whites became irate because the lack of Black milkmen in white areas was driving up the price of milk).⁵²³

In 1958, Dr. Verwoerd introduced the new Bantu Self-Government Bill, marking "the beginning of the demented social engineering of Grand Apartheid."⁵²⁴ He suggested that the British Commonwealth could be a model for how the black homelands and South Africa might one day cooperate,⁵²⁵ and he addressed Africans about his plans, presenting them as a wonderful opportunity and stating: "Separate development is a tree, a fruit tree which this government gave the Bantu of South Africa... Let it grow slowly... do not look at the more developed tree of the white man with jealous eyes because then you will neglect your own small tree which will one day also be big."⁵²⁶

Critics pointed out that this benign representation of apartheid overlooked the despotic ways in which it was enforced.⁵²⁷ The homelands marked an important departure from the "horizontal apartheid" that had prevailed before, to "vertical apartheid" which had as its stated goal the end result of native self-government.⁵²⁸ Dr. Verwoerd said that he had a "new vision," although critics saw a retrograde and "outworn tribalism" with no real democracy.⁵²⁹

⁵¹⁷ Kenney, 1980: 86-87.

⁵¹⁸ Khopung, 1972: 1; Welsh, 2000: 455.

⁵¹⁹ The Economist, 21 April 1956: 274, 'Blueprint for apartheid.'

⁵²⁰ Thompson, 1957: 132.

⁵²¹ TIME, 15 September 1958: 26, 'South Africa: God's man.'

⁵²² The New York Times, 23 February 1954: 3, 'Malan law makes negro homeless.'

⁵²³ The New York Times, 19 July 1957: 12, 'African law modified.'

⁵²⁴ Breckenridge, 2014: 159.

⁵²⁵ Brookes, 1968: xxxi; Lapping, 1986: 133; Legum and Legum, 1964b: 67; Moodie, 1975: 264; Neame, 1962: 160; Troup, 1975: 305.

⁵²⁶ Clark and Worger, 2011: 65.

⁵²⁷ van den Berghe, 1962: 599.

⁵²⁸ Bloomberg, 1990: 131.

⁵²⁹ Marquard, 1969: 115.

The Promotion of Bantu Self-Government Act in 1959 (Dr. Verwoerd's first act as Prime Minister)⁵³⁰ promised the "Bantu peoples" that they were "on a road that would lead the homelands to meaningful self-government,"⁵³¹ and was presented in the context of the decolonialization that was occurring throughout Africa.⁵³² Each of the various African communities was to be identified within its own land in the reserves and each area would be allowed to eventually develop self-government. The Act went further than the earlier Bantu Authorities Act, which had had an interest in developing government at local level only.⁵³³ In a speech to the government, MDC de Wet Nel, a former Bantu Commissioner General, posited the homelands as a humane answer to Black Nationalism.⁵³⁴ However, earlier that year the Secretary of Bantu Administration, Dr. Werner Willi Max Eiselen, stated that Blacks would remain "subordinate within their communities,"⁵³⁵ while Dr. Verwoerd clarified that an important function of the homelands was to allow white areas to remove "transient" Blacks.⁵³⁶

The Act abolished any African representation in government, recognising eight "national" units (North Sotho, South Sotho, Tswana, Zulu, Swazi, Xhosa, Tonga and Venda) and appointing five commissioners general to oversee and administer them. These units were not discrete blocks of land, but were often composed of scattered tracts, separated by white areas.⁵³⁷ In this way, the ownership of just 13% of the land by the vast majority of the population was formalised: "Dr. Verwoerd was offering 11.000.000 Africans ultimate autonomy in 13% of the country as the price for continued white supremacy for 3.000.000 Whites in the remaining 87%."⁵³⁸ These areas were to be known as Bantustans, and they formed the backbone of Dr. Verwoerd's grand apartheid plans, the idea being that Blacks would be removed as far as possible from white areas (solving the problem of Whites' numerical inferiority), and separated into diverse tribal units so that it would be harder for them to operate, and protest, as a group.⁵³⁹

⁵³⁰ Butler 1998: 22; Lapping, 1986: 132.

⁵³¹ Rogers, 1976: 21.

⁵³² The Economist, 13 June 1959: 1026, 'Apartheid in action - and reaction.'

⁵³³ Temkin, 2003: 66-67.

⁵³⁴ Collins, 1990: 218-219.

⁵³⁵ Barber, 1999: 175.

⁵³⁶ van den Berghe: 1967: 145.

⁵³⁷ Hepple, 1966: 115, 255.

⁵³⁸ Hughes, 1961: 198.

⁵³⁹ du Preez Bezdrob, 2003: 81; Pelzer, 1966.

By stressing linguistic and cultural differences, and using them to segregate people, Dr. Verwoerd encouraged intra-black conflict and distracted people from the real enemy of white supremacy.⁵⁴⁰ The promise of eventual independence was presented as a motivator.⁵⁴¹ Essentially, Dr. Verwoerd believed that by dividing Africans into groups and institutions defined by tribal ethnicity, they would cease to threaten the status quo: a case of “conserving the status quo by making it look different.”⁵⁴² Dr. Verwoerd hoped that the various black groups would develop a strong sense of tribal identity, inhibiting the development of a black political consciousness, and maintaining them in their position of servitude to the Whites. The Urban Bantu Councils Act of 1961 set up councils for urban Blacks that were supposed to maintain links between them and their notional homelands.⁵⁴³

The Bantu Investment Corporation Act of 1959 and the Bantu Homelands Development Corporations Act of 1965 enabled the National Party Government to establish Development Corporations in the Bantu homelands, as well as to capitalize individual entrepreneurs. However, because White-owned risk capital was prohibited, in opposition to the Tomlinson Commission recommendation, diversification of the homelands' economies was seriously constrained, as was their capacity to absorb more people.⁵⁴⁴

Africans generally hated the words “Bantu” and “Bantustan” because they were seen as pejorative terms, intimately linked with apartheid.⁵⁴⁵ Africans could easily see what a bad deal the Bantustans were and it became ever harder for them to seriously entertain any “concessions” Dr. Verwoerd seemed to be prepared to make.⁵⁴⁶ Dr. Verwoerd had admitted that “demands will certainly be made [by the people in the Homelands] that will be rejected by us.”⁵⁴⁷

The Bantustans program attracted much criticism from activists. In 1959, Nelson Mandela said, “Behind the self-government talk lies a grim program of mass evictions, political prosecution and police terror. It is the last desperate gamble of a hated and doomed fascist autocracy” and described the Bantustan system as a “sinister design” and a “big swindle both ⁵⁴⁰ Harsch, 1980: 67.

⁵⁴¹ Booth, 1998: 62.

⁵⁴² Booth, 1998: 62; Denoon et al, 1989: 200.

⁵⁴³ Hepple, 1966: 116.

⁵⁴⁴ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 426.

⁵⁴⁵ Hain, 1996: 85.

⁵⁴⁶ Lipton, 1987: 37.

⁵⁴⁷ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1966: 2.

politically and economically.”⁵⁴⁸ It was observed that the Bantustans and the Urban Bantu Councils closely resembled the model for Jewish ghettos under Nazi Germany.⁵⁴⁹ As a result of UN policy, none of the homelands were formally recognised by other states.⁵⁵⁰

Dr. Verwoerd referred to his policies as consisting of “good neighbourliness” and a “positive step” that would bring the Bantustans closer to independence. However, he also said, in a speech that he gave to parliament in 1959 that, “I choose an assured white state in South Africa whatever happens to the other areas rather than have my people absorbed in one integrated state in which the Bantu must eventually dominate.”⁵⁵¹ It was clear that the homelands were really a way of excluding Blacks from the political life of South Africa, and preventing them from ever becoming citizens.

Dr. Verwoerd and his government were also deeply involved in a war against the “blackening” of the countryside. He was concerned about both the many Africans who lived on White-owned land in rural areas, and the many small African farming communities on parcels of black-owned land that lay outside the Bantustans, known to the apartheid authorities as “black spots.” Thus, he engaged in a campaign to eliminate black land ownership in white farming areas, and to put an end to African squatting and labour tenancies on white farms. He aimed to do this by converting all farm workers to wage labourers and revising the Native Trust and Land Act of 1936⁵⁵² to make its anti-squatting provisions enforceable.⁵⁵³

Approximately 340,000 farm labourers with tenancies on White owned land, and 656,000 “squatters” (many the family members of the former category) were expelled from White-owned lands.⁵⁵⁴ The Prevention of Illegal Squatting Act of 1951 allowed magistrates to evict squatters from urban areas and to destroy their dwellings.⁵⁵⁵ Black land owners in white areas, mainly descended from better-off Black farmers who had managed to purchase

⁵⁴⁸ Mandela, 1978: 4, 83-85.

⁵⁴⁹ Mbeki, 1991: 9.

⁵⁵⁰ Dugard, 1987: 96-97.

⁵⁵¹ Segal and Court, 2012: 31.

⁵⁵² The Act had expanded the reserves from the 1913 Black Land Act and authorised the Department of Bantu Administration and Development to eliminate what were known as “black spots”, that is, black-owned land surrounded by white-owned land. (Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 308, 601; Horrell 1978: 203).

⁵⁵³ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 390; Harsch, 1986: 17.

⁵⁵⁴ Harsch, 1986: 17.

⁵⁵⁵ Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 1998: 13.

land before the 1913 Black Land Act,⁵⁵⁶ were forcibly removed and resettled in Bantustans, freeing the "black spots" for Whites.⁵⁵⁷

In the Bantustans it was immensely difficult for these experienced farmers to earn a living because of endemic overcrowding and the fragmented and impoverished quality of the soil. Homelands were often in the middle of nowhere, with no adequate means to earn a living, obtain nourishment, or care for families. Most African men became dependent on the paid work they could find in white areas as migrant workers⁵⁵⁸ and were forced to live under "chiefs" who had been selected by the government to ensure compliance. Chiefs who did not tow the party line, such as 1960 Nobel Peace Prize winner Albert Luthuli,⁵⁵⁹ were swiftly removed.⁵⁶⁰

The result of Dr. Verwoerd's homelands policy was that no Black South African could be considered a citizen.⁵⁶¹ He had cleverly manipulated the rhetoric that was being used in the African independence movement at the time, making frequent reference to the "need" for Blacks not to become westernised but to take pride in their tribal origins. However, Dr. Verwoerd had not the slightest interest in seeing Blacks become educated and empowered, even within their own tribal setting; quite the reverse.⁵⁶² Moreover, despite talk about the eventual independence of the black homelands, even at the time statements from government made it clear that this was never really Dr. Verwoerd's intention. His Minister for Native

⁵⁵⁶ The Act prohibited Blacks from owning or renting land outside of designated reserves, representing some seven per cent of land in the country (Chronology of Apartheid Legislation, n.d. Nelson Mandela Foundation, retrieved from <https://www.nelsonmandela.org/omalley/index.php/site/q/031v02167/041v02264/051v02335/061v02357/071v02359/081v02371.htm>).

⁵⁵⁷ Harsch, 1986: 19-21.

⁵⁵⁸ Harsch, 1986: 19-21.

⁵⁵⁹ Albert Luthuli (1989-1967), President of the ANC, was the first African and first non-European or American person to win the Nobel Peace Prize. He was awarded the Prize "for his efforts to seek equality by non-violent means" (Benson, 1963b: 51). Luthuli spent a year in custody on a treason charge, and was banned basically all the time from 1953 to 1961, for "crimes" such as burning his pass after the Sharpeville Massacre. This meant that he was forced to be confined in his home, banned from receiving visitors, forbidden from making statements and even from going to church (Luthuli, 1961). For his autobiography see (1963) Let my People go: An Autobiography. For biographies see: Benson, M. (1963) Chief Albert Lutuli of South Africa; Couper, S. (2010) Albert Luthuli: Bound by Faith; Pillay, G. (1993) Albert Lutuli v. I.

In 1962, South African artist Ronald Harrison presented a painting entitled Black Christ that showed Luthuli as Christ crucified, with two Roman centurions, depicted as Verwoerd and Vorster, on either side. Verwoerd was piercing the side of Christ and Vorster standing with a sponge of vinegar and a gall. The painting was banned and the artist was arrested and tortured by the police. Eventually the painting was smuggled to the United Kingdom and remained there until 1997 when it was brought back to South Africa. It is currently stored at the South African National Gallery (Harrison, 2006; xv; 26; 42). For more about the painting see: Harrison, R. (2006) The Black Christ: A Journey to Freedom.

⁵⁶⁰ Attwell, 1986: 81.

⁵⁶¹ Ngcokavane, 1989: 116; Mda, 2000: 158.

⁵⁶² Gevisser, 2007: 143.

Affairs, Michiel Christiaan De Wet Nel,⁵⁶³ stated in Parliament: "Total racial separation was never seriously considered. Apartheid would be implemented under the umbrella of a South African economy."⁵⁶⁴

Dr. Verwoerd made it clear that there would always be many terms and conditions to fulfil before independence would be granted. This would happen only when Africans had developed "sufficient maturity" to assume "the most responsible of functions"⁵⁶⁵ and even then only with the say-so of the white parliament, which of course had only the interests of the Whites in mind;⁵⁶⁶ a sort of "final solution" for the "problem" of Blacks in South Africa.⁵⁶⁷

Dr. Verwoerd hoped also to expand South Africa's territory by incorporating the former British protectorates, Bechuanaland, Basutoland and Swaziland.⁵⁶⁸ The government seems to have felt that the homeland system would make them less vulnerable to criticism by foreign states, claiming that there could be no discrimination within the homelands.⁵⁶⁹ Dr. Verwoerd hoped that by saying "independence" over and over again, he would deflect criticism from abroad, and channel local nationalism into his project.⁵⁷⁰

In 1960, Dr. Verwoerd said that the government would never accept a policy of integration with Indians, Coloureds, Bantus and Whites and that while one group could not "forever be the servant" of another, policy was to ensure that each group could grow "in its sphere."⁵⁷¹ According to him, Indians had been brought to South Africa in error "for selfish economic reasons" and the only future they could have in the country was in the context of developing their own ethnic homelands.⁵⁷²

In 1962, Dr. Verwoerd stated that Blacks should be given their own states and that "with the exception of a small group of agitators," he believed that most of them would come on board with his plans, including the white administration keeping them safe, "by being ⁵⁶³ (1901-1984) An important member of the National Party who served as Minister of Health and Minister of Education, Arts and Science. In 1958, Dr. Verwoerd appointed him as his successor in the Ministry of Native Affairs (Fleisch, 2002: 41).

⁵⁶⁴ Wilson et al, 1969: 191.

⁵⁶⁵ Tatz, 1962: 179.

⁵⁶⁶ Rogers, 1976: 8; Mbeki, 2001: 144.

⁵⁶⁷ Morris, 2004: 165.

⁵⁶⁸ Hyam, 1972: 219.

⁵⁶⁹ d'Amato, 1966a: 177.

⁵⁷⁰ Harsh, 1980: 64-65.

⁵⁷¹ Edwards et al, 1962: 190; Moodie, 1975: 264.

⁵⁷² The Canberra Times, 26 August, 1961: 11, 'Dr. Verwoerd's new ban on Indians.'

prepared to render all kinds of services to them.”⁵⁷³ He also stated that the government’s “great task” was to grant independence to the Blacks “as soon as they can and will accept it,” in a way that would ensure “the retention of friendship and co-operation with the whites.”⁵⁷⁴ Speaking of independence for the Transkei area, he said: “It is... worth a great deal if we can create for ourselves peaceful neighbours... who will not look to us for assistance.”⁵⁷⁵ Transkei was an area with about 1.5 Blacks, mostly uneducated peasants.⁵⁷⁶

The Homelands gave rise to a lot of unhappiness and protest. In 1960, the biggest of the revolts in direct response to the new situation broke out in Pondoland (known as the Mpondo Revolts – see later in this chapter for a detailed account), which was part of the Transkei. The revolt was crushed with massive state repression including wholesale detentions, a state of emergency, and even massacres,⁵⁷⁷ such as the one in Ngquza Hill (discussed below).

By 1961, it was government policy that the Black South Africans were only resident in urban areas temporarily, and that as soon as they were surplus to requirements they would be expected to “return” to their “homeland” where they would “fit in ethnically” even if they had not been born and raised there. If they did not go, they could be forcefully removed.⁵⁷⁸ However, there were many problems in the homelands; the “chiefs” appointed by Dr. Verwoerd’s government were not always accepted by their supposed subjects; different ethnicities had different conventions about how chiefs should be appointed.⁵⁷⁹

Dr. Verwoerd described the homelands as “well-disposed little black neighbouring states”⁵⁸⁰ and brought in top-line public relations experts and expensive lobbyists to promote an “understanding” of the Bantustan scheme both in South Africa and abroad.⁵⁸¹ In 1962, Dr. Verwoerd announced that the Transkei homeland would be given “self-government.” This became law in 1963, and that year elections were held in Transkei; the members elected by a wide margin were opposed to the homeland legislation.⁵⁸² Dr. Verwoerd presented the Transkei elections as an important step towards a multinational South Africa and stated that ⁵⁷³ Rogers, 1972: 4.

⁵⁷⁴ Edwards et al, 1962: 201.

⁵⁷⁵ Rogers, 1972: 5.

⁵⁷⁶ Hepple, 1966: 116-118.

⁵⁷⁷ Harsch, 1986: 34.

⁵⁷⁸ Posel, 1997: 233-234.

⁵⁷⁹ Jabavu, 1982: 153.

⁵⁸⁰ Hain, 1996: 85.

⁵⁸¹ Frye, 1970: 31-32.

⁵⁸² Hepple, 1966: 116-118; Mandela, 2013: 401.

“all nations of the world which seek to protect human dignity and the right to self-determination should give South Africa a fair chance to establish and develop its own Commonwealth of Nations.” In reality, Africans were divided and their rights diminished while Dr. Verwoerd passed off the Transkei as genuine political reform.⁵⁸³

Cynically, “homelands” for Africans were positioned not only on the least productive soil, but in a very scattered pattern such that any notion of African community would be fragmented and easier for the white administration to manage.⁵⁸⁴ Dr. Verwoerd that this fragmentation was necessary for Whites to maintain the “right to maintain domination.”⁵⁸⁵ Limited access to land and cattle, and government efforts to “improve” land by restricting grazing and culling cattle, cut off access to resources that were a source of status as well as livelihoods. This contributed to rivalry and violence and a lack of social stability.⁵⁸⁶

The parallels between the Nazi system of concentration camps for Jews, and black “homelands” was not lost on Blacks. In 1961, J. H. Wheeler reported that many expressed worried that the homelands could be bombed or attacked in the event of civil unrest, while many cited the rumour that members of government had been heard to say that, “If Hitler could destroy six million Jews, what will prevent us from using the same methods and excuses for balancing population rations within the Union.”⁵⁸⁷

Dr. Verwoerd’s government was also attacked by extremist right-wing elements in the government, who believed that the Bantustans might become hostile. Dr. Verwoerd’s rival Sir De Villiers Graaff, leader of the United Party, said that if he came to power he would scrap the Bantustans and that “We reject the idea of one man one vote, and we shall retain White leadership in South Africa and not only in parts, as Dr. Verwoerd would have us do.”⁵⁸⁸ Dr. Verwoerd continued to insist that the homelands provided Blacks with the best opportunity to “move along a road of development by which they can progress in accordance with their ability.”⁵⁸⁹

⁵⁸³ Irwin, 2012: 67.

⁵⁸⁴ Vigne, 1969: 7.

⁵⁸⁵ Rogers, 1976: 8.

⁵⁸⁶ Worden, 2000: 115.

⁵⁸⁷ Wheeler, 1961: 248.

⁵⁸⁸ van den Berghe, 1966: 414.

⁵⁸⁹ van den Berghe, 1967: 121.

By the mid-1960s opposition had been largely crushed and Dr. Verwoerd pressed on with his plans to extend the homelands.⁵⁹⁰ Not long after Dr. Verwoerd's death in 1966 the Embassy of South Africa in the UK published a propagandist report claiming that self-determination of the Blacks within their "homelands" was a great success, citing the handover of administrative posts from White to Black officials and describing the system as the "happy marriage" of tradition and modernity and as a "great thrust forward."⁵⁹¹ Rev. Ambrose Reeves, the Anglican Bishop of Johannesburg and prominent anti-apartheid activist, characterised Dr. Verwoerd's homeland scheme as "the most fantastic excursion into make-believe in this generation."⁵⁹²

BANTU EDUCATION ACT

Activists fighting against apartheid had long been aware of the role education could play in liberation. In 1943, at the integral conference of the Anti-Coloured Affairs Department (Anti-C.A.D.) Movement, Benjamin Kies, who edited the Educational Journal of the Teacher's League of South Africa had given an address discussing how non-Europeans could use education to liberate themselves and join the struggle against injustice.⁵⁹³

Before coming to power, the National Party had clarified its views on the education of non-Whites, stating, "We accept the principle of trusteeship and by name the Afrikaner over the non-whites." In this context, the role of education for non-Whites was to introduce them to Christianity and underline the importance of separation, while ensuring that funding for non-white schools did not detract from white schools; the central purpose of education was to reconcile all South Africans to their place in the pecking order.⁵⁹⁴

Overall, the one of the main purposes of the education system was to propagate the idea of "the nation" as belonging to the Afrikaners, and they to it. While non-Whites were taught about their own inferiority, White children, particularly Afrikaans children, were taught how to love their own ethnic group and language, along with the principles of white supremacy.⁵⁹⁵ This was an approach that Henry Gibbs,⁵⁹⁶ a contemporary observer, likened ⁵⁹⁰ Harsch, 1986: 38.

⁵⁹¹ Embassy of South Africa, 1968: 5.

⁵⁹² Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, 'The champion of apartheid.'

⁵⁹³ Alexander, 1990: 172

⁵⁹⁴ Thompson, 1966: 104.

⁵⁹⁵ Tatz, 1961: 19.

⁵⁹⁶ Author of Twilight in South Africa, 1950.

directly to the predominant philosophy in Nazi Germany; Gibbs stated that "Afrikaner children are to be trained as Herrenvolk"⁵⁹⁷ referring to the concept of a particular people with the right to dominate and oppress others.⁵⁹⁸

Elsewhere, Professor Jonathan Hyslop⁵⁹⁹ referred to Dr. Verwoerd's ambitious plans in this area as his desire to establish hegemony over South African schools.⁶⁰⁰ Dr. Verwoerd was extremely aware of the importance of schools and teachers in forming identity and suppressing revolt. He needed to ensure that Africans would receive only the very basic education they needed in order to serve Whites. Dr. Verwoerd's first major speech on apartheid condemned non-Whites who saw education as a means to equip themselves with "European" values. Instead, he promoted a policy which would help "native" Africans to resist this temptation.⁶⁰¹

On January 19, 1949, a few months after the National Party came to power, the government appointed a Commission on Native Education led by anthropologist Dr. Werner Willi Max Eiselen⁶⁰² to investigate native education and make any necessary recommendations. In 1951, the Commission tabled its findings, which responsibility for educating Blacks be removed from religious missionaries and other "unofficial" bodies, and given to the apartheid state. The Commission found that there was a mismatch between the skills children were taught in school and those required of Black workers, and it identified many problems with the current schools, including overcrowding, low attendance, and insufficient textbooks. The Commission recommended that the education of Blacks should take place within the state's broad socio-economic needs and that responsibility for Blacks' education should be transferred from the missions to the Bantu Regional Authorities.⁶⁰³ Those engaged with the Commission saw themselves as progressive reformers, highlighting ⁵⁹⁷ Gibbs, 1949: 230.

⁵⁹⁸ Sachs, 1952: 29.

⁵⁹⁹ Professor of Sociology and Anthropology and author of 'The Classroom Struggle,' 1999.

⁶⁰⁰ Hyslop, 1989: 203.

⁶⁰¹ Loveland, 1999: 330.

⁶⁰² Werner Willi Max Eiselen (1899–1977) was a South African anthropologist and member of the Broederbond who, like many of his contemporaries, had also studied in Germany. Prior to his appointment as Secretary of Bantu Administration and chairman of the infamous Native Education Commission, he had served for ten years (1936-1946) as the Chief Inspector of Native Education in the Transvaal and in 1941 had authored The Transvaal Education Department (TED) report on native education. He also served as Secretary of Native Affairs from 1949 until 1959. The report of his Native Education Commission formed the basis of the Bantu Education Act of 1953 which moved control of the education of South Africa's blacks from missionary schools to local government. Eiselen supported apartheid and was a close ally of Dr. Verwoerd. He is now sometimes referred to as an "intellectual architect" of apartheid (Evans, 1997: 228-232, Fleisch, 2002: 41; Kros, 2002: 53-73).

⁶⁰³ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 388-389; Fleish, 2002: 39-44; Kros, 2002: 53-73; Soudien, 2002: 212-214.

the inadequacies of how Blacks were taught, but their findings led to the creation of an education system that has been remembered for its contribution to the horrors of apartheid.⁶⁰⁴

While debating on the Bantu Education bill in 1953, Dr. Verwoerd had stated:

“... when I have control of Native Education I will reform it so that Natives will be taught from childhood to realise that equality with Europeans is not for them ... People who believe in equality are not desirable teachers for Natives. When my Department controls Native Education it will know for what class of higher education a Native is fitted, and whether he will have a chance to use his knowledge.”⁶⁰⁵

The Bantu Education Act, drafted by Dr. Verwoerd,⁶⁰⁶ was passed in 1953 and was almost immediately controversial.⁶⁰⁷ Dr. Verwoerd revealed his paternalistic approach when he said, “The fundamental thing about education is not the wish of the parents, often a selfish wish, but the interest of the child.”⁶⁰⁸ Dr. Verwoerd saw the Bantu Education system as a way to prepare the younger generation of Blacks for work in industry and agriculture, stating:

“The Bantu must be guided to serve his community in all respects. There is no place for him in the European community above the level of certain forms of labour. Within his community, however, all doors are open. For that reason it is of no avail for him to receive a training which has as its main aim absorption in the European community, where he cannot be absorbed. Until now he has been subjected to a school system which drew him away from his own community and misled him by showing him the green pastures of European society in which he was not allowed to graze.”⁶⁰⁹

Dr. Verwoerd also said, “I Just want to remind hon. members that if the Native in South Africa today in any kind of school in existence is being taught to expect that he will live his adult life under a policy of equal rights, he is making a big mistake. The Native who attends school must know that he will be the labourer in the country.”⁶¹⁰

⁶⁰⁴ Kros, 2002: 54.

⁶⁰⁵ Willems et al, 1988: 16.

⁶⁰⁶ Bunting, 1986: 172; Mandela, 2013: 195; Neame, 1962: 94; Welsh, 2000: 446.

⁶⁰⁷ Low, 1958: 21; Marquard, 1969: 201.

⁶⁰⁸ Bunting, 1986: 251.

⁶⁰⁹ Bunting, 1986: 260; Dubow, 2014: 55-56; Lipton, 1985: 24; O'Meara, 1996: 73; Pelzer, 1966: 83; Schadeberg, 1990: 81.

⁶¹⁰ Brookes, 1968: 51; La Guma, 1971: 46.

Dr. Verwoerd's evocation of a pastoral image is revealing of his view of African as "cattle" to be herded and controlled by the state.⁶¹¹ He claimed in 1953 that "good racial relations cannot exist when the education is given under the control of people who create wrong expectations on the part of the Native."⁶¹² He said that teachers who believed in equality were not suitable for teaching natives, and that Bantu teachers should never feel in any way superior to other Bantus such that they wished to be integrated into European society.⁶¹³

The Act aimed to replace the schools that previously had been largely provided by English-speaking missionaries⁶¹⁴ (seen as "the Afrikaner's great enemy," they had provided many Blacks with a relatively good education, up to and including university⁶¹⁵ despite limited resources and the lack of a proper centralised approach⁶¹⁶), although huge numbers of Blacks received effectively no education, or just a few poorly organised years. The Act had four main provisions:

- 1) Schools would be registered and inspected by the Department of Native Affairs instead of provincial authorities;
- 2) New curricula would be drawn up bearing "Bantu culture" in mind;
- 3) Blacks would be given more say in over how schools were run and staff would be Black;
- 4) Four-fifths of school funding would come from taxes raised from Blacks, and the rest from central government.⁶¹⁷ It became illegal to run any school for Africans that was not registered;⁶¹⁸ even if a White employer taught her servants' children basic literacy skills she would be breaking the law.⁶¹⁹

Under this system, Black parents had three times as many direct costs in their children's education as White,⁶²⁰ and teachers were forbidden on pain of dismissal to criticise government policy.⁶²¹ African education cost about 20 million dollars every year, and the ⁶¹¹ Mothata, 2000: 141-142.

⁶¹² Horrell, 1964: 6.

⁶¹³ Walker, 1990: 300-306.

⁶¹⁴ Ballinger, 1969: 348; Brookes, 1968: 41; Hepple, 1966: 34; Luthuli, 1962: 138.

⁶¹⁵ Mothata, 1998: 94; Pampallis, 1991; Parsons, 1993; Thompson, 2001: 156; Welsh, 2000: 446-447.

⁶¹⁶ Reeves, 1962b: 123.

⁶¹⁷ Low, 1958: 24.

⁶¹⁸ Reeves, 1962b: 124.

⁶¹⁹ Luthuli, 1962: 49-50.

⁶²⁰ Rose, 1965: 210.

⁶²¹ Kepple-Jones, 1963: 209.

government contributed around 8.5, with African parents having to make up the shortfall.⁶²² The broader apartheid system also had a negative impact on the quality of education; so many Black principals and teachers were harassed by being picked up for detention and interrogation that many of the best left the system.⁶²³

Dr. Verwoerd claimed in a speech that the new legislation was for the good of the entire Bantu community, and not just of individuals.⁶²⁴ Nothing could have been further from the truth. In reality, the new system was specifically designed to maintain Blacks in a position of subservience and bolster white supremacy, offering no opportunities for growth and stressing only subjects that would prepare students for menial labour.⁶²⁵ Later critics, including Dr. Nhato Moltana, chairman of the Soweto Committee of Ten in 1978, and Professor John Dugard, Law Professor at Wits University and Director of the Centre for Applied Legal Studies, stressed the profoundly inferior quality of Bantu Education.⁶²⁶

In his deep understanding of the role of education (or the lack thereof) in keeping a subservient population down, Dr. Verwoerd was following in the footsteps of a range of despots; Martin Bormann, Hitler's Party Secretary and Deputy Fuhrer, had said "Education is dangerous. It is enough if they can count up to 100 ... every educated person is a future enemy,"⁶²⁷ and Tsar Alexander's Minister of Education, Delyanov, had said that "the children of parents in lowly positions should not be encouraged through education to rise above the position into which they had been born."⁶²⁸

One function of the new system was to inculcate a sense of inferiority in Black students.⁶²⁹ The loss of control over education led to Blacks losing a sense of identity and of their capabilities; it "debased self-image, destroyed confidence and lowered motivation," reducing the intellectual independence that was a prerequisite to self-determination.⁶³⁰ Instead, school boards would play an important role in focusing black attention on tribal loyalties and the so-called homelands. School boards and committees were selected to help

⁶²² Abraham, 1991: 148-149.

⁶²³ Corke, 1978, 97.

⁶²⁴ Pelzer, 1966: 65.

⁶²⁵ du Preez Bezdrob, 2003: 41; Mnguni, 1998: 146-148; Morris, 2004: 164; Nkabinde, 1997: 5.

⁶²⁶ Dugard, 1978: 29; Moltana, 1978: 40.

⁶²⁷ Shirer, 1964: 1118.

⁶²⁸ Wolfe, 2001: 68.

⁶²⁹ Arnold, 1981: 200-201.

⁶³⁰ Nkabinde, 1997: 6-8; Nkomo: 1990: 2.

control black communities by putting them under financial pressure, and under ideological pressure to conform to Dr. Verwoerd's plans for the homelands.⁶³¹

Consistent with his divide-and-conquer approach to the homelands, Dr. Verwoerd's insistence that all Black children should be taught through their native tribal language underlined the idea that they were mutually different, and undermined black unity against oppression, while inhibiting cooperation between Blacks, Coloureds and Indians.⁶³² Local African languages became the only means of instruction in primary school, underlining linguistic and ethnic differences, and making it very hard for African children to progress to secondary.⁶³³ Dr. Verwoerd cynically presented this as respecting all languages equally, rather than eliminating African access to a language of commerce.⁶³⁴

In 1954 the government established diverse categories for the schools: Government Bantu Schools, Bantu Community Schools and Aided Farm Schools. The latter were located on White-owned farms and owned by the farmer himself (Black children were often withdrawn from school when farmers decided that they needed their labour).⁶³⁵ Aided Mine or Factory Schools and Unaided Mission and Registered schools, which were run by missionaries and mostly Catholic, had been established by farmers, mine-owners and so forth and not state funded; only the Catholic church managed to raise enough funds to maintain an independent education system.⁶³⁶ In 1955, the government established new curricula, which were designed, among other things, to restrict the number of Blacks who would graduate from school with the necessary qualifications to attend further education. The sons of local chiefs and headmen were provided with training in "Bantu Administration."⁶³⁷

Although education was free through to the fifth form for Whites, Blacks had to pay five shillings per term, and to cover the cost of educational materials. Black students who failed state exams were expelled and sent to work, whereas failing White students were given extra tuition and support.⁶³⁸ In 1953, the government spent $180 every year on the education of every White child, and only $25 on each Black child.⁶³⁹ It should be pointed out that,

⁶³¹ Hyslop, 1999: 59-60, 122.

⁶³² Booth, 1998: 62; Mda, 2000: 158.

⁶³³ Hyslop, 1999: 61-62.

⁶³⁴ D'Amato, 1966b: 63.

⁶³⁵ Italiaander, 1961: 112.

⁶³⁶ Harrison, 1981: 190.

⁶³⁷ Wheeler, 1961: 244.

⁶³⁸ Wheeler, 1961: 246-247.

⁶³⁹ Sparks, 1990: 196.

inadequate as this was, the situation had improved a lot in terms of attendance. Whereas just 4.1% of Black children between the ages of seven and sixteen attended school in 1935, this had risen to 41% by 1953, although vanishingly few obtained more than a primary level education⁶⁴⁰ (It is, however, important not to overestimate the number of children attending schools as the figures were massaged by double sessions and many children were crammed into vastly overcrowded classrooms).⁶⁴¹

Those who attended school were exposed to comprehensive system of education designed to show them the “virtues” of apartheid.⁶⁴² Teachers were rigorously supervised. They were sent copies of the Bantu Education Journal, and expected to sign each one to show that they had studied the contents, which were largely about government policy, and they also received free copies of the Department of Native Affairs magazine, Bantu, giving Dr. Verwoerd occasion to remark that Blacks could now hear the “other side.”⁶⁴³ Black teachers were also expected to take on aspects of Afrikaans nationalism, and work through Afrikaans, even though most of them were not proficient in that language. They could be dismissed for engaging in any type of political activism.⁶⁴⁴

The lack of investment in Black education showed in many ways, most obviously the poor-quality infrastructure, crowding, large class sizes and unqualified, poorly motivated teachers.⁶⁴⁵ Only five percent of the Black children who started school graduated; sixty percent did not complete even primary school and twenty-five percent of those exited during the first grade.⁶⁴⁶ Within just a few years, critics of the new system noted that African students were achieving far less than before, and in particular that standards in English were lower.⁶⁴⁷

Africans did not all meekly accept the new Act. The ANC planned a student boycott to begin in 1955 in protest. Phyllis Ntantala, an anti-apartheid activist who participated in the campaign against the Bantu Education Act, said, “... it is our children who are, by this Act, condemned to a world of darkness and ignorance, who will never fit in anywhere in the world ⁶⁴⁰ Kenney, 1980: 117.

⁶⁴¹ Reeves, 1962a: 6.

⁶⁴² Kenney, 1980: 122.

⁶⁴³ Mothata, 2000: 142; Robertson and Whitten, 1978: 115.

⁶⁴⁴ Halisi, 1999: 89; Mothata, 2000: 142.

⁶⁴⁵ Nkabinde, 1997: 9.

⁶⁴⁶ Bundy, 1994: 54.

⁶⁴⁷ Reeves, 1962b: 128.

after being shut away from the rest of humanity by Bantu Education.”⁶⁴⁸ With the support of the ANC, a number of Black parents withdrew their children from school in protest when the Bantu Education Act was applied on April 1, 1955. Dr. Verwoerd stated that any children who had not turned up to school by April 25th would be banned from education. He also stated that all “unofficial” schools were illegal, which meant that students engaged in the boycott could not receive any education at all.⁶⁴⁹ 6948 pupils were banned from schools and 116 teachers were dismissed for political reasons, while five teachers were arrested for running an illegal school for banned students.⁶⁵⁰

By 1956, Dr. Verwoerd and his public servants could arbitrarily refuse to register African schools.⁶⁵¹ Educators striving to provide a decent education were devastated when Dr. Verwoerd’s Department closed down institutes of learning it did not approve of. One school principal, Iso Lomuzi, write about the closure of his school stated that, “... there can be no place in Bantu Education for any institution which does not bow its knee before the Apartheid Idol.”⁶⁵²

Further legislation meant that the races were to be segregated at every level of education, including technical colleges and universities (although as Africans were usually desperately poor, and school attendance not compulsory, few Blacks made it to university).⁶⁵³ Although the University of Ford Hare provided third level education for non-Europeans, growing numbers sought entry into the “white” universities; a situation that Dr. Verwoerd found deplorable and that Malan had described in 1948 as “an intolerable state of affairs.”⁶⁵⁴ The Separate University Education Bill was passed in 1957, closing the “white” universities to non-Europeans and providing separate “university colleges” for Coloureds, Indians, and each of the African ethnic groups separately, and passing control of the latter to the Minister of Bantu Administration and Development.⁶⁵⁵

Dr. Verwoerd named the Act that excluded Africans from English universities (they had always been excluded from Afrikaans ones) the Extension of University Education

⁶⁴⁸ Ntantala, 1993: 159.

⁶⁴⁹ Joseph, 1968: 75.

⁶⁵⁰ Drum, April 1955, ‘Parents boycott Bantu Education.’

⁶⁵¹ Carter, 1954: 308.

⁶⁵² Brooks, 1968: 53.

⁶⁵³ Worden, 2000: 108.

⁶⁵⁴ Reeves, 1962b: 132.

⁶⁵⁵ Hain, 1996: 16; Lapping, 1986: 135; Marquard, 1969: 213; Sachs, 1965: 282.

Act;⁶⁵⁶ the British political magazine, The Economist, noted that the “new non-European colleges would be completely under the thumb of the minister of native affairs, Dr. Verwoerd,” who would “vet the list of entrants and... appoint the teaching and administrative staff.”⁶⁵⁷ Fort Hare University was effectively dismantled and replaced with a college for the Xhosa ethnicity.⁶⁵⁸ The Minister of Education, J.J. Serfontein, whose professional background was in raising cattle, stated of the Separate University Education Bill that he believed both Europeans and non-Europeans were served well by it, that many at “mixed” universities welcomed it,⁶⁵⁹ and that it was “fatal” to try to turn a non-White into a White or vice versa.⁶⁶⁰

The changes severely restricted the options at third level for Blacks lucky enough to get a higher education; one contemporary memoirist wrote of how her brother had wished to study engineering, which was not available to him under the apartheid system.⁶⁶¹ Moreover, White teaching staff at third level colleges for non-Whites were paid substantially less than their colleagues at white universities, and non-White teaching staff less again, making it very difficult to attract a high calibre of staff.⁶⁶²

Nelson Mandela characterised the Bantu Education Act as “inhuman and barbaric.”⁶⁶³ In England, outspoken anti-apartheid activist and president of the International Defence and Aid Fund (IDAF) Father Canon John Collins said that an analysis of the meaning of Christian freedom have a yardstick by which to assess the “now notorious Bantu Education Act in South Africa. If it be the truth that shall make us free, it is in the realm of education above all other realms of human endeavour that we should aim at giving all men equal opportunity. But according to that bitter racialist, Dr. Verwoerd, ‘education should be controlled in such a way that it should be in accordance with the policy of the State. For him, this means in accordance with the policy of segregation and prolonged white supremacy. This is just brutish discrimination. For the African education is now to be utilitarian only, and its usefulness to be primarily reckoned in terms of its benefit to Europeans.’”⁶⁶⁴

⁶⁵⁶ Muller, 1981: 484.

⁶⁵⁷ The Economist, 13 April 1957: 119, ‘Apartheid in practice.’

⁶⁵⁸ Ballinger, 1969: 350

⁶⁵⁹ Forman and Sachs, 1957: 164.

⁶⁶⁰ Muller, 1981: 484.

⁶⁶¹ Jabavu, 1960: 92.

⁶⁶² Reeves, 1962a: 11.

⁶⁶³ Mandela, 1991: 29.

⁶⁶⁴ Belfast News-Letter, 23 January 1956: 4, ‘South African education.’

By 1958, the Africans' education was controlled by the new Department of Bantu Education.⁶⁶⁵ Among efforts to keep costs low was the restriction of some teaching jobs to women, who were paid at a lower rate, along with the proviso that men teaching at the same level would not be paid anymore.⁶⁶⁶ Dr. Verwoerd continued to validate the importance of indoctrinating the young (of all races) in the ways of apartheid,⁶⁶⁷ and in limiting educational opportunities to Africans to prevent them from ever being able to compete with Europeans for most jobs.⁶⁶⁸ By continuing to insist that students should be taught through African languages, they were effectively prevented from studying subjects like physics and maths.⁶⁶⁹

In 1961, the Education Panel of the South African Institute for Race Relations recommended that the "facts" of the education system should underpin education,⁶⁷⁰ while complaints about the standard of Bantu education, the remuneration of teachers, and access to third level education for non-Whites escalated.⁶⁷¹ Early that year, the Cape Times had reported that enrolment in Bantu schools had doubled since the scheme began, quoting the Secretary for Bantu Education, J. E. Villiers, who claimed this as a great success. The article cited that fact that the Bantu themselves provided most of the taxation that supported the system.⁶⁷²

Dr. Xuma, a former president of the ANC, complained that the situation for Black students was appalling, pointing out that the state spent eight times as much on White students as Black and stating his view that "in certain quarters" people felt that "kaffirs" should be grateful for whatever they got.⁶⁷³ By 1962, only seven hundred schools for Blacks were run privately, mostly by the Roman Catholic Church, and not under the state system,⁶⁷⁴ and Luthuli commented that Dr. Verwoerd's educational policies had resulted in doors "slammed shut hard" in the faces of young Blacks, who were now educated in system expressly designed to teach them that they were inferior and render them easier to control.⁶⁷⁵

⁶⁶⁵ Evans, 1997: 75; Marquard, 1969: 203.

⁶⁶⁶ Soudien, 2002: 213.

⁶⁶⁷ Bunting, 1986: 244.

⁶⁶⁸ Feit, 1967: 148.

⁶⁶⁹ Lapping, 1986: 109.

⁶⁷⁰ Chisholm, 2002: 99.

⁶⁷¹ Pretoria News, 19 January 1961: n.p, 'Apartheid in education attacked.'

⁶⁷² The Cape Times, 19 January 1961: n.p, 'Bantu schools' roll has doubled.'

⁶⁷³ Pretoria News, 18 January 1961: n.p, 'Bantu education starved of money.'

⁶⁷⁴ Thompson, 1966: 105.

⁶⁷⁵ Luthuli, 1962: 49.

Dr. Verwoerd believed that an uneducated Black population would be easier to control. Moreover, he was very aware of the importance of early childhood education. Black children who grew up hearing that they could only ever reach certain positions in life, and would never be able to enjoy the advantages that Whites had, were less likely to revolt against this cynical, inhumane system. For this reason, too, Black girls generally received an even worse education than boys (as indeed they had since before the days of Bantu Education).⁶⁷⁶

Dr. Verwoerd's idea was that it was pointless providing Blacks with the same or similar educational opportunities as Whites, as this would lead to frustration and disappointment. He felt that there were no circumstances in which any Black should ever work at the same level, or on a superior level, to any White. By maintaining Blacks in a position of educational inferiority, this "unfortunate" situation would never arise. He said:

"Racial relations cannot improve if the wrong type of information is given to Natives. They cannot improve if the result of Native education is the creation of frustrated people who, as a result of the education they received, have expectations of life which circumstances in South Africa do not allow to be fulfilled immediately, when it creates people who are trained for professions not open to them, when there are people who have received a form of cultural training which strengthens their desire for the white-collar expectations to such an extent that there are more such people than openings available."⁶⁷⁷

Thus, policy was that there was little point in teaching Blacks academic subjects, as they would be menial workers anyway.⁶⁷⁸ Children were not to be taught history or geography, but simply about "their immediate environment and to be able to read messages so... they could deliver those messages to the right places."⁶⁷⁹ Dr. Verwoerd said that, "Bantu education should stand with both feet in the reserves. What is the use of teaching the Bantu child mathematics when it cannot use it in practice?"⁶⁸⁰ This policy was wrapped up in language suggesting that this was for the good of the Blacks; by giving them their own schools they could be helped to "respect" their own culture.⁶⁸¹

⁶⁷⁶ Morrell and Moletsane, 2002: 229.

⁶⁷⁷ Bunting 1986: 259; Carter 1958: 103; Sparks, 1990: 196; van den Berghe 1967: 130.

⁶⁷⁸ Clark and Worger, 2011: 55; Duncan, 1963: 39; Furlong, 1991: 259; Mandela, 1994: 195.

⁶⁷⁹ Mokgatle, 1971: 275.

⁶⁸⁰ Brookes, 1968: 57; D'Amato, 1966b: 70.

⁶⁸¹ Ballinger, 1969: 349; Rose, 1965: 208.

Dr. Verwoerd also warned against the dangers of not controlling native education closely, "Good racial relations cannot exist when education is given to under the control of people who create wrong expectations on part of the Native himself, if such people believe in a policy of equality..." He suggested that that there was a risk "if, let me say, for example, a Communist gives this training to the Native," that this could "create expectations in the minds of the Bantu which clash with the possibilities of the country. It is therefore necessary that Native education should be controlled in such a way that it should be in accord with the policy of the state."⁶⁸²

Dr. Verwoerd was eloquent on the risks involved if "Bantu" people received a western education: "The Bantu must learn not to feel above his community, with the consequent desire to become integrated into the way of life of the European community. He becomes frustrated and rebellious when this does not take place, and he tries to make his community dissatisfied because of such misdirected ambitions which are alien to this people."⁶⁸³ He also declared that "if the Native in South Africa today ... is being taught to expect that he will live his adult life under a policy of equal rights, he is making a big mistake."⁶⁸⁴

As more Blacks moved to the cities, the skills they needed changed, and their educational requirements moved beyond those provided in rural areas. Government authorities noted that lower rates of education tended to be associated with higher rates of juvenile delinquency.⁶⁸⁵ Possibly Dr. Verwoerd and his colleagues did not foresee that a population of more educated urban Africans would also be in a better situation to understand the levels of discrimination that they were facing and to organise themselves politically.⁶⁸⁶

As for ordinary Whites, it emerged that they were prepared to accept an influx of Black semi-skilled workers into industry so long as this movement was accompanied by a parallel move of White semi-skilled workers into the skilled category.⁶⁸⁷ By the late 1950s, although progress had been made in terms of improving educational outcomes for Blacks at the primary level, a series of measures mitigated against these gains. Now, beyond a low state

⁶⁸² Bunting, 1986: 259.

⁶⁸³ Bunting, 1986: 261; Rose, 1965: 209.

⁶⁸⁴ Elphick, 2012: 191.

⁶⁸⁵ Hyslop, 1993: 393-396.

⁶⁸⁶ Bonner et al, 1993: 26.

⁶⁸⁷ Hyslop, 1993: 398.

input into the cost of education, all the necessary funds had to come from taxes paid by Black workers. The resulting funding crisis quickly led to a rapid decline in standards.

Dr. Verwoerd's approach to education was cynical and shrewd. He ensured that black education and advancement at work could only go so far while using education to offer segments of the Black population an incentive to operate within apartheid; Black parents desperately needed schools not just to educate their children but to provide childcare while they themselves worked for tiny salaries; the choice was between having their children in inadequate Bantu Education or on the streets, as Albert Luthuli pointed out.⁶⁸⁸ These factors helped to mitigate against militancy and resistance among Black teachers and parents.⁶⁸⁹ There was also a feeling, as Luthuli said, that a "rotten" education was better than none at all.⁶⁹⁰

In the 1960s, the government spent about $170 per annum on the education of each White child, and just $17 on each Black child. Education was not compulsory for Blacks, many of whom did not attend school. The form for White children was to start school at six and leave at sixteen or seventeen, while Black children who did attend school did so between the ages of seven and fourteen only.⁶⁹¹ Dr. Verwoerd's Minister of Bantu Education instructed officials in his department that they should never shake hands with Africans, partly to ensure that they would not start to think that they deserved social equality.⁶⁹²

In 1963, the Coloured Persons' Education Act placed all responsibility for the education of non-Whites on the Department of Coloured Affairs, while in 1965 the education of Indians (the Indian Education Act) became the responsibility of the Department of Indian Affairs.⁶⁹³ Efforts were also made to bring English-speaking students into the government fold, notably with the establishment of the University of Port Elizabeth, which taught through both English and Afrikaans but was predominately governed by Afrikaans authorities.⁶⁹⁴

Chief Justice Warren of the US Supreme Court stated in 1954 regarding the segregation of children in the US schools under the "separate but equal" doctrine:

⁶⁸⁸ Feit, 1967: 155.

⁶⁸⁹ Hyslop, 1993: 401-405.

⁶⁹⁰ Luthuli, 1962: 147.

⁶⁹¹ Andrews et al, 1962: 181.

⁶⁹² Beinart, 2001: 163.

⁶⁹³ Hepple, 1966: 32; Soudien, 2002: 212; van der Walt, 2015: 202.

⁶⁹⁴ Bunting, 2006: 40.

“To separate [Black children] from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. The effect of this separation on their educational opportunities was well stated by a finding in the Kansas cases ... ‘segregation of white and coloured children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the coloured children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of the law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the negro group.’”⁶⁹⁵

The effects on education in South Africa went beyond the dreadful impact they had on educational outcomes for Blacks; many academics and promising students left South Africa, it became harder to attract overseas talent, and censorship of books and pamphlets in the social sciences had a negative impact.⁶⁹⁶ By 1972, when a full generation of South Africans had been through an education system engineered by Dr. Verwoerd as Minister of Native Affairs and as Prime Minister, UNESCO reported the chronic shortage of people to work in science and engineering, the loss of a “spirit of free enquiry” and of eminent scientists and social scientists. It also noted that the South African education system flouted human rights, as defined by the United Nations, and categorised “separate development” as “a policy of deliberate inequality built into the education system.”⁶⁹⁷

Revolutionary Steve Biko and others identified the Bantu Education Act as denying Blacks the tools they needed to function in a technological world and reach their potential.⁶⁹⁸ Biko was not alone. According to South Africa’s Ministry of Education, Dr. Verwoerd’s harsh experiment created the conditions that led to the conflicts that South Africa suffered for the next twenty years.⁶⁹⁹ According to Albert Luthuli, “Dr. Verwoerd’s Bantu Education Act dealt a crippling blow to African education.”⁷⁰⁰ Ironically, years later Nelson Mandela declared the Bantu Education Act responsible for producing the “angry” generation that “rose with a vehemence.”⁷⁰¹ Ten years after Dr. Verwoerd’s death, his language policy led to the Soweto rebellion of June 16, 1976, prompted by the question of whether Black students

⁶⁹⁵ Dugard, 1978: 57.

⁶⁹⁶ Langer, 1967: 1387-1388.

⁶⁹⁷ UNESCO, 1972: 28-29, 255.

⁶⁹⁸ Herbstein, 1992: 62-65; Wilson, 1991: 34.

⁶⁹⁹ Morris, 2004: 185.

⁷⁰⁰ Luthuli, 1962: 50.

⁷⁰¹ Mandela, 2013: 198.

would be allowed to learn English, an international language, or forced to study in Afrikaans, a language that they associated with white supremacy.⁷⁰²

INFLUX CONTROL

Influx control refers to the control of people's movements from one area to another, and was a key element of apartheid. By 1951, the majority of the population in each city, in contrast to previous years, was non-White, as more and more Blacks arrived from the rural areas in search of work.⁷⁰³ Dr. Verwoerd warned that this could lead to the "death of white civilization in South Africa" and for him, "the survival of white civilization in South Africa" was more important "than expanded industrial development."⁷⁰⁴ He was in favour of restricting Africans' movements away from designated areas, saying, "Emigration control must be established to prevent manpower leaving the (white farming areas) to become loafers in the city."⁷⁰⁵ A third of Blacks lived on farms owned by White farmers, and could be forced to leave in the event of a disagreement with their employer.⁷⁰⁶ "The present system of having an unattached mass of Bantu individuals living in cities not subject to any traditional authority or sanctions has proved to be a dismal failure," Dr. Verwoerd said⁷⁰⁷ and started working on "addressing" the issue.

One function was to extend the labour system, in which all Blacks were for ever to be seen as migrants and "foreigners."⁷⁰⁸ This ensured African labour for industries in urban areas, as regulations about who could leave and enter kept labour costs low by ensuring that there was always a large body of people with time to find work, who could be expelled from the possibility of obtaining work at all should they lose their jobs.⁷⁰⁹ Influx control had a number of primary aims: To restrict the number of Blacks entering white, especially urban, areas; to prevent their permanent settlement in such areas; to control labour, ensuring that there were plenty of workers for white farms; for purposes of social control; and to make residential segregation easier.⁷¹⁰ Dr. Verwoerd got Whites on board with inflammatory

⁷⁰² Halisi, 1999: 89.

⁷⁰³ Giliomee, 2012: 52.

⁷⁰⁴ Giliomee and Schlemmer, 1990: 35-36.

⁷⁰⁵ Lipton, 1985: 25.

⁷⁰⁶ Posel, 1993: 419; Rogers, 1976: 11.

⁷⁰⁷ Pienaar and Sampson, 1960: 36.

⁷⁰⁸ Roskam, 1960: 67.

⁷⁰⁹ Posel, 1997: 11.

⁷¹⁰ Lipton, 1985: 27.

language, stating that "if the stream [of Africans] into the town continues unstemmed, we [Whites] will be drowned in a black sea."⁷¹¹

From 1950, one of Dr. Verwoerd's priorities was the limiting of "permanently urbanized" Blacks to the smallest number possible by means of harsher influx control.⁷¹² In 1951, he created a committee composed of members of the Departments of Justice, Police, Census and Native Affairs to figure out how to integrate the pre-existing pass system and the Population Registration Act to simplify the bureaucracy. From this came the idea of the reference book.⁷¹³

In 1952, the Native Laws Amendment Act introduced a system of labour bureaux that would match African workers over the age of sixteen ("work-seekers") to the needs of White employers in rural and urban areas,⁷¹⁴ essentially introducing a largely artificial division between "rural" and "urban" Black workers.⁷¹⁵ Once urban employers had found the labour they needed, surplus workers could be assigned to rural work and to the mines. No Blacks could enter urban areas looking for work except within the constraints of the law.⁷¹⁶ Under Section 10 of the Act, only three categories of African were permitted to live permanently in the urban areas:

- 1) Those who were born there.
- 2) Those who had lived there without a break for fifteen years.
- 3) Those who had worked there for the same employer for more than ten years.⁷¹⁷

In the same year, Dr. Verwoerd's infamous Pass Laws Act, officially (and ironically) entitled the Natives Abolition of Passes and Co-ordination of Documents Act of 1952, overrode regional laws and introduced what was effectively nationwide control of South Africa's Blacks. The Act mandated that all Black South Africans aged over sixteen must carry a "pass book" when in designated White areas. The "pass book" authorised them to live and work in a specific area, decreed how long a Black could remain in a White area, exactly where and at what times. The compact, ninety-two-page pass book, in effect an internal ⁷¹¹ Hughes, 1961: 176.

⁷¹² Giliomee, 2011: 511.

⁷¹³ Breckenridge, 2005: 87.

⁷¹⁴ Breckenridge 2005: 90; Longford, 1985: 13.

⁷¹⁵ Morris, 1977: 63.

⁷¹⁶ Posel, 1997: 94-95, 103-114.

⁷¹⁷ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 390; Dugard 1978: 74; Horrell 1978: 173.

passport, carried identification details of the bearer, including his or her photograph, name and address of the bearer's employer, length of employment and similar information, and was recorded and managed by the Central Reference Bureau in Pretoria. This placed Africans in a highly vulnerable situation whereby their right to travel to work could be revoked at any time, even if they were considered "urbanised" (i.e. to no longer having any particular tribal affiliation or homeland).⁷¹⁸

Initially, the intention was for each pass to incorporate the user's fingerprints, but the practicalities of obtaining the prints of every single Black over the age of sixteen proved unmanageable.⁷¹⁹ Thus, just as Jews in Nazi Germany were forced to wear the yellow Star of David, all Africans were forced to carry the pass book with them at all times. Mary Benson, author and prominent anti-apartheid activist, characterised the pass book accurately as "the badge of slavery."⁷²⁰

It is also worth noting that at the time only 55% of the Africans born in South Africa lived to the age of sixteen. Those "lucky enough" to make it that far, were then forced to obtain the "pass" that they would need to carry for the rest of their lives, as it was required in order to work and travel in their own country.⁷²¹ Failure to produce the "pass" when asked to by a policeman or an authority was a criminal offence, punishable with a fine of up to R20 or a one-month imprisonment.⁷²²

Blacks soon gave the reference book a nickname; the Dompas, or Stupid Pass ("Dompas" was a derisive way of referring to the pass, colloquially meaning "dumb pass").⁷²³ Dr. Verwoerd disingenuously claimed that he had abolished passes, but in reality he had simply changed the name, and everyone knew it.⁷²⁴ The new "reference book" passes were distributed en masse from March 1953, simplifying the police's job of monitoring and controlling Blacks' activities. The Central Reference Bureau contained a wide-ranging amount of information about pass holders, including medical history, permission to seek work, details of previous movements, and so forth. As workers were obliged to pay any outstanding taxes before collecting their passes, which they needed in order to do anything, ⁷¹⁸ Breckenridge, 2005: 87-93; Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 390; Dyzenhaus, 2010: 36; Posel, 1997: 94-95, 103-114.

⁷¹⁹ Breckenridge, 2005: 93-95; Breckenridge, 2014: 151.

⁷²⁰ Benson (1960) The Badge of Slavery (The Pass Laws of South Africa).

⁷²¹ Segal, 1960: 2.

⁷²² Rubin (United Nations Report), 1976: 11.

⁷²³ Breckenridge, 2014: 138.

⁷²⁴ Attwell, 1986: 81-82.

the tax take from Blacks increased dramatically.⁷²⁵ The reference book, which Dr. Verwoerd described as offering a necessary measure of control in a multi-racial society,⁷²⁶ was bitterly hated and resented, and many protests crystallised around this issue. Overall, its implementation was handled badly, and the government had to deal with a wide range of problems, including frequent forgeries.⁷²⁷

The new law applied also to women, who had previously been exempted from the same degree of control as men.⁷²⁸ Women responded furiously and there were many protests; 20,000 women marched to the seat of the government in Pretoria protesting while when a delegation of women tried to discuss the passes issue with the authorities at Lichtenburg, police opened fire and four people were killed.⁷²⁹ The ANC also protested against the pass on various grounds, including their contention that it could be used as an excuse to molest women physically, under the guise of searching for their pass.⁷³⁰ The protests came to no avail, however, and by the late 1950s, four million women had been issued with passes which restricted their movement.⁷³¹ However, over the years, whenever similar attempts had been made to restrict women's movements, the protests had been so fierce that they were abandoned.⁷³² During the women's protest the following slogan emerged:

"Watch out Strijdom.

Now you have touched the women you have struck a rock.

You have dislodged a boulder.

*You will be crushed!"*⁷³³

The Native Areas Amendments Act of 1952 stated that all urban areas were now "proclaimed areas" into which Blacks without permits could only stray for seventy-two hours. However, Dr. Verwoerd accepted that it was unrealistic to expect urban South Africa to manage without African labour, and that it was pointless to aspire to eliminating a settled urban African population. Instead the focus was on limiting the growth of this demographic ⁷²⁵ Breckenridge, 2005: 92, 140-143.

⁷²⁶ Roskam, 1960: 71.

⁷²⁷ Breckenridge, 2014: 139-155.

⁷²⁸ Attwell, 1986: 81; Desmond, 1971: 160; Worden, 2000: 110.

⁷²⁹ Desmond, 1971: 160; Sachs, 1965: 302.

⁷³⁰ Lodge, 1983: 144.

⁷³¹ Dubow, 2014: 54-55.

⁷³² Sachs, 1965: 302.

⁷³³ International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, in co-operation with the United Nations Centre Against Apartheid, 1981: 87; O'Meara, 1996: 70.

by striving only to offer employment to Blacks already living in urban areas, rather than encouraging more rural people to move.⁷³⁴

The only Blacks who were allowed to stay in white areas (still with minimal rights) were those who had been born there, who had lived there for continuously for fifteen years, or who had worked for the same employer for ten years. These so-called "section ten" rights applied to very few. As the law applied to both sexes, often only the man of a family was given permission to travel to (or remain in) urban areas, splitting the family up.⁷³⁵ However, even those Africans who were allowed to remain in the cities were forced to stay in their houses after 9.30 p.m. Every evening at 9.00 p.m. a sound, like "an air raid siren," was heard in all major cities; a warning to all Africans that they should be back inside their houses within half an hour, otherwise they would be arrested.⁷³⁶

By the mid-1950s, as many as two thousand people without the requisite passes were arrested every day,⁷³⁷ those who had been forced into reserves did all they could to sneak back into the cities, where there was more and better work.⁷³⁸ Over 350.000 Africans were convicted under the "pass" law each year.⁷³⁹ Dr. Verwoerd said that to facilitate influx control, black townships would have to be far enough away from white residential areas, ideally with open spaces around them and industrial areas between them, and quite far away from major roads.⁷⁴⁰ This desire resulted in an urban landscape in which the racial divide was made very clear; "with sprawling, infrastructurally poor black townships severed from high-rise commercial city centre and salubrious suburban areas."⁷⁴¹

Africans were to be allowed into the city for a period of seventy-two hours, after which they needed to ask for permission to remain.⁷⁴² Influx control was presented as a way of keeping costs down. Dr. Verwoerd's efforts in tightening influx regulations and consolidating pass laws resulted in Africans having no legal right to be in towns and cities, and in being removed from them, although they were at all times living in their own country.

⁷³⁴ Lazer, 1993: 371.

⁷³⁵ Benson, 1963a: 113-114.

⁷³⁶ Dubula, 1965: 13.

⁷³⁷ Sparks, 1990: 194.

⁷³⁸ Jabavu 1982:154.

⁷³⁹ Segal, 1960: 2.

⁷⁴⁰ Lipton, 1985: 27.

⁷⁴¹ Robinson, 1996: 30.

⁷⁴² Brookes, 1968: 92.

Throughout the 1950s, and into the 1960s, the state had gained progressively greater and greater degrees of control over black and coloured communities. However, they proved quite unsuccessful in controlling the ongoing influx of Black workers to urban areas, where they settled, often illegally.⁷⁴³ Proponents of influx control saw it as a way of ensuring that Black workers did not “forget their place” when they travelled to the cities to work.⁷⁴⁴ In 1960, Albert Luthuli complained that that pass laws had been extended and intensified, and identified their application to Black women as adding “insult to injury.”⁷⁴⁵

Government policy was extraordinarily harsh; the moment a Black person became “redundant” in a white area, their temporary (and limited) residence rights could be revoked and they were expected to return to their designated homeland. Many people fell into this category, including the elderly, the unwell or disabled, widows, women with young children, families that did not meet the accommodation requirements, and highly qualified professional non-Whites, such as doctors, lawyers and merchants, who were not regarded as useful in a European labour market.⁷⁴⁶

By the early 1960s, Dr. Verwoerd's government was successfully enforcing the pass with policing, arrests and imprisonment; in early 1960, almost 20,000 Africans were serving prison sentences for pass violations.⁷⁴⁷ The direct effects for Blacks were immense. It was much harder for rural workers to leave their (badly paid) jobs, as they needed their employer to stamp their documentation. White urbanites benefited from an abundance of cheap female labour, as having a pass that indicated the bearer's right to be there was one of the few ways in which Black women could legally enter cities. The Dompas also facilitated the infamous homelands, which are discussed above.⁷⁴⁸ When Helen Suzman, the only Progressive Member of Parliament in 1963, criticised the pass system, she was accused of being unpatriotic, of “smearing” South Africa and inciting non-Whites.⁷⁴⁹

In 1963, the Native Laws Amendment Act was expanded further and made it illegal for Blacks (68% of the population) to reside outside the “Native Reserves” (13% of the land),⁷⁵⁰ and ensured that valuable agricultural land, diamonds and other resources were on ⁷⁴³ Bonner et al, 1993: 33.

⁷⁴⁴ van den Berghe, 1962: 604.

⁷⁴⁵ Benson, 1963a: 42.

⁷⁴⁶ Hain, 1996: 85.

⁷⁴⁷ Africa Report, 1 January 1960: 5, ‘South Africa reports nearly 20,000 jailed.’

⁷⁴⁸ Breckenridge, 2014: 157-158.

⁷⁴⁹ Bunting, 1986: 197.

⁷⁵⁰ Duncan, 1963: 39.

European-owned and/or government controlled property.⁷⁵¹ The Act also gave the government authority to remove any Black person from any white area at any time, even if he had been born there and had never been in any trouble with the law.⁷⁵² This destroyed any chance that "migrant" male African workers had to live with their wives and children in the white area where they worked.⁷⁵³

At the same time, Dr. Verwoerd, in an attempt to increase the number of Whites in the country, started a propaganda campaign in Europe, including newspaper advertisements, lecture tours and $4,200,000 invested into an immigrant assistance programme, with the aim of attracting new citizens (the goal was 40,000 additional Whites per year).⁷⁵⁴ Dr. Verwoerd's policy of white immigration did not please many members of the National Party. The policy encouraged European immigrants to increase the number of Whites. However, most were from the UK rather than areas historically associated with the Afrikaners – Holland, Germany and Flanders – giving rise to the fear that Afrikaners would become a minority among Whites.⁷⁵⁵

FORCED REMOVALS

At its most fundamental, apartheid involved removing anyone who had been classified as non-White from areas that had been classified for the occupation and use of Whites.⁷⁵⁶ While Whites had long enacted policies designed to ensure their hegemony, when the National Party came to power in 1948, their efforts to push Africans off the land and secure even more for themselves accelerated.⁷⁵⁷ Dr. Verwoerd's ambitious plans to locate Blacks in tribal homelands was intimately intertwined with the policies and practices he developed in the area of forcible removal.

The Group Areas Act of 1950 gave the government the authority to forcibly remove people from their homes and seize their property to secure the separation of the races, all as part of Dr. Verwoerd's over-arching plan for separate development.⁷⁵⁸ He stated: "South ⁷⁵¹ d'Amato, 1966a: 182.

⁷⁵² Thompson, 1966: 185-190.

⁷⁵³ Bernstein, 1975: 12; Marquard, 1968: 258.

⁷⁵⁴ TIME, 15 June 1962: 33, 'Africa: Whites wanted.'

⁷⁵⁵ van Tonder, 1990: 65.

⁷⁵⁶ Christopher, 1994: 6.

⁷⁵⁷ Harsch, 1986: 32.

⁷⁵⁸ Bunting, 1964: 161-163.

Africa is a white man's country and ... he must remain the master here. In the reserves we are prepared to allow the Native to be masters; we are not the masters there. But within the European areas, we, the whites of South Africa, are and shall remain the masters."⁷⁵⁹

The Natives Resettlement Act of 1954, which did not require the cooperation of local authorities,⁷⁶⁰ legalised the dismantling of established black neighbourhoods like Sophiatown in Johannesburg, a large urban area on land that Black owners had managed to purchase early in the twentieth century, and a vibrant melting pot of ideas and crucible of political activism that was home to important Black leaders and intellectuals including Dr. Xuma and Can Themba.⁷⁶¹ This had been promoted by Dr. Verwoerd as a way of realigning the "white and bantu nations... on their separate and natural evolutionary courses by means of a dynamic programme of reconciliation,"⁷⁶² and as a way of dealing effectively with urban slums,⁷⁶³ and was supported by the Dutch Reformed Church.⁷⁶⁴

African home or property owners were entitled to compensation from the government at purchase price, plus six per cent for each year they had owned the property, but they were not offered any compensation whatsoever for "loss of freehold, amenities, or trade."⁷⁶⁵ Key to these efforts was the establishment of separate, restricted areas for the black population. The residents of Sophiatown mostly ardently resisted efforts to move them, and had to be forcibly removed;⁷⁶⁶ two thousand heavily armed police officers were sent to oversee their removal.⁷⁶⁷ It took the police three days to drag the 60.000 residents out.⁷⁶⁸ After Sophiatown had been emptied in 1955 it was razed to the ground and a new, white suburb, called Triomf (Triumph), was built in its place.⁷⁶⁹

Sophiatown in particular had been an area rich with art and intellectual endeavour and, despite widespread poverty, had been a source of pride as a true "African town."⁷⁷⁰ It had also been an area from which much protest writing and journalism had emanated.⁷⁷¹ The ⁷⁵⁹ de Clerk, 1975: 238.

⁷⁶⁰ Carter, 1958: 91; Davenport, 1990: 344; Muller, 1981: 482.

⁷⁶¹ Feit, 1967: 96; Beinart, 2001: 153.

⁷⁶² Barber, 1999: 173; Moodie, 1975: 64.

⁷⁶³ The New York Times, 3 March 1954, 'Malan will move huge negro area.'

⁷⁶⁴ Lave, 1994: 509.

⁷⁶⁵ Carter, 1958: 91.

⁷⁶⁶ Worden, 2000: 113.

⁷⁶⁷ Forman and Sacks, 1957: 163.

⁷⁶⁸ Lapierre, 2009: 104.

⁷⁶⁹ Meredith, 1988: 55; Mufson, 1990: 43.

⁷⁷⁰ Lodge, 1983: 95.

⁷⁷¹ Switzer, 1997: 252.

former residents of Sophiatown were removed to a series of tiny houses located four times further away from their workplaces.⁷⁷² Father Huddleston wrote about the destruction of Sophiatown, "Basically, the issue was dead simple. It was just this: that white Johannesburg had encroached on black Johannesburg, and so, naturally, black Johannesburg must move on. MUST MOVE ON... An African freehold township, established for 50 years, can be uprooted and totally destroyed because it is contiguous with a European suburb. The question of right or wrong does not have any relevance."⁷⁷³

There were many similar forced removals of other black neighbourhoods in areas now designated for Whites in a bid to eliminate permanent black residency in cities, and hinder the development of black radicalism.⁷⁷⁴ Organised opposition to the removals was often thwarted at grassroots level by local tensions between landlords and tenants and between older, more settled householders and the young.⁷⁷⁵ Another infamous case was that of District Six in Cape Town, which by the end of the 1950s had also been destroyed,⁷⁷⁶ and 60,000 residents had been forced out.⁷⁷⁷

Dr. Verwoerd used the slum clearance as an excuse to proceed with the forced removals, demanding rhetorically and with unmatched cynicism, "Do not the rights of the masses count more than the rights of a few home owners?"⁷⁷⁸ His ruthlessness in enacting the removals was noted, and the Minister for Negro Affairs from an earlier administration, D. L. Smit, accused him of using them to set up a "black empire" under his own dictatorship.⁷⁷⁹ The Economist wrote of: "... the thoroughness of his preparations, the determination to brook no interference, the staggering display of force [and the] provocative and intemperate attacks on all who either gave him friendly advice or threatened to say him nay."⁷⁸⁰ The Resettlement Act impacted on 150,000 Africans, giving Dr. Verwoerd the power to seize their property, move them wherever he wanted, and convert them into tenants.⁷⁸¹

Throughout Dr. Verwoerd's period as Prime Minister, the forcible removal of Africans continued apace in his bid to grand apartheid succeed. The Indians, like the Blacks, ⁷⁷² Schadeberg, 1990: 119.

⁷⁷³ Huddleston, 1987 (originally 1956): 138.

⁷⁷⁴ Dubow, 2014: 57-59; Lapierre, 2009: 105.

⁷⁷⁵ Lodge, 2014: 499.

⁷⁷⁶ An area founded when it was inhabited by freed slaves in 1834.

⁷⁷⁷ Dubow, 2014: 57-59; Lapierre, 2009: 105.

⁷⁷⁸ Goodhew, 2004: 151.

⁷⁷⁹ The New York Times, 29 May 1954: 3, 'Dictatorial bid laid to aide of Malan.'

⁷⁸⁰ The Economist, March 19, 1955: 1005.

⁷⁸¹ Luthuli, 1962: 150.

were subjected to forced removals during the 1960s when established communities were destroyed and people moved to new townships; in Johannesburg the Indian community was moved to a new "group area" twenty-two miles away, and those who did not comply were forcibly removed from their homes and businesses.⁷⁸² This was greeted with fierce protest, and taken to be "a move which seemed clearly designed to turn them from a trading to a self-sufficient community."⁷⁸³ Between 3.5 and 4 million Africans were forcibly removed between 1960 and 1983 because of Dr. Verwoerd's legislation.⁷⁸⁴

JOB RESERVATIONS

"Job reservation" referred to the closing of many professions to anyone who was not White. Often poverty and a lack of education excluded most Blacks and many Coloureds anyway, but legislation added to this situation. The system was based in pre-apartheid legislation; the Apprenticeship Act of 1922, for instance, made it impossible for non-Whites to become artisans by setting educational levels too high, and many laws ensured that Whites would always take the better jobs.⁷⁸⁵ Dr. Verwoerd extended and enforced these laws with characteristic ruthlessness.

The Native Building Workers Act of 1951 made it illegal for anyone in an urban area to hire a Black builder for skilled building work, or for the Black person in question to carry out skilled work in an urban area.⁷⁸⁶ In 1952, when mining companies asked if they could house Black workers, Dr. Verwoerd explained his intention to make all Black labour essentially migratory saying, "Migratory labour is the best system. Its strengthening and expanding... to most of the other spheres of labour would in the interests of the Bantu..." In 1953, the Black Labour Relations Regulation Act (Black Labour and Settlement of Disputes Act) made it illegal for Africans to strike and banned recognition of their unions,⁷⁸⁷ while making them liable to agreements made with all-white unions.⁷⁸⁸

In February 18, 1954, Dr. Verwoerd informed the Parliament that certain occupations would be reserved for Whites, while Blacks in industrial and urban employment would be ⁷⁸² Randal and Desai, 1967: 2-6.

⁷⁸³ Carter, 1958: 91.

⁷⁸⁴ Hain, 1997: 85; Lapierre, 2009: 104.

⁷⁸⁵ Adikhiri, 2005: 5; Thompson, 2001: 169.

⁷⁸⁶ Dugard, 1978: 87; Trades Union Congress, 1974: 12.

⁷⁸⁷ Clark and Worger, 2011: 52; Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: Horrell, 1978: 281.

⁷⁸⁸ Horrell, 1978: 281; Landis, 1957: 47.

regarded as temporary, even if long term residents.⁷⁸⁹ The Minister of Labour explained that Africans were “primitives and illiterates who have not the faintest conception of the responsibilities of trade unionism”⁷⁹⁰ and in 1955, when amendments were carried out to the act, justified it as follows: “... it will impose a total prohibition throughout the country for any Native to do any skilled work in any European area. This is the sphere of the European and the work should be reserved for him.” Limits were placed on the number of Africans who were allowed learn skills, and those who qualified could only work in black areas.⁷⁹¹ The government did, however, promise that it would continue to ensure a supply of cheap black labour for White employers.⁷⁹²

Job reservation had the effect not just of excluding Blacks from more lucrative jobs but of elevating many poor White workers to the middle classes.⁷⁹³ Many of the laws to do with job reservation had the approval of White labour leaders who represented working class Whites, who typically had no more problem with laws privileging Whites than did the middle or upper classes.⁷⁹⁴

By the time, Dr. Verwoerd became Prime Minister, Africans were not included under the term “employee” which meant that almost all of the legislation that applied in the area of industrial relationships was irrelevant to them. By 1960, racial inequality had grown even greater than before. Whites, then representing about 20% of the population, owned about 70% of the income, and a hugely disproportionate amount of the assets.⁷⁹⁵ It had become more difficult for Blacks to find work; because Coloureds were generally not engaging in protests and boycotts, many Whites were hiring them in preference.⁷⁹⁶

Dr. Verwoerd remained committed to the policy of reserving jobs for Whites, even when it became apparent that it was damaging South Africa's economy. When the Association of Chambers of Commerce urged Dr. Verwoerd to abolish job reservation, he

⁷⁸⁹ The New York Times, 19 February 1954: 6, ‘Malan drafting new Negro curbs.’

⁷⁹⁰ Meredith, 1988: 57.

⁷⁹¹ Landis, 1962: 445.

⁷⁹² Ingalls (The New York Times), 19 February 1955: 3, ‘Apartheid seen as two-sided policy.’

⁷⁹³ Lewis, 1984: 6.

⁷⁹⁴ Brunner, 1955: 37.

⁷⁹⁵ Lipton, 1987: 36.

⁷⁹⁶ Bigart (The New York Times), 14 April 1960: 5, ‘Africans finding jobs hard to get.’

said that they were "traitors paving the way for black domination."⁷⁹⁷ However, most White workers were preferred not to have to deal with black competition.⁷⁹⁸

By 1964, the government was desperately recruiting Whites from overseas to carry out railway work that could have been done by many thousands of non-Whites already in the country. In one case, the railway needed to hire 1000 "shunters" and managed to attract just 250 from overseas, but refused to hire any non-Whites, while the postal service, run by White workers almost exclusively, was sinking into chaos and there were massive shortfalls of labour for industry. While non-White unemployment ran high, Dr. Verwoerd's government continued to insist that job reservation was there to stay.⁷⁹⁹

LABOUR WORKERS, UNIONS AND FORCED EMPLOYMENT⁸⁰⁰

In 1918, African workers formed the Industrial and Commercial Workers' Union, and by the mid-1940s about 40% had unionised.⁸⁰¹ As early as 1948 legislation effectively made Africans ineligible for unemployment benefit.⁸⁰² The Workmen's Compensation Act excluded most Africans,⁸⁰³ who could not engage in collective bargaining, form trade unions, or strike.⁸⁰⁴ After a month of unemployment an African could be forcibly relocated to a "homeland" where he had never been, with minimal chance of finding work.⁸⁰⁵ The Broederbond succeeded in uniting various Afrikaner organisations with an interest in keeping the best jobs for Whites, while limiting Africans' opportunities to advance or organise. While there had been some tolerance for mixed white and coloured unions, under Dr. Verwoerd these fell dramatically in number; all new unions registering had to be all white and extant "mixed" unions were required to segregate.⁸⁰⁶ Government employed labour officials could ⁷⁹⁷ Uys, 1989: 71.

⁷⁹⁸ Hepple and Ainslie, 1965: 66.

⁷⁹⁹ Lindsay (The Canberra Times), 2 December 1964: 2, 'Manpower crisis in South Africa.'

⁸⁰⁰ For more about labour workers and forced employment during apartheid see: Ainslie, R. (1977) Masters and Serfs: Farm Labour in South Africa; Hepple, A. (1971) South Africa: Workers under Apartheid; Hepple, A., Ainslie, R. (1965) South Africa's Labour Problems; Morris, M. (1977) State Intervention and the Agricultural Labour Supply, Post 1948; Posel, D. (1993) Influx Control and Labour Markets in the 1950s; Wilson, F. (1972) Labour in the South African Gold Mines 1911-1969; Wilson, F., Kooy, A., Hendrie, D. (eds.) (1977) Farm Labour in South Africa.

Wolpe, H. (1995) Capitalism and Cheap Labour Power in South Africa: From Segregation to Apartheid.

⁸⁰¹ Litvak et al, 1978: 15-17.

⁸⁰² Hepple, 1971: 6; Mitson (Morning Record), 28 January 1965: 6, 'South Africa's barbarous racial oppression makes Mississippi as mild as a tea party.'

⁸⁰³ Landis, 1962: 444.

⁸⁰⁴ Hepple, 1971: 1.

⁸⁰⁵ Holmes, 1964: 4.

⁸⁰⁶ Landis, 1962: 438-439.

terminate any African's employment at any time, even against their employer's wishes.⁸⁰⁷ As Minister of Native Affairs, Dr. Verwoerd refused to meet racially mixed deputations of trade unions.⁸⁰⁸

In 1956, the government passed the Labour Conciliation Act obliging unions to segregate membership and extending job reservation.⁸⁰⁹ In 1960, Dr. Verwoerd threatened striking workers with banishment to a remote part of the country if they continued.⁸¹⁰ Because of the restrictions on African unionisation, registered unions only represented 10% of the working population in 1961.⁸¹¹ Under Dr. Verwoerd, his Minister of Labour stated that "pick and shovel work is the natural work of the Native ... the Native has a special aptitude for repetitive work."⁸¹²

In 1960, the average white wage was £68 per month while the average African was £13 a month.⁸¹³ Demands by African workers for a minimum wage of £1 per day were rejected by Dr. Verwoerd,⁸¹⁴ whose annual salary in 1957 as Minister of Native Affairs was £4,500.⁸¹⁵ In 1965, middle-level manpower, which included clerks, artisans and supervisors, was only 20% Black,⁸¹⁶ while one third of Blacks lived in white farms (another third lived in the cities and another third in the reserves).⁸¹⁷ In 1970, Whites who made up 17% of the population, earned 72% of the annual paid income, while Africans, 70% of the population, earned 19% of that income.⁸¹⁸

Dr. Verwoerd cynically admitted that apartheid in South Africa would be doomed if it allowed policies that would permit a Black man "to improve his skill, draw better wages and provide a better 'market' within 'white' South Africa." His perception was that the well-being of Whites depended on wages for Blacks remaining as low as possible, and controls on influx provided the means to ensure that this happened.⁸¹⁹ He claimed that Blacks were often ⁸⁰⁷ Rubin and Rubin, 1965: 8.

⁸⁰⁸ van der Horst, 1981: 57.

⁸⁰⁹ Hepple, 2011: 51.

⁸¹⁰ Ingalls (The New York Times), 17 April 1960: 1, 'Threat to banish strikers is made by South Africa.'

⁸¹¹ Hepple and Ainslie, 1965: 65.

⁸¹² van den Berghe, 1962: 604.

⁸¹³ Segal, 1960: 5.

⁸¹⁴ The Economist, 26 April 1958: 321, 'Afrikaner triumph.'

⁸¹⁵ The Canberra Times, 25 May 1957: 6, 'Dr. Verwoerd, South Africa's 'evil genius.'

⁸¹⁶ Kane-Berman, 1991: 9.

⁸¹⁷ Venter, 1999: 433.

⁸¹⁸ de Beer, 1984: 32.

⁸¹⁹ Burke, 2006: 89; Posel, 1997: 66.

very happy in circumstances that would have made Whites very unhappy.⁸²⁰ A “socio-economic” survey published in 1962, essentially propaganda for Dr. Verwoerd’s government, maintained that lower salaries to Africans should be seen in the context of what it described as their subsidised lifestyle and pointed out that rents were lower in Bantu areas.⁸²¹

A phenomenon that began during Dr. Verwoerd’s time, but continued afterwards, was that of forced labour. Due to the intensification of the implementation of the pass laws with pass raids taking place every night all over the country,⁸²² a special section of the police was set up to check passes closely, and arrest anyone who broke these laws. This section was known as the “Ghost Squad” and it quickly developed a reputation for springing inspections on Africans at any moment and in any place or time. Thousands of men were apprehended by Ghost Squads, and the Native Commissioner’s Court was not able to manage the volume of arrests, especially in Johannesburg. To manage the numbers, a lot of offenders were pressganged into working on white farms without even going through the corrupt and racist court system. Men were bundled into closed vans and rushed to farms, leaving no trace. They were told that they would be sent to jail for five years if they went through the court system, but that they could get out of trouble by doing some farm work.⁸²³

A number of men who had disappeared in this way were traced and eventually found on potato farms on the Eastern Transvaal area. Some had been killed by foremen and buried in the furrows made when the tractor ploughed the soil. At first, Dr. Verwoerd dismissed reports of workers disappearing as Communist propaganda. When confronted with the evidence, he shifted his ground and blamed “the Jews,” stressing that the farms in question were Jewish-owned. The irony was evident; Verwoerd’s tactics being extremely close to those utilised by the SS in Nazi Germany against the Jews.⁸²⁴ The pass system clearly facilitated White farmers who wished to treat their labourers brutally, up to and including actions that led to deaths.⁸²⁵ One White farmer, Jack Najke, was convicted for whipping a Black labourer to death, and punished by receiving just six strokes.⁸²⁶ In 1953, the United

⁸²⁰ The Economist, 25 February 1950: 435, ‘Racial tension in South Africa.’

⁸²¹ Andrews et al, 1962: 178.

⁸²² Pienaar, 1999: 25.

⁸²³ Mbeki, 1991: 5-6, 167; Helen Suzman quoted in Suttner, 1997: 441.

⁸²⁴ Mbeki, 1991: 5-6, 167.

⁸²⁵ Zug, 2007: 154.

⁸²⁶ Helen Suzman quoted in Suttner, 1997: 441.

Nations/I.L.O. Ad Hoc Committee defined South Africa's labour system as "a system of forced labour."⁸²⁷

Apartheid's laws protecting non-Whites at work, both from accidents and conditions, lagged far behind those of Western industrialised countries. Every year more than two thousands of these workers died in industrial accidents, 800 of them in mining, while more than 250,000 were injured. In addition, each year hundreds of thousands of non-White workers were made ill by exposure without significant protection to dangerous chemicals, asbestos, dust, noise and other substances that are harmful over a period of time.⁸²⁸

A major issue for Dr. Verwoerd was the need to satisfy the increasing demand for labourers for the White farms and businesses. On one hand, he wanted to restrict and reduce the number of non-Whites living in the major cities, but on the other he had to satisfy the Whites' need for Black workers. This contradictory situation was very accurately described by Opposition Leader Sir de Villiers Graaff: "Apartheid has become something like Mohammed's coffin suspended between the heaven of total apartheid and the earth of hard facts of the South African situation, with farmers, industrialists and mining interests demanding more labour."⁸²⁹

In 1964, South Africa withdrew from the International Labour Organisation (ILO), stating that the Organization was hostile to its interests.⁸³⁰ In 1965, the International Agency for Employment used the word "slavery" in connection with South Africa. It declared that the "state of African labour forces bound to a South African economy under the principles of white supremacy" could "barely be differentiated from slavery."⁸³¹ Nelson Mandela said that apartheid led to "the creation of a vast market of cheap labour for mine magnates and Farmers."⁸³²

The same year, Dr. Verwoerd reaffirmed government policy of a South Africa for Whites. The large numbers of Black workers in mines and factories had begun to alarm the White work force. Reassuring them, Dr. Verwoerd stated: "the mere presence of large numbers of Bantu in employment does not amount to integration. It is only when there is ⁸²⁷ Ainslie, 1977: 8.

⁸²⁸ de Beer, 1984: 13, 34.

⁸²⁹ TIME, 3 February 1958: 22, 'South Africa: Mohammed's coffin.'

⁸³⁰ Hepple, 1966: 251.

⁸³¹ Neues Deutschland, 9 September 1966: 7, 'Dr. Verwoerd.'

⁸³² Johns and Hunt Davis, 1991: 30; Levy et al, 2014: 7.

intermingling of those people in social life or in the political or religious spheres that one really gets integration. The mere fact that foreigners are employed in a community or in another country does not constitute integration.”⁸³³ In 1968, G.F. van L. Froneman, Deputy Minister of Justice, Mines and Planning, cynically admitted, “That is in fact the entire basis of our policy as far as the white economy is concerned, namely a system of migratory labour.”⁸³⁴

Marxist commentators such as Harold Wolpe have pointed out that apartheid can be read in terms of capitalism rather than simply in terms of its racist policies. He describes it as “the attempt of the capitalist class to meet the expanding demand for cheap African labour in the era of industrial manufacturing capital,” and “the realisation of the demand of White workers for protection against the resulting increased competition from Black workers.”⁸³⁵ This system led to the creation of a very cheap migrant labour force, and to intense rural poverty and the enablement of extraordinary low wages being paid to Africans in employment in capitalist industries.⁸³⁶

NON-WHITE WOMEN⁸³⁷

Women were often limited in their quest to make a living not just by the segregation and discrimination that all Blacks faced – White women used Black women’s labour to carry out effectively all the domestic work in their suburban homes⁸³⁸ – but also just by being women in a very patriarchal society. Many who settled in urban areas supplemented their income with home-breweries. These “shebeens” were illegal and, under Dr. Verwoerd, police raids increased in an attempt to crack down, threatening women’s ability to live independently and making them more vulnerable to forced removals.⁸³⁹

⁸³³ House of Assembly Debates (Hansard), H. F. Dr. Verwoerd, Vol. 14, 1964, Col. 68; Mzimela, 1980: 121;

⁸³⁴ International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, in co-operation with the United Nations Centre Against Apartheid, 1981: 7.

⁸³⁵ Wolpe, 1995: 427.

⁸³⁶ Wolpe, 1995: 444.

⁸³⁷ For the situation of non-White women under apartheid see Bernstein, H. (1975) For their Triumphs and their Tears: Women in Apartheid South Africa and International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, in co-operation with the United Nations Centre Against Apartheid (1981) Women Under Apartheid.

⁸³⁸ Mkhondo, 1993: 114. In a pamphlet on the correct treatment of Black servants, the city of Johannesburg recommended giving them orders one at a time, as few servants (it claimed) were capable of remembering more than one order, or of carrying them out as requested (Frankel, 1999: 58).

⁸³⁹ Worden, 2000: 114.

Whereas the townships were envisioned as places wherein nuclear families would live, often men left their wives and children behind in "the village" and took up residence with another woman, making it easier for them to obtain a house while keeping a family in their traditional home area. As women's access to urban areas was not controlled, many Black women settled in townships in this way.⁸⁴⁰

Under Dr. Verwoerd's reign as Minister for Native Affairs, these women were considered a significant problem. They were blamed for the decline of traditional patriarchal relationships and, consequently, for moral decay, single motherhood, youth delinquency and high levels of urban crime. Women who were not directly involved in "ministering to white needs," even though they lived in urban areas, were classified as economically redundant. By restricting urban access to women who worked in service or were married to men who had official permission, it was perceived that greater control could be gained over all these issues.⁸⁴¹

However, women were less likely to be treated brutally or imprisoned by the police and, realising this, they became increasingly involved in protest, which was sometimes violent.⁸⁴² Obtaining the requisite passes was an incredible ordeal. Women often waited for hours or even days, and those whose passes were not in order were imprisoned in cold, unfurnished cells. Detailed women were supposed to be overseen by a female "matron" but in practice were generally handled by male officers, who could easily molest them.⁸⁴³ While in theory these laws were in place from the 1950s, many of them were not applied until the 1960s as, in response to a groundswell of protest, Dr. Verwoerd had made a number of concessions earlier.⁸⁴⁴ From 1959, women's protests had acquired a keener focus in rural and urban areas alike.⁸⁴⁵

⁸⁴⁰ Bonner et al, 1993: 24.

⁸⁴¹ Posel, 1997: 8-10.

⁸⁴² Welsh, 2000: 452.

⁸⁴³ Drum, November 1955.

⁸⁴⁴ Posel, 1997: 177.

⁸⁴⁵ The Economist, 5 September 1959: 746, 'The size of a man's hand.'

HEALTH⁸⁴⁶

Arguably one of the most shocking examples of discrimination under apartheid came in the area of health. Most public hospitals were segregated and the non-Whites did not receive the same level of treatment as the Whites.⁸⁴⁷ Government spending was so tilted towards South Africa's Whites that their care standards were among the highest in the world. The greatest health threat to Whites came from their affluence, with conditions such as coronary artery disease. By contrast, their non-White fellow countrymen died in large numbers from diseases associated with poverty. Often malnourished and lacking easy access to treatment, they fell victim to tuberculosis, pneumonia, typhoid and gastroenteritis.⁸⁴⁸

An aggravating factor was that the underfunded Black hospitals were usually vastly overcrowded and understaffed because educational opportunities for Africans were restricted by the Bantu Education Act. A typical example was a Soweto hospital, whose forty-bed wards often held as many as 125 patients.⁸⁴⁹ Any white hospital, by contrast, would have empty beds and an excess of often underemployed medics. Outside of institutional care, urban areas enjoyed greater access to doctors than did rural areas, where Africans mostly lived. The ratio of doctors to the general population was rated at 1 to 1,970, but in the rural areas, this figure dropped as low as 1 doctor to 40,000 people.⁸⁵⁰

Bad hygiene, poverty, under-nourishment or starvation and lack of funding for Black hospitals seriously affected the health of the non-White population. In 1964, the life expectancy of a White was seventy; for a Black it was forty.⁸⁵¹ In the 1970s, at least 23,000 people died of tuberculosis and only 1% of them were White.⁸⁵² However, it was among children that the killer effects of apartheid were most obvious. In 1952, the infant mortality ⁸⁴⁶ For more regarding health during apartheid see Benatar, S.R. (1987) Medicine and Health Care in South Africa; Burke, A. (2006) Mental Health Care during Apartheid in South Africa: An Illustration of How 'Science' Can Be Abused; Bush, E. (1987) The Struggle for Health; de Beer, C. (1984) The South African Disease: Apartheid Health and Health Services; Jeeves, A. (2000) Health, Surveillance and Community: South Africa's Early Experiment with Medical Reform in the 1940s and 1950s; Mphahlele, M. (1981) The Plight of the Homelands Health Services; Nightingale et al. (1990) Apartheid Medicine: Health and human Rights in South Africa; Phatlane, S.N. (2006) Poverty, Health and Disease in the Era of High Apartheid: South Africa, 1948-1976 (Ph.D thesis); Price, M. (1987) Health Care as an Instrument of Apartheid policy in South Africa; Susser, M., Cherry, V.P. (1982) Health and Health Care under Apartheid; van Rensburg, H.C.J. and Mans, A. (1982) Profile of Disease and Health Care in South Africa.

⁸⁴⁷ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

⁸⁴⁸ Phatlane, 2006.

⁸⁴⁹ Susser and Cherry, 1982: 470.

⁸⁵⁰ Susser and Cherry, 1982: 469.

⁸⁵¹ Holmes, 1964: 4.

⁸⁵² de Beer, 1984: 1-2.

rate for White babies was 34 in 1,000 live births, while that for Coloureds was 140. No figure was given for Black babies, but it was certainly significantly higher than for the Coloureds.⁸⁵³ In 1960, the infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births for Whites was 29.6, for Asians 59.6, for Blacks 95 and for Coloureds 128.6.⁸⁵⁴

Assuming the Black baby survived at birth, it faced a strong possibility of contracting tuberculosis, but its biggest threat was from lack of nourishment. Up to 40% of pre-school children suffered from malnutrition⁸⁵⁵ and between 15,000 and 30,000 died each year from starvation or illnesses related to lack of nutrition.⁸⁵⁶ About 50% of Black children died under five,⁸⁵⁷ while the same figure for White children was just 5%.⁸⁵⁸ In addition, gastroenteritis killed 10% of the infant population,⁸⁵⁹ with thousands of other succumbing to measles and gastroenteritis, conditions which could be cured by timely treatment.⁸⁶⁰ Dr. Verwoerd's reply in 1958 to all this was that his government spent $8.61 per head per year on the health and education of Africans, while the then Belgian Congo spent $1.30 and India 3 cents.⁸⁶¹

Of course, Dr. Verwoerd and the Government were not the only ones who supported segregation. In the 1950s, the South African Psychology Association (SAPA) refused to accept Black members; and SAPA president A.B. van den Merwe, along with two other prominent members in La Grange and J.M. du Toit, went personally to Dr. Verwoerd (a psychologist himself), and asked him "to extend the powers of the Group Areas Act (Act No. 7 of 1957) to enable the banning of meetings where blacks and whites were to confer together." They even suggested legislation that would require racial separation in all associations.⁸⁶² When Blacks were finally allowed to join the Association in 1962, several White members resigned and formed their own Whites-only association, PIRSA.⁸⁶³ The same year, Dr. Verwoerd threatened to withdraw subsidies from racially integrated and scientific ⁸⁵³ Christian Action, 1955: 25.

⁸⁵⁴ Nightingale et al, 1990: 2099.

⁸⁵⁵ Susser and Cherry, 1982: 457.

⁸⁵⁶ de Beer, 1984: 12.

⁸⁵⁷ Kaffir Boy: The True Story of a Black Youth's Coming of Age in Apartheid South Africa (2006) by Marc Mathabane provides the reader with a painfully accurate account of the author's difficult childhood growing up in apartheid South Africa of the 60s and 70s.

⁸⁵⁸ Holmes, 1964: 4.

⁸⁵⁹ Susser and Cherry, 1982: 457.

⁸⁶⁰ de Beer, 1984: 12.

⁸⁶¹ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, 'Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid'; TIME, 15 September 1958: 26, 'South Africa: God's man.'

⁸⁶² Cooper et al, 1990: 5-6.

⁸⁶³ Nicholas, 1990: 51.

associations unless they amended their constitutions to exclude Blacks. However, his threat was met with resistance from most of the associations and did not go through.⁸⁶⁴

Finally, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) argued that “the health sector, through apathy and acceptance of the status quo and acts of omission, allowed the creation of an environment in which the health of millions of South Africans was neglected, even at times actively compromised and in which violations of moral and ethical codes of practice were frequent, facilitating violations of human rights.”⁸⁶⁵

PETTY APARTHEID

The many laws that underlay petty apartheid have also been described as micro-apartheid, distinguishing them from meso-apartheid (the separation of residential zones in urban areas) and macro-apartheid (movements towards future ethnically homogeneous nations).⁸⁶⁶ The “petty apartheid” rules covered by the Reservation of Separate Amenities Act in 1953, when Dr. Verwoerd was Minister for Native Affairs, which legislated for complete segregation in all public amenities where Blacks and Whites might interact, restricting Blacks’ access to beaches, restaurants, hotels, schools, libraries, cinemas, theatres, public transport and sporting facilities.⁸⁶⁷

The Act also legislated that the facilities for non-Whites had to be “adequate,” rather than equivalent in quality.⁸⁶⁸ Soon, there were “whites only” signs all over South Africa,⁸⁶⁹ and Blacks were arrested for such crimes as ordering coffee from a White waitress in a railway waiting room, or stepping across a partition into the “white” side.⁸⁷⁰ Segregation on trains was not new, but the laws associated with it became ever more firmly enforced; in 1955, for example, an African who ran for a departing train and jumped onto a “white” coach was knocked unconscious onto the platform.⁸⁷¹ Special days were set aside for non-Whites to visit leisure destinations such as zoos, museums and agricultural shows.⁸⁷²

⁸⁶⁴ Nicholas, 1990: 54.

⁸⁶⁵ Nicholas, 2014: 19.

⁸⁶⁶ Adam, 1971: 68.

⁸⁶⁷ Beinart, 2001: 152; Clark and Worger, 2011: 52; Guelke, 2005: 27; Le May, 1995: 208; Marquard, 1969: 75; 127; The New York Times, 20 June 1990, ‘Apartheid law repealed’; Worden, 2000: 108.

⁸⁶⁸ Carter, 1954: 307.

⁸⁶⁹ Beinart, 2001: 152; Clark and Worger, 2011: 52; Le May, 1995: 208; Marquard, 1969: 75: 127.

⁸⁷⁰ The New York Times, 28 March 1953, ‘Ruling on Negroes held Malan again: Decision barring segregation.’

⁸⁷¹ Pirie, 1992: 688.

⁸⁷² International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975b: 11.

In 1957, when the expanded Native Laws Amendment Act was passed, after Dr. Verwoerd had piled "statute after discriminatory statute" on,⁸⁷³ opposition was raised to a clause that stated that "no African shall attend any church or other religious service" if his presence constituted a "nuisance." At this point even the intensely racist Reformed Church objected, stating that the government did not have the right to interfere with the freedom of churches, and Dr. Verwoerd agreed to reword the bill to clarify that it was not "intended to interfere with the freedom of the individual to worship... so long as such freedom was not misused to the disturbance of good order in the community."⁸⁷⁴

Dr. Verwoerd insisted that Blacks should only enter white churches if they had been hired as janitors.⁸⁷⁵ Non-Whites could not attend "white" churches, and in some black areas all denominations except the Dutch Reformed Church (which supported apartheid) were banned.⁸⁷⁶ Dr. Verwoerd pleaded with the Dutch Reformed Church not to unite with any other churches (which mostly fiercely opposed the ruling)⁸⁷⁷ on this matter, fearing that this would provide an "in" to the anti-apartheid activists.⁸⁷⁸

The Native Laws Amendment Act also suggested that the government had the right to prevent or break up any inter-racial gathering that might be constituted by anyone as a "nuisance." This, "might amount to a ban on a particular flat or house where people made a point of holding mixed parties which might be an annoyance to their neighbours or cause the concentration in a White area of numbers of Africans,"⁸⁷⁹ and it gave the government the right to ban Africans from any area it wished.⁸⁸⁰

There was also extensive social segregation. Schools, hospitals and clinics, recreational facilities, and so forth were segregated. In workplaces, where contact across the colour line was unavoidable, canteens, toilets and even elevators were segregated with the goal of keeping contact between Blacks and Whites to an absolute minimum,⁸⁸¹ with segregated residential areas, schools, medical facilities, recreational facilities, transport and ⁸⁷³ The Economist, 17 August 1957: 555, 'Signs of change in South Africa.'

⁸⁷⁴ Carter, 1958: 117.

⁸⁷⁵ The New York Times, 28 March 1953, 'Ruling on Negroes held Malan again: Decision barring segregation.'

⁸⁷⁶ Landis, 1962: 453.

⁸⁷⁷ Kruger, 1969: 310.

⁸⁷⁸ The Economist, 1 June 1957: 795, 'Strydom scorns the doubters.'

⁸⁷⁹ Ballinger, 1969: 356-357.

⁸⁸⁰ The Economist, 23 June 1956: 1199, 'Black session in South Africa.'

⁸⁸¹ Lipton, 1987: 36-37.

most other public amenities. The intention - and the effect - was to reduce social contact between Blacks and Whites to the irreducible minimum.

Under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister, the South African authorities continued to “crack down” on segregation, and the expanding rights given to the police and civil service made these “petty” laws a major disturbance to the lives of uncountable Black and Coloured South Africans. In his efforts to extend apartheid to every single aspect of South African life, Dr. Verwoerd often confronted his people with absurd situations. These manifestations of extreme pettiness were known colloquially as “pinpricks.” They included the government’s refusal to allow Breyten Breytenbach⁸⁸², a noted Afrikaans poet and author, who had married a Vietnamese woman in contravention of the Immorality Act, to visit his wife.⁸⁸³ Among many other absurdities were:

- The banning of a traditional annual performance of Handel’s Messiah, because it was performed by a black choir with a White conductor and white orchestra.⁸⁸⁴
- In 1960, he warned South Africans that they would be guilty of disloyalty if they wished to travel to Ghana and obeyed the law there which required them to sign a declaration against racial segregation.⁸⁸⁵
- In 1960, Louis Armstrong was not granted a visa to travel to South Africa, as it was considered dangerous for South African Blacks to see a Black American performer who was as widely respected as a musician.⁸⁸⁶
- In 1960, his Government published regulations “to insure as far as possible that no White would receive a blood transfusion from an African donor and vice versa.”⁸⁸⁷
- In 1965 an Indian baby born to South African parents holidaying in India was forbidden permission to enter South Africa because of the ban on South African immigration. The baby was unwell and there was nobody in India to care for him.⁸⁸⁸ ⁸⁸² A world renowned South African writer, poet and painter. While in France in the early 1960s, he got married to a French woman of Vietnamese ancestry. He was not able to return to South Africa and live with her as mixed marriages were prohibited (Brookes, 1968: 187-192). For his anti-apartheid activities, he was convicted of sabotage and jailed for nine years (Abel, 1995: 16). For more about Breytenbach see his 1984 memoir The True Confessions of an Albino Terrorist.

⁸⁸³ Brookes, 1968: 187-192.

⁸⁸⁴ Brookes, 1968: 187-192.

⁸⁸⁵ The New York Times, 15 August 1960: 7, ‘South Africans warned: Dr. Verwoerd hints penalties for any who take Ghana Oath.’

⁸⁸⁶ Sunday Tribune, 25 September 1960: 1, ‘Apartheid ban on Louis Armstrong.’

⁸⁸⁷ The New York Times, 21 May 1960: 11, ‘Dr. Verwoerd asserts God saved his life.’

⁸⁸⁸ The New York Times, 7 July 1965: 34, ‘South Africa bars Indian baby.’

- When the film Oceans 11 came out, starring Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin and Sammy Davis Jr., publicity images excised Davis Jr. from the original photograph.⁸⁸⁹
- The law about black ingress to cities had to be bent to accommodate Black milkmen as their inability to deliver milk was driving up costs and infuriating White housewives.⁸⁹⁰
- By 1966, Dr. Verwoerd had succeeded in forcing charitable organisations to exert all their efforts along strict apartheid lines.⁸⁹¹
- Dr. Verwoerd expressed his opposition to the film dramatization of Othello, starring Laurence Olivier, being shown, feeling that it was inappropriate for South Africans to see a film featuring individuals of different races acting together.⁸⁹²
- Dr. Verwoerd was outraged when the United States embassy invited guests of all races to its Fourth of July party in 1965,⁸⁹³ when the US government refused to rule out hiring non-Whites to work in its two space-observations stations in South Africa,⁸⁹⁴ and when the decision was taken not to let an aircraft carrier berth in Cape Town rather than observe Dr. Verwoerd's demands about non-White Navy members.⁸⁹⁵

SPORTS⁸⁹⁶

Throughout Verwoerd's tenure in government, White athletes were barred from competing against non-Whites.⁸⁹⁷ An integrated approach to apartheid in sports first formed under Strijdom's government, with Dr. Verwoerd as Minister for Native Affairs, and the official new policy was announced in 1956.⁸⁹⁸ International teams travelling to play in South Africa had to be White, although South African teams would play mixed teams overseas if necessary. Non-White athletes from outside South Africa would play non-white South

⁸⁸⁹ Mitson (Morning Record), 28 January 1965: 6, 'South Africa's barbarous racial oppression makes Mississippi as mild as a tea party.'

⁸⁹⁰ The New York Times, 19 July 1957: 12. 'African law modified.'

⁸⁹¹ The Cape Times, 21 October 1961: n.p. 'Major charities to adopt apartheid.'

⁸⁹² Boshoff, 1974: 228; Kenney, 1980: 263.

⁸⁹³ Hepple, 1967: 201; McKay, 1966b: 42-43; The New York Times, 27 June 1965: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd scores US guest lists.'

⁸⁹⁴ Dugard, 1978: 60-61; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 28 June 1965: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd race bar challenges US at space tracking stations'; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 3 July 1965: 2, 'Dispute on negroes is avoided by US and South Africa'; McKay, 1966b: 42-43.

⁸⁹⁵ Hepple, 1967: 201; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 18 August 1965: 9, 'Dr. Verwoerd denies he is goading US.'

⁸⁹⁶ For a detailed account of sports during apartheid see Booth, D. (1998) The Race Game. Sport and Politics in South Africa; Brickhill, J. (1976) Race against Race: South Africa's "Multi-national" Sport Fraud; de Broglio, C. (1970) Apartheid in Sport; Lapchick, R.E. (1979) South Africa: Sport and Apartheid Politics; Rademeyer, C. (2014) Entrenching Apartheid in South African Sport, 1948-1980.

⁸⁹⁷ TIME, 26 August 1966: 20, 'South Africa: The great white laager.'

⁸⁹⁸ Rademeyer, 2014: 121-122.

African teams, non-White sporting bodies in South Africa would have to seek recognition through white channels and white athletes would be denied passports if they intended to challenge these laws.⁸⁹⁹ In 1958 the formation of the South African Sports Association, supposedly to coordinate non-white sporting efforts and represent non-white sports people, entrenched apartheid in this area.⁹⁰⁰

Under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister, apartheid in sport became more widespread and deeply entrenched. His decision to force a departure from the Commonwealth denied athletes the opportunity to compete in the Commonwealth Games, and his insistence on following apartheid in sport to the letter resulted in rising opposition from foreign teams and nations. Although non-White foreigners were supposed to be able to travel to South Africa to compete against non-White athletes, they were routinely denied visas.⁹⁰¹

Sporting events became a means through which ordinary Blacks could protest, by attending international matches and supporting the visitors.⁹⁰² This led to the barring of non-Whites from most stadiums, formalised in 1965 with an extension of the Group Areas Act.⁹⁰³ Black sports organisations were ordered to segregate their membership. In 1960, Dr. Verwoerd refused permission to the New Zealand rugby team to enter South Africa because it was an integrated team with Maori players; demonstrations in New Zealand soon followed.⁹⁰⁴ He affirmed this position in 1965, also clarifying that he considered it fine for an all-Star South African team to play against teams with Maoris while in New Zealand.⁹⁰⁵ Rugby was considered to be South Africa's national game.⁹⁰⁶

In 1962, Japanese swimmers and athletes were granted honorary white status so that they could compete in South Africa because the government was wooing the Japanese trade.⁹⁰⁷ In 1963, an Indian golfer won the Natal open, beating 113 White players. He had to be awarded his prize outside in the rain, as the clubhouse did not permit entry to non-Whites. The result was not mentioned on any of the shows of the South African Broadcasting Corporation, which had cancelled coverage of the event on learning that one of the ⁸⁹⁹ Rademeyer, 2014: 121-122.

⁹⁰⁰ Brickhill, 1976: 9.

⁹⁰¹ Rademeyer, 2014: 123-124.

⁹⁰² Lapchick, 1979: 158.

⁹⁰³ Brickhill, 1976: 7.

⁹⁰⁴ Beinart, 2001: 230; Giliomee, 2011: 530; Marquard, 1969: 138.

⁹⁰⁵ Brickhill, 1976: 11; The New York Times, 7 September 1965: 4, 'Dr. Verwoerd affirms Maori athlete bar.'

⁹⁰⁶ Calpin, 1968: 155.

⁹⁰⁷ de Broglio, 1970: n.p

contestants was not White.⁹⁰⁸ South Africa was banned from the Tokyo Olympics in 1964,⁹⁰⁹ after a number of years of discussions on the part of the Olympic Committee.⁹¹⁰ Dr. Verwoerd responded to the growing international attention with sport by claiming that sport was not a political matter, while arguing that the principles of national sovereignty allowed South Africa to pass laws about domestic affairs without any interference or criticism from overseas.⁹¹¹

PROPAGANDA

Since Malan's government in 1948, the National Party had operated an Information Office designed to broadcast propaganda lauding South Africa and its apartheid efforts, largely for international attention. The Information Office's budget was expanded hugely under Dr. Verwoerd. From 1962 it had its own Cabinet Minister and the number of employees grew from 59 to 378, with offices in South Africa and New York. They produced a monthly magazine, films, booklets and pamphlets that showed South Africa in a very flattering light. A magazine called Bantu was aimed mostly at South African readers and dedicated to Bantu affairs (as stated above, it was distributed for free to Bantu schools for the use of teachers and students). The film section of the Office was very successful, even winning numerous international awards for its features.⁹¹²

Dr. Verwoerd himself intensified an extraordinary, almost surreal, propaganda campaign intended to convince native Blacks and the outside world that non-Whites also supported apartheid and that he was seen by the Blacks as the "saviour of the black races." The June 1955 issue of Bantu ran a poetic eulogy to Dr. Verwoerd, evidently scripted by a Black admirer. The Department strongly denied that it had been an officially sponsored initiative and maintained that it was simply a Black man's initiative to show his gratitude to Dr. Verwoerd:⁹¹³

⁹⁰⁸ Conley (The New York Times), 15 October 1963: 64, 'Apartheid in sports.'

⁹⁰⁹ de Broglio, 1970: 9.

⁹¹⁰ Honey, 2000: 178.

⁹¹¹ Booth, 1998: 88.

⁹¹² Hepple, 1967: 107-108; McKay, 1966: 7.

⁹¹³ Loveland, 1999: 357.

Dr. Verwoerd

Minister of Native Affairs

I

Dr. Verwoerd, thou art the Shepherd of the black races,
Thou art the defender of the Bantu, our rock, our mountain, Thou art our refuge and our shield.

The mountain that saves us, our refuge,

The Saviour who rescued us at time of need.

II

We the Bantu boast and say: 'Glory unto thee Dr. Verwoerd,'

And to all we are the defenders of the Bantu:

We were amidst the seas of fear,

Fearing the government of the malefactors, trapped in the nets of the hypocrites. We were in fear.

III

We were cornered and we called the Government- the N.A.D.,

We called to the Government in Pretoria and it hearkened unto us,

Dr. Verwoerd, thou hast answered our prayers,

And saved us when the canning had risen against us,

Thou rescued and helped us because thou loved us.

IV

Thou showed us compassion because we have no guilt,

Thou led us because there was no one to lead us in our works,

We now sit in the glory of thy good works,

We should never forsake thy laws, for they bring Plenty, wisdom and knowledge.

V

Dr. Verwoerd, though art with us! Glory unto thee our redeemer, Praises be unto Dr. Verwoerd, the defender of the Bantu,
He that helped the chiefs by giving them good laws,
He that gave schools proper education,
Because he knew what we need and we could not manage.

H. Kharibe.

This poetic rhapsody provoked some derision, and Dr. Verwoerd quickly claimed that he had no hand in its publication.⁹¹⁴ On another occasion, when Dr. Verwoerd was still Minister for Native Affairs, he apparently received a letter from a Black supporter that read, in part: "We, the people of the Reserves, are very happy, because through the government's policy we will be in a position to trade among our own people and practice as doctors and practitioners among our own people under the trusteeship of the Minister of Native Affairs." Naturally the letter was publicized in an effort to show the world that Black South Africans supported Dr. Verwoerd's policies.⁹¹⁵ Although its authenticity has not been debated, it should surely be viewed with scepticism.

It is interesting to note that Dr. Verwoerd had banned television in South Africa, comparing it with "atomic bombs and poison gas," claiming that it was a "corrupting medium" and something "noxious," even while he commissioned high-quality propaganda to be shown on overseas TV stations.⁹¹⁶ In 1960 Dr. Verwoerd warned that "the effect on our cultural life, particularly of the largely American influences which would go hand in hand with television, is not a matter that one can treat lightly."⁹¹⁷ Bernard Cross, lecturer of Communication and Media at Paris West University Nanterre La Défense, has said that ⁹¹⁵ Dvorin, 1952: 156.

⁹¹⁴ Hepple, 1967: 108-109

⁹¹⁶ Hughes, 1961: 171; Leonard, 1983: 164; Nixon, 1994: 43; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, 'Dr. Verwoerd stabbed to death at his desk in Parliament.'

⁹¹⁷ Nixon, 1994: 43.

“under Dr. Verwoerd the television became the arch-enemy of Afrikaner interests and nationalist politics.”⁹¹⁸

Dr. Verwoerd did not want a window through which South Africans could view the rest of the world, and perhaps find their views challenged. The television might have led ordinary people of all colours to question the foundations of apartheid even more. In 1958, the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, Albert Hertzog, stressed that the government was firmly opposed to television, pointing out that parents had no way to control which shows were aired in their houses, and that there was no effective way for the government to control TV broadcasting. The National Party stated that modern things were not necessarily desirable, and that the government had a responsibility to guard its people from physical and “spiritual” dangers and that TV would “bring chaos to South African life.” As most TV programming would come from overseas, through English, the National Party had long felt that it would pose a threat to the cultural hegemony they strove to establish.⁹¹⁹ Whites felt that television would provide a bad example to Blacks,⁹²⁰ and conservative commentators in the US tended to agree, claiming that without television there would have been no civil rights movement there.⁹²¹

In 1960, Dr. Verwoerd gave a speech in Parliament in which he elucidated the three reasons he considered central to the argument against allowing television in South Africa. He stated that TV should be kept out until enough research had been done into the topic of its potential “evil” impacts, both physical and mental, and on the nation in cultural terms. He felt that it was pointless introducing TV, which was inessential, before the medium had been developed further at the expense of other countries. He also insisted that the costs of creating programmes was too high, and would require a tax on sales, licence fees, and very substantial government subsidies. He could not allow an independent (i.e. not state controlled) station, as this risked South Africans being exposed to low-quality programming from overseas, and excluding some of the South African population (those in remote areas) from watching TV that their taxes were subsidising.⁹²²

⁹¹⁸ Cros, 1996: 117.

⁹¹⁹ Orlik, 1970: 245-246.

⁹²⁰ TIME, 10 May 1971, ‘South Africa: Apartheid television.’

⁹²¹ Nixon, 1999.

⁹²² Orlik, 1970: 247; Under pressure from the public, and amid embarrassment that other, less advanced, African nations already had television (Cros, 1996: 124), television was finally introduced in 1976 on the grounds that it would be better for the government to provide it and control its than for people to use satellite dishes and watch unapproved programming from elsewhere, perhaps Russia (Nixon, 1999, n.p.).

Under Piet Meyer, the head of the State Information Broadcasting Corporation, South Africa was presented as a paradise in which all the races lived happily, but separately. This image was projected by Dr. Verwoerd's powerful publicity machine. Press officers worked in international capitals around the world, and the government churned out publications and films.⁹²³ Many people outside South Africa, including opponents of the apartheid system, had minimal access to the reality of how South Africa worked. Apartheid propaganda and the "pro-business Press" in South Africa colluded to prevent the truth coming to light.⁹²⁴

The SABC acted as both sword and shield for apartheid, promoting the ideology as a form of governance that was widely accepted, while blocking the ears of South Africans to criticism of the government. By switching to FM broadcasting, the Corporation ensured that its listeners heard little of the international outcry that arose after the Sharpeville massacre and without competitors, it generally shaped and distorted the news as it pleased. When Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated in 1968, there was mourning across the world, not least in the black townships of South Africa. The SABC chose to present his death in blatantly racist terms. Its 7 a.m. news bulletin said, "Widespread rioting has broken out in the United States following the assassination of the Negro civil rights agitator, Martin Luther King."⁹²⁵ Throughout the 1960s and beyond, the International Defence and Aid Fund for South Africa provided financial assistance to political prisoners and their lawyers. In 1965, the South African Broadcasting Corporation claimed that the IDAF had links to saboteurs in South Africa. IDAF challenged the government and the SABC to support its smear with evidence. Unsurprisingly, none was provided.⁹²⁶

The South African Department of Information spent a fortune trying to convince the rest of the world that it had misunderstood South Africa and apartheid. Publications such as 1962's South Africa Speaks and in 1963 South African Realities presented the government's take on apartheid, portraying South Africa as a stable, multi-cultural country full of happy citizens co-existing on a separate-but-equal basis. It consistently portrayed Blacks as "a fortunate people with a higher income and standard of living, and better social and educational services" than Africans elsewhere, while also spreading the false idea, central to Afrikaans folk history, that Whites arrived in South Africa before Blacks. It devoted great ⁹²³ Hughes, 1961: 171.

⁹²⁴ Clark, 1986: 1.

⁹²⁵ Daniel and Vale, 2009: 140.

⁹²⁶ IDAF, Fund under fire, Information Service Manual, n.d: xv-xviii.

effort to stressing the notion that whatever problems South Africa had were attributed to Communism, with apartheid posited as a crucial tool in fighting this menace.⁹²⁷

These efforts were, for a long time, largely successful. Many people outside South Africa, even those who opposed apartheid, had no access to reliable information about what society was really like there. The propagandists and their allies, in the form of the big-business interests and media in powerful countries like the United States, all played a crucial role in preventing the whole truth from becoming better known.⁹²⁸

It should be noted that the South African Department of Information did not limit its campaign to presenting a positive picture of South Africa, but, like the SABC, it sought to smear organizations which contested apartheid. For example, in 1978 it labelled Amnesty International as "Amnesty for Terrorism" after that organization reported widely on the use of torture by the apartheid police and in South African prisons. The implication was that by taking such a stance, Amnesty International was supporting terrorists.⁹²⁹

The South African authorities felt strongly about winning the Americans over to their project, and this was a major thrust of the propaganda effort, which stressed how well American investments could do in the South African economy.⁹³⁰ For this purpose, in September 1966, a powerful $6,500,000 radio transmitter, Voice of South Africa, started broadcasting programmes, reaching audiences as distant as the United States.⁹³¹ Dr. Verwoerd benefited from the "soft" propaganda provided by newspapers sympathetic to apartheid; in 1960, one "housewife's survey" was published in the Pretoria News that maintained that Blacks "didn't want equality" anyway, and were generally happy with the reference book system so long as they were free to pursue their own traditions and not restricted "too much" in their movements.⁹³²

Up until his death, Dr. Verwoerd was involved in ramping up the propaganda effort. Eschel Rhodie, the son of a prison director who had joined the Information Service in the 1950s, had worked in propaganda from offices in New York and The Hague, and claimed to have been helped by Americans whom he believed to belong to the CIA. Rhodie stated that ⁹²⁷ McKay, 1966: 13, 16.

⁹²⁸ Clark, 1986: 1.

⁹²⁹ South African Department of Information, 1978.

⁹³⁰ McKay, 1966: 8-9, 41.

⁹³¹ Frye, 1970: 101.

⁹³² Pretoria News, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Natives do not want equality.'

these helpful Americans had explained the importance of “owning” the media and of infiltrating student groups and political movements to get to know the people at the top and get them onside.⁹³³ After Dr. Verwoerd’s death the propaganda war under Rhoodie continued apace.

TABLE OF DR. VERWOERD’S MAJOR LEGISLATION

- The Group Areas Act (1950)
- The Immorality Amendment Act (1950 and 1957)
- The Population Registration Act (1950)
- The Preventing of Public Squatting Act (1951)
- The Native Building Workers Act (1951)
- The Bantu Authorities Act (1951)
- The Abolition of Passes and Coordination of Documents Act (Pass Laws Act) (1952)
- The Native Laws Amendment Bill (1952, 1957 and 1963)
- The Reservation of Separate Amenities Act (1953)
- The Native Labour (settlement of disputes) Act (1953)
- The Bantu Education Act (1953)
- The Natives Resettlement Act (1954)
- The Labour Conciliation Act (1956)
- The Riotous Assemblies Act (1956)
- The Separate University Education Bill (1957)
- The Promotion of Bantu Self-Government Act (1958)
- Bantu Investment Corporation Act (1958)
- The Extension of University Education Act (1959)
- The Prisons Act (1959) (Discussed later in this chapter)
- The Unlawful Organisations Act (1960) (Discussed later in this chapter)
- The Urban Bantu Councils Act (1961)
- The Defence Further Amendment Act (1961) (Discussed later in this chapter)
- The Sabotage Act (1962)
- The Coloured Persons Education Act (1963)

⁹³³ Leonard, 1983: 264-265.

- The Publications and Entertainments Act (1963) (Discussed later in this chapter)
- The 90-Days Act (1963)
- The Customs and Excise Act (1964) (Discussed later in this chapter)
- The Indian Education Act (1965)
- The Bantu Homelands Development Corporations Act (1965)
- The 180-Days Act (1965)

RESISTANCE TO DR. VERWOERD'S APARTHEIDINTERNAL RESISTANCE

According to Dr. Neville Edward Alexander, the period of primary resistance to white supremacy started on the “fateful day in the first week of February 1488 when the first Khoer herder threw the first stone at the Portuguese buccaneers commanded by Bartolomeu Dias⁹³⁴ in Bahia Dos Vequeiros.”⁹³⁵ Resistance to apartheid began shortly after the National Party came to power. On October 16, 1948, 3,000 members of the Garment Workers’ Union, mostly women, gathered at City Hall in Johannesburg to receive a report on their right to work no more than a forty-hour week as a result of union efforts. Several hundred Nationalist members of the White Workers’ Protection Union, mentioned above, arrived on the scene to break up the meeting, with their leader shouting, “Today blood must flow.” They assaulted people with weapons including bicycle chains and knuckle-dusters, prompting comparisons of “Nazi Germany.” When the Union complained to the Minister of Justice, Charles Robberts Swart, he attempted to take down the Union, and not its attackers.⁹³⁶

The South African Congress of Trade Unions strove to decouple race and unionism, while others worked to preserve white privilege.⁹³⁷ Black African nationalists of varying political hues had ramped up their demands, and now sought “an end to segregation and trusteeship, the abolition of racial discrimination in all its forms, political and constitutional equality and a common citizenship which recognized that South Africa belonged to all its people.”⁹³⁸ The following years rioting spread, and became more focussed on anger with apartheid, throughout 1949 and 1950.⁹³⁹ However, it was under Dr. Verwoerd that resistance to apartheid took its modern form.

⁹³⁴ (1451-1500) A Portuguese explorer; the first European to sail to the tip of South Africa when in 1487 sailed from Lisbon to open the route to India. He rounded the Cape of Good Hope in 1488, but had to return to Lisbon when his men staged a mutiny (Newitt, 2010: 135).

⁹³⁵ Alexander, 2013: 3-4. Dr. Alexander (1936-2012) a teacher, author, banned person, was a highly educated revolutionary and a promoter of the idea of a multi-lingual South Africa who spent ten years in Robben Island (Magnien, 2012).

⁹³⁶ Forman and Sachs, 1957: 162.

⁹³⁷ Lambert, 1993: 278.

⁹³⁸ Barber, 1999: 132.

⁹³⁹ Troup, 1975: 329-330.

THE ANC

The war years saw the consolidation of black opposition. During the 1940s, the African National Congress, under the leadership of Dr. Alfred Bitini Xuma, had developed a distinct identity, while open to working with other black organisations. In 1943, it had published a new constitution stressing the need for Africans to participate in the affairs of state, and considered opening membership up to people of any race.⁹⁴⁰ The ANC remained essentially pacifist, with the view that it was preferable to become a “martyr” than to kill.⁹⁴¹

Important figures in the ANC during Dr. Verwoerd's reign included Albert Luthuli, Raymond Mahlaba, Nelson Mandela, Joe Matthews, Joe Modise, Walter Sisulu and Joe Slovo (also a member of the Communist Party).⁹⁴² Luthuli retained his anti-violence standpoint, but in the 1950s he wrote: “every so often the yoke becomes unendurable, something explodes, and for a while a blind resentment takes control,” as he wondered why, given the huge burden endured by Blacks, more did not struggle more violently.⁹⁴³

Whereas the South African National Congress had existed since the early twentieth century, it was formally renamed the African National Congress (ANC) in 1923, when it adopted its green, black and gold flag and the slogan “God Bless Africa.”⁹⁴⁴ In its earlier years, the organisation lacked focus and was often less influential than the Industrial and Commercial Workers' Union of South Africa (ICU), with its more radical, labour-centred focus.⁹⁴⁵ The ANC was a direct response to the growing exclusion of Blacks from any political favour, and was initially peopled largely by members of the small, emergent middle class of Africans educated in missionary schools,⁹⁴⁶ whose initial interest was in protecting the rights of chiefs and African professionals.⁹⁴⁷ While the leadership of the ANC was exclusively male, many of its members, generally the “most steadfast,” were women.⁹⁴⁸

Resistance gained a sharper focus in the 1930s when a range of bodies came together to form the All African Convention. Here some future leaders of the struggle against ⁹⁴⁰ Barber, 1999: 126-127.

⁹⁴¹ Seegers, 1996: 119.

⁹⁴² Van den Berghe: 1967: 177.

⁹⁴³ Mufson, 1990: 81.

⁹⁴⁴ Clark and Worger, 2011: 24.

⁹⁴⁵ Beinart, 2001: 103-104.

⁹⁴⁶ Thompson, 2001: 156.

⁹⁴⁷ Marx, 1992: 33.

⁹⁴⁸ Gerhart, 1978: 214.

apartheid, including Nelson Mandela and Oliver Tambo,⁹⁴⁹ first experienced political activism.⁹⁵⁰ In 1942, the African National Congress Youth League (ANCYL),⁹⁵¹ part of the ANC, was founded⁹⁵² under the leadership of Anton Muziwake Lembede.⁹⁵³ It was composed primarily of educated young Black men (including Walter Sisulu, Nelson Mandela and Oliver Tambo),⁹⁵⁴ and comparisons were made between the ANCYL and the role of the Broederbond to the National Party. The ANCYL quickly became more radical than the ANC, with a strong socialist, but not communist, stance. Its goal was to create a strong African national identity and to reject oppression, with a focus on self-determination. It pushed members of the ANC to adopt a more revolutionary stance.⁹⁵⁵ It published a manifesto stating that “The African regards Civilisation as the common heritage of all Mankind and claims as full a right to make his contribution to its advancement and to live free as any White South African.”⁹⁵⁶

In 1946, some core members of the ANCYL, including Nelson Mandela, Walter Sisulu and Oliver Tambo, led by lawyer Anton Lembede, came together to reform the ANC, which the Youth League described as “a body of gentlemen with clean hands.”⁹⁵⁷ In 1948, they issued their Basic Policy document, stressing that while minorities should have rights, Africans had “a primary inherent and inalienable right to Africa.” The ANC, while not a communist organisation, worked with the Communist Party of South Africa (CPSA) where their interests coincided. Russia had decreed that South African colonialism was unique, because the White colonists were based within the colony itself, and that the first step towards establishing a socialist state was to found a native republic. On this basis, the CPSA was prepared to work with the ANC and set aside a class struggle for now. They had a ⁹⁴⁹ (1917-1993) A teacher and lawyer, and legal partner to Nelson Mandela. He was one of the most important revolutionaries of the anti-apartheid struggle. He served as President of the ANC from 1967 to 1991 and spent 30 years in exile (1960-1990) gaining international support for the anti-apartheid movement and organising the struggle (Callinicos, 2005). For more about Tambo see: Callinicos, L. (2011) Oliver Tambo: His Life and Legacy 1917-1993; Callinicos, L. (2005) Oliver Tambo: Beyond the Engeli Mountains; Johns, S., Hunt Davis, R. Jr. (1991) Mandela, Tambo, and the African National Congress: The Struggle against Apartheid, 1948-1990: A Documentary Survey; Pallo Jordan, Z. (2011) Oliver Tambo Remembered: His Life in Exile; Tambo, O. (1987) Oliver Tambo Speaks: Preparing for Power.

⁹⁵⁰ Worden, 2000: 96-97.

⁹⁵¹ For more about the ANCYL see: Glaser, C. (2013) The ANC Youth League.

⁹⁵² Meli, 1988: 108.

⁹⁵³ (1914-1947) Teacher and lawyer. Considered the primary thinker behind the African National Congress Youth League (Lodge, 1883: 21) and described as “the principal architect of South Africa’s first full-fledged ideology of African nationalism” (Gerhart, 1978: 51).

⁹⁵⁴ Eades, 1999: 14; Walshe, 1970: 351.

⁹⁵⁵ Feit, 1967: 59; Marx, 1992: 34.

⁹⁵⁶ Clark and Worger, 2011: 134.

⁹⁵⁷ Beinart, 2001: 134; Meredith, 2010: 45.

common understanding that South Africa should be understood as an imperial state and a colony within a political and economic entity at one and the same time.⁹⁵⁸

On December 15, 1949, the annual national conference of the ANC was held, and about 120 delegates arrived in Bloemfontein. Members of the Congress Youth League demanded that the ANC become more militant. By the end of the day, Xuma had been removed from leadership and replaced with James Moroka, a doctor who was on board with the more radical position the younger activists sought, with “boycotts, stayaways, and civil disobedience.”⁹⁵⁹

In 1951, the ANC wrote to Malan and formally demanded African representation in government.⁹⁶⁰ In 1952, the government celebrated the tercentenary of the “founding” of South Africa by Van Riebeeck. It was an unfocused affair, more notable “because of the anti-apartheid counter-narrative that developed by way of response.” The festival coincided with a legal judgement that disenfranchised Coloured voters.⁹⁶¹ Public boycotts were organised by the United Movement, which published a series of texts querying the official narrative. That same year the ANC launched a Campaign for the Defiance of Unjust Laws. The government ignored all the ANC’s protest letters. When the ANC accused the government of denying Africans basic human rights, the government said that Blacks had no inherent right to the same things as Europeans. From this point on, the ANC adopted a concerted approach to protest through non-violent action. Large numbers of protesters were arrested and jailed in the latter half of 1952 alone.⁹⁶²

In 1952 about 1,500 Blacks gathered in East London in the Cape under the banner of the ANC, with huge support from Blacks and Indians.⁹⁶³ There had already been rioting in other areas of the Cape, and police were on the scene to prevent more. When the crowd would not disperse, the police turned on them with bayonets and opened fire. While the official death tally at the time was nine, recent evidence suggests that it may be as high as 250. In the ensuing chaos some angry groups of Black protestors turned violent, leading to the deaths of two Whites, including a Roman Catholic nun, Elsie Quinn, whose body was burned and mutilated, with pieces of flesh cut off and eaten. The extreme violence was met ⁹⁵⁸ Barber, 1999: 128-131, 145.

⁹⁵⁹ Glaser, 2013: 11-12.

⁹⁶⁰ Hepple, 1966: 154.

⁹⁶¹ Dubow, 2014: 40-43.

⁹⁶² Dubow, 2014: 40-43.

⁹⁶³ van den Berghe, 1967: 177 with a ferocious counter-attack and five youths were convicted of Quinn's murder. The Blacks (mostly between fourteen and twenty-one) who had participated in the violence mostly sprang from the appalling conditions of East London's slums, which had just eighty toilets for 20,000 residents and which was controlled with extensive policing, while there was little or no investment in improving conditions.⁹⁶⁴ Afterwards, the ANC disassociated itself from the violent protests, and the government and police hushed up the real number of deaths.

The Defiance Campaign

The ANC worked throughout the 1950s to create alliances with members of all of South Africa's "national groups," including sympathetic Indians and Whites. At their conference in December 1951 the ANC unveiled its new Defiance Campaign, to be carried out the following year under the leadership of Nelson Mandela, refusing to cooperate with unjust laws.⁹⁶⁵ It would be a national action of non-compliance that would pose a serious threat to the government.⁹⁶⁶

In 1952, the Campaign was launched, although it was largely ignored by the pro-apartheid press at first. A number of White liberals joined the Defiance Campaign for the first time.⁹⁶⁷ Of the campaign, Leo Kuper, a South African sociologist, states: "the campaign... had the negative consequence of increasing the repressive powers of the State and of liquidating many African and Indian leaders. But it attracted international attention and condemnation of apartheid policy: it stimulated a symbolic participation by White resisters, and the founding of two political parties, a radical Congress of Democrats, representing the unit of Whites in a congress alliance of racial organizations and the South African Liberal Party, a multi-racial political party largely under white leadership; and it raised the membership of the ANC to a reputed hundred thousand, the majority being in the Eastern Cape."⁹⁶⁸ The Campaign was cancelled at the beginning of 1953 after over 8,000 people had ⁹⁶⁴ Mager and Minkley, 1993: 230-232.

⁹⁶⁵ World Peace Council, 1972: 12.

⁹⁶⁶ Lodge, 1983: 39.

⁹⁶⁷ Vigne, 1997: 10-11.

⁹⁶⁸ Kuper, 1957: 462.

served prison terms for partaking.⁹⁶⁹ Among those who were arrested and imprisoned was Manilal Gandhi, second son of Mahatma Gandhi.⁹⁷⁰

It had clearly shown how powerful black resistance could be when people displayed a united front. In 1955 it would form the basis of the Congress Alliance, which united the African National Congress, the South African Indian Congress and the South African Coloured People's Organisation, and included workers' unions and women's federations, representing a broad collective of interests, and incorporating more women's and workers' interests for the first time.⁹⁷¹ In a tacit acknowledgement of the power that a united black resistance posted, following the 1952 Defiance Campaign Dr. Verwoerd banned all meetings in all "native areas and locations" throughout South Africa.⁹⁷²

Ongoing Activism

Throughout the 1950s, the ANC engaged in protests and demands for the repeal of racist and otherwise unacceptable laws. In general, they remained dedicated to peaceful protest, which was nonetheless treated by the government as a crime. ANC membership grew dramatically, but remained primarily urban, while the most successful protests were actually generally spontaneous, local ones, such as resistance on the part of rural labourers and women.⁹⁷³ In 1954, the ANC called for the boycott of government-controlled schools with little success, as African parents realised that, inadequate as they were, they were their children's only chance of getting an education.⁹⁷⁴

The Freedom Charter

In 1955, the Congress of the People, a loose alliance of anti-apartheid activists, came together, in Kliptown, a town near Johannesburg, and adopted the Freedom Charter. This resulted from widespread consultation among anti-apartheid South Africans of all colours.⁹⁷⁵

⁹⁶⁹ Sisulu, 1990: 6; Among the imprisoned during the Defiance Campaign was Manilal Gandhi, second son of Mahatma Gandhi (Schadeberg, 1987: 38-39).

⁹⁷⁰ Schadeberg, 1987: 38-39.

⁹⁷¹ Naidoo, 2008: 82.

⁹⁷² Hirson, 2005: 149.

⁹⁷³ Barber, 1999: 146.

⁹⁷⁴ Troup, 1976: 22.

⁹⁷⁵ Willems et al, 1988: 22.

It endorsed “the right of the people to govern; freedoms regardless of race, colour or sex; equality before the law; and equal access to education, housing, and medical care,” and stated “All national groups shall have equal rights,” among other declarations.⁹⁷⁶ The Charter’s core elements were:

The people shall govern;

All national groups shall have equal rights;

The people shall share in the country’s wealth;

The land shall be shared among those who work it;

All shall be equal before the law;

All shall enjoy equal human rights;

There shall be work and security;

The doors of learning and culture shall be opened;

There shall be houses, security and comfort;

*There shall be peace and friendship.*⁹⁷⁷

The government saw the Charter as a revolutionary document, and arrested more than 500 people in response in September 1955, as well as making the Charter a central issue in the ensuing Treason Trial,⁹⁷⁸ in which activists, including Nelson Mandela, who had been co-opted onto the National Executive of the ANC in 1950, were accused, and had their freedom severely restricted.⁹⁷⁹ Mandela described the Freedom Charter as the most radical proclamation ever made by the national movement in South Africa.⁹⁸⁰

The ANC under Prime Minister Dr. Verwoerd

Resistance took on a more concerted and modern focus under Dr. Verwoerd as Prime Minister; he dismissed even peaceful resistance as “terrorism.”⁹⁸¹ There was a dramatic ⁹⁷⁶ Clark and Worger, 2011: 148-152; Legum and Legum, 1964b: 191-192; Marx, 1992: 35.

⁹⁷⁷ African National Congress, 1976: 4-9; Anti-apartheid Movement, 1974: 90; Mbeki, 1964: 153-157.

⁹⁷⁸ Barber, 1999: 151-152; TIME, 7 April 1961: 30, ‘South Africa: Not guilty.’

⁹⁷⁹ Beinart, 2001: 167; Muller, 1981: 497.

⁹⁸⁰ Mandela, 1994: 164; Mandela, 2001: 49.

⁹⁸¹ Botha, 1979: 109.

increase in Blacks imprisoned and killed.⁹⁸² In 1959, Dr Xuma was removed from leadership of the ANC for being too cautious.⁹⁸³ In 1961, a year after Dr. Verwoerd outlawed the ANC, Mandela wrote to him, asking that he organise a national convention at which all South Africans would be represented to draw-up a “new non-racial and democratic constitution.” Violent protest had some notable successes. In Witwatersrand in October 1961, power pylons were blown up and phone wires cut, and acts of sabotage took place in Johannesburg, Port Elizabeth and Durban, creating fear and anxiety among Whites.⁹⁸⁴

The ANC's hope was that sabotage would damage the government's standing at home and abroad and repel foreign investors.⁹⁸⁵ Given the levels of black anger, there was a constant threat that violence might be targeted directly at Whites, and there were some outbursts of appalling violence. In 1960, for example, a group of Blacks in the Durban area attacked and killed nine policemen raiding an illegal shebeen when one of them accidentally trod on a woman's foot. Some of the policemen had been stoned to death and some, horrifically, had been disembowelled.⁹⁸⁶ These acts were strongly condemned by Luthuli, the leader of the ANC.⁹⁸⁷ However, as we discuss below, tolerance for violence against Whites grew considerably in the aftermath of the Sharpeville Massacre in 1961.

The Banning of the ANC

In 1960, the government banned both the ANC and the PAC under the Unlawful Organizations Act.⁹⁸⁸ The following year they were unbanned, and the ANC started to organise more protests. At a conference organised by the ANC and the PAC (the PAC is discussed below) held on March 25-26, 1961, the groups issued a resolution demanding that Dr. Verwoerd call a democratically elected, non-racial national convention, and warning that if this did not happen there would be country-wide demonstrations.⁹⁸⁹ The resolution also called on Indians, Coloureds and “democratic Europeans” to join Africans in opposition to Dr. Verwoerd and his policies.⁹⁹⁰

⁹⁸² Segal, 1961: 275.

⁹⁸³ Eades, 1999: 14.

⁹⁸⁴ Mandela, 2001: 11.

⁹⁸⁵ du Preez Bezdrob, 2003: 116.

⁹⁸⁶ Frankel, 2001: 100.

⁹⁸⁷ Luthuli, 1962, 113-115.

⁹⁸⁸ Matthews, 1972: 69.

⁹⁸⁹ Harsch, 1980: 249.

⁹⁹⁰ Karis et al, 1977: 626-627.

Instead, Dr. Verwoerd issued a warrant for Mandela's arrest. Meanwhile, Mandela and Sisulu travelled in secret to organise a three-day strike intended to place Dr. Verwoerd under pressure to call the national convention. Dr. Verwoerd launched enormous repressive measures and, before the strike was due to start, the police carried out extensive raids, arresting ten thousand Africans.⁹⁹¹ Dr. Verwoerd received moral and practical support from the United States Marines, who visited just before the strike was supposed to occur; the Marines showed the Blacks their flamethrowers and machine guns and flew helicopters low over African townships in what was generally understood to be a show of force.⁹⁹²

Umkhonto we Sizwe and the Shift to Violence

As Dr. Verwoerd applied himself to outlawing more and more organisations and individuals dedicated to peaceful protest, inevitably the anti-apartheid movement went progressively underground and tended towards violence.⁹⁹³ Mandela now believed that the time for violence had come, and together with Sisulu and Slovo, he formed the new armed wing of the movement.⁹⁹⁴ Umkhonto we Sizwe, meaning "Spear of the Nation",⁹⁹⁵ or MK, was formed on December 16, 1961,⁹⁹⁶ with the goal of dedicating itself to sabotage and preparing for guerrilla warfare. Mandela later stated that the primary reason was to focus attention on the resistance movement as, clearly, they would never win against the South African army and police force.⁹⁹⁷

In his court statement at the Rivonia Trial in 1964, discussed above, Mandela referenced his view that the increase in violence among Blacks sprang from living under a government that consistently used force to maintain its rule, teaching the oppressed that this was the only thing it would listen to. On February 10, 1985, Mandela wrote a message from his prison cell in which he stated:

"My colleagues and I wrote in 1952 to Malan asking for a round table conference to find a solution to the problems of our country, but that was ignored. When Strijdom was in ⁹⁹¹ Harsch, 1980: 249-250.

⁹⁹² van den Berge, 1970: 258-259.

⁹⁹³ Shaw, 2007: 42.

⁹⁹⁴ Beinart, 2001: 168.

⁹⁹⁵ Callinicos and Rogers, 1977: 62.

⁹⁹⁶ This date was the anniversary of the Battle of the Blood River in 1838 where Afrikaner settlers defeated a group of Zulu warriors (Sisulu, 2003: 184).

⁹⁹⁷ Sparks, 1995: 26.

power, we made the same offer. Again it was ignored. When Dr. Verwoerd was in power we asked for a national convention for all the people in South Africa to decide on their future. This, too, was in vain. It was only when all other forms of resistance were no longer open to us that we turned to armed struggle.”⁹⁹⁸

In 1964, Mandela placed the blame for the violence squarely at the feet of the government, saying: “... the government itself set the scene for violence by relying exclusively on violence with which to answer our people in their demands. Africans are turning to deliberate acts of violence and of force against the government, in order to persuade the Government, in the only language which the government shows, by its own behaviour, that it understands.”⁹⁹⁹ It was hardest to garner support for the ANC during periods when South Africa was doing economically well, even though Africans were still by far the poorest in the country.¹⁰⁰⁰

THE PAN-AFRICANIST CONGRESS (PAC)¹⁰⁰¹

In 1958, despite the able leadership of the ANC by Albert Luthuli,¹⁰⁰² a group led by Robert Sobukwe broke away from the ANC and on April 1959 founded the PAC,¹⁰⁰³ which was much more aggressive, relying on the growing anger of younger urban Blacks.¹⁰⁰⁴ The founding members of the ANC had become increasingly critical of its policy of forging alliances with non-Blacks. They stated that this was pandering to the influence of other racial groups and that the only true owners of Africa were Blacks. They rejected the Charter and stressed their view that the only way in which to prevail over white domination would be by black force. They also objected to including other groups, such as the Communist Party.¹⁰⁰⁵

⁹⁹⁸ ANC, 1988: 2-3.

⁹⁹⁹ Mufson, 1990: 96.

¹⁰⁰⁰ Feit, 1967: 15.

¹⁰⁰¹ For more about the PAC see: Kondlo, K. (2009) In the Twilight of the Revolution: The Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) 1959-1994; Lodge, T. (1994) The Pan-Africanist Congress, 1959-1990; Maaba, B.B. (2004) The PAC's War Against the State; Mathabatha, S. (2004) The PAC and POQO in Pretoria, 1958-1964. Nkondo, K. (2009) In the Twilight of the Revolution, The Pan Africanist Congress of Azania 1959 to 1994; Plaajie, T.K. (2006) The PAC's Internal Underground Activities 1960-1980; Pogrud, B. (1990) How can a Man Die Better? The Life of Robert Sobukwe.

¹⁰⁰² Beinart, 2001: 166.

¹⁰⁰³ Davis, 1987: 10-11.

¹⁰⁰⁴ Members included: Potlake Leballo, the Organization's secretary, Patrick Duncan, the only white member of the PAC, Philip Kgosana, Clarence Makwetu, Jeff Kgalabi Masemola, Joe Molefi, ZB Molete, Peter Molotsi, Zephaniah Mothopeng, Michael Ndobongwana, Thabisa Lethala, Cynthia Lichaba, Johnson Mlambo, Nana Mohomo, Matthew Nkoana and John Nyathi Pokela (South Africa History Online, n.d.).

¹⁰⁰⁵ Giliomee, 2011: 512.

They felt that the ANC was soft and old fashioned, and often referred to it as the organisation of their parents.¹⁰⁰⁶ The PAC had considerable appeal for disaffected youths from township areas, offering a more useful channel for channelling their aggression than the alternatives.¹⁰⁰⁷

In his inaugural speech the founder and President of the PAC, Robert Sobukwe, said, “We aim, politically, at government of the Africans by the Africans, for the Africans, with everybody who owes his only loyalty to Africa and who is prepared to accept the democratic rule of an African majority being regarded as an African.”¹⁰⁰⁸ Sobukwe¹⁰⁰⁹ was a highly educated linguist who had been a full-time politician and the chairman of the Orlando (a township near Johannesburg) branch of the ANC since 1954.¹⁰¹⁰ Sobukwe was described in the Voice of Africa newspaper as “Christ carrying the cross to Calvary.”¹⁰¹¹

The group was hampered by poor organisational skills and a lack of funds,¹⁰¹² as well as the fact that it limited its membership to Blacks only¹⁰¹³ (although at a later point Liberal Party member Patrick Duncan would play a role as a PAC official).¹⁰¹⁴ In 1960 the PAC was banned, along with the Communist Party.¹⁰¹⁵ In 1960, resistance movements started to segue into more active types of resistance. The government responded by responding aggressively and police brutality became increasingly vicious.¹⁰¹⁶ After 1962, the ANC and the PAC sent members for military training abroad, to other countries on the African continent and ¹⁰⁰⁶ Maaba, 2004: 257.

¹⁰⁰⁷ Glaser, 1993: 297.

¹⁰⁰⁸ South African History Online, (n.d.) Robert Sobukwe Inaugural Speech, April 1959.

¹⁰⁰⁹ (1924-1978) On March 21, 1960, the PAC led a nationwide protest against the resented pass laws. Sobukwe led a march to a police station in Orlando, Soweto in a gesture of open defiance. A number of followers joined him and watched him present his pass to a policeman and declaring himself guilty of being in an area to which his papers did not permit him to travel. He was arrested and charged with incitement, convicted and sentenced to serve three years in prison, after which he was interned on Robben Island. A new General Law Amendment Act made it possible for the Minister of Justice to arbitrarily renew his imprisonment every year. This approach came to be known as the “Sobukwe clause” and ran for three years, during which time he was the only person imprisoned under the clause. After years in solitary confinement, Sobukwe was released in 1969 but remained under a banning order (Pogrud, 1990). For further reading see: Pogrud, B. (1990) How Can Man Die Better: The Life of Robert Sobukwe.

¹⁰¹⁰ Pogrud, 2012: 83

¹⁰¹¹ Mandela, 2010: 62.

¹⁰¹² Meredith, 1988: 78-80.

¹⁰¹³ Marx, 1992: 37.

¹⁰¹⁴ Legassick and Saunders, 2004: 666.

¹⁰¹⁵ du Toit, 1991: 635.

¹⁰¹⁶ Jaspán, 1961: 97-98

elsewhere. In response the state enacted penalties for those who had engaged in military training.¹⁰¹⁷

THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF SOUTH AFRICA

Communism was originally imported in South Africa in the early 20th century by East European Jews and British anarchists.¹⁰¹⁸ The Communist Party of South Africa was initially founded in 1921 by a small group of White labourers, but soon began accepting members of all races with a multi-racial executive body.¹⁰¹⁹ In the 1930s, many of its members came from the Jewish community.¹⁰²⁰ After the Second World War, while most of the Jews in South Africa had become more conservative, a few joined the liberation movement, most of whom were linked with the Communist Party.¹⁰²¹ Several prominent members of the Indian community played important roles in the Party,¹⁰²² as did White liberals such as Braam Fischer, Denis Goldberg, Costa Gazidis, Ronnie Kasrils and Joe Slovo.¹⁰²³

Communism had deep links with the trade union movement which had somehow managed, from 1930 to 1947, to maintain a degree of unity among the various unions, notwithstanding racial differences.¹⁰²⁴ It had always supported radical reform, fully supporting Blacks' struggle,¹⁰²⁵ which it understood in the context of economic exploitation.¹⁰²⁶ Oliver Tambo had described the ANC and the SACP as together forming the "twin pillars of the struggle."¹⁰²⁷

During the Second World War, the Communist Party had had considerable success in unionising the Blacks who had moved to urban areas to fill the positions vacated by Whites who had gone to war. By 1948, the Communist Party attracted growing numbers of young people from the ANC and other organisations.¹⁰²⁸ The Party had had a degree of success in the political arena, gaining seats in parliament and on the municipal council of Johannesburg;

¹⁰¹⁷ Fullard, 2004: 346.

¹⁰¹⁸ Belling, 2002: 1.

¹⁰¹⁹ Davis, 1987: 8; Thompson, 1966: 169.

¹⁰²⁰ Rowley Arenstein quoted in Suttner, 1997: 378.

¹⁰²¹ Kasrils, 1997: 269.

¹⁰²² Beinart, 1997: 168.

¹⁰²³ Bernstein, 1965: 23.

¹⁰²⁴ Lewis, 1984: 1.

¹⁰²⁵ Mandela, 2001: 28.

¹⁰²⁶ Goldberg, 2010: 68; Morris, 2004: 163.

¹⁰²⁷ Mufson, 1990: 219.

¹⁰²⁸ Thompson, 1966: 169.

the Communist Party was present on the Johannesburg council right up until it was banned in 1950.¹⁰²⁹

From the early days of the National Party in government, it had a keen interest in suppressing communism, which it defined very broadly and which was made illegal by a series of acts including the Suppression of Communism Act of 1950, the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1952, the Public Safety Act of 1953,¹⁰³⁰ the Riotous Assemblies Act of 1956 (based on an earlier act) and the Illegal Organisations Act of 1960.¹⁰³¹ Many people and organisations were made illegal; newspapers were banned, thousands of arrests were made, and the government dealt with opposition by wielding a “big stick.”¹⁰³²

On May 1, 1950, the Communist Party and Transvaal Indian Congress organised a one-day work stoppage to protest against apartheid legislation. Eighteen protesters were killed by the police. Malan's government had tried to pass the Unlawful Organization Bill to limit the activities of the Communist Party of South Africa, but it did not mention the Party specifically, so that month the government introduced the seemingly more precise Suppression of Communism Act which was used to target both Communists and non-Communists.¹⁰³³ The ANC organised a day of protest to be held on the 26th of June along with a number of organisations, including the Communist Party. Thereafter June 26th became known as Freedom Day and, while the initial protest had not been a great success, it marked the start of a more concerted approach.¹⁰³⁴

In July 1950, the passing of the Suppression of Communism Act, rendered the Communist Party illegal.¹⁰³⁵ The decision to ban the Communist Party and its demonization by the apartheid authorities bolstered its support from disenfranchised South Africans and their supporters.¹⁰³⁶ It officially dissolved, but became as an underground organisation in 1953, helping the ANC to organise the Umkhonto we Sizwe in 1961.¹⁰³⁷ After the banning, the government tended to equate all liberal organisations with communism. Twenty of the ¹⁰²⁹ Mufson, 1990: 74.

¹⁰³⁰ Foster, 1987: 1; Fullard, 2004: 342; Rudolph, 1984: 3; World Peace Council, 1972: 12.

¹⁰³¹ Barber 1999: 144; Carter, 1962: 65, van den Berghe, 1967: 131.

¹⁰³² Bunting, 1986: 203.

¹⁰³³ Drew, 1996: 39.

¹⁰³⁴ Dubow, 2014: 40-41.

¹⁰³⁵ Benson, 1966: 134.

¹⁰³⁶ Cronin, 1992: 78.

¹⁰³⁷ Mufson, 1990: 224.

leaders of the passive resistance campaign of 1952 were prosecuted under the Act, even though they had never been communists.¹⁰³⁸

Between 1948, when the National Party came to power, and the mid-1960s, the Communist Party was devastated by constant police harassment, and became progressively more alienated. Nonetheless, during the 1950s and early 1960s the party was widely supported by members of the Bantu, Coloured and Indian communities, and by some White liberals and professionals.¹⁰³⁹ In 1962, the Communist Party adopted a policy program that described the relationship between Black and White South Africans as a particular form of colonialism.¹⁰⁴⁰

As Minister of Native Affairs and as Prime Minister Dr. Verwoerd railed against Communism, and frequently insisted that apartheid was an essential bulwark against it. He saw any moves towards decolonisation in Africa, and empowerment of Blacks, as a sop to communism and believed that the communist authorities were manipulating the cause of black freedom.¹⁰⁴¹ Communists were arrested and prosecuted in a focussed, organised approach; in November, 1964, for example, fourteen people were tried in court on the charge of being Communist Party officers and planning to overthrow the government.¹⁰⁴²

OTHER GROUPS

The Coloured community also gave rise to number of organisations, notably the South African Coloured People's Organisation, founded in 1953 and affiliated with the Congress Alliance, which was led by the ANC. It was dedicated to fighting the reduction in rights of Coloureds, including their removal from the voters' roll. Indians formed organisations such as the Natal Indian Congress and the Transvaal Indian Congress to represent their interests. Despite sharing some concerns, the African National Congress was not initially open to Indian membership.¹⁰⁴³

¹⁰³⁸ Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group, 1986: 52.

¹⁰³⁹ Weyl, 1970: 9, 11.

¹⁰⁴⁰ Kathrada, 2001: 111.

¹⁰⁴¹ Italiaander, 1961: 107-108.

¹⁰⁴² Lukas (The New York Times), 7 November 1964: 2, '14 South Africans on trial as Reds.'

¹⁰⁴³ Desai, 2015: 2.

In response to the pass laws that were applied to women from 1953, the Federation of South African Women¹⁰⁴⁴ was formed and coordinated mass burnings of women's passes and massive demonstrations.¹⁰⁴⁵ A women's organisation, The Black Sash, dedicated itself to pro-democracy protests.¹⁰⁴⁶ The Black Sash adopted the UN Declaration of Human Rights and engaged in a range of protests at which the women were often pelted with eggs by White youths. Membership declined in the organisation, which found itself at an impasse between the white regime and the growing radicalisation of many protest movements.¹⁰⁴⁷

A number of organisations were founded after the Sharpeville Massacre in 1960. These included the African Resistance Movement,¹⁰⁴⁸ which united several groups including former members of the ANC Youth League in Soweto and White radicals from the Liberal Party,¹⁰⁴⁹ and started committing acts of violence in 1963, including bombing power lines, railroad tracks and rolling stock, roads and bridges. Attacks were organised to avoid civilian casualties.¹⁰⁵⁰

The group's most famous attack took place on July 24, 1964, and was carried out by John Frederick Harris.¹⁰⁵¹ Harris planted a bomb in the Whites-only waiting room of Johannesburg Park Station. Although he telephoned and warned the police and two newspapers about it, the police did not respond.¹⁰⁵² The explosion resulted in one death and twenty-three injuries. Harris was arrested, convicted of murder and hanged on April 1, ¹⁰⁴⁴ Formed in 1954 by Ray Simons, Amina Cachalia, Helen Joseph, Lillian Ngoyi; on August 9th, 1956, it set up a march of 20,000 women who went to Pretoria's Union Buildings to protest pass laws. To this day, the anniversary of the march is celebrated as South Africa's Women's Day (Rappaport, 2001: 344).

¹⁰⁴⁵ Troup, 1975: 341.

¹⁰⁴⁶ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 31 May 1965: 3, 'Women's group in South Africa keeps up protest on apartheid.'

¹⁰⁴⁷ Legassick and Saunders, 2004: 673.

¹⁰⁴⁸ Members included: Myrtle Berman, Alan Brookes, Eddie Daniels, David de Keller, Johannes Dladla, John Harris, Dennis Higgs, Baruch Hirson, Stephanie Kemp, John Lang, Adrian Leftwich, Hugh Lewin, Millie McConkey, Hilary and Ronald Mutch, Samuel Olifant, Neville Rubin, Stephen Segale, Milton Setlhapelo, Willie Tibane, Lynette van der Riet and Rosemary Wentzel (Gunther, 2004: 209-235). For more about the organization see: Gunther, M. (2004) The National Committee of Liberation (NCL)/ African Resistance Movement.

¹⁰⁴⁹ Callinicos and Rogers, 1977: 62.

¹⁰⁵⁰ Gunther, 2004: 246-247.

¹⁰⁵¹ (1937-1965) Teacher, member of the executive committee of the Liberal Party in the Transvaal, chairman of the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee and member of the ARM. He was arrested after he was betrayed by John Lloyd, another member of the ARM (Gunther, 2004: 379). He was seriously beaten during interrogation and his broken jaw was left without medical treatment for weeks. The only white person executed for crimes carried out in the resistance movement, he went to the gallows singing the famous American Civil Rights anthem 'We Shall Overcome' (Gunther, 2004: 247-249, Lapierre, 2009: 111). For more about Harris see: Driver, C.J. (2015) The Man with the Suitcase: The Life, Execution and Rehabilitation of John Harris, Liberal Terrorist.

¹⁰⁵² TRC, 1998: 547.

1965.¹⁰⁵³ Many at the time regarded Harris as a hero and some even said, "Its time whites suffered a bit, as we have suffered so long."¹⁰⁵⁴ In 2001, Mandela said about Harris: "what more can a white man do to identify himself with the Black man's struggle than to buy freedom with his own life? To dismiss such martyrs as oppressors is a crime most South African freedom fighters find difficult to excuse."¹⁰⁵⁵

Poqo¹⁰⁵⁶ ("we go it alone"¹⁰⁵⁷) was the armed wing of the PAC. Its name implied racial purity, in contrast to the tendency of other opposition groups to admit members of diverse races. It was a very violent organisation,¹⁰⁵⁸ described as a terrorist group even by many supporters of the anti-apartheid movement,¹⁰⁵⁹ and had the specific mandate of killing people, including African chiefs and white authorities, to further the cause.¹⁰⁶⁰ Poqo¹⁰⁶¹ was not well-organised but it attracted many members; it published leaflets claiming that it was planning for the violent overthrow of the government in 1963, and that it had 150,000 followers.¹⁰⁶²

It quickly became involved in a range of insurrectionary activities,¹⁰⁶³ while Leballo, the PAC's Secretary General, stated his vision that its young members would become equipped to combat apartheid militarily throughout the country.¹⁰⁶⁴ The government cracked down hard on these more violent groups and by 1964 there were hardly any active revolutionaries left in South Africa.¹⁰⁶⁵ Dr. Verwoerd continued to refuse to offer any concessions in the controversial area of the pass system.¹⁰⁶⁶

¹⁰⁵³ Gunther, 2006: 247-249.

¹⁰⁵⁴ Benson, 1966: 262.

¹⁰⁵⁵ Mandela, 2001: 39-40.

¹⁰⁵⁶ Thompson, 1966: 180-181. For more about POQO see: Mathabatha, S. (2004) The PAC and POQO in Pretoria, 1958-1964.

¹⁰⁵⁷ Okoth, 2006: 181.

¹⁰⁵⁸ Marx, 1992: 38; van den Berghe, 1967: 162.

¹⁰⁵⁹ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 75.

¹⁰⁶⁰ Barber, 1999: 167-168; Marquard, 1968: 260; Thompson, 1966: 181.

¹⁰⁶¹ Members included: Madodana Camagu, Isaac Mafatshe, John Magigo, Dingaan Maleka, Moses and Jephtha Masemola, Jacob Matlala, Isaac Mithimunya, Joseph Mogashoa, Fetanang and Nicholas Mohlala, John Nkosi, Simon Rmagole, Ngenisile Siqwebo, Philemon Tefu, Godfrey Yekiso (Mathabatha, 2004: 299-318).

¹⁰⁶² Hepple, 1967: 161.

¹⁰⁶³ Meredith, 1988: 102.

¹⁰⁶⁴ Mathabatha, 2004: 300.

¹⁰⁶⁵ Thomson, 1966: 182.

¹⁰⁶⁶ van der Westhuizen, 2007: 85.

CHURCHES AND SOCIAL ACTIVISTS

Although the Dutch Reformed Church (DRC)¹⁰⁶⁷ supported apartheid, and actively supported many of the racist laws passed during Dr. Verwoerd's service as Minister of Native Affairs and as Prime Minister,¹⁰⁶⁸ many other churches campaigned against it. In 1948, all of the other denominations issued critical statements. Over the years that followed, many clerics and other activists within the church issued statements against apartheid.¹⁰⁶⁹ The Anglican Church became increasingly coherent on its anti-apartheid stance,¹⁰⁷⁰ drawing inspiration from the civil rights movement and Martin Luther King in the US, among other things,¹⁰⁷¹ and there was support from Christian organisations outside South Africa. White Anglican missionaries had protested strongly when apartheid policy insisted that they could no longer live in their premises in a black area.¹⁰⁷² Dr. Verwoerd had threatened to revoke church leases in black areas if the Anglican Church continued to criticise the government,¹⁰⁷³ and, in 1958, accused religious leaders who opposed apartheid as acting in the spirit of communism.¹⁰⁷⁴

Where many in the Dutch Reformed Church cited the Bible in support of racism, other churches, often influenced by liberation theology, quoted passages in support of their views.¹⁰⁷⁵ The Anglican missionary Michael Guthrie Scott¹⁰⁷⁶ was expelled because of his constant criticisms of apartheid on the global stage.¹⁰⁷⁷ In 1960, the Anglican bishop of Cape Town, Joost de Blank,¹⁰⁷⁸ demanded that the Dutch Reformed Church be removed from the ¹⁰⁶⁷ For further reading about the DRC's role in apartheid see: Bax, A. (1979) A Different Gospel: A Critique of the Theology Behind Apartheid; Bosch, D J. (1979) Racism and Revolution: Response of the Churches in South Africa; Chidester, D. (1992) Religions of South Africa; Elphic, R., Davenport, R. (1997) Christianity in South Africa: A Political, Social & Cultural History; Loubser, J.A. (1987) The Apartheid Bible: A Critical Review of Racial Rheology in South Africa; Moodie, T.D. (1975) The Rise of Afrikanerdom: Power, Apartheid and Afrikaner Civil Religion; Prozesky, M. (1990) Christianity Amidst Apartheid: Selected Perspectives on the Church in South Africa; Dubow, S. (1992) "Afrikaner Nationalism, Apartheid and the Conceptualization of 'Race.'" "

¹⁰⁶⁸ Lave, 1994: 502.

¹⁰⁶⁹ Thompson, 2001: 204.

¹⁰⁷⁰ Worsnip, 1991: 54; 105.

¹⁰⁷¹ British Council of Churches, 1965: 11.

¹⁰⁷² Hunt, 1957: 67.

¹⁰⁷³ For example, Huddleston et al, (1957) Four Words on South Africa.

¹⁰⁷⁴ The Canberra Times, 18 December 1958: 6, 'Whites may fail says Dr. Verwoerd.'

¹⁰⁷⁵ Lave, 1994: 5112.

¹⁰⁷⁶ (1907-1983) Anglican priest, apartheid critic and nuclear disarmament activist. In 1946, he became the first white man to be jailed for opposing South Africa's racial laws (Legum and Legum, 1968: 171-181). For further reading see: Yates, A. and Chester, L. (2006) The Troublemaker: Michael Scott and His Lonely Struggle Against Injustice; Scott, M. (1958) A Time to Speak; Troup, F. (1950) In Face of Fear: Michael Scott's Challenge to South Africa.

¹⁰⁷⁷ Italiaander, 1961: 130.

¹⁰⁷⁸ (1908-1968) An Anglican Bishop, the Archbishop of Cape Town from 1957 to 1963 known as "scourge of apartheid" for his stance against it (The Times, 26 September 1959: 5).

World Council of Churches; a year before, Blank, who had been born in Holland, had offered to step down from his position if Dr. Verwoerd would do likewise, and would return to the land of his birth.¹⁰⁷⁹

The Reverend James E. Wagner of the World Council of Churches stated that international church bodies would not support the Dutch Reformed Church's position on apartheid, and that their position was "out of step with the clearest Christian convictions."¹⁰⁸⁰ The Dutch Reformed Church stated its great offense, and reiterated its support for apartheid.¹⁰⁸¹ However, the same year the DRC became the origin of some dissent as eleven theologians from within the church published a book critical of the government's position on race relations, stating that there was "no hope" if the government insisted on fighting Black Nationalism with force.¹⁰⁸²

This was not the only dissent within the DRC. Albert Stephanus Geysers,¹⁰⁸³ a cleric, was accused of treason in 1961 by three students for stating his view that apartheid was incompatible with Christ's teachings.¹⁰⁸⁴ In 1963, churchman Beyers Naudé¹⁰⁸⁵ resigned from the DRC, having concluded that apartheid had no biblical justification.¹⁰⁸⁶ He was censored, defrocked, banned for seven years, harassed, and placed under house arrest.¹⁰⁸⁷ Naudé had been the director of the Christian Institute, which Dr. Verwoerd had attempted to ban because of his fear that their support of interracial activities might spread into politics.¹⁰⁸⁸

Predictably, Dr. Verwoerd scoffed at anti-apartheid churches and put pressure on the Dutch Reformed Church to leave the World Council of Churches,¹⁰⁸⁹ which was deeply condemnatory of South African policies,¹⁰⁹⁰ after the largest of the Dutch Reformed Church's

¹⁰⁷⁹ The New York Times, 23 July 1959: 8, 'Racist is challenged.'

¹⁰⁸⁰ Pretoria News, 12 April 1960: 1, 'Apartheid criticised by world Church leader.'

¹⁰⁸¹ The New York Times, 10 April 1960: 20, 'Toronto star editor held in South Africa.'

¹⁰⁸² The New York Times, 20 November 1960: 23, '11 Theologians decry apartheid.'

¹⁰⁸³ (1918-1985) Cleric, professor of Theology at the University of Pretoria and an anti-apartheid theologian, He was essentially cast out of his community of Afrikaners because of his firm opposition to apartheid. He was one of the first of the Afrikaner nationalists to oppose the Broederbond and apartheid on the basis of religious belief (van Aarde et al, 2014: 1-10).

¹⁰⁸⁴ The Economist, 23 December 1961: 1224, 'Apartheid agonistes.'

¹⁰⁸⁵ (1915-2004) Cleric, theologian, founder of the Christian Institute of South Africa, anti-apartheid activist and 'banned' person (Bernstein, 2004: B06). Interestingly, his father was Jozua François Naudé, a Dutch Reformed minister and first chairman of the Broederbond (Soggot (The Guardian), 8 September 2004, 'The Rev. Beyers Naudé').

¹⁰⁸⁶ Naudé, 1964: 23.

¹⁰⁸⁷ Lave, 1994: 514.

¹⁰⁸⁸ The Economist, 12 October 1963: 128, 'Afrikaners' cross.'

¹⁰⁸⁹ Lave, 1994: 502.

¹⁰⁹⁰ Thompson, 1957: 133.

branches stated that many of the rules of apartheid could not be justified.¹⁰⁹¹ That year, Jewish and Islamic religious leaders and those of most other major faiths in South Africa (Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Lutherans, Unitarians, Quakers, the Salvation Army and Congregationalists) called on the government to end its policy of detaining political prisoners without trial.¹⁰⁹² Most Black Christians belonged to Methodist, Anglican, Lutheran, Congregational and Presbyterian churches which belonged, in turn, the South African Council of Churches. They were highly critical of racial segregation and active in the areas of black consciousness and black theology.¹⁰⁹³

In 1964, Dr. Verwoerd wrote the Methodist Church in South Africa a furious letter accusing them of “hypocrisy” after they adopted a resolution stating that communication and consultation between all the racial groups were essential.¹⁰⁹⁴ In the Dutch Reformed Church, some of the church ministers had begun to rebel against the Broederbond.¹⁰⁹⁵ The Broederbond held an emergency secret meeting at which it affirmed support for Dr. Verwoerd and pledged to speak to church leaders on the matter.¹⁰⁹⁶ The same year, following the massacre at Sharpeville, the Anglican Bishop of Johannesburg, Ambrose Reeves (a member of the Liberal Party), travelled to England with documents showing Dr. Verwoerd’s government in a very bad light.¹⁰⁹⁷

Important Anglican critics also included two bishops of Cape Town, Geoffrey Clayton¹⁰⁹⁸ and the aforementioned Joost de Black,¹⁰⁹⁹ while the Anglican priest Father Trevor Huddleston¹¹⁰⁰ published Naught for Your Comfort, an influential anti-apartheid book, in 1956.¹¹⁰¹ Reeves, who had also been involved in gathering funds for the defence in the ¹⁰⁹¹ Ingalls (The New York Times), 19 December 1960: 6, ‘Church opposes Dr. Verwoerd stand: Largest South African unit asks race leniency.’

¹⁰⁹² The New York Times, 21 May 1964: 10, ‘Two faiths urge Dr. Verwoerd to end detention system.’

¹⁰⁹³ Bosch, 1979: 13.

¹⁰⁹⁴ The New York Times, 18 October 1964, ‘Methodists answer Dr. Verwoerd’s attack.’

¹⁰⁹⁵ The New York Times, 30 April 1963: 10, ‘Ministers oppose secret group.’

¹⁰⁹⁶ Giliomee, 2011: 528.

¹⁰⁹⁷ Italiaander, 1961: 118.

¹⁰⁹⁸ (1884-1957) An Anglican Bishop, Archbishop of Johannesburg (1934-1948), Archbishop of Cape Town (1948-1957) and critic of apartheid (Paton, 1973). For his biography see: Paton, A. (1973) Apartheid and the Archbishop: The Life and Times of Geoffrey Clayton, Archbishop of Cape Town.

¹⁰⁹⁹ (1908-1968) Archbishop of Cape Town from 1957 to 1963. Passionate and outspoken anti-apartheid activist, he was known the ‘scourge of apartheid’ (The Times, 26 September 1959: 5, ‘Apartheid “crazy” Archbishop says’).

¹¹⁰⁰ (1913-1998) An English Anglican Bishop and anti-apartheid activist, of whom Nelson Mandela said “no white person has done more for South Africa,” and Archbishop Desmond Tutu that he “single-handedly made apartheid a world issue” (Clark, 2012: 210).

¹¹⁰¹ Johns and Hunt Davis, 1991: 30; Thompson, 1966: 172.

Treason Trial,¹¹⁰² was ultimately deported to Britain. What irked the authorities were his general anti-apartheid activities, but more especially his attempts to tell the truth about Sharpeville.¹¹⁰³

Apartheid was also condemned by a number of prominent Afrikaner theologians such as Ben Engelbrecht, Albert S. Geysers, Professor Barend Bartholomew Keet, Ben Marais and Beyers Naudé. Professor Keet wrote in 1956 in his book Whither South Africa?:

“What makes colour and race prejudice so unreasonable and so sinful, is that a man is condemned for what he has no control over (as if he had chosen his ancestors) while for what he can change, his character, he receives no recognition. The result is that our greatest concern is to keep our colour ‘pure’ and that ‘race mixture’ is regarded as the greatest of evils. It is punished as a crime by law of our land, while greater transgressions against the moral law, provided they are committed by people of the same colour, are overlooked – and this in spite of the fact that there are already more than a million people of mixed race in South Africa.”¹¹⁰⁴

JOURNALISM

There was an active anti-apartheid media led by newspapers such as The Guardian,¹¹⁰⁵ an English-language socialist newspaper with links to the union movement and offices in Cape Town, Johannesburg, and Durban. The Guardian was suppressed various times, returning each time under a new title, and finally came to an end in 1963. It had been a national, and a resolutely socialist, publication since its inception in 1937 when it was registered in the name of owner/editor Betty Radford. Because of its socialist and racially egalitarian content, the Guardian was constantly harassed by the authorities. Nonetheless, those involved with the paper managed to distribute large numbers of copies using grassroots, informal networks.¹¹⁰⁶

Black journalism¹¹⁰⁷ grew in terms of output and political content from the 1930s, at a time of growing levels of literacy among the black population (although these remained low).

¹¹⁰² Hepple, 2011: 76.

¹¹⁰³ The Cape Argus, 13 September 1960: 2, ‘Deportation a clumsy way to silence Reeves says British Press’; The New York Times, 6 December 1960: 14, ‘Dr. Verwoerd seizes Paton’s passport.’

¹¹⁰⁴ Keet, 1956: 13.

¹¹⁰⁵ For further reading about the Guardian’s history see: Zug, J. (2007) The Guardian: The History of South Africa’s Extraordinary Anti-Apartheid Newspaper.

¹¹⁰⁶ Switzer, 1997: 274-285.

¹¹⁰⁷ For further reading about Black journalism during apartheid see: Couzens, T. (1984) History of the Black Press in South Africa, 1836-1960.

The Bantu World newspaper of the 1930s was the most successful. Although hardly radical, it was bombed twice by the Ossewabrandwag in the 1940s. In 1960, it was rebranded The World and became a daily, rather than weekly, paper. The Cape Standard, the Sun and The Torch were similar newspapers aimed at the Coloured population while Indians was served by papers including The Leader, The Graphic and Indian Views.¹¹⁰⁸ Other dissenting papers included the Inululeko, the printed word of the Communist Party in South Africa, and the Liberal Party's newspaper, Contact. The mainstream newspaper The Cape Times published articles critical of Dr. Verwoerd, along with political cartoons.¹¹⁰⁹

From 1951, for a period of twelve years,¹¹¹⁰ Drum Magazine featured the work of most of South Africa's best Black writers, including Ezekiel Mphahlele and Casey Motsisi. With a focus on literature and entertainment, Drum had considerable mass appeal among readers from urban townships, where literacy skills were growing,¹¹¹¹ in part as a result of urbanisation.¹¹¹² While the magazine published some exposés that discussed discrimination and repression, these topics were also covered in its literary offerings,¹¹¹³ which drew on both native African and European traditional, literary and intellectual sources.¹¹¹⁴ White liberal Alan Paton's famous novel Cry the Beloved Country was initially published in Drum in serial format.¹¹¹⁵ The Rand Daily Mail, discussed in some detail below in the context of the Sharpeville massacre, was often targeted by the government for reporting on matters the authorities wished to keep quiet.¹¹¹⁶

WHITE RESISTANCE

Although an overwhelming majority of Whites supported the National Party and its policies, a small but vocal number raised dissenting voices and campaigned against apartheid.¹¹¹⁷

¹¹⁰⁸ Couzens, 1984: 25-33.

¹¹⁰⁹ The Economist, 7 August 1965: 1, 'White man's country'; Shaw, 1999.

¹¹¹⁰ Rabkin, 1975: 1.

¹¹¹¹ Couzens, 1984: 30.

¹¹¹² Rabkin, 1975: 4.

¹¹¹³ Choonoo, 1997: 252.

¹¹¹⁴ Rabkin, 1975: 39.

¹¹¹⁵ Choonoo, 1997: 254.

¹¹¹⁶ The Rand Daily Mail revealed the truth about the death in custody of anti-Apartheid activist Steve Biko, in 1977. (Pogrud, 2000: 284) In 1985, when the newspaper was finally closed, The Sowetan, the leading black newspaper at the time, published the following remarks: "It was the first paper to regard [Blacks] as human beings. It fought for them. Its blend of inspirational and aggressive writing was the talk of the times" (Knight, 2000).

¹¹¹⁷ Buthelezi, 1990: 7.

Several outspoken Whites were prosecuted for their opposition activities, but this was mainly during the 1950s. With the arrival of the increasingly violent sixties, state repression increased and overt white dissent dwindled. It was only in the 1970s, when questions were raised in public about the sustainability of apartheid, that the white anti-government voice was heard again.¹¹¹⁸

Notable White anti-apartheid activists included P.V. Pistorius, a professor of Greek at the University of Pretoria, Edgar Brookes, professor of history and political science at the University of Natal, D.V. Cowen, professor of comparative law at the University of Cape Town, Monica Wilson, professor of anthropology at the University of Cape Town, D.M. Robertson, professor of economics at the University of Cape Town and Philip Tobias, professor of anatomy at the University of Witwatersrand. A number of judges, notably Albert van der Sandt and O.D. Schreiner, had come out as opponents of apartheid.¹¹¹⁹ Alex Hepple of the South African Labour Party was deeply involved. He was eventually forced to flee South Africa with his family, after which he set up the International Defence and Aid Fund,¹¹²⁰ which he and his wife ran from their new home in London.¹¹²¹

Considerable numbers of Whites also went to great effort to support the anti-apartheid struggle. After 1962, thirty-six freedom fighters were given substantial prison sentences for working towards the goals of banned organisations, acts of sabotage, and engaging in what the government had designated as terrorism. In 1965, John Harris, a member of the Liberal Party and of the African Resistance Movement who had planted a bomb in a Johannesburg train station, was executed for sabotage.¹¹²²

Some of the strongest supporters of the anti-apartheid movement were from wealthy backgrounds. For example, Harry Oppenheimer, one of the richest men in South Africa was financially supporting the Progressive Party,¹¹²³ while Helen Suzman, the lone liberal voice in the South African Parliament for much of Dr. Verwoerd's era and the only member of the ¹¹¹⁸ Jaster and Jaster, 1992: x.

¹¹¹⁹ Thompson, 1966: 173.

¹¹²⁰ The International Defence and Aid Fund for South Africa was created in Lonon in June 1964 "in order to assist in the development of a non-racial society in South Africa based on a democratic way of life" (IDAF constitution, Information Service Manual, n.d.).

¹¹²¹ Hepple, 2011: 83.

¹¹²² Mandela, 2001: 39-40.

¹¹²³ Hanf et al, 1981: 100.

Progressive Party, voted into government in 1961, represented Houghton, a wealthy Johannesburg suburb.¹¹²⁴

A further anti-apartheid voice was found in politicians who had served in the government under the Representation of Natives Act, such as Margaret Ballinger.¹¹²⁵ Various White authors had published searing criticisms of apartheid, most famously Alan Paton's Cry, the Beloved Country.¹¹²⁶ Other authors and journalists who criticised apartheid strongly included Mary Benson,¹¹²⁷ Colin¹¹²⁸ and his wife Margaret Legum¹¹²⁹ and Anthony Delius.¹¹³⁰ Many had been forced to leave and continued their criticisms from overseas.¹¹³¹

Under Dr. Verwoerd, Jewish loyalty was often queried. In fact, there was great variety in Jews' attitudes towards the apartheid state,¹¹³² and the South Jewish Board of Deputies¹¹³³ actually formally congratulated Dr. Verwoerd on his election in person,¹¹³⁴ despite (or perhaps because of) the fact that so many Jews were extremely anxious about what it would mean for them.¹¹³⁵ Although the Jewish community was certainly not united against apartheid, Jews were disproportionately represented in a number of protesting bodies, including the Communist Party.¹¹³⁶

The police were obsessed with Jews, and for them being a Jew was a crime in itself; one of the reasons for this being that they associated Jews with Communism.¹¹³⁷ Jewish ¹¹²⁴ Attwell, 1986: 93.

¹¹²⁵ Thompson, 1966: 174.

¹¹²⁶ Thompson, 2001: 205.

¹¹²⁷ (1919-2000) Author and anti-apartheid campaigner. In 1966, she was 'banned' by the apartheid authorities, forcing her to leave the country and go in exile (Troup and Devenish (The Guardian), 21 June 2000, 'Mary Benson').

¹¹²⁸ (1919-2003) Journalist, author and anti-apartheid activist. He and wife Margaret co-authored in 1964, the South Africa: Crisis for the West, one of the most important books against apartheid and the first that appealed for sanctions against South Africa in order to bring a peaceful end to apartheid (Vigne, 2000).

¹¹²⁹ (1933-2007) Author, economist, lecturer and anti-apartheid activist; she co-authored in 1964 with her husband the highly influential South Africa: Crisis for the West (Herbstein, 2007).

¹¹³⁰ (1916-1989) Author, poet and apartheid critique who lived in exile in England. His 1959 widely acclaimed satiric long poem, The Last Division, criticized and attacked apartheid, while it also foretold its collapse (Haywood, 2000: 58).

¹¹³¹ Buthelezi, 1990: 7.

¹¹³² Bernstein, 1966: 452.

¹¹³³ The representative institution of South African Jewry (Shain, 2008: 147).

¹¹³⁴ Hepple, 1966: 30; Stevens, 1971: 128.

¹¹³⁵ Shimoni, 1980: 272.

¹¹³⁶ Belling, 2002: 1.

¹¹³⁷ Suttner, 2001: 28.

activists included Joe Slovo,¹¹³⁸ considered the “Great Satan” by supporters of apartheid,¹¹³⁹ Rowley Arenstein,¹¹⁴⁰ Ruth First,¹¹⁴¹ Braam Fischer,¹¹⁴² Denis Goldberg,¹¹⁴³ Arthur ¹¹³⁸ (1926-1995) Lawyer and one of the leading revolutionaries of the anti-apartheid struggle. One of the most prominent members of the ANC, leader of the South African Communist Party and commander of the Umkhonto we Sizwe. He was repeatedly arrested and banned by the apartheid authorities and lived in exile from 1963 to 1990. A mastermind of South Africa's national reconciliation; he was appointed by Nelson Mandela as Minister of Housing in the first democratically elected government in 1994. He was also Ruth First's husband (Keller, 1995). For further reading see: Slovo, J. (1997) Slovo: The Unfinished Autobiography of ANC Leader Joe Slovo; Wieder, A. (2013) Ruth First and Joe Slovo in the War to End Apartheid.

¹¹³⁹ Mufson, 1990: 220.

¹¹⁴⁰ (1919-1996) Attorney, prominent anti-apartheid activist who was opposed to violence, trade union advisor, member of the South African Communist Party, leader of the Congress of Democrats and an official advisor to Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi (South Africa History Online, n.d.). He was banned from 1953 to 1955 and from 1960 to 1986, while he was under house arrest from 1962 to 1980 and disbar from practising law because of a law which made it illegal for those who were listed as communists or Marxists practising law (Arenstein quoted in Suttner, 1997: 386). He was banned in total for thirty-three years, longer than anyone else during apartheid (Adler, 2000: 24). As we will see later, two witnesses testified to the police during the Dr. Verwoerd assassination investigation that Tsafendas was associated with Arenstein.

¹¹⁴¹ (1925-1982) Leading anti-apartheid activist, author, lecturer and wife of Joe Slovo. One of the defendants in the Treason Trial, she was banned, imprisoned and tortured. She was the first White woman to be detained in isolation without charge for 117 days under the Ninety-Day Detention Law. From 1973 to 1978, she worked as a lecturer of development studies at Durham University, England. She was assassinated in Maputo in 1988, by the South African Secret Services, with a parcel bomb (Marks, 1983: 123-128). For more about Ruth First see: First, R. (1965) 117 Days: An Account of Confinement and Interrogation Under the South African 90-Day Detention Law; Gerry, C. (1982) Ruth First: A Tribute; Marks, S. (1983) Ruth First: A Tribute; Wieder, A. (2013) Ruth First and Joe Slovo in the War to End Apartheid.

¹¹⁴² (1908-1975) A lawyer, an important anti-apartheid revolutionary and a prominent members of the South African Communist Party. He defended many anti-apartheid figures, including Nelson Mandela in the Rivonia trial (Mandela, 1995: 202, 305). He was arrested after spending 290 days underground. After being convicted for “furthering the aims of communism and conspiracy to overthrow the government” he was imprisoned from 1966 to 1974 (Sisulu, 2003: 266). He was described by Mandela as one of the “bravest and staunchest friends of the freedom struggle that I have ever known” (Mandela, 1995: 79). For further reading: Clingman, S. (2013) Bram Fischer: Afrikaner Revolutionary; Meredith, M. (2002) Fischer's Choice: A Life of Bram Fischer.

¹¹⁴³ (1933-) A civil engineer and one of the key figures of the anti-apartheid struggle; member of the Communist Party, of the Umkhonto we Sizwe and leader of the Congress of Democrats. He was convicted at the Rivonia Trial for ‘conspiracy to overthrow the state’ and spent the next twenty-two years in prison (Broder (Chicago Tribune), 21 March 1985, ‘Apartheid fight still his passion’). Goldberg was released in 1985 and promptly resumed activities against apartheid within the ANC. In the late 1980s he visited Greece in search of support for the struggle and the Greek Prime Minister, Andreas Papandreou, expressed his willingness to help in any possible way. Subsequently, at Goldberg's request, Papandreou's government provided the ANC with a rent-free office in the centre of Athens and gave it semi-diplomatic status (Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016). For further reading: Goldberg, D. (2016) A Life for Freedom: The Mission to End Racial Injustice in South Africa.

Goldreich,¹¹⁴⁴ Helen Joseph,¹¹⁴⁵ Ronnie Kasrils,¹¹⁴⁶ Harold Wolpe,¹¹⁴⁷ Solly¹¹⁴⁸ and Albie Sachs.¹¹⁴⁹ As a general rule, however, the more orthodox the Jew the less likely he was to oppose apartheid.¹¹⁵⁰

There were also a few brave lawyers such as V.C. Berrange, G. Bizos, A. Chaskalson, W. Cooper (who also defended Tsafendas), G. Duncan, H. Hanson, S.W. Kentridge, D. Kunny, G. Lowen, I.A. Maisels, R.M. Marais, D.B. Molteno, G.B. Muller, I. Mohammed, H. Pitman, N. Philips, D. Soggot, R.S. Welsh, E.M. Wentzel and A.B. Wilson, who demonstrated the courage and dignity, in a hostile and fevered political South African of the time and to defend individuals of all races charged with treason, terrorism, sabotage and other political crimes.¹¹⁵¹ Other notable White anti-apartheid activists of the time included Molly Doyle Anderson, Alan Brooks, Florence Duncan, Dr. Costas Gazidis, Eve Hall, Michael ¹¹⁴⁴ (1929-2011) An abstract painter, an important Umkhonto we Sizwe member and a very significant anti-apartheid revolutionary. In 1961, he and Harold bought the Lilliesleaf Farm in Rivonia with Communist Party money to use it as headquarters for the underground Party and as a safe house for political fugitives. Together with sixteen others he was arrested in the notorious July 11th, 1963 police raid, but later managed to escape from prison. In the 1940s he had fought with the Palmach, an elite military wing of the Jewish National Movement, in Palestine (Keable, 2012: 1-20; Martin, 2011: B7).

¹¹⁴⁵ (1905-1992) Teacher, trade union activist and leading anti-apartheid figure who became the symbol of white opposition to apartheid. One of the founding members of both the Congress for Democrats and the Federation of South African Women. She was jailed and banned four times, spending most of her life under house arrest, while she was also declared a "listed person," a punishment intended to prevent her from being quoted in any form. She was one of the defendants in the Treason Trial, where she was eventually acquitted (Cowell, 1992). For further reading: Joseph, H. (1963) If this be Treason: Helen Joseph's Dramatic Account of the Treason Trial, the Longest in South Africa's History and One of the Strangest Trials of the 20th Century; Joseph, H. (1966) Tomorrow's Sun: A Smuggled Journal from South Africa; Joseph, H. (1986) Side by Side: The Autobiography of Helen Joseph.

¹¹⁴⁶ (1938-) One of the most important figures of the anti-apartheid struggle; member of the ANC and of the South African Communist Party. A founding and leading member of the Umkhonto we Sizwe, he recruited and trained several of its fighters. He served as Minister of Intelligence Service from 2004 to 2008 (Jeffries, 2015). For further reading about Kasrils see: Kasrils, R. (1993) Armed and Dangerous: My Undercover Struggle Against Apartheid; Kasrils, R. (2012) The Unlikely Secret Agent; Keable, K. (ed.) (2012) London Recruits: The Secret War Against Apartheid.

¹¹⁴⁷ (1926-1996) A sociologist, attorney, lecturer and a prominent member of the South African Communist Party. He was a leading figure of the leading figures of the anti-apartheid struggle. In 1961, he and Arthur Goldreich purchased the Lilliesleaf Farm (mentioned above). He was also arrested there on July 11th, 1963, but managed to escape from the prison, along with Goldreich and two others. He moved to England where he spent the next thirty years of his life (O'Meara, 1997). For more about Wolpe see: Friedman, S. (2015) Race, Class and Power: Harold Wolpe and the Radical Critique of Apartheid.

¹¹⁴⁸ (1900-1976) Leading trade unionist, prominent anti-apartheid author and activist, member of the South African Communist Party and father of the anti-apartheid lawyer and Judge Albie Sachs (Verwey, 1995: 220-222).

¹¹⁴⁹ (1935-) Son of Solly Sachs; anti-apartheid activist, lawyer, Judge and author. In 1988, while in Maputo, Mozambique, he lost an eye and an arm when a bomb, placed by the South African secret Services, exploded in his car (Adler, 2000: 24) For further reading about Sachs see his books: The Jail Diary of Albie Sachs (1966); Running to Maputo (1990); The Soft Vengeance of a Freedom Fighter (2014); Albie Sachs and Transformation in South Africa: From Revolutionary Activist to Constitutional Court Judge (2014).

¹¹⁵⁰ Shimoni, 2003: 75-76.

¹¹⁵¹ Dugard, 1978: 243.

Harmel, Dennis Higgs, Percy Jack Hodgson, Samantha Kemp, David Kitson, Adran Leftwich, Hugh Lewin, Ann Nicholson, Sylvia Nyame, Neville Rubin, Jean Strachan, Paul Trehwela, Ben and Mary Turok.¹¹⁵²

OFFICIAL OPPOSITION TO DR. VERWOERD

The South African party system was described in 1966 by Leonard Thompson, Professor of History Emeritus at Yale University, to consist of right wing and centre parties, but none from the left.¹¹⁵³ There were three main opposition parties: the United Party; the Progressive Party and the Liberal Party of South Africa (LPSA).¹¹⁵⁴ While each opposed Dr. Verwoerd's policies to varying degrees, they were largely ineffectual against the march of apartheid in a country where just 2% of Blacks belonged to the "bourgeois" middle class, while most lived in abject poverty.¹¹⁵⁵ The multi-racial Liberal Party suffered such extreme harassment under Dr. Verwoerd that it was "crippled to the point of paralysis."¹¹⁵⁶

THE UNITED PARTY

The United Party was formed when Prime Minister Barry Hertzog's National Party merged with the South African Party of Jan Smuts, together with the small Unionist Party. Hertzog led until 1939, when he refused to allow South Africa to go to war with Britain against Germany. Its full name the United National Party of South Africa,¹¹⁵⁷ it ruled South Africa from 1934 to 1948 and had support from Afrikaner and English-speaking Whites, and from Coloureds, with a core of support coming from English-speaking voters.¹¹⁵⁸

While the United Party fiercely opposed the National Party, it also subscribed to ideas of white supremacy and supported the concept of apartheid.¹¹⁵⁹ The majority of the United Party caucus were of a different mind, and Hertzog resigned. Jan Smuts succeeded him and led the party and the country throughout World War II and the immediate post-war years. The party was led by de Villiers Graaff from 1956 to 1977, who largely supported the harsh ¹¹⁵² Pike, 1985: 338-370, 408-419.

¹¹⁵³ Thompson, L. (1966) The Republic of South Africa.

¹¹⁵⁴ Brookes, 1968: 27-40.

¹¹⁵⁵ Feit, 1967: 25.

¹¹⁵⁶ Hepple, 1966: 171.

¹¹⁵⁷ Rosenthal, 1978.

¹¹⁵⁸ Wilson and Thompson, 1969: 421.

¹¹⁵⁹ Muller, 1981: 429.

security legislation of the ruling government and could not provide a constant political image or develop a clear alternative to government policies.¹¹⁶⁰ Ultimately, while de Villiers Graaff has been characterised as essentially an “honest” and “decent” man, his actions as leader of the opposition bolstered apartheid, largely because of his reluctance to deal with confrontation, including with the ruling National Party and despite its many excesses, but also because he was simply not the intellectual equal of the talented Dr. Verwoerd.¹¹⁶¹

THE LIBERAL PARTY OF SOUTH AFRICA (LPSA)¹¹⁶²

A liberal party formed by Alan Paton¹¹⁶³ in 1953 and dissolved in 1968, the LPSA arose in response to the belief that the United Party was an ineffective opposition to apartheid and to National Party. The LPSA aimed to bring together whites who were liberals, but not communists.¹¹⁶⁴ Early leaders included Ambrose Reeves,¹¹⁶⁵ an Anglican bishop who was very active in campaigning against apartheid, Margaret Ballinger,¹¹⁶⁶ an influential politician and outspoken critic of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, and Alan Paton, author of Cry, the Beloved Country.

The LPSA defined its goals as “equal rights for all civilised men and equal opportunities for all men and women to become civilised.” The party has been retrospectively criticised for its naivety and assumption of white leadership,¹¹⁶⁷ but in the context of the time

¹¹⁶⁰ Hanf et al, 1981: 100

¹¹⁶¹ Mouton, 2014: 48-53.

¹¹⁶² For further reading about the LPSA see: Vigne, R. (1997) Liberals Against Apartheid: A History of the Liberal Party of South Africa, 1953-1968.

¹¹⁶³ (1903-1988) an Anti-apartheid activist, an important South African writer and the founder of the Liberal Party, the apartheid authorities considered him an enemy and, without giving a reason for it, Dr. Verwoerd confiscated his passport in 1960 on his return from a visit to Britain and the United States. It was generally accepted that this was because of attacks Paton had made on Dr. Verwoerd's policies while he was overseas. (Mitgang, 1988). For more about Paton see his two autobiographies: Towards the Mountain: An Autobiography (1980) and Journey Continued: An Autobiography (1988). See also: Paton, A. (1992) Some Sort of a Job: My Life with Alan Paton.

¹¹⁶⁴ University of KwaZulu-Natal: Alan Paton Centre and Struggle Archives; Daniels, 2001: 218.

¹¹⁶⁵ (1899-1980) An Anglican priest and fierce anti-apartheid activist who personally witnessed the Sharpeville massacre. He was deported from South Africa a few months after the massacre (Time, 26 September 1960, ‘Out goes the Bishop’) and subsequently wrote the ‘Shooting at Sharpeville: Agony of South Africa’ which was the first work that documented the atrocity.

¹¹⁶⁶ (1894–1980) An anti-apartheid politician, the author of the 1969 anti-apartheid book From Union to Apartheid: A Trek to Isolation, and the first President of the Liberal Party. She served as a member of the Parliament from 1937 to 1960 (African Affairs, 1961), was a Native Representative and described by TIME (3 July 1944) as the “Queen of the Blacks” for the work she had carried out for the rights of the Black majority. For further reading see: Mouton, F.A. (1997) Voices in the Desert: Margaret and William Ballinger-A Biography.

¹¹⁶⁷ Vigne, 1997: 12-13.

its members were putting themselves in a vulnerable situation. This may be one reason why it never gained mass support.¹¹⁶⁸ The Liberal Party's official newspaper, Contact, was the only one to report the atrocities carried out in Robben Island (discussed below) in the early 1960s, referring to the island as "Devil's Island."¹¹⁶⁹ In 1968 legislation under Vorster prohibited multiracial parties, and Liberals disbanded rather than sacrificing their principles.¹¹⁷⁰

THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY¹¹⁷¹

The Progressive Party was founded in 1959 by a liberal break-away element of the United Party that opposed apartheid fiercely.¹¹⁷² It was represented in parliament by just one elected member, Helen Suzman,¹¹⁷³ who took her seat after the General Election of 1961 and became Parliament's most effective champion of civil and human rights.¹¹⁷⁴ Notable members of the time included Dr. Jan Steytler (1910- date of death unknown) who also served as the first leader of the Party and Dr. Bernard Friedman (1896-1984), co-founder of the Party.¹¹⁷⁵ The Party was largely peopled by educated, upper middle class Whites and had considerable support from wealthy Anglophones, including many Jews.¹¹⁷⁶ It also obtained both financial and organizational support from Harry Oppenheimer, one of the wealthiest South Africans, who had joined the Party in 1959.¹¹⁷⁷

¹¹⁶⁸ Bush, 1999: 200.

¹¹⁶⁹ Daniels, 2001: 220.

¹¹⁷⁰ Hanf et al, 1981: 99.

¹¹⁷¹ For further reading about the Progressive Party see: Strangways-Booth, J. (1976) A Cricket in the Thorn Tree: Helen Suzman and the Progressive Party of South Africa.

¹¹⁷² Pierce, 1999.

¹¹⁷³ (1917-2009) A strident, active activist against apartheid. She was first elected to the Parliament in 1953 as member of the United Party. One of the founders of the Progressive Party, she was its only member of Parliament for thirteen years (1961-1974). In total, she spent thirty-six years in the South African Parliament (The Economist, 18 January 2014, 'Helen Suzman. Liberal light'). Post journalist Veruschka Mungroo (2009), said of her that "she possessed the courage of a lioness with the gentleness of a lamb, combined with the compassion of the deer." For further reading about Suzman see: Suzman, H. (1993) In No Uncertain Terms: A South African Memoir; Lee, R. (1991) Values Alive: A Tribute to Helen Suzman; Lewsen, P. (ed.) (1991) Helen Suzman's Solo Years; Renwick, R (2014) Helen Suzman: Bright Star in a Dark Chamber; Strangways-Booth, J. (1976) A Cricket in the Thorn Tree: Helen Suzman and the Progressive Party of South Africa.

¹¹⁷⁴ Hanf et al, 1981: 100.

¹¹⁷⁵ Strangways-Booth, 1976.

¹¹⁷⁶ Hanf et al, 1981: 100.

¹¹⁷⁷ Pallister et al, 1988: 82, 86.

EXTERNAL RESISTANCE

By the 1960s, external resistance to apartheid was more widespread, and there was an increasingly organised body of South African exiles running offices for the South African United Front in London, Accra, Cairo, Dar-es-Salaam and New York, to mobilise international opinion.¹¹⁷⁸ In November 1962, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution requesting that members exercise economic sanctions¹¹⁷⁹ against South Africa,¹¹⁸⁰ and in 1963 called on South Africa to free prisoners who had been jailed for opposing apartheid.¹¹⁸¹

In 1962, the newsletter Africa Today urged opposition to apartheid, noting the lack of external opposition. It urged Americans to boycott South African produce and pressure the government for sanctions.¹¹⁸² Many other newspapers were highly critical of apartheid, and foreign journalists working in South Africa were at risk of arrest.¹¹⁸³ In Africa, the Organisation of Africa United, founded in 1963, campaigned against apartheid and gathered funds while supporting a boycott movement.¹¹⁸⁴ The same year, representatives from various Scandinavian countries rejected Dr. Verwoerd's offer that they should see South Africa for themselves.¹¹⁸⁵

Also in 1963, by 67 votes to 13, with 23 abstentions, the UN voted that member states should break off relations with the country, including forbidding entry of South African ships to their ports, not allowing their own ships to visit South Africa, the boycott of South African goods, and refusing to allow South African planes to land. It called on members not to supply South Africa with weapons, ammunition and military vehicles and for an oil embargo. Only the UK, the US and France, the three largest investors in South Africa, and Spain and Portugal, which were still trying to hold onto their colonies, voted against the embargo.¹¹⁸⁶ The same year, the Addis Ababa Conference of Independent African States called on its members to sever diplomatic relations with South Africa.¹¹⁸⁷

¹¹⁷⁸ van den Berghe, 1967: 254.

¹¹⁷⁹ For a detailed account of the sanctions against South Africa see Rogers, B., Bolton, B. (1981) Sanctions against South Africa: Exploding the Myths.

¹¹⁸⁰ Malhotra, 1964: 135.

¹¹⁸¹ Schifter, 1993: 368.

¹¹⁸² Africa Today, 1962: 16.

¹¹⁸³ The New York Times, 10 April 1960: n.p., 'Toronto Star editor held in South Africa.'

¹¹⁸⁴ Thompson, 1966: 201.

¹¹⁸⁵ de Kiewiet, 1964: 413.

¹¹⁸⁶ Africa Today, 1964: 2.

¹¹⁸⁷ Ainslie and Robinson, 1963: 5.

In 1964, a UN Security Council sent up an Expert Committee to explore measures that could be taken against South Africa, and total sanctions against the country were proposed.¹¹⁸⁸ In September 1964, in Moscow, an “International Court of public opinion” was set up as a youth anti-apartheid forum to try Dr. Verwoerd for racist crimes. The “Court” “ordered” Dr. Verwoerd to appear before it and answer for crimes committed against the non-Whites in South Africa. Naturally, Dr. Verwoerd did not attend and was “tried” in absentia. The “Court” concluded that the South African leader was liable to be condemned as a heinous, international criminal and an enemy of mankind.¹¹⁸⁹

On September 21, 1965, the South African Minister of Foreign Affairs, Hilgard Muller, addressed a largely empty UN chamber, as two thirds of the delegates had left in protest.¹¹⁹⁰ In Britain, shoppers were urged to boycott South African fruit.¹¹⁹¹ The United States’ growing support for the liberation of American Blacks prompted sympathies with South Africans,¹¹⁹² and the government stated its disapproval of apartheid; Dr. Verwoerd expressed outrage when the United States embassy to South Africa invited guests of all races to its Fourth of July party in 1965,¹¹⁹³ when it refused to rule out hiring non-Whites to work in the two space-observation stations it had in South Africa,¹¹⁹⁴ and when an aircraft carrier berth was not allowed to stop in Cape Town rather than observe Dr. Verwoerd’s demands about non-White Navy members aboard.¹¹⁹⁵

In Europe, fifteen countries had signed the European Declaration of Human Rights.¹¹⁹⁶ The Dutch government announced plans in 1965 to contribute to the Christian Defence and Aid Fund; the South African Foreign Affairs Minister, Dr Muller, lodged a formal complaint and the government punished Holland by refusing its national airline, KLM, additional landing slots in Johannesburg.¹¹⁹⁷ The International Defence and Aid Fund

¹¹⁸⁸ Thompson, 1966: 208-209.

¹¹⁸⁹ The Canberra Times, 19 September 1964: 11, ‘Dr. Verwoerd “summoned” to Moscow’; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

¹¹⁹⁰ Dugard, 1965: 52.

¹¹⁹¹ Herbstein, 2004: 40.

¹¹⁹² Thompson, 1966: 199.

¹¹⁹³ Hepple, 1967: 201; The New York Times, 27 June 1965: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd scores US guest lists’; McKay, 1966b: 42-43.

¹¹⁹⁴ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 28 June 1965: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd race bar challenges US at space tracking stations’; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 3 July 1965: 2, ‘South Africa raids paper over prison articles: Detectives seize copy.’; McKay, 1966b: 42-43.

¹¹⁹⁵ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 18 August 1965: 9, ‘Dr. Verwoerd denies he is goading US’; ¹¹⁹⁶ Baker, 1965: 552.

¹¹⁹⁷ Hepple, 1967: 201; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 17 June 1965: 2, ‘Dutch assailed by South Africa.’

(set up to defend and pay for the legal expenses of those in the Treason Trial)¹¹⁹⁸ which published widely on South Africa, was a very important tool in getting information to the public overseas,¹¹⁹⁹ and collected money to defend anti-apartheid activists in South Africa,¹²⁰⁰ while activists encouraged Britain to boycott South African goods; the government investigated the feasibility of doing so.¹²⁰¹

At grassroots level there was considerable British opposition, particularly among trade unionists and left wing politicians. Other European countries, including Holland and the Scandinavian countries, had been strongly anti-apartheid from the start, and Denmark in particular provided moral and practical support to the ANC.¹²⁰² In Sweden, the government ordered hospitals and the army not to buy South African products, the state monopoly on alcohol sales ceased buying South African drinks, and cooperative supermarkets no longer stocked South African produce.¹²⁰³ To criticisms from Israel, Dr. Verwoerd furiously stated that the young sovereign state contained within its borders Arabs whom it did not treat as it treated Jewish Israelis.¹²⁰⁴

One of the most severe critics of apartheid was India. A major point of Indian foreign policy had been the emancipation of South Africa from apartheid. It had raised the issue of apartheid with the UN in 1946 and 1952. India was the first country to impose sanctions, and after the Sharpeville Massacre the Prime Minister, Pandit Nehru, stated that India was aware that, bad as things were for the Indian South Africans, they were even worse for the Blacks. It joined with African states in calling for a Security Council discussion of apartheid in 1960 and, in 1962, for sanctions.¹²⁰⁵ However, the United States agreed with South Africa that the treatment of South African Indians was an internal affair.¹²⁰⁶ In 1964, when Nehru died, Dr. Verwoerd made a point by ignoring this without making any statement, as India had not been a “friendly state.”¹²⁰⁷

¹¹⁹⁸ Muller, 1981: 498.

¹¹⁹⁹ Herbstein, 2004: xviii.

¹²⁰⁰ Herbstein, 2004: 86.

¹²⁰¹ Fieldhouse, 2005: 10-14.

¹²⁰² Dubow, 2014: 50-53; Herbstein, 2004: 109.

¹²⁰³ Herbstein, 2004: 110-111.

¹²⁰⁴ Stevens, 1971: 134.

¹²⁰⁵ Reddy, 1991: 3-6.

¹²⁰⁶ Minter and Hill, 2008: 749.

¹²⁰⁷ The New York Times, 29 May 1964: 6, ‘South Africa silent over Nehru’s death.’

DR. VERWOERD'S POLICE STATE

Dr. Verwoerd was determined to continue his apartheid policy and crush all who opposed it. He had no hesitation in removing basic human rights, even those protected by international law, from his opponents, and turning South Africa into a repressive, totalitarian police state. Some 79% of the population lived as if under martial law. In 1957, a year before becoming Prime Minister, he swore that, "we will use an iron hand against those who undermine the government's apartheid policy."¹²⁰⁸ In the following years up to his death, he did exactly that, and more.

Since 1950, when the Unlawful Organisations Bill was introduced, the government had executive authority to ban the Communist Party and any organisation or person whom the Minister of Justice considered "unlawful."¹²⁰⁹ Legislation which gave the government extensive new powers to restrict the freedom of its citizens was the Public Safety Act introduced in 1953. This made it possible for the ruling regime to impose states of emergency, with all of their draconian powers, as and when they wished, and to strengthen penalties against anyone who opposed or backed the repeal of a particular law.¹²¹⁰

South Africa became ever more a police state under Dr. Verwoerd with the enthusiastic participation of his Minister of Justice, John Vorster.¹²¹¹ While South Africa was certainly not the only repressive country at the time, it was unique insofar as the great bulk of the state's repressive techniques took place within the legal system.¹²¹² Dr. Verwoerd had learned from the Treason Trial that if he wanted to dispatch his critics, he would also have to dispatch the rule of law,¹²¹³ and he arranged for new legislation to allow the most egregious forms of state repression imaginable.¹²¹⁴

Whereas once only murder had carried the death penalty, in the 1950s it was extended to include armed robbery and some cases of housebreaking, and in 1962 the act of sabotage, defined loosely:¹²¹⁵ "... any person who committed any wrong or wilful act whereby he/she injured, obstructed, tampered with or destroyed the health or safety of the public, the ¹²⁰⁸ Cachalia, 1990: 10.

¹²⁰⁹ Ballinger, 1969: 391.

¹²¹⁰ Davenport and Saunders, 2000b: 387; Rudolph, 1984: 3.

¹²¹¹ O'Meara, 1996: 109.

¹²¹² Fullard, 2004: 341.

¹²¹³ "A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 3.

¹²¹⁴ Fullard, 2004: 342.

¹²¹⁵ Sachs, 1970: 2.

maintenance of law and order, the supply of water, light, power, fuel or foodstuffs, sanitary, medical or fire extinguishing services could be tried for sabotage.”¹²¹⁶

Under the terms of the Sabotage Act, the accused had to prove that he was innocent, rather than vice versa.¹²¹⁷ Dr. Verwoerd admitted that, despite attempts to copper-fasten apartheid, black urban populations continued to increase. He warned Whites that if they wished for segregation they would have to get used to “managing without natives.”¹²¹⁸ Helen Suzman characterised the Sabotage Act as the “most sinister” move in South Africa’s history to build a “camouflaged dictatorship behind the façade of democracy.”¹²¹⁹

Among Verwoerd’s innovations were “machine gun belts,” areas where Blacks could be shot by the police if they appeared to threaten White residential areas during uprisings. According to the Cape Times in 1958, “banishments, deportations, shootings, burnings, arson, closing of schools” were the order of the day in what it called “Verwoerd’s Native Empire.”¹²²⁰ The same year, The Economist wrote that South Africa was “not quite yet” a police state, but that it was well on its way.¹²²¹

In 1959, a passage of the Prisons Act formalised a system whereby prisoners could be rented out to farmers for the provision of cheap labour.¹²²² By 1961, with strikes prohibited by law, every attempt at civil protest was followed by police raids, when officers served for “subversives” and any pamphlets or other material they might have, and arrested people summarily.¹²²³ At the same time Dr. Verwoerd’s Government encouraged the White population to train in the use of arms to protect themselves and their privileges in case of a Black uprising.¹²²⁴

As apartheid became more and more entrenched, increasingly the tendency was for all Blacks to be treated as assumed criminals until proven otherwise.¹²²⁵ Policemen treated Blacks with appalling violence, and were rarely punished. In 1959, a total of 311 men in the South African police were convicted for assault, and only twenty-nine were discharged. In ¹²¹⁶ Fullard, 2004: 345.

¹²¹⁷ “A Distinguished South African Lawyer,” 1962: 6.

¹²¹⁸ Vatcher, 1965: 162.

¹²¹⁹ Conley (The New York Times), 24 May 1962: 13, ‘Police state aim laid to Dr. Verwoerd.’

¹²²⁰ Pienaar, 1999: 25.

¹²²¹ The Economist, 18 October 1958: 216, ‘The law’s delay.’

¹²²² Cook, 1974: 12.

¹²²³ The Economist, 27 May 1961: 905, ‘The one sane country.’

¹²²⁴ Pillay, 1963: 4.

¹²²⁵ Cole, 1968: 40.

1960, newspaper editor Patrick Duncan stated that he had seen ten policemen armed with whips made from strips of rubber chase and beat three Africans.¹²²⁶ Any policeman had the right to inspect the home residency of a Black person whenever he wanted to and for whatever reason, at any time of the day or night.¹²²⁷ Dr. Verwoerd was determined to use violence to subdue any protest, regardless of how peaceful, and to suppress any organisation that had as its goal the mobilisation of Blacks.¹²²⁸ In 1962, Nelson Mandela said of South Africa that, "it is a country torn from top to bottom by a fierce racial strife and conflict where the blood of African patriots frequently flows... it is a land ruled by the gun."¹²²⁹

The police and the security services came increasingly to resemble the Gestapo in terms of the arrogance with which they carried out extraordinary acts of violence and the levels of terror they inspired among ordinary Africans,¹²³⁰ with their actions, according to Hans Pienaar, a South African writer, being "more reminiscent of that of an occupying army."¹²³¹ In 1964, Suzanne Cronje in Witness in the Dark: Police Torture and Brutality in South Africa, commented that South Africa's police state closely resembled Hitler's Germany during the 1930s, saying, "in its most terrifying aspects the new order manifests itself in the attitude and activities of the police; and the professional sadism which emerges from the affidavits and case histories of political and other prisoners."¹²³² At that time, three hundred political prisoners were imprisoned and restricted to solitary confinement with no access to reading material, or to a lawyer, and no possibility of seeking redress.¹²³³

Gradually, the police started recruiting greater numbers of Africans, Asians and Coloureds as regular officers. They also hired paid informants.¹²³⁴ However, policemen of different races were treated differently inside the force. Whites had a monopoly on firearms; Black policemen carried sticks or truncheons. Blacks were not recruited into the army, or given gun licences. White police officers enjoyed a wide range of the most modern, sophisticated weaponry and vehicles available and were highly trained and backed by similarly trained reserves.¹²³⁵

¹²²⁶ Hughes, 1961: 195-197.

¹²²⁷ Rubin, 1961: 10.

¹²²⁸ Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group, 1986: 53.

¹²²⁹ Mandela, 1978: 7.

¹²³⁰ Hain, 1996: 84.

¹²³¹ Pienaar, 1999: 25.

¹²³² Cronje, 1964: 1.

¹²³³ "A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 4-5.

¹²³⁴ Johns and Hunt Davis, 1991: 91.

¹²³⁵ Thompson, 1966: 190-191.

On March 26, 1961, the New York Times reported of the growing force of the police and army: "The 25,000 police are equipped with automatic weapons and armoured cars. During last year's state of emergency Mr Verwoerd did not hesitate to use them in Cape Town to drive Africans brutally back to work. The army of about 8,000 men has recently been reorganised to deal mainly with internal uprisings and some of its officers have visited Algeria to study the methods used by the French there. The Air Force is equipped with Sabre jets and helicopters."¹²³⁶

Defence expenditure was quadrupled between 1960-1961 and 1963-1964 while the number men in the regular forces increased from 8,000 to 104,000.¹²³⁷ By 1963, the South African government was spending £78 million a year on the military, exceeding the combined defence expenditure of all the Black independent states of Africa, and even more, another £101 million, on "internal security," that is, the police and the security forces.¹²³⁸ In 1965, the International Commission of Jurists declared on a statement, "Anyone who doubts that South Africa has become a police state should examine its laws. The question is then no longer in doubt."¹²³⁹

TORTURE¹²⁴⁰

According to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission "torture was the dominant form of violation by the apartheid police during the 1960s."¹²⁴¹ Dr. Verwoerd said that South Africa's situation was similar to that of Europe's during the Dark Ages, when it had had to struggle to ¹²³⁶ Ingalls (The New York Times), March 26: 1961, 'Dr. Verwoerd adamant on policy.'

¹²³⁷ Legum and Legum, 1964a: 38.

¹²³⁸ Pillay, 1963: 2, 6.

¹²³⁹ "A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 2-3.

¹²⁴⁰ For more about torture during apartheid see: Amnesty International Report (1978) Political Imprisonment in South Africa; Bernstein, H. (1972) South Africa: The Terrorism of Torture; Catholic Institute for International Relations (1982) Torture in South Africa: Recent Documents; Cronje, S. (1964) Witness in the Dark; International Defence and Aid Fund (1967) South African Prisons and the Red Cross Investigation; International Defence and Aid Fund (1970) Trial by Torture: The Case of the 22; Institute for International Relations (1982) Torture in South Africa: Recent Documents; Foster, D. and Sandler, D. (1985) A Study of Detention and Torture in South Africa: A Preliminary Report; Foster, D. (1987) Detention and Torture in South Africa; 'FOCUS on Political Repression in Southern Africa' a series of publication by the International Defence and Aid Fund; Gifford, T. (1981) South Africa's Record of International Terrorism; Institute of Commonwealth Studies (1975) Detention and Détente in Southern Africa; Harlow, B. (2009) Tortured Thoughts: From Marshal Square to Guantanamo Bay; Motala, S. (1987) Behind Closed Doors; Rudolph, H. (1984) Security, Terrorism and Torture: Detainees' Rights in South Africa and Israel: A Comparative Study; Sachs, A. (1970) South Africa: The Violence of Apartheid; Transition (several reports from 1964 to 1975) Torture in South Africa; World Peace Council, J. (1972) Apartheid is Built on Torture; The reports of the TRC.

¹²⁴¹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 3, 1998: 530.

keep the flame of civilisation alight.¹²⁴² One viable comparison of South Africa with medieval Europe was in the glee with which the authorities used torture against its citizens. Anyone seen as a threat to the regime was liable to be seized by the authorities and subjected to hideous torture.¹²⁴³

Although torture and other crimes against humanity had already been in use in the 1950s, the new legislation meant that now “a judiciary that had been substantially reconstituted by politically motivated appointments was willing to rule against legal objections to any ill-treatment of detainees.”¹²⁴⁴ Torture became increasingly vicious from the early 1960s onwards with the widespread use of electric shocks.¹²⁴⁵ A sudden and dramatic increase in torture was ascribed to special training given to a squad of security policemen, including Hendrik van den Bergh, head of South Africa's Secret Police. This group was instructed in torture and interrogation techniques developed during the 1954-1962 Franco-Algerian war.¹²⁴⁶

In their fight against communism and other forms of activism, Dr. Verwoerd's apartheid authorities used indefinite detention without trial, solitary confinement, constant exposure to bright lights, torture, including electrocution, partial suffocation and beatings. These laws were used for various purposes, including removing particular people from political organisations, splitting said organisations, and for intimidating the public, which inevitably heard the stories of torture and death; the creation of a climate of fear.¹²⁴⁷

Torture was not restricted to those who posed a direct threat to the regime, but also to potential informants. For instance, Bram Fischer, who would defend Mandela in the Rivonia trial, was captured after a woman he knew was interrogated for seventy continuous hours, often by three at a time, threatened with placement in mental hospital and forced to endure threats against her children, one of whom was disabled.¹²⁴⁸

Detainees described a wide range of mistreatments, including being beaten, electric shocks, tortured with cold water, suffocation with a bag over the head, forced into uncomfortable positions, told lies and interrogated for hour after hour, and degrading ¹²⁴² Black, 1965: 204.

¹²⁴³ Peires, 2004: 106.

¹²⁴⁴ Lodge, 2011: 178.

¹²⁴⁵ Fullard, 2004: 356.

¹²⁴⁶ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 16, 195.

¹²⁴⁷ Foster, 1987: 5.

¹²⁴⁸ Peires, 2004: 107.

treatment such as being strip-searched.¹²⁴⁹ All of the government's acts in this area flouted the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948, and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, which were established in 1957.¹²⁵⁰ Many victims developed psychiatric problems and had to be transferred to mental hospitals.¹²⁵¹ By the early 1960s, about sixty four deaths of people being held in detention were reported, and the government did not even bother contesting them.¹²⁵²

In 1963, eleven detainees at Pretoria Central Prison in November made sworn affidavits claiming they were tortured and assaulted by the police while in custody under the 90-day detention law. Only in 1965, at least forty-nine detainees complained of assaults by policemen or warders. Twenty-nine claimed they were beaten up, while twenty claimed they were subjected to electric shocks while sacks were tied over their heads.¹²⁵³ Large numbers of prisoners were believed to have committed suicide rather than allow themselves to be subjected to yet more torture;¹²⁵⁴ or perhaps they were simply murdered and their deaths recorded as suicides, as was so often the case.¹²⁵⁵

Dr. Verwoerd's government maintained that there was no electric shock treatment or any other form of torture in its prisons. Only in 1997, during the TRC hearings, did a government employee (former Security Police Colonel Andrew Taylor) first publicly admit the use of electric shocks by members of the police.¹²⁵⁶ Apart from denying the use of torture, Dr. Verwoerd's government also dedicated itself to punishing warders or former warders who disclosed the reality of the torture of prisoners, and penalising the newspapers that published their reports. On August 19, 1965, the New York Times reported that a former warder was jailed for three years after making a "confession" to the Rand Daily Mail about the use of electric shocks. The warder claimed that he had been well paid for the statements, which the state insisted were utterly false, but the New York Times pointed out that other, similar, statements had been made elsewhere. Among the other revelations about prison life was that in some cases prisoners were expected to use the same toilet bowl for defecating and ¹²⁴⁹ Foster, 1987: 127; 235; Transition, 1976: 53-58; Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 532.

¹²⁵⁰ Foster, 1987: 8.

¹²⁵¹ Bunting, 1986: 227-233.

¹²⁵² Foster, 1987: 2.

¹²⁵³ Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁵⁴ Transition, 1976: 58.

¹²⁵⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

¹²⁵⁶ Suttner, 2001: 29.

brushing their teeth, and that assaults on Black prisoners by White guards were commonplace.¹²⁵⁷

The government and its media machine ramped into gear and launched a savage attack on the Rand Daily Mail and other dissenting publications. At the same time, Laurence Gandar, editor of the Rand Daily Mail, demanded a judicial inquiry into the conditions in which prisoners were kept.¹²⁵⁸ In 1964, a UN Special Committee on the policies of the apartheid government issued a damning report detailing the extent and ferocity of the torture used by Dr. Verwoerd's government. The following are some typical examples:

- Looksmart Solwandle Ngudle was found dead by hanging on his cell on September 5, 1963; he was the first person to die in detention and his death was attributed to suicide.¹²⁵⁹ The police refused to hand his body to the family and he was buried without an autopsy. On 26 November 1963, the counsel for Mrs. Ngudle's family, Vernon Berrange, stated that "twenty witnesses had told him of being subjected to 'gross brutalities' to make them talk. They were told to undress, made to jump up and down and, when exhausted, manacled in a squatting position with a stick under their knees, blindfolded and given electric shocks until they were, in some cases, unconscious."¹²⁶⁰
- On 28 November 1963, Isaac Tiale, a Johannesburg businessman who had undergone detention with Looksmart Ngudle, testified at the inquest that he "went off his head" after being subjected to electric shocks and "had to be put into a straitjacket." He described how he "had been handcuffed and subjected to electric shocks while a bag had been tied over his head until he had lost consciousness twice."¹²⁶¹ The electric shocks and the suffocation with a bag over the head was standard torture practice at the time.¹²⁶²
- Another victim, Ndovela Nxasana, stated, "I was beaten up in Mkambathi... they had beaten me up and they had broken my joints on my hands... they beat me on my buttocks and my hand was injured. I would scream... I am almost deaf because I was electrocuted..."¹²⁶³
- Ivan Frederick Schermbrucker, a 90-day detainee, described his ordeal as such:

¹²⁵⁷ Cook, 1974: 33-34.

¹²⁵⁸ The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, 'Reprisals in South Africa'; Lelyveld (The New York Times) 27 January 1966: 13, 'South African gound guilty of lying about jails.'

¹²⁵⁹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1965: 65; Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁶⁰ Bernstein, 1972: 31; Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁶¹ Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁶² Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 532.

¹²⁶³ Fullard, 2004: 357.

“I stood for 28 hours without moving an inch from 12 p.m. yesterday till 4 p.m. this afternoon. I fell twice, had cold water thrown over me and pulled to my feet. It seems that most of the men detainees here have been kept standing on their feet continuously for anything between 12 hours to 36 hours and that most have broken at one stage. I don't think that anyone can stand on their feet for more than 36 continuous hours and not break down. This is torture good and solid. They laugh and almost bump you, about when you complain. They threatened to keep me standing for days and nights or even longer. They are at their most savage, make no mistake about it.”¹²⁶⁴

- Some prisoners reported to lawyer Joel Carlson that they were told to jump up and down, raising their knees high, until they became exhausted. They were beaten if they stopped. Some were manacled and put in a squatting position, their heads placed over their knees and a broomstick inserted behind their knees and above their elbows. A burlap bag was put over their heads with a cord drawn around their necks and electrical wires were attached to different parts of their bodies. They were repeatedly shocked and it was, they said, excruciatingly painful. Many fainted and when they came to, lying on the floor, water was being thrown in their faces. Then the procedure was repeated all over again. Some defecated and were told to clean up their mess before the torture resumed. Others... were driven mad by the torture and some had been transferred to prison hospitals or mental homes.¹²⁶⁵

- Abdulhai Jassat described the following:
“[After prolonged torture]... they took me to the window; they said ‘Go to that window and jump.’ They put two chairs ... they said, ‘You can now jump.’ I said ‘I refuse.’ They dragged me by my shoulders and lifted me physically up and put my head out of the window. They were holding me by my ankles, each policeman holding one ankle. All I could see was a concrete floor at the bottom. We were three floors up and they would continue asking me questions and all of a sudden one would let go of a foot... and as he's about to catch my foot, the one he had released, the other one would let go, and they played it like that...”¹²⁶⁶

Arthur Goldreich said that he had seen twenty Special Branch policemen beating up Jassat until he had collapsed. He added: “They put a wet sack round his head and tied the cords at his neck till he blacked out. After they revived him they made him stand on one leg, holding a ¹²⁶⁴ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1965: 69; Transition, 1965: 19.

¹²⁶⁵ Fullard, 2004: 357, and similar accounts on 358, 359.

¹²⁶⁶ Fullard, 2004: 360.

stone above his head while they tuck pins into his raised leg. The soles of his feet were then beaten with batons, and electrodes were placed on the toes with the current flowing. Finally they held him by the ankles out of a window 40 feet above the street in trying to get a confession.”¹²⁶⁷

- A report published in 1965 revealed similarly shocking circumstances:

“Mr. Bob Hepple, a Johannesburg lawyer and originally one of the accused in the Rivonia trial, said in Dar es Salaam: ‘The evidence is overwhelming that the 90-day detention law provides a cover for protracted mental and physical torture. I personally eye-witnessed the horrifying effects of such detention on a particular detainee. One night during September or October I was awakened in Pretoria prison by screams emanating from the African section, which continued throughout the night. The next morning I heard the screaming man being pushed along the corridor into the hospital yard. Looking out of my cell window I saw an African man, Z. ... a 90-day detainee held by two warders, his arms twisted behind his back. He was frothing at the mouth and his eyes had the wide, vacant stare of the berserk.

A few weeks later he was still in the hospital yard wearing a straitjacket. His screams by then had degenerated into whimpers which were met by blows from the warder in charge of him. In a number of cases African detainees had been subjected to brutal assault and electric shock treatment. I saw a witness in the Rivonia trial, who is being held in custody, still limping three months after he had been assaulted in order to force a statement from him. One of the Rivonia accused still bears bruise marks from an assault on him by the police during August. Electric shock treatment was also applied to the sensitive parts of his body.’”¹²⁶⁸

- On June 10, 1965, Zephaniah Mothapeng alleged that while he was detained under the 90-day law in the Pretoria Central Police Barracks, the police had kicked him, punched him, trussed him in a sitting position, and then had nearly suffocated him with a canvas bag over his head, before finally applying electric shocks to him.¹²⁶⁹

Although White prisoners were also mistreated, they were much less likely to be physically assaulted. Techniques including sleep deprivation and being obliged to stand in a particular position for a prolonged period were more usual. This changed after July 24th, 1964, when John Harris’s bomb exploded at the Johannesburg Railway Station. Harris was ¹²⁶⁷ Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁶⁸ Transition, 1965: 18.

¹²⁶⁹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1965: 69.

beaten so badly that his jaw was broken and remained for weeks without any medical treatment. Samantha Kemp, also arrested in connection with the Johannesburg Railway Station bomb, had her head bashed repeatedly against the floor and her foot dislocated.¹²⁷⁰ Hugh Lewin pressed charges after being assaulted by the police, who testified that his injuries occurred when he accidentally hit himself against the police car door.¹²⁷¹

Torture was not confined to men, women and children were also abused. Ruth First was kept in solitary confinement for 117 days, though she was not physically assaulted.¹²⁷² However, Eleanor Kasrils was attacked by Lieutenant Grobler. He shook her violently, spat into her face, punched her with his fists, yanked her by the air and banged her head on a table shouting, "You bitch, I'll break you or hang you!"¹²⁷³ Stephanie Kemp alleged that she had been interrogated continuously for fifteen hours and subjected to "undue, harsh, physical and mental stress and strain."¹²⁷⁴

As for children, even as young as seven years old were arrested,¹²⁷⁵ while several instances have been reported of children being tortured during apartheid, though none during Dr. Verwoerd's reign as far as the author can establish. Of course this does not guarantee that such things did not happen on his watch.¹²⁷⁶ Throughout Dr. Verwoerd's period as Prime Minister, and afterwards, police methods became ever more brutal. Part of his legacy was a police force highly trained in a wide range of torture methods, and an army with huge expertise in hunting down and assassinating so-called "terrorists" and subversives.¹²⁷⁷

IMPRISONMENT AND DETENTION WITHOUT TRIAL

Imprisonment of anti-apartheid opponents for fixed terms was one of the strongest weapons wielded by the regime in its fight for survival. The National Party created laws of extreme severity which enabled the police to sweep activists off the streets and into the nation's jails. The law which truly turned South Africa into a police state was one which set no limits to a ¹²⁷⁰ Gunther, 2004: 247-248.

¹²⁷¹ Bernstein, 1972: 37; Fullard, 2004: 361-362.

¹²⁷² First, 2006: 69.

¹²⁷³ Kasrils, 2012: 6.

¹²⁷⁴ Transition, 1965: 19.

¹²⁷⁵ Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, 1986: 77.

¹²⁷⁶ Several books and studies have been written about apartheid's violence against children. For example: Lawyers Committee for Human Rights (1986) The War Against Children: South Africa's Youngest Victims; International Defence and Aid Fund (1988) Apartheid's Violence Against Children; McLachlan et al. (1984) Children in Prison in South Africa; International Defence and Aid Fund (1980) Children Under Apartheid.

¹²⁷⁷ Asmal et al, 1996: 75.

person's detention, allowing him to be held indefinitely, theoretically for ever. The General Law Amendment Act of 1963, widely known as the 90-day law, gave police the power to arrest anyone suspected of a political crime and detain that person without charge and without access to a lawyer for ninety days. At the end of that term, the authorities could re-arrest the suspect and detain him for a further ninety-day term, then if necessary repeat the process every ninety days. Thus, this meant that the authorities had the right to detain anyone effectively indefinitely. In addition, the new legislation permitted the use of solitary confinement¹²⁷⁸ and even empowered postal workers to intercept and investigate letters or parcels or other communications which they suspected may contain anti-government material.¹²⁷⁹

Furthermore, the Act also provided that "if in the opinion of an Attorney-General danger of interference with or intimidation of witnesses exists, or if he deems it to be in the interests of the safety of the State or in the public interest, he may direct that an accused person be tried summarily in a superior court without a preparatory examination. Such a trial may be held at any time determined by the Attorney-General, and at any place he determines within the area of jurisdiction of the division of the Supreme Court concerned. For reasons similar to those given above an Attorney-General may direct that a trial shall take place without a jury. Joint trials may be held when persons are charged under the Suppression of Communism Act."¹²⁸⁰ Nelson Mandela wrote that "the law helped to transform the country into a police state; no dictator could covet more power than the Ninety-Day-Detention Law gave to the authorities."¹²⁸¹

In 1965, the 90 days were doubled. The 180-Day Detention Act (the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act, Number 96 of 1965) allowed the police exactly the same "privileges" as the 90-day law, the only difference being arithmetical – 180 days instead of 90. At the same time the public were not entitled to any information, not even the identity or whereabouts of people being detained. Detainees could literally and effectively "disappear."

¹²⁷⁸ Eades, 1999: 16; Herbststein, 2004: 75; Holmes, 1964: 5; Mandela, 2013: 402; World Peace Council, 1972: 14.

¹²⁷⁹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1964: 27; Thompson, 1966: 190.

¹²⁸⁰ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1964: 27.

¹²⁸¹ Mandela, 2013: 402.

If no charges were laid, Special Branch were required to release detainees after 180 days.¹²⁸² At the time, Vorster boasted that this was repeatable “until this side of eternity.”¹²⁸³

The Criminal Procedure Amendment Act contained a clause which provided that anyone convicted of a political offence could be detained for a further twelve months and after that according to the decision of whoever was minister of justice. It became known as the Sobukwe Clause because it was used to extend significantly the term imposed on PAC leader Robert Sobukwe. Sobukwe was arrested in 1960 and upon conviction for incitement was sentenced to three years in prison. He served his sentence, but then, under the provisions of the new General Law Amendment Act, he was incarcerated without charge on Robben Island. His continued detention was approved annually by the minister of justice and Sobukwe spent a total six years, without charge or trial, on the island.¹²⁸⁴

The Sobukwe case demonstrated how the government could imprison whoever they liked without trial for as long as they liked. Eventually, Sobukwe was the only person imprisoned under this clause.¹²⁸⁵ By 1963, almost all of the leaders of the ANC were under bans, in prison, or in detention without trial.¹²⁸⁶ Political prisoners were held in three main prisons: Black men in Robben Island, White men in Pretoria Local and Black women in Berberton.¹²⁸⁷

Deaths in Detention

The 90-day law and related legislation led inevitably to deaths in detention, both as a result of torture (although such deaths were often officially categorised as suicide) and of natural causes, such as tuberculosis, exacerbated by the appalling conditions and treatment. These deaths were often officially classified as suicides. From June 1963 to September 1966, three detainees under this law, the same law under which Tsafendas was later held, “killed themselves” while in police custody.¹²⁸⁸ In total, between 1960 and 1969, twenty prisoners died in detention. Of these deaths, eleven were labelled suicides and seven the result of

¹²⁸² Nelson Mandela Organization, n.d., 1965. “Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96”; Herbstein, 2004: 75; Rudolph, 1984: 12;

¹²⁸³ “A Distinguished South African Lawyer,” 1965: 4; Herbstein, 2004: 75; Mandela, 2013: 402; Vassen, n.d.

¹²⁸⁴ Pogrund, 1990: 184-186, 210.

¹²⁸⁵ Pogrund, 1990: 184-186, 210.

¹²⁸⁶ Thomson, 1966: 193.

¹²⁸⁷ UNESCO, 1974: 81.

¹²⁸⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 28 January 1967: 2, ‘Three 180-day detainees have killed themselves’; Sachs, 1970: 26.

natural causes, of which two were described as “slipping” accidents and one an accidental fall down stairs.¹²⁸⁹

Looksmart Ngudle (whose torture is discussed briefly above) was the first official death in detention, when he was found hanged in his cell. The coroner carried out a post-mortem and made a finding of no mistreatment or injuries (evidence relating to his torture was considered inadmissible in court) but a subsequent inquest revealed the horrifying torture and he and his fellow detainees had endured. The authorities responded by banning him posthumously, making it illegal for his case to be discussed.¹²⁹⁰ In January 1964, Sipho James Titya was found hanging in his cell; his death was attributed to suicide.¹²⁹¹ David Pratt, the man who shot and wounded Dr. Verwoerd in 1960 (see Chapter Seven), was also found dead in his cell and his death was attributed to suicide.

Another notorious case is that of Suliman Saloojee who “fell to his death” on September 9, 1964 after two months in custody, shortly after his wife had seen signs of serious mistreatment on him. His death was pronounced a suicide but this and other deaths resulting from falling from great heights seem highly questionable given the evidence mentioned above that police sometimes tortured detainees by dangling them from upper-storey windows. Overall, twenty deaths in detention, from “suicide” and from “natural causes” were recorded between 1960 and 1969.¹²⁹²

Ahmed Kathrada wrote about his good friend Saloojee:

“[Saloojee] had been picked up under the ninety-day detention law, brutally interrogated and tortured to death - by the sadistic Rooi Rus Swanepoel - then flung from a window on the seventh floor of Gray’s Building, Johannesburg headquarters of the security police, on Wednesday 9 September 1964... Not surprisingly, the so-called inquest accepted the police version that Babla had committed suicide by jumping to his death. I have never doubted, however, that he died under interrogation, and that his body was then thrown out of the window... The magistrate found that ‘nothing in the evidence suggested that Saloojee had been assaulted or that methods of interrogating him were in any way irregular. He found that no one was to blame for his death.’”¹²⁹³

¹²⁸⁹ Fullard, 2004: 362.

¹²⁹⁰ Fullard, 2004: 363-364; South African Institute of Race Relations, 1965: 65.

¹²⁹¹ Transition, 1965: 17.

¹²⁹² Fullard, 2004: 363-365.

¹²⁹³ Kathrada, 2004: 207.

Killings such as those set out above, persistent claims of abuse by police and prison staff and suspicions that the 90-day solitary confinement process amounted to or involved physical torture, caused growing unease among MPs and many prominent citizens. By early 1964 the government faced growing demands for an impartial inquiry into police methods and prison conditions. Dr. Verwoerd and his Minister of Justice, John Vorster, rejected any such inquiry out of hand. On January 2, 1964, Vorster characterised the reports as “all nonsense.” Brushing aside a claim by sixty medical experts that they had evidence of torture and mistreatment, Vorster said that “not a single incident of torture” had been proven. He added that no-one had complained.¹²⁹⁴

On January 21, Dr. Verwoerd dismissed the sixty experts as political stooges, saying, “They are simply a group of people who are willing to allow themselves to be used to achieve a political object. In other words, it is nothing more or less than an attempt by a certain smaller group, which do belong to certain professions, it is true, to intervene politically but who do not act as experts but as laymen in politics. I say it is political act...” The day after Verwoerd’s contemptuous dismissal of the medical evidence, Vorster rejected an appeal by Sir de Villiers Graaff, the Leader of the Opposition, for a judicial Commission of Inquiry. He declared “We have no facts whatsoever before us; we have no shred of evidence before us about people who were tortured.”¹²⁹⁵

Over the following years, the number of deaths in detention increased; as usual, they were all declared “suicides” or deaths “by natural causes.” Sydney Kentridge, QC wrote about the issue: “In South Africa, one after another inquest into deaths in detention found that ‘no one was to blame’ as the security police, the judiciary and district surgeons conspired to keep torture and murder under wraps.”¹²⁹⁶ Ahmed Kathrada also wrote about the same issue, “In later years, inquest after inquest - in the cases of Imam Haron, Ahmed Timol, Neil Aggett, to name but a few - returned verdicts of suicide. I cannot recall a single case among the scores of deaths under 90-day detention in which an inquest magistrate held the security police responsible.”¹²⁹⁷ Three typical inquests during apartheid which perfectly confirmed all the above are those into the deaths of Steve Biko and Ahmed Timol and the Ngqusa Hill massacre. They are all discussed later in this study.

¹²⁹⁴ Transition, 1965: 22.

¹²⁹⁵ Transition, 1965: 22.

¹²⁹⁶ Quoted in Bizos, 1998: vii.

¹²⁹⁷ Kathrada, 2004: 384.

Robben Island¹²⁹⁸

All the non-White political prisoners were detained on Robben Island, which became a totemic symbol of resistance against apartheid. The island is located in Table Bay, almost seven kilometres west of Cape Town, measuring 4.5 by 1.5 kilometres.¹²⁹⁹ It had previously housed a former lunatic asylum in which the races were segregated,¹³⁰⁰ and it had also done time as a leper colony.¹³⁰¹ It had been used as a place to which opponents of the government were sent from early in the history of the European presence in South Africa, and its modern use accelerated in the early 1960s, under Dr. Verwoerd, as growing numbers of political prisoners were sent there. Robben Island was a prison in which all the warders were White, and all the prisoners were Black or Coloured, while the conditions were extremely harsh.¹³⁰²

By 1963, Robben Island housed hundreds of ANC and PAC members,¹³⁰³ members of other organisations and some non-political prisoners.¹³⁰⁴ Whereas it had had some Coloured warders, these were all withdrawn for fear they would be sympathetic to the prisoners.¹³⁰⁵ The White warders were generally racist and violent, and proud of this; one wore a swastika tattoo on his wrist. Prisoners were brutally punished for even minor moments of defiance. One prisoner serving a twenty-year sentence, Johnson Mlambo, was punished for arguing with a warder by being buried up to his neck in the ground on a hot summer day. When he pleaded for water after several hours, the warder urinated on his head.¹³⁰⁶ Prisoners were ¹²⁹⁸ For more about Robben Island see: Buntman, F.L. (2003) Robben Island and Prisoner Resistance to Apartheid; Daniels, E. (1998) There and Back: Robben Island, 1964-1979; Deacon, H. (ed.) (1996) The Island: A History of Robben Island, 1488-1990; Diamini, M. (1985) Robben Island, Hell-Hole: Reminiscences of a Political Prisoner in South Africa; Fleminger, D. (2008) Robben Island; Ijah, A. (2012) Nelson Mandela and the politics of representation in Robben Island Museum, South Africa; Kathrada, A. (2004) Memoirs; Magomola, G. (2009) Robben Island to Wall Street; Maharaj, M. (ed.) (2001) Reflections in Prison: Voices from the South African Liberation Struggle; Mbeki, G. (1991) Learning from Robben Island: The Prison Writings of Govan Mbeki; Mdluli, D.Z. (2013) Robben Island: The Memoirs of Dan Zwelonke Mdluli; Naidoo, I. (1982) Island in Chains: Ten Years on Robben Island; Schadeberg, J. (1994) Voices From Robben Island; Smith, C. (2014) Robben Island: A Place of Inspiration: Mandela's Prison Island.

¹²⁹⁹ Hutton, 1994: 8-9.

¹³⁰⁰ Foster, 1993: 68.

¹³⁰¹ Hutton, 1994: 36-37.

¹³⁰² Mandela, 2013: 459.

¹³⁰³ Some of the prisoners were: Lionel Davis, Ahmed Kathrada, Mac Maharaj, Nelson Mandela, Govan Mbeki, Wilton Mkwayi, Walter Sisulu and Robert Sobukwe. Jacob Zuma, South Africa's current Prime Minister, also served ten years in Robben Island, convicted of "conspiring to overthrow the apartheid government." He was elected as South Africa's Prime Minister in 2009 and was re-elected in 2014 (Gordin, 2008: 15).

¹³⁰⁴ Buntman, 2003: 3, 5, 19.

¹³⁰⁵ Hutton, 1994: 50.

¹³⁰⁶ Kathrada, 2004: 228, 338.

forced to work long hours in a quarry, finding their only respite in singing protest songs in languages the warders did not understand.¹³⁰⁷

Mandela and his co-prisoners fought tirelessly to improve their conditions in Robben Island, where all the worst atrocities of apartheid were brought to bear; prisoners were subjected to frequent degrading strip-searches and brutality. Political prisoners were allowed to send just two letters and receive two visits a year. Petty apartheid was observed even here; Coloured prisoners received more sugar than Blacks, for example.¹³⁰⁸ This was a result of the 1959 Prisons Act, which stipulated that apartheid should also be observed behind bars.

Visitors to inmates of Robben Island, as with the other South African prisons for political prisoners, had to communicate in either English or Afrikaans; they were not allowed to communicate in any other language. This was so that the guards could understand what was being discussed. Naturally this made visits by some people, such as many prisoners' parents, futile as they could not speak either language and therefore they were not allowed to talk to the prisoners.¹³⁰⁹

Anti-apartheid activist and hero Denis Goldberg, who was one of the Rivonia Trialists, told the author about one such event:

“A mother comes from the far north of the country to Robben Island, it took her ten years to save up the money. She gets to see her son and the prison guard says, ‘You have to speak English or you speak Afrikaans or I stop the visit.’ But she only speaks her native language, so she goes on speaking her language and the prison guard sends her away. She was not allowed to speak to him because of security, maybe she was making plans. But it’s his country, he’s not speaking Russian or Greek, he’s speaking his own language within the country. But the White guards couldn’t allow a Black person to supervise because he might be a traitor.”¹³¹⁰

EXECUTIONS

Under apartheid the “justice” system treated non-Whites and Whites very differently. The goal of prisons was to reform White prisoners but to punish non-Whites. The use of corporal ¹³⁰⁷ Dlamini, 1984: 28-41.

¹³⁰⁸ Solani and Nieftagodien, 2004: 391-397.

¹³⁰⁹ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

¹³¹⁰ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

punishment was primarily indicated according to the race of the convicted and that of their victim, but it was limited almost entirely to non-White offenders. Whites were never executed for the murder of a non-White, while non-Whites were usually executed for the murder of a White.¹³¹¹

As resistance to the apartheid state became increasingly militant, the government responded by extending capital punishment to crimes including sabotage and terrorism (both defined very broadly). Between 1945 and 1970, hangings increased 600% in South Africa from an annual average of 16 to an annual average of 100.¹³¹² Starting in 1961, 101 prisoners were executed. All were men, and only one was White.¹³¹³ By 1966, according to Albie Sachs, South Africa had become the “world’s busiest hangman.” The apartheid authorities at the time were executing about one hundred people per year, thus two a week. To cope with the workload, a special gallows was erected in Pretoria Central Prison¹³¹⁴ which could hold several nooses, thus facilitating multiple hangings.¹³¹⁵

Between July 1963 and June 1965, a total of 281 death sentences were imposed in South Africa and 194 men were executed. This accounted for 47% of the world’s executions. Almost all of those convicted to die by hanging had been selected because of their involvement in anti-government resistance between 1960 and 1964.¹³¹⁶ As for 1966, sixty-six people were hanged in only the second half of that year: forty-six Africans, nineteen Coloureds and one White.¹³¹⁷

BANISHMENT OF PEOPLE

Banning people had been carried out since 1948, and anyone who opposed apartheid could find themselves banished and silenced. Banishment had been used as a strategy throughout the 1940s and 50s, and had been on the books since 1927, but it escalated under Dr. Verwoerd and thousands of families had been left destitute as a result.¹³¹⁸ Between 1954 and ¹³¹¹ Landis, 1962: 466.

¹³¹² Cook, 1974: 10.

¹³¹³ Fullard, 2004: 382.

¹³¹⁴ For the conditions on Death Row and life in Pretoria Central Prison see Breyten Breytenbach’s 1984 memoir The True Confessions of an Albino Terrorist, Jeremy Cronin’s poem Death Row, in his 1983 poetic collection Inside and Out, Tim Jenkins’s (1987) Escape from Pretoria, Hugh Lewin’s 1976 memoir Bandiet: Seven Years in a South African Prison, and Reymond Suttner’s 2001 memoir, Inside Apartheid’s Prison.

¹³¹⁵ Sachs, 1970: 1-3.

¹³¹⁶ Fullard, 2004: 382.

¹³¹⁷ Lewin, 1976: 139.

¹³¹⁸ Bunting, 1986: 213.

1962, over 270 were issued with banning orders,¹³¹⁹ which were often renewed each time the period of banishment had elapsed, resulting in people living under banning orders for years.¹³²⁰ Alan Drury¹³²¹ writing in 1967 compared the situation endured by banned people to “torture.”¹³²²

In 1953, Mandela had been banned from addressing anyone, and instead his speech was read by someone else to a branch of the ANC, urging the continuation of the struggle for equal rights and decrying the miserable conditions in which so many Africans lived and worked.¹³²³ Albert Luthuli, who would win the Nobel Peace Prize in 1961, spent one year in custody under a treason charge, and was banned more or less continuously from 1953 to 1961, which meant that he was forced to be confined in his home, banned from receiving visitors, forbidden from making statements and even from attending church services.¹³²⁴

One of the more notorious banning orders was that imposed in 1959 on Elizabeth Mafekeng, a prominent trade union leader, after she led a demonstration in Paarl against an attempt to issue passes to African women. The banning meant she had to leave her husband and eleven children and the home where she had lived for thirty-two years and move to an isolated spot called Southey, some 700 miles away. She was the first African woman to be banned. At demonstrations that followed her banning, protestors chanted, “If they come to take Mrs Mafekeng, they will take her over our dead bodies,” and “Kill Verwoerd, Kill De Wet Nel, Kill the police.”¹³²⁵

In response to the unrest that followed Sharpeville, the government embarked on a series of banishments. Ostensibly citing the Suppression of Communism Act, large numbers were banned, including many who had nothing to do with communism at all, although most had been active in working against apartheid.¹³²⁶ Banned people were not allowed to attend any social gatherings, to communicate with any other banned people, were confined to very ¹³¹⁹ Thompson, 1966: 191.

¹³²⁰ Fullard, 2004: 352.

¹³²¹ American author winner of the Pulitzer Prize for fiction for his novel Advise & Consent

¹³²² Drury, 1968: 212.

¹³²³ Clark and Worger, 2011: 141-148.

¹³²⁴ Luthuli, 1961.

¹³²⁵ Blumberg, 1960: 39-46.

¹³²⁶ Matthews, 1972: 111.

restricted areas, and obliged to report regularly, and often, to the police.¹³²⁷ It was illegal for any publication to mention anything that a banned person had said.¹³²⁸

In 1962, it became illegal to publish anything that a banned person had said in the past.¹³²⁹ In that year, the General Law Amendment Act enabled the government to ban many more people. Hundreds were tried and found guilty of crimes including murder, sabotage and subversion, and hundreds had fled the country to escape trial.¹³³⁰

The banning legislation was very effective in silencing leaders of the ANC and other anti-apartheid movements. By 1963, almost all these leaders were banned, in prison for various crimes, or in detention without trial.¹³³¹ Many family tragedies resulted; for example, a “banned” person could never visit someone who was “listed”; the New York Times cited the example of a banned man who could not visit his sick, elderly mother, listed because she had once briefly been a member of the Communist Party,¹³³² and of a professor of plant physiology whose writings on botany could not be published, disseminated or read.¹³³³ In 1964, Mandela said in a court statement that, “the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of the government, and for us to accept the banning was equivalent to accepting the silencing of the Africans for all time.”¹³³⁴

STATE TERRORISM

Torture, the death penalty, banishment, imprisonment and killings in detention were not the only methods used by Dr. Verwoerd's police state to deal with opponents. In 1951, when Dr. Verwoerd was Minister for Native Affairs, a report revealed that 104 Africans had been killed and 248 had been wounded during police raids on their homes, during a period (1948-1951) in which Blacks were deported from their places of work and residence to provide cheap labour for farmers elsewhere.¹³³⁵ During Dr. Verwoerd's time as Prime Minister, the authorities began a campaign of state terrorism against anti-apartheid activists and opponents of the regime; this included murder, bombings and kidnappings on foreign territory. Although ¹³²⁷ Bunting, 1986: 220; UNESCO, 1972: 27.

¹³²⁸ Zug, 2007: 195.

¹³²⁹ Feit, 1967: 46.

¹³³⁰ Thompson, 1966: 191-192.

¹³³¹ Thomson, 1966: 193.

¹³³² Lelyveld (The New York Times), 27 June 1965: 22, ‘A family is separated by South Africa.’

¹³³³ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 17 June 1965: 2, ‘Dutch assailed by South Africa.’

¹³³⁴ ANC, 1988: 1.

¹³³⁵ Sachs, 1952: 33.

the phenomenon of state terrorism intensified in the 1980s, it was during Dr. Verwoerd's time that it began.

Kidnappings

As we have seen earlier, a special police unit, the Ghost Squad, hunted down pass offenders, who would then be forced to work as agricultural slave labourers,¹³³⁶ clearly an act of state terrorism. What's more, contraveners of the pass laws were not the only Africans who were terrorised by the State at the time. Between 1961 and 1966, several anti-apartheid activists were kidnapped on foreign territory and were secretly brought to South Africa to be tortured, interrogated and charged with anti-apartheid activities. For example:

- Anderson Ganyile, along with two other anti-apartheid activists, was abducted from Lesotho (then Basutoland and a British colonial territory), on 26 August 1961. The three men were then taken to a prison in Transkei, but they were later released due to pressure from the British Government, since the abductions had taken place on British soil.
- Dr Kenneth Abrahams was abducted in August 1963 from Botswana (then Bechuanaland), along with three other anti-apartheid activists. Dr Abrahams was secretly flown to Cape Town for interrogation, but he was soon released, again due to pressure from the British Government.
- Rosemary Wentzel left South Africa in 1964 and was granted political asylum in Swaziland. She was abducted there and brought back to South Africa, where she was detained under the 90-day law and later appeared as a state witness in a political trial.
- Dennis Higgs fled in 1964 from South Africa to Zambia. He was abducted from there and brought back to South Africa. He was detained on charges of sabotage, but was soon released after international pressure because of his abduction, and was returned to Zambia.
- Michael Dingake was kidnapped by the local police in Rhodesia in 1965, and was handed over to the South African police. He was charged under the Suppression of Communism Act for furthering the aims of the South African Communist Party and the ANC. He was convicted and spent the next fifteen years on Robben Island.

¹³³⁶ Mbeki, 1991: 5-6.

- John Lyati Pokela, acting National Secretary of the Pan-Africanist Congress (PAC), was abducted in 1966 in Lesotho and was taken to South Africa. He was convicted on charges of sabotage and spent the next thirteen years in prison.¹³³⁷

OTHER ACTS OF STATE TERRORISM

Blowing up an airplane

On 12 July 1963, four members of the ANC broke out of a Johannesburg prison. An East African Airways Dakota aircraft was chartered from Tanzania and sent to Francistown to pick them up, but “mysteriously” exploded on the airstrip the night after it landed. (Two of the prisoners, Arthur Goldreich and Harold Wolpe, eventually escaped to Bechuanaland.)¹³³⁸

Blowing up a refugee centre

Oxfam funded the building of a hostel known as the “White House” in Francistown, Bechuanaland, to accommodate refugees from South Africa; but the hostel was blown up on the night of July 25, 1964, only two weeks before it was due to be opened. Two White men, who claimed to be journalists, had allegedly been seen visiting the refugee camp; the refugees had been suspicious and had refused to meet them.¹³³⁹

WHITE TERRORISM

Throughout the period of apartheid, including the Verwoerd era, several white paramilitary groups or simply packs of Whites committed a series of terrorist attacks against non-Whites. Dr. Verwoerd did little or nothing to stop them. For example, the following incidents were reported in 1961 alone, and there were probably many more that did not see the light of day. In Cape Town, a petrol bomb was thrown through the window of the home of an Indian family whose son had been detained by the police the previous week for distributing anti-republican leaflets. Also in Cape Town, bricks were thrown through the windows of the ¹³³⁷ Gifford, 1981: 5-6.

¹³³⁸ Gifford, 1981: 5-6.

¹³³⁹ Gifford, 1981: 5-6.

homes of George Peake, Alex la Guma and Barney Desai, all leaders of the Coloured People's Congress.¹³⁴⁰

Several lawyers known for defending non-Whites were threatened and attacked; notably Rowley Arenstein, a Communist and anti-apartheid activist living in Durban. He had received a threatening letter allegedly from the KKK, and fifteen friends were acting as his "bodyguards." In May 1961, five hooded men with guns appeared at his door. There was a fight, which led to the hooded men fleeing from Arenstein's comrades. One of the "bodyguards" was Ronnie Kasrils who was slightly injured when a bullet grazed his cheek.¹³⁴¹ Ben Turok, National Secretary of the Congress of Democrats and a representative of Africans on the Cape Provincial Council, was also threatened in an anonymous telephone call, but was refused police protection.¹³⁴²

There was also an organization operating in Natal under Raymond Kirch Rudman, veteran Boer Nationalist, racist and fanatical anti-Semite, who also led the racist Die Boerenasie (Farmers' Nation).¹³⁴³ These terrorists called themselves the Ku Klux Klan, an obvious homage; they also copied some of the methods of the famous American organization. Terrorists who conducted a series of attacks on non-Whites in Natal in 1961 claimed that they were doing so in the name of the South African KKK and another organization called "Order of the Green Dragon." Rudman insisted that the KKK did not stoop to criminal acts, and accused "certain people" of besmirching its name; but it should be noted that he was not above issuing threats and warnings to communist leaders.¹³⁴⁴

FLOGGING

In 1950, C.R. Swart, the then Minister of Justice who later became President of the Republic, was photographed holding a cat-o'-nine-tails in front of a practice dummy, a clear sign of official approval for whipping as a form of punishment. During the 1950s, there was a rapid increase in the number of persons flogged and a small increase in the number of strokes per person. Initially, a whip was used for the flogging, later replaced by a cane. Between 1955 and 1970, about 200,000 convicted prisoners received approximately one million strokes, or ¹³⁴⁰ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 61.

¹³⁴¹ Kasrils, 1993: 33-35; South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 61.

¹³⁴² South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 61.

¹³⁴³ Shimoni, 2003: 71.

¹³⁴⁴ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 61.

five apiece. Flogging reached its peak in 1955-1956 when 127,523 strokes were inflicted on 24,115 persons, an average of 5.2 strokes per person. In 1965 the number had decreased to 64,905 strokes on 15,757 persons, thus four apiece.¹³⁴⁵

POLITICAL TRIALS AND BANNING OF ORGANIZATIONS

From the mid-1950s to the mid-1960s, as apartheid became ever more suffocating under Dr. Verwoerd as Minister for Native Affairs and as Prime Minister, increasingly the law courts were used as battlegrounds in which the accused tried to fight off a vastly better equipped enemy.¹³⁴⁶ Anyone who had been deemed “communist” or otherwise unlawful could be put on trial. Walter Sisulu¹³⁴⁷ and Nelson Mandela, among many others, were thus designated, while others were confined to their homes.¹³⁴⁸

A mass trial, the Treason Trial, took place in 1956¹³⁴⁹ where one hundred and fifty-six prominent anti-apartheid activists were tried. Oswald Pirow,¹³⁵⁰ one of the prosecutors, and Justice Frans Rumpff,¹³⁵¹ one of the judges, were known Nazi sympathisers.¹³⁵² The trial, later described by Walter Sisulu as the National Party’s attempt at a “final solution”¹³⁵³ ran for five years, very much in the public eye, while the number of defendants was gradually ¹³⁴⁵ Sachs, 1970, 3-5.

¹³⁴⁶ Maharaj and Kathrada, 2006: 121.

¹³⁴⁷ (1912-2003) A leading figures of the anti-apartheid struggle. He served as Secretary-General and Deputy President of the ANC and was a member of the Communist Party of South Africa. His role in the founding of Umkhonto we Sizwe was pivotal, and he was involved in the planning of the Defiance Campaign in 1952. He spent twenty-six years in prison, mostly in Robben Island (Beresford (The Guardian), 7 May 2003, ‘Walter Sisulu.’). For his biography see: Sisulu, W., Houser, G.M., Shore, H. (2001) I Will Go Singing; Sisulu, E. (2003) Walter and Albertina Sisulu: In Our Lifetime.

¹³⁴⁸ Welsh, 2000: 445.

¹³⁴⁹ For more about the trial see: Foreman, L., Sachs, E.S. (1957) The South African Treason Trial; Joseph, H. (1963) If this be Treason: Helen Joseph's Dramatic Account of the Treason Trial, the Longest in South Africa's History and One of the Strangest Trials of the 20th Century; Mandela, N. (1994) Long Walk to Freedom; Sampson, A. (1958) The Treason Cage: The Opposition on Trial in South Africa.

¹³⁵⁰ (1890-1959) A pro-Nazi politician of German origins who would serve as Minister of Justice and Minister of Defence. Founder of the New Order group, his vision for Africa was one in which democracy had been abolished, to be replaced with a Christian, White, National Socialist republic predicated on a strong state and public discipline (Hirson, 1990: Rees: 1990: 297). He was very close to a number of important German Nazis, and sent his daughter to a Nazi youth camp (Furlong, 2010: 70). He was one of the public prosecutors on the Treason trial. According to Helen Joseph, Pirow was seen as the Enemy Number One for the accused (Joseph, 1998: 100).

¹³⁵¹ Justice Frans Lourens Herman Rumpff was rumoured to be a member of the Broederbond (Mandela, 2013: 29) and he had defended pro-Nazis during the WW2 (Sachs, 1973: 257). He was a judge at the 1952 Defiance Trial (Buthelezi, 2006: 122), the Treason Trial (1956-1961) (Kahn, 1982: 439), at David Pratt’s trial in 1960 and was the Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. He South Africa’s Chief of Justice from 1974 to 1982 (Kahn, 1982: 440).

¹³⁵² Sachs, 1973: 257.

¹³⁵³ Davenport, 1991: 352; Joseph, 1998.

whittled down to thirty,¹³⁵⁴ who were distinguished by their involvement in the military end of things, and by their skills in rhetoric.¹³⁵⁵

L. J. Blom-Cooper, one of Britain's leading lawyers, member of the Home Secretary's advisory council on the penal system and one of the founders of Amnesty International, commented that, "Not since the burning of the Reichstag in Berlin in 1933—with the notable exception of the special trials at Nuremberg—has a trial attracted such international attention."¹³⁵⁶ In 1961, a year after the Sharpeville Massacre, the accused were found innocent,¹³⁵⁷ as the prosecution was forced to concede that there had been no communist plot.¹³⁵⁸ The same year, Vorster took advantage of the new powers Dr. Verwoerd had granted to the police to consolidate police across the country. From 1962, the police were allowed to torture suspects under the terms of the Sabotage Act.¹³⁵⁹

Following the Sharpeville Massacre, Dr. Verwoerd passed the Unlawful Organisations Act, which allowed the government to ban the ANC, PAC and any group deemed to pose a threat, and setting out a series of punishments for anyone involved in such an organisation, including imprisonment for up to five years, substantial fines, and flogging. The government claimed that such organisations were now working towards the violent overthrow of the government and that extreme measures were necessary.¹³⁶⁰ Francois Erasmus, Verwoerd's Minister of Justice stated, "They want to bring the white government to its knees. The government has decided to bring a halt to the reign of terror."¹³⁶¹

On October 10, 1963, the United Nations voted to call on South Africa to cease trials of government opponents and urged the release of political prisoners. Dr. Verwoerd declined and his Minister of Foreign Affairs, Jooste, complained that South Africa was the victim of "misunderstanding, misrepresentation, and malice."¹³⁶²

The Rivonia Trial¹³⁶³ in 1964 was the inevitable result of the Sabotage Act and followed the police raid of the secret headquarters of the Umkhonto we Sizwe near Rivonia ¹³⁵⁴ Kaplan, 2014: 64.

¹³⁵⁵ Joseph, 1998: 12.

¹³⁵⁶ L. J. Blom-Cooper, cited in Karis, 1961: 217.

¹³⁵⁷ Sachs, 1970: 29; Welsh, 2000: 453.

¹³⁵⁸ Dubow, 2014: 69-71; TIME, 7 April 1961: 30, 'South Africa: Not guilty.'

¹³⁵⁹ Lodge, 2011: 178.

¹³⁶⁰ Ronan (The New York Times), 11 October 1963: 4, 'Apartheid trials condemned in UN.'

¹³⁶¹ TIME, 11 April 1960: 32, 'South Africa. From mourning to action.'

¹³⁶² Ronan (The New York Times), 11 October 1963: 4, 'Apartheid trials condemned in UN.'

¹³⁶³ For a detailed account of the trial see: Allo, A. (ed.) (2015) The Courtroom as a Space of Resistance: Reflections on the Legacy of the Rivonia Trial; Bizos, G. (2011) Odyssey to Freedom; Broun, K. S. (2012)

in the Johannesburg area. The police found materials indicating that plans were under way for extensive sabotage and guerrilla warfare that would lead to revolution.¹³⁶⁴ The documentation described people being dropped off at certain points on land and on sea, and being helped by guerrilla forces to overthrow the government. The members were accused of planning a foreign military invasion backed up with local saboteurs and guerrilla fighters.¹³⁶⁵ Among the arrestees were Umkhonto leaders Nelson Mandela and Walter Sisulu.¹³⁶⁶

Winne Mandela, wife of Nelson, was under a banning order that restricted her to Johannesburg, and she had to request special permission to attend. When this was refused, she appealed directly to Dr. Verwoerd who granted her conditional permission, saying that, "Permission will be withdrawn at any time if your presence or action at the court, the manner in which you dress or in any other respect, lead to an incident caused by you or others present."¹³⁶⁷

In his trial, Nelson Mandela outlined why he and many others were struggling so hard against apartheid, directly referencing laws that had been envisioned, devised and implemented by Dr. Verwoerd himself:

"... the complaint of Africans however, is not only that they are poor and the whites are rich, but that the laws are made by the whites are designed to preserve the situation. There are two ways to break out of poverty. The first is by formal education, and the second is by the worker acquiring a greater skill at his work and thus higher wages. As far as Africans are concerned, both these avenues of advancement are deliberately curtailed by legislation ..."
[meaning Dr. Verwoerd's legislation]¹³⁶⁸

Mandela also gave an extraordinary speech lasting almost three hours, in which he proclaimed himself prepared to die for his cause, "During my lifetime I have dedicated myself to the struggle of the African people. I have fought against White domination, and I Saving Nelson Mandela: The Rivonia Trial and the Fate of South Africa; Frankel, G. (1999) Rivonia's Children: Three Families and the Cost of Conscience in White South Africa; Goldberg, D. (2010) The Mission: A Life for Freedom in South Africa; Joffe, J. (2009) The State vs. Nelson Mandela: The Trial that Changed South Africa; Kathrada, A. (2004) Memoirs; Mandela, N. (1994) Long Walk to Freedom; Sisulu, E. (2011) Walter and Albertina Sisulu.

¹³⁶⁴ Conley (The New York Times), 10 October 1963: 8, '11 accused in South Africa of planning revolt'; Mandela, 2013: 367-450; Marquard, 1968: 260.

¹³⁶⁵ Mandela, 2013: 367-450; The Canberra Times, 12 February 1964: 18, 'Plan for Dr. Verwoerd overthrow'; Seegers, 1996: 126.

¹³⁶⁶ Kaplan, 2014: 64; Mandela, 2013: 367-450.

¹³⁶⁷ Schadeberg, 1990: 169.

¹³⁶⁸ Buthulezi, 2006: 240, have fought against Black domination. I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities. It is an ideal which I hope to live for and to achieve. But if needs be, it is an ideal for which I am prepared to die.” Mandela also told the story of how he, a lawyer, had gradually come around to the realisation that acts of violence against the apartheid state were all it would understand. “I did not do this in a spirit of recklessness,” he said, “I planned as a result of a calm and sober assessment of the political situation that had arisen after years of tyranny, exploitation and oppression of my people by the whites.”¹³⁶⁹

Percy Yutar,¹³⁷⁰ the prosecutor, claimed that the defendants had been “lying” to the world in saying that Blacks were oppressed. He stated that the reality was that they were in the main “peaceful, law-abiding and loyal.” His critics described him during the trial as “venomous.”¹³⁷¹ Yutar had argued for the death penalty for Mandela and expressed regret that this was not imposed.¹³⁷² The New York Times hailed Mandela and his fellow accused as “the new George Washingtons and Benjamin Franklins of South Africa.”¹³⁷³

To international outcry, Dr. Verwoerd stated that the accused were “communist criminals in the same way as any communist spy found in the United States and sentenced to death”¹³⁷⁴ and dismissed the idea that he should consider clemency for the anti-apartheid revolutionaries.¹³⁷⁵ He told the Parliament, “I want to state clearly and unequivocally that in this case we have not got to do with opposition against the South African Government policy or a championship of the freedom and rights of the people. We have to do with a Communist uprising.”¹³⁷⁶

Ultimately, eight of the accused (Denis Goldberg, Bob Hepple, Ahmed Kathrada, Nelson Mandela, Govan Mbeki, Raymond Mhlaba, Andrew Mlangeni and Walter Sisulu)

¹³⁶⁹ Benson, 1974: 8-21; Conley (The New York Times), 26 April 1964, E4, ‘Crisis in South Africa’; Mandela, 1984: 1-48.

¹³⁷⁰ (1911-2002) The first Jewish attorney-general in South Africa, he was highly-regarded by the then Minister of Justice, John Vorster, who appreciated the way in which he pursued the various liberation movements, especially the ANC, which he reviled as representing communism. He worked in concert with the security police forces (Shaw (The Guardian), 19 July 2002, ‘Percy Yutar’).

¹³⁷¹ Shaw (The Guardian), 19 July 2002, ‘Percy Yutar.’

¹³⁷² In November 1995, and while he was President, Mandela invited Yutar for lunch. Yutar accepted, and the two ate together as a gesture of reconciliation (Graybill, 2002: 200). Most of those convicted to serve life imprisonments in the Rivonia Trial were released unconditionally on the 15th of October 1989 (Sarakinski, 1992: 133).

¹³⁷³ Benson, 1986: 252; Bizos, 2011: 283; Broun, 2012: 131.

¹³⁷⁴ Broun, 2012: 134; Frankel, 1999: 268-269; Mandela, 2013: 446-450.

¹³⁷⁵ The New York Times, 17 June 1964: 12, ‘Dr. Verwoerd rejects appeals.’

¹³⁷⁶ Broun, 2012: 135.

were sentenced to life imprisonment and two (Lionel Bernstein and James Kantor) were acquitted. The life sentences were greeted joyously by Goldberg and Sisulu who had expected to be sentenced to death. The convicted prisoners were then separated; the non-Whites were sent to Robben Island and Goldberg, the only White, to Pretoria Central Prison.¹³⁷⁷ Dr. Verwoerd boasted in the Parliament that he had “tossed into the waste-basket all the telegrams from socialist nations” calling for clemency.¹³⁷⁸ The Rivonia Trial has now been recognised as a watershed moment, in which the justice system was publically called out as racist and unjust.¹³⁷⁹

SUPPRESSION OF COMMUNISM

The Suppression of Communism Act of 1950 was initially intended, and served, to suppress Black workers' attempts to form unions. Under the Act, the Minister of Justice was allowed to pronounce certain people “Communists” and compel them to resign from their unions.¹³⁸⁰ With the excuse of suppressing “communism” the Governor General could prohibit the dissemination of any publication and it was a crime for anyone to say anything that might be interpreted as attempting to foster hostility between the peoples of South Africa.¹³⁸¹ While other countries enacted similar policies,¹³⁸² only in South Africa was there a racial element to the new legislation. The Act would soon become one of the apartheid government's most “devastating weapons” in the fight against its opponents.¹³⁸³

In 1953, the Native Labour Act made all Blacks' strikes illegal, banned black representation in industrial councils and conciliation boards, and made it illegal for black unions to gather funds for sick benefits, among other things.¹³⁸⁴ Further legislation in 1954 prohibited racially mixed unions forming, and obliged already mixed unions to segregate meetings. Moreover, a worker's racial classification had profound implications for his possibilities to advance. Coloured workers were not allowed into certain professions, and were paid less than Whites, while Black workers were treated as inferior in every single ¹³⁷⁷ Broun, 2012: 112-128; Mandela, 2013: 446-450.

¹³⁷⁸ Mandela, 2013: 449.

¹³⁷⁹ Stewart, 2015: 149.

¹³⁸⁰ Lichtenstein, 2005: 296; Longford, 1985: 14; Trades Union Congress, 1974: 12.

¹³⁸¹ Landis, 1962: 486.

¹³⁸² Fisher, 1969: 329.

¹³⁸³ Albertyn, 1991: 264.

¹³⁸⁴ Lichtenstein, 2005: 296; Longford, 1985: 14; Trades Union Congress, 1974: 12.

aspect.¹³⁸⁵ Dr. Yusuf Mohamed Dadoo, President of the S.A. Indian National Congress, was arrested and sentenced under the Suppression of Communism Act in 1953, and was one of thirteen who publically declared their Communism.¹³⁸⁶

THE GENERAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT OF 1962

In 1962, the Minister of Justice, then John Vorster (who would become Dr. Verwoerd's successor after his death in 1966), presented the government with a General Law Amendment Bill that would extend ministerial powers, including excluding court process, a closer control of the press, banning attendance at meetings, and banning certain people from making statements to the press. It was suggested that the Bill was necessary because, globally, the Cold War was becoming more entrenched, and he perceived that the Communist Party in South Africa was getting a second wind and was liable to become a greater threat to the hegemony of Whites.¹³⁸⁷

The General Law Amendment Act (also known as Sabotage Act) No 76 of 1962 became notorious far beyond South Africa's borders for its draconian measures against perceived opponents of apartheid and for the ruthless and comprehensive nature of its intrusion into the domestic lives of citizens. It gave the government legal power to quash any individual or organisation that opposed apartheid. Punishments ranged from prison terms to the death penalty, but among the most painful for many were the deprivation of human contact. For some offences, violators were ordered to be confined to their homes for weekends or for twelve hours every night for a week under police surveillance. In serious cases, people found guilty under the Act were restricted to their residences without visitors for five years. Their homes were thus turned into prisons.¹³⁸⁸

Other provisions allowed the State to ban people from having more than one visitor to their homes at a time and to prevent them from going to parties or other social gatherings. One innovation was to require any defendant protesting his innocence to prove that he had no political motivation. It set out a wide range of actions as henceforth constituting the act of sabotage. These included "any wrongful and wilful act whereby he/she injured, obstructed, ¹³⁸⁵ Hepple, 1971: 5-11.

¹³⁸⁶ Schadeberg, 1987: 40-41.

¹³⁸⁷ Ballinger, 1969: 48.

¹³⁸⁸ Beck, 2000: 142; Fullard, 2004: 345-346.

tampered with or destroyed the health or safety of the public, the maintenance of law and order, the supply of water, light, power, fuel or foodstuffs, sanitary, medical, or fire extinguishing services.”¹³⁸⁹

According to Catherine Albertyn, Professor of Law at University of the Witwatersrand, the Sabotage Act “became a crucial weapon in the State’s campaign against political opposition and the underground organizations.”¹³⁹⁰ The government defended the unprecedented severity of the Act by stating that it was necessary to combat Communism and subversion. However, opposition was widespread. Inside South Africa, the Act was denounced by churches, students, writers, trade unions, lawyers and other organizations. The International Commission of Jurists called it part of “a determined and ruthless attempt” to enforce apartheid, and charged that it would diminish the liberty of the citizen “to a degree not surpassed by the most extreme dictatorship of the left or right.”¹³⁹¹ J. Hamilton Russell of the United Party characterised the Sabotage Act as “one of the most evil, the most cynical, the most sadistic of measures which has ever come before this honourable House.”¹³⁹²

The New York Times described as “chilling” the lengths to which the government had gone to crush opposition to apartheid, “a doctrine that seems in one way or another to poison everything and everyone it touches.” While discounting suggestions of UN intervention, the newspaper said, “The totalitarian methods of Prime Minister Dr. Verwoerd and his Government are appalling to civilized men everywhere.”¹³⁹³ Other Western newspapers wrote, “The end of the rule of law,” “The flame of freedom has been extinguished,” “The last vestige of individual freedom is being whittled away a police state government.” Justice Minister Vorster defended the Act, and said of those who protested it: “it becomes clear that the people who are opposed to the Bill in the first place – and let me say this, that they have every reason to be opposed to it – are the Communists.”¹³⁹⁴

Under the Sabotage Act of 1962 anyone who was banned, or who had been listed under the Suppression of Communism Act of 1950 was forbidden to prepare material for publication, to communicate with other such persons, to join organisations, have visitors, or attend social gatherings. Nothing anyone who had been banned under the Sabotage Act said ¹³⁸⁹ Beck, 2000: 142; Fullard, 2004: 345-346.

¹³⁹⁰ Albertyn, 1991: 213.

¹³⁹¹ The New York Times, 17 November 1962: 10, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s savage Sabotage Act.’

¹³⁹² Conley (The New York Times), 24 May 1962: 13, ‘Police state aim laid to Dr. Verwoerd.’

¹³⁹³ The New York Times, 17 November 1962: 10, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s savage Sabotage Act.’

¹³⁹⁴ de Villiers, 1975: 68.

could be published. That year, 103 people were subjected to these laws and the Minister of Justice, John Vorster, listed 437 as Communists, as well as banning the left wing newspaper, New Age, and the left wing Congress of Democrats. The government's definition of Communism was so broad that it could be taken to include, for example, anyone in favour of racial tolerance or higher wages.¹³⁹⁵ For the government, liberalism was equated with Communism and some Afrikaner nationalists went as far to suggest that the Jewish community was Communistic because many Jews were members of the anti-apartheid movements.¹³⁹⁶

An expansion of the Act in 1963 allowed the police to arrest anyone suspected of political activities without charging them and hold them initially for twelve days for questioning without access to family or lawyers. It also allowed postal workers to intercept any material critical of apartheid, enabled police to detain anyone suspected of sabotage, or any crimes under the above act, and to hold them in solitary confinement until they were satisfied with the outcome of interrogation.¹³⁹⁷ Further amendments to the law extended twelve days to ninety days, then to infinite periods of detentions.¹³⁹⁸ Then Minister of Justice John Vorster referred to suspects being held in custody during this period under this law until "this side of eternity."¹³⁹⁹

By placing detentions outside the judicial process, the act cleared the way for widespread abuses, including the torture and deaths of many held in police custody.¹⁴⁰⁰ Large numbers were imprisoned, including many associated with the Liberal Party,¹⁴⁰¹ and held without access to reading or writing material, and without permission to see visitors. The police used torture, initially only on Blacks but subsequently on Whites too. Because of the above legislation, by 1964, the Communist Party had effectively been eliminated. Many people were sent to jail and the few activists who were not arrested fled the country.¹⁴⁰²

¹³⁹⁵ Sachs, 1952: 68, 249.

¹³⁹⁶ The Economist, 5 December 1964: 1127, 'Liberals sabotaged.'

¹³⁹⁷ Thompson, 1966: 190.

¹³⁹⁸ Beck, 2000: 145.

¹³⁹⁹ "A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 4; Herstein, 2004: 75; Mandela, 2013: 402; Vassen, n.d.

¹⁴⁰⁰ Beck, 2000: 145.

¹⁴⁰¹ The Economist, 5 December 1964: 1127, 'Liberals sabotaged.'

¹⁴⁰² The New York Times, 20 October 1963: 183, 'South Africa stands firm on apartheid.'

PRESS AND CENSORSHIP¹⁴⁰³

The National Party had long been aware of the power of the press. In 1949, Malan had described the English-language press as “undisciplined” and proposed that journalists should be registered and struck off for “unethical conduct.”¹⁴⁰⁴ From 1950 onwards, a relentless drip of laws incrementally compromised press freedom.¹⁴⁰⁵ In 1951, the National Party appointed a Press Commission to investigate the South African media, including the way news from the country was reported to the outside world.

Thirteen years later, in 1964, the Commission finally published its findings and recommendations, paving the way for stricter state control of journalism. After studying thousands of press reports, the Commission had concluded that the reports of the New York Times and the TIME magazine were “inaccurate, frequently dishonest, over-partisan and hostile to South Africa and Whites, particularly the Afrikaner and the Nationalist Party.” Reuters was accused of “deliberately hiding the illiteracy and semi-barbarism of the mass of the native people.” The Commission recommended the registration of all foreign correspondents and “absolute government control over all press copy leaving South Africa.”¹⁴⁰⁶

The 1955 Customs Act banned “indecent, objectionable and obscene material” which was taken to include many books with “racial” content such as Uncle Tom's Cabin and books that were critical of South Africa and Apartheid.¹⁴⁰⁷ The Board of Censors, appointed in 1956, had the power to prohibit or censor books and films.¹⁴⁰⁸ Banned books also included Brendan Behan's Borstal Boy and Norman Russell's Why I am not a Christian,¹⁴⁰⁹ while ¹⁴⁰³ For a detailed account of the South African press during apartheid see: Davenport, R., Saunders, C. (2000) The English-language Press under Apartheid; Hachten, W.A., Giffard, C.A. (1984) The Press and Apartheid: Repression and Propaganda in South Africa; Hepple, A. (1974) Press under Apartheid; Pogrand, B. (2000) War of Words: Memoir of a South African Journalist; Pollack, R. (1981) Up Against Apartheid. The Role and the Plight of Press in South Africa; Rabkin, D. (1975) Drum Magazine and the Works of Black South African Writers Associated with it; Sanders, J. (1999) South Africa and the International Media, 1972-1979: A Struggle for Representation; Shaw, G. (1999) The Cape Times: An Informal History.

¹⁴⁰⁴ Hepple, 1974: 8.

¹⁴⁰⁵ Davenport and Saunders, 2000a: 268.

¹⁴⁰⁶ TIME, 22 May 1964: 93, ‘It's very hard to do, even in South Africa’; The Canberra Times, 13 May 1964: 2, ‘Dr. Verwoerd v. the Press.’

¹⁴⁰⁷ Landis, 1962: 489.

¹⁴⁰⁸ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1972: 65; Vatcher, 1965: 167, 7.

¹⁴⁰⁹ Mitson (Morning Record), 28 January 1965: 6, ‘South Africa's barbarous racial oppression makes Mississippi as mild as a tea party.’

pictures of leading Black actors were removed from movie posters, such as Sammy Davis in the poster for Oceans 11.¹⁴¹⁰

The Riotous Assemblies Act of 1956 made it possible to ban any publication considered to have the potential to inflame sentiments against the white minority.¹⁴¹¹ After the 1958 elections, with Dr. Verwoerd victoriously returned as Prime Minister, the government engaged in a campaign to denigrate the English-language press, with a view to reducing its capacity to criticise it.¹⁴¹² The Broadcasting Corporation, an important source of pro-government propaganda, took to railing against newspapers that published material the government wanted kept quiet.¹⁴¹³

In 1963, the Publications and Entertainments Act allowed for the appointment of a Publications Control Board that would decide what books and other forms of entertainment and information were suitable,¹⁴¹⁴ with huge ramifications for the press and journalism. Dr. Verwoerd's government punished anyone in possession of a banned publication with a fine of €2800 or five years' imprisonment. These publications included Boxing Life because it showed images of Blacks fighting Whites, the life story of Harry Belafonte, the UNESCO pamphlet Behind the Colour Bar, and the books by authors including Ernest Hemingway, Leon Tolstoy, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Carson McCullers and John Steinbeck. Even a children's book, Black Beauty, was banned because of the title, even though it was about a horse.¹⁴¹⁵ Some decisions were hard to explain, like Ian Fleming's James Bond books.¹⁴¹⁶

It was also illegal for any publication to mention anything that a banned person had said.¹⁴¹⁷ Ronald Harrison, a South African artist who painted the famous Black Christ in 1962, which depicted Luthuli as Christ crucified, and flanked by two Roman centurions, represented by Dr. Verwoerd and his Minister of Justice Vorster was arrested and tortured by the South African police. He consistently characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a monster and a tormentor.¹⁴¹⁸

¹⁴¹⁰ Mitson (Morning Record), 28 January 1965: 6, 'South Africa's barbarous racial oppression makes Mississippi as mild as a tea party.'

¹⁴¹¹ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975: 46.

¹⁴¹² Hepple, 1974: 11.

¹⁴¹³ The New York Times, 5 December 1965: 4, 'Dr. Verwoerd affirms Maori athlete bar.'

¹⁴¹⁴ Hepple, 1974: 16; International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975b: 45; Laros, 2015: 283.

¹⁴¹⁵ Hughes, 1961: 185.

¹⁴¹⁶ The New York Times, 20 June 1965: 7, '007 is banned in South Africa: Objection is to 'spy who loved.'

¹⁴¹⁷ Zug, 2007: 195.

¹⁴¹⁸ Harrison, 2006: 96.

Despite or perhaps because of his background in journalism, Dr. Verwoerd reacted strongly when the English-language press criticised the government. In 1961 he complained of the press that rights were “getting out of hand” and warned that he would fight against opposition from the press with every means at his disposal.¹⁴¹⁹ He suggested that anyone who criticised apartheid was a communist or under their sway.¹⁴²⁰ In 1963, the entire staff of an anti-apartheid newspaper were subjected to house arrest, and mere possession of a copy of the paper, The Guardian, was made illegal, with a penalty of imprisonment for three years (the newspaper itself having been banned since 1952).¹⁴²¹

Newspapers that published anything the government wanted kept quiet could be penalised; in 1965, the Evening Post in Port Elizabeth was raided. Police searched through filing cabinets and desks, examined letters and reference papers and scoured press clippings and books.¹⁴²² Later that year, the Rand Daily Mail (RDM) was raided after a series of articles about the beating and torture of Black inmates and maltreatment of White political prisoners in South African jails.¹⁴²³ The information was given to the newspaper by Harold Strachan, a recently released political prisoner.¹⁴²⁴

The State visited its wrath on Strachan by serving him with a five-year banning order¹⁴²⁵ and it hit the author of the articles, Benjamin Pogrund, even harder. He was put on trial several times, imprisoned once, had his passport removed and was twice investigated by the security police as a threat to the State.¹⁴²⁶ Laurence Gandar, the editor, stated that he had never before heard of a campaign of such savagery.¹⁴²⁷ Distressing as the swoop was, the newspaper staff managed to maintain a gallows humour. Assuming that the police had secreted listening devices around the building, attendees at editorial conferences, when discussing sensitive matters, would look up at the ceiling and say, “Hope you can hear OK, ¹⁴¹⁹ Bunting, 1986: 315.

¹⁴²⁰ Ingalls (The New York Times), 29 January 1961: 6, ‘Dr. Verwoerd dooms apartheid shift.’

¹⁴²¹ Zug, 2007: 1, 113.

¹⁴²² Hepple, 1974: 13.

¹⁴²³ The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, ‘Reprisals in South Africa’; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 27 January 1966: 13, ‘South African found guilty of lying about jails’; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 2 July 1965: 3, ‘South Africa raids paper over prison articles: Detectives seize copy’; UNESCO, 1974: 81.

¹⁴²⁴ UNESCO, 1974: 81.

¹⁴²⁵ The New York Times, 3 July 1965: 4, ‘Critic of jails restricted for five years in South Africa.’

¹⁴²⁶ Kniht (TIME), 12 June 2000, ‘The daily courage.’

¹⁴²⁷ The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, ‘Reprisals in South Africa.’

General,” referring to police chief General Hendrik van den Bergh, who had ordered the raid.¹⁴²⁸

In 1964, the *Rand Daily Mail*¹⁴²⁹ won an international press award for bringing to light atrocities¹⁴³⁰ in contravention of the 1959 Prisons Act.¹⁴³¹ Dr. Verwoerd, almost certainly referring to the RDM, warned that certain newspapers had almost committed treason¹⁴³² and declared that all opposition newspapers, which mostly leaned towards the United or the Progressive opposition parties, “approached treason” in their coverage. The English language press, with daily circulation of 685.000,¹⁴³³ responded with a degree of self-censorship.¹⁴³⁴ The Afrikaner press, with daily circulation of 175.000,¹⁴³⁵ remained essentially an arm of government; Dr. Verwoerd himself was chairman of the board of Voortrekker Press, which published the Die Transvaler paper.¹⁴³⁶

In 1964, the Customs and Excise Act was passed, prohibiting the entry to South Africa of materials that might be seen as objectionable in any way.¹⁴³⁷ During 1964-65, Dr. Verwoerd appointed a secret Cabinet committee, assisted by certain Transvaal judges, to prepare a plan for action against the English media. Reporting this in 1971, J.H.P Serfontein of the Sunday Times said a law was drafted to make “defamation of the State” a crime. One member of the committee, W.F. Waring, Minister of Information, objected to the proposal and eventually the idea was dropped.¹⁴³⁸ Anti-apartheid opponents responded to censorship with songs, slogans and gestures which evolved and became a crucial part of the anti-apartheid movement.¹⁴³⁹

The following is a classic example of how the apartheid authorities handled not only the South African media, but correspondents from foreign countries. On April 11, 1960,¹⁴⁴⁰

¹⁴²⁸ Pogrud, 1997: 17.

¹⁴²⁹ In 1985, when the Rand Daily Mail folded under the state’s constant attacks, South Africa’s leading Black paper, The Sowetan, declared in an epitaph that the RDM it was “the first paper to regard [Blacks] as human beings. It fought for them. Its blend of inspirational and aggressive writing was the talk of the times” (Knight (TIME), 12 June 2000, ‘The daily courage’).

¹⁴³⁰ The New York Times, 25 February 1966: 3. ‘Press Achievement award to go to Rand Daily Mail.’

¹⁴³¹ Cook, 1974: 30.

¹⁴³² The Canberra Times, 13 May 1964: 2, ‘Verwoerd v. the Press.’

¹⁴³³ TIME, 24 November 1961: 45, ‘Beginning of the end?’

¹⁴³⁴ van den Berghe, 1967: 98, 85.

¹⁴³⁵ TIME, 24 November 1961: 45, ‘Beginning of the end?’

¹⁴³⁶ Thompson, 1966: 124.

¹⁴³⁷ Hepple, 1974: 23.

¹⁴³⁸ Hepple, 1974: 13.

¹⁴³⁹ Cole, 2015: 88.

¹⁴⁴⁰ The same day, 600 policemen backed by 7,000 troops raided Cato Manor in Durban, arresting 300 people (Philadelphia Tribune, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Farmer’s motive in Dr. Verwoerd shooting remains a mystery.’) while two days after Dr. Verwoerd was shot by Davit Pratt, the Government organized a Press Conference. This followed complaints by several foreign newspapers and governments over the arrest of Norman Phillips, a Canadian and the foreign editor of the Toronto Daily Star, who had been visiting and reporting from South Africa. Present at the conference were three government ministers: Eric Louw (External Affairs), Francois C. Erasmus (Justice) and J.J. Fouché (Defence).¹⁴⁴¹

Louw said that “in this country there is complete freedom of the Press,” and then announced that Phillips would be released as soon as the police had finished questioning him and providing he agreed to leave South Africa immediately. Phillips had arrived in Sharpeville just after the massacre but was prevented from entering the township. He said he had seen police violence in Johannesburg, Cape Town, and Durban.¹⁴⁴² Phillips had been detained two days earlier in Durban after writing critical stories about apartheid. The Toronto Daily Star reported that Phillips’s dispatches were “uncompromisingly against the Government’s policy of white supremacy.” Justice Minister Erasmus denounced the reports as “absolutely untrue” and ordered his arrest.¹⁴⁴³ The arrest came shortly after Phillips interviewed Albert Luthuli, who he described as “the only sane man I’ve met since coming here three weeks ago.”¹⁴⁴⁴ The accusation against Phillips was of writing “reports critical of “scores of Africans” were arrested in the township of Rand, twelve miles from Johannesburg (Atlanta Daily World, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Native town raid target; many seized’). Minister Erasmus said at the news conference mentioned above that these arrests, along with hundreds of others around the country, were necessary to stop “intimidation” of Black people who wanted to go to work by Blacks who wanted to stay at home (Atlanta Daily World, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Native town raid target; many seized’; The Chicago Daily Defender, 13 April 1960: 3, ‘South Africa not yielding on race.’ At the same time, the government warned African workers that those who went on strike, as urged by the ANC, would be dismissed and banished to the reserves in remote parts of South Africa. This warning was given in the face of a threatened one-week strike by Africans in Johannesburg (The New York Times, 17 April 1960: 1, ‘Threat to banish strikers is made by South Africa’). A police officer warned that all necessary measures “including force resulting in death” would be taken to smash the “Negro stay-home strike” (Atlanta Daily World, 17 April 1960: 1, ‘Natives threatened with death by police’). Eventually, because of the police warnings, the strike failed and the workers went to their jobs as normal (The New York Times, 20 April 1960: 1, ‘Strike calls fail in South Africa’).

¹⁴⁴¹ CBS Archives, available at: <http://www.cbc.ca/archives/entry/sharpeville-massacre-sparks-international-condemnation>; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Journalist to be freed-but must leave’; The Star, 11 April 1960: 3, ‘Canada angry over newsman’s arrest’; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Protest over journalist’s arrest.’

¹⁴⁴² CBS Archives, available at: <http://www.cbc.ca/archives/entry/sharpeville-massacre-sparks-international-condemnation>; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Journalist to be freed-but must leave’; The Star, 11 April 1960: 3, ‘Canada angry over newsman’s arrest’; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Protest over journalist’s arrest.’

¹⁴⁴³ Daily Express, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Satisfactory’; Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘News girl is seized’; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Journalist to be freed-but must leave’; The Spectator, 14 April 1960: 3, ‘Portrait of the week’; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Protest over journalist’s arrest’; The Times (London), 12 April 1960: 12, ‘Dr. Verwoerd still as head of Cabinet.’

¹⁴⁴⁴ Washington Post, 10 April 1960: 4, ‘South Africa jails newsman.’

the government” which could have done serious damage to South African-Canadian relations.¹⁴⁴⁵ The Canadian Government protested strongly and demanded Phillips’s immediate release.¹⁴⁴⁶

Only hours after Louw boasted of complete freedom of the Press, the police in Cape Town arrested another foreign journalist, Myrna Mackenzie of the London Daily Herald and the New York Post, who was writing under the name Myrna Blumberg.¹⁴⁴⁷ Myrna Mackenzie was the wife of Ken Mackenzie, manager of Drum and the Post, and both were both reporting on the ANC’s strike campaign.¹⁴⁴⁸ At this time, too, the editor of Africa South fled the country to avoid arrest.¹⁴⁴⁹

On April 12, the day after Louw hailed the freedom of the Press in South Africa, the police banned the media from publishing anything about David Pratt, including his name and photograph, until at least the end of the state of emergency which Verwoerd had imposed after Sharpeville.¹⁴⁵⁰ A government official said that this was done “to avoid ill-feeling between the white races.”¹⁴⁵¹ After that, the South African newspapers remained dutifully silent about Pratt until July 7, 1960, the day before he appeared at Pretoria Magistrate’s Court.¹⁴⁵²

Why would the authorities bar the Press from reporting about Pratt? “To avoid ill-feeling between the white races” appears today, and perhaps appeared even then, to be a very lame excuse. What seems likelier is that they wanted to prevent the Press and thus the public from discovering the sort of man David Pratt was and the political views he espoused. Although the early reports in South Africa’s newspapers presented Pratt as a person without ¹⁴⁴⁵ CBS Archives, available at: <http://www.cbc.ca/archives/entry/sharpeville-massacre-sparks-international-condemnation>; The Cape Argus, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Journalist to be freed-but must leave’; The Star, 11 April 1960: 3, ‘Canada angry over newsman’s arrest’; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Protest over journalist’s arrest.’

¹⁴⁴⁶ The New York Times, 11 April 1960, ‘Dr. Verwoerd aides expect recovery’; The Star, 11 April 1960: 3, ‘Canada angry over newsman’s arrest’; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, ‘Protest over journalist’s arrest.’

¹⁴⁴⁷ Alamy (n.d.) Correspondent of the ‘Daily Herald’ Myrna Blumberg is arrested. Available at: <http://www.alamy.com/stock-photo-correspondent-of-the-daily-herald-myrna-blumberg-is-arrested-69364057.html>; Daily Dispatch, 13 April 1960: 1, ‘Woman detained-Canadian released’; Daily Express, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Satisfactory’; News Chronicle, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd men hold woman reporter’; The Chicago Daily Defender, 13 April 1960: 3, ‘South Africa not yielding on race’; The Spectator, 14 April 1960: 3, ‘Portrait of the week’; Washington Post, 12 April 1960: 6, ‘South Africa widens Emergency Rule.’

¹⁴⁴⁸ Vigne, 1997: 120-121; Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘News girl seized.’

¹⁴⁴⁹ The Spectator, 14 April 1960: 3, ‘Portrait of the week.’

¹⁴⁵⁰ Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, ‘And now he must be called ‘nameless’; The New York Times, 12 April 1960, ‘Press silence on Pratt ordered’; The New York Times, 7 July 1960: 3, ‘Rap South Africa for denying 1600 a trial’; Washington Post, 12 April 1960: 1, ‘Africa shields assassin’s fate.’

¹⁴⁵¹ News Chronicle, 11 April 1960: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd is whisked away for operation.’

¹⁴⁵² The New York Times, 7 July 1960: 3, ‘Rap South Africa for denying 1600 a trial.’

any political interests, even expressing doubts about his sanity, the overseas dispatches were very different, especially those which appeared in the British Press. There, Pratt was portrayed as perfectly sane, a kindly and generous man, with a long record of political activism with the anti-apartheid Liberal Party in Britain, of which he was a financier; most importantly, the foreign newspapers carried interviews with named persons describing Pratt as a serious opponent of Dr. Verwoerd and of apartheid. There was even a picture of Pratt on a number of front pages which showed him knocking on the door of the British Prime Minister at 10 Downing Street while canvassing for the Liberal Party. Reports said he worked actively for the British boycott movement against South African goods and that he was a public speaker at anti-apartheid meetings.¹⁴⁵³ Such reports were obviously unwelcome to the South African Government. By silencing the South African newspapers, the government ensured that none of these overseas reports were picked up and repeated by local newspapers. A detailed account of South African and foreign Press reports about Pratt and their role in the case is given in Chapter Seven.

On July 7, 1960, the Cape Times criticised the government for gagging the Press with regard to Pratt's case. Bravely, the paper also attacked the government for actions by the security forces since the imposition of the state of emergency. It pointed out that some 1,600 people arrested under the emergency regulations were still in custody without being charged or brought before a court.¹⁴⁵⁴ The Emergency remained in force until August 31, 1960.¹⁴⁵⁵

THE SHARPEVILLE MASSACRE

In the context of the growing hold of the police over South African society, the iconic massacre at Sharpeville seems, in retrospect, to have been inevitable. On March 21, 1960, Robert Sobukwe and another 150 activists presented themselves for arrest at police stations all over South Africa. Crowds gathered to support them and demand their release.¹⁴⁵⁶ The idea was that the police would never be able to cope with the numbers involved, and that the pass laws would have to be revoked.¹⁴⁵⁷ One of the townships where protestors gathered was ¹⁴⁵³ Daily Mirror, 12 April 1960: 5, 'The day farmer Pratt called at No. 10'; Evening Standard, 11 April 1960: 1, 'Death for gunman?'

¹⁴⁵⁴ The New York Times, 7 July 1960: 3, 'Rap South Africa for denying 1600 a trial.'

¹⁴⁵⁵ Burger, 1961: 23.

¹⁴⁵⁶ Marquard, 1969: 24.

¹⁴⁵⁷ Sowden, 1968: 196.

Sharpeville, a suburb of Vereeniging, south of Johannesburg. This was a relatively well-off Black area where many had running water, and some even had sanitation.¹⁴⁵⁸

Sharpeville had been set up by the government as a “model” community to which Blacks living “too close” to white areas could move.¹⁴⁵⁹ The PAC was particularly strong in this area, which had a relatively weak ANC presence.¹⁴⁶⁰ Prior to the march it had sent a letter to the Commissioner of Police, Major General Rademeyer, explaining that the protest would be peaceful.¹⁴⁶¹ Initially the mood at the protest was buoyant, as attending journalists later reported. Benjamin Pogrund of the Rand Daily Mail said that “the demonstrators were completely friendly”¹⁴⁶² and Humphrey Tyler of Drum that the crowd was “perfectly amiable.”¹⁴⁶³ The Township Superintendent Labuschagne walked through the crowd and found relaxed people with whom he stopped to chat, and no evidence of any hostility.¹⁴⁶⁴

People felt hopeful that the protest might have a positive outcome, and for some the event was also a day out in a township in which little ever happened. An attendee told the TRC years later: “At the police station we sat down, we were singing hymns, you know it was just a jolly atmosphere. We were singing these hymns as Christians because we were just rejoicing. And we didn’t know what will follow thereafter. We were just joyous because we thought that same afternoon we would get a message. Everybody was taking his feelings out.”¹⁴⁶⁵

The mood of the crowd, largely women and children, has been described as an “idle holiday atmosphere” in which these “were not dangerous agitators but for the most part ordinary citizens who had come to see what was going on.”¹⁴⁶⁶ The police refused to arrest the PAC leaders, and the crowd did not disperse. While the government later claimed that there had been about 20,000 protestors, some eyewitnesses put the figure closer to 3000.¹⁴⁶⁷

Many of the policemen were very young and had no training or experience in “soft” forms of crowd control.¹⁴⁶⁸ Some of them, anxious because they did not know the area well, ¹⁴⁵⁸ Meredith, 1988: 81.

¹⁴⁵⁹ Martin, 2007: 7.

¹⁴⁶⁰ Gerhart, 1978: 236.

¹⁴⁶¹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 1998: 533.

¹⁴⁶² Pogrund, 1990: 133.

¹⁴⁶³ Tyler, 1995: 17.

¹⁴⁶⁴ Lodge, 2011: 99.

¹⁴⁶⁵ Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 1998: 535.

¹⁴⁶⁶ Reeves, 1960, 34-46.

¹⁴⁶⁷ Tyler and Furie, 1960: 5.

¹⁴⁶⁸ Frankel, 2001: 93-121.

because there had been some minor incidents of violence in the days before,¹⁴⁶⁹ and because they were largely unable to understand anything the Blacks were saying, as they did not speak the local Sesotho language,¹⁴⁷⁰ opened fire on the demonstrators. They killed at the very minimum sixty-nine (the total figure is likely to be much higher)¹⁴⁷¹ and wounded one hundred and eighty-two (including thirty-one women and nineteen children).¹⁴⁷² Most of the victims were shot in the back,¹⁴⁷³ and most of whom were women and children.¹⁴⁷⁴ The fact that so many were shot in the back clearly shows that they were fleeing, rather than rushing towards, the police.

The precise number of deaths at Sharpeville will probably remain a mystery. It has been variously quoted as 67, 69 or 72.¹⁴⁷⁵ However, the Township Superintendent Labuschagne referred to a much higher figure and there is inconsistency between the local "Official Native Register" of people killed by gunshot and memorials in the local cemetery. As few could afford a gravestone, most victims were buried in unmarked graves, while some who had not been living in Sharpeville for long were returned to rural areas for burial. Some families arranged for anonymous burials, fearing police reprisals, while some buried their loved ones according to tribal religious tradition, rather than Christian.¹⁴⁷⁶

None of these deaths are included in the official tally and nor are the many who were seriously wounded and eventually died weeks, months, or even years after the initial onslaught; official statistics cover only immediate victims. Unsubstantiated local reports tell of police arriving at night and removing bodies from graves.¹⁴⁷⁷ The police removed some bodies before the official tally was made, contributing to the reduction of the official death toll.¹⁴⁷⁸ It also seems that some of the victims had turned up without their passes, hoping to be arrested, and it was easy for them to be left uncounted.¹⁴⁷⁹

¹⁴⁶⁹ Martin, 2007: 8.

¹⁴⁷⁰ Lodge, 2001: 92.

¹⁴⁷¹ Frankel, 2001: 151.

¹⁴⁷² Reeves, 1960: 97.

¹⁴⁷³ Davenport, 1991: 358; Holmes, 1964: 4; Marx, 1992: 37; Mufson, 1990: 82; Shaw, 2007: 31, van den Berghe, 1967: 140; Zug, 2007: 186.

¹⁴⁷⁴ Hopkins, 2015: 247.

¹⁴⁷⁵ Pogrund, 1990: 134.

¹⁴⁷⁶ Frankel, 2001: 150-152.

¹⁴⁷⁷ Frankel, 2001: 150-152.

¹⁴⁷⁸ Martin, 2007: 9.

¹⁴⁷⁹ Davenport, 1991: 358.

There had been no warning from the police that they were about to engage in violence; no baton charge, warning shot or instruction that the crowd should disperse because the officers were about to start shooting. The police continued to shoot after the crowd had started to flee and was clearly not a threat, and even after their officers had ordered them to cease.¹⁴⁸⁰ Not all of the victims had even been involved in the demonstration. The terrain was flat and the police used high-velocity bullets, which reached some people who were drinking tea outside their homes or, in the case of one man, distributing invoices by bicycle around the town – his head was blown off. Eye witnesses reported that many police mocked the dying with parodic versions of the slogans used by the protestors, saying things like “Yes, now you are going to return,” and “There you have it, take it, that is your Africa.”¹⁴⁸¹

When the ambulances arrived, the White policemen called on their Black colleagues to deal with the dead and injured, not wishing to have to deal with the spilled intestines and brains. They held back the victims’ friends and relatives, refusing to allow them to tend to the fallen, or even to know if they were alive or dead. Others even killed off some of the injured, having decided that they were in a position to determine who would benefit from a “mercy shot.” Atrocities on the wounded were also carried out by black police.¹⁴⁸² Some eye-witnesses likened the scene to the carnage found on a world war battlefield.¹⁴⁸³

The police claimed that the presence of many women and children among the victims indicated that the protestors had used them as a “human shield,” when in reality women had been very active in the local PAC and many had been employed as stewards in the demonstration, while large numbers of all ages, including children and the aged, had come to watch an event that everyone expected to be peaceful.¹⁴⁸⁴ The police commander said, “My car was struck by a stone. If they do these things, they must learn their lesson the hard way.”¹⁴⁸⁵

Realising that they had miscalculated in their decision to fire on the crowd and that they might get into trouble, the police tried to make it seem that they had been under threat, throwing rocks into the police station to give the impression that the crowd had been stoning ¹⁴⁸⁰ Frankel, 2001: 118, 145.

¹⁴⁸¹ Lodge, 2011, 107; Reeves, 1960: 133.

¹⁴⁸² Frankel, 2001: 137-140.

¹⁴⁸³ The Sphere, 29 March 1960: 459, ‘South African riots.’

¹⁴⁸⁴ Frankel, 2001: 142.

¹⁴⁸⁵ TIME, 4 April 1960: 19, ‘South Africa: The Sharpeville massacre.’

them.¹⁴⁸⁶ Witnesses described them as “forming groups, kicking stones into rough piles and then intentionally hurling the projectiles over the wire fence.”¹⁴⁸⁷ They also made extensive arrests among survivors, behaving as if the police had been the victims, not dead and wounded.¹⁴⁸⁸

The local hospitals worked tirelessly to save the wounded, without which the death toll would have been even higher, while police officers interrogated them, and even removed some from their beds and took them into custody if they could not answer questions to the officers' satisfaction. Some were left wearing their bloody clothes for months as a way to advertise the perils of protest. The police formed search parties in Sharpeville and the surrounding areas, arresting and harassing locals, with many imprisoned for weeks before being released without charge.¹⁴⁸⁹ A police unit led by Captain Hendrik van den Bergh was sent to the Baragwanath hospital where many victims of the police shootings had been taken. His team of White and Black policemen dragged wounded people from their beds, irrespective of their condition, handcuffed them and transported them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, hosed down and ordered to dress again in their bloody clothes, which they were forced to wear unwashed for months afterwards as an example of the price of “agitation.”¹⁴⁹⁰

Police brutality did not stop there. The police insisted that they had used normal bullets and not the banned dum-dum variety. To conceal their use, the police had told the medical staff, who had seen the injuries, that it would not be in the national interest for them to make “exaggerated” disclosures.¹⁴⁹¹ In addition, when the injured victims started to arrive at hospitals for treatment police officers were already in place to inspect those who were dead and remove bodies that had been very badly damaged by explosive dum-dum bullets. An estimated twenty-four dead bodies were spirited away and buried in secret so that no post-mortems could be carried out on them.¹⁴⁹²

¹⁴⁸⁶ Martin, 2007: 10.

¹⁴⁸⁷ Frankel, 2001: 134.

¹⁴⁸⁸ Martin, 2007: 11.

¹⁴⁸⁹ Frankel, 2001: 152-157.

¹⁴⁹⁰ Frankel, 2001: 194-195.

¹⁴⁹¹ Frankel, 2001: 149.

¹⁴⁹² Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal. 1960: pp. 128, par. 209.

The ANC and the PAC called for a day of mourning and work stoppages (a “stay at home”), and there were demonstrations all over the country.¹⁴⁹³ On March 29, Francois Erasmus, Verwoerd’s Minister of Justice, stated that “They want to bring the White government to its knees. The government has decided to bring a halt to the reign of terror.” The next day, Verwoerd announced a state of emergency, which gave him the power to censor the press, close or take over any business, make arrests without warrant, and force workers to return to their jobs or go to jail.¹⁴⁹⁴ On April 8, Dr. Verwoerd outlawed the ANC and the PAC.¹⁴⁹⁵ Within a week, his police had arrested over 12,000 people (mostly Blacks but also some Whites, Indians and Coloureds) under emergency regulations permitted by the Public Safety Act of 1953.¹⁴⁹⁶ They were also beating up Africans and forcing them to return to work.¹⁴⁹⁷

The massacre at Sharpeville quickly acquired iconic status, while Dr. Verwoerd blamed the violence on anti-apartheid “propaganda” that he said had had “an inciting effect on the Bantus.”¹⁴⁹⁸ He suggested that British Prime Minister Macmillan was partly to blame,¹⁴⁹⁹ for having “stirred up” the non-Whites.¹⁵⁰⁰ He claimed that Sharpeville had been the result of a Communist conspiracy,¹⁵⁰¹ that it could never be described as a reaction against apartheid¹⁵⁰² as it was just a “periodic phenomenon.”¹⁵⁰³ He also even claimed that the demonstrators had shot first, although no weapons were found among them¹⁵⁰⁴ and proudly declared that he had “no sleepless nights over the native problem because I know I am right.”¹⁵⁰⁵ Finally, Dr. Verwoerd ignored the Liberal Party’s call for the government to stand down or that he offer the Africans concessions.¹⁵⁰⁶

¹⁴⁹³ Jaster, 1985: 45; Rudolph, 1984: 4; TIME, 11 April 1960: 32, ‘South Africa. From mourning to action.’

¹⁴⁹⁴ TIME, 11 April 1960: 32, ‘South Africa. From mourning to action.’

¹⁴⁹⁵ Marais, 2001: 25.

¹⁴⁹⁶ Rudolph, 1984: 4.

¹⁴⁹⁷ Fullard, 2004: 344.

¹⁴⁹⁸ Ballinger, 1969: 425.

¹⁴⁹⁹ Italiaander, 1961: 110.

¹⁵⁰⁰ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹⁵⁰¹ Mandela, 2013: 281.

¹⁵⁰² Loveland, 1999: 383; The Illustrated London News, 9 April 1960: 590, ‘South Africa: The issues appraised.’

¹⁵⁰³ LIFE, 16 September 1966: 41, ‘A violent end for the apostle of apartheid’; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹⁵⁰⁴ TIME, 4 April 1960: 19, ‘South Africa: The Sharpeville massacre.’

¹⁵⁰⁵ LIFE, 16 September 1966: 41, ‘A violent end for the apostle of apartheid’; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

¹⁵⁰⁶ The Canberra Times, 24 March 1960: 1, ‘Menzies calls for report on S. Africa riots.’

The Economist commented shortly afterwards that it had set off a chain of events without parallel, honing international sympathy for non-Whites.¹⁵⁰⁷ By this stage, the British Press routinely referred to South Africa as a “police state,”¹⁵⁰⁸ and the British authorities began to discuss the idea that South Africa could be expelled from the Commonwealth.¹⁵⁰⁹ The United States expressed “regret”, acknowledging that this was “an intrusion into the domestic affairs of South Africa,” while Macmillan “strongly condemned” the events and the United Nations placed on its agenda the contention of a consortium of Asian and African countries that the government was responsible for the killings.¹⁵¹⁰

In Norway, the flag was flown at half-mast on the day of the funerals,¹⁵¹¹ while protestors gathered outside Africa House in London and about fifty members of the British House of Commons signed a motion calling for the government to protest “in the strongest possible terms” the fact that such an appalling event had taken place within the Commonwealth. The Brazilian government banned a football match in Rio de Janeiro against a South African team and recalled its ambassador from Pretoria. At a conference in New Zealand the Prime Minister, Walter Nash, asked his audience to stand in silent memory of the dead. The Indian House of Representatives also paid this tribute while Prime Minister Nehru in his speech likened the Nationalists to the Nazis. In Holland, the Dutch Parliament adopted a resolution asking the South African Government to look to the welfare of all its citizens and to their human rights. Several other Parliaments around the world adopted similar resolutions.¹⁵¹²

CATO MANOR, LANGA, NYANGA, NGQUSA HILL AND OTHER PROTESTS

The appalling Sharpeville Massacre dominated the headlines, but there had also been massacres that day at the Langa and Nyanga townships. Demonstrations in areas including Langa and Nyanga became violent when protesters started to throw stones at Whites. The police responded brutally. Two were killed at a march against the pass laws, and fifty were injured. Up to 10,000 had gathered, and had been baton-charged and shot at by the police.¹⁵¹³

¹⁵⁰⁷ The Economist, 2 April 1960: 15, ‘Urgent Africa.’

¹⁵⁰⁸ Italiaander, 1961: 119; The Economist, 9 April 1960: 180, ‘Kaffirs in their place.’

¹⁵⁰⁹ Barber et al, 1990: 81.

¹⁵¹⁰ The New York Times, 10 April 1960, ‘Toronto Star editor held in South Africa.’

¹⁵¹¹ Martin, 2007: 11.

¹⁵¹² Calvocoressi, 1961: 3-4.

¹⁵¹³ Truth and Reconciliation, 1998: 533; Dubow, 2014: 77-78.

These incidents were not isolated occurrences since protests against apartheid were frequent at the time. On January 23, 1960, just two months before the Sharpeville Massacre, protestors attacked and killed nine policemen, four White and five Black, at the Cato Manor police station, seven kilometres from Durban.¹⁵¹⁴ Around the same time, protests also took place in the Zecrust area, in Sekukuhniland, at Virginia, at Kroonstad, at Pietermaritzburg and Harding, as well as in several country districts in Natal.¹⁵¹⁵

Without provocation, on June 6, 1960, at Ngqusa Hill, Eastern Pondoland in the Easter Cape, the police opened fire on a peaceful protest against the government's rural policies, killing eleven Africans and seriously wounding another fifteen.¹⁵¹⁶ The protest at Ngqusa Hill was the most prominent of a series of demonstrations in Pondoland that became known as the Mpondo Revolts. Four years later Govan Mbeki described what happened in Ngqusa Hill; a perfect example of how the police operated at the time:

“Africans from a score of kraals had met there to discuss their complaints. Two aircraft and a helicopter dropped tear-gas and smoke bombs on the crowd, and police vehicles approached from two directions. The Africans raised a white flag to show that their meeting was a peaceful one, but police suddenly emerged from the bushes surrounding the meeting-place and fired into the crowd. At first the government refused to disclose how many had been killed, but strong representations were made and finally an inquest was ordered. Relatives found the bodies of 11 men which had been left all day for dogs and other animals to feed on.”¹⁵¹⁷

Subsequently, a pathologist testified at the inquest¹⁵¹⁸ that although the examination was difficult, he found that six of the eleven men had been killed by bullets with three of them with shots to the back of their heads. The magistrate reported that three of the policemen involved in the killing did not fire to an excessive extent and anyway their action was justified because it was self-defence. This, despite the fact that the victims were unarmed and had raised a white flag. The magistrate declared that the use of sten guns was “unjustified

¹⁵¹⁴ The Bishop of Johannesburg, 1960: 2-3; The Cape Times, 25 January 1960, ‘Nine police massacred at Durban.’

¹⁵¹⁵ The Bishop of Johannesburg, 1960: 3-4.

¹⁵¹⁶ For more about the case see: Badat, S. (2013) The Forgotten People: Banishment under Apartheid; Mbeki, G. (1964) The Peasants' Revolt; Muller, L. (2011) Tangible and Intangible Ngquza Hill: A Study of Landscape and Memory; Nqakula, C. (2018) The People's War: Reflections of an ANC Cadre; Wylie, N. (2011) The Shock of the New: Ngquza Hill 1960.

¹⁵¹⁷ Mbeki, 1964: 121.

¹⁵¹⁸ Rowley Arenstein was one of the lawyers who acted for the family's victims at the inquest (Beinart, 2011: 94, 110; Muller, 2011: 224; Wylie, 2011: 204).

and excessive, even reckless.” However, he concluded that there was insufficient evidence to establish that the shots fired by any of the policemen had killed anyone. In the event, no-one was charged or held responsible.¹⁵¹⁹

After the Ngqusa Hill inquest, the Department of Bantu Affairs appointed a three-man Commission of Inquiry,¹⁵²⁰ led by J.A.C. van Heerden, Chief Bantu Affairs Commissioner of the Ciskei. Unsurprisingly, the Commission’s report¹⁵²¹ blamed the ANC for the deaths by instigating the protest. The report read, “It is clear that the people of Bizana were the victims of the insidious propaganda of the African National Congress and associated organizations.” The Commission’s findings provoked widespread anger among the families of the victims and those who took part in the protest and they were formally rejected at a public meeting of 5,000 people.¹⁵²² The Ngqusa Hill inquest and Commission of Inquiry are typical examples of how inquests and official inquiries operated during apartheid, invariably finding in favour of the government, absolving the police from any responsibility, and finding “no-one to blame” (or the victims themselves) for any deaths.

Furthermore, between March 21 and April 9, 1960, some eighty-eight non-Whites were killed and 365 injured. During the State of Emergency that followed, 11,729 Africans, 90 Asians, 98 Whites and 36 Coloureds were detained without being charged or put on trial. As late as August 31 that year, only 400 of them had been released.¹⁵²³

In the Aftermath of Sharpeville

Immediately after the massacre, Dr. Verwoerd’s government declared a State of Emergency and prohibited most gatherings,¹⁵²⁴ while giving the authorities more leeway to ban meetings, search people and buildings, and oppress with violence. It became an offense to say anything that could be interpreted as subverting the government’s authority or inciting others to resist.

¹⁵¹⁹ Badat, 2013: 116-117; South African Institute of Race Relations, 1962: 49; Mbeki, 1964: 121; Muller, 2011: 221-225; Nqakula, 2018: 80-81.

¹⁵²⁰ The Commission of Inquiry into the Disturbances in Eastern Pondoland.

¹⁵²¹ For a detailed analysis of the Report and the background of van Heerden’s “investigation” see Wylie, N. (2011) The Shock of the New: Ngquza Hill 1960.

¹⁵²² Badat, 2013: 117; Wylie, 2011: 197-201, 206.

¹⁵²³ Reeves, 1962a: 4.

¹⁵²⁴ Reeves, 1960: 101.

Opposition newspapers, afraid of censorship, or that employees would suffer, largely did not publish any photographs of victims.¹⁵²⁵

At the time, the world took the official reports issued by the police about riots and clashes with the activists as accurate and definitive.¹⁵²⁶ This report directly contradicted the first-hand evidence of witnesses; including Benjamin Pogrund, a journalist with the Rand Daily Mail,¹⁵²⁷ and Bishop Ambrose Reeves, who described the shootings as “punitive,” and stated that the police had used excessive force, shooting into people’s backs long after any hint of danger had receded. There was no evidence of shots having been fired from the crowd, or of any attempt to charge the police, nor had the fleeing crowd left any weapons in their wake.¹⁵²⁸ Bishop Reeves put together a legal team that would act on his behalf and on that of some of the victims and their dependents. This team included leading anti-apartheid lawyer Sydney Kentridge, who would later be involved in hearings investigating the death of Steve Biko.¹⁵²⁹

Hundreds were arrested on suspicion of having been complicit in organising the protest, while many Whites who lived nearby turned up at police stations offering assistance and proposing that they set up vigilante groups to protect themselves and their property from the black invasion they expected.¹⁵³⁰ Many of these laws became permanent after the State of Emergency was lifted.¹⁵³¹ The government got even tougher on all dissident activities, pronouncing as unlawful and banning groups including the ANC¹⁵³² and the PAC under the new Unlawful Organisations Act,¹⁵³³ and carrying out a range of legal and administrative measures designed to make legal opposition to the government impossible and intimidate the disenfranchised majority.¹⁵³⁴ It set up a new system of “sentinel platoons,” composed of armed commando units and civilian “shock regiments” to quash unrest.¹⁵³⁵ It became illegal for an individual to bring any legal action against the government relating to the massacre or ¹⁵²⁵ van den Berghe, 1967: 85.

¹⁵²⁶ Pogrund, 2000: 10.

¹⁵²⁷ Knight, 2000.

¹⁵²⁸ The Canberra Times, 15 June 1960: 7, ‘Sharpeville shooting ‘punitive,’ Bishop tells Inquiry.’

¹⁵²⁹ Frankel, 2001: 191.

¹⁵³⁰ Frankel, 2001: 158, 161.

¹⁵³¹ Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group, 1986: 52-53.

¹⁵³² Tower Hamlets International Solidarity, 1985: 6.

¹⁵³³ Gilbert, 2010: 34.

¹⁵³⁴ Slovo et al, 1976: 108.

¹⁵³⁵ The New York Times, 5 August 1960: 2, ‘South Africa forms new security force.’

the state of emergency.¹⁵³⁶ Apartheid had become essentially a totalitarian system of racial oppression against which violent struggle increasingly seemed like the only option. Vuyisile Mini, an anti-apartheid activist, song writer and vocal bassist, wrote an angry, inflammatory song, Beware Dr. Verwoerd.¹⁵³⁷

The Sharpeville massacre led to panic across society; the stock market plummeted by a third, with investments leaving the gold mining industry in particular, because of its overwhelming dependence on black labour,¹⁵³⁸ foreign companies sold their assets and vast amounts of money left the country.¹⁵³⁹ Whites fearing that a black revolution was imminent stockpiled firearms to protect themselves in the event of an uprising,¹⁵⁴⁰ with some stating that they would to kill all the “kaffirs” if necessary,¹⁵⁴¹ while extremists prepared themselves for what they referred to as the “Third Afrikaner War of Freedom.”¹⁵⁴² The Canadian and Australian embassies were flooded with queries about immigration.¹⁵⁴³ In the Dutch Reformed Church, always a stalwart supporter of apartheid, some voices were raised calling for concessions to Africans.¹⁵⁴⁴ During a parade of White school children in Meyerton, near Johannesburg, one of them said, “Daddies and mummies, please make sure that after you are no longer here, we won’t have to live as slaves.”¹⁵⁴⁵

ANC President Luthuli, who had called for a national stay-at-home action, the first nationwide response to apartheid,¹⁵⁴⁶ and who had publicly burned his own pass was banned and banished to Natal, and Sobukwe was imprisoned at Robben Island.¹⁵⁴⁷ Luthuli described the deaths as “brutal.” Public opinion shifted radically after Sharpeville and the banning of the ANC and the PAC. A pamphlet published on December 16, 1961 for the launch of the ANC’s military wing, Umkhonto we Sizwe, stated: “the time comes in the life of any nation when there remain only two choices: submit or fight. This time has now come to South

¹⁵³⁶ Mitson (Morning Record), 28 January 1965: 6, ‘South Africa’s barbarous racial oppression makes Mississippi as mild as a tea party.’

¹⁵³⁷ Curry, 2012: 110.

¹⁵³⁸ The Canberra Times, 24 March 1960: 1, ‘Menzies calls for report on S. Africa riots.’

¹⁵³⁹ Davis, 1987: 12; The Economist, 23 April 1960: 340, ‘One month after Sharpeville’; The Economist, 10 August 1960: 664, ‘African Repercussions.’

¹⁵⁴⁰ Gerhart, 1978: 242.

¹⁵⁴¹ Legum, 1960: 236.

¹⁵⁴² Meierhenrich, 2010: 189.

¹⁵⁴³ Gerhart, 1978: 242.

¹⁵⁴⁴ The Economist, 23 April 1960: 340, ‘One month after Sharpeville’

¹⁵⁴⁵ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, ‘The champion of apartheid.’

¹⁵⁴⁶ Lapping, 1986: 139.

¹⁵⁴⁷ Attwell, 1986: 95-99.

Africa. We shall not submit and we have no choice but to hit back by all means in our power in defence of our people, our future and our freedom.”¹⁵⁴⁸

Luthuli had been more or less continuously banned since 1953, which meant that he could not receive visitors, make statements, or even go to church.¹⁵⁴⁹ This period of imprisonment would last for three years.¹⁵⁵⁰ He remarked that “native disturbances” were simply a “periodic phenomenon” that, if seen in a global context of “poverty and low wages,” had nothing specific to do with government policy.¹⁵⁵¹ He ordered the temporary suspension of the pass laws in a desperate attempt to calm things down but anger was at an all-time high, and thousands continued protesting and shunning work.¹⁵⁵² Largely because of the massacre and the government’s response, Blacks and Whites now understood that unless something dramatic happened, they were heading inexorably towards violent conflict. It was abundantly clear that the National Party would never concede on any point. The opposition to apartheid, including white opposition, moved firmly to the left.¹⁵⁵³

The Sharpeville Massacre became a highly potent symbol of oppression and resistance that resonated with Blacks even a full generation later, when black resistance had become much more violent, and the white government continued to display no intention of ceding any ground.¹⁵⁵⁴ Whereas atrocities had been carried out in South Africa before, the world and South Africa itself responded strongly to the Sharpeville Massacre; thousands of Whites emigrated, and the increasingly politically aware Blacks reacted with great anger.¹⁵⁵⁵ Quietly, in a tacit recognition of the horrors they were implicated in, at least forty of the White police officers who had perpetrated the massacre resigned.¹⁵⁵⁶

After the Sharpeville Massacre, the government set up a one-man Commission of Inquiry, under Judge Wessels, ostensibly to investigate what had happened.¹⁵⁵⁷ The report of the Commission concealed more than it revealed, whitewashing the police and the government and heaping most of the blame on the demonstrators, just as the Commission of Inquiry into the Disturbances in Eastern Pondoland had done, and so many other ¹⁵⁴⁸ ANC, 1988: 20. Nelson Mandela also quoted these words in his statement to the court in 1964.

¹⁵⁴⁹ Luthuli, 1961.

¹⁵⁵⁰ Thomson, 1966: 179-180.

¹⁵⁵¹ Kondlo, 2009: 65.

¹⁵⁵² Harsch, 1980: 245.

¹⁵⁵³ Frankel, 2001: 184.

¹⁵⁵⁴ Lodge, 2011: 3.

¹⁵⁵⁵ Sparks, 1990: 242.

¹⁵⁵⁶ Frankel, 2001: 128.

¹⁵⁵⁷ Reeves, 1960: 81.

Commissions would do during apartheid. The Commission and its report would be examined in detail in Chapter Six.

At the same time, 1907 political prisoners were detained without trial, including Sobukwe and most of the organisations' leaders, according to the Public Safety Act legislation, and another 18,111 (sometimes described as 20,000) arrested on grounds of being "idlers." Amid the chaos, and international condemnation, Dr. Verwoerd dismissed talk of reform and advised leaders in the National Party to stand firm to their race policies.¹⁵⁵⁸ Increasingly heavy-handed policing was used to control political opposition¹⁵⁵⁹ and raids were generally violent, including attacks on people and the destruction of property.¹⁵⁶⁰ The Economist characterised South Africa "a state of siege."¹⁵⁶¹

Meanwhile, Mr. Elwyn Jones, QC, submitted a report to the International Commission of Jurists on the situation in South Africa during the state of emergency, which he had completed after acting as an investigator for the Commission. His report, compiled after an eleven-day visit to South Africa, said in part that "the Nationalists regard the rule of law, as interpreted by an independent judiciary, as an unfortunate legacy of British colonial rule of the nineteenth century." He criticized the provisions of the state of emergency and outlined what he said would be the result if it continued and Verwoerd succeeded in passing new suppressive legislation, such as censorship of the press. This, he wrote, would mean that "the twelve years of Nationalist rule will have finally deprived all non-whites of almost all the human rights and fundamental freedoms set out in the United Nations Declaration of human rights." The Economist described Dr. Verwoerd's actions and legislation which he designed as an attempt to "legalize tyranny."¹⁵⁶²

Even so, Dr. Verwoerd warned against concessions, stating that South Africa could "fall from the grasp of the white man together with everything that he has brought to this country which he loves."¹⁵⁶³ Black leaders, including Mandela, were imprisoned.¹⁵⁶⁴ Mandela was convicted of striking and of having left the country without a passport.¹⁵⁶⁵ He would spend most of his sentence on Robben Island, which is discussed below. From the British ¹⁵⁵⁸ Meredith, 1988: 89; Reeves, 1960: 101.

¹⁵⁵⁹ Solani and Nieftagodien, 2004: 391.

¹⁵⁶⁰ van den Berghe, 1967: 138.

¹⁵⁶¹ The Economist, 16 April 1960: 230, 'South Africa: A state of siege.'

¹⁵⁶² The Economist, 16 April 1960: 1193, 'Legalising tyranny.'

¹⁵⁶³ Moodie, 1975: 277.

¹⁵⁶⁴ Longford, 1985: 22.

¹⁵⁶⁵ Bunting, 1986: 216.

protectorate of Swaziland Archbishop Reeves stated his determination that the full story of the massacre should be heard, and his fears that he would be “silenced” in South Africa. The government-friendly newspaper Die Transvaler suggested that he had fled to avoid the inquiry that was shortly to be held.¹⁵⁶⁶

Unrest started to emerge elsewhere. In Johannesburg, all the inhabitants of the black townships went on strike for nearly three weeks, and a new pass-burning campaign began.¹⁵⁶⁷ While most activists had been committed to peaceful protest, after Sharpeville the mood started to change and armed groups began to emerge, to which the government responded brutally; “raids, sabotage, torture, assassinations, imprisonment without trial, killings, informers, emergency laws, dramatic arrests and escapes.”¹⁵⁶⁸

Consistently, Dr. Verwoerd identified communists as the primary villains. He stated that the greatest obstacle to his major goal of separate development was “the unfavourable atmosphere” created by hostile organisations and persons, “some of them white and imbued with communistic aims sowing suspicion and inciting the non-whites.”¹⁵⁶⁹ The passage of the Defence Further Amendment Act in 1961 gave the military authorities war-time powers to repress dissent.¹⁵⁷⁰

Despite international criticism, Dr. Verwoerd was determined to ensure white supremacy, saying, “We will see to it that we remain in power in this white South Africa.”¹⁵⁷¹ Dr. Verwoerd felt confident that Blacks would not resist if they knew that the government would never concede so he ensured that everyone knew that apartheid was a complex, interlocking system that would not permit the change of any of its elements, and that he personally would never accept change but would extend apartheid ever further.¹⁵⁷²

In 1961, Dr. Verwoerd called a general election eighteen months early and it took place on October 18 of that year. The Sharpeville massacre and its aftermath had hardened white feelings towards Blacks and the National Party was returned with a resounding majority.¹⁵⁷³ Three General Law Amendments, in 1962 (the “Sabotage Act” mentioned

¹⁵⁶⁶ The Canberra Times, 6 April 1960: 1, ‘Bishop will speak elsewhere.’

¹⁵⁶⁷ Bunting, 1986: 209.

¹⁵⁶⁸ Barber, 1999: 166.

¹⁵⁶⁹ Ballinger, 1969: 442-443.

¹⁵⁷⁰ Hepple, 1966: 166.

¹⁵⁷¹ Rake, 1990: 151.

¹⁵⁷² Booth, 1998: 62; Wentzel, 1995: 3.

¹⁵⁷³ Hepple, 1966: 167.

above),¹⁵⁷⁴ 1963 and 1964, greatly extended the government's reach in the form of widened powers for the police and military including the right to imprison without trial, the refusal of bail, and much more.¹⁵⁷⁵ In 1965, The Economist grimly pointed out that such was the injustice and inequality in South Africa that, unless and until non-Whites were treated more fairly, the country more or less "had" to be a police state, as so many were so desperate that high crime rates were unavoidable.¹⁵⁷⁶

By 1963, the Liberal Party had become a serious nuisance and Dr. Verwoerd committed himself to systematically destroying it. The Nationalist Party and its press smeared the Party and many government ministers called for its restriction.¹⁵⁷⁷ By this time racial segregation was built into every single aspect of everyday life and enforced with ruthless, violent means.¹⁵⁷⁸ Anti-apartheid activists, Black and White, who fled or attempted to flee South Africa were often kidnapped and brought back, and the government enacted a range of acts of sabotage, including causing the explosion of a plane supposed to bring political asylum seekers out of Bechuanaland, where they had fled, and destroying a centre for refugees, also in Bechuanaland.¹⁵⁷⁹ The South African authorities wanted vocal critics of the apartheid regime to remain in South Africa where they could be arrested and tried, and went to great lengths to prevent them from leaving as refugees.¹⁵⁸⁰ It also cracked down on entry visas for anyone who seemed to be even slightly critical of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd's governance.¹⁵⁸¹

The same year, the government increased its budget for military spending by 50% and "reorganised the police force, recruited 'home guards' to guard 'strategic installations,' dotted the country with police posts and set out to fence and police South Africa's borders." Even more worryingly, "Young whites are being trained to handle firearms with targets representing Blacks, even White schoolgirls."¹⁵⁸² Neville Alexander stated that the massacre "removed the blinkers from the eyes" of those providing political leadership to the oppressed as to the impact of their non-violent campaigns.¹⁵⁸³

¹⁵⁷⁴ Cronje, 1964: 3.

¹⁵⁷⁵ Hepple, 1966: 168.

¹⁵⁷⁶ The Economist, 7 August 1965: 1, 'White man's country.'

¹⁵⁷⁷ Hain, 1996: 26.

¹⁵⁷⁸ Attwell, 1986: 104.

¹⁵⁷⁹ Gifford, 1981: 6.

¹⁵⁸⁰ Ingalls (The New York Times), 18 April 1960: 1, 'South Africans said to consider sealing borders.'

¹⁵⁸¹ Stultz, 1969: 6.

¹⁵⁸² Ainslie and Robinson, 1963: 4.

¹⁵⁸³ Alexander: 2013: 7-8.

DR. VERWOERD'S FOREIGN POLICY

Since the National Party's victory in 1948, the primary foreign policy objective had been the protection of apartheid from foreign threat, although it often posited this as a fight against international communism.¹⁵⁸⁴ Dr. Verwoerd's own position on foreign policy since becoming Prime Minister has been characterised as "Stop the world, I want to get off."¹⁵⁸⁵ Certainly, he had no interest in listening to critical views on apartheid from overseas and insisted on making most foreign policy decisions on with the support of his ever-loyal foreign ministers and minimal input from anyone else.¹⁵⁸⁶ This was broadly consistent with the general trend among Afrikaners to be distrustful of all outside influences as having the potential to interfere with the purity and self-determination of the Afrikaner volk.¹⁵⁸⁷ Overall, Dr. Verwoerd's intention was to reinforce the relative power of White to non-White South Africans, and to prevent anything that would tend to weaken white power.¹⁵⁸⁸

The United Nations had stated reservations about South Africa from the very start of modern apartheid and consistently issues had been raised, notably the treatment of Indians and the extreme form of racial politics.¹⁵⁸⁹ Although many voices overseas were raised against apartheid, transforming these words into action in the form of actual sanctions was slower, and many argued that sanctions would be illegal.¹⁵⁹⁰ In 1953, a UN Commission report condemned apartheid and stated that it was contrary to the "dignity and worth of the human person."¹⁵⁹¹ Lengthy discussions were held about the feasibility of coercing South Africa to adopt a less discriminatory system, and the UN urged Africans, including those directly affected by apartheid, to press for a peaceful resolution, while comparing racism to a "mental illness."¹⁵⁹²

Dr. Verwoerd was determined to stand firm, stating that the government was prepared to choose between being popular internationally and facing the "destruction of the white Nation in South Africa" or proceeding with their plans for apartheid.¹⁵⁹³ In a statement to the United Nations, he said that UN resolutions calling for sanctions did not bother South Africa, ¹⁵⁸⁴ Price, 1984: 11-32.

¹⁵⁸⁵ Blumenfeld, 1987: 13.

¹⁵⁸⁶ Munger, 1965: 85.

¹⁵⁸⁷ Seiler, 1975: 448.

¹⁵⁸⁸ Lawrie, 1964: 43.

¹⁵⁸⁹ Leiss, 1965: 51.

¹⁵⁹⁰ Higgins, 1964: 92; Holmes, 1964: 6.

¹⁵⁹¹ Dubow, 2014: 48.

¹⁵⁹² Leiss, 1965: 155, 162-168.

¹⁵⁹³ House of Assembly, January 23-27 1961, col. 98.

“since so many of the countries who really do not want themselves in for this kind of foolishness.”¹⁵⁹⁴

The United Kingdom was South Africa's biggest trading partner and had acted as a mediator between South Africa and the UN. In 1950, British authorities argued that it was important to maintain a close relationship with South Africa despite apartheid. Britain was dealing with the steady break-up of its empire, and conservative elements in the government tended to identify with Whites. Powerful lobbies with major investments in South Africa pleaded that sanctions would hurt Britain too and that normal trade relations should continue, with similar lobbies making similar claims in the United States.¹⁵⁹⁵ In Britain, the clout of these investors blunted opposition to apartheid even in the Labour Party, which had stated that it was firmly against it.¹⁵⁹⁶

In both the US and the UK, the interests of foreign investors in lucrative mining and other businesses in South Africa tended to trump human rights interests.¹⁵⁹⁷ The British arms industry was making huge sums of money from the sale of arms and military equipment to the government of South Africa, while anti-apartheid activists implored the government and the people to stop trade with South Africa completely.¹⁵⁹⁸ Foreign investments, especially from the US and the UK, played a huge role in supporting South Africa prosperity and, by extension, the continuation of apartheid.¹⁵⁹⁹

In 1958, as the new Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd appealed to western nations to stand with South Africa, which he represented as the last “toehold” of “western civilisation in Africa.”¹⁶⁰⁰ He did not get the overwhelming support he wanted and, in 1960, a year that saw a record for South African exports¹⁶⁰¹ at the value of $724 million despite the boycotts, complained that Western nations were kowtowing to African countries because they wanted their support, and were ditching South Africa's interests in the process.¹⁶⁰²

¹⁵⁹⁴ El-Khawas, 1971: 450.

¹⁵⁹⁵ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 247-253.

¹⁵⁹⁶ Ainslie and Robinson, 1963: 8; Darnborough, 1967: 4-5.

¹⁵⁹⁷ Fasulo, 1970: 3.

¹⁵⁹⁸ Ainslie and Robinson, 1963: 22.

¹⁵⁹⁹ Litvak et al, 1978: 38.

¹⁶⁰⁰ The Economist, 20 December 1958: 1071, ‘Dr. Verwoerd seeks allies.’

¹⁶⁰¹ South Africa exported a large number of products, mainly to Europe, in particular minerals, but also fruits, vegetables, wine, sugar, wool, gold and diamonds (Rogers and Bolton, 1981).

¹⁶⁰² The New York Times, 3 July 1960: 6, ‘Dr. Verwoerd assails West African bid.’

Dr. Verwoerd was angry and disappointed that foreign countries did not see his Bantu Homeland system as the humanitarian approach that he presented it as. Where he felt that South Africa should have been praised for its new system,¹⁶⁰³ it was often criticised. Even countries that did have diplomatic relations with South Africa tended to keep their distance; the relationship between Dr. Verwoerd and the US ambassador, for example, was a chilly one.¹⁶⁰⁴ Dr. Verwoerd was also irritated by American criticism of apartheid, which he considered the height of hypocrisy given that the basics of the system had been culled from race laws in operation in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. The only difference was that South Africa had given a name, apartheid, to a policy which already existed in some American states.¹⁶⁰⁵

Dr. Verwoerd became Prime Minister when African colonies of European nations were demanding independence, and a year after Ghana became the first to achieve it.¹⁶⁰⁶ Dr. Verwoerd and his government were horrified by de-colonialization and in 1959 the Foreign Minister Eric Louw¹⁶⁰⁷ had referred to it as “disturbing” and “alarming.”¹⁶⁰⁸ He seems to have felt that the Commonwealth was likely to collapse because of the strains associated with the UK’s attempts to “promote multinationalism” around the world.¹⁶⁰⁹ In international parlance, the year 1960 was known as “the year of Africa” when no fewer than seventeen African nations became independent of their European colonial masters. However, Dr. Verwoerd did not find it necessary to establish diplomatic relations with any of the new black states, despite a recommendation that he should do so from Robert Menzies, Australia’s Prime Minister. As far as Dr. Verwoerd was concerned, diplomatic relations with black Africa were out of the question.¹⁶¹⁰ A later attempt to find “some understanding” in Zambia by sending out “feelers” was ignored by President Kaunda.¹⁶¹¹

While most English South Africans accepted the 1960 referendum result somewhat grudgingly,¹⁶¹² Dr. Verwoerd did enjoy some British support in the person of Second World ¹⁶⁰³ Seeley, 1984: 11.

¹⁶⁰⁴ Munger, 1965: 87.

¹⁶⁰⁵ Moodie, 2017: 153.

¹⁶⁰⁶ Sparks, 1990: 192.

¹⁶⁰⁷ (1890-1968) Nazi and anti-Semite diplomat and politician. He served as Minister of Economic Affairs and Minister of Finance. Close friend and associate of Verwoerd, he served under him as Minister of Foreign Affairs (Bunting, 1986: 63-66).

¹⁶⁰⁸ Pfister, 2005: 31.

¹⁶⁰⁹ Spence, 1968: 4.

¹⁶¹⁰ Osada, 2002: 181.

¹⁶¹¹ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1972: 101.

¹⁶¹² The Economist, 15 October 1960: 251, ‘South Africa’s choice.’

War legend Field Marshal Bernard Montgomery, who visited South Africa in 1962. Dr. Verwoerd and nine members of his cabinet dined with Montgomery, who, upon returning to the UK, declared that separate development was “a plan worthy of the most sincere examination and study.” He said, “In South Africa there was complete peace and quiet, very different from the rest of the continent, where we see chaos and unrest and nobody seems able to unscramble the racial omelette in a peaceful atmosphere.”¹⁶¹³ Another Briton who supported Dr. Verwoerd and his policies was Oswald Mosley, British fascist leader, who visited South Africa and pronounced it the “healthiest place in the world.”¹⁶¹⁴ Dr. Verwoerd also received support from neo-Nazi groups from Germany, who toured South Africa and preached white supremacy.¹⁶¹⁵

In January 1961, the secretary general of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjöld, visited South Africa to discuss the country’s racial policies, with no happy outcome. In April 1961, a month after South Africa withdrew from the Commonwealth, the UN passed a resolution denouncing South African racial policies as “reprehensible and repugnant to human dignity.”¹⁶¹⁶ However, South Africa’s ten highest ranking partners – the UK, the USA, Japan, France, Belgium, Netherlands, Canada, Australia, West Germany and Italy – together with Spain, Greece, Turkey, Portugal, Luxemburg, New Zealand and Ireland constantly opposed UN Sanctions against South Africa,¹⁶¹⁷ at a time when relations with the US under the new Kennedy administration, were poor.¹⁶¹⁸ Later that year, Dr. Verwoerd wrote a strongly worded letter to one of South Africa’s prominent Jewish lawyers in a move that was interpreted as a threat relating to Israel’s support of sanctions.¹⁶¹⁹ The letter received a lot of publicity overseas,¹⁶²⁰ and Dr. Verwoerd denied any anti-Semitic intent.¹⁶²¹

In April 1961, Dr. Verwoerd made the decision to pass a decree stating that for the purposes of the Group Areas Act, Japanese would be considered Whites, while Chinese would be considered non-White, although they are racially the same.¹⁶²² Japan was economically important to South Africa, as Dr. Verwoerd had agreed a $250 million ¹⁶¹³ Warwick, 2009: 70-71.

¹⁶¹⁴ Furlong, 1991: 256.

¹⁶¹⁵ Bunting, 1986: 70-72.

¹⁶¹⁶ Osada, 2002: 188; Seeley, 1984: 24.

¹⁶¹⁷ Ampiah, 1997: 150.

¹⁶¹⁸ Seeley, 1984: 11.

¹⁶¹⁹ The New York Times, 23 November 1961: 6, ‘Israel sees threat in Dr. Verwoerd letter.’

¹⁶²⁰ Shimoni, 1980: 312.

¹⁶²¹ The New York Times, 24 November 1961: 2, ‘Dr. Verwoerd denies Anti-Semitic claims.’

¹⁶²² Weyl, 1970: 25.

industrial contract with the Asian nation, while China was not of great economic importance, and Communist.¹⁶²³ The same year, there was widespread outrage at a British decision to remove non-Whites from a British navy ship before it visited South Africa, having taken political advice from the South African authorities. "It is a situation that cannot be helped and the coloured boys know this," said the admiral. Outrage ensued, particularly from the Labour Party.¹⁶²⁴

In 1962, influenced by the Sharpeville massacre,¹⁶²⁵ a majority of the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted a resolution on economic sanctions,¹⁶²⁶ declaring that South Africa's policies were contrary to its obligations; that they had led to international tensions, and that it should urgently end apartheid.¹⁶²⁷ Economic sanctions were proposed by twenty-nine Asian and African states, but they were vetoed by the USA and Britain.¹⁶²⁸ This was a time of crisis in the area of foreign relations.¹⁶²⁹ With poor grace, Dr. Verwoerd invited United Nations representatives to visit South Africa and gave them free rein to travel, presumably hoping that this would stall their criticism.¹⁶³⁰ He also accused those overseas who were attacking him as "the ducktails (young hoodlums) of the political world." He said, "We are not the oppressors ... we are Christians..."¹⁶³¹

Many of the most critical countries were developing ones, with Asian nations leading the charge. Consistently, African and Asian states argued that South Africa flouted the United Nation's charter of human rights and that apartheid fell under its purview. However, they were consistently stymied by western nations with investments in the country.¹⁶³² Because South Africa was an important trading partner for so many countries, although they knew that apartheid was wrong they were reluctant to criticise it. Robert Edgar very successfully compared the situation with a joke from Woody Allen's film, Annie Hall. In the film, a fellow consults a psychiatrist, complaining about his brother who thinks he is a chicken. The psychiatrist says that the solution is simple: commit your brother to a mental hospital. And ¹⁶²³ Kawasaki, 2001: 68.

¹⁶²⁴ Sunday Express, 29 January 1961: 1, 'Navy apartheid row.'

¹⁶²⁵ Klotz, 1995: 46.

¹⁶²⁶ Haekkerup, 1964: 42.

¹⁶²⁷ Conference Steering Committee, 1964: 95.

¹⁶²⁸ Eades, 1999: 15; El-Khawas, 1971: 446.

¹⁶²⁹ Seeley, 1984: 23.

¹⁶³⁰ The Economist, 26 May 1962: 800, 'Dr. Verwoerd fights on.'

¹⁶³¹ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, 'The champion of apartheid.'

¹⁶³² El-Khawas, 1971: 444.

the fellow responds, "That's fine, but I need the eggs."¹⁶³³ Neville Alexander argued that with no alternative to a capitalist government, international imperial and capitalist forces would ensure that the National Party would remain at the helm.¹⁶³⁴

Even when increasing numbers of voices were raised against apartheid, and the number of sanctions grew, South Africa's government appeared more committed than ever to pursuing its policy of racial segregation. It amassed weapons and developed arms locally because most arms-producing countries, such as the United States, which had voted in favour of an arms embargo, would no longer export to South Africa. France and Britain had agreed not to export weapons that could be used in enforcing apartheid¹⁶³⁵ and Scandinavian countries, especially Denmark, were committed to assisting the population to end the status quo and achieve racial equality peacefully.¹⁶³⁶ After the Sharpeville massacre, India and Ghana wanted South Africa to be kicked out of the United Nations, and Canada also condemned the country.¹⁶³⁷ However, Dr. Verwoerd, remained unmoved, telling Parliament, "The government have to choose between international popularity and the destruction of the white nation in South Africa or going forward with apartheid."¹⁶³⁸

In 1963, Dr. Verwoerd railed against Scandinavian countries and Israel for their condemnation of South Africa's racial policies, and in particular against Israel's decision to withdraw its minister to South Africa, embedding his remarks in the context of a discussion of the Jews in South Africa, implying that Israel's policies might have negative implications for them.¹⁶³⁹ He responded to Israel's support for the United Nations stand against South Africa by stating that this was a "tragedy for Jewry in South Africa";¹⁶⁴⁰ a barely veiled threat. Two years earlier, he had noted darkly his disapproval of the fact that few Jews had voted for him in the 1961 elections, with the suggestion that if they continued not to support the government, things might not go well for them.¹⁶⁴¹ Furthermore, after the elections, Dr.

¹⁶³³ Woody Allen was one of the few artists who had prohibited the release and distribution of his films in South Africa (Edgar, 1990: 16; Shore, 1990: 410).

¹⁶³⁴ Alexander, 1990: 13.

¹⁶³⁵ Duncan, 1963: 43.

¹⁶³⁶ Haekkerup, 1964: 45.

¹⁶³⁷ Harrison, 1981: 166.

¹⁶³⁸ House of Assembly, 1961: 98.

¹⁶³⁹ Conley (The New York Times), 10 October 1963: 18. "11 accused in South Africa of planning revolt."

¹⁶⁴⁰ Bunting, 1986: 67.

¹⁶⁴¹ The Canberra Times, 23 November 1961: 33, 'Dr. Verwoerd accuses 'Jew vote.'

Verwoerd verbally attacked the Jews in Houghton, a wealthy Johannesburg suburb, for electing Helen Suzman of the Progressive Party to the Parliament.¹⁶⁴²

By 1963, South Africa was becoming increasingly isolated within the international community.¹⁶⁴³ The increase of African states as members of the United Nations from nine in 1960 to thirty-two by 1963 added to the pressure.¹⁶⁴⁴ In 1963, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) was created, with headquarters in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to pursue the international and regional interests of independent African nations.¹⁶⁴⁵ The OAU declared open war on all non-representative regimes of Southern Africa, thus excluding white-ruled South Africa from its ranks.¹⁶⁴⁶

At the same time, South Africa's mandate of control over South West Africa was withdrawn by the United Nations and the territory was given by the General Assembly the name "Namibia" while neighbouring Rhodesia, also a racist state, faced international sanctions. South Africa did not have diplomatic relations with black-run African countries, and Dr. Verwoerd did not intend to establish any until they dropped their hostility towards South Africa. The only African country it had diplomatic relations with was Egypt.¹⁶⁴⁷

Throughout the 1960s, as South Africa became economically stronger, and thus a more important trading partner, there was a "slackening in resistance" to apartheid in many countries around the world.¹⁶⁴⁸ Notwithstanding the oil embargo that the United Nations voted for in 1963, anti-apartheid activists tended to grow disillusioned in response to the general ineffectiveness of bodies such as the UN to apply sanctions effectively.¹⁶⁴⁹ Despite UN sanctions and lip-service to disapproval, businesses from many countries around the world continued to invest in South Africa.¹⁶⁵⁰

Dr. Verwoerd had made it clear that it did not matter even if the US and UK introduced sanctions. So far as he was concerned, apartheid was there to stay – and in any case their many investments seemed to make the argument a moot point.¹⁶⁵¹ Around the

¹⁶⁴² Goldberg quoted in Suttner, 1997: 469

¹⁶⁴³ Pfister, 2005: 37.

¹⁶⁴⁴ Stultz, 1969: 4.

¹⁶⁴⁵ Klotz, 1995: 10.

¹⁶⁴⁶ Stultz, 1969: 4.

¹⁶⁴⁷ Seeley, 1984: 12-13; UNESCO, 1974: 127-139.

¹⁶⁴⁸ Vigne, 1969: 3.

¹⁶⁴⁹ Reddy, 1974: 19.

¹⁶⁵⁰ Anti-apartheid Alliance, 1988: 1

¹⁶⁵¹ The New York Times, 22 November 1964: 2, 'Apartheid stays, Dr. Verwoerd vows.'

world, however, anti-apartheid movements were growing and, increasingly, left-wing parties articulated their views. In the UK, for example, the Labour Manifesto for the general election of 1964 included a pledge to stop exporting British arms to South Africa.¹⁶⁵²

The UK and the US tried to stay on both sides of the fence, criticising South Africa enough so that they seemed to be doing the right thing, while continuing to invest and do business with it. Dr. Verwoerd said that he was depending on the “common sense” of both nations to protect the Whites of South Africa.¹⁶⁵³ The US paid lip service to eliminating apartheid, while acknowledging the usefulness of access to South Africa’s ports, and of its tracking station in the country. It did little or nothing to dissuade South Africa from apartheid, including refusing to intervene in the case of American investments. Particularly tellingly, the US had no provision for providing official legal status to those seeking asylum on political grounds. Moreover, while Black Americans, especially those involved in civil rights movements, were routinely denied visas to visit South Africa, White South Africans, including extreme racists, had no such problems in obtaining visas to visit the US.¹⁶⁵⁴

In 1964, Dr. Verwoerd said, apropos of foreign policy: “The crux of the problem is whether it is more important to be in the good books of world opinion than it is to make up your own mind as to how best you can ensure your survival as the white race in this country. I do not want to push aside the nations of the world. I should not like to be on hostile terms with them; I should like to seek the friendships of others; but I can seek that friendship only within the limits of the right that South Africa herself must have to formulate her own policy in respect of what is to happen within South Africa.”¹⁶⁵⁵

A visit to South Africa by US Senator Robert Kennedy in June 1966 was a propaganda disaster for Dr. Verwoerd, while for the opposition it was a timely reminder that the world was on its side. It also provided a much needed boost to dissidents’ morale after heavy jail sentences that had recently been imposed on Nelson Mandela and other ANC leaders. For more than a year, the pro-government Afrikaans press had been calling on Sen. Kennedy to cancel his proposed visit as the guest of a multi-racial group, accusing him of trying to “cloud relations” between South Africa and the United States. When Kennedy ¹⁶⁵² Darnborough, 1967: 1.

¹⁶⁵³ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 5 April 1966: 11, ‘Dr. Verwoerd says he won’t yield to pressure of US and Britain.’

¹⁶⁵⁴ Houser, 1966: 4-5, 16.

¹⁶⁵⁵ Hepple, 1967: 192.

eventually visited, Dr. Verwoerd refused to meet him, a decision which many commentators said made him look petty and small-minded. The senator met with Opposition leaders and newspaper editors instead.¹⁶⁵⁶

Just before his death, Dr. Verwoerd met in Pretoria with the leader of Lesotho, Leabua Jonathan.¹⁶⁵⁷ In a joint statement released after the meeting, the two leaders stressed working together, while avoiding interference in each other's internal affairs.¹⁶⁵⁸ It was the first, and as it turned out, the last time he met with a Black African leader. Dr. Verwoerd refused to be seen in public with him, so they talked in a private room in a hotel and Jonathan flew home immediately afterwards. He thus avoided the embarrassment of being refused a room in Pretoria's White-only hotels.¹⁶⁵⁹ He was hoping that the meeting would result in a positive regional atmosphere in which apartheid was tolerated in return for cooperation. He knew that by integrating South Africa more and more into the western capitalist economy other governments would be less likely to join the growing pressure from the third world and the socialist countries to have apartheid abolished.¹⁶⁶⁰

Dr. Verwoerd believed that profit would always win, regardless of how important political principals were supposed to be. For this reason, the government's strategy was always to engage economically with other nations.¹⁶⁶¹ In this way, they hoped that they would be able to broker a peaceful situation in which apartheid was tolerated in return for the advantages of cooperation. If such working relationships did well, South Africa would be able to respond to pressures on its apartheid system by focusing on economic matters.¹⁶⁶²

Dr. Verwoerd was becoming increasingly isolated from diplomatic relations with most countries, but he forged alliances with those leaders whom he felt were most supportive of apartheid. These were the fascist dictator of Portugal, Antonio de Oliveira Salazar, who was determined to hold onto Portugal's colonies in Africa, Mozambique and Angola, even if that meant using appalling violence, and the federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, in which white domination was maintained.¹⁶⁶³ Ian Smith, Rhodesia's Prime Minister, declared

¹⁶⁵⁶ Daniel and Vale, 2009: 141; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 27 October 1965: 18, 'Robert Kennedy's plan assailed in Johannesburg'; The Illustrated London News, 11 June 1966: 8, 'Personalities of the week.'

¹⁶⁵⁷ Geldenhuys, 1984: 19.

¹⁶⁵⁸ Scheepers Strydom, 1967: 182.

¹⁶⁵⁹ TIME, 9 September 1966: 37, 'South Africa: A summit of sorts.'

¹⁶⁶⁰ Grundy, 1976: 577.

¹⁶⁶¹ Grundy, 1991: 29.

¹⁶⁶² Vale, 1987: 181-182.

¹⁶⁶³ Ainslie, 1962: 5.

confidently in 1964 about his allies Dr. Verwoerd and Salazar that they “will stand by us and have always stood by us.”¹⁶⁶⁴

In 1966, when Rhodesia was facing sanctions, Dr. Verwoerd supported its regime, while trying to hide the fact that the only thing keeping it from crumbling was that it was propped up by South Africa.¹⁶⁶⁵ He was consistent in calling on countries such as the UK and the US to back off and leave Rhodesia to its own affairs, by which he meant white hegemony.¹⁶⁶⁶ Dr. Verwoerd's view was that Rhodesia was a sort of buffer zone between South Africa and “black Africa,” and that if sanctions worked against Rhodesia, they might be employed more systematically against South Africa.¹⁶⁶⁷ Nevertheless, despite the support he was providing to Smith's regime, some members of his Party accused him that this was not enough and that he was letting down the cause of the Whites in Africa. Dr. Verwoerd replied, “We are the foremost white supremacists in the world.”¹⁶⁶⁸

In 1960, a case brought by Ethiopia and Liberia came before the World Court, claiming that South Africa had been mismanaging South West Africa/Namibia.¹⁶⁶⁹ The case was dismissed in 1966,¹⁶⁷⁰ which was claimed by Dr. Verwoerd as “a major victory.”¹⁶⁷¹ A prominent African jurist not named by the press of the time declared that Africa was losing confidence in the World Court, which he called “a white man's court.”¹⁶⁷² After the verdict, a Namibian tribal chief stated of Dr. Verwoerd's plans for the homelands: “my people and other tribes would never submit to such a plan. The Germans killed us like cattle, but this thing which Verwoerd he will do seems, in this age, to be even more merciless.”¹⁶⁷³

However, in October 1966 (just after Dr. Verwoerd's death), the General Assembly of the ¹⁶⁶⁴ Dubula, 1965: 31.

¹⁶⁶⁵ The Economist, 23 April 1966: 343, ‘What would make Dr. Verwoerd cry chicken.’

¹⁶⁶⁶ The New York Times, 1 November 1964: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd backs Rhodesian stand.’

¹⁶⁶⁷ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 2 January 1966: 136, ‘Dr. Verwoerd on Rhodesia: Go Slow.’

¹⁶⁶⁸ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 7 September 1966, ‘A prophet of racism.’

¹⁶⁶⁹ South West Africa/Namibia was a German colony from 1884 to 1915. South Africa defeated the German forces there during the First World War and kicked them out of the country. Since that time, South Africa had been responsible for the administration of the territory (Dugard, 1973: 15-66; TIME, 29 July 1966: 22, ‘South Africa: A vote on apartheid’).

¹⁶⁷⁰ The Judge appointed by Dr. Verwoerd to defend South Africa in the World Court was Justice Jacques Theodore van Wyk. van Wyk was later appointed as the sole member of the one-man Commission of Enquiries into the Circumstances of the Death of Dr. Verwoerd. For more about the case see Dugard, J. (1973) The South West Africa/Namibia Dispute; van Wyk, J.T. (1968) The United Nations, South West Africa and the Law.

¹⁶⁷¹ Daniell (The New York Times), 19 July 1966: 1; ‘Verdict angers Africans at UN’; Dugard, 1973: 243-260; The Canberra Times, 20 July 1966: 17, ‘Verwoerd happy with decision by ‘white man's court’; The New York Times, 19 July 1966: 17, ‘Dr. Verwoerd calls ruling a victory for South Africa;’ TIME, 29 July 1966: 22, ‘South Africa: A vote on apartheid.’

¹⁶⁷² The Canberra Times, 20 July 1966: 17, ‘Verwoerd happy with decision by ‘white man's court’;

¹⁶⁷³ TIME, 29 July 1966: 22, ‘South Africa: A vote on apartheid.’

United Nations voted 102 to 2 to revoke the government of South Africa's right to administer the country.¹⁶⁷⁴

APARTHEID, A CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY

Apartheid per se, and not just specific acts carried out under the apartheid regime, has been identified as a crime against humanity according to the basic Charter for Human Rights drawn up by the United Nations following the infamous Nuremburg trials.¹⁶⁷⁵ The many egregious crimes against human rights that occurred under apartheid had profound repercussions for the quality of life of the repressed, especially Blacks.

Apartheid conspired to infringe on the rights of Blacks in a myriad of ways, and with devastating consequences. The Bantustan system itself was an abuse of human rights, as it imposed a sort of slavery on the entire black population.¹⁶⁷⁶ In 1966, the United Nations finally declared apartheid per se to be a crime against humanity¹⁶⁷⁷ while a year earlier a United Nations report called the practices of Dr. Verwoerd's government "a provocation of people everywhere."¹⁶⁷⁸

APARTHEID AND NAZISM¹⁶⁷⁹

Since the 1930s the Broederbond and, by extension, the National Party and its members, including Dr. Verwoerd (convicted for being a "tool of the Nazis" as we have already seen), had been deeply influenced by Nazism. While overt praise for Nazism waned after the defeat of Germany, there are certainly many echoes of Nazism in apartheid.¹⁶⁸⁰ Several of Dr. Verwoerd's closest associates and friends, including Eric Louw, Piet Meyer and John Vorster were ardent supporters of Nazi ideals, and Louw, Foreign Minister at the time of South ¹⁶⁷⁴ Herbstein, 2004: 145-146.

¹⁶⁷⁵ Farah, 1974: 72-73.

¹⁶⁷⁶ Farah, 1974: 73.

¹⁶⁷⁷ Guelke, 2005: 1.

¹⁶⁷⁸ Dubula, 1965: 31.

¹⁶⁷⁹ For a detailed discussion of the topic see the PhD thesis of Sipo Elijah Mzimela, former representative of the ANC in the United Nations, (1980) Nazism and Apartheid: The Role of Christian Churches in Nazi Germany and Apartheid South Africa. Also: Asmal, K. et al. (1997) The Nazis of Africa: Apartheid as Holocaust?; Bunting, B. (1968) The Rise of the South African Reich; Furlong, P. J. (1991) Between Crown and Swastika: the Impact of the Radical Right on the Afrikaner Nationalist Movement in the Fascist Era; Jemison, E.L. (2003) The Nazi Influence in the formation of apartheid in South Africa; Peires, J. (2004) The Holocaust and Apartheid: Similarities and Differences: A Comparative Study.

¹⁶⁸⁰ Bernstein, 2004: 6.

Africa's republican referendum, explicitly compared Hitler's plans for the Jews with the South African nationalist plans for Blacks. There are echoes of Nazism in the statement by F.S. Steyn, a National Party MP, that one of the reasons for restrictions on the entry of Black women to urban areas was to limit African fertility.¹⁶⁸¹

Can, apartheid, however, be compared to the Holocaust? The answer is yes, and no. The major difference between apartheid and Nazism was that in the former there had been no concerted attempt at genocide, even though the system's efforts to marginalise and disempower led to an enormous number of deaths. Also, a not insignificant portion of the Black population was persuaded to take part in the apartheid project, with Black police officers collaborating in the oppression of their own peers. Nonetheless it was, and remains, clear that Dr. Verwoerd's legislation, including its racial categorisations and policy of concentrating people in geographical areas according to physical type, had much in common with Nazi ideals. Both Mandela and Desmond Tutu would compare apartheid to the holocaust.¹⁶⁸²

Arthur Chaskalson,¹⁶⁸³ a South African multi-winning awards human rights lawyer and anti-apartheid activist, agreed that the Nuremberg Laws, and the techniques the Nazis used initially to marginalise Jewish communities, were very similar to the techniques used by the Nationalists.¹⁶⁸⁴ Arthur Goldreich, a prominent anti-apartheid activist and a Rivonia trialist, also compared apartheid to Adolf Hitler's racist philosophy and policies, saying that "apartheid smelled like Nazism."¹⁶⁸⁵

Like Nazism, apartheid that attracted large numbers of people, who rallied to the cause, and just as Germans had been encouraged to report on neighbours suspected of being Jews, Whites were allowed, even encouraged, to complain about the classification as White of a neighbour whom they suspected of being Coloured.¹⁶⁸⁶ How far do the comparisons go? Critics of apartheid South Africa have often highlighted the many ways in which the regime

¹⁶⁸¹ Asmal et al, 1996: 32-37.

¹⁶⁸² Suttner, 1997: 330.

¹⁶⁸³ (1931-2012) A barrister; he was in the defence team in the Rivonia Trial. Chosen by Mandela to be the first President of the Constitutional Court of South Africa (1994-2001) after the fall of apartheid (Herbstein, 2012). He was also Chief Justice of South Africa from 2001 to 2005. He participated in the writing of South Africa's new Constitution (Martin, 2012: A23).

¹⁶⁸⁴ Arthur Chaskalson quoted in Suttner, 1997: 330.

¹⁶⁸⁵ TIME, 30 August 1963: 25, 'South Africa: Escape artists.'

¹⁶⁸⁶ Asmal et al, 1996: 149, 148.

drew inspiration from the Nazis, and in both direct and indirect ways.¹⁶⁸⁷ An examination of the evidence shows that there are both similarities and differences:

Key Similarities

- Both Nazi Germany and apartheid South Africa banned sexual relations between individuals who had been classified as belonging to different races, so that the “master” race would remain “pure.”
- Both countries devised complex racial categories into which people had to fit, and according to which they would be compelled to live their lives in a certain way.
- Both Nazi Germany and apartheid South Africa prevented those who were considered lesser from holding citizenship. This was manifested in many ways, including banning such people from taking part in national sporting events or representing the country.
- There were parallels between South African “Bantu Education” and the education system the Nazis envisioned for the Poles, both of which were supposed to equip the “master race” with a servant class trained to do its bidding.
- Both regimes operated a strict control of the media, and used censorship and propaganda to ensure that people heard the message that they wanted to deliver.
- In both situations the authorities made no effort to curtail or punish those who engaged in torture; rather, techniques of torture were employed as part of the state apparatus of terror.
- Dr. Verwoerd’s forced removals were similar to the ruthless concentration by the Nazis of Warsaw’s Jews into the Ghetto; precisely the same process operated here.

Key Differences

- The Nazis wished to rid Germany and its territories of Jews completely, whereas South Africa wished to retain its Black population, conveniently located so as to provide cheap labour.
- Whereas the Nazis had a deliberate policy of exterminating Jews and other “undesirables,” most of the deaths of non-Whites during apartheid occurred as a result of poverty, torture, selective assassinations, lack of affordable healthcare, and so forth.

¹⁶⁸⁷ Simson, 1980: 25.

- Because Jews did not necessarily conform to a particular physical type, research was carried out into people's ancestry and relationship with the Jewish faith. In the case of South African non-Whites, no such research was necessary (although it was for Coloureds, of mixed heritage). With the passage of time, the Nazis became increasingly preoccupied with racial classification and difference.
- Whereas the Nazi system was generally hostile to pre-existing churches and Hitler subsumed them into a "National Reich Church" that he had founded himself, the apartheid system in South Africa worked in close collaboration with the Dutch Reformed Church, essentially co-opting it as part of the apartheid project.¹⁶⁸⁸

In brief, there are clear parallels between South Africa and Nazi Germany, particularly if one considers the Nazi regime up to 1941, when the systematic murder of Jews began. However, there was never an attempt, or even the intention, of killing all Blacks in South Africa. After all, every aspect of the South African economy depended on them for cheap labour. Certainly, there can be no doubt that apartheid South Africa can accurately be considered a fascist regime, in which the repression of African (and to a lesser extent Indian and Coloured) labour was a certain aspect of ideology and policy, in a society in which skin colour and ethnicity can be seen as proxies for social class.¹⁶⁸⁹

DR. VERWOERD IN 1966

Although in 1963 Colin Legum described South Africa as a "doomed republic" and predicted that Dr. Verwoerd's apartheid could not last very long, he was quickly disproved.¹⁶⁹⁰ Dr. Verwoerd claimed that the preceding five years, while often difficult (the country had been in recession, and unemployment had been high)¹⁶⁹¹ had been the "golden age of apartheid," in which the Whites had faced difficulties, but had emerged to "ride the wave of prosperity."¹⁶⁹²

In 1965, with the official and unofficial opposition crippled, and following successful provincial elections, Dr. Verwoerd crowed that the National Party, which had "always been a great champion for the maintenance of the white race and its civilisation here at the southern tip of Africa" was becoming progressively stronger, uniting the common goals of English-

¹⁶⁸⁸ Asmal et al, 1996: 164.

¹⁶⁸⁹ Simson, 1980: 33, 135, 158.

¹⁶⁹⁰ Legum, 1963: 4.

¹⁶⁹¹ Bunting, 1959: 1.

¹⁶⁹² Legum and Legum, 1964b: 79.

and Afrikaans-speakers.¹⁶⁹³ Dr. Verwoerd was indignant at the criticism South Africa received from foreign countries; to such South Africans, the rightness of apartheid seemed self-evident.¹⁶⁹⁴

In 1965, Dr. Verwoerd stated, “Our motto is to maintain white supremacy for all time to come over our own people and our own country, by force if necessary.”¹⁶⁹⁵ In just a year, he had managed to turn South Africa effectively into a police state, bound by the tightest security and with most opposition leaders captive on Robben Island or in prison elsewhere.¹⁶⁹⁶ More importantly for Dr. Verwoerd, apartheid appeared to be working. The more the rest of the world insisted that apartheid policies were unacceptable and the more isolated South Africa became, the more Dr. Verwoerd insisted that his country was fighting the good fight for western civilisation, while other developed countries succumbed to “sickly sentimental post-war humanism and liberalism.”¹⁶⁹⁷ The reality was that Africans had consistently lost rights, while the much-vaunted notion of self-government in economically viable homelands was increasingly remote.¹⁶⁹⁸

By 1966, Dr. Verwoerd was at the height of his power and had never been more popular; he had put himself in a situation whereby he could effectively become a dictator at a moment's notice, having the Afrikaner electorate in the palm of his hand,. His most ardent supporters almost venerated him. He was described as having been chosen by God, as the greatest Western leader of the day, and as the saviour of Western civilisation. Streets were named after him in many towns and cities¹⁶⁹⁹ and any internal opposition to apartheid had been largely crushed.¹⁷⁰⁰

At the same time, the economy performed extremely well,¹⁷⁰¹ experiencing the greatest economic boom in the country's history, equalled only by the economic growth in Japan.¹⁷⁰² In 1964, the Economist's correspondent in Johannesburg reported, “boycotted by millions of world consumers and by sizable number of governments, South Africa's economy

¹⁶⁹³ Hepple, 1966: 173.

¹⁶⁹⁴ Gailbraith, 1959: 267.

¹⁶⁹⁵ Welsh, 2000: 414.

¹⁶⁹⁶ Hepple, 1967: 198.

¹⁶⁹⁷ Uys (The Spectator), 13 December 1963: 781, ‘Old man granite.’

¹⁶⁹⁸ Walshe, 1963: 353.

¹⁶⁹⁹ Hepple, 1967: 198-200; Worrall, 1971: 216.

¹⁷⁰⁰ Jaster, 1985: 47.

¹⁷⁰¹ The Economist, 7 March 1964: 905, ‘Boom time in South Africa.’

¹⁷⁰² Odendaal, 1989: 126.

is nevertheless among the fastest growing in the world: in the world of business Sharpeville is forgotten and fresh funds are invested in Dr. Verwoerd's republic."¹⁷⁰³

South Africa had an economic growth rate of 6%, the second highest in the world, while the inflation rate was only 2%,¹⁷⁰⁴ while the country was in no need for foreign loans for normal economic expansion due to the big domestic savings.¹⁷⁰⁵ However these figures concealed the growth in unemployment, which had not been a significant issue twenty years earlier.¹⁷⁰⁶ In addition, the biggest contributing factors for the boom were the large foreign-capital inflows¹⁷⁰⁷ and even more of course the very cheap labour provided by the non-Whites.¹⁷⁰⁸ However, it would have been impossible for South Africa to have had that level of growth if the non-Whites had been paid at the same level as the Whites, rather than being treated as slaves.

Amid all that prosperity was also the reality that only a relatively small group was truly benefitting while those who remained utterly unrepresented were harshly punished for speaking out.¹⁷⁰⁹ American magazine Fortune concluded that "South Africa is one of those rare and refreshing places where profits are great and problems are small. Capital is not threatened by political instability or nationalization. Labour is cheap, market booming, the currency hard..."¹⁷¹⁰ Even the Rand Daily Mail, that was generally critical of Dr. Verwoerd, pointed out that South Africa was flourishing economically, that the country was stable and the United Nations powerless or reluctant to do anything about apartheid.¹⁷¹¹

In 1966, there was also a large celebration at a monument which had been erected in the 1940s in honour of the centenary of the Great Trek; in the "revised account" of history that had been adopted at the time of the centenary, "... freedom-loving Dutch speakers had battled against the climate, savage attacks, British assaults on their liberties, capitalist oppression and both cultural and commercial imperialism."¹⁷¹² The event was attended by 500,000 Whites including English and Afrikaners, and they were addressed by Dr. Verwoerd,

¹⁷⁰³ The Economist, 7 March 1964: 905, 'Boom time in South Africa.'

¹⁷⁰⁴ Giliomee, 2003: 539.

¹⁷⁰⁵ Marais, 1994: 2.

¹⁷⁰⁶ Seekings and Natrass, 2005: 165.

¹⁷⁰⁷ Marais, 2011: 31.

¹⁷⁰⁸ TIME, 26 August 1966, 'South Africa: The delusions of apartheid.'

¹⁷⁰⁹ Ingalls (The New York Times), 17 April 1960: 1, 'Threat to banish strikers is made by South Africa.'

¹⁷¹⁰ Bundy, 1986: 7-12.

¹⁷¹¹ Marais, 1994: 2-3.

¹⁷¹² Welsh, 2000: 414.

who stressed white South Africa's commitment to its republic, and willingness to defend it with aggression.¹⁷¹³

Allen Drury, American winner of the Pulitzer Prize for his novel Advise & Consent, interviewed Dr. Verwoerd just twenty-nine days before his assassination. Drury criticised some of Dr. Verwoerd's policies, especially the practice of banning people, which he compared to "torture,"¹⁷¹⁴ but he painted a largely positive picture of the Prime Minister. He found Dr. Verwoerd to be "extremely intelligent, extremely competent, much superior in brains and ability to most of his noisy critics around the world; in his own strange way, in his own strange context, a great man; in South African terms, a liberal; the only man who, because of his years in office and his almost physical hold on Afrikanerdom, could possibly have continued to lead his people and his nation to a gradually more reasonable, and ultimately more humane, accommodation with other races."¹⁷¹⁵

However, Drury's judgment of character might be questioned in view of the pen-picture he drew of Justice and Police Minister John Vorster. Drury found the enforcer of apartheid to be "amiable, easy-going, charming, blunt, pragmatic, practical, tough, direct and no-nonsense." Drury even said he "liked him" and the picture which emerged was that of a kind man who really cared about the children he sent to prison because he too was a father,¹⁷¹⁶ but he could do no other because they were enemies of the State.¹⁷¹⁷

The performance of the National Party in the 1966 general election on March 30, 1966, where the National Party won 126 of 170 seats in the House of Assembly,¹⁷¹⁸ was a stunning vindication that the vast majority of Whites supported Dr. Verwoerd and his apartheid ambitions.¹⁷¹⁹ The Nationalist press had assured voters that a vote for liberalism was a vote for the downfall of the white race.¹⁷²⁰ After the election, a The New York Times reporter asked some Black men what they thought of the election. "All we can do is have another drink," one of them said. "Whoever wins, we lose."¹⁷²¹ He was right – and ¹⁷¹³ Meredith, 1988: 120-122.

¹⁷¹⁴ Drury, 1968: 212.

¹⁷¹⁵ Drury, 1968: 459.

¹⁷¹⁶ Infamously, Vorster had also written to Breyten Breytenbach's father after his son was arrested, convicted for "treason" and imprisoned. Vorster suggested he should not feel too bad because another of his sons, Jan, was a successful counter-terrorist officer in the army (Dubow, 2014: 123).

¹⁷¹⁷ Drury, 1968: 467-470.

¹⁷¹⁸ The New York Times, 1 April 1966: 9, 'Nationalist victory biggest in South African history.'

¹⁷¹⁹ The Economist, 2 April 1966: 33, 'The toughie wins.'

¹⁷²⁰ Heard, 1974: 161.

¹⁷²¹ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 31 March 1966: 13, 'Dr. Verwoerd's Party scores heavy election gains.'

meanwhile, Whites enjoyed one the highest living standards in the world,¹⁷²² while living in a state that was unique in the world in having a political system in which maintaining racial stratification was the primary function of government policy.¹⁷²³

A few months before the assassination, Paul Bureau, editor of the British magazine *The Statist*¹⁷²⁴ wrote, "At the rate at which South Africa is now expanding the term "miracle" is likely to be appropriate to its development over the new few years." He suggested that soon South Africa would be in "a very strong position against any economic or military threat."¹⁷²⁵ On July 30, 1966, thirty-five days before the assassination, even the Rand Daily Mail, one of his fiercest critics, praised Dr. Verwoerd for his power and "achievements":

"At the age of nearly 65 Dr Verwoerd has reached the peak of a remarkable career. No other South African prime minister has ever been in such a powerful position in the country. He is at the head of a massive majority after a resounding victory at the polls. The nation is suffering from a surfeit of prosperity and he can command almost unlimited funds for all that he needs at present in the way of military defence. He can claim that South Africa is a shining example of peace in a troubled continent, if only because overwhelming domestic power can always command peace. Finally, as if that were not enough, he can face the session (in the Parliament) with the knowledge that, short of an unthinkable show of force by people whom South Africans are rapidly being taught to regard as their enemies, he can snap his fingers at the United Nations. Thanks to the recent judgment of The Hague Court he can afford to condescend to the world body, graciously remaining a member as long as it suits him. Indeed, the Prime Minister has never had it so good."¹⁷²⁶

University Professor and anti-apartheid activist Dan O'Meara argued about Dr. Verwoerd that "During the last five years of his Premiership Die Hollander totally dominated his party, the Cabinet and the South African state. He increasingly came to be regarded as Die Rots (The Rock) on which not just nationalist rule but indeed the fate of 'White Civilisation in Africa' rested."¹⁷²⁷ In August 26, 1966, only eleven days before his assassination, the TIME magazine wrote: "South Africa is in the midst of a massive boom. Attracted by cheap labour a gold- backed currency and high profits, investors from all over the world have

¹⁷²² McKay, 1966: 3.

¹⁷²³ Thompson, 1966: 2.

¹⁷²⁴ The magazine was closed the following year due to low circulation figures.

¹⁷²⁵ Marais, 1994: 2.

¹⁷²⁶ Scholtz, 1974: 312.

¹⁷²⁷ O'Meara, 1996: 111.

ploughed money into the country, and the new industries that they have started have sent production, consumption – and the demand for labour - soaring. Such are the proportions of prosperity...”¹⁷²⁸

Jan Botha, wrote in his biographical book about Dr. Verwoerd¹⁷²⁹ that by 1966

“Dr. Verwoerd had built his own monument which was there for all to see: the Republic of South Africa. The White people had been forged together in unity, the country was militarily strong and resilient, the police and security forces were effectively dealing with all attempts at subversion and infiltration, the country’s economy was dynamic, expanding and had become largely self-sufficient. In the history of South Africa his name will live for ever as the leader, who, when his country was threatened with internal disorder and with economic sanctions, boycotts and open aggression from overseas, stood as a symbol of defiance, and the will and determination to survive. His physical and mental courage had made him a living legend to those who followed him.”¹⁷³⁰

Even so, despite the economic prosperity, not all White South Africans were happy with Dr. Verwoerd; or not according to an article by Aida Parker of the Sunday Tribune. On August 28, 1966, just nine days before his assassination, the Sunday Tribune’s front-page headline read, “‘Verwoerd must go’ plan: Cape Nats back Anton Rupert.” Rupert was a prominent South African billionaire businessman and philanthropist who had a “very stormy relationship” with Dr. Verwoerd and objected to some of his policies.¹⁷³¹ Rupert was reported to have allegedly said, after the assassination, that “the fact that Dr. Verwoerd was no longer Prime Minister, was the best thing that could have happened for South Africa.”¹⁷³²

The report alleged that “the knives are out in the National Party,” as there was a “feud” within the Party between southern and northern Nationalists, which threatened to cause a split. The report claimed that “there has been a carefully planned operation to isolate Dr. Verwoerd and force a showdown. Their tactics are to split up the North line-up by creating suspicion and unrest among them and so isolate Dr. Verwoerd.” Piet Cillié, a journalist and editor of the Die Burger, was alleged to be the driving force behind this

¹⁷²⁸ TIME, 26 August 1966, ‘South Africa: The delusions of apartheid.’

¹⁷²⁹ Botha, J. (1967) Dr. Verwoerd is Dead.

¹⁷³⁰ Botha, 1967: 133.

¹⁷³¹ Parker (Sunday Tribune), 28 August 1966: 1, “Verwoerd must go’ plan: Cape Nats back Anton Rupert.’; Wood et al, 2014: 1363.

¹⁷³² Marais, 1994: 11.

campaign, which aimed to have Dr. Verwoerd replaced by Rupert. According to the report, Cillié was a member of a “small, but powerful group of Cape ‘Liberal’ Nationalists who were planning to ‘recapture control from the hard-core Nationalists from the North,’” with the backing of the influential Afrikaans-language newspapers Die Beeld and Die Burger.¹⁷³³

However, this “feud” within the National Party was nothing new; it had always been present, especially since the Party came to power in 1948. Under Malan, the power centre of the Party was in Cape Town, while under Strijdom it was in the North of the country. As we saw earlier, after Strijdom’s death, there was a brief but rather furious power struggle within the Party between Dr. Verwoerd, Dr. Eben Donges and Charles Swart. Dr. Verwoerd was Strijdom’s first choice as his successor, but he had to put forward Swart as a compromise candidate after fearing there would be a split in the Party, because NP leaders in Cape Town were strongly opposed to Verwoerd and were planning to put forward Donges. Eventually, the Transvaal Party leaders rejected Strijdom’s suggestion and the Cape leaders continued to press for Donges. The crisis led to Party elections that Dr. Verwoerd won, becoming leader of the Party and Prime Minister.¹⁷³⁴

DR. VERWOERD’S LEGACY

While he did not invent apartheid, Dr. Verwoerd was noted for administering it with “unique ruthlessness” and for expanding its application far beyond the boundaries of what his constituents expected or even necessarily wanted.¹⁷³⁵ Writing shortly after his death, liberal analyst Alan Paton commented of the massive swing to the extreme right in South Africa had been a massive swing towards Dr. Verwoerd and his views, and that he had gone from being seen by man as an occasion of danger in South Africa to a bulwark against danger.¹⁷³⁶ In April 1966, just a few months before his assassination, Dr. Verwoerd himself was the recipient of the eponymous first Dr. Verwoerd Award, which had been set up as a trust following the assassination attempt on him by David Pratt in April 1960 to recognise “exceptional service” to the state from its citizens. Dr. Verwoerd returned the prize money and asked that it be used to establish a medical scholarship.¹⁷³⁷

¹⁷³³ Parker (Sunday Tribune), 28 August 1966: 1, “Verwoerd must go’ plan: Cape Nats back Anton Rupert.’

¹⁷³⁴ Vatcher, 1965: 125; van Roouen, 1976: 72

¹⁷³⁵ Shire, 1996: 13.

¹⁷³⁶ Paton, December 1966: 3.

¹⁷³⁷ Hepple, 1967: 200.

Dr. Verwoerd had claimed that “the National Party was never an ordinary political party, not is it one now. It is a national movement.”¹⁷³⁸ However, after his assassination, the Party entered a period of internal conflict, with much argument between the so-called “enlightened” and “narrow” elements, culminating in the firing of a number of right-wing hard-liners from the party cabinet. They went on to form a splinter group, the Herstigte (Restored) National Party in 1969.¹⁷³⁹

Dr. Verwoerd’s legacy in South Africa was long-ranging. The many awful acts he instigated or facilitated make, said Albert Luthuli, “dreary and exhausting reading” because “There seem to be no end to them, they are so many that the mind loses count of their number and grasp of their effects.”¹⁷⁴⁰ Assessing his contribution to South Africa’s history, Luthuli stated, “of the men who have ruled South Africa, no one has taken to himself such power as Dr. Verwoerd, and no one has been the guiding mind behind so much negative and oppressive legislation. If any one man is remembered as the author of our calamity, it will be he.”¹⁷⁴¹ He further described Dr. Verwoerd as apartheid’s “most ardent and relentless apostle.”¹⁷⁴²

Helen Suzman characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “a dreadful, scary man, who honestly was a maniac - a terrifying man,”¹⁷⁴³ Israel Maisels as “poison,”¹⁷⁴⁴ Albie Sachs as “the high priest and architect of apartheid,”¹⁷⁴⁵ Newsweek as the “implacable champion of apartheid,”¹⁷⁴⁶ TIME magazine as “unbendingly racist”¹⁷⁴⁷ and “violently racist,”¹⁷⁴⁸ the New York Times as “harsh racist ... pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic... relentless advocate of apartheid... (enforcer) of the harshest race laws since Hitler... champion of an extremist white supremacy... the most fanatical exponent of apartheid ... symbol of apartheid ... a prophet of ¹⁷³⁸ Hanf et al, 1981: 97.

¹⁷³⁹ Brotz, 1977: 45; Miller, 2014: 122-123; Murray, 1987: 25; The Illustrated London News, 13 December 1969: 17, ‘Revolt in South Africa.’

¹⁷⁴⁰ Luthuli, 1962: 150.

¹⁷⁴¹ Luthuli, 1962: 197.

¹⁷⁴² Harrison, 1986: 63.

¹⁷⁴³ Suzman, 1997: 436.

¹⁷⁴⁴ Maisels, 1997: 321.

¹⁷⁴⁵ Sachs, 2011: vii.

¹⁷⁴⁶ Newsweek, 11 April 1960: 55, ‘The champion of apartheid.’

¹⁷⁴⁷ TIME, 3 February 1958: 22, ‘South Africa. Mohammed’s coffin.’

¹⁷⁴⁸ TIME, 26 August 1966: 20, ‘South Africa: The great white laager.’

racism,”¹⁷⁴⁹ and Allister Sparks as “the most ruthless implementer of the doctrine that turned South Africa into the world symbol of racial oppression.”¹⁷⁵⁰

Many years after Dr. Verwoerd's death, Jaap Marais, leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, and his former leader, Albert Hertzog, stated that Tsafendas had not only killed the doctor, he had also killed the Grand Plan.¹⁷⁵¹ Marais also wrote that Dr. Verwoerd should have built “a powerful Press of his own” “against the totally hostile mass media in South Africa” and “a political organization which shared his philosophy so that when he was killed his ideas would not have perished with him.” Marais suggested that such an act “should act as a warning and a guide for those who today still fight for the white survival everywhere.”¹⁷⁵²

Deborah Posel, Professor of Sociology at the University of Cape Town, wrote in 2009 that Tsafendas “did not merely eliminate the country's Prime Minister. He trounced The Rock himself: the man who had become metonymic of the tenacity and vigour of the volk as a whole, more so than any of his immediate predecessors had done, and who had elevated the power and prowess of the supreme political office to new heights, my mythic indestructibility.”¹⁷⁵³ The Rhodesia and World Report wrote a month after his assassination, like it was a compliment, that “the policy of apartheid will forever be associated with Dr. Verwoerd's name.”¹⁷⁵⁴

After democracy, attempts were made to purge South Africa of reminders of Dr. Verwoerd. Towns and streets that had been named after him were renamed. His statue in Bloemfontein was removed from public display,¹⁷⁵⁵ the H.F. Verwoerd Dam was renamed the Garier Dam,¹⁷⁵⁶ while in Johannesburg, the Hendrik Verwoerd Drive was renamed Bram Fischer Drive.¹⁷⁵⁷ In May, 2015, an official ceremony was held at the University of ¹⁷⁴⁹ The New York Times, 6 September 1958: 16, ‘Bad news from South Africa’; The New York Times, 17 March 1961, ‘Symbol of apartheid: Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd’; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid’; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 7 September 1966, ‘A prophet of racism.’

¹⁷⁵⁰ Sparks, 1995: 250.

¹⁷⁵¹ du Plessis (Business Day), 11 October 1999, ‘The grand plan died with the doctor.’

¹⁷⁵² Marais, 1994: i.

¹⁷⁵³ Posel, 2009: 334.

¹⁷⁵⁴ Sheldon (Rhodesia and World Report), September/October 1966, Vol. 1, No. 5: 3, ‘The pattern of assassination. The continuing pattern.’

¹⁷⁵⁵ Witz, 2003: 244.

¹⁷⁵⁶ Mungazi, 2006: 114.

¹⁷⁵⁷ Matsinhe, 2013: 181.

Stellenbosch at which a plaque commemorating Dr. Verwoerd was removed.¹⁷⁵⁸ In 1967, a year after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, the Municipality of Lyttelton was renamed Verwoerdburg,¹⁷⁵⁹ only to be renamed Centurion when democracy prevailed.¹⁷⁶⁰ In 1999, in a nationwide poll conducted by South African Media24 to determine who had the greatest influence on South Africa during the twentieth century, Verwoerd took third place, behind only Mandela and de Klerk.¹⁷⁶¹

To this day, some White South Africans maintain that apartheid was a “necessary evil,” saving the country from a Communist fate, and that without it the entire population would have been in a much worse situation.¹⁷⁶² Thus, it is not surprising that in a 2004 nationwide poll conducted by the South African Broadcasting Corporation television channel SABC3, to determine the “100 Greatest South Africans of All Time,” Verwoerd was voted into 19th place with some 50,000 votes.¹⁷⁶³ This placed him higher than Chris Hani (20th), Helen Suzman (24th), Oliver Tambo (31st), Walter Sisulu (33rd), Albert Luthuli (41st), Robert Sobukwe (42nd), Ahmed Kathrada (49th), Alan Paton (59th), Nadine Gordimer (80th), Govan Mbeki (97th), and many other prominent figures of the anti-apartheid struggle and other areas of national life. While Eugène Terre'Blanche, head of the neo-Nazi, White supremacist Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging, made it onto the list at number 25, several outstanding figures in the national story did not find a place in the top100. They included modern writers Breyten Breytenbach and André Brink, and, reaching back into history, Cetshwayo, the Zulu king who defeated the British at the Battle of Isandhlwana in 1879, and Moshoeshoe, who masterminded the creation of the independent kingdom of Lesotho through negotiation with the Boers and the British.¹⁷⁶⁴

The emotional legacy of his apartheid continues to linger,¹⁷⁶⁵ although the democratic government of South African went to great lengths to work towards reconciliation. In 1995, Mandela invited the wives of former Prime Ministers to lunch, along with presidents and leaders of liberation movement. Tiene Vorster and Eliza Botha, wives of former Prime ¹⁷⁵⁸ Dubow, 2015: 3.

¹⁷⁵⁹ Kalley, 2000: 113.

¹⁷⁶⁰ Christopher, 1994: 232.

¹⁷⁶¹ Human & Rousseau (1999) They Shaped our Century: The Most Influential South Africans of the Twentieth Century. Human & Rousseau.

¹⁷⁶² Abulof, 2015: 280.

¹⁷⁶³ Fobi, 2014: 11-14.

¹⁷⁶⁴ Blair (The Telegraph), 19 October 2004, ‘Racists on list of ‘Great South Africans.’

¹⁷⁶⁵ Field, 1998: 82.

Ministers John Vorster and P.W. Botha attended, but Betsie Verwoerd, declined the invitation. Later, Mandela visited her to take tea at her home in the all-White community of Orania in the Karoo region.¹⁷⁶⁶ It was an extraordinary gesture of forgiveness towards the man who had dedicated his life to destroying those of countless others.

Although he did not start it himself, Dr. Verwoerd, the evidence shows, was the undisputed architect of the whole rotten edifice that was apartheid.¹⁷⁶⁷ The policy was formally introduced in 1948, but it was only when Dr. Verwoerd Prime Minister that the State began to pursue segregation rigorously. In this, it was aided by the groundwork laid by Dr. Verwoerd when he was Minister of Native Affairs.¹⁷⁶⁸ The South African anti-apartheid writer Colin Legum commented that during Dr. Verwoerd's tenure, the non-White South Africans were "in a sense, the prisoners of Western society..."¹⁷⁶⁹

Professor John Dugard told the author: "Dr. Verwoerd was clearly the architect of apartheid. Before him, no-one quite knew what apartheid was, and after him no-one knew what it was either. But he had a clear vision of a total separation of the races."¹⁷⁷⁰ Ahmed Kathrada stated that "the true legacy of apartheid lies in graveyards and court archives throughout South Africa."¹⁷⁷¹ Douglas Smit, former secretary of Native Affairs, characterised Dr. Verwoerd in 1953 as "a Napoleon in Native Affairs who was trying to set up a great Black empire under his supreme dictatorship."¹⁷⁷²

Helen Suzman stated that "the system of apartheid was a totally heartless system which did not care what the results were. A lot of babies died of malnutrition and a lot of people who were forcibly removed were starving the rural areas."¹⁷⁷³ She added, "the policies that he (Dr. Verwoerd) introduced were so totally unacceptable to anybody who had any understanding of what democracy was about."¹⁷⁷⁴ Suzman also said that shortly after his death, the National Party "used to talk in glowing terms about Verwoerd and how South

¹⁷⁶⁶ Graybill, 2002: 20

¹⁷⁶⁷ Attwell, 1986: 91, 103.

¹⁷⁶⁸ Grundy, 1991: 8.

¹⁷⁶⁹ Legum, 1960: 235.

¹⁷⁷⁰ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

¹⁷⁷¹ Kathrada, 2004: 337.

¹⁷⁷² Dubow, 2014: 60.

¹⁷⁷³ Suzman, 1997: 433.

¹⁷⁷⁴ Helen Suzman in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

Africa would have been so much better a place if Verwoerd had been still the prime minister. The rest of us would have been only glad to forget that he ever existed.”¹⁷⁷⁵

¹⁷⁷⁵ Helen Suzman in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

CHAPTER TWO

DIMITRIS TSAFENDAS'S BIOGRAPHY

BIRTH, 1918

Dimitris Tsafendas was born on January 14, 1918, in Maputo, then Lourenço Marques, capital of the Portuguese colony of Mozambique, to Michalis Tsafantakis, aged twenty-seven,¹⁷⁷⁶ a Cretan marine engineer, and Amelia Williams,¹⁷⁷⁷ his housemaid.¹⁷⁷⁸ Amelia, in her early twenties, was of mixed race, her mother an African Mozambican of the Shangaan tribe and her father a White German.¹⁷⁷⁹ She was born in Namaacha, a town in Southern Mozambique, about eighty kilometres west of Lourenço Marques on the border with Swaziland.¹⁷⁸⁰ According to Hazel Goldstein of the Rand Daily Mail, Amelia was “a plump, clean-looking woman with ivory-coloured skin.” She dressed in native clothing – a print blouse, with a white sash around her body.¹⁷⁸¹ It was far from uncommon for White men in Africa to father children by Black women; what was rare was for the child to be acknowledged by the father, indeed, in the case of Dimitris, taken into his home.

According to family accounts, when Amelia's pregnancy became obvious, she left Tsafantakis, assuming he would not accept the child. In fact, when Michalis discovered she was pregnant, he searched the city for her and persuaded her to return to his house, where Dimitris was born.¹⁷⁸² For a year and a half thereafter, Michalis, Amelia and Dimitris lived together as a family.¹⁷⁸³ As a child, Dimitri was fair-skinned and passed as White. The only clue to the one-quarter of his origins that came from Africa was his hair, which was black, ¹⁷⁷⁶ Born on October 21, 1891. Michalis Tsafantakis's birth certificate. Personal collection of Mike Vlachopoulos.

¹⁷⁷⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150. Report of the Commission of Enquiry into the circumstances of the death of the late Dr. the honourable Hendrik Frensch Verwoerd, (hereafter cited as K150), Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. National Archives of South Africa (hereafter cited as NASA).

¹⁷⁷⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁷⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁷⁸⁰ Dagbreek, 11 September 1966, 'Kleurlingmoeder in haglike omstandighede.'; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁷⁸¹ Goldstein (Rand Daily Mail), 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas timid and puny as a boy.'

¹⁷⁸² Antony Michaleto in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁷⁸³ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

like his father's, but a little crinkly, too. However, since it was always cut very short, it gave no clue to Dimitri's origins.¹⁷⁸⁴ His half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, described him as a boy to the author: "He was very white, peculiar as it is, as white as all the family. But he had different hair. But it wasn't so much like the Blacks; it was like the Coloureds. But he did not look Black at all, he was as white as me."¹⁷⁸⁵

Michalis registered the baby with the local civil administration, naming Amelia and himself as parents. Soon afterwards, he had Dimitri baptised by his very good friend Father Elias Bertolis, a Greek Orthodox priest, in an open ceremony, and with John Michaletos, his best friend, as the child's godfather.¹⁷⁸⁶ The city's tightly-knit Greek community disapproved, and Portuguese friends sought to dissuade Michalis from this public recognition of his mixed son, arguing that he was "ruining his life and would never now find a good Greek wife." Michalis ignored their entreaties.¹⁷⁸⁷

Michalis wanted to keep both Amelia and the child but this was a social impossibility in the climate of the time.¹⁷⁸⁸ Mozambique was Portuguese-ruled and heavily Christian, thus a mixed marriage for a Greek, although legally possible, was seriously problematic. When it came to marriage, Greek men in Africa invariably took Greek brides, usually by arrangement between the families. Michalis knew that his mother would never approve of Amelia and expected him to marry the girl she would find for him, as most Greek mothers did at the time, especially those in Africa. Sometime in 1919, Michalis travelled to Egypt to meet a proposed wife. Her name was Maria (Marika) Sakelis, who came from the Greek community in Port Said, Egypt, though her origins were in the Greek island of Kasos. Michalis did not tell her about his son, reasoning that he would do so after the wedding when they had a child of their own.¹⁷⁸⁹ The wedding ceremony was arranged to take place in Port Said, on December 5, 1920.¹⁷⁹⁰

¹⁷⁸⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁸⁵ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁸⁶ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Costas Maroudas in a personal interview, 12 May 2015.

¹⁷⁸⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁸⁸ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁸⁹ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁹⁰ Michalis and Marika Tsafantaki marriage certificate. Private collection of Mike Vlachopoulos.

Returning to Mozambique, Michalis resumed his relationship with Amelia, saying nothing of his bride-to-be. However, midway through 1920, with the wedding preparations well underway, he told Amelia about Marika. He asked her to give up their baby, promising that Dimitri would be raised as a loved and equal member of his family. At first Amelia demurred, but finally persuaded that it would be best for her child's future, she agreed and reluctantly walked away.¹⁷⁹¹ Dimitri was about two years old.¹⁷⁹²

EGYPT, 1920–1925

At some point before December 1920, a Greek family from Lourenço Marques took Dimitris by steamship through the Suez Canal and delivered him in Alexandria to his grandmother, Katerina Tsafantakis, who, with her daughter Artemis, cared for him for the next five years.¹⁷⁹³ Artemis called the boy Mimako, a derivative of Mimis, which comes in turn from Dimitris. For the remainder of his life, Tsafendas would be called Mimis by his family and close friends.¹⁷⁹⁴

Dimitri's grandmother was a strong-willed and independent widow, and though she had not finished school, she was intelligent and cultured. Born in Crete in the 1850s, she would have been aged seventy or thereabouts when she took care of a new baby. Her husband, Antonis Tsafantakis,¹⁷⁹⁵ dead a few years earlier, was a judge in Crete,¹⁷⁹⁶ but in 1895 he moved with his wife and their children, to Alexandria,¹⁷⁹⁷ where they settled in the Al-Atarine¹⁷⁹⁸ suburb.¹⁷⁹⁹ Many of Antonis's and Katerina's families died fighting the ¹⁷⁹¹ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁹² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁷⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁹⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁹⁵ Michalis Tsafantakis birth certificate. Private collection of Mike Vlachopoulos.

¹⁷⁹⁶ Interview by Mr T.I. Potgieter, Senior Magistrate, with Mr Demetriou Tsafendas at the Pretoria Central Prison on 20 October 1987. Correctional Services. File 80/0043, A123, Dimitrio Tsafendas, Vol. 1. NASA; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁷⁹⁷ PTA telegram to Cape Town, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/7. Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁷⁹⁸ Al-Atarine is also referred to as Atarine or El Atarine.

¹⁷⁹⁹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 11 May 2016.

Ottoman rulers of Greece and Crete and she was a strong supporter of the Greek war of independence.¹⁸⁰⁰

Katerina would speak with pride of her husband's cousin, Captain Michalis Tsafantakis, a Cretan rebel leader, known throughout the island for his bravery and his victories over the occupiers. The Ottomans killed him, aged about fifty, by throwing him off a bridge in Iraklion. The street where he was born in the village of Kitharida now bears his name, Michalis Tsafantakis Street while several Cretan songs have been written about him. Dimitri's father, also born in Kitharida in 1891,¹⁸⁰¹ was named Michalis after the great man.¹⁸⁰² The accounts of his great-uncle's exploits fascinated Dimitri and he grew up idolizing him.¹⁸⁰³

Katerina and her daughter Artemis taught their new charge Greek and Arabic, gave him lessons in Greek history and mythology, and coached him in Cretan and Greek folk songs, such as the romantic epic Eroticritos, which Tsafendas often sang in later life.¹⁸⁰⁴ Artemis adored little Dimitri, treated him as her son and played with him for hours, while he looked on her as a second mother. In 1966, when she heard that Dimitri had killed Dr. Verwoerd, Artemis was devastated. She went into severe depression for many weeks, fearing what might happen to him.¹⁸⁰⁵

In 1923, Dimitri's first cousin, Mary, (later Eendracht by marriage), was born. Their homes were close to each other and the toddlers often played together. Dimitri, five years older, looked upon Mary as his little sister. They remained close up to Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. During Dimitri's years in Egypt, his father wrote often and sent gifts, though without telling Marika.¹⁸⁰⁶ Michalis's intention was to bring the boy back to Mozambique as soon as he had a child with his new wife. However, he postponed the project time and again for fear of her reaction. Eventually, the secret came out. Marika began to notice a young Mozambican woman lingering outside their Lourenço Marques home, apparently trying to peek through the windows. At other times, she spotted her talking to Michalis and thought ¹⁸⁰⁰ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁰¹ Michalis Tsafantakis birth certificate. Private collection of Mike Vlachopoulos.

¹⁸⁰² All the relatives of Captain Michalis Tsafantakis named their children Michalis after him (Alexandros Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 15 February 2016).

¹⁸⁰³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Antony Michaleto in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁰⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁰⁵ Irene and John Michaleto in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁸⁰⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

that they were having an affair. Finally, Tsafantakis told the truth: The young woman was Amelia Williams, with whom he had a son now living in Egypt with his mother.¹⁸⁰⁷ Marika had not heard of the scandal from the local Greeks - no-one would tell her out of respect for Michalis – and she was shocked. However, she accepted the situation and agreed with Michalis that the boy should be brought home to live as part of their family.¹⁸⁰⁸

BACK IN MOZAMBIQUE, 1925–1932

Dimitri was seven when his father brought him back to Lourenço Marques to join his new stepmother, who was introduced to him as his mother, and their growing family.¹⁸⁰⁹ It was a loving environment. Marika immediately accepted Michalis's son as her own¹⁸¹⁰ and there were already two playmates for Dimitri, his step-siblings Evangelia (born in 1922), aged three, and one-year-old Victor (born in 1924). A third, Katerina (nicknamed Bushia), joined them in 1928 when Dimitri was ten.¹⁸¹¹

The young arrival from Egypt quickly settled into his new surroundings, a full member of the family, assuming Marika was his natural mother.¹⁸¹² The children did not know about Dimitri's origins and considered themselves all natural brothers and sisters.¹⁸¹³ Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, told the police after the assassination that growing up with Tsafendas “to all intents and purposes it was understood” by “her and her brother and sisters” that “he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that ¹⁸⁰⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Michael Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁸⁰⁸ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁰⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁰ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸¹¹ Home Affairs Department report regarding Tsafendas, 1 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub file: 1/2. NASA.

¹⁸¹² Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸¹³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

he passed as a European.”¹⁸¹⁴

Marika told the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death that Tsafendas “had grown up as one of her children.”¹⁸¹⁵ Costas Michaletos, a very good friend of the family, told the South African police shortly after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination that Tsafendas “grew up with his half brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family.”¹⁸¹⁶ A Confidential Report from the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali said shortly after the assassination and after having questioned people who knew Tsafendas: “It is also reliably reported that the Tsafandakis family hold a good reputation among the Greek community and there are suggestions that Michael Tsafandakis made a big mistake in attempting to raise his illegitimate son as a full member of his family.”¹⁸¹⁷

Victor contracted poliomyelitis as a very young child and this left him with a disability affecting one of his legs. The young Tsafendas stepped in and took his little half-brother under his wing, bringing him along wherever he went. Tsafendas thereafter was very sensitive about people with disabilities. Later, one of Dimitri's best friends was a small, Black Mozambican boy who was blind or partly sighted. The boy's mother worked at the house of another Greek and was bringing her son up alone. Tsafendas took the younger boy under his wing, played with him, read books to him and often took him home to join his family around the table. He would also take the boy to the sea, as he did with his siblings, teaching them to swim. Katerina Pnema, his half-sister, told the author: “I was the youngest then, and he was very fond of me, and he was trying to teach me to swim. He used to swim like a fish.” One day, the boy got into difficulties and panicked. Tsafendas tried to help him but found that he, too, was out of his depth and the pair was close to drowning before a group of men nearby saved them. Tsafendas was deeply affected by this incident and for a long time stopped going to the sea. However, the Mozambican boy pleaded with Dimitri and eventually they started going again.¹⁸¹⁸

¹⁸¹⁴ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁵ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁶ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁷ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

¹⁸¹⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Among the personal possessions the boy brought from Alexandria was a portrait of his great-uncle which he hung above his bed. A few years later when an earth tremor hit the city, the family fled the house in panic. Ignoring his stepmother's cries, Dimitri ran back inside. When he emerged, he was carrying the portrait of his hero, Captain Michalis Tsafantakis.¹⁸¹⁹

Michalis Tsafantakis' grandmother, Victoria Tsafantakis, also from Crete, was Jewish and he was very proud of this strain of Jewish blood in his family. He named his first child with Marika, Victor, after his beloved grandmother. Michalis would tell Dimitri about the history of the Hebrew people and his son spoke often and proudly of his Jewish origins.¹⁸²⁰ Michalis Tsafantakis was also an educated and well-rounded man, a lover of fine art who studied marine engineering at the University of Padua in Italy. While living in Italy, Michalis had become an active member of the organized anarchist movement. He thrived in the classical milieu and became a devotee of opera and classical music, passions which he passed on to Dimitri. Michalis admired the writers and philosophers of the Age of Enlightenment such as Jean-Jacques Rousseau and Voltaire, as well as the Greek philosophers Plato and Aristotle, though his unchallenged favourite was Honoré de Balzac. As well as his musical tastes, he communicated his literary preferences to the young Dimitri,¹⁸²¹ and in time, Balzac became one of Tsafendas's favourite authors, too. He quoted him often during his lifetime.¹⁸²²

One of the things that Michalis often told his son was that he should become “a useful member of society,” someone who was concerned not so much for himself as for the public wellbeing. Dimitris remembered his father's words all his life and said he consistently sought to live up to them. Michalis loved his son and spent a lot of time with him, teaching, playing and talking to him. Dimitris, for his part, according to his half-brother Victor, grew up “worshipping his father.”¹⁸²³

¹⁸¹⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸²⁰ Mike Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸²¹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹⁸²² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸²³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

His father was very tolerant of any misbehaviour by his son, while Marika, conscious of the boy's step-son status, made an extra effort to ensure his happiness, acting more leniently towards him than to her own children. It was only when she feared Dimitri might be having a bad influence on her son, Victor, that she treated him more strictly. Dimitri was naughty, though no more than most boys at a young age,¹⁸²⁴ and warmly remembered stories from his childhood years, even when he was old and sick.¹⁸²⁵

Michalis considered himself an anarchist and was strongly anti-racist, anti-royalist, and anti-colonialist, political positions which Dimitri embraced with enthusiasm. Unlike his son, Michalis did not express his opinions in public - not a wise thing to do in colonial Mozambique, as the reckless Dimitri was to discover- although he was as tempted towards political activism as his son. In 1960, Michalis confided to his immediate family his pleasure that David Pratt had shot Dr. Verwoerd and his regret that the prime minister had survived. He said that if he had not been married with a family he would have taken a gun and shot all the fascists and racists in the South African Parliament. Michalis later separated from Marika, though they never divorced, and among the things he repeatedly said was that he should have become a rebel, fighting apartheid and for the independence of African countries, instead of getting married.¹⁸²⁶

Although she was religious and tended to be politically conservative, Marika sympathized discreetly with some of her husband's political views, and though not highly educated, she read the classics for pleasure. She was very well-read, her favourite authors being the Russians Leo Tolstoy and Fyodor Dostoyevsky. She taught Dimitri to read and helped him with his school lessons, and as he grew up, Dostoyevsky, too, became a favourite.¹⁸²⁷ At some point in the 1990s, when Tsafendas was visited by Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsafaridis and they were discussing Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, Tsafendas remarked, "To paraphrase Dostoyevsky in Demons, it's easy to condemn the offender, the difficulty is to understand him."¹⁸²⁸

Marika was also a poetry lover and read Greek poems to her stepson. Initially, Tsafendas was not keen, but changed when he discovered odes with revolutionary content.

¹⁸²⁴ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁸²⁵ Dimitri Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

¹⁸²⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸²⁷ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹⁸²⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Two of his favourite poets were Dyonisios Solomos, whose poem “Hymn to Liberty” became the Greek national anthem in 1865, and Andreas Kalvos. Both were from the Greek island of Zakynthos (Zante). Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis¹⁸²⁹ who met Tsafendas in Pretoria prison hospital, was also from Zante and was deeply impressed by Tsafendas’s ability to quote so many of the poets’ works. Bishop Ioannis, currently Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church in Zambia and Malawi, is working on a PhD about Solomos, partly inspired by Tsafendas’s admiration for him. When Tsafendas was asked by Bishop Ioannis about the killing of Dr. Verwoerd, he responded by quoting a verse from Kalvos’s poem, Eis Samon (To Samos):

*“Those who feel fear’s unbending hand weighing on them may bear the yoke of bondage. Freedom demands virtue and courage.”*¹⁸³⁰

The Tsafantakis family was held in high esteem by the Greek community.¹⁸³¹ The children who were playing with him were not aware that Tsafendas was mixed; it was a sort of a secret between adults and if there was some reservation by some of them towards Dimitri, they never showed it in front of him.¹⁸³² In 1927, aged nine, Dimitri began attending classes at the Anglican Mission kindergarten school in Lourenço Marques.¹⁸³³ The following year his father sent him to boarding school in Middleburg, a small town in Eastern Transvaal in the Union of South Africa, because he believed that Portuguese children could get a good education only in white-ruled South Africa or in Swaziland,¹⁸³⁴ a constitutional monarchy within the British Commonwealth. Tsafendas’s father was adamant that Dimitris should go and study as he was his first child and he could not afford to send the others too.¹⁸³⁵ According to the records of Middleburg English Medium Primary School, Dimitrios Tsafantakis arrived in July 1928 and boarded in the Nelson House Hostel. These quarters

¹⁸²⁹ Tsafendas confided at length to Bishop Ioannis about his life and Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination. In November 2015, Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis, at the time Bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church in Mozambique, performed a memorial service for Tsafendas in Maputo. During the ceremony, he characterised him as “a revolutionary and a South African and Mozambican hero, who opened the door to the fall of apartheid.”

¹⁸³⁰ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

¹⁸³¹ Michelis, 1988: 14-15; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸³² Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁸³³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸³⁴ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸³⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

mostly accommodated Greek and Portuguese boys who were kept together because of their imperfect command of English.¹⁸³⁶

According to a former schoolmate, psychologist William Mare Volbrecht, Tsafendas was “more advanced than many of his contemporaries and received a good grounding at the school” and was “a keen soccer player.”¹⁸³⁷ Volbrecht also testified to the South African police that, “at that stage, Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us.”¹⁸³⁸ Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, another classmate, recalled Dimitri as “a popular boy who was not the least introverted. I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert. He was very funny and had us all in stitches.”¹⁸³⁹

Every six months, Dimitri would return on holiday to Lourenço Marques, where his relationship with his father flourished. Michalis gave his son books about international revolutionary movements, like the French and the Russian revolutions, as well as tales of the ancient Greeks. For his tenth birthday, he bought Dimitri a multi-volume encyclopaedia, which so entranced the boy that for weeks he scarcely left the house. Michalis also gave him money which Dimitri spent on more books and ice-creams. Although he did not like school work, he spent much of his spare time reading.

As a child, Dimitris sought out classical stories which he read to his young step-siblings. An early favourite, a gift from his father, was Uncle Tom's Cabin, Harriet Beecher Stowe's seminal, 19th century novel about slavery in the United States. The book and the conditions of the African-Americans made a tremendous impression on him and he often said later that it played an important role in shaping his political opinions.¹⁸⁴⁰ His father had set a rule that Dimitri followed religiously from childhood: to read at least one book every week. Tsafendas kept on doing this until his arrest for Dr. Verwoerd's assassination.¹⁸⁴¹

¹⁸³⁶ Middelburg primary School report regarding Demitrios Tsafandakis, 17 December 1963. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

¹⁸³⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was of mixed origin.’

¹⁸³⁸ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

¹⁸³⁹ Rand Daily Mail, September 8, 1966, ‘Boyhood days of Tsafendas.’

¹⁸⁴⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁴¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

Dimitris's first heroes were the great figures of ancient Greek mythology, Ulysses and Achilles. As he grew older, they were replaced by heroes of the Greek Revolution of 1821 whose exploits were taught to him by his father. Michalis would spend time telling his son of the struggles against the Ottomans by the Greeks and particularly by the Cretans, including Captain Tsafantakis. Michalis said the family's real name was not Tsafantakis but Tsafendas. He explained that the Ottoman rulers had decreed the change a hundred years ago to belittle the Cretans whose rebel activities were causing the empire much trouble.¹⁸⁴² The rule was that "akis," a suffix indicating smallness, as in a child, should be added to every Cretan name. It is customary in Greece for a boy named Nicholas to become Nicholakis to his family and friends; Georgios would be Georgakis and Dimitri-Dimitrakis. However, the Ottomans' intention was to humiliate and mock the rebellious Cretans by suggesting they were little people of no account. The Cretans were furious and opposed the change, but the rule of the occupiers prevailed.¹⁸⁴³

Hearing this story, Dimitri asked his father to change the family name back to Tsafendas. Michalis sympathised but said that would be difficult since everyone knew him as Tsafantakis and that was how his name appeared in official documents.¹⁸⁴⁴ A few years later, however, Dimitri went ahead and changed his own surname to Tsafendas. The date of the change is not known to the author. However, Dimitri began using the surname Tsafendas whenever possible; sometimes he varied the spelling so that his past would not be traced, using variations such as Stafendas, Tsascadeskis and Tsafedis.

This was not difficult as he was in possession of a birth certificate written in Greek. Whenever he produced it to someone, he would just replace one or few letters from the certificate but would still make it look like his proper name. For example, the name was written as "Τσαφαντακης," so he would keep the Greek letters that are similar to English letter like T, a, t, k but substitute some of the others with false letters, for example, Tcamaftakus etc.¹⁸⁴⁵

A non-Greek hero of Dimitri's boyhood, one he discovered in the encyclopaedia, was Simon Bolivar, the Venezuelan revolutionary who led many Latin American nations to ¹⁸⁴² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁴³ Apostolakis, 2009.

¹⁸⁴⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁴⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

independence from Spain in the 18th century. Michalis had fashioned a toy sword for his son from a piece of aluminium pipe and when playground fencing bouts began and the children decided which character they would be, most plumped for Robin Hood or the musketeer d'Artagnan. Dimitri always chose Simon Bolivar. When older people asked what he wanted to be when he grew up, he always said he would be "a rebel" and fight in revolutions all over the world.¹⁸⁴⁶

Later while at a school in Lourenço Marques, his loyalty to the South American freedom fighter caused panic. Asked at school, what he would like to do when he grew up, he said, "I would like to liberate Mozambique from the Portuguese as Simon Bolivar liberated Latin America from the Spanish." His terrified teacher promptly informed the family. "Never mind," the boy's father said to her, "he is young, he would mature." Michalis did not really mean it and was proud of his son's 'escapade,' though he never admitted it to him. However "liberation" was always the answer Dimitri gave when he was asked about his adult ambitions, dreaming of becoming a revolutionary like Bolivar and his great uncle, freeing Mozambique and Africa from the colonialists. His step-mother would warn Dimitri to keep such notions to himself since they caused problems for the family if overheard by Portuguese people. When Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd, Marika blamed her late husband for feeding Dimitri as a boy with "all those revolutionary ideas."¹⁸⁴⁷

While he was growing up, he began read adult material such as Shakespeare's plays and his beloved Dostoyevsky and later studied historical and political works. A particular favourite was Charles Dickens, in whose work he apparently saw what later he would consider Communist themes.¹⁸⁴⁸ Tsafendas would sometimes quote from his favourite writers while going about his day-to-day activities. In an uncanny pointer to the life he was to lead, he collected maps and magazines with articles on foreign countries, and told friends he wanted to be an explorer and travel the world.¹⁸⁴⁹

After books, Dimitri's favourite pastime was the cinema and in that he was joined by his stepmother. He liked dashing period films as well as comedies, and Douglas Fairbanks Jr and Buster Keaton were his favourite actors. Marika did not care for sword-fighting ¹⁸⁴⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁴⁷ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸⁴⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

swashbucklers but would go along for Dimitri's sake. In later life, Tsafendas said his best memories of his stepmother were their visits to the movies.¹⁸⁵⁰ Another area of agreement was their shared concern for animals. Dimitri fed any stray cats and dogs he found in the neighbourhood and when he had a dog of his own, he honoured it with the name of his hero, Bolivar.¹⁸⁵¹

One behavioural pattern during Dimitri's childhood was a propensity for malingering. He would fake illness to escape school or Sunday church attendance. Once when he was supposedly ill, a Greek doctor, a friend of the family, examined him and concluded that he was faking. However, the physician was fond of Dimitri and persuaded Michalis and Marika to go along with the pretence.¹⁸⁵²

Around 1928, Artemis Tsafantakis, Michalis's sister and Dimitri's aunt, who had helped lovingly in his upbringing in Egypt, arrived in Lourenço Marques and settled there for the rest of her life. Young Dimitri was delighted and for some time Artemis lived in her brother's house and spent a great deal of time with the ten-year-old Dimitri. A couple of years later, Artemis moved out of the house but stayed close to the boy. Around 1935, Artemis married George Michaletos, the son of John Michaletos, Dimitri's godfather. Even then, with Dimitri no longer a child, they spent time in each other's company. Dimitri loved Artemis's and often ate at her house.¹⁸⁵³

Back at school in South Africa, Dimitri passed the Standard III examination as a B-group pupil in December 1930. In February, 1931, Michalis submitted an application to the South African Office of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs, to send his four children to the Transvaal for their education. His wife was to accompany them and one of the children was Demitrios. In the end, this application was not pursued¹⁸⁵⁴ because Michalis was experiencing financial difficulties. He had lost his partnership in the engineering firm Voutselatos, primarily as a consequence of the Great Depression. In 1932, Dimitri was withdrawn from the Middelburg Primary School¹⁸⁵⁵ having reached Standard 6, ¹⁸⁵⁰ Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

¹⁸⁵¹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁵² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁵³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Irene and John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

¹⁸⁵⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 11. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁸⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

the first year of high school.¹⁸⁵⁶ He returned to Mozambique where he was enrolled again at the Anglican Mission School in Lourenço Marques and from 1933 to 1935 he attended evening classes at the Portuguese Mission School while also picking up money from various jobs.¹⁸⁵⁷

Tsafendas also enrolled for boxing classes at the Teatro Varieta boxing school. It was owned by Willie Conte, a friend and former business associate of his father, and though no athlete, Dimitri took to boxing.¹⁸⁵⁸ A Greek boy newly arrived in Mozambique from Athens, Anastasios Michaletos, recalled those days. He was eighteen when he met Dimitri, who was thirteen or fourteen. “He did not go to work or to school,” Michaletos said, “he dreamt of becoming a boxing champion. He was not a very good boxer.”¹⁸⁵⁹ However, according to his step-mother, his half-sister Katerina, his cousin Mary Eendracht,¹⁸⁶⁰ and a good friend, Ira Kyriakakis, Dimitri was a formidable opponent and he won prizes at local tournaments.¹⁸⁶¹ Boxing made him very popular with girls and he soon had his first serious relationship. This was with a Mozambican girl named Stella who he saw for more than a year.¹⁸⁶² In 1936, aged eighteen, he had his first sexual experience, presumably with Stella.¹⁸⁶³ Dimitri became good friends with another gym-goer, Reuven Levy, an older Jewish boy, and they spent a lot of time in each other’s house.¹⁸⁶⁴

1932–1939

By now, a growing teenager, Dimitris spoke constantly with his father about politics and history. Dimitris was initiated into anarchism by his father, and enjoyed reading about the movement and its leading figures such as Mikhail Bakunin, Emma Goldman and Peter ¹⁸⁵⁶ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkopery. NASA.

¹⁸⁵⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁵⁸ Goldstein (Rand Daily Mail), 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas timid and puny as a boy.’

¹⁸⁵⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 8 September 1966, ‘Boyhood days of Tsafendas.’

¹⁸⁶⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

¹⁸⁶¹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demetrio Tsafendas, NASA; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demetrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁸⁶⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Kropotkin. However, Dimitris' favourite was the American-Italian anarchist Luigi Galleani, who advocated the use of violence, including murder, for the removal of tyrants and oppressors.¹⁸⁶⁵

Dimitris also discovered in their house – in his father's private workshop, which was also used by him as a study – an Italian anarchist manual about how to make bombs. Knowing that his father would never translate it for him, Dimitris bought an Italian dictionary and attempted to translate it himself. He then started experimenting with explosives and gunpowder, which led to an explosion that destroyed a large part of the workshop. Dimitris miraculously escaped without a scratch.¹⁸⁶⁶ After Dr Verwoerd's assassination, Marika told the South African police that the explosion “nearly blew up our house.”¹⁸⁶⁷

It was not only Dimitris' experiments with gunpowder and explosives that outraged Marika: his loose tongue also became a cause of constant friction with her. He would often take his younger half-sisters, Evangelia and Katerina, to coffee shops for sweets and cakes, but then would get involved in political arguments. Invariably, he adopted an anti-colonialist and anti-fascist, pro-anarchist stance. His half-sisters were embarrassed and his step-mother angered by these incidents. When the young pair set out with their mother for the café, Marika would demand of Dimitri, “Are you going to keep your mouth shut this time?” She would threaten to cut off money for cinema, ice-cream or pastries, though she never did. Dimitri was growing ever more independent and Marika feared a bad influence on her younger children.¹⁸⁶⁸

Dimitri's antipathy towards Portuguese colonialism was no passing fancy. He said often that Mozambicans should rebel and kick the Portuguese out of the country, adding that he would like to blow up the offices of the Portuguese administration.¹⁸⁶⁹ The United States of America was a particular bête noire. Dimitri believed White American settlers had stolen the country from the indigenous Indians, forced them to live in locations and racially oppressed them, as they did Jews, Blacks and other minorities. The “land of the free” was a myth, he said, and the Statue of Liberty a hypocritical symbol because the only people who ¹⁸⁶⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶⁷ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁶⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁶⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

enjoyed liberty in the USA were White Americans. He said he would like to blow that up, too.¹⁸⁷⁰

Another of Dimitri's political obsessions was the Spanish Civil War, which he determined to join on the side of the International Brigades against General Francisco Franco. Horrified to learn that his son was saving money to travel to Spain, and fearing for his life, Michalis begged Dimitri to promise he would not do so.¹⁸⁷¹ His son agreed, but Michalis seems to have had doubts for when he and his family later migrated to South Africa, he asked Gerry Kyriakakis, a good friend of his to keep an eye on the young man in case he changed his mind.¹⁸⁷²

Dimitri was very intelligent with an IQ of 125.¹⁸⁷³ This is generally rated as "Superior" or "Gifted," one level above that of university students and much higher than the average of 90 to 110. By any standards, the boy's parents were extraordinary linguists. Michalis could speak Afrikaans, Arabic, English, Greek, Portuguese, Italian, and French, and Marika was comfortable in Greek, Portuguese, Arabic and English.¹⁸⁷⁴ He followed their steps easily and by the early 1930s he had a certain fluency in Arabic, English, Greek and Portuguese.

Dimitri was an avid reader and a collector of contemporary and historical articles which he assembled into a personal library. His father bought a newspaper every day, as well as historical and political magazines, which Dimitri read from cover to cover. He would snip out items and paste them into a series of scrapbooks. One volume contained biographies and articles about people he admired; two books covered Greece and Mozambique; a fourth focussed on historical events and a fifth on contemporary political developments worldwide. Each volume was appropriately labelled. Tsafendas also kept any photographs he could find of his personal heroes, including Vladimir Lenin, Charlie Chaplin, rebels of the 1821 Greek revolution, and the Italian-born American anarchists Sacco and Vanzetti. Pictures from the French and Russian revolutions went into his History volume.¹⁸⁷⁵

¹⁸⁷⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁷¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁷² Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁷³ Reyner van Zyl's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

¹⁸⁷⁴ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹⁸⁷⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

At some point in 1933, Michalis arranged for the fifteen-year-old Dimitri to get his first job. This was at the Vulcan Iron Works as an oxyacetylene welder. Dimitri did not take to the work but his father insisted that he remain and learn the trade, which would be useful in later life. He also hoped that his son might grow to like welding. This never happened but Dimitri remained in the job, off and on, until 1939.¹⁸⁷⁶

Eventually, accepting that his son did not have a bright future as a welder and knowing his love for the printed word, Michalis found him another job, this time at his good friend Dimitris Spanos's bookshop in Lourenço Marques. Spanos was a dedicated and passionate Communist, a prominent member of the International Socialist League and a former miner, who in 1902 had tried unsuccessfully, along with other workers, to form a miners' union in Johannesburg. He was a good friend and associate of William H. Andrews, a pioneer of the trade union movement, first chairman of the South African Labour Party and later General Secretary of the South African Communist Party, as well as editor of the International, the newspaper of the International Socialist League. Forced out of South Africa because of his political activities, Spanos relocated to Lourenço Marques in 1903. In addition to his bookshop, he set up a news distribution agency and publishing company, D. Spanos, Sucras., LDA, which marketed foreign newspapers and magazines, as well as pamphlets from his socialist contacts all round the world. They went not only to outlets in Portuguese-speaking Africa but to Southern Africa, too, including South Africa. Among its publications, between 1915 and 1921, was the International. Spanos's agency grew swiftly into the biggest of its kind in Mozambique.¹⁸⁷⁷

Surrounded by books and newspapers, Tsafendas was in heaven but Spanos complained that his young employee spent his working hours reading literature and arguing with customers about politics. Dimitri ignored his boss's complaints and continued challenging shoppers who bought what he considered to be fascist or colonialist newspapers, urging them to buy liberal journals. Spanos became a key figure in Tsafendas's life, and he described him as one of the best employers he ever had. This was not only because he paid his wages and was very tolerant with him at work, but, more importantly, because he taught him a lot of things and shaped his political ideology. Spanos's virulent socialism and anti-colonialism found a welcome in Tsafendas's questing young mind and he quickly became the ¹⁸⁷⁷ Chaldeos, 2015: 64, 194; Dr. Evangelos Mantzaris in a personal interview, 11 April 2017.

¹⁸⁷⁶ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

young man's political mentor, playing an important role in shifting Tsafendas's ideology from anarchism to communism.¹⁸⁷⁸

Spanos not only contributed massively to Tsafendas's political ideology, but also broadened his literary education, recommending books, though usually those with a socialist or revolutionary message. Tsafendas would take the books home to read and return them later. The first book Spanos gave his young employee was Emile Zola's masterpiece, Germinal (published in 1885), a novel about the brutal conditions coal miners faced in France in the 1860s. It described how the workers were exploited by the mine owners and how they fought to improve their working conditions by organising a union and calling a strike. Spanos told Dimitri that the conditions described in the book were similar to those in mines all round the world. Spanos argued that through Communism, though not anarchism, the workers of the world could improve their conditions. He based his arguments on personal experience in the mines of South Africa, where he had tried and failed to form a labour union. Tsafendas was deeply impressed by Germinal and by Spanos's experience of the realities of working class life. The Zola novel became Tsafendas's favourite work of literature, surpassing Uncle Tom's Cabin, and played a hugely important role in his turn away from anarchism to Communism.¹⁸⁷⁹

Another major discovery for Tsafendas was the 1916 novel by Rabindranath Tagore, The Home and the World. This story of a political awakening highlighted the issue of Western culture in colonial India and foreshadowed the violence of Partition in 1947. The young Tsafendas was quick to embrace Tagore's ideas, especially those represented by one of the book's characters, the anti-imperialist, anti-colonialist Sandip. The novel remained one of Tsafendas's life-long favourites and he would often give copies to friends.¹⁸⁸⁰

However, Tsafendas's biggest discovery during his time with Spanos was Paul Robeson, the African-American son of an escaped slave, a famous singer, actor, Communist and activist, who later became a prominent figure in the American civil rights movement. Tsafendas scoured Spanos's magazines for stories about the entertainer and pinned a newspaper photograph of Robeson on his bedroom wall. Tsafendas admired the fact that Robeson risked his popularity by going to battle on behalf of workers and his fellow Blacks.

¹⁸⁷⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁸⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

In December 1934, Robeson visited the Soviet Union. He said, “Here I am not a Negro but a human being for the first time in my life. I walk in full human dignity,” and explored the possibility of moving along with his family to the USSR.¹⁸⁸¹ That was a major coup in the Communist press which reached Mozambique and Spanos’s publishing company. It was also a statement that confirmed further Tsafendas’s antipathy towards the United States and his admiration for the Soviet Union.

In his many subsequent years of travel, wherever Tsafendas went, he always looked for Robeson’s records. He learned many of his songs and tried to imitate his delivery. The Song of Freedom and Zog Nit Keynmol (Song of the Warsaw Ghetto) were his two all-time favourites, and he knew them by heart. Zog Nit Keynmol is a Jewish song about the Ghetto in Warsaw during the Nazi occupation of Poland. The song was written in Yiddish by Hirsh Glick, a young Jewish poet and partisan and inmate of the Vilna Ghetto during the Second World War, but it also has English lyrics. Despite the fact that Tsafendas did not speak Yiddish, he had managed to learn the lyrics perfectly and sang it throughout his whole life. Later, whenever Tsafendas was imprisoned, he sang these two songs, among others, in order to get strength while in his cell.¹⁸⁸²

Robeson’s album Songs of Free Men, which contained revolutionary and anti-Nazi songs, would become Tsafendas’s all-time favourite. He bought the album while in the USA in the mid-1940s, and subsequently bought another two copies in case one of them got scratched. He feared that once he had left the USA and returned to live in South Africa with his family he might have difficulty obtaining Robeson’s record again. When Spanos died in 1935, he left Tsafendas his collection of Robeson’s records and Tsafendas treasured them throughout his life.¹⁸⁸³

For many years, Spanos travelled, mostly at weekends, to villages and rural areas around Lourenço Marques, handing out socialist publications and literary books to native Mozambicans. He wanted to teach them socialism, but also believed that education was the best way for these people to move out of poverty. In the 1930s, by then in his sixties, he started taking Tsafendas with him. It was a life changing experience for Tsafendas when he saw the appalling conditions of the rural dwellers and he became desperate to help them. He told Spanos that he would go every weekend and distribute food to them. Spanos told him he could not feed everyone, not even the government could. He said such conditions would not have existed in a socialist country and that the best way to help these people was by educating them.¹⁸⁸⁴

¹⁸⁸¹ Daily Worker, 15 January 1935, “I am at home,” says Robeson at reception in Soviet Union.’

¹⁸⁸² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁸³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Tsafendas then offered to give the children free lessons in History and English. Spanos supported him by donating text books and Tsafendas would travel to the countryside each weekend to teach his classes. Spanos sometimes joined him. Tsafendas then thought of doing the same for the city kids in Lourenço Marques, so he approached Father Bertolis for help. The priest arranged with the Anglican vicar to allow Tsafendas to use a room at his church for classes and students flooded in from the capital and some from outlying villages. Tsafendas's father was proud of Dimitris's initiative and occasionally watched him at work.¹⁸⁸⁵ Tsafendas became convinced that education was the best method available to poor people to escape from poverty and to free themselves from authoritarian rule. He expressed this conviction several times in later life by volunteering as an unpaid teacher of underprivileged children.¹⁸⁸⁶

Spanos used to get some of his socialist magazines from ships arriving in Lourenço Marques and Tsafendas would often go to the harbour to pick up the parcels. After Spanos's death, Tsafendas continued his harbour visits to check if there were ships from the USSR. He met several Russian seamen this way and to Marika's dismay, would bring crew members back home for lunch. He plied them exhaustively with questions about life in the Soviet Union and sometimes the seamen gave him pamphlets and magazines about life in Russia. Once, a Soviet mariner gave Dimitri a hat which he said was similar to one that Vladimir Lenin wore.¹⁸⁸⁷ Tsafendas treasured the hat and wore it constantly, proudly proclaiming that ¹⁸⁸⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015.

¹⁸⁸⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015.

¹⁸⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015; Costas Poriassis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

¹⁸⁸⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

it was identical to that worn by the leader of the Russian revolution. His meetings with the Soviet seamen helped Tsafendas to pick up some Russian. He also bought a Russian dictionary to enable him to read the Soviet pamphlets and to communicate with the seamen.¹⁸⁸⁸

After Spanos's death, Tsafendas got work at a coffee shop, the Chai et Kiosk, owned by P. Sideris, a good friend of his father. Sideris, a conservative Greek loyal to the Portuguese government, often berated his young employee for arguing about politics with his customers. To make this worse, Tsafendas had turned the kiosk into a virtual distribution centre for Communist literature, often plying customers with books and pamphlets which he got from Spanos's friends and associates. He would introduce politics into his conversations with customers and if he thought someone appeared interested, he would offer him a Communist magazine or pamphlet, some to be paid for, others free. One day, Tsafendas went too far when he argued with a wealthy Portuguese businessman and city councillor. He denounced him as a "fascist" and accused him of exploiting Mozambicans. He said, "One day the Mozambicans will rebel against the Portuguese and take back everything you stole from them." The businessman reported the incident to Sideris and told him he would inform the police because he considered his employee to be a "dangerous Communist." As we will see later, this was by no means the last time Tsafendas was characterised in this way. Although reluctant to do so, but feeling he had no choice, Sideris dismissed Dimitri. He knew he would be in trouble with the colonial authorities if he did not do so.¹⁸⁸⁹

According to the International and State Defence Police's (PIDE- Portugal's security police¹⁸⁹⁰), Tsafendas was dismissed from the the Chai et Kiosk for "voicing Communist ideas."¹⁸⁹¹ That he was investigated after this incident by the security authorities in ¹⁸⁸⁸ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁸⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁹⁰ The agency that would later become the PIDE was founded in 1933 as PVDE (Surveillance and State Defense Police). It was in 1945, when the PVDE was renamed as PIDE. The PIDE's aim was "to detect, arrest, and neutralize or destroy any political opposition of whatever ideology which might threaten" the Salazar dictatorship. One of the agency's main responsibilities was "to control or neutralize any groups or persons who threatened the status quo as defined by the Dictatorship; not least was the social status quo, the relationship between different classes and between management and labour." The PIDE personnel, like all government employees at that time, had to swear the following oath before assuming their duties: "I declare on my honour that I am devoted to the social order established by the Portuguese Constitution of 1933 and that I actively repudiate communism and all subversive ideas" (Wheeler, 1983: 1-3).

¹⁸⁹¹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo, Lisbon (hereafter cited as ANTT).

Mozambique is clear from a June 29, 1937, letter from the South African Consul-General in Mozambique in response to a request from the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Johannesburg. It described Dimitri as a “half-caste,” who “it is quite possible that he may be engaged in disseminating communistic propaganda, there is, however, not sufficient evidence in substantiation of this belief and the local Authorities are accordingly not in a position to take any steps against him,” and who was dismissed from Sideris’s kiosk “owing to his Communist leanings.”¹⁸⁹²

After his dismissal from the kiosk, Tsafendas applied for work at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane. In order to complete his application, he needed his birth certificate. When he got it from the Civil Administration, he was shocked to discover that it gave his mother’s name as Amelia Williams, a native Mozambican woman, and not Marika Tsafantakis. When Dimitri told his father what he had discovered, Michalis took his son aside and finally told him the truth,¹⁸⁹³ and that Amelia had died some ten years earlier. They never spoke of the matter again, but Dimitri was devastated¹⁸⁹⁴ to learn that Marika was not his real mother and that his real mother was dead. He learned from her death certificate that she had died on January 12, 1927,¹⁸⁹⁵ but that he never managed to meet her was something that pained him until the end of his life.¹⁸⁹⁶ Michalis, Marika and Dimitris did not reveal the truth about Dimitri to the other children because they did not want to upset the family ambience and Katerina and Elena were too young to understand.¹⁸⁹⁷

Tsafendas tried desperately to find the location of his mother’s grave,¹⁸⁹⁸ but also to learn more about his ancestry. He spent many evenings sleeping in Shangaan villages and although he found out a lot about her, he was unable to locate her grave the as she had lost touch with members of her tribe in the years before her death. However, Tsafendas developed such a good relationship with several members of the tribe that he began teaching them

¹⁸⁹² Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁸⁹³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁹⁴ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁹⁵ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

¹⁸⁹⁶ Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

¹⁸⁹⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁸⁹⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

English and History. He visited the tribespeople regularly when he was in Mozambique until he was arrested.¹⁸⁹⁹

One of the Shangaan students later became the chief of his tribe and about fifty years later while Tsafendas was held in the Zonderwater Prison outside Pretoria, he visited his old teacher there. However, the prison guards did not allow them to communicate in Portuguese, as they were not able to speak this language themselves and the apartheid law prohibited conversations between prisoners and visitors in a language not known to the guards. He was his only friend who visited him in twenty-eight years of imprisonment and still he was not allowed to speak to him.¹⁹⁰⁰

Tsafendas did not proceed with his application to the airline factory and instead, on August 9, 1935, he sought permission to enter South Africa. The Interior Ministry refused his request. According to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death, the "application was refused on 12th December, 1935, and the refusal was confirmed on 24th April, 1936." No explanation was given,¹⁹⁰¹ but the likeliest cause was his mixed-race status and his dismissal from Sideris's kiosk "on account of his communistic leanings," two of the reasons cited for later refusals. Surprised and angry, Tsafendas decided to slip across the porous Mozambican-South African border and in 1936 found him working at the Fountain Café near Pretoria Railway Station. He served and scrubbed tables there for two or three months, then travelled to Johannesburg and worked in three eating places, the City Tea Room, the Elgin Café and the Cosmopolitan Restaurant.¹⁹⁰² Assisted by contacts given to him by Spanos, he joined the South African Communist Party, attended meetings and volunteered for small activities such as distributing leaflets.¹⁹⁰³ Some resident party members were cautious, however, considering Dimitri too young for political activism.¹⁹⁰⁴

¹⁸⁹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹⁰⁰ Jody Kollapen memorandum regarding Dimitrio Tsafendas. 24 November 1994. Tsafendas's file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). South African History Archive (hereafter cited as SAHA); Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁰¹ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 13. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁰³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

Returning to Lourenço Marques, Dimitri was pleased to encounter another Tsafantakis – half-sister Eleni (Helen), born in 1936,¹⁹⁰⁵ a girl he adored as a baby and with whom he subsequently maintained a very good relationship; she was the closest of his siblings.¹⁹⁰⁶ He also applied again to work at the Imperial Airways factory at Quilemane; his application was successful and he started working there.¹⁹⁰⁷

During the 1936 Berlin Olympic Games, Dimitri became interested in athletics, and acquired a new contemporary hero when the African-American runner, Jesse Owens, won four gold medals, infuriating Hitler and the Games' Nazi hosts. Dimitri cut Owens' photograph from a newspaper and pinned it to his bedroom wall and scoured all the newspapers and magazines he could find to start a file on his new hero.¹⁹⁰⁸

Sometime in 1936, Tsafendas proceeded to what he considered to be his first “revolutionary” act. He, and his two best friends, fellow Greek George Grispos and a Mozambican named Manuel, took forks and scratched the paintwork on cars that belonged to members of the Portuguese local administration and members of the German and Italian embassies. The three friends would observe their targets for some time before they attack. During the attack, one of them would scratch the car, while the other two kept watch. They would also let down the cars' tyres. The attacks went on for a few weeks and only stopped after the incidents were reported in the local press and became of point of discussion in the city. No-one ever found out they were the culprits.¹⁹⁰⁹ Sometime the same year, Tsafendas was ordered to report for military service in the Portuguese army. He attended for interview and medical examination but was rejected because of his mixed race. Sons of European fathers and African mothers were not accepted for the military at that time.¹⁹¹⁰

Meanwhile, with the depression biting, Michalis Tsafantakis came to believe there was no realistic future for him in Mozambique and decided to relocate to South Africa. Not only was this a country which looked better equipped to survive the economic downturn, it ¹⁹⁰⁵ Home Affairs Department report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 1 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub file: 1/2. NASA.

¹⁹⁰⁶ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

¹⁹⁰⁷ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁰⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹⁰⁹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

¹⁹¹⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

was also familiar territory since Michalis had worked in Pretoria after leaving Alexandria as a young man and before he moved on to Mozambique in 1916. Michalis sought leave to enter South Africa for himself, Marika and their four children, but not for Dimitri. He knew his son had previously been denied entrance to South Africa and feared that to include Dimitri's name on the family's visa application could result in refusal for all of them. His plan was for Dimitri to follow on later when the family was settled. He was not comfortable with this arrangement, but felt it would be best for everyone, including Dimitri himself. He believed his son would "mature" quicker by living on his own for a while.¹⁹¹¹

On July 17, 1937, Michalis applied for permanent residence status in South Africa. The application was accepted, and Michalis and Marika and their children, Evangelia, Victor, Katerina and Eleni, moved to Johannesburg later that year.¹⁹¹² Before Michalis left for South Africa, he asked, Gerry Kyriakakis and his sister Artemis Michaletos, to keep an eye on his son and to inform him immediately if anything untoward happened. One of Dimitri's political obsessions at the time was the Spanish Civil War, which he was eager to join on the side of the International Brigades against General Francisco Franco. Michalis begged Dimitris not to go and there were several arguments between them. Eventually Michalis, with vital help from Artemis, managed to convince Dimitris to stay in Africa. However, now that he was leaving, he was afraid Dimitris would change his mind, so before he left, he made him swear to him that he would not go to Spain.¹⁹¹³

In 1938, while Tsafendas was still working at the Imperial Airways factory in Quilemane, the Portuguese government introduced new rules for cotton cultivation which boosted the Portuguese textile industry at the expense of the Mozambican economy. Tsafendas, like many Mozambicans, was outraged. He distributed among cotton growers, as well as his colleagues at the factory, copies of the Communist Manifesto and spoke publicly against the forced cotton cultivation.¹⁹¹⁴ Soon, rumours about his activities reached PIDE and he came under suspicion of "spreading Communist propaganda."¹⁹¹⁵ However, the rumours ¹⁹¹¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹¹² Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹¹³ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

¹⁹¹⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹¹⁵ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

were “never proven” as presumably none of those who received Tsafendas’s books confirmed it to the police.¹⁹¹⁶ A PIDE report said it was “quite possible” Dimitri was “engaged in disseminating Communistic propaganda,” but there was “not sufficient evidence in substantiation of this belief.”¹⁹¹⁷ This incident dogged Tsafendas throughout his life as it led to the creation of a file, Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis, in PIDEs records, which would only get bigger with the passage of time.¹⁹¹⁸

A 1961 PIDE report referred to the above incident, along with the one at Chai et Kiosk, stating that while Tsafendas was “residing in that Province (Mozambique), he was twice a suspect of Communist activities, but evidence of such activities was never found.”¹⁹¹⁹ By the late 1930s, Dimitris was widely known in the Greek community as a Communist and anti-colonialist and was often referred to as “The Red.” He frequently pinned a red carnation or a red rose to the lapel of his jacket and sometimes he wrote anti-Portuguese and Communist slogans on public walls. His father was happy about the direction of his son’s political ideas and character.¹⁹²⁰

In 1938 or in 1939, the twenty-year-old Dimitri worked as a waiter at café Olympia owned by Gerry Kyriakakis, and became close to the Kyriakakis family, particularly the youngest daughter, Ira. Once again, he argued politics with the guests, despite Kyriakakis’s threats of dismissal. When the political disputes continued, Kyriakakis decided they were jeopardising business and finally dismissed his young waiter. Ira Kyriakakis has clear memories of Tsafendas as being “very passionate about politics.” She said, “He was a Communist and very much against the Portuguese and colonialism generally ... he did not speak about anything else, only politics ...” Tsafendas also showed her maps and talked of his plans “to travel all around the world.” He gave her many books to read, mostly political, and talked to her and her sister Aliko about politics and history. Ira Kyriakakis was one of the students who attended his English classes. She said he was “very popular with the students because he was very funny.” According to Ira Kyriakakis, Tsafendas was “like a lending ¹⁹¹⁶ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹¹⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹¹⁸ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹¹⁹ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 4 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹²⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

library,” distributing books to all of his friends.¹⁹²¹ That Tsafendas was rarely seen without a book was something police were to hear from people who knew him. He always had “a large amount of literature with him,” two witnesses testified to the South African police after Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination.¹⁹²²

Another student at Tsafendas’s English lessons was Helen Kavadias. She was born in 1930 and she met Tsafendas through the friendship between their two families, especially between her mother, Sophia Kavadias, and Marika. Helen became friendly with Dimitri’s half-sisters and she remembered Dimitri taking them all for ice-cream. He was, she recalled, “very polite and funny, playing with us in the street ... he was always with a book in his hand.” She said, “His room was like a library, I had never seen so many books he used to give me books about history, but I did not care for them. I wanted fairy tales about princes and princesses!” Helen Kavadias next saw Tsafendas twenty-five years later when he spent two days in her mother’s house in Mutare, Zimbabwe (then Umtali, Rhodesia), and because of this she was questioned by the South African police. She was then Helen Grispos, having married George Grispos, one of Tsafendas’s best friends from school.¹⁹²³

On January 17, 1938, Tsafendas applied for an entry visa for South Africa. In July, he learned that he was refused. He was given no explanation but it appears clear from police documents that the refusal was based on the South African Consul-General’s description from Lourenço Marques of Dimitri as “a half-caste” with “Communist leanings,” “suspected of dissemination of Communistic propaganda.”¹⁹²⁴ Having entered South Africa illegally once before, young Tsafendas decided to do the same again. Before that, however, his political activities got him banned from his own home country for twelve years. According to a 1953 PIDE report, Tsafendas had “voiced Communist ideas” and “distributed such propaganda in the Portuguese colonies,” actions which led to his being banned from re-entering Mozambique.¹⁹²⁵ He was not allowed to return until 1963, when he received ¹⁹²¹ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

¹⁹²² Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹²³ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

¹⁹²⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹²⁵ PIDE report regarding Demitrios Tsafandakis or Demitrio Tsafendas, 15 October 1953. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

amnesty from the Portuguese Government, after he convinced them that he was a little “mad,” but harmless and that his “subversive” and communist ideas belonged to the past.¹⁹²⁶

SOUTH AFRICA, 1939–1942

Tsafendas entered South Africa for the second time in 1939 and joined his family in Johannesburg. Looking to develop his career skills, he signed on for welding classes at Progress College.¹⁹²⁷ Out of college, he worked busily for the Communist Party, delivering leaflets to coffee shops, attending meetings and helping organise demonstrations.¹⁹²⁸ During the war, he not only argued with his party’s opponents but fought them in the streets. More than once, he ended up with his face bruised and his clothes torn after brawling with members of the Ossewabrandwag (OB) and other Fascist and Nazi organizations. He said his side always won. Because of his heavy build, Tsafendas provided security at party meetings and acted as a bodyguard for local Communist leaders.¹⁹²⁹

Tsafendas paid his Communist Party membership dues – two shillings and six pence per month - at a party office at the Trades Hall, and attended meetings on the steps of Johannesburg City Hall, addressed by leaders he named as Wolfson and Joffe.¹⁹³⁰ Michalis supported his son’s activism and once gave him money for paint to daub anti-Nazi slogans on public walls, but his stepmother was far from happy. Dimitri not only stored hundreds of Communist documents at Michalis’s and Marika’s home in Johannesburg, but invited party members to join him there making political placards. Marika often said, “He will send me to my grave before my time.” She was terrified that his activities would get the family into trouble with the South African authorities.¹⁹³¹

Although Tsafendas was deeply preoccupied with politics, there was romance in his life, too. He met a Jewish girl, the sister of a friend of his half-sister Evangelia, and went out ¹⁹²⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

¹⁹²⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹²⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹²⁹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹³⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹³¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

with her for a year without her parents knowing. His half-sisters helped to arrange the couple's secret meetings.¹⁹³²

In May 1940, Tsafendas secured a job as a welder with the British Mining Supply Company in Johannesburg,¹⁹³³ a significant move since the company was engaged in crucial war work – the production of armoured vehicles – and this prevented Tsafendas's immediate deportation when it was discovered he had entered South Africa illegally. What happened was that Tsafendas applied for permanent residence in 1941 whereupon investigations revealed that he had crossed into the Union without a residence permit, thus contravening Article 2(a) of the Aliens Act No. 1 of 1937. On August 6, 1941 at "H" Court in Johannesburg, a magistrate fined him £12.10s or one month of hard labour. Tsafendas paid the fine and was released and given a residence permit valid for one year. A letter dated October 13, 1941, from the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs to the Commissioner of Police in Pretoria explained that Tsafendas had been granted temporary residence because his work with the British Mining Supply Company was "regarded as falling under controlled labour," in other words, war work.¹⁹³⁴ However, the letter referred to the refusal of earlier applications by Tsafendas while in Mozambique and the South African Consul-General's report describing him as a "half-caste" who had been dismissed from his kiosk job in Lourenço Marques for "Communist leanings." The letter ended, "The above information is passed to you in order that the activities of Tsafendas may be watched, and I will be glad if you will advise me in due course should anything to his detriment become known."¹⁹³⁵

On October 20, 1941, a week later, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Witwatersrand Division (which covered Johannesburg), wrote to the Police Commissioner in Pretoria that "from a security point of view, nothing detrimental to Tsafentakis (Tsafendas) is known in this division and so far there is no evidence that the man has shown any Communist tendencies since he entered the Union." The letter said Tsafendas had registered under the Aliens Registration Act, that his parents lived in Pretoria, where his father was a fitter and ¹⁹³² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁹³³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹³⁴ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

¹⁹³⁵ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

turner at Iscor Iron and Steel Works, and that Tsafendas was employed by the British Mining Supply Company on “essential war services as a welder on army filter plants.”¹⁹³⁶

In 1941, his half-sister Evangelia married in Pretoria. His gift to the newly-weds was an expensive modern coffee table, which is still used by his nephew, Mike Vlachopoulos.¹⁹³⁷ However, his presence did not go unnoticed. Tsafendas overheard a political conversation at the next table between two Greeks who were unknown to him. His half-sister, Katerina Pnema, and his cousin Mary Eendracht, remember that Dimitris intervened and called them “fascists,” whereupon a huge argument erupted, and Tsafendas’s father had to be called on to calm things down. “He was always doing things like this,” Katerina told the author of her half-brother. “You couldn’t take him anywhere; he would always embarrass us. He couldn’t keep his mouth shut, he would always find someone to fight with. If he overheard a conversation about something he disagreed with, he would enter the conversation and turn it into an argument. He replied that he could not keep his mouth shut if he saw something wrong or an injustice. Fascists, colonialists and racists were like a red flag for him, especially the Nazis. When he saw one, oh my God what could he do. He was like a bull seeing a red flag.” Shortly after the wedding, one of the guests told Evangelia that Dimitris was not her full brother, but a half-brother, and this is how the secret became known.¹⁹³⁸

Sometime during the first half of 1942, Tsafendas was dismissed from his job at the British Mining Supply Company for “irregular attendance and loafing.”¹⁹³⁹ On April 18, 1942, the authorities wrote to Tsafendas requesting that he apply for an extension to his temporary residence permit, due to expire on August 6. There was no reply, presumably because Tsafendas by then had relocated to Cape Town. On June 8, 1942 he applied for a permit to leave South Africa by sea for the United Kingdom. The Deputy Commissioner of the Witwatersrand police informed the Commissioner for Immigration regarding Tsafendas that ¹⁹³⁶ Letter of the Deputy Commissioner of Police to the Police Commissioner regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 20 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

¹⁹³⁷ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

¹⁹³⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

¹⁹³⁹ Confidential Letter of the Lieutenant for the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division to the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs. 12 June 1942. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

“no reports of subversive activities had been received” and that from the police point of view it “had no objection to his being issued with the desired permit.”¹⁹⁴⁰

This was refused by the immigration chief, however, after consultation with the British High Commissioner, Mr. Cockram, who was reported to be “not in favour of a man of this type being granted facilities to go to England.” The refusal was conveyed to the Chief Immigration Officer in Cape Town on June 18 in a letter which reiterated the original description of Tsafendas as a half-caste and added that Tsafendas was “engaged actively in Communistic propaganda.” It said, he had only been allowed to stay because he was engaged on war work. The letter concluded, “As he has now been discharged from his employment, he should be ordered to return to Lourenço Marques forthwith.”¹⁹⁴¹ However, the order came too late. On June 13, 1942, five days before his deportation was requested, Tsafendas left Cape Town aboard the Greek freighter SS Eugene Livanos, on which he was employed as a mess boy. He was twenty-four and the ship took him to Canada.¹⁹⁴²

CANADA AND USA, 1942–1947

Tsafendas described the crew of the Eugene Livanos as “too rough.” He said, “They were smoking dagga and marijuana and fighting among themselves.”¹⁹⁴³ When the ship docked at St. John, New Brunswick, on September 1, 1942,¹⁹⁴⁴ Tsafendas disembarked. He went to the Canadian Immigration Department and told them he did not want to go back to the Eugene Livanos but instead of sending him to another boat he was detained in a detention barracks for seamen in Montreal. From there he was sent to Halifax (Nova Scotia). He was upset that he was considered to be a deserter, insisting that he did not want to desert at St. John, just to change ships.¹⁹⁴⁵

¹⁹⁴⁰ Confidential Letter of the Lieutenant for the Deputy Commissioner of Witwatersrand Division to the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs. 12 June 1942. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

¹⁹⁴¹ Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 26. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹⁴² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. COE. Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 27. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967.

¹⁹⁴³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁴⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁴⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

According to a PIDE report, “As the country was at war, the authorities decided to put him on an explosives carrier on a convoy destined for Allied troops fighting in Europe. Because he was scared that the ship might be torpedoed – which later came to happen – he escaped with four other crew members to the United States.”¹⁹⁴⁶ The escape took place on December 10, 1942.¹⁹⁴⁷ The prisoners tied their bed sheets together and scaled the wall of the Halifax detention centre. Four, including Tsafendas, made it over successfully but the fifth man lost his grip when one of the sheets came loose, and despite their efforts to hold him, fell and broke a leg. While the injured man was lay screaming, Tsafendas and his three companions took flight as the prison guards raced towards them. They got away and the prisoner survived his fall. However, the incident disturbed Tsafendas deeply because he was the one who had made the bedsheet ropes, but also because he had run away, leaving his comrade alone and helpless.¹⁹⁴⁸

The three escapees walked several kilometres to the border with the United States. It was the depths of winter and they crossed the frozen St Croix River on foot. On December 31, 1942, Tsafendas and his friends were arrested by the American Coast Guard in Penobscot County, Maine. They were detained for three months in a prison in Bangor, Maine,¹⁹⁴⁹ on charges of contravening US immigration laws.¹⁹⁵⁰ While in detention, Tsafendas “showed symptoms of mental disorder” and was admitted to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, Massachusetts, from where he was transferred on April 23, 1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital. He was initially diagnosed as having “psychoneurosis – mixed type” plus “many psychopathic traits.”¹⁹⁵¹ However, psychiatrists in this hospital discovered that Tsafendas was play-acting. According to a report by the Grafton State Hospital, Massachusetts, to which he was admitted in 1946, Tsafendas then confessed that in ¹⁹⁴⁶ Translation of the PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafantakis, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

¹⁹⁴⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁴⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

¹⁹⁴⁹ Grafton State Hospital report regarding D. Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁵⁰ Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹⁵¹ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”¹⁹⁵²

Tsafendas later explained that he pretended to be mentally disturbed in the Bangor prison because life was tough for someone branded as a deserter and because he feared being shipped out on a weapons-carrying freighter which would be targeted by U-boats. He was terrified of German submarines and of being torpedoed in the middle of the ocean. He admitted that he was a coward at the time and felt ashamed of his behaviour, but he said he did not want to die young. Tsafendas later conceded that while in prison he “pretended to hear voices, like Joan of Arc.” He said it was easy and the guards believed him. He repeated his act several times while in the Metropolitan State Hospital.¹⁹⁵³

Tsafendas later in his life told Father Minas Constandinou who used to visit him in prison (Pretoria Central Prison and Zonderwater Prison) and in hospital (Pretoria Prison Hospital and Sterkfontein Hospital), that in a hospital in the United States he met an Irish-American man named Tom,¹⁹⁵⁴ also a merchant seaman, who was diagnosed as schizophrenic. Tsafendas said he was the skinniest person he ever saw and Tom claimed this was because he harboured a tapeworm which ate his food. Tom regularly asked for extra food portions in order to “feed the worm” and because he was so thin, the hospital staff always gave him more. He never suggested the tapeworm talked to him or had any influence on his, just that it consumed his food.¹⁹⁵⁵

According to Tsafendas, Tom told him that when he was a child, a doctor gave him medicine to expel the worm; part of it emerged but some remained inside, including the head. Further doses had no effect and the boy believed the tapeworm was hiding in his body where purgatives could not reach it. Tsafendas personally believed Tom was pretending to be insane in order not to be drafted into the US military since this was during the Second World War. He asked many times if he was making it all up; he pleaded with him to tell the truth, but Tom held to his story.¹⁹⁵⁶ ¹⁹⁵² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁵³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁵⁴ Father Minas does not remember Tom's surname, or whether Tsafendas even mentioned it. He clearly remember though that the person's name was Tom.

¹⁹⁵⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁵⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

According to Tsafendas, Tom was also a missionary of a Christian sect which did not have a name.¹⁹⁵⁷ Tsafendas referred to it as the Christian Church (also known as the No-Name church or as Two by Twos¹⁹⁵⁸). Tsafendas was impressed by Tom's knowledge of Christian belief and his philosophical take on the world and life, and he questioned his diagnosis as schizophrenic. When Tsafendas was discharged from the hospital, Tom gave him contact details for other members of his sect and Tsafendas used the contacts to meet them.¹⁹⁵⁹ Tsafendas joined the sect and remained in contact with them over the years, including when he returned to South Africa. "We have no church or temple and we hold meetings according to where you stay," he said.¹⁹⁶⁰

According to James Johnston, a South African Minister of the Christian Church, who later briefly met Tsafendas, the Christian Church's mission was two-fold, missionary and evangelical, and it was guided by the Bible. The Church had members all over the world. The Church's financial needs were met by contributions from members. The organization had no church buildings and prayer meetings and scripture studies were held in private homes on Wednesdays and Sundays. "We adhere strictly to the teaching and example of Christ," Johnston said.¹⁹⁶¹

Although instinctively religious, Tsafendas was never comfortable with the established Christian Church. His father had him baptised as Greek Orthodox, but he viewed the Church as a wealthy and conservative power supportive of colonialism and with close ties to repressive governments. Instead of defending the powerless and the oppressed, he believed the Church helped to perpetuate an unjust system of foreign rule, partly in order to protect its own position. It was Tsafendas's belief that Christianity was in essence revolutionary, stemming from its earliest days of persecution under the Roman Empire. Thus for someone who saw the institutional church as part of the establishment, Tom's simple Christian sect held great appeal for Tsafendas. It did not have church buildings or priests or bishops and it had no connection with authority. Its members were simple, independent Christians who ¹⁹⁵⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁵⁸ It was founded in 1897 in Ireland by Scottish evangelist William Irvine.

¹⁹⁵⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁹⁶⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁶¹ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

believed in the same God and gathered together to pray to Him. This was exactly the way Tsafendas viewed Christianity and made the sect attractive to both his religious and political instincts.¹⁹⁶²

Tsafendas said Tom was one of the nicest and funniest people he ever met, but he lost touch with him after he left the United States and never learnt what happened to him. Tsafendas told Tom's story, exactly as stated here, to the two priests, Minas and Ioannis, who visited him in the prisons and in the hospitals where he was held, and were interviewed by the author. He told them that it was from Tom that he got the idea of a tapeworm to use for his own purposes. He also told them that he decided to use it after he was caught pretending to be mad by the psychiatrists of a hospital in the USA.¹⁹⁶³ The author is not in position to know whether Tom really believed he had a tapeworm or not.

Confirmation of the existence of this Tom comes from the Grafton State Hospital Report. In it appears that Tsafendas spoke at length to the psychiatrists who examined him about a certain Tom, a missionary who recruited him to a Christian sect. In the hospital report, Tsafendas mentions Tom's full name as Thomas Tuff.¹⁹⁶⁴ Needless to say, Tsafendas did not tell the psychiatrists that Tom had been diagnosed as a schizophrenic who believed that he had a tapeworm inside him, nor that it was Tom who gave him the idea about using a fictitious tapeworm himself.

After his deception at the Metropolitan State Hospital was discovered, Tsafendas was given a choice by the US Immigration Department: "Deportation back to Africa or work for the Merchant Marine." He chose the second option and spent the remaining years of World War Two on merchant ships.¹⁹⁶⁵ On June 24, 1943, Tsafendas was discharged from the Metropolitan State Hospital but remained in detention until August 14, 1943 when he was released on a $1,000 bond. On September 2, 1943 he was reshipped aboard the SS Pillory under what the US Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) described as "a warrant of ¹⁹⁶² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁶³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsafaridis were also told the exact same story about the origins of the tapeworm story by Patrick O'Ryan (Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015).

¹⁹⁶⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁶⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

deportation.”¹⁹⁶⁶ Tsafendas's new status followed a recommendation by the INS on February 21, 1944 that he should be “admitted as a seaman” because he had been following such a calling since the Pillory trip on September 2, 1943.¹⁹⁶⁷ The ship sailed to Greenland then returned to the United States, docking in Boston. When the Pillory arrived back in Boston, Tsafendas got a job on a Liberty ship¹⁹⁶⁸ and remained on different Liberty ships till the end of the war in 1945.¹⁹⁶⁹ At some point, a Liberty ship on which Tsafendas was serving was torpedoed and only managed to limp to port.¹⁹⁷⁰ The experience fuelled Tsafendas's terror of drowning in a fiery sea and he did everything possible to avoid further service aboard ship. His usual tactic was to pretend to be mentally unfit and so spend as much time as possible in hospitals or at least safely on dry land.¹⁹⁷¹

After returning to Boston on the Pillory, Tsafendas shipped out on the SS Benson, travelled to New York and checked into the Seamen's Convalescence Home at Oyster Bay, Long Island. He remained there until shipping out on the SS John Holmes on May 9, 1944. Tsafendas said he left this vessel when it arrived in Liverpool, England, and in June 1944, he secured admittance to the US Army 96th General Hospital in Worcestershire, England. He remained there until leaving aboard the US Army hospital ship, Wisteria. On August 12, 1944, Tsafendas arrived at the port of Charleston, South Carolina, on the Wisteria, and was certified by public health service physicians to be suffering from an undetermined type of psychosis. A Board of Inquiry was held at Roper Hospital, Charleston, on September 2, 1944, and the physicians concluded that Tsafendas was “insane at time of arrival.” Furthermore, the Board of Inquiry declared that Tsafendas had been excluded under the provisions of Section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 as an insane person, and thus was not eligible for a visa permit for the USA. However, since he had been found insane, it was decided that he ¹⁹⁶⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁶⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁶⁸ The Liberty ship was a low-cost cargo vessel of simple construction which was built in huge numbers in American yards during World War Two. It was developed to meet British requirements for transports to replace ships torpedoed by German U-boats. Capable of carrying, ammunition, tanks, food, even troops, Liberty ships manned by merchant seamen served in all theatres during the war but primarily guaranteed that Allied forces in Europe were supplied with war materiel from North America (Elphick, 2006).

¹⁹⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁷⁰ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

¹⁹⁷¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

be kept in Roper Hospital for the time being. Sometime after the hearing, Tsafendas escaped from Roper Hospital, but he was apprehended on October 5, 1944, in Boston, Mass. He was then transferred to a US public health facility at Ellis Island, New York. On February 25, 1945, he was deported from New York aboard the Greek vessel, SS Maria Nicolao, but he was soon back in America. In a letter from 42 Alexander Avenue, Medford, Mass., Tsafendas wrote to President Roosevelt complaining that he had been granted a stay of only twenty-nine days back in the United States. He cited his service in the US Merchant Marine and asked to be considered for additional time. The letter was sent to the INS but when its officials inquired, they found that Tsafendas had shipped out of Boston on June 13, 1945.¹⁹⁷²

In January, 1946, he was arrested at St Bernard's Home on West 95th Street in New York City. He said he had entered the United States at New York on December 3, 1945, as a mess waiter on the SS Robin Locksley. He was charged with violating the 1924 Immigration Act by remaining longer in the United States than permitted as a seaman, and was deported aboard the SS Hood Victory on February 10, 1946. He returned to New York on the Hood Victory on March 10, 1946, and three days later he attended a meeting of his Christian sect, in Medford, Mass. Tom Tuff, who had recovered from his tapeworm obsession as soon as the war had ended, was also there.¹⁹⁷³

Tsafendas's persistence in returning to the United States time after time may appear to be at odds with his frequently voiced dislike for the country and its treatment of minorities. What he told friends was that he admired the USA as "very modern and very advanced technologically," but his lived experience convinced him he was right in his long-held belief that this was a racist society, a "land of the free" only for White Americans. As in his youth, he wanted to blow up the Statue of Liberty, since, he claimed, there was no liberty for African-Americans, native Indians, or Communists.¹⁹⁷⁴

Ironically, it was an American play, A Flag Is Born,¹⁹⁷⁵ that Tsafendas watched at some point during his stay in the United States, which impressed him deeply on account of its concern for social equality and independence. The play advocated a homeland for Jews in ¹⁹⁷² Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁷³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁷⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁹⁷⁵ By Ben Hecht, premiered on Broadway with Paul Muni and Marlon Brando in September 1946.

ancient Israel, a theme which resonated with Tsafendas because of his Jewish ancestry, of which he was so proud. He kept his theatre ticket for years and sometime later he gave all his spare cash and even sold some of his clothes to support a fund-raiser for the creation of Israel.¹⁹⁷⁶ Indeed Tsafendas had a life-long love affair with the theatre and went to plays in almost every country he visited, always keeping his ticket stub. His favourite playwrights were William Shakespeare and Bertolt Brecht.¹⁹⁷⁷ In America and in Europe, he went to the opera when he could, but also became a jazz lover, tracking down clubs to listen to this new music live.¹⁹⁷⁸

Soon after the end of the war, when the Holocaust and the Nazi atrocities became known, Tsafendas felt deeply ashamed and guilty that he had not fought the Nazis, indeed that he had done everything possible to avoid direct conflict. He felt this shame and guilt until he died, considering it the worst thing he ever did, that he was a coward and afraid to die.¹⁹⁷⁹ Tsafendas spoke at length to witnesses about his time in the United States, especially about the hospitals and what he considered to be cowardly behaviour. He said he was perfectly fine and only used his insanity act to avoid imprisonment and deportation for being in the USA illegally. More importantly, he feared serving in the Navy because he was terrified of the Nazi U-boats after one of his warships was torpedoed and almost sunk. He said he wanted to fight the Nazis, but on land and not at sea. Finally, he also said that he regretted pretending to be mad when he discovered that an American immigration law prohibited entry to the USA of mentally ill people.¹⁹⁸⁰ According to Tsafendas, the only genuine health issue he had while in the country was an enormous feeling of guilt due to his prison escapee friend breaking his leg and the fact that he was afraid to go to sea and fight the Nazis.¹⁹⁸¹

During his stay in the United States, Tsafendas spent a lot of time reading about the American Revolution and visiting associated sites in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York State. He particularly admired Benjamin Franklin and through him discovered the argument that tyrannicide, the killing of a tyrant, was considered morally justifiable by many ¹⁹⁷⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 April 2015.

¹⁹⁷⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁹⁷⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

¹⁹⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁸¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

great thinkers. Reading more on this subject, Tsafendas discovered that tyrannicide had its roots in ancient Greece but found approval from several important political and religious thinkers, including John of Salisbury and Saint Thomas Aquinas.¹⁹⁸²

On March 19, 1946, Tsafendas admitted himself to the Boston Psychopathic Hospital. He spent a week there then entered Grafton State Hospital.¹⁹⁸³ Tsafendas spent sixteen months in this hospital and his medical report said “he is in the habit of smearing the walls in his room with faeces and is hallucinated and suspicious. He hears voices coming though the radiators. He is orientated as to the month but completely disorientated as to place and situation. He has peculiar mannerisms. He is wont to assume silly grimacing expression and is prone to misidentify the attendants and the examiner.”¹⁹⁸⁴ Much of this description seemed to fit with Tsafendas’s deceptions, including pulling faces and pretending to hear voices. However, Tsafendas could see that his doctors were not entirely convinced and fearing that he would be found out again, he decided to steal Tom Tuff’s tapeworm story. It worked. The doctors were intrigued and began to take a particular interest in his case.¹⁹⁸⁵ He was discharged from Grafton on July 31, 1947, with the diagnosis being “schizophrenia-Hebephrenic type. Condition Improved.”¹⁹⁸⁶

After his discharge from the hospital, the Immigration Department considered Tsafendas’s situation. A decision to deport him was not easy since he had a residential history in Mozambique and South Africa and held both Greek and Portuguese passports. He said, “This puzzled the American authorities (because) I was also in possession of American seamen’s papers.”¹⁹⁸⁷ Furthermore, the Immigration authorities had concluded that Tsafendas was “unstable though not insane” but the “type of man who could easily be used as an instrument of Communist or hostile organizations.” The impression of the American Immigration people at the time was that “he had been manipulated and was under the ¹⁹⁸² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

¹⁹⁸³ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

¹⁹⁸⁶ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

influence of someone or some organisation.” Subsequently, they decided to deport him to Europe.¹⁹⁸⁸

Tsafendas wanted to be sent to South Africa but immigration officials decided on August 22 to expel him to Greece and on September 27, he travelled to Piraeus, the port city of Athens, aboard the SS Marine Jumper.¹⁹⁸⁹ This decision would be a fateful one for Tsafendas, forcing him into a sixteen-year-long odyssey, during which he was forbidden to enter either Mozambique or South Africa.

GREECE, 1947–1949

Certainly, Piraeus, Athens's harbour, in October 1947¹⁹⁹⁰ was not where Tsafendas wanted to be. Greece was in the middle of a bloody civil war between the Greek army supported by pro-royalists with the backing of the United States and Britain, and the Democratic Army of Greece (DSE), the military wing of the Greek Communist Party. Tsafendas felt like “a complete stranger”¹⁹⁹¹ and in the month of his arrival he applied for permanent residence in South Africa. The application was declined the following month, November 1947. According to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death, “In file G.8226, the following endorsement appears on one of the documents relating to his (Tsafendas's) application: ‘He is a Communist, a half-caste and a previous illegal immigrant. Refusal strongly recommended.’”¹⁹⁹²

However, Tsafendas would not give up. His determination to return to South Africa or to Mozambique was so great that from virtually every country he entered during the sixteen years of his personal diaspora, he filed applications for entry visas or permanent residence. His requests were invariably denied, often for the reasons quoted above.

¹⁹⁸⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 09/09/1966. COE, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

¹⁹⁸⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

¹⁹⁹⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

¹⁹⁹¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁹² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 12. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

Tsafendas had difficulty finding work in war-ridden Athens and in order to survive, he sold his clothes which he had brought from America.¹⁹⁹³ However, he got in touch with members of the Christian sect whose contact details had been given to him by Tom Tuff, and they came to his assistance. Later, feeling indebted to them, he agreed to their suggestion that he be baptised and this happened on a beach in Athens, whereupon he became a full member of the sect.¹⁹⁹⁴

Tsafendas then managed to get in touch with his good boyhood friend, John Michaletos, cousin of George Michaletos who was married to his Aunty Artemis. However, there were actually two men named John Michaletos with similar characteristics and the author has not been able to clarify which one of the two it was; they were each other's cousins and cousins to George Michaletos, and both knew Tsafendas since childhood and they had grown up together.¹⁹⁹⁵ Both were Communists and good friends of Tsafendas. One was a professor of literature, the other a doctor; Tsafendas was very close to both of them while in Mozambique. While in Greece, he got in touch certainly with one of them, conceivably both. Michaletos, the professor, was not only a member of the Greek Communist Party but also of its military wing, the Democratic Army. It is not known if the doctor was also a member of the Democratic Army although he was certainly a member of the Communist Party. Tsafendas would stay in touch with one of these two Michaletos and would correspond with him regularly over the ensuing years. During the assassination investigation, the South African police would become aware of Tsafendas's relationship with Michaletos and the fact that he was an active Communist.¹⁹⁹⁶ It is very likely that they discovered it was Michaletos who recruited Tsafendas to the DSE as both the police and the ¹⁹⁹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

¹⁹⁹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

¹⁹⁹⁵ In total there were four men named John Michaletos. 1) Tsafendas's godfather. 2) Tsafendas's nephew, son of George Michaletos (son of the above John Michaletos) and Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt. 3) Nephew of Tsafendas's godfather and cousin of the above and below Michaletos. Professor of Literature, Tsafendas's childhood friend, they had grown up together in Lourenço Marques. Member of the Greek Communist Party and the DSE. 4) Nephew of Tsafendas's godfather and cousin of the above two named Michaletos. He had been at school with Tsafendas in Middelburg. A very good friend of Tsafendas and also a Communist. He was a doctor and had a private clinic in Athens.

¹⁹⁹⁶ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Commission of Enquiry would do everything possible to locate this Michaletos, including asking for PIDE's help, but it would seem that they were unsuccessful.¹⁹⁹⁷

One of the two put Tsafendas in touch with Greek Communists and he voluntarily joined the DSE. Thus, in the mountains around Athens and in Central Greece, Tsafendas received basic training in the art of guerrilla warfare. More details about Tsafendas's activities during the Civil War are not clear since he did not talk much about it. However, he said that he did not participate in any fighting while he was in the mountains with the Democratic Army as his unit was mostly on the run from the Government forces. He also said that he did not hesitate to join the DSE since he felt guilty about his conduct during the Second World War. When his commanding officer asked him to go to Athens to do some "jobs" and work as an informant there, Tsafendas was reluctant because he wanted "action." However, he acknowledged that he would be more useful in Athens since nobody knew him there.¹⁹⁹⁸ Tsafendas said that when he left the mountains, he buried his partisan clothes near a tree and made a mark there, so he could retrieve them when he was asked to return to the mountains. He never did return and never revealed anything else about his activities while in the mountains.¹⁹⁹⁹

Returning to Athens, Tsafendas used his World War Two service in the American Navy to help him secure a job with the American Reconstruction Mission. This was part of the US Marshall Plan to aid the recovery of war-torn Europe, specifically here to provide war material to the Greek army, and its British and American allies, for its war against the Communists. Tsafendas used his position as an interpreter and foreman to provide information on the war supplies to his comrades in the DSE. When his contract expired, he secured a job as an interpreter for Messrs. Steers-Grove, another American company. In April 1949, six months before the end of the Civil War when it was obvious that the Communists would lose, Tsafendas thought it would be safe now for him to leave Greece. He approached ¹⁹⁹⁷ Letter of the Director General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Director of PIDE requesting information regarding John Michaletos, 7 November 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

¹⁹⁹⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

¹⁹⁹⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

the Greek immigration authorities and managed to obtain a refugee passport through the Greek Red Cross.²⁰⁰⁰

The same month, on April 12, 1949, Tsafendas penned yet another appeal for permission to return to South Africa. The letter gave Tsafendas's home address as Box 80, Central Post Office, Athens, and was addressed to the Department of the Interior in South Africa, where it was date-stamped received on April 26. Tsafendas pointed out that he did war work in Johannesburg between 1940 and 1942, then "joined the Merchant Navy voluntarily and risked my life in submarine-infested seas all over the South & North Atlantic." He concluded, "I am here a man without a country, living in strange lands with people who have different ways of living, customs & languages." He signed the letter James²⁰⁰¹ Demetrios Tsafandakis.²⁰⁰² There was no known response, but almost certainly it was turned down, as were all his previous and subsequent applications. Tsafendas then approached a shipping company in Athens which allowed him to work his passage to France aboard the Greek cruise ship, Corinthia.²⁰⁰³ From France, he thought he could get to Portugal and from there back to Mozambique.

FRANCE AND PORTUGAL, 1949–1954

Arriving at Marseille, Tsafendas disembarked illegally but could find no work so travelled by train to Paris.²⁰⁰⁴ There, he presented himself to the immigration authorities and legalised his situation in France. He acquired a ninety-day visa for Spain, but stayed there for only three days, having decided to go on to Portugal.²⁰⁰⁵ In Paris, he visited the many historical sites associated with the French Revolution and bought two bonnets rouges, the soft, conical, red ²⁰⁰⁰ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas, NASA; Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, subject: Algemeen, NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁰⁰¹ James is an anglicised form of Dimitri often used by Greek people outside of their home country. Dimitri can also become Jimmy or Jim.

²⁰⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁰⁰³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁰⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁰⁵ PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafantakis, 13 November 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

caps worn by the revolutionaries. He posted one to his father and kept the other for himself.²⁰⁰⁶

On November 8, 1949, Tsafendas was arrested at the Portuguese border post of Barca d'Alva as he left the train from Spain. He was carrying a passport issued in Athens²⁰⁰⁷ but officials said he did not hold the necessary identification to enter Portugal and there were doubts that he was Portuguese.²⁰⁰⁸ The police in Lourenço Marques informed the Portuguese that Tsafendas was indeed registered as Portuguese, adding that he was dismissed from his workplace for “voicing Communist ideas,” although nothing was proven.²⁰⁰⁹ Tsafendas was detained at Barca d'Alva for three months, then moved to Aljuba Prison in Lisbon,²⁰¹⁰ a notorious detention facility for political prisoners, which he described as “very bad.” He was held in a small cell for six months and said that at one point he thought that they would put him up against a wall and shoot him.²⁰¹¹

While Tsafendas was held in Aljuba Prison, the Portuguese authorities discovered that he had not served the compulsory military service in the Portuguese Army. Subsequently, he was taken to the Machine-gun Regiment 1 in Lisbon,²⁰¹² where he was brought before the Military Board of Inspection. Tsafendas claimed he had been rejected by a recruiting board in Mozambique because his mother was a Coloured woman. Investigators replied that there was no racial discrimination in Portuguese East Africa, that everyone must serve and therefore he must complete his service.²⁰¹³

When the Portuguese authorities contacted the colonial administration in Lourenço Marques about Tsafendas, they were told that he was not a deserter and had attended his military call-up interview but had been rejected because his mother was Coloured.²⁰¹⁴

²⁰⁰⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²⁰⁰⁷ PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁰⁸ PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafantakis, 13 November 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁰⁹ PIDE Confidential Report about Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰¹⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

²⁰¹¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3. 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

²⁰¹² Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 4 November 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰¹³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰¹⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

However, the law had changed four years earlier and every male Portuguese citizen was required to serve in the army. Thus, even if he was not a deserter, he was told that he must complete his military service.²⁰¹⁵ Tsafendas “did not want to serve a dictatorship”²⁰¹⁶ and with no avenue of escape, he pretended to be mad. Psychiatrists examined him and concluded that he was indeed insane, and so he received official exemption from military service.²⁰¹⁷ He was required to pay military taxes for his exemption in the sum of 1,200 Portuguese escudos and his situation in Portugal was legalized.²⁰¹⁸

After his release, Tsafendas requested and received from the Director of the International Police a card which declared him to be a maritime salesman, but again he faced difficult times.²⁰¹⁹ He said that he “could not find work but managed to survive through selling goods as a hawker.” He sold embroidery, postcards and watches, mainly to holidaymakers on cruise ships.²⁰²⁰ This would become one of Tsafendas’s favourite jobs and he would often resort to it when he did not have a steady job. In many ways, it was the perfect job for him, combining business and learning with pleasure, as he said. He was his own boss and could work wherever he wanted, for as long as he wanted; he travelled around Europe, seeing new places and meeting people, something he had always wanted to do, expanding his education and broadening his mind, as said. Had the work been more profitable and less arduous, he would have done it permanently, he said.²⁰²¹ Tsafendas was a hawker for most of the time while he was in Portugal, but then again in South Africa.

²⁰¹⁵ Letter of Tsafendas to the Ministrao du Ultramar, 27 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

²⁰¹⁶ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3. ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’

²⁰¹⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁰¹⁸ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰¹⁹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰²⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰²¹ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014

In October 1951, Tsafendas travelled on the ship Save to Lourenço Marques.²⁰²² When he was refused admittance by an order of the General Administration²⁰²³ because of his record as a Communist and the suspicion he was involved in subversive activities,²⁰²⁴ he dramatically doubled over, apparently stricken by acute appendicitis. He was rushed to a hospital in the city where he made a miraculous recovery and within an hour slipped out to freedom.²⁰²⁵ Tsafendas's half-sister, Katerina, said the appendicitis trick embarrassed the whole family. She told the author:

“All the Greeks in Lourenço Marques heard about it, even people in Pretoria mentioned it to our father. Even years after, people were still talking about how he pulled this dreadful act ... Anthony Maw was a very good friend of our family, especially my father, and we often socialised together. When Mr. Maw told my father about it, he [her father] almost died of shame.”²⁰²⁶

Tsafendas's first port of call was the home of his boyhood friend, Giorgos Grispos. Grispos gave his old friend food and volunteered to hide him, but Tsafendas wanted a Greek passport to get him to South Africa, so he headed for the office of the honorary Greek consul.²⁰²⁷ This was the Englishman, Anthony Maw, his father's old friend and neighbour. Maw greeted Tsafendas coldly since he was well aware of his reputation as a political trouble-maker and refused to issue any kind of travel document.²⁰²⁸ A few days later, the Portuguese police tracked down the fugitive Tsafendas and detained him for two weeks in the civil jail in Lourenço Marques.²⁰²⁹ Artemis Michaletos, Tsafendas's aunt, accompanied by ²⁰²² PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰²³ Portuguese Security Police's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafendas dated 21 February 1962, translated by the South African Department of Defence and sent to the COE on October 12, 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, Department of Defence. NASA.

²⁰²⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰²⁵ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; All of the above witnesses, apart from Father Minas, were living at the time in Mozambique and heard about it. Father Minas was told about it by Tsafendas himself in the mid-1990s. Henk van Woerden in the Mouthful of Glass also describes the same scene (2000: 70), presumably because he was told about it by Tsafendas.

²⁰²⁶ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²⁰²⁷ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²⁰²⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰²⁹ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

her son John Michaletos, visited Tsafendas in prison and took him food that she had cooked.²⁰³⁰ On December 15, 1951, Deputy Police Chief António Fernandes Roquete, with Mário Figueira, agent and clerk, interrogated their prisoner, who gave his name as Demitri Tsafendas and not Tsafandakis.²⁰³¹ Tsafendas described his life up to that time and was soon released without any charges,²⁰³² but was informed that he was banned from entering Mozambique.²⁰³³ On December 26, 1951, he was put on the ship *Angola*²⁰³⁴ to Lisbon.²⁰³⁵ Because of his political ideas and activities, he would spend the next twelve years in exile, unable to return to the country where he was born.

Tsafendas arrived back in Lisbon in January 1952. The Portuguese authorities demanded that he pay for the trip since in Lourenço Marques he had claimed he could not afford the ticket. Tsafendas refused, arguing that he had not been allowed to disembark in Lourenço Marques and he should not have to pay for a trip that he was forced to make.²⁰³⁶ The authorities then asked PIDE in Mozambique to provide them with Tsafendas's file. Security reports from Mozambique told the Portuguese that Tsafendas was a "half-caste" and a "Communist" who was under suspicion of "unclear activities" during his time in Mozambique.²⁰³⁷ The police wanted to know more about these "unclear activities" and whether he was still a Communist and he was interrogated about these matters. Apparently unconvinced by his answers, the police decided to detain him for further interrogation. He was transported to the Cascais (Caxias) Fort, a notorious detention facility for political prisoners, controlled by PIDE. He remained behind bars there there for about a year.²⁰³⁸

In 1962, Neville Vincent, a prominent London barrister, member of the Labour Party and chairman of the Prisoner of Conscience Fund, was sent by Amnesty International to investigate the conditions of political prisoners in Portugal. Two of the institutions he ²⁰³⁰ John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁰³¹ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³² Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³³ Confidential Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, no: 2.077- S.R., 3 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁴ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁵ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁶ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰³⁷ Diário Popular, 9 September 1966, 'E conhesido em Lisboa o assassino do Dr. Verwoerd.'

²⁰³⁸ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

inspected were Aljuba, where Tsafendas was detained in 1949, and the Caxias Fort where he was held in 1952. Vincent wrote:

“Torture of political prisoners is common; men are brutally beaten; prisoners are kept in dungeons in practically permanent darkness in solitary confinement for long periods; people practically out of their minds are put in a room with yellow walls, painted blue round the top. They think the blue represents the outside world and take crazy running jumps at the walls with dreadful consequences. I learned of a case of a woman badly beaten, and then burnt all over with cigarette ends, however, the most common torture is the statue. Prisoners are made to stand against a wall or post continuously for as long as seven days and seven nights; after two or three days their legs begin to swell, but if they fall down a guard is there continuously to kick them until they stand up again. Throughout this period the PIDE come and question the prisoner to obtain such information as they require. The cells are either grossly overcrowded, or, if you are in solitary confinement, the cell measures one metre by two metres; many of these are extremely damp, and the prisoners consistently complain about the cold in the winter.”²⁰³⁹

Both Aljuba and the Caxias prison were controlled by the secret police. Whereas up to 1945, the disposition of political prisoners was decided by military courts, from 1945 to 1949 regular courts assumed this responsibility, but as Vincent wrote, “this proved highly unsatisfactory to the government.” A decree of June 13, 1949, specifically provided that it was the duty of the PIDE to apply or extend “security measures,” namely internment, to suspect persons “as long as they show themselves dangerous.” The decree effectively authorised the police to keep men and women in prison indefinitely.²⁰⁴⁰

Tsafendas did not escape the torture meted out to his fellow prisoners. He told several witnesses, and later the police in South Africa, that the police gave him electric shocks in an attempt to find out about his activities in Mozambique, but also to change his political beliefs.²⁰⁴¹ At one point, he said, he could not take the pain and so played the madman again. He claimed a tapeworm lived inside him, ate his food and controlled his life. According to ²⁰³⁹ Vincent (The Spectator), 12 April 1962: 11, ‘The shame of Portugal.’ Available at <http://archive.spectator.co.uk/article/13th-april-1962/11/the-shame-of-portugal>

²⁰⁴⁰ Vincent (The Spectator), 12 April 1962: 11, ‘The shame of Portugal.’ Available at <http://archive.spectator.co.uk/article/13th-april-1962/11/the-shame-of-portugal>

²⁰⁴¹ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.’; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Tsafendas, the police then stopped torturing him.²⁰⁴² He was then taken to the Instituto de Medicina Tropical and then to the Hospital do Ultramar for psychiatric examination. A PIDE report said that “During his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar.”²⁰⁴³

The Hospital do Ultramar’s report described Tsafendas as a victim of “intestinal parasitosis (and) manic-depressive psychosis.”²⁰⁴⁴ Adjudged not to be dangerous, he was released from the hospital. Friends of Tsafendas said he was proud of how he fooled his Portuguese torturers and secured his release from one of the most feared prisons in Portugal.²⁰⁴⁵ On April 23, 1953, he moved to the Albergue da Mitra (Hostel Mitra), a hostel for the aged and destitute in Lisbon,²⁰⁴⁶ and remained there until August of the same year.²⁰⁴⁷ Harassed constantly by PIDE, which subjected him to house searches and identification inquiries,²⁰⁴⁸ Tsafendas decided to move elsewhere. On November 26, 1953, a Portuguese passport (nº. 12326/53, Series BO-0332) was issued to him and on January 8, 1954, Tsafendas left Portugal.²⁰⁴⁹

DENMARK, SWEDEN AND WEST GERMANY, 1954–1955

Tsafendas’s first exposure to Western Europe came in Denmark and Sweden, where he worked as a carpenter,²⁰⁵⁰ but not for long. He liked both countries and the people, but found it difficult to cope with the severe cold. At some point in 1954, he travelled to West Germany, but without the necessary paper work and unable to speak good German, it was ²⁰⁴² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁰⁴³ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 12 December 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁴⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 24. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁰⁴⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁰⁴⁶ http://www.cmjornal.xl.pt/nacional/sociedade/detalhe/albergue_da_mitra_cedido_a_santa_casa.html

²⁰⁴⁷ PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas. 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁴⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁰⁴⁹ Letter of the Director-General of the Economic and Consular Affairs of the Portuguese Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Director of PIDE regarding Tsafendas, proc. 518/15/55. 5 April 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁵⁰ Ochsensall Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150. Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

impossible to get a job. Unemployed, homeless and penniless, he presented himself to the Tropen Krankenhaus hospital in Hamburg, claiming to suffer from tapeworm trouble. He said a tapeworm had been bothering him since 1937. Nothing was found and he was discharged.²⁰⁵¹

Turning to the Greek Orthodox Church of St. Nicholas in Hamburg, Tsafendas made friends with some of the Greek parishioners, as well as with the priest, Father Damaskinos Doxiartis, who gave him some church jobs to earn a little money. At the same time, Tsafendas made contact with the local Communists and began an affair with a young party member, a university student. After a while, he moved in with her, but despite all his efforts, he failed to obtain a work permit. Embarrassed to live as he was, effectively supported by the German girl, he broke off the relationship and moved out. One advantage, however, was that during the time he spent with her, he improved his German quite a lot.²⁰⁵²

Once again homeless and penniless, he turned up at the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg on February 11, 1955, claiming he had taken twenty sleeping tablets in an attempt to commit suicide. When the doctors pumped his stomach without result and knowing that sooner or later he would be told to leave, Tsafendas started talking about a tapeworm. According to the hospital report, he also showed symptoms of depression, appeared soporific and blamed the tapeworm for all his ills.²⁰⁵³

Tsafendas had not told anyone about his hospitalization, so Father Damaskinos was surprised to see him as a patient when he visited church members who were patients in the hospital. The priest told Tsafendas's friends and they started dropping in on him. They included his German ex-girlfriend who resumed the relationship with him.²⁰⁵⁴ Among them were Swiss, Greek and American preachers from the same Christian sect he belonged. One of the sect's leaders, Ralph Daniels, an American, travelled from Karlsruhe to see him. However, a member of his sect warned the doctors that he did not trust Tsafendas as he had admitted to him that he had deserted during the Second World War.²⁰⁵⁵

²⁰⁵¹ Dr. Bieser's medical report on Tsafendas, Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital, 6 April 1955. K150. Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/8. NASA.

²⁰⁵² Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁵³ Dr Bieser and Dr Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰⁵⁴ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁵⁵ Ochsensall Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA.

Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis, who later replaced Father Damaskinos at Saint Nicholas's church, met Tsafendas when he visited the hospital with Father Damaskinos. He recalled to the author:

“I don't remember much and I did not know him very well. I only saw him four-five times ... he went to the church quite often ... he seemed perfectly fine... I can't remember what he told us about why he was hospitalised, but he definitely never told me or Father Damaskinos anything about this tapeworm, not even when we were in the hospital, I would have remembered such thing ... he came to the church to see us when he was released from the hospital and seemed fine ... he never said or did anything to make me or Father Damaskinos believe that he was insane or even a little unbalanced. His German was very good. I remember Father Damaskinos telling me that this man learned the language within a few months of his arrival in Germany and there were Greeks who had been living there for many years and their German was not as good as his ... he never discussed politics with me.”²⁰⁵⁶

Asked by the author if he or Father Damaskinos got the impression that Tsafendas might be faking his illness, Father Efthimios said, “He did not give me that impression ... I am not sure about Father Damaskinos, but I think he also did not get such an impression. I certainly did not get the impression that he was faking it, why would he do such thing? But I also certainly did not get the impression that he was mentally ill. Definitely not, he was perfectly normal.”²⁰⁵⁷

With the resumption of his relationship with the German girl, Tsafendas had no reason to remain in the hospital and on June 6, 1955, he was discharged. A report by Dr. Bieser and Dr Schmidt-Janssen said their patient gradually improved with care, suffered a setback at one point requiring further treatment, but eventually “was quieter, had no complaints and no more paranoid ideas.” The diagnosis of Dr. Bieser, a senior physician, was “mixed-pictured phasic psychose”²⁰⁵⁸ and that of Dr. Nachtwey, a psychiatrist, was “endogenous depression, mixed-picture.”²⁰⁵⁹ The report said Tsafendas was picked up by a ²⁰⁵⁶ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁵⁷ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁵⁸ Dr Bieser and Dr Schmidt-Janssen report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰⁵⁹ Medical Buletin of Dimitrio Tsafendas, 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

female friend who was going to accommodate him.²⁰⁶⁰ The female friend was his German girlfriend.²⁰⁶¹ Tsafendas spent the next few months staying with friends in the city²⁰⁶² during which time he associated with Turkish immigrant workers and began picking up a few words of Turkish. By then, his German had so improved so much that he was able to hold a fluent conversation in the language.²⁰⁶³

PORTUGAL, 1955-1958

Sometime in the summer of 1955 Tsafendas made an application to the Portuguese consulate in Hamburg for his “urgent repatriation.” It was accepted and he returned to Portugal on June 11, 1955 on board the Portuguese ship, India. There he resumed his life as an itinerant hawker.²⁰⁶⁴ He associated openly with leftists, Communists and other opponents of Salazar’s dictatorship,²⁰⁶⁵ and thus became a PIDE target once more, constantly watched,²⁰⁶⁶ and subjected to house searches and ID inquiries.²⁰⁶⁷ Jorge Perestrelo, who met Tsafendas in Lisbon, found him to be “a queer chap, and most reserved, although apparently harmless. Nevertheless, one could see how anxious he was to oppose the authorities.”²⁰⁶⁸ It was at this time that Tsafendas began a relationship with a Portuguese woman which, for a time, became serious, since at one point, she moved into with him in his apartment.²⁰⁶⁹

Since being expelled from Mozambique in 1951, Tsafendas had made several requests to the Portuguese Government to be allowed to return, but he was always turned down.²⁰⁷⁰

²⁰⁶⁰ Ochsensall Hospital report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas. 6 June 1955. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1, Sub-file: 1/8. NASA

²⁰⁶¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁶² Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁶³ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁶⁴ PIDE report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas or Dimitrie Tsafandakis. 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub-file: 1/6. Department of Justice. NASA.

²⁰⁶⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁰⁶⁶ Numerous PIDE reports throughout the years regarding Tsafendas’s movements and activities. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁶⁷ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²⁰⁶⁸ Cuttings from the Diario Popular of 9.9.66. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁶⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁰⁷⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

On April 18, 1956, he wrote to the Minister of the Interior²⁰⁷¹ and on April 7, 1958, he sent a letter to the President of the Portuguese Republic as follows: “I am writing to inform you that I have been exiled in Portugal since 1951. I do not know why I am here, since there are no charges against me, and I have not been judged. I wish that, according to the law of amnesty, to go back to my homeland, or to be judged before a court so I am at least aware of the motives of my situation, and of who wishes me harm.”²⁰⁷²

After PIDE supplied information regarding Tsafendas’s “political and professional activities,”²⁰⁷³ both requests were turned down. The PIDE reports contained information about Tsafendas’s life, travels, arrests, and the fact that he was dismissed from a job “for voicing Communist ideas,”²⁰⁷⁴ while both concluded with the same sentence: “During his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Overseas Hospital.”²⁰⁷⁵

In 1957 and 1958, Tsafendas “applied for, and was granted, permission to go on board ships lying in the Tagus to ply his trade of itinerant vendor of regional articles and embroideries.”²⁰⁷⁶ Later in 1958, he travelled to Belgium for the Brussels World Fair (Expo 58) where he exhibited stocks of embroidery.²⁰⁷⁷ He later spoke of his shock and disgust at the exhibition of a Congolese village, a “Human Zoo,” at the Fair, considering it the most appalling thing he had witnessed in so-called “civilised” Europe. He complained about it to ²⁰⁷¹ Letter of Demetri Tsafendas to the Interior Minister. 18 April 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷² Letter of Demetri Tsafendas to the President of the Portuguese Republic. (n.d. but according to the reply it was on March 1958) PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷³ Letter of the Directorate-General of the Political and Civil Administration of the Overseas Ministry to the Director of the International and State Defence Police. 7 April 1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷⁴ PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas. 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷⁵ PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Minister of Interior. 7 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Director General of the Civil and Political Administration Overseas Ministry. 18 April 1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁷⁶ PIDE report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas or Dimitrie Tsafandakis. 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub-file 1/6. Department of Justice. NASA.

²⁰⁷⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

various officials, but nothing happened.²⁰⁷⁸ Tsafendas's venture in Brussels was not the financial success he had hoped and he moved on.²⁰⁷⁹

WEST GERMANY, 1958-1959

In September 1958, Tsafendas arrived back in West Germany and registered at the Frankfurt Aliens Office.²⁰⁸⁰ With some of the money he had made at the Fair, he bought an elderly American automobile from an American soldier stationed in Germany. The soldier was going back to the United States and wanted a quick sale, so he let it go quite cheaply.²⁰⁸¹

On September 18, Tsafendas started work as a welder at the heavy engineering company of Fries and Son in a Frankfurt suburb. Horst Hartmann, Senior Personnel Officer at the company, said:

“He drove up here in a big battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous ... a very pleasant man. He looked like a satisfied, successful businessman, and his looks certainly didn't fit the job he wanted. But he spoke good German, so I took him on.”²⁰⁸²

Six weeks later Tsafendas left Fries and Son voluntarily, with a very good reference in his briefcase. Horst Hartmann said, “we liked him ... always laughing, a good worker. He left of his own accord ... we would have liked to keep him.”²⁰⁸³ Although he stayed with the company for only six weeks, Tsafendas made a lasting impression. Eight years later, Guenter Haafe, fifty-seven, the factory gatekeeper, remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. He said: “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker room to say hi. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman I have seen thousands and ²⁰⁷⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²⁰⁷⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁸⁰ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966 (late edition): 2. ‘Did he live in W. Germany?’

²⁰⁸¹ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁸² O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression.’

²⁰⁸³ Daily Express, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘The assassin’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly.’

thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.” Three other workmates said, “He was a nice guy,” “He was a good comrade” and “He left me with a good impression”²⁰⁸⁴

Tsafendas spent another year in West Germany, including six months working for Anglo-American Fashions and Designers in Frankfurt, and the rest at a US Army printing works in Hochst, a district of Frankfurt.²⁰⁸⁵ At some point during his time in Germany, though the author cannot state precisely when, Tsafendas visited the birthplace of Karl Marx in Trier.²⁰⁸⁶ Sometime in 1958, Tsafendas returned to Hamburg to see his friends there, including the Communist girl and the priests from Saint Nicholas's church. He was driving the automobile he had bought from the departing American soldier in Frankfurt and Father Efthimios was impressed. “It was one of these big American cars you see in the movies,” he said, “very long and it seemed to be quite old, too.”²⁰⁸⁷

Tsafendas wanted to sell it because he was going to England and did not want to take it with him. Some Greeks expressed interest but they offered very little because of the machine's condition and age. Eventually, he gifted the car to his girlfriend as thanks for her kindness when he had nothing. According to Father Efthimios, throughout the time that he knew him, Tsafendas “seemed very well, nothing to indicate that he might be unbalanced. He was certainly perfectly fine.”²⁰⁸⁸

ENGLAND, 1959²⁰⁸⁹

After five years in continental Europe, Tsafendas arrived in Dover, England from France, on May 16, 1959.²⁰⁹⁰ As a Portuguese passport-holder, however, work was hard to come by and ²⁰⁸⁴ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte’; Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly.’

²⁰⁸⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁸⁶ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁸⁷ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁸⁸ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

²⁰⁸⁹ Tsafendas visited England and specifically London at least twice, in 1959 and 1962. Those who met him in London are unsure about the exact dates. One told the Guardian in 1966 that they met “a few years ago,” while another testified to the South African police that it was about 1960.” Events taken from these people's statements are included here at the time that seems most likely. However, it is possible that the events described took place at Tsafendas's other London visit.

²⁰⁹⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

the best he could get were casual jobs.²⁰⁹¹ He asked the authorities if he could take a language test and work as a hotel porter but this was refused, as was his application to remain in the country as a student; he was ordered to leave the UK by September 2, 1959.²⁰⁹² However, he ignored the order and remained in the UK “working clandestinely because legally he was not authorised.”²⁰⁹³

While in London, Tsafendas again applied for permission to enter South Africa, sending a letter and an application form dated August 4, 1959 to the Union's immigration attaché in London. A note attached to his file at the embassy stated that Tsafendas had sought permanent residence status in South Africa several times without success, that in 1941 he entered illegally and was fined; it said he had Communist leanings and had threatened to enter without permission if he was denied again. The diplomat dealing with the application wrote, “Refusal is suggested”. On September 11, 1959, “Demetrio Tsafandakis, alias Demetrio Tsafendas,” was blacklisted by the South African Department of the Interior, meaning that he could receive no passport or admission facilities without the consent of the Department's head office.²⁰⁹⁴

Tsafendas frequently visited the headquarters of the Anti-Slavery Society, and sometimes spoke there about the living conditions for non-White South Africans and Mozambicans in their respective countries. He became very active for the society, participating in meetings and demonstrations. He also became friendly with Commander Thomas Fox-Pitt, the secretary of the Society and one of the leading figures in the modern anti-slavery movement. When Tsafendas's money ran out and he was left homeless, Fox-Pitt arranged for him to stay at a hostel in Victoria in central London and gifted him with a grey flannel suit, which Tsafendas kept up to the assassination. Fox-Pitt characterised Tsafendas as “very simple-minded and not at all sinister.”²⁰⁹⁵ Tsafendas remembered Fox-Pitt as one of the finest men he ever met.²⁰⁹⁶

²⁰⁹¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁰⁹² Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²⁰⁹³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁰⁹⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraphs 28-30. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁰⁹⁵ The Guardian, 30 September 1966: 10, ‘Winding back’; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁰⁹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

From contacts in the Anti-Slavery Society, Tsafendas got in touch with the British anti-apartheid movement, then in its infancy. He became an enthusiastic participant in public demonstrations and attended many lectures and speeches. He also got to know anti-apartheid activist David Gardener and the ANC representative in London, Tennyson Xola Makiwane, with whom he associated throughout his time in London, helping them with tasks, such as distributing leaflets and putting up posters.²⁰⁹⁷ He also met leading anti-apartheid activists such as Solly Sachs and the Church of England activist clergyman, the Rev. Canon Collins.²⁰⁹⁸

During his time in London, Tsafendas placed flowers on the grave of Karl Marx in Highgate Cemetery²⁰⁹⁹ and “was noticed in the company of leftists.”²¹⁰⁰ He also attended political meetings in Hyde Park, Labour Party meetings at London’s Caxton Hall and many others organised by the Committee of African Organisations.²¹⁰¹ Evidence was later submitted to the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination that while in London Tsafendas tried to “recruit people to take part in an uprising in South Africa.” Tsafendas admitted to the Commission that he endeavoured to recruit people for an uprising, but his aim was “confined to the Territory of Mozambique.”²¹⁰²

Unable to find work and too embarrassed to continue staying at the hostel at Fox-Pitt’s expense, Tsafendas moved out. In order to thank his benefactor for his kindness and generosity, he gave him one of the three copies of Paul Robeson’s Song of Free Men he had brought from the United States as a present.²¹⁰³ Subsequently, seeing no future for himself in Britain, he made another application for entry to South Africa. On September 11, 1959, after his application was turned down, he was placed on the Stop List of the South African Department of the Interior.²¹⁰⁴ High and dry in London, without money for bed and board and ²⁰⁹⁷ Edward Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Furness in his statement to the police on October 12, 1966, mentioned Makiwane as one of the people seen in London meetings of the anti-apartheid movement which were attended by Tsafendas. Tsafendas himself spoke to Father Minas Constandinou about a member of the ANC he met and associated in London who was later assassinated. Father Minas does not remember his name, but Makiwane was assassinated in 1980.

²⁰⁹⁸ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁰⁹⁹ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²¹⁰⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 31. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²¹⁰¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 32. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²¹⁰³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁰⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 30. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

with the police looking for him since he was now illegal, Tsafendas decided to take refuge in a hospital, until friends could help him get a job, so he could raise the fare to leave the country.²¹⁰⁵

On September 12, 1959 he “admitted himself to the mental ward of St. Pancras Hospital in London, telling doctors “that he had a fixation about a tapeworm.”²¹⁰⁶ He did not enjoy his stay at the hospital as the rules were quite strict and he was restricted to his ward. While there, he learned about the Isle of Wight, a “beautiful small island,” off the south coast of England, with an “impressive psychiatric hospital which was like an ancient castle.” He had never heard of this island, but he still decided to visit it because he “liked castles since he was a child.”²¹⁰⁷ Tsafendas accordingly cut short his stay at the St. Pancras Hospital after a few days. According to Tsafendas, he was treated for “depressive psychosis.”²¹⁰⁸

On October 4, although penniless, Tsafendas managed to make his way to the Isle of Wight, and after a look around, admitted himself at the Whitecroft Mental Hospital, near Newport, claiming mental problems.²¹⁰⁹ According to Tsafendas, the hospital staff was initially suspicious, considering it strange that a foreigner should just turn up at the psychiatric hospital of this small island. Most of the patients had been transferred there upon a doctor’s recommendation - nobody had ever turned up on the doorstep. Tsafendas said this was his trickiest problem. He could not claim that he was just passing, since it was a small island, and suddenly fell ill. Instead, he said he was a tourist and gradually managed to convince the doctors that his case was genuine. Unlike the St. Pancras Hospital, this was one very relaxed and he was allowed to walk out in the hospital’s garden. Tsafendas described his stay there as like “living in a very good hotel.”²¹¹⁰

On December 3, 1959, British police officers arrived at the hospital and arrested Tsafendas for being an illegal immigrant. The doctors issued a medical certificate which ²¹⁰⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁰⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁰⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁰⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 33. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²¹⁰⁹ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²¹¹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

described his mental condition as good enough for him to travel to any country.²¹¹¹ Tsafendas said he was expecting this to happen because he could tell that the doctors were not convinced by his story and he expected them to contact the authorities. However, he had no money and it was impossible to take the ferry back to the English mainland.²¹¹² A deportation hearing was held the same day, which lasted only a few hours. The authorities wanted to deport him to Portugal, but he told them he wished to be sent to West Germany as this is where he had come from. Later that day, he was deported to West Germany.²¹¹³

WEST GERMANY AND MIDDLE EAST, 1959–1961

Tsafendas arrived in Frankfurt, where he managed to get a work permit. Subsequently, he worked for six months in a tractor factory in Munich, but his intention was always to return to South Africa.²¹¹⁴ Tsafendas was in Germany when he read about the massacre at Sharpeville, South Africa, where apartheid police shot dead, most of them in the back, sixty-nine peaceful, non-White protestors on March 21, 1960. Tsafendas later declared that this was a pivotal moment in his life and what convinced him to “do something” against Dr. Verwoerd and apartheid.²¹¹⁵ He applied for South African citizenship to return to the country but it was refused.²¹¹⁶

Since it was impossible for him to get back to South Africa legally, he decided to take an illegal route, travelling down through Africa. A temporary Portuguese passport was issued to him on May 25, 1960 and on June 30, he left Munich by train, travelling through Austria and Yugoslavia to Piraeus, Greece, then by ferry to Alexandria, Egypt. While there, his passport expired, and the Portuguese Consulate refused to renew it. However, he managed to obtain a refugee passport from the Red Cross and travelled to Beirut, Lebanon, by ferry. He ²¹¹¹ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

²¹¹² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹¹³ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA; Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph 33. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²¹¹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹¹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²¹¹⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, London to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

stayed there for a few days with some people from the Christian Church.²¹¹⁷ At some point, he crossed the River Jordan and travelled to Jerusalem, where he presented himself on January 20, 1961 at the Consulate-General of Spain, requesting a visa for Israel, as a refugee. The consul-general could not determine if Tsafendas was in fact a political refugee, and did not assist him.²¹¹⁸

Tsafendas also contacted the Portuguese Consulate-General asking for a new passport, but was refused after the consul-general received the following communication from the Portuguese Ministry of Foreign Affairs:

“Referring to your request Proc. 518/15/55-CO334- of the 5th of this month, I am honoured to inform that Demitrio Tsafendas was suspected, when he was in Mozambique, of voicing Communist ideas, but nothing concrete was proven. In 1951, he came to the Metropolis because he was not allowed to continue to reside in that Province. Once here, he became a marine salesman, and went on several trips with his Greek passport (he is the son of a Greek and of a half-caste Portuguese), having been imprisoned a few times in Canada and in the USA, for clandestine immigration. He seems to have some sort of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Overseas Hospital. According to what has been stated, he cannot be considered as a political refugee, since we know nothing of his recent activities that would classify him as such, and hence keeping him is not important.”²¹¹⁹

Tsafendas was accommodated in Jerusalem by the Lutheran Church while he looked for a job to get enough money together to leave the country.²¹²⁰ He said, “I was living on my wits for about four months.” Nevertheless, he managed to visit the Jordan and sites in the Holy Land.²¹²¹ With his trans-Africa plan blocked due to his inability to get an acceptable passport, and being without money, Tsafendas decided to return to Portugal. Travelling through Lebanon and Syria by bus, he crossed the Taurus mountain range and reached ²¹¹⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹¹⁸ Report of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 334. 6 April 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹¹⁹ Confidential Report of the Director-General of the Economic and Consular Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 2.077-S.R. 3 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹²⁰ Report of the Ministerio Dos Negocios Estrangeiros, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 334. 6 April 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹²¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Ankara in May 1961, where he stayed for a month, learning the rudiments of the Turkish tongue.²¹²² While there, he managed to get a Greek passport from the Greek Embassy.²¹²³

ISTANBUL, 1961

It must have been around June of 1961 when Tsafendas reached Istanbul.²¹²⁴ Virtually penniless, he sold his blood at a hospital. He was “paid about one pound for a pint of blood,”²¹²⁵ roughly equivalent to a Turkish labourer’s weekly wage.²¹²⁶ Soon after he arrived, he visited the Greek Orthodox church of Panagia in the city’s Pera Taxi district and met some Greek believers. One of them was Father Nikola Banovic, who he started helping with some work at the church and the Greek Orthodox cemetery, because “he had nothing else to do.” The priest was very impressed with Tsafendas’s “knowledge of the Bible and other holy scriptures.”²¹²⁷

Father Nikola Banovic described Tsafendas to the author as “a very polite and well-mannered man, a gentleman...” He told the author:

“He had vast general knowledge and was very well read ... he had some books with him and he would often come back home with a new book. Most of them were in Greek, but some were in Turkish... the way he spoke was very distinctive ... he spoke good Greek, but he used the grammar in a very different and distinctive way, talking like a teacher or an author, using nice words ... he was one of the kindest people I ever met... he had a good heart ...you don’t often meet people like Dimitris, he was special, a man in a million. Honestly it was a privilege to have met him.”²¹²⁸

One day Tsafendas asked if he could rent a small empty room near the church. The room had no bed or other furniture and Father Nikola invited him to move into a small spare room in his own home, which was in a block of flats, just fifty metres from the church. At that time, Tsafendas started teaching English to local children, mostly Greeks but also to ²¹²² Confidential Report of the Ministerio Dos Negocios Estrangeiros regarding Dimtri Tsafendas, proc. 518/15/55. Co. 367. 20 October 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹²³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹²⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹²⁶ Van Woerden, 2000: 76.

²¹²⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹²⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

some Turkish children who lived in the neighbourhood. The children adored him; they found him funny and were fascinated by the stories of exotic Africa. The children's parents offered to pay for the tuition but Tsafendas refused to take their money. Several mothers then brought him food from their own kitchens. In two or three weeks, Tsafendas had some fifty students and spent three or four days per week teaching them. The main lesson took place in a room near the church, after the Sunday Mass.²¹²⁹

Tsafendas worked for several weeks part-time, whenever there were some Greek tourists, as a tour guide for them. Most of them were only interested in Greek religious places, like the Hagia Sophia and other churches, and it was easy for Tsafendas to show them around. It was Father Nikola who recommended him to the tourists when they visited his church. He also worked for about two-three weeks on the construction of a house, for which he was paid. Even though the job was very tiring, once he finished for the day, he would go to teach the children. Father Nikola said, "He believed education was the most important thing for someone and wanted to help the children learn. He loved children." Father Nikola's twelve-year-old daughter, Elena, adored Tsafendas and they spent hours together. He called her by the diminutive Elenitsa, helped with her studies, taught her English, African children's songs and held her spellbound with exotic stories about distant Africa.²¹³⁰

According to Father Nikola:

"[Tsafendas] never gave me the slightest indication that he might be mentally ill, absolutely none ... he was very intelligent and well-mannered, especially with the women and the elderly; always willing to help them. When I first met him, his Turkish was just good enough to communicate, but he improved extremely fast. In only two or three months in the country, he could not only communicate in Turkish, but teach English to Turkish students at the best college in Istanbul" [a reference to Tsafendas's time working at a prestigious college, the Limasollu Naci]. How someone could do that, I don't know! I know people who have been living here for five and six years and their Turkish is not as good as Dimitris's."

Tsafendas often visited the Grand Bazaar as he believed this was the best place to improve his Turkish; by talking to the merchants and people there.²¹³¹ He toured the city alone every day, visiting historical places, and he never got lost. When he told the priest ²¹²⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²¹³⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹³¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

where he had been, he was astonished how he managed to go to all these places. Tsafendas would also often go to the theatre and the cinema.²¹³²

Father Nikolas said:

“He [Tsafendas] never mentioned a tapeworm or any illness that he might have had ... he told me that he was arrested by the Portuguese because he was a Communist and anti-colonial. He said he was tortured by them and in order to make them stop, he ‘played the fool’ and it worked because they let him go ... he definitely told me he ‘played the fool’, but he never mentioned the tapeworm or this Saint Peter’s act you told me ... if I had known at the time that he had killed this man [Dr. Verwoerd], I would have gone to court to testify for him ... yes, I mean as a defence witness; I would have sworn that he was not insane; there is absolutely no way this man to have been insane. I lived with him in the same house for four months; there was never even the slightest indication that he might be even slightly unbalanced, never ... he was a good-hearted man with high principles.”²¹³³

According to Father Nikola, they spent many hours talking about Christianity, but even more about politics. The priest was unaware of the situation in South Africa and remembered Tsafendas using the word “Nazis” about the apartheid regime. He describes Tsafendas as fanatical about politics, a Communist and anti-imperialist, with revolutionary ideas. When Tsafendas admitted that he was a Communist, the priest urged him not to reveal this to anyone, since most Greeks would not be sympathetic, but also because Communism was then banned in Turkey. Tsafendas also had with him two records of Communist songs, one in Italian and one in Russian.²¹³⁴

While he was in Istanbul, Adolf Eichmann’s trial was taking place in Israel. Tsafendas was deeply interested in this event, buying newspapers and talking avidly about it. When the Nazi architect of the “Final Solution” was sentenced to death on December 15, 1961, Tsafendas expressed his delighted agreement. Father Nikola said he disagreed with the death penalty and Tsafendas explained that while he, too, opposed capital punishment generally, he believed that for people like Eichmann the death penalty should apply. He added that if he had money and knew the whereabouts of Nazi war criminals then still at large, he would try to locate them and would have no hesitation in killing them himself.²¹³⁵

²¹³² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹³³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹³⁴ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

The above was not the only disagreement between Father Nikola and Tsafendas. The priest found it very strange that he was a Communist and Christian at the same time. Tsafendas gave the same answer to everyone from 1961 to 1999. He said that “Jesus was the first socialist ever” and that “his teaching had a lot in common with Communism.” For Tsafendas, Jesus Christ was a revolutionary like “Che, Fidel, Lenin, Benjamin Franklin, Bolivar and Spartacus.” He believed that Jesus and his twelve apostles constituted the first socialist movement and he often said that “if Jesus was alive today, he would be a revolutionary”²¹³⁶ who would have been fighting apartheid and in revolutionary wars against colonialists and dictators.²¹³⁷

The priest was further surprised when one day Tsafendas introduced him to a Greek comrade, a fellow Democratic Army member who was with him in the Greek Civil War. This man was a dentist and travelled to Istanbul from Sofia, Bulgaria, just to see Tsafendas. He had escaped from Greece and settled in Bulgaria after the DSE was defeated during the war.²¹³⁸

While in Istanbul, Tsafendas became friendly with Father Agathagelos Vaporidis, the priest at Hagia Triada (Holy Trinity) church. Ms. Alexandra Vaporidis, wife of Father Agathagelos, met Tsafendas. “I didn’t know him very well. My husband and Father Nikola knew him well. To tell you the truth, I was a little scared of him because he was a Communist.”²¹³⁹ She remembers the first time she met him when her husband told her that a “Greek Communist from Africa is coming for dinner.” She told the author:

²¹³⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹³⁶ Father Camilo Torres Restrepo (1929-1966), a Colombian Roman Catholic priest, socialist, university professor and member of Colombia’s National Liberation Army, had said something similar, namely that “If Jesus were alive today, he would be a guerrillero.” The author is not in position to know whether Tsafendas was rephrasing Restrepo’s quote or if it was his own inspiration. More likely it was Tsafendas’s own creation since he had been using the phrase from at least 1961, before Father Restrepo became internationally known. Also, several renowned philosophers, like Robert Eisler and Karl Kautsky, have expressed their views that Jesus was a revolutionary and the first Communist. The author is not in position to know whether Tsafendas’s belief about Jesus being a revolutionary was his own or if it was inspired by the writings of such philosophers.

²¹³⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²¹³⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹³⁹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

“I was a little scared; I had never met a Communist before and I was a little worried. But he was a normal man ... no, I was not expecting a monster, but he was not what I have expected. You know these days we were hearing all those things about Communists; they were portrayed almost as monsters ... I don't remember what we discussed ... He seemed like a normal person. The times we spoke he never said anything that would make me think that he was insane ... my husband also never mentioned anything. If he was insane, he and Father Nikola would have noticed; they spent a lot of time together and I know they both thought highly of him ... He seemed like a very nice man; everyone liked him and we were all sad to see him go, especially the children. We were very grateful that he was teaching the children English for free. I don't remember if he came to our house again but I definitely saw him a few times in the church and the cemetery ... after he left, he sent us a post-card ... I can't remember where from, thanking us for our hospitality. When he killed the man, my husband and Father Nikola prayed for him; they were both devastated.”²¹⁴⁰

One of Tsafendas's favourite poets was Nazim Hikmet, a Turkish Communist, and Father Nikola remembers him searching every bookshop in Istanbul for his works in Turkish.²¹⁴¹ Hikmet remained a life-long favourite and Tsafendas often talked of him and his poetry to the priests who visited him in hospital and in prison. When Father Minas told him that his act cost him all these years in prison, Tsafendas quoted a verses from Hikmet's poem Like Karem (Kerem Gibi):²¹⁴²

*“If I don't burn,
if you don't burn,
if we don't burn,
how will the light vanquish the darkness?”*

A Greek woman whose son attended Tsafendas's classes was very friendly with a Turkish woman who taught English at Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private language school in Turkey. She thought of introducing Tsafendas to her, so she could perhaps get him a job at the college since he was so good and popular with the children.²¹⁴³ Tsafendas met the ²¹⁴⁰ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²¹⁴¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁴² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁴³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

Turkish woman²¹⁴⁴ when she visited one of his classes. She was impressed by him and his teaching, so she offered to introduce him to the owner of the language college, for whom it was named, Mr. Limasollu Naci.²¹⁴⁵

Limasollu Naci (1921-1992), who would become one of Tsafendas's best friends, was a Turkish Cypriot who moved from Cyprus to Turkey when he was four. He began his working life as a photographer and in 1940 became the first professional to use cine film in Istanbul. He held his first photo exhibition at the Faculty of Arts in 1947, opened his second in 1948 at the Community Centre in Beyoğlu, and later exhibited his work in Paris and London. He won first prize in an international photography contest in Turin, Italy in 1948.²¹⁴⁶ Limasollu is widely recognised as pre-eminent in the provision of private foreign languages institutes and distance learning in Turkey. He also pioneered the concept of introducing young Turks to foreign languages at summer camps, initially in the coastal regions of Turkey and later in Britain.²¹⁴⁷ He established his college in 1953; it was the first private language institute in Turkey and widely considered to be the best and certainly the most prestigious, with many students from wealthy and powerful families.²¹⁴⁸

Limasollu interviewed Tsafendas and offered him work at the college for a week on a trial basis, promising that if he was proficient and the students liked him, the position would be permanent. The pupils took to their new teacher immediately, mostly because of his fund of funny and exotic stories from Africa, so Tsafendas was hired permanently.²¹⁴⁹ Although he taught at the college full-time, he continued his free classes at the church and now that he had money, he would buy sweets for the children in his class.²¹⁵⁰

Tsafendas began going out with the Turkish woman and eventually, side-stepping her Islamic principles, they lived for some time together in her home. He was in love and very happy. However, after a few months, relations began to deteriorate. She wanted to marry him, ²¹⁴⁴ Father Nikola is the only person interviewed by the author who met this woman, but he does not remember her name. Tsafendas spoke about her to several people, including his sister Katerina, to Ira Kyriakakis and to the priests, but no one remembers her name. She is also mentioned at van Woerden's A Mouthful of Glass, but again her name is not given.

²¹⁴⁵ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²¹⁴⁶ En so Haber, 23 May 2012, 'Limasollu Naci kimdir.'

²¹⁴⁷ Akinturk, 2011: 2014

²¹⁴⁸ Durgun, 2013: 2; Advije Vedia Limasollu in a personal interview, 8 January 2016.

²¹⁴⁹ The fact that Tsafendas worked as teacher of English at the Limasollu Naci is mentioned in many official documents which I found at the archives such as: However, as we will see in the chapter about the Commission of Enquiry, the fact is briefly mentioned and is downgraded.

²¹⁵⁰ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

but Tsafendas did not want to live permanently in Istanbul, he wanted to get back to South Africa and Mozambique and fight their respective regimes. What's more, he was Christian and she was Muslim and neither was willing to convert to the other's religion.²¹⁵¹

Tsafendas developed a very good relationship with Limasollu. They would spend hours talking about politics, especially about Communism, since Limasollu was also a Communist. Limasollu told Father Nikola that Tsafendas was the best-read and most knowledgeable person he had ever met.²¹⁵² Tsafendas never forgot Limasollu or Father Nikola. He characterised Limasollu as "a great and very generous man, one of the best men" he ever met²¹⁵³ and Father Nikola as a "saint," an "unbelievably kind and wonderful man" and the best priest he ever met, "exactly as priests should be."²¹⁵⁴

Around December, 1961, after working for five or six months at the college, Tsafendas resigned. He told Limasollu and Father Nikola he intended to travel to Bulgaria and meet the dentist comrade's family, then go on to Athens and meet up with another comrade from the Civil War, John Michaletos, and spend Christmas there with his friend's family. His intention after that was to go back to Portugal, where he was hoping to convince the Portuguese to allow him to return to his beloved Mozambique. He said he was determined to do whatever it took to be given an amnesty. The college owner tried to change his mind and even asked for Father Nikola's help, but Tsafendas was resolute. Failing to change his mind, Limasollu gave Tsafendas extra money for his journey and handed him a glowing reference, which he would use later to get the job at the South African Parliament. Limasollu reiterated that Tsafendas was welcome back at the college any time.²¹⁵⁵

Before he left, Tsafendas bought gifts for every student, both at the college and the church. When he left, the English lessons stopped for the Greek children. Said Father Nikola, "He made a very positive contribution to the Greek community here and after he left, we all missed him, especially the children... for many years, they asked, 'When is Mr Dimitris coming back?' He had great affection for people, especially for poor people and children." Tsafendas maintained contact with both Father Nikola and Limasollu Naci until he died.²¹⁵⁶

²¹⁵¹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²¹⁵² Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁵³ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁵⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁵⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²¹⁵⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

Furthermore, Tsafendas asked Father Nikola and Father Agathagelos to look after a stray dog that was lurking around the Greek Orthodox cemetery and which he was feeding. He had named it Robespierre. When Tsafendas killed Dr. Verwoerd, Father Agathagelos and Father Nikola prayed constantly for him.²¹⁵⁷ Father Nikola was relieved to hear that Tsafendas was not executed; he had no doubt that he had “played the fool,” as he had done with the Portuguese, in order not to be hanged.²¹⁵⁸

After leaving Istanbul, Tsafendas sent presents to Father Nikola's daughter, Elena. What he did not know was that Elena had drowned while swimming in the sea in September 1962, just nine months after he last saw her. She was thirteen. Tsafendas only found out about her death about two years later when he was in Pretoria.²¹⁵⁹ He was devastated and cried for days and for the first time in his life he lost his appetite.²¹⁶⁰

GREECE, DECEMBER 1961 – JANUARY 1962

Sometime in December 1961, Tsafendas travelled by train to Sofia to meet his dentist comrade again.²¹⁶¹ It must have been this orthodontist who fitted Tsafendas with a bridge and capped his upper teeth with silver,²¹⁶² something that was to be remarked upon by many in the future.²¹⁶³ After his visit ended, instead of heading towards Athens, for reasons the author has not been able to establish, Tsafendas boarded a train back to Istanbul. There, he hitched a ride on a fish refrigeration truck to Athens, where he spent the Christmas of 1961, as planned, in the home of his boyhood friend and later DSE comrade, John Michaletos.²¹⁶⁴

²¹⁵⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2014.

²¹⁵⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁵⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁶⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²¹⁶¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁶² Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

²¹⁶³ According to the Commission of Enquiry, Tsafendas had his teeth made in Turkey or in Russia (Chapter II C, Paragraph 18). According to some press reports of the time (Umtali Post, 9 September 1966), he had them made in Russia. However, Tsafendas himself told Alexander Moumbaris, Ira Kyriakakis, Andreas Babiolakis, Helen Grispos, Mary Eendracht and several others that he had them made in Bulgaria. Father Nikola Banovic also stated that when he left for Bulgaria he did not have the teeth. All of this, plus the fact that Tsafendas's DSE comrade in Bulgaria was a dentist, suggests that he did indeed have them made in Bulgaria, very likely by his fellow fighter.

²¹⁶⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

At the beginning of January, 1962 he travelled from Piraeus by ferry to Crete to find his father's relatives. The visit initially did not go smoothly. He had problems locating relatives of his father and when he did trace them, he discovered they had never heard of him and had difficulty accepting him as part of the family.²¹⁶⁵ Not all, however. He was accepted into the home of an uncle, Giorgos Tsafantakis, and a few months later he sent from another country a note thanking the family for their hospitality.²¹⁶⁶

Another person who welcomed him was Costas Kargakis (nicknamed Psarocostas), with whom Tsafendas stayed for two-three weeks. Kargakis' granddaughter, Katerina, was married to Michalis Tsafantakis, a nephew of Dimitris, who at the time were living in Germany. Kargakis' son was killed during the Second World War and he had brought up Katerina himself. He was living alone when he welcomed Tsafendas as an uncle of his son in law. Kargakis had fought with the Greek resistance during the occupation of Crete by the Nazis and had participated in an extraordinary story which made a profound impression on Tsafendas. In April, 1944, in one of the most daring exploits of World War Two, a band of Greek partisans and two British officers kidnapped the German military governor of Crete, General Heinrich Kreipe, and evading Nazi soldiers, spirited him off the island to Egypt. Kargakis was among the team of partisans of Capitan Petrakoyeorgis, who transported Kreipe across the Cretan mountains to a rendezvous where the General and some of his kidnapers were picked up by a British submarine.²¹⁶⁷

All the surviving Cretans who were involved in the operation talked to Tsafendas and together they sang revolutionary songs of the Greek Resistance. They showed him the spot where the general was taken and explained how the coup took place. What's more, Tsafendas heard that George Tyrakis, one of the kidnapers, now lived in Johannesburg. Tsafendas said that as soon he heard the kidnap story he decided he would try to abduct Dr. Verwoerd and ²¹⁶⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁶⁶ Aris Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 13 April 2016.

²¹⁶⁷ Alexandros Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 15 February 2016; Maria and Michalis Tsafantakis in a personal interview, 16 February 2016.

exchange him for South African political prisoners.²¹⁶⁸ Kargakis also taught Tsafendas how to make bombs with fertilizer and other commodities you could buy in shops.²¹⁶⁹

Tsafendas's visit to Crete lasted about a month. Before he left, he visited members of the Christian Church in Iraklion and Rethimnon. He then returned by ferry to Piraeus, took a bus and then a ferry to Corfu and then a seagoing ferry to Brindisi in southern Italy.²¹⁷⁰ Tsafendas arrived in Brindisi, on January 31, 1962, and with very little money and nowhere to stay, he secured admission to the A. Di Summa Hospital by claiming that he was suffering from acute gastro-enteritis. He spent eight days at the hospital, during which time he wrote to the Portuguese Embassy seeking help to return to Portugal, arguing that he was a Portuguese citizen and entitled to assistance.²¹⁷¹

Upon hearing that the Embassy was going to help him, Tsafendas's became healthy again and left the hospital and travelled to Rome where on February 8, 1962, he called at the Portuguese Embassy. A consular statement dated February 10, said, "His weak health and the fact that he wasn't in possession of any resources made him request repatriation." The embassy gave him an allowance of 6,000 lire and a Rome-Lisbon train ticket costing 26,000 lire. The statement quoted Tsafendas as promising that once resettled he would start work to pay back the expenses of his repatriation.²¹⁷²

PORTUGAL AND ENGLAND, 1962

When Tsafendas arrived in Lisbon in February 1962, after his long train ride from Rome, he was penniless, having spent the allowance from the Portuguese Embassy during the journey. He admitted himself to the Albergue da Mitra (Hostel Mitra), the shelter for destitutes where ²¹⁶⁸ Tsafendas told Father Minas Constandinou, Bishop Ioannis Tsafarides and Nick Papadakis about his experience in Crete and his idea to kidnap Dr. Verwoerd. He spoke about a distant relative who was involved in the kidnapping and had smuggled the general along with the kidnappers through the mountain. Unfortunately, Tsafendas's relatives who met him in Crete have all died as far as the author was able to establish. However, Tsafendas's story is confirmed by the fact that Kargakis was indeed a distant relative and further Kargakis's granddaughter (Maria Tsafantakis) and her husband (Michalis Tsafantakis) confirmed in a personal interview with the author (16 February 2016) all the details which Tsafendas mentioned about him.

²¹⁶⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²¹⁷⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁷¹ Seccao Consular Report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 10 February 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹⁷² Seccao Consular Report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 10 February 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

he had stayed some ten years earlier.²¹⁷³ He left the hostel as soon as he found work - as a welder on a bridge over the river Tejo for 120 escudos per day – but he was dismissed for being lazy. Offered alternative employment at 60 escudos per day, he refused, saying he intended to work for himself, and returned to the hostel.²¹⁷⁴ During his time at the shelter, Tsafendas showed great affection for his companions and was always well-behaved. He often had a group of “guests” around him,²¹⁷⁵ especially during any political disturbances in Lisbon, and he offered his opinion on religious matters constantly and with great passion.²¹⁷⁶

On February 14, 1962, Tsafendas's father died in Pretoria,²¹⁷⁷ but he would only find out a few months later. Although Marika wrote immediately to give him the news, he had changed addresses and did not get her letter.²¹⁷⁸ South Africa and Mozambique were never far from Tsafendas's mind and he resumed his efforts to return there as soon as possible. He made several applications but without success.²¹⁷⁹ Determined this time to return to Mozambique, he visited a police station and requested a hearing about his situation and the fact that he was exiled without having been accused of anything. He tried to convince the authorities that he was not a Communist or anti-Portuguese any longer, indicating that he may be a little mad and in need of family care.²¹⁸⁰

The authorities referred him to the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare of Lisbon, where on April 6, 1962, he was examined by Dr. Pegado. It seems that the doctor was convinced not only by Tsafendas's mad act, but also by his claim that he needed the care of his family. He wrote to his report to the authorities: “Demitrio Tsafandakis is fundamentally a psychopath who leads an always unstable and adventurous life. At the moment he does not show signs of ²¹⁷³ Confidential PIDE report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, No: 3.699-G.U, 13 November 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹⁷⁴ Confidential PIDE report regarding Dimitro Tsafendas, 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²¹⁷⁵ Translation of the PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafantakis, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²¹⁷⁶ Diario de Lisboa, 8 September 1966, ‘Dimitri Tsafendas esteve internado na Mitra e foi observado no Julio de Matos.’

²¹⁷⁷ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁷⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²¹⁷⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

psychosis. I agree entirely with Captain Cascais in that one should wait for information regarding his family before finally deciding what destination he is to be given.”²¹⁸¹

In the event, nothing came of it, and after his new failure to return to Mozambique, Tsafendas decided to visit England again. He had not enjoyed his previous visit much due to his poor financial situation, but now that this had improved he decided to try his luck again. He had kept in touch with members of the anti-slavery society and the British anti-apartheid movement. Sometime in June or July 1962, Tsafendas found himself in London for a second time and quickly got in touch again with the British anti-apartheid movement and the Anti-Slavery Society. He also became involved with an anti-fascist movement, the Yellow Star.

On July 1, 1962, a British fascist group, the National Socialist Movement (NSM) had planned an anti-Semitic rally in Trafalgar Square called “Free Britain from Jewish Control.” Tsafendas was one of 2,000 anti-fascists who occupied the square to forestall the rally. Their action was organised by the Communist Party and various Trotskyist and anarchist groups, as well as the Jewish Defence Committee. One of the organisers was the Rev. Billy Sargent, vicar of Holy Trinity Church in Dalston, who handed out Yellow Star badges similar to the yellow Star of David which the Nazis forced Jews to wear. This was where the movement took its name.²¹⁸² Tsafendas proudly pinned one to his coat and sent a London postcard and a photograph of himself wearing the badge to his father, unaware that he was dead.²¹⁸³ Tsafendas often sent postcards, souvenirs and pictures of himself to his parents from wherever he happened to be.²¹⁸⁴ He also sent postcards to his siblings, especially Eleni, with whom he developed a close relationship, although he had not seen her since she was four. He was very fond of this stepsister and they exchanged letters constantly while he was travelling in Europe.²¹⁸⁵

Tsafendas also frequently visited the North Middlesex Cricket Club in Hornsey, North London, which happened to be the meeting place for members of the British anti-apartheid movement. Tsafendas told Edward Furness, one of the members of the Club, that he wanted “to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned civil disobedience” and ²¹⁸¹ Dr. Pegado's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafandakis, 6 April 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van Verdediging. NASA.

²¹⁸² Hann, 2013: 211.

²¹⁸³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²¹⁸⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007.

²¹⁸⁵ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007.

that he was willing to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.” Furness said Tsafendas, “was well-dressed and appeared to be wealthy.”²¹⁸⁶

On some occasions during his visits to England, Tsafendas and other anti-fascist and anti-apartheid activists fought physically with members of fascist leader Oswald Mosley's Union Movement. In one confrontation Tsafendas was stabbed in the hand, leaving him with a small scar, of which he was very proud. He considered it to be a badge of honour and often proclaimed, “I beat up a lot of fascists in London.” At the same time, he remained active with the anti-apartheid movement and took part in an anti-apartheid demonstration, carrying a placard depicting a man in a Ku Klux Klan outfit labelled “DR. VERWOERD.”²¹⁸⁷

It was October of 1962, when Tsafendas, who was either in London or Lisbon at the time, that he received a letter from his step-mother informing him that his father had died. Her letter was a response to the postcard and picture of himself he sent to his father from London.²¹⁸⁸ His parents at the time were still married, but for the last few years had been living separately, barely talking to each other.²¹⁸⁹ Tsafendas was devastated to hear that his adored father had died and he became desperate to return to South Africa and visit his grave.²¹⁹⁰

On October 27, 1962, he visited again a police station in Lisbon in an attempt to have his exile from Mozambique ended.²¹⁹¹ He did not achieve anything and in November, 1962, he made yet another application for entry to South Africa, which he submitted to that country's embassy in Lisbon. Having checked his name, the immigration attaché wrote to ²¹⁸⁶ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁸⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Tsafendas proudly showed this photograph to Mary Eendracht, Helen and George Grispos, Antony Michaletos, Artemis Michaletos, John Michaletos, Ira Kyriakakis, Patrick O’Ryan, and to his half-sisters Katerina Pnema and Eleni Vlachopoulos. Unfortunately, the date the picture was taken remains unknown, but it must have been in 1959 or in 1962, most likely the latter.

²¹⁸⁸ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²¹⁸⁹ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²¹⁹⁰ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²¹⁹¹ Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas's exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Tsafendas in January 1963 urging him not to incur any further expense in connection with his application.²¹⁹² In other words, do not bother to ask.

Tsafendas did not give up though. He knew that the only way to be allowed to return to Mozambique was to convince the Portuguese that he was no longer a Communist, had no subversive ideas, did not support the independence of Mozambique and that he was a reformed man and loyal supporter of Salazar, the Portuguese dictator. He stopped associating with leftists, and began talking publicly against Communism and in support of Salazar. He believed that PIDE agents would sooner or later hear about it when they enquired about him.²¹⁹³

Sometime in the summer of 1963, after another application for amnesty, Tsafendas attended an interview regarding his request. He attempted again to convince the Portuguese that he was “a little mad,” harmless and that his subversive and communist ideas belonged to the past.²¹⁹⁴ Finally, in August or September of 1963, after twelve years of exile, the Portuguese government, obviously convinced by his “act,” decided to extend its powers of amnesty to Tsafendas and permit him to return to Mozambique.²¹⁹⁵ A few weeks later, Tsafendas received his fare from the government’s social services and in October 1963 sailed to Mozambique aboard the Princippi Perfecto.²¹⁹⁶ He had two big suitcases with him. They contained a few clothes, gifts for the family and friends and anti-apartheid and Communist literature,²¹⁹⁷ but fearful of searches, Tsafendas had replaced all the book covers with innocent titles.²¹⁹⁸

²¹⁹² Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 40. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²¹⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²¹⁹⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²¹⁹⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁹⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²¹⁹⁷ The study is not in position to know how Tsafendas obtained such literature; the likelihood is that he brought it from England the previous year or it was sent to him by comrades in the British anti-apartheid movement.

²¹⁹⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

MOZAMBIQUE, 1963

Back in Lourenço Marques, Tsafendas stayed at the home of his favourite aunt, Artemis Michaletos, who was delighted to see him again after twelve years. Artemis got in touch with his stepmother in South Africa and told her of Dimitris's arrival. Marika was aware that Dimitri was banned from entering South Africa so decided to go to Mozambique and see him there for the first time in twenty-two years.²¹⁹⁹ While waiting for Marika, Tsafendas visited Manuel, his best childhood friend,²²⁰⁰ and Antony Maw, Greece's Honorary Consul in Lourenço Marques, who had refused to issue a Greek passport to him back in 1951. This time, Tsafendas asked about the location of his mother's grave. Maw was unable to help him, as he "only remembered (Tsafendas) as a baby living with his father and an African servant girl."²²⁰¹ At the same time, Tsafendas also spent some evenings in Shangaan villages meeting old friends and his old students who had now grown up.²²⁰²

During his stay in Lourenço Marques, Tsafendas met and briefly associated with two Greeks, George Liberopoulos and George Ananiades. Both men considered him to be "a normal person with a very high intelligence."²²⁰³ Tsafendas also met a young Greek Orthodox priest, Father Minas Constandinou. They became very good friend and spent several hours together discussing Christianity, history and politics. Father Minas was deeply impressed by Tsafendas's knowledge; not only about Christianity, but about other religions too.²²⁰⁴

Father Minas Constandinou, who also visited Tsafendas in prison on several occasions after Verwoerd's assassination, told the author:

"Dimitris was the most political person I ever met. He lived and breathed politics. Most of his conversations were about politics... he was very Communist, very, very Communist. But you know he was not one of those Communists who just say they are Communists. Dimitris had read a lot about Communism and he practised and preached Communism, he did not just claim to be one... he was also anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid. He was very much for the independence of Mozambique and actually, not just Mozambique, ²¹⁹⁹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²²⁰⁰ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²²⁰¹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

²²⁰² Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²²⁰³ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

²²⁰⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

but all the colonies in Africa.

Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, 'conquerors' and 'occupiers;' he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be 'occupied lands,' conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler's best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying them to the Blacks.²²⁰⁵

Describing Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student" was a trademark characterisation of South Africa's Prime Minister by Tsafendas and one which he used constantly. When asked to explain what he meant, Tsafendas always gave the same answer, namely that Dr. Verwoerd had copied some of Hitler's anti-Jewish Nuremberg Laws and was applying them to non-White South Africans. Tsafendas also employed two particular words to describe Verwoerd: "tyrant" and "dictator." He considered that Verwoerd was a "tyrant" because he was oppressing South Africa's non-Whites, and a "dictator" because he was elected by the Whites only; since the country's majority non-Whites did not have the vote, Verwoerd was not democratically elected in Tsafendas's view, and was in essence a dictator.²²⁰⁶

John Michaletos, Artemis's son, said of his uncle Dimitri:

"You could see his pathos about Communism and for the independence of Mozambique in his face. He was very passionate about both. He had a fighting Communist spirit, he talked very, very passionately about his political ideas, his cheeks sometimes getting red and sweaty from the passion. He was very self-assured about his ideas and you could not have a political debate with him, he would have cut you into pieces. He was very well read, especially in politics, while he had this ability I haven't seen in anyone to be able to convince you that he is right. He would bring argument after argument and example after example to convince you that he is right. Sometimes, I wondered whether all these [political and historical] examples and facts he was talking about were true. I did not know. I was not aware of any of these. And you couldn't check at the time, there was no internet, but it all sounded very, very convincing. I used to tell him, and my mother used to tell him too, that he should be a politician or a lawyer."²²⁰⁷

²²⁰⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²²⁰⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

Soon after, Marika, along with her son Victor, his wife Anna, and her son-in-law, Nick Vlachopoulos, Eleni's husband, arrived in Lourenço Marques by car from Pretoria. Eleni was desperate to travel with the rest of the family, but she had to stay behind to look after her two little boys, so her husband, who was very anxious to meet Tsafendas after what he was told by his wife, went instead. When they all met, Dimitri expressed his desire to go and live with them in Pretoria, but acknowledged that he was banned from entering the country.²²⁰⁸

However, Aunt Artemis's husband, George Michaletos, was a friend of J.J. van den Berg, the passport control officer at the South African consulate in Lourenço Marques. Artemis proposed, and eventually the family agreed, to offer a financial inducement to van der Berg to turn a blind eye to Tsafendas's banning. Marika and Victor were reluctant but persuaded by Artemis and Vlachopoulos, eventually agreed and they proceeded accordingly. Van den Berg, also reluctantly, eventually accepted²²⁰⁹ and on Saturday, November 2, 1963, Tsafendas appeared before him at the consulate and applied for a permit for temporary sojourn in South Africa. Van den Berg overlooked the ban and issued a visa to Tsafendas, although his name appeared on the Government's Stop List.²²¹⁰

²²⁰⁷ John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²²⁰⁸ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²²⁰⁹ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²¹⁰ J.J. van den Berg statement regarding the 'Admission to the Republic of Demitrio Tsafendas,' 20 September 1966. Report COE, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

PRETORIA, 1963–1964

On Monday, November 4, 1963, Tsafendas and his family re-entered South Africa by car via the Komatipoort border point.²²¹¹ He moved into the house of his half-sister, Evangelia, in Pretoria, where she lived with her husband Charles Nissiotos and their children. Immediately afterwards, he applied for permanent South African residence. Nissiotis offered him work at his café²²¹² in the belief that it would help Tsafendas's application if he could show that he had a job. Nissiotis even gave Tsafendas a letter stating that he was his "guarantor" and would be financially responsible for him while in South Africa.²²¹³ On the application form, Tsafendas flatly lied that "he had never previously applied for permanent residence in South Africa, had never been found guilty of a criminal or unlawful action; that he had never been refused entry to any South African harbour and also had never been deported from South Africa or any other country."²²¹⁴

Tsafendas attended three interviews with three different officers of the Department of Immigration and made a very favourable impression on all of them.²²¹⁵ In addition, in order to be granted permission, he had to be medically examined and found to be perfectly healthy and capable of working by two State doctors. Therefore, on November 11, 1963, he was examined by Dr. C. Been and was found "not to be mentally or physically defective in any way," and "generally in a good state of health."²²¹⁶ On November 14, 1963, Tsafendas was examined again for the same reason by Dr. A.C. McDonald, who also wrote "a favourable report." After the third and final interview with an Immigration officer, a certificate for permanent residence was issued to Tsafendas.²²¹⁷

²²¹¹ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 1. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²²¹² Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²²¹³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²¹⁴ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²²¹⁵ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²²¹⁶ Tsafendas medical certificate issued by Dr. Been for the Aliens Act, 1937. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²²¹⁷ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

One day, Marika panicked when she discovered the contents of his suitcases, which included a poster of the executed Congolese leader Patrice Lumumba and several anti-apartheid pamphlets. To make matters worse, she discovered that most of the books in his suitcase were not literary classics as their covers suggested but Communist and anti-apartheid titles.²²¹⁸ There were also two medical books, one about insanity and psychiatry, the other concerning intestinal disorders.²²¹⁹ Tsafendas had read them to ensure the medical authenticity of his madness acts. When asked by his family why he kept them, Tsafendas said, smiling, "I like reading medicine ... it could save your life."²²²⁰ Marika pleaded fearfully with him to get rid of the political literature,²²²¹ but he refused.²²²²

Other items were a Bob Dylan album and several Paul Robeson's records which he played often, staying in tune with the singers. Tsafendas also had his records with Communist songs from Italy and Russia which his step-mother pleaded with him not to play loudly in the house. "You are going to put us all in jail," she used to tell him, since Communism was outlawed in South Africa.²²²³ Tsafendas considered Bella Ciao, an Italian Communist song to be one of his all-time favourites. He whistled it throughout his life and remembered its lyrics even shortly before he died.²²²⁴

A few days after his arrival in Pretoria, a Sunday morning, Tsafendas, along with everyone from his family, attended a Greek Orthodox Church service. At the end of the service, the Greek priest spoke briefly. He welcomed a family newly arrived from Greece and went on to praise South Africa and its policy of apartheid for the opportunities they gave to people to come and work there, offering them a better life than anywhere else in the world. He then attacked Communists and other "enemies" of the country.²²²⁵

²²¹⁸ Antony Michaleto in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²¹⁹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²²⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

²²²¹ The author is not in position to know what Tsafendas did with the anti-apartheid literature he had with him.

²²²² Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²²³ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²²⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²²²⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Tsafendas was enraged and only his half-brother Victor stopped him from interrupting the priest. However, when the time came for Communion, Tsafendas refused to take the sacrament or to kiss the priest's hands, as was customary. Instead, and despite the efforts of Nick Vlachopoulos and Victor, he started arguing quietly with the priest. He said that he should be ashamed for praising apartheid. The priest was polite and replied that Greeks should be grateful for South Africa's hospitality and that they should not bite the hand that fed them. Tsafendas said the Whites found things easy in South Africa because they exploited the non-Whites, but life for the majority of people was far from rosy. By this time, other members of the congregation had come forward to see what was happening and began protesting on behalf of the priest and denouncing Tsafendas. However, Tsafendas remained calm throughout, supporting his views. Finally, his family managed to pull him away from the priest.²²²⁶

Returning home, Tsafendas was rounded upon by his family for speaking out in public. They reminded him that he is not in Europe where he could say whatever he wanted. Marika said that she had hoped that now he was grown up, he would have changed his political ideas, and she blamed her husband for giving him such ideas. She complained that he had embarrassed them all in front of everyone in the church and the whole Greek community would now hear about it. Tsafendas apologised for putting them into a difficult position and promised to keep his mouth shut from now on. However, Evangelia, who anyway was not very happy with her half-brother's work rate (she found him to be "lazy" and "the slowest waiter ever"²²²⁷), fearing that they would lose their Greek customers over the church incident or that Tsafendas might start arguing with their customers, asked him to stop working at their café.²²²⁸

A few days later, to avoid Evangelia's complains, Tsafendas moved out of their house, with his books and everything else he had brought from Europe. Vlachopoulos offered him a rent-free apartment he owned, but which was not immediately available. To bridge the gap, Fotini Gavasiadis, Vlachopoulos's twenty-five year old sister, and her husband Markos suggested that Tsafendas should stay with them until the apartment became available. Thus, ²²²⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²²⁷ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²²⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Tsafendas spent the next few weeks sharing living quarters with Fotini, Markos and their three-year-old son, Nick, and they soon became very good friends. When Vlachopoulos's apartment became available, Tsafendas duly moved in. It was next door to the Gavasiadis's house and so they were neighbours for the next eight months that Tsafendas remained in Pretoria, spending most of his time in their home. Tsafendas filled his apartment with books and political posters, some of them referring to international figures such as Ahmed Ben Bella, Fidel Castro and Patrice Lumumba.²²²⁹

Fotini became very close to Tsafendas and considers him to be the man who opened her eyes to the world of politics, in particular the evils of apartheid. The first of many things he gave her to read was The Freedom Charter. She was frightened when Tsafendas told her that the pamphlet was banned in South Africa, but she read it and kept it anyway. Tsafendas also gave copies to Nick Vlachopoulos and Mary Eendracht. When news came that Tsafendas had been arrested for Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, the three hurriedly burned their copies for fear the police would search their homes.²²³⁰

Nick Vlachopoulos owned the Proclamation Hill Café on Church Street West, Pretoria, where Fotini and Markos helped out. Tsafendas would often drop by for a coffee and to read the newspapers.²²³¹ Since he spent a lot of time in the café, Tsafendas would help out and serve coffee and snacks when it was busy. At first, Vlachopoulos was not keen on Tsafendas working there, fearing he would argue politics with his customers. However, Tsafendas never did. He was polite and respectful and in time became very popular because of his stories and friendly manner. The voluntary work in the café expanded, so that whenever he was in employment, he would work there part-time, mostly weekends, and when he was unemployed he would work at the café full-time.²²³²

Although Vlachopoulos found him to be lazy and slow with the physical aspects of his job, he valued his popularity, especially with older people, some of whom visited the café just to talk to Tsafendas. Vlachopoulos and his wife were happy and offered Tsafendas a permanent situation on good wages. Tsafendas declined and continued working on a voluntary basis, refusing to take any money since they had given him a free-rent apartment.

²²²⁹ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²³⁰ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²³¹ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²³² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

Fotini Gavasiadis told the author that while Tsafendas worked at her brother's café, he "was always with a smile in his mouth, chatting and joking with the customers... he was very popular, especially with the older customers. Some of them were coming to the café just to talk to him. They were quite old and had no else to talk to. Dimitris patiently listened to their stories or whatever they had to say. He always had a comforting word for them and for those who needed it."²²³³

When he worked voluntarily in the café, Tsafendas worked out the price of things in his head and was invariably correct. Fotini Gavasiadis said Tsafendas rarely had money because he spent heavily on books, but when he did, he was open-handed. "If he had only one rand in his pocket, he would give it without hesitation to someone who needed it," she said.²²³⁴ In particular, and despite the protests of their parents, Tsafendas bought toys and chocolates for his nephews, who he adored more than anything. He would often baby-sit them while their parents were at work.²²³⁵

Fotini Gavasiadis remembers him as being "fiercely anti-Afrikaner, often equating them with the Nazis and Dr. Verwoerd with Hitler." Although he could read Afrikaans, he never looked at Afrikaans-language newspaper, declaring that "the only truth you can read in an Afrikaans newspaper is the obituaries." He even refused to speak Afrikaans, as he considered it the language of the oppressor.²²³⁶ Gavasiadis and her brother were astonished by Tsafendas's appetite and estimated that his consumption was the equal of two-three adults. Although he was a big man, he was not obese, and Tsafendas believed that was due to his having a good metabolism and drinking lots of water.²²³⁷

One of Tsafendas's favourite occupations in Pretoria was babysitting his nephews, Dino and Michalis Vlachopoulos, Eleni's sons, aged seven and five, and Nick Gavasiadis, Fotini's three-year-old son. The boys loved being with Tsafendas, singing and playing, and begged their parents constantly to let them spend time with their newly arrived uncle. In the evenings, Tsafendas would often go to the movies or the theatre with Fotini, Markos or his half-sister Eleni; he always insisted on paying. Although he was earning good money, he also ²²³³ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²³⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²³⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

²²³⁶ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²³⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

spent it freely and Fotini and Eleni repeatedly urged him to save for the future. He gave them the same answer he gave to everybody: "I can't. Saving money is like holding my breath, not letting me breathe properly, just taking small breaths in order to survive. I can't live like that, life is too short and we only live once, I want to enjoy it while I can." He said if he had children, it would be different, but being single and without any obligations, he believed he could always find a job with money to eat and a place to stay. When they asked him about his retirement plans, he said, "I will retire to Cuba, I won't need much there." He believed that as a former member of the South African Communist Party and of the DSE of Greece, he would be made welcome in Cuba.²²³⁸

Fotini Gavasiadis remembers Tsafendas as "a real gentleman." He would always open the door for her and carry her bags. In an asexual but deeply genuine way, she "loved" Tsafendas, and described him as "adorable" and one of the "kindest, funniest and most openly generous men" she had ever met. "He would give you his clothes and his food." She looked upon him as a big brother and spent hours talking with him about politics and his travels. What impressed her most was his intelligence. He had a "quick mind and was very intelligent," she said. "Dimitris could buy you and sell you²²³⁹ any time he wanted and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever." Tsafendas, she said, was also very "convincing and persuasive - he could turn black into white! If you disagreed with something with him, he would find a way to convince you that he is right and that you are wrong - even if you know that you are right and that he is wrong! If he made a mistake about something, he would turn things upside-down and at the end, he would even make you apologise to him!"²²⁴⁰

His half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, was also close to Tsafendas and he spent a lot of time with her in the nine months he lived in Pretoria.²²⁴¹ She remembers him as "a fanatical Communist and anti-racist," who "read newspapers all day" and "talked and argued all day about politics." She is sure that "he was not crazy, he was very, very clever, cleverer than any ²²³⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²²³⁹ This is a Greek expression to describe someone who is extremely intelligent and extremely able.

²²⁴⁰ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

²²⁴¹ Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

of us. And very able. If he wanted to do something, if he had a target, he would always achieve it.”²²⁴²

As well as helping out at the café, Tsafendas completed two stints as a welder. Over the Christmas-New Year period, December 9, 1963 to February 3, 1964, he did maintenance and development work for City Engineering and Carron Limited.²²⁴³ On February 7, he started work with F.A. Poole Engineering Pty. Ltd. as a welder but was later transferred to the fitter-turner department. “He was put in charge of the removal of machinery from the old factory to the new one and did this work well.”²²⁴⁴ During his time in Poole Engineering, Tsafendas “bullied the other Portuguese workers and had fights with several white workers,”²²⁴⁵ but he never argued with Coloureds.²²⁴⁶

Foreman Albert Vercueil considered Tsafendas to be an “intelligent person and completely mentally balanced,” “friendly but opinionated.” He did not find him to be “a very good worker,” but “an intelligent worker mainly because he quickly grasped when work was entrusted to him.” However, Tsafendas was also “very sloppy in his work.” On July 10, 1964, Vercueil admonished him for sloppy work. “When he began to mumble again, I told him to come to my office and told him, ‘Demetri, you are no good to me, you are always causing trouble and your work is no good. You must leave today.’ He became extremely angry and put his finger in my face... he then said, ‘You are like your bloody Government, but I will get you, and I will get your Prime Minister too!’” According to Vercueil, during the period Tsafendas worked there, “he showed no signs of mental disorder or any other abnormality.”²²⁴⁷ During his time there, Tsafendas “was certainly unpopular among white workers ... adapted more to the non-whites.”²²⁴⁸

Pursuing his political agenda, Tsafendas made contact with old friends and South African Communist Party comrades but it was quickly clear to him that they were reluctant to ²²⁴² Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007. This part is available in the rushes.

²²⁴³ Report by D.G. Gallard of City Engineering and Carron Limited regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the Commission of Enquiry, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²²⁴⁴ Report by N.F. Lubie of F.A. Poole PTY, Ltd regarding Tsafendas to the Report of the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²²⁴⁵ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²²⁴⁶ Albert Vercueil statement to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²²⁴⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Albert Vercueil statement to the Commission of Enquiry, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial transcripts. NASA.

²²⁴⁸ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

be involved in anything risky and that they did not fully trust him because he had been away from South Africa for so long.²²⁴⁹ He also got in touch with local members of the Christian Church who would often fetch him to attend services, including occasionally in Johannesburg.²²⁵⁰ In July 1964, Tsafendas decided to accept his half-sister Katerina's invitation to visit her in Rhodesia and become acquainted with her husband, Gerry Pnefmatikos (Pnefma), who he had never met.²²⁵¹

RHODESIA, 1964

Tsafendas entered what was then Southern Rhodesia on July 19, 1964, on a temporary tourist permit, valid until August 9, and travelled to the small town of Marandellas, an early centre for white settlement some seventy-two km south-east of Salisbury, the capital, where his half-sister lived. She and her husband ran a grocery store.²²⁵² The visit did not go well. During the one night as their guest, Tsafendas spoke openly against colonialism in Rhodesia and Mozambique. In an effort to stop him talking about politics, Gerry Pnefma asked Tsafendas to tell them about his time in Europe. Tsafendas told them that he had joined the Democratic Army during the Greek Civil War and then showed them photographs of himself in various places, one being from the anti-apartheid demonstration in London, where he was holding the placard with Dr. Verwoerd as a KKK member, and another of himself wearing the Yellow Star badge. His frightened hosts were convinced that he was still a "Communist and an anti-colonialist."²²⁵³

Katerina was further shocked to learn that her half-brother had been baptised in Greece as a member of the Christian Church, a sect she had never heard of and which she found absurd. She was also angered that he had changed his surname to Tsafendas, but the final stroke came when Tsafendas enquired how much the couple paid their Black domestic workers. He thereupon accused them of taking advantage of the workers, adding that from what he had seen so far in Rhodesia, most Greeks and Whites exploited the poor Blacks who ²²⁴⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 28 September 2012.

²²⁵⁰ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

²²⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²²⁵² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²²⁵³ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

worked for them. He even claimed that it was a disgrace for the country to be named after Cecil Rhodes. Katerina's husband was shocked, and Tsafendas left the next day because of the arguments.²²⁵⁴

Katerina was unhappy after Dimitri left and regretted shouting at him:

"I knew if I kept him, there would be big trouble. I knew him. He would have definitely got into a political argument with someone and you know we were living in a small town. News would have spread very fast that my brother had such ideas and we would have lost all our customers. And he left. And I was right because he then went to Mozambique and he started his Communistic talk and they put him in jail. If he remained in Rhodesia the same thing would have happened and he would have ruined us."

However, Pnema now regrets sending him away and wishes she could have spent more time with him. She told the author:

"He was such a gentle, polite, kind-hearted man, you can't imagine. But when he started talking about politics, my God, he was uncontrollable. It was like Jekyll and Hyde. He just could not keep his mouth shut; when he heard something political or if he saw something, he had to comment. It would have been ok if he had not such ideas, but you know at these times, you could not talk like this and he just could not understand it. That's why he ended up in jail so many times in Mozambique."²²⁵⁵

After spending some time in a rented apartment in Avondale, Salisbury, Tsafendas travelled to Lake Malawi in Nyasaland in search of work. Two or three weeks later, he returned to Salisbury.²²⁵⁶ There he received an invitation from his childhood friend George Grispos, whom he had not seen since 1939, to visit him in Umtali, some 213 km from the capital. Grispos was now married to Helen Kavadias, who also knew Tsafendas from the days when she had attended his English classes in Lourenço Marques. Grispos's house was small, so Tsafendas stayed for two nights next door, in the home of Sophia Kavadias, Helen's ²²⁵⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 April 2015.

²²⁵⁵ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 April 2015; Katerina Pnema does not remember the name of the person who introduced Tsafendas to this sect, but she clearly remembers that it was someone in the USA. She also does not remember the name of the person who baptised her step-brother, but she thinks that Tsafendas might not even tell her these names.

²²⁵⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

mother, who had a spare room.²²⁵⁷ Both nights of his stay were spent talking politics and discussing Tsafendas's adventures around the world.²²⁵⁸ Helen Grispos considered Tsafendas to be a "well-mannered and intelligent person,"²²⁵⁹ and her husband had the same opinion about him.²²⁶⁰

Helen Grispos recalled Tsafendas being "very angry and saddened by what he had seen in South Africa, Mozambique and Rhodesia, and the way non-White people were treated there." Tsafendas used to lend books to both his friends while they were children and now, before he left, he gave his hosts another book, as a gift, insisting they should read it. He said it was "excellent" and had become one of his favourites. It was titled "Invisible Man"²²⁶¹ and Helen and her husband assumed it was a science fiction adventure. When Helen began reading it, she discovered it was the story of an African-American man, who, because he was Black, assumed an aura of invisibility to the White people around him.²²⁶²

While in Umtali, Tsafendas also met fellow Greeks John Galanakis owner of the Galas' Cash Store, Nikolas Spanos, owner of Umtali Green Grocers, Spiros Raftopoulos and Father Costas Condos, a Greek Orthodox priest.²²⁶³ On August 22, 1964, while at Kavadias's house, Tsafendas was arrested by immigration officials because his tourist permit had expired.²²⁶⁴ They deported him to Mozambique and he left Rhodesia from Umtali by train.²²⁶⁵

²²⁵⁷ Col. van Wyk's report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁵⁸ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁵⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁶⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁶¹ Ralph Ellison's Invisible Man was published in 1952 to widespread acclaim. Proposing that colour rendered a Black person invisible to the Whites around him, Ellison examined a range of critical emerging issues in America including Marxism, identity and Black Nationalism.

²²⁶² Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁶³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²²⁶⁴ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

²²⁶⁵ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

MOZAMBIQUE, 1964–1965

From August 28 to October 8, 1964, Tsafendas lived in a boarding house, Stelios Marangos Pension Gloria, in Beira.²²⁶⁶ There, he met Nick Papadakis, a young Greek from Crete, with whom he became friendly. Papadakis characterised Tsafendas as “a man of revolutionary zeal, eager to fight apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique.” Papadakis also told the author about Tsafendas:

“Most of us [the Greeks] had heard about him but no one had met him before. In the beginning, we were a little distant because we had heard about him being a rebellious character, a troublemaker and about his arrests by the Portuguese police. Slowly though, he came closer to us as we realised that he was completely different from what we had heard. He was very polite and open-hearted, very witty and sarcastic, even about himself, and often cracked jokes ... he was sarcastic about his weight ... we enjoyed hearing stories from his travels around the world ... he was a gentle giant with a big heart who was helping everyone around him ... poor but very generous ... very clever with a very fast brain.”²²⁶⁷

Tsafendas was unable to find work in Beira, however, and decided to try his luck again in Rhodesia. On October 9, Tsafendas tried to re-enter Southern Rhodesia at Umtali through the Forbes Border Post,²²⁶⁸ but he did not have the necessary visa and was declared a prohibited immigrant.²²⁶⁹ The following day, he returned to Mozambique,²²⁷⁰ travelling to Gondola where he quickly found work with the Hume Pipe Company.²²⁷¹ He spent the next month in Gondola and the weekends in Beira.²²⁷²

At Tsafendas's suggestion, Nick Papadakis also applied for work at Hume Pipe and was accepted. The two men, now good friends, moved soon afterwards into a two-bedroom ²²⁶⁶ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²²⁶⁷ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁶⁸ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

²²⁶⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²²⁷⁰ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 17. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²²⁷¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁷² Irimi Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

apartment.²²⁷³ While at work at the Hume Pipe Company, Tsafendas often complained that Portugal was exploiting Mozambique's oil.²²⁷⁴ He argued with Portuguese and other Whites, accusing them of mistreating the Black workers. He also accused Portuguese and other Whites of mistreating the Black workers who he urged to go on strike. However, the non-Whites were too frightened to take such action.²²⁷⁵

Another workmate at the Hume Pipe Company was an elderly Indian whose daughter was planning to get married. The old man was building an extra room onto his own small house for the girl and her husband, but the work was moving very slowly because of the man's age and lack of money. Each day after finishing work, Tsafendas voluntarily worked alongside his elderly colleague until the job was finished. Tsafendas was then the only non-Indian person to attend the wedding.²²⁷⁶

While in Gondola and Beira, Tsafendas associated with many Greeks and frequently patronised John Verghis's café shop;²²⁷⁷ in Gondola, he visited the Scala Café, which was popular with Greeks, including the Greek Consul in Beira, Captain P.A. Sanianos who regarded Tsafendas as "a very intelligent person."²²⁷⁸ In Beira, he encountered Andreas Babiolakis, his childhood friend from Lourenço Marques; and fellow Greeks Andreas Kavallieratos, George Nikolaou and his daughter Marina Nikolaou-Tsichlakis.²²⁷⁹ A thing that impressed the Greeks in Beira was that when Tsafendas finished work for the day, he would gather a group of Mozambican children and teach them English and History.²²⁸⁰ Tsafendas believed that education was very important for these children and it is their best weapon for their future and against poverty.²²⁸¹

One day, Tsafendas accused Greeks in general of exploiting the Mozambicans.

²²⁷³ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁷⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁷⁵ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁷⁶ Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁷⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²²⁷⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²²⁷⁹ Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 3 April 2015.

²²⁸⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²²⁸¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Although he did not mention a specific individual, one of those in his company told him he was an embarrassment to the Greek community and a traitor. Tsafendas replied that he was proud to be such an embarrassment and such a traitor and that they were an embarrassment to the human race. One of the younger Greeks moved to attack Tsafendas but was held back by his friends. Greeks often asked Tsafendas to stop talking about politics because he could get them all into trouble. He said he wanted to have nothing to do with the Greek community as they were mostly racist and fascist and supported the Portuguese authorities.²²⁸² Advocate George Bizos was also considered to be an “embarrassment” and a “traitor” by the Greek community in South Africa because of his anti-apartheid stance.²²⁸³

Ira Kyriakakis characterised Tsafendas as “an idealist. He was very passionate about politics; he despised racism and colonialism and wanted Mozambique to get rid of the Portuguese; he was very strong in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²²⁸⁴ Andreas Babiolakis held different political views from Tsafendas and judged some of his ideas as “too extreme.” Tsafendas made no attempt to hide his detestation for colonialism and apartheid, and he told Babiolakis one day that he “considered Verwoerd and [Portuguese Prime Minister] Salazar to be fascist dictators who should be executed like Mussolini.”²²⁸⁵ However, Babiolakis admits now that Tsafendas was “ahead of his time.” He told the author:

“Everything he was saying about Africa and Mozambique was correct and have happened. He was telling us [the Greeks], including me, to take our money and leave as long as there was time, because sooner or later the Portuguese would be kicked out and everything we had ‘stolen’ from the Mozambicans would be returned to them. We should have heard him, but none of us did and I told you what happened ... he was a good and bright man. The things he was saying at the time seemed wrong and stupid, but we couldn’t see beyond our noses...he was right about everything.”²²⁸⁶

Tsafendas’s vast knowledge and good manners made a good impression on Xenofon and Marika Conti, whose daughter Irene was engaged at the time to John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s nephew and Aunt Artemis’s son. Marika, too, got on well with Tsafendas; she ²²⁸² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁸³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; To Vima, 13 June 2010, ‘Γιώργος Μπίζος: Υποφέρουμε όπως εσείς στους Ολυμπιακούς’; Advocate George Bizos in Manolis Dimelas’s Live and Let Live, 2007.

²²⁸⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²²⁸⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

²²⁸⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

would often invite him home for dinner, preparing Greek food especially for him. Irene Conti-Michaletos said Tsafendas “was very, very clever and he knew a lot. He was very well-read ... very friendly and talked a lot, mostly about Communism and Christianity. He had very strong political convictions and nobody could change his ideas. He was very staunch in what he believed.”²²⁸⁷

While in Gondola, Tsafendas attended the wedding of Vittorio, an Italian friend and fellow Communist, probably from Naples, who was working with him at the time. As the celebrations proceeded, Tsafendas rose from his chair and raised his glass. Everyone thought he was about to deliver a speech. He did indeed deliver a very short speech wishing the newly-weds well, but then, in a ringing baritone, he launched passionately into an Italian Communist song. Most of the Greeks among the guests were speechless, but Vittorio and his Italian friends joined in eagerly, clapping and rhythmically pounding the table with their fists or table spoons. When he finished he received huge applause and Vittorio and some of his friends called for another song. Tsafendas obliged with a second Italian Communist anthem and again many guests joined him.²²⁸⁸ The songs were probably Bella Ciao and Fischia il Vento, the two Italian songs which Tsafendas sang often throughout his life.

Among the Greeks he met in Beira was John Emmanuel Marvis, who one day lent Tsafendas twenty escudos, which Tsafendas paid back a few days later. Tsafendas told Marvis that he was in “favour of full integration and intermarriage between Coloureds and Whites.”²²⁸⁹ One day, Marvis, along with Andreas Babiolakis, Papadakis and Tsafendas were at the Scala Café, discussing politics. Tsafendas was dismayed that racism and wars existed all over the world. He believed that things would never change as long as the world remained as it was, with different countries, different nationalities, different religions and different races, all of them creating differences among peoples. He concluded that this situation would never change because it was impossible to eradicate borders, nationalities and religions. Tsafendas's theory was that for wars, conflicts and racism to be eradicated, countries, religions and the different races had to cease to exist. Then the whole world would be united in one state with no religions, or with only one world religion for everyone. As for how to eradicate the different races, he said (half-jokingly, half-seriously): “Everyone should have ²²⁸⁷ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

²²⁸⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²²⁸⁹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

sex with someone of a different colour, so a new race will be created where everyone will be the same colour or at least they will all be mixed! Only then will there be no racism and discrimination anymore!” Everyone laughed and this remark was discussed for a long time in Beira.²²⁹⁰

Although Tsafendas was joking about the sex issue, he was absolutely serious about his belief about the three things that needed to be done for the world to become a better place. This was a belief that he had for several years, and he expressed it to several people. Until the day he died, he still believed that racism, wars and conflicts would be eradicated only if these three things took place.²²⁹¹ As we will see, this comment was misconstrued at the summary trial as meaning that Tsafendas was paranoid and wanted to create a new race, like some mad villain in a movie.

During his time in Gondola and Beira, Tsafendas was often seen in the villages of the area chatting with local people in their native dialects.²²⁹² According to PIDE, Tsafendas was “advertising in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”²²⁹³ He went further than that. As well as preaching Communism, Tsafendas urged the villagers to revolt against the Portuguese and join the rebel FRELIMO movement launched two years earlier. Wherever he went to the villages, Tsafendas always carried a suitcase filled with revolutionary and anti-colonial literature; books about Mao Zedong, about Fidel Castro and the Cuban revolution and about the Soviet revolution. Most important for Tsafendas were the works of Frantz Fanon,²²⁹⁴ the political revolutionary, philosopher and psychiatrist from the Caribbean island of Martinique, who had argued that violence against colonialism was not only necessary in order to free the ²²⁹⁰ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²²⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²²⁹² Diario de Manhã, ‘Chegou a ser detido na Beira por suspeita de actividades subversivas a assassino do Dr. Verwoerd,’ 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²⁹³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²²⁹⁴ Frantz Fanon (1925-1961) was born of mixed-race parents in what was then the French Caribbean colony of Martinique. He left in 1943 to join the Free French forces fighting the Nazis in Europe and received the Croix de Guerre after being wounded at Colmar, France. Educated at Lyon, Fanon qualified as a psychiatrist in 1951 and began publishing works which inspired and influenced national liberation movements all round the world. He died in Bethesda, Maryland, United States, aged thirty-six, a few months after publishing The Wretched of the Earth, his classic analysis of colonialism and liberation. Fanon’s life and thoughts influenced revolutionaries such as Ali Shariati, Steve Biko, Malcolm X and Ernesto Che Guevara (Gordon, L.R., Sharpley-Whiting, T.D., White, R.T. (eds.) (1996) Fanon: A Critical Reader. Wiley-Blackwell. p. 138; Bianchi, E. C. (1972) The Religious Experience of Revolutionaries. Doubleday. p. 29-48, 87-105, 206). The influence which Fanon’s philosophies brought to bear on Steve Biko and the black consciousness movement are analysed in Alan L. Turner’s Franz Fanon, Soweto and American Black Thought (1986). Fanon’s other works include Black Skin, White Masks (1952); A Dying Colonialism (1959) and Toward the African Revolution (1964).

people, but also legitimate. As well as his books, Tsafendas carried many photographs of Fanon. On the back of each photo, he had written some of Fanon's quotations and he would hand the pictures out to people he met. He believed that Fanon's messages would carry greater weight with the people he talked to if they saw that he was Black. Fanon's books were in English and French and Tsafendas would translate them for local people. He memorised numerous quotes from Fanon's writings and could repeat them flawlessly even twenty-eight years after the assassination.²²⁹⁵

While preaching Communism and for the independence of Mozambique in the villages, Tsafendas always carried several small Bibles in case he needed to convince the Portuguese that he was a minister of religion. Should this fail, he always had his "insanity" act to fall back on. He believed the Portuguese would never harm him because he had been diagnosed as insane in Lisbon. To prove it, he always carried the certificate with the diagnosis. Once, Ira Kyriakakis warned him about talking against the Portuguese. Tsafendas told her smiling, "I am crazy, I can do what I want" (and get away with it), and showed her the hospital certificate.²²⁹⁶ Tsafendas said this was a tactic dating back to the early years of Christianity, known as "being foolish for Christ," when Christian believers would pretend to be mad so that the Romans would leave them alone.²²⁹⁷

Sometime in November, Tsafendas wrote to his brother-in-law in Pretoria, Nick Vlachopoulos, asking him to send the proceeds from the sale of some of his furniture which he had left at a second-hand shop in Pretoria. Vlachopoulos gave the money, R20.00, to Marika and she sent it to Tsafendas in Beira.²²⁹⁸ At some point during his stay in Beira, Tsafendas appealed to the Greek Consul, Captain P.A. Sanianos, for help in his search for work. When he mentioned that he could speak Russian, Sanianos arranged for him to work as an interpreter when a Soviet ship arrived in the harbour.²²⁹⁹

²²⁹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 27 May 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 18 October 2015.

²²⁹⁶ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

²²⁹⁷ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²²⁹⁸ Nick Vlachopoulos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²²⁹⁹ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 21. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

On November 12, 1964, Tsafendas was at the bar of the Gondola Hotel, discussing politics “in the company of various native races” and some Greeks, including Nick Papadakis and Andreas Babiolakis. At one point, Tsafendas said:

“This land is not called Portugal, it is called the United States of Mozambique; our flag has the colour blue and a rainbow, that rainbow that represents all of the colours. We already have money, what we need is not to be mistaken by saying that we are Portuguese. No! We are Africans. Someday this will be over, I am sure that it will be over. Check my face in front of everyone, I don't like the Portuguese flag. Long live our land, the United States of Mozambique. Do not be fooled by my colour, my mother was African, I am also African.”²³⁰⁰

According to several witnesses, Tsafendas often mentioned his idea about a flag with the colours of the rainbow when talking about Mozambique's independence. He believed that the new national flag after independence should display the colours of the rainbow, representing the country's races and minorities.²³⁰¹ Thirty years later, Archbishop Desmond Tutu and Nelson Mandela used the term “Rainbow Nation” to describe post-apartheid South Africa after its first fully democratic general election in 1994.²³⁰²

Tsafendas travels through Mozambique's villages propagandizing for independence did not remain unnoticed by the Portuguese for long. On November 16, 1964, Tsafendas was arrested in Maforga, a small town five miles from Gondola, by the Portuguese Public Security Police, accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.” He was taken to a police substation in Beira for interrogation.²³⁰³

When the police searched his suitcase, they found several Bibles in addition to the left-wing political literature. Tsafendas was subsequently accused of pretending to be a missionary spreading the word about religion,” while in reality preaching “under the guise of ²³⁰⁰ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²³⁰¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²³⁰² BBC, 22 July 2010, ‘Archbishop Tutu in his own words.’ Retrieved from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-10734471>; Manzo, 1996: 71-73.

²³⁰³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

religion in favour of Mozambique's independence..." The following is an extract from PIDEs' Confidential Report Regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, dated 25 November 1964:

"When asked to describe all of the subversive activities that he has been developing against the Country and in favour of Mozambique's independence, he answered: That, he hasn't been developing any kind of such subversive activities against the Country neither in favour of Mozambique's independence. However, wishes to clarify that he supports, as a Mozambican, the idea of Mozambique's independence, governed by the natives of that Province, whether they are black or white.

When asked to say the reason why, on the last day twelve, in Gondola, he was, together with various black nationals, advertising in favour of Mozambique's independence, saying the following phrases: 'This land is not called Portugal, It is called United States of Mozambique; our flag has the colour blue like the rainbow, that rainbow that represents all of the colours: we already have money, what we need is not to be mistaken by saying that we are Portuguese. No! We are Africans. At any day this will be over, I am sure that it will be over. Check my face in front of everyone else, I don't like the Portuguese flag. Long live to our land "United States of Mozambique". Do not be fooled by my colour, my mother was African, I am also African.' He answered: That, in fact, when the respondent found himself, together with the other black nationals, at the bar in Gondola Hotel, in the middle of that uplifted environment and already with a "few glasses", he pronounced those words. His attitude is due to his ideas, already mentioned before, about Mozambique's independence. That he wishes to clarify that, although he agrees with Mozambique's independence, he doesn't belong, however, to any subversive party or organization that works in this sense.

When asked to say what was his religion and if it was true or not that he has dedicated himself to preach as a missionary and, under the guise of this same religion, advertised in favour of Mozambique's independence, answered: That he is a Christian and considers himself a representative of God on earth, a missionary, that wishes he could preach the Christian religion but that he is not allowed to because, on this earth, there is no freedom of expression. That is not, then, true that, under the guise of the religion, he has been advertising in favour of Mozambique's independence. That, being a Christian, he is not, though, Roman Catholic."²³⁰⁴

Costas Poriазis and Andreas Babiоlakіs were good friends of a high-ranking Portuguese police officer who told them about Tsafendas's arrest. He said that Tsafendas was detained with a suitcase full of "Communist and subversive books" and that the Portuguese authorities had information that he was conducting propaganda for the independence of Mozambique.²³⁰⁵

Due to the seriousness of the charges, Tsafendas was handed over next day to the Sub-Delegation of PIDE in Beira.²³⁰⁶ There, he was interrogated by PIDE's Sub-Inspector, Joaquim Piçara Sabino, Brigade Chief Augusto de Sousa Maia, and agent Virgílio Francisco.²³⁰⁷ Inspector Horacio Ferreira, who was in charge of the police cells where Tsafendas was kept for some fourteen days after his arrest, characterised him as being "intensely anti-white" and convinced that "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for its non-whites." He added that Tsafendas was "normal" and he regarded him "as a very intelligent person." During his detention, he was often seen to read books written in "Bantu languages, but never the Bible."²³⁰⁸

On November 25, 1964, the Sub-Director of the PIDE in Mozambique sent the transcript of Tsafendas's interrogation along with request, n°.2707/64-S.R, for additional information about Tsafendas, to the General Director of the PIDE in Lisbon.²³⁰⁹ PIDE wanted evidence that Tsafendas belonged to or was in contact with FRELIMO and Tsafendas found it difficult to convince them otherwise since he had openly urged the villagers to join the ²³⁰⁴ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babiоlakіs in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³⁰⁵ Andreas Babiоlakіs in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³⁰⁶ PIDE report about the Defendant: Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis. 19 January 1965. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas

²³⁰⁷ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³⁰⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, File 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²³⁰⁹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25/1125 November 1964/1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

independence movement. He was also asked about the comments he had made at the bar of the Gondola Hotel.²³¹⁰

According to the transcript of the interrogation, Tsafendas told his interrogators about his life and his travels around the world, and then “confessed to the accusation quoting the above sentences and other phrases, stating however, that even though he had a ‘few glasses,’ his words resulted from ideas he had about the independence of Mozambique; a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation. He denied belonging to any party or subversive organization which worked for the independence of Mozambique, or of having promoted subversive activities against the security of the state, although he clearly stated he was in favour of the independence of Mozambique.”²³¹¹

At some point in late November or early December, Tsafendas was transferred to PIDE’s headquarters in Beira, where he was further interrogated and kept in solitary confinement for the next two months.²³¹² It was there apparently that he changed his stance and began pretending to be mad in order to secure his release. Since he faced accusations of pretending to be a missionary and because he carried Bibles and holy books, Tsafendas came up with an idea that neatly fitted the situation. This time he pretended to be Christ’s apostle, Peter, and quoted the Christian scriptures at length. This was easy because he knew much of the Bible by heart and having copies with him made his act convincing. Later, Tsafendas told several witnesses exactly which passages he had parroted from the scriptures. The deception worked and he was transferred to the Government Hospital in Beira for examination.²³¹³

²³¹⁰ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³¹¹ PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³¹² Inspector Horacio Ferreira said in his report that Tsafendas was kept at the cell under his guard for two weeks. According to various PIDE’s reports and the Commission of Enquiry, Tsafendas was arrested on November 16 and released on January 26, which obviously means that Tsafendas was not released after the two weeks he spent under Inspector Ferreira, but was taken somewhere else. It is not clear in the reports where exactly Tsafendas was held the rest of the time. However, Tsafendas told Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriazis and Nick Papadakis that after two weeks of interrogation at a “small police station,” he was transferred to the police headquarters in Beira, where the interrogation continued for another two and half months. Since all the PIDE reports state that Tsafendas was imprisoned for three months and Inspector Ferreira claims that Tsafendas was with him for only two weeks, we can safely assume that Tsafendas was indeed held for the remaining of the three months at another place. Correspondence between PIDE officers from November 15, 1964 to January 20, 1965 further confirms that Tsafendas was in PIDE’s custody and not that of the Public Security Police who first arrested him.

²³¹³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

While Tsafendas was in custody, all the Greeks in Gondola who knew him were questioned by the Portuguese police. They were asked specifically if Tsafendas talked politics with them and whether he was insane. They replied in the negative to both questions because they did not want the police to think they knew about his political ideas but did not inform the authorities.²³¹⁴ Costas Poriазis was subsequently told by a Portuguese policeman that Tsafendas was released from custody because he was insane and thought he was Saint Peter. Poriазis was shocked to hear this and concluded that Tsafendas made it up in order to be released, but naturally he did not say this to the policeman. When later he saw Tsafendas and asked him about it, Tsafendas appeared to be deeply embarrassed. He simply said he had a nervous breakdown while he was in custody but he was ok now, and changed the subject.²³¹⁵ News of Tsafendas's apostle act quickly circulated within the small Greek community in Gondola. Tsafendas himself was embarrassed about it and when he was released, he avoided Greeks who knew about his act.²³¹⁶

On December 18, 1964, PIDE's General Director in Lisbon sent to his colleagues in Beira PIDE's file on Tsafendas, which was held in Lisbon, along with a PIDE report regarding Tsafendas written on December 12, 1964. The PIDE report contained extensive information about Tsafendas's travels, "a story of what his life had been, an authentic adventurer novel, peregrinating around the world," and also stated that after he was arrested by the Portuguese police, "in the course of inquiries he demonstrated signs of mental illness, a fact that was confirmed by Ultramar Hospital."²³¹⁷

On January 19, 1965, Francisco Bartolomeu da Costa Lontrão, a PIDE officer in Beira, wrote to the Sub-Director of the PIDE in Lourenço Marques that "the defendant Dimitrius Tsafendakis is a supporter of the independence of this Province, without however being a militant for any of the clandestine and subversive organizations that strive for it. As the criminal facts he is accused of (and has admitted to) indicate that he has a certain abnormality, a fact that has been observed before (fls.19), it is convenient that all investigations stop and the archives be handed to the Sub-Director of the Delegation, so that ²³¹⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³¹⁵ Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³¹⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³¹⁷ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 12 December 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

they can be assessed and he can decide what should be done with them, as well as with the defendant.”²³¹⁸

On January 23, upon reading Lontrao's report, Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues, a PIDE officer in Lourenço Marques, made the following suggestion to the Sub-Director of the PIDE in Mozambique: “Having seen the archives, it is remarked with a minimal margin of error, that the defendant Demétrio Tsafendas (id. a fls. 10) is mentally ill and therefore not chargeable at a juridical or penal level. Given this, it seems to us a pure waste of time to continue working on these archives, since we already know what their end will be. Therefore, considering the probable fact that the defendant cannot be charged, and he is not at all dangerous, I propose the release of the defendant, and closure of the archives.”²³¹⁹ The Sub-Director agreed with the recommendation, presumably supported by the diagnosis from the Government Hospital in Beira, and requested that Tsafendas be released.²³²⁰

Tsafendas was eventually freed on January 26, 1965.²³²¹ Once again, he had managed to convince the Portuguese that he was mad and harmless. Penniless and homeless upon his release, Tsafendas asked the fire-fighters at the Beira fire department if he could sleep at the department's premises and they agreed. He slept there for ten nights, making sure that “he arrived at mealtimes, when he was invited to share in the food.” Eventually, he left - according to fireman Jose Lopez Baltazar without thanking them - and was not seen again.²³²² Sometime in late January or early February, 1965, Marika sent Tsafendas another R20.00 from the sale of his furniture.²³²³ For a couple of weeks in February, Tsafendas stayed in Andreas Babiolakis home in Beira. He told him about his prison conditions and that he was kept in solitary confinement for many weeks.²³²⁴

²³¹⁸ Letter of Francisco Bartolomeu da Costa Lontrao to the Subdirector of the PIDE in Lourenço Marques, 19 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³¹⁹ Alberto Henriques de Matos Rodrigues conclusion to the Subdirector, 23 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³²⁰ Conclusion, signed by António Fernandes Vaz, 22 January 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²³²¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²³²² South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²³²³ Nick Vlachopoulos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³²⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

Tsafendas then asked his half-sister Katerina Pnefma and her husband Gerry to help him find a job in Mozambique. Although they had argued, Katerina, cared for her half-brother, and she and her husband, unaware of his latest arrest, agreed to help him. Gerry Pnefma was friendly with the manager of a dock in Beira and persuaded him to hire his brother-in-law as an interpreter. Tsafendas lasted only a few days before being dismissed for urging the Mozambican workers to strike because of their working conditions. Tsafendas denounced the manager and the company as “capitalists exploiting the workers.” The manager told Gerry Pnefma about the incident and said the “only reason he did not call the police was that he did not want to cause his family problems.” He urged his friend not to help Tsafendas again because he was “a dangerous Communist” who could get him into trouble.²³²⁵

At some time in February, shortly after he was dismissed from his job at the docks, Tsafendas was at John Verghis's café shop in the company of several Mozambicans and Greeks, among them Andreas Babiolakis and Nick Papadakis. At one point, Tsafendas bought beer for everyone there, then paraphrasing Mark Anthony in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, happily called out, “Friends, countrymen, lend me your glasses.” However, when he called on them to drink to a recent attack by FRELIMO rebels, everyone froze and lowered their glasses untouched while Tsafendas downed his beer. Verghis politely asked Tsafendas to leave and he never returned.²³²⁶

The next day Tsafendas was arrested again by the Portuguese Public Security Police because of his comments at the bar and his activities at the docks. He was also reported to have been “seen in cafes with Coloured political suspects.”²³²⁷ However, he was released a few days later because the police had by now accepted that he was “mentally ill and therefore not chargeable at a juridical or penal level” and there was no point in detaining him any longer.²³²⁸

A few hours after his release, Tsafendas was seen by Giangos Babiolakis, Andreas's brother, and Costas Poriазis. He was in a bad state: his shirt was torn apart and his head had ²³²⁵ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²³²⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³²⁷ Daily Mirror, 9 September 1966: 11, ‘The clouded past of an assassin’; Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

²³²⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

bruises. He told the men he had been beaten up while in custody. Giangos Babiolakis took Tsafendas home and let him stay there for a few days. Penniless and unable to find work due to his political leanings and activities, and with PIDE keeping a close watch on him, Tsafendas realised he had no future in Mozambique and determined to leave for South Africa. Giangos and six other Greeks voluntarily offered to help him leave Mozambique for South Africa by boat. Contributing 500 escudos each, Giangos and Andreas Babiolakis, Costas Poriadis and three of their Greek friends handed Tsafendas 3,500 escudos, or about 1,000 Euros at today's rate. Tsafendas promised to pay them all back, though the men said the money was a gift. A few months later, he returned all the money he had borrowed.²³²⁹ March 5, 1965, Tsafendas left Mozambique for Durban, South Africa, aboard the Indian Ocean liner, Karanja.²³³⁰

DURBAN, MARCH – OCTOBER 1965

When the Karanja docked at Durban on March 8, 1965, officials of the Department of the Interior boarded the vessel to check the passenger list and ensure that none of the arrivals was on the Department's Stop List. On the roll of the banned which they brought with them was a person named Tsafendakis Dimitrio alias Tsafendas Demetrio. The Karanja's passenger manifest contained the name Tsafendas Demetrio. Extraordinarily, the official concerned failed to spot the connection. He was the fifth government officer in a row not to notice Tsafendas's name on the Stop List.²³³¹

Soon after he settled in Durban, Tsafendas went to meet Rowley Israel Arenstein,²³³² a well-known Communist lawyer who was banned from practising law because of his anti-²³²⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²³³⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150. Vol. 3, File: 1/5. FILE Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

²³³¹ Report of the COE, Chapter II C, Paragraphs 23 and 24. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²³³² (1919-1996) Attorney, prominent anti-apartheid activist who was opposed to violence; trade union advisor, member of the South African Communist Party, leader of the Congress of Democrats and an official advisor to Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi (South Africa History Online, n.d.). Arenstein was banned from the practice of law between 1953 and 1955 and between 1960 and 1986, and was under house arrest from 1962 to 1980. The disbarment applied under legislation which made it illegal for Communists or Marxists to practise law (Arenstein quoted in Suttner, 1997: 386); Tsafendas spoke extensively and very highly to Father Minas Constandinou about a 'Jewish Communist lawyer in Durban' who have helped him a lot. Father Minas does not remember the name of the lawyer. However, as we will see in Chapter Four, a witness, Esperanza Theron, testified to the police that Tsafendas was often seen in Arenstein's office. In addition, Tsafendas told Father Minas that he became aware of Saint Thomas Aquinas after the lawyer in Durban gave him a book about him.

apartheid and Communist stances. Tsafendas had been given Arenstein's address from a member of the anti-apartheid movement in London. Arenstein told him they were looking for interpreters in the city's court. Tsafendas had a positive reference from Limasollu in Istanbul, but Arenstein suggested he get another from someone local.²³³³ Tsafendas approached Antonis Kalogirou, a Greek who was a good friend of his father and had known the family in Lourenço Marques. Kalogirou was very wealthy, was a member and financier of the National Party and had close ties with some of the Party's MPs.²³³⁴ He was not aware of Tsafendas's political ideas as he had not seen him since he was seven or eight, and happily agreed to provide a reference, helping him eventually to get the job.²³³⁵

The head interpreter at Durban Magistrate's Court, Cornelius Johannes Rudolph, said Tsafendas called in two or three times a week to see if there was any work. He said, "I made use of his services on several occasions.... he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent, he spoke English properly."²³³⁶ A fellow interpreter at Durban court described him as a "whiner" and as a man who often complained about the working conditions and his lack of money,²³³⁷ while other colleagues described him as the "chatty Greek."²³³⁸

Between March 16 and April 7, 1965, Tsafendas worked for South African Railways at Umbilo, Durban, having been medically examined and pronounced fit. The examination took place on March 15, 1965. One of the questions was if Tsafendas had suffered or was suffering from 'any mental or physical defect, disease or infirmity' which would not allow him to perform his duties. Tsafendas replied 'no.' He also replied 'no' to the questions if he had ever suffered from any "disease, disability, illness or injury, nervous breakdown, psycho-neurosis or mental disease."²³³⁹

Saint Thomas Aquinas was one of Arenstein's favourite political philosophers and thinkers (Arenstein quoted in Suttner, 1997: 402). Furthermore, Ronnie Kasrils stated in a personal interview with the author (16 May 2016) that Arenstein was the only "Jewish Communist lawyer in Durban." If we take this and all the above under consideration, we can conclude that certainly Arenstein must have been the person Tsafendas spoke so highly about.

²³³³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²³³⁴ Michelis, 1988: 14; Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 23 January 2016.

²³³⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

²³³⁶ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³³⁷ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. 'Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.'

²³³⁸ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, 'Algumas versoes sobre a vida de Tsafendas.'

²³³⁹ South African Railways Confidential Medical Examination Certificate of Demitrio Tsafendas. K150, Vol. 7, File: S 83708, Tsafendas: D. NASA.

On his first day at work Tsafendas said he had just arrived from Mozambique and had no money to travel to work and had not yet found a place to stay. Garnet Vincent Muller, the senior foreman, organised a staff collection and gave Tsafendas about two rand; he also arranged accommodation for him at a hostel. Tsafendas's job was removing and replacing jumper cables, work he said was "unsuitable to him" as he was a boilermaker by trade. Muller considered Tsafendas "to possess intelligence above that of the average person."²³⁴⁰ Tsafendas's immediate boss, Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets, described Tsafendas as "well-mannered, well-spoken and good-natured. He was a good worker."²³⁴¹

While in Durban, Tsafendas often visited a Greek Café Shop owned, by Peter Pappas, a former Greek army officer. According to Pappas, Tsafendas spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and the Mozambique police. Furthermore, Tsafendas was friendly with "white down-and-outs" and when he had some money "he would give them a few cents." "When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me," Pappas said.²³⁴² J. Willemse, Tsafendas's landlord characterised him as a "sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man."²³⁴³

On April 19, 1965, Tsafendas started work as a fitter and turner with Fraser and Chalmers Ltd, at Mandini, a town about a hundred kilometres north of Durban, and was described by his boss, Charles Edwin Woods as "a good tradesman,"²³⁴⁴ "a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but he was a violent type and we couldn't keep him."²³⁴⁵ Tsafendas was discharged on May 9, 1965 after fighting with another White man, a Greek, Nikolas Vergos.²³⁴⁶ Vergos gave to the police his age as sixty, though the police file said fifty-four.²³⁴⁷

According to Tsafendas, Vergos was fascist, racist and bullied the African workers. Vergos would often order the non-White workers to run personal errands for him, such as ²³⁴⁰ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁴¹ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁴² Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.'

²³⁴³ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. 'Assassin - man with a chip on his shoulder.'

²³⁴⁴ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁴⁵ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, 'Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.'

²³⁴⁶ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁴⁷ Charge sheet, Case No 276 1965, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

getting cigarettes, which Tsafendas told him to stop doing. Tsafendas frequently talked to people about Communism and against apartheid and Vergos heard about this. He told Tsafendas to stop because he would get them all dismissed or arrested, but Tsafendas ignored him.²³⁴⁸ Vergos had urged their supervisor Charles Edwin Woods, to get rid of Tsafendas because he was a Communist,²³⁴⁹ and even denounced him to a police sergeant, Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie, as a “Communist bastard.”²³⁵⁰

On May 7, 1965, Vergos and Tsafendas fought physically.²³⁵¹ Vergos had hired two Africans who were working in same company to do some work for him in his house, then refused to pay them, claiming that they had not done a good job. When they complained, he threatened them with the loss of their jobs and since the work they had done was illegal, they could not complain to the police or the company.²³⁵² Tsafendas heard about it and one day, while both men were in the company’s canteen arguing with Vergos, he intervened and demanded that Vergos pay them. Vergos refused and started swearing at Tsafendas. Tsafendas slapped him twice in the face and Vergos fell down. The fight then stopped and both men left the canteen.²³⁵³

Tsafendas then went to his room, but shortly afterwards Vergos appeared with a knife in his hand. Tsafendas told him “to get out,” but Vergos attacked him with the knife. Tsafendas said in his statement to the police, “He gave me one stab in my hand which was trying to ward off the blow, then aimed another blow at my stomach. I jumped away and he ²³⁴⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²³⁴⁹ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁵⁰ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁵¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File Verklarings. NASA.

²³⁵² Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²³⁵³ Demetrio Tsafendas’s statement in the court regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

only scratched me. I then pushed him away.”²³⁵⁴ For the next two months Tsafendas needed medical treatment at the hospital on his injured right arm.²³⁵⁵

In testimony to the police, Vergos failed to state the reason for the dispute, saying Tsafendas attacked him out of the blue for no reason.²³⁵⁶ Tsafendas's version of the incident also fell short of the whole truth and did not reveal any apparent reason for the fight. According to Tsafendas's statement to the police, “Vergos entered the canteen swearing.” Tsafendas asked him to “behave himself” and then they fought.²³⁵⁷ Vergos could not give the cause of the fight because he had used two African workers illegally and Tsafendas did not refer to this because the Africans would have been fired for their illegal work.²³⁵⁸ After the fight, Vergos told Johannes Jacobus Botha, the company's security officer, that Tsafendas was “the biggest communist in the Republic of South Africa.” Subsequently, Botha shared Vergos' comment with a member of the South African Police of Inyoni.²³⁵⁹ Vergos then asked Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren, their boss, to fire Tsafendas because he was “a kaffir and a Communist.”²³⁶⁰ Because of the stabbing, Tsafendas took Vergos to court. He was found guilty and paid a fine.²³⁶¹

Soon after this, in Mandini, Tsafendas argued with a German-born Roman Catholic priest, Father Hanno Probst, who ran the Mangete Catholic Mission in Zululand. According to Father Probst, one day in June, 1965, he saw Tsafendas sitting on a bench in front of a store. His arm was wrapped in a bandage and “he looked rather lost.” Tsafendas said he had been stabbed. The priest said he could tell he was from Mozambique whereupon Tsafendas began swearing at the Mozambique government, saying it did nothing for the Black people. When Tsafendas said he had travelled a lot and could speak eight languages, Probst tried him

²³⁵⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas's statement to the police regarding the incident, 7 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

²³⁵⁵ Tsafendas's statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁵⁶ Nikolas Vergos' statement to the police regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

²³⁵⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas's statement in the court regarding the incident, 14 May 1965. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van saak dossier Nyoni R.A.A. 14 May 1965. NASA.

²³⁵⁸ None of the witnesses remembers what the two African workers had exactly done for Vergos.

²³⁵⁹ Johannes Jacobus Botha's statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁶⁰ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁶¹ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

and found he could speak Spanish, Czech, Italian, English and the Munich dialect of German fluently.²³⁶²

Father Probst testified to the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death:

“During our conversation he also mentioned to me that he had been to Germany and actually stated that he had visited Munich in Germany. Because very few people in South Africa can speak or understand the Munich Dialect of German, I spoke to him in this dialect. I was surprised to hear that he could speak this dialect so well. I gained the impression that this person was very well trained in the different languages and I actually said to him that he must have had very good teacher in Moscow to be able to speak the different languages so well. To my surprise he admitted have been in Moscow.”²³⁶³

It should be mentioned here that the author has not been able to establish with certainty whether Tsafendas visited Russia and if he did, when that happened. However, even if he did, he did not learn any languages there, as he already knew them. The topic will be discussed in detail in Chapter Six.

Tsafendas asked which Church the priest belonged to and when he heard it was the Roman Catholic Church, Father Probst said “He then suddenly started to swear at the Roman Catholic Church and also at the Portuguese Government in Mozambique, stating that the Nuns in Mozambique Hospitals inject the natives to get rid of them and that the Portuguese Government approves of this.” Angrily, Probst retorted that far from getting rid of natives, the Catholic Church helped them. The priest told Tsafendas he was speaking like one of Patrice Lumumba's Simba rebels in the Congo, accused him of being a Communist and reminded him that Communism was outlawed in South Africa. Finally, he suggested that he would not get far in South Africa with such ideas and attitude and “that it would be better if he returned to Mozambique.”²³⁶⁴

The next day Father Probst called on a security officer at the factory of South African Pulp and Paper Industries (SAPPI), who he named as a “Mr. van Vuuren.” The priest outlined his conversation of the previous day, describing the Mozambican as “a Communist and a ²³⁶² Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁶³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁶⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

dangerous person.” Not knowing his name, he gave a description of him. Probst also told the police that he described the Mandini encounter to Gladstone Dunn, a Coloured man who lived in the Mangete Reserve. The priest said he never saw Tsafendas in the Mangete Reserve but believed he had some influence on the local inhabitants. He said, “During the period he stayed at Mandini, the youngsters in the Mangete Reserve became unruly and aggressive.” This was only suspicion, he said, and later, when Tsafendas was gone, everything became quiet again and the youngsters controllable.²³⁶⁵

Between June 21, 1965 and August 24, 1965, Tsafendas lived at the Durban Men’s Home at 160 Queen Street. A staff member, Kenneth Heugh Ross, said Tsafendas was registered as an interpreter at the Magistrate’s Court but at that time was unemployed. According to Ross’s statement to the police after Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination that Tsafendas “was very fond of discussing politics” and gave him “the idea that he was well versed in politics. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government and was definitely pro-Russian ... in general, Demitrio Tsafendas was opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me ... [Tsafendas] objected to Communists being banished to Robben Island.” Ross was also “aware that Tsafendas possessed a large quantity of literature,” but did not take a note of the names of the books he read.²³⁶⁶

The night clerk at the Home, Robert Harpur Smith, said Tsafendas invariably discussed politics and said if South Africa “was a Communistic state, there would be no need for a Durban Men’s Home because everybody would have sufficient.” He said the South African government’s policies were “rotten” and the members and officials of the United Party and the National Party were “capitalistic roughs.” According to Smith, Tsafendas was a “fanatic on politics and seldomly spoke of anything else.” Smith was also aware that Tsafendas had “a large quantity of literature,” but did not know “the nature thereof.”²³⁶⁷ Tsafendas was also well liked by Mr. J. Willemse, another former landlord who described him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”²³⁶⁸

²³⁶⁵ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²³⁶⁶ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁶⁷ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁶⁸ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8. ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

In June 1965, while he was in Durban, Tsafendas received a letter from Helen Dorothy Daniels, thirty-six, a Coloured woman from Cape Town who was a Minister of the Christian Church. She said she wanted to meet and marry him. In a reply she received on July 10, 1965, Tsafendas said he wanted to meet her before giving a positive response. Helen sent him another four letters and a photo of herself; he replied to the letters but did not enclose a photo. Tsafendas was first mentioned to Helen Daniels in April 1965 when she visited friends and fellow members of her church in Boksburg, some 800 miles north of Cape Town. There she heard very good things about Tsafendas and the friends recommended she should contact him. He was a nice man, her friends said, and the two should meet. Subsequently, Helen asked her friends to find out his address. When she was told he was in Durban but they did not have his address, she wrote a letter to him and gave it to friends who were going to Dublin on holiday. They gave the letter to the Church's preacher in Durban who passed it on to Tsafendas.²³⁶⁹

Daniels was a highly respected minister in her Church and the way she heard about Tsafendas suggests that he was held in high esteem by the Church members who recommended him. The fact that she went to considerable trouble to get in touch with him, attempting to find his address, sending him a letter with a friend of hers and then sending him four more letters and a picture of hers, implies that she expected to meet a good man who was warmly recommended by her friends.

CAPE TOWN, OCTOBER 1965 – AUGUST 1966

Travelling partly by train and partly hitching, Tsafendas journeyed from Durban to Cape Town over nearly twenty-four hours, arriving on August 28, 1965.²³⁷⁰ He visited Helen's parents' home, where she too lived, in the Belleville suburb. The visit was not a success. Neither was impressed by the other when they met in the flesh. Tsafendas said, "She would have been just right for me ... It's a pity she is so fussy."²³⁷¹ Helen testified to the police after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination:

²³⁶⁹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁷⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Peter Daniels's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²³⁷¹ The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, 'I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl.'

“His clothes were dirty and neglected and I had a very bad impression of him... we had a spare room and gave him lodging... after a few days I decided I could never marry such a man... he also did not try to establish a relationship with me... he never discussed our relationship ... I was happy that my earlier proposal died a sudden death.”²³⁷²

On September 1, 1965, Tsafendas applied for reclassification as a Coloured person²³⁷³ and gave up his white identity card. For this reason Tsafendas frequently visited the Department of the Interior and complained to a certain Mr. Rossouw. Tsafendas said Rossouw “always wanted to know where I was staying and whether the people I was staying with were White or Coloured.” Tsafendas was eventually given a blank identity card but it was soon taken back again by Rossouw.²³⁷⁴

The author has not been able to establish for a fact why Tsafendas applied to be reclassified as a Coloured person. He told the police that he did it in order “to marry a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels.”²³⁷⁵ However, according to Helen Daniels, Tsafendas appeared to have no interest in marrying her and made no attempt to establish a relationship with her.²³⁷⁶ The report of the Commission of Enquiry also stated that Tsafendas gave as a reason for his application that “he regarded himself as a Coloured and that he wished to marry a Coloured.”²³⁷⁷ Attorney General W.M. van den Berg stated in a memorandum that according to a statement in his possession “there was never any question of a marriage between him (Tsafendas) and the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels from Bellville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicated that Tsafendas applied for reclassification because he wanted to apply for a business licence in a Coloured area.”²³⁷⁸

Patrick O’Ryan testified that Tsafendas was “favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.”²³⁷⁹ Tsafendas also told David Bloomberg that he wanted to change his classification “because he felt Coloured, and he was ²³⁷² Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁷³ Report of the COE. Chapter IX, Paragraph 1. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²³⁷⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁷⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁷⁶ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁷⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 39. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²³⁷⁸ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

²³⁷⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

more comfortable with the Coloured people, and he had been living with Coloured people in Cape Town.”²³⁸⁰ Tsafendas never spoke to any other of the witnesses interviewed by the author about his application to be reclassified, at least they do not remember such a topic. It is not possible, therefore, to determine for certainty what his reason was. However the likeliest explanation seemed to be that Tsafendas considered himself to be Coloured and wanted to live freely among Coloureds.

On October 16, 1965, Tsafendas left and Helen never saw him again. During the six weeks he stayed with the Daniels family, Tsafendas attended all their church services, sang and prayed with other members and received Communion, while he also got a job at the Power Station in Cape Town. Helen Daniels said “besides his messy ways, I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about travelling abroad were interesting.”²³⁸¹

Tsafendas then moved to No. 7 Prince Street, Cape Town, where Violet Manning rented out rooms. He made a good impression on his landlady, who found him “well-dressed and well-spoken” and took him to be “a businessman ... a man of means.” She was impressed that although his room was “a serviced room,” she found him making his own bed. A few weeks later, however, another tenant, Mrs Ferreira, complained that Tsafendas “was a nuisance... going into the kitchen to fetch water and spilling water on the floor.” Manning told Tsafendas about the complaint and asked him to not go to the kitchen again. However, sometime later, Ferreira complained again. Manning gave Tsafendas notice to leave at the end of the month, which happened to be two days later. Tsafendas returned the keys at the end of November and left.²³⁸²

Shortly before Tsafendas left Manning’s house, Patrick O’Ryan, a Coloured teacher and a member of the Christian Church, was told by a good friend about a “highly cultured gentleman, a very refined gentleman who speaks seven languages” who was looking for accommodation.²³⁸³ O’Ryan met this gentleman, who turned out to be Tsafendas, and invited him to stay with his family, comprising his wife Louisa and eleven children, at 9 Westminster

²³⁸⁰ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

²³⁸¹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

²³⁸² Violet Irene Manning statement to the COE, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 1/5. Subject: Suid Afrikaanse polisie. NASA.

²³⁸³ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

Street in the Lansdowne area of Cape Town. Tsafendas moved in immediately after leaving Manning's house.²³⁸⁴

O'Ryan took a "deep liking" for Tsafendas,²³⁸⁵ considering him to be an enlightened person,²³⁸⁶ and the feeling was mutual. Indeed, O'Ryan would turn out to be the best friend Tsafendas ever had. The new lodger quickly became part of the family and the children called him "Uncle Dimi." Tsafendas loved the children, would babysit them and regularly bought them sweets and toys. O'Ryan said that as head of the family this was embarrassing for him, but Tsafendas continued. What he said, however, was that their father and he had bought the sweets together.²³⁸⁷ Reuben O'Ryan, a son of Patrick, said about Tsafendas, "We all loved him ... he was an adorable man ... he was the answer to our prayers. We were poor and he brought food to our house."²³⁸⁸

O'Ryan spent a lot of time listening to Tsafendas's tales of his adventures around the world. He did not personally have any particular interest in politics, but would address the subject when it came up, which was often. He remembered Tsafendas as being very anti-White, excitedly referring to the treatment of Blacks and Coloureds by the Whites. One day, Tsafendas said that "if he ever got hold of Dr. Verwoerd he would bash his skull" and that he considered him to be "Hitler's best student." O'Ryan did not reveal any of their political discussions to the police when questioned about Tsafendas.²³⁸⁹

Tsafendas talked to many people but confided certain things only to Patrick O'Ryan. One of these was how he got involved with the Christian Church and how he met Tom Tuff. Tsafendas told his friend about Tom's tapeworm story, describing how he copied it and used it to convince the Portuguese he was mad so as to receive amnesty and return to Mozambique, but also to make them stop torturing him when he was under arrest.²³⁹⁰ O'Ryan ²³⁸⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²³⁸⁵ Patrick O'Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²³⁸⁶ Patrick O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

²³⁸⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²³⁸⁸ Reuben O'Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

²³⁸⁹ Patrick O'Ryan in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²³⁹⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

appears to be the only person Tsafendas told about Tom Tuff and the origins of the tapeworm story before the assassination.

One day when Tsafendas was starting on a second or third plate of food, one of the O’Ryan boys, who was not eating his food, asked how he managed to eat so much. His dad joked that it was because Uncle Dimi “has a tapeworm inside him which eats his food.” He added that if his son did not eat his own food, Uncle Dimi would take it and give it to the worm. Fascinated and a little frightened, the boy plied Tsafendas with questions, whereupon Tsafendas opened his eyes wide and breathed heavily, saying that was what happened when the tapeworm ate. After that, the children often asked about the tapeworm and Tsafendas would repeat his performance. Upon hearing about the tapeworm, Louisa told her husband, “that figures,” referring to Tsafendas’s appetite. Patrick did not tell her about Tom Tuff or that the tapeworm was imaginary and he enjoyed joking with Tsafendas about it. He had promised never to divulge his secret.²³⁹¹ Tsafendas built a very good relationship with Louisa because she sympathized with his “problem,” unaware it was a joke.²³⁹²

One time, at a prayer gathering in a church member’s house, Yvette O’Ryan, the four-year-old daughter and youngest child of the family, asked Tsafendas to show their friends how the tapeworm acted. Embarrassed, Patrick said this was not the right place for it, but Tsafendas, evidently untroubled, staged his act. When some parents inquired about the tapeworm, Louisa O’Ryan said it was true, he had a tapeworm, but Patrick said he was just joking. Tsafendas appeared perfectly relaxed about the tapeworm business and put on his act when he was with the O’Ryan children or their friends’ children.²³⁹³

After five months in O’Ryan’s house, Tsafendas moved out²³⁹⁴ because members of Patrick’s extended family were coming to stay for a few months. O’Ryan insisted that there would be space for all but Tsafendas left, knowing that this was not exactly true. The children cried but Tsafendas said he would visit often and would return again when the visitors had gone. In the event, he never did stay with the O’Ryans again because by the time the guests were gone, he was living in a house which was much more convenient for his commute to ²³⁹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²³⁹² Louisa O’Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

²³⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²³⁹⁴ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Patrick O’ Ryan statement to the COE, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

work, while he was embarrassed that O’Ryan continued to refuse any rent from him. However, Tsafendas kept up his close relationship with the O’Ryans, visiting at least once a week and invariably bringing meat for the pot and sweets and toys for the children. He also met with Patrick at their Church’s prayer and social gatherings.²³⁹⁵

Tsafendas thought very highly of the O’Ryan family and loved the children as his own. He often praised Patrick for his generosity, kindness and hospitality. Patrick “never got the impression that there was anything wrong with him.” For him, Tsafendas was a “normal, natural person,”²³⁹⁶ he had “confidence in him” and described him as a “very kindly man” with “a good heart.”²³⁹⁷ Stanley O’Ryan, another of Patrick’s children, saw Tsafendas as a “very down-to-earth man, very friendly.” He said, “I never suspected, even in the slightest, that he might be unstable. Nothing at all. Perfectly normal.”²³⁹⁸

Looking back, Tsafendas concluded that it was O’Ryan who saved him from being hanged after Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination. Later, in prison and in hospital, Tsafendas would often weep, remembering the O’Ryan family and wondering how they were doing and what the children grew up to become.²³⁹⁹ When Tsafendas died in 1999, Patrick and Louisa travelled 1,425 kilometres from Cape Town to Sterkfontein, to attend the funeral. They were the only friends who came.²⁴⁰⁰ As we will see in Chapter Five, Patrick O’Ryan was the defence’s most important witness at Tsafendas’s summary trial and the one who spoke extensively about the tapeworm.

During his time in Cape Town, Tsafendas became friendly with many Greeks, among them Costas Chagios, who owned the Belgravia Café. Chagios told the author about Tsafendas:

“I knew him for about a year ... he used to come to my restaurant and I got to know him very well. He must have been to my restaurant more than fifty times ... he was a gentleman, very polite, with very delicate manners, and it seemed that he was very well-read ²³⁹⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 7 April 2015.

²³⁹⁶ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

²³⁹⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

²³⁹⁸ Stanley O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 9 April 2015.

²³⁹⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁰⁰ South African Press Association, 9 October 1999, ‘Small group gather for Tsafendas’s funeral.’

because of the delicate way he talked and all the things he knew ... he was very well aware of politics and what was happening around the world.”²⁴⁰¹

Most of Chagios' customers were Greeks. They would all greet Tsafendas, but no-one ever invited him to join them and he would sit at the bar and talk to Chagios. The Greeks considered him to be a troublemaker. They knew he was a Communist and against apartheid and that he had been arrested by the Portuguese for subversive activities in Mozambique. Chagios told the author that Tsafendas never told him anything “about a tapeworm and he never said or did anything which would indicate there was something wrong with him. On the contrary, he was very, very clever, certainly cleverer than most people ... he was also very witty. I have no doubt that he was not insane ... The only strange thing I remember about Tsafendas was the fact that his face seemed to be always sweaty... and you could tell that this man was not happy. Many times he seemed sad.”²⁴⁰²

Tsafendas worked as a fitter at the Table Bay power station from September 13, 1965 to October 25, 1965, when he received a one-week notice of dismissal because his work was deemed unsatisfactory. He resigned on the same day to avoid being discharged.²⁴⁰³ In November, 1965, he applied for work with City Tramways in Cape Town. On the 19th of that month he was medically examined, found to be fit to work and duly hired.²⁴⁰⁴ Tsafendas worked for this company as an apprentice bus conductor, number 10236, between December 29, 1965 and January 12, 1966. His supervisor, Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen, found Tsafendas to be “slow” and “lazy,” but he “did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him,” and found him to be “mentally normal.” Before he left, Tsafendas said, “This is too much for me. I cannot do it and I will resign.”²⁴⁰⁵

In November 1965, Tsafendas met Sybie Barendilla, a twenty-eight-year-old Indian-Coloured girl, at a gathering of the Christian Church. He tried to date her, but without success ²⁴⁰¹ Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

²⁴⁰² Costas Chagios in a personal interview, 14 July 2015.

²⁴⁰³ Dpt. of Labour report regarding Dimitri Tsafendas, 323/026034, n.d. K150, Vol. 1, Sub file: 1/2. NASA; The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA; Donald Neville Mackay statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁰⁴ Donal Neville Mackay statement to the COE, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁰⁵ Johannes Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

because she considered him to be too old for her.²⁴⁰⁶ The same month, Tsafendas instructed a Cape Town lawyer, Ismail Essop, to claim $100,000 compensation from the American government for his “forced deportation” from the United States to Greece in 1947. In a four-page affidavit to the US consulate in Cape Town, Tsafendas stated that he had served on American Liberty ships during World War Two, from 1941 to 1946, and was repatriated against his will to Greece, an unknown to him country where he knew no-one, instead of South Africa, where he had had friends and family. He sought payment of $50,000 for damage to his health and $50,000 for loss of income.²⁴⁰⁷ Tsafendas was given a full hearing and the affidavit was forwarded to the State Department, which replied in January 1966 that such claims had to be taken up by the individual’s embassy in Washington or through a federal court. By coincidence, John Hurley, the US vice-consul who interviewed Tsafendas about his compensation claim, would later be in Parliament at Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination.²⁴⁰⁸

On January 13, 1966, Tsafendas applied for work at the Marine Diamond Corporation and was medically examined that same day. Completing a company questionnaire, Tsafendas ticked the “no” box to an inquiry whether he ever had “any mental complaints.” He did not mention any health issues, presenting himself as a fit healthy person. The doctor who examined him²⁴⁰⁹ found Tsafendas to be perfectly healthy and capable of working for the company.²⁴¹⁰

For the first three months, he was employed as a machine operator under the maintenance foreman, Reginald Spence. A few weeks after he started working there, Ralph Lighton, the company’s supervisor, concluded that Tsafendas was “lazy and inefficient,” so he put him in charge of two action-dredge pumps which involved less work, and responsibility. However, Lighton, “never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound” and found Tsafendas to have “excellent reasoning powers.”²⁴¹¹ The change of jobs ²⁴⁰⁶ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

²⁴⁰⁷ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

²⁴⁰⁸ Shaw, 2007: 58.

²⁴⁰⁹ The doctor’s name in the medical report is indecipherable.

²⁴¹⁰ Tsafendas’s Marine Diamond Corporation application for Employment, 13 January 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3. NASA.

²⁴¹¹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

did not improve Tsafendas's work rate. Another employee, Keith Martincich, found him to be "one of the laziest persons" he have ever seen.²⁴¹²

A co-worker in the Marine Diamond Corporation named Hulse, recalled Tsafendas as "talkative" and "not disturbed." Tsafendas later told him that he left the Diamond Corporation because "the work was too hard for an old man like him."²⁴¹³ Carel van Heerden, the company's senior security officer, said once when they were on a boat in "terrible rough seas," everyone became seasick, apart from Tsafendas, who had "adapted well. Upon landing, he [Tsafendas] filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he [Tsafendas] must know the sea," Van Heerden said. He described Tsafendas as "friendly, outgoing, and not aloof ... I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal."²⁴¹⁴ Gillian Lieberman, the company's secretary, said that in conversations with Tsafendas, she got the impression that "he does not agree with authority, Governmental or other." She found him to be "intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange person, a unique character."²⁴¹⁵

On February 25, 1966, Tsafendas made the first of a series of visits to the Ear, Nose and Throat department at Groote Schuur hospital in Cape Town. He complained of a blocked nose and was found to have a deviated nasal septum blocking his left nostril. On April 19, Dr. Leon Goldman performed a surgical resection of the septum and Tsafendas was discharged on April 22. On April 26, he was treated for a recurrence of bleeding, then checked on May 3 and discharged as fit on May 17, 1966.²⁴¹⁶

For about six or seven weeks during April and May of 1966, Tsafendas lived at a home for elderly people kept by Elizabeth Magdalena Groves, a former nurse who had worked in mental institutions. Groves said she found Tsafendas to be a "very good eater" but "besides his rough table manner," she had "nothing against him." She said, "He was completely normal ... a normal person to the best of my knowledge." However, she "received ²⁴¹² Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁴¹³ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966, K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Hulse's first name is not given in this statement, but in Henk van Woerden's A Mouthful of Glass the name is given as John.

²⁴¹⁴ Carel van Heerden statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴¹⁵ Gillian Claire Liebermann statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴¹⁶ Statement by Dr I. Eisenberg regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

complaints that he was argumentative” and he claimed that “Afrikaners were a backward nation.” She said, “It was clear that he (Tsafendas) had nothing good towards Afrikaners.”²⁴¹⁷

Sharing a room with him in Groves’ house was a traffic policeman, Jacobus Johannes Bornman, aged twenty-two. Bornman found his roommate “normal, intelligent and friendly,” but also thought that he was “a lazy person.” Once when Bornman was out of funds, Tsafendas realised this and gave him five cents. When Bornman tried to return the money later, Tsafendas refused to take it. According to Bornman, Tsafendas “stood up a lot for the Coloureds” and “talked about Russia but not as if he had ever been there. He often criticised the South African government and seemed to have a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd. He was neat in his person but his eating habits were messy.”²⁴¹⁸

On May 7, 1966, Tsafendas applied for a veteran’s pension/disability grant from the government.²⁴¹⁹ The Department of Social Welfare referred him to the District Surgeon’s office. Because he was aged under sixty, it was necessary that he be found “unable, owing to infirmity of mind or body” to undertake regular work and therefore qualify for the grant.²⁴²⁰ On June 17, 1966, Tsafendas was examined by the district surgeon, Dr. Ralph Kossew. He told the doctor that in the house where he was living twenty people were murdered by poison in their food. After an examination that lasted “a little bit longer” than ten minutes, the doctor declared that Tsafendas was suffering from a serious form of schizophrenia and that he had delusions of a persecutory nature, and therefore was eligible for the pension since he was unfit to do any work.²⁴²¹ Dr. Kossew’s examination will be considered in detail in the Summary Trial Chapter.

However, as we have seen, whenever Tsafendas wanted to be found fit to work, he always proved fully capable. On at least three occasions in the previous two years (Marine Diamond Corporation, City Tramways and South African Railways), he was examined by doctors and pronounced fit for the work he was seeking. He was also found to be perfectly healthy when examined by Dr. Been and Dr. A.C. McDonald for his residence permit.

²⁴¹⁷ Elizabeth Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴¹⁸ Jacobus Johannes Borman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴¹⁹ Demitrio Tsafendas application Veteran’s Pension, 7 May 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

²⁴²⁰ House of Assembly, Question No. 17. 3 February 1967. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

²⁴²¹ Dr. Ralph Kossew testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966: 88. K150, Vol. 10, File: Union of S.A. NASA.

Tsafendas later told four witnesses that whenever he wanted to be found sane, he was found sane, and whenever he wanted to be found insane, he was found insane.²⁴²²

Even so, Tsafendas lost his pension appeal. Even though he was found “unable to do any work,” according to the Act’s requirement, Tsafendas was disqualified “on the grounds that he had not rendered war service as defined in the Act.”²⁴²³ Unable to find work in the city, Tsafendas applied to the British Consul in Cape Town on May 11, 1966 for “permission to reside in Zambia.”²⁴²⁴ The following day, the Consul informed Tsafendas that he could not help him and he should the Chief Immigration Officer in Zambia for the necessary forms.²⁴²⁵

On May 25, 1966, in an attempt to find work, Tsafendas registered at the Department of Labour,²⁴²⁶ and was interviewed several times thereafter by Ian Boswell, the Department’s administrative assistant. Boswell said Tsafendas was “at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being overtalkative, he showed no symptoms of abnormality during his interviews with me.”²⁴²⁷ Tsafendas was also seen twice by Pieter Geldenhuys, another employer of the Department, who also “never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally.”²⁴²⁸

A clerk in the enquiries office at the Department of Labour, Gideon Cloete, also met Tsafendas twice. The first time was on April 26 of that year as Tsafendas came to his office to apply for illness allowance. Tsafendas came back to Cloete’s office in July of that same year to ask for his assistance to use Cloete’s phone in order to apply for work of which he had three English newspaper clippings of vacancies. Cloete assisted Tsafendas by calling the employers and got hold of a foreman at an Engineering Firm in Maitland where a vacancy existed for someone to do welding. According to Cloete, Tsafendas “seemed eager to get ²⁴²² Gordon Winter’s correspondence with David Beresford, 8 September 1998. From Liza Key’s personal collection; Gordon Winter in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁴²³ House of Assembly, Question No. 17. 3 February 1967. K150, Vol. 12, File: Social Welfare and Pensions, NASA.

²⁴²⁴ Tsafendas letter to the British Consul in Cape Town, 11 May 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/7 Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

²⁴²⁵ H.M. Consul letter to Demetrio Tsafendas, 12 May 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/7 Departement van immigrasie. NASA; There are no further records in the archives regarding Tsafendas’s inquiry and he never spoke about his intention to live in Zambia to any of the witnesses interviewed by the author.

²⁴²⁶ Memorandum of the Department of Labour regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub file: 1/1. NASA.

²⁴²⁷ Ian James Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

²⁴²⁸ Pieter Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966, K150, Vol. 1, Sub file: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

employment, was neatly dressed and had a clean appearance.” Cloete also stated that he saw no signs of abnormality with Tsafendas, “he seemed perfectly normal.”²⁴²⁹

On June 4, 1966, Tsafendas rented a room in Wilhelmina de Vos’s house in Woodstock, Cape Town. She considered that Tsafendas was “dirty and had bad habits and his house manners were poor,” and “that he was work-shy.” After some time, she asked him to leave as she “could not endure his messy ways any longer.” However, she “considered him to be a completely normal person.”²⁴³⁰ During June and late July 1966, Tsafendas had his meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house in Woodstock.²⁴³¹

Mary Scott was Greek, married to a White South African. She often cooked Greek food and many Greeks would visit her house to eat.²⁴³² Scott considered Tsafendas to be “very poorly mannered” but she “never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced,” indeed she thought that he “appeared to be perfectly normal.”²⁴³³ Pamela Abrahams, a South African who often visited the house along with her Greek boyfriend and future husband, Panagiotis Peroglou, said Tsafendas was very well mannered, especially with women. According to Abrahams, “Tsafendas was a gentleman. He would always get up from the table to greet you and he always offered you his seat or went to find you a seat... he was certainly very well mannered.”²⁴³⁴

Panagiotis Peroglou was a good friend of Scott but also does not remember Scott ever complaining about Tsafendas. Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being “very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people... he was very talkative and friendly and he had a lot of respect for the women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair.” Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being “well educated, especially about Greece’s history and Christianity.”²⁴³⁵ Peroglou and Abrahams associated with Tsafendas for about three months and both “never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said

²⁴²⁹ Gideon Cloete testimony at Tsafendas’s summary trial, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Union of South Africa. NASA.

²⁴³⁰ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴³¹ Mary Cathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴³² Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

²⁴³³ Mary Cathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴³⁴ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

²⁴³⁵ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

anything to make us think he was insane. He was definitely sane.” Peroglou and Abrahams do not remember Tsafendas talking politics.²⁴³⁶

Elias Constantaras, another Greek, was friendly with Scott and often ate at her house. He strongly disagrees that Tsafendas had poor manners. The only complaint he remembered from Scott, which she mentioned two or three times, was that Tsafendas talked politics persistently at the table in front of her boarders and she suspected him of being a Communist. According to Constantaras, Scott was afraid of Tsafendas talking like that and she asked him to tell Tsafendas to stop. Constantaras did so and though Tsafendas was not happy that Scott did not tell him herself, he complied with her request.²⁴³⁷

Constantaras remembers Tsafendas discoursing on history. “He knew a lot about Greek and world history.” Tsafendas “was anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid; he described Dr. Verwoerd as ‘Nazi’ and ‘Hitler’s best student’ and the white South Africans as Nazis. He [Tsafendas] believed that Dr. Verwoerd was doing to the Blacks what the Nazis did to the Jews.” Seeing all the books in his room, Constantaras one day asked Tsafendas to lend him one. Tsafendas gave him Jean-Paul Sartre’s “Anti-Semite and Jew,”²⁴³⁸ claiming it was exceptional and that he had just finished reading it.²⁴³⁹

Constantaras quickly returned it since he had been looking for an adventure story. Most of Tsafendas’s books were political and historical, Constantaras said, but he did not notice any Communist or anti-apartheid books, or anything that could have been banned in South Africa. In terms of mental stability, Constantaras remembers Tsafendas as being “perfectly fine. He was not insane. None of us ever got the impression that he could be insane ... I remember I was impressed by the way he was talking ... he talked very nicely; he knew how to speak properly. He sounded like an educated man ... he was very friendly and easy-talking with everyone ...”²⁴⁴⁰

Stratis Vamvarapis, another Greek, lodged with Scott at the same time as Tsafendas and knew him for about a year. He found Tsafendas to be a “strange man - strange as a character, not mentally strange. He was easily crossed when he disagreed with people.”

²⁴³⁶ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

²⁴³⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁴³⁸ Published in 1946, soon after the liberation of Paris from German occupation, Sartre’s keynote essay examined reactions to race hatred, arguing that anti-Semitism was not so much an idea or a point of view as a passion.

²⁴³⁹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

²⁴⁴⁰ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

Initially, Tsafendas had little to say, but became more talkative as they grew to know each other, though he never discussed politics with him. According to Vamvarapis, Tsafendas “never appeared to be schizophrenic or insane” and he never heard him mention a tapeworm.²⁴⁴¹

In late July, after he had left de Vos' boarding house, Tsafendas rented a room in Alice Theyser's house, also in Woodstock, and stayed there until August 30, 1966. Theyser “never got the impression in any way that he (Tsafendas) might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person.”²⁴⁴² During this period Tsafendas started visiting the nearby “Barlings Tea Lounge.” Herbert Summers, the owner, “never had reason to even suspect that he (Tsafendas) could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”²⁴⁴³

In July 1966, Tsafendas's visited Mr. N.D. Hartford, a reporter of the Cape Argus. Earlier in the year, he had asked Hartford if there was any news of the freedom fighters in Mozambique due to his continuing interest in efforts to overthrow Portuguese rule in Mozambique. He had described himself as a rebel from Mozambique and Hartford, thought Tsafendas might provide material for a magazine article. During the subsequent, seventy-five-minute interview, Tsafendas described how he had entered South Africa illegally from Mozambique in 1936 when he was a teenager. He made no criticism of South Africa but denounced Portuguese rule and said he still suffered from headaches as a result of police brutality when he was arrested in Lisbon after the Second World War.²⁴⁴⁴ Hartford considered Tsafendas to be normal – he had “no reason to believe that he was mentally defective.”²⁴⁴⁵

Sometime in July, Tsafendas started observing the Parliament building to explore the possibility of assassinating Dr. Verwoerd. His preference was to kidnap him and exchange him for political prisoners, but he knew that would be impossible on his own. He had hoped that one day the common people would storm the building, as the French revolutionaries had done with the Bastille. He visited the area two or three times in a week, though not every day so as not to be noticed. He would sit on a bench and feed the birds while observing the ²⁴⁴¹ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

²⁴⁴² Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁴³ Herbert Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁴⁴ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

²⁴⁴⁵ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 75. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

building.²⁴⁴⁶ One day, a man came out of Parliament and began feeding the birds. They started chatting and Tsafendas mentioned that he was unemployed. The man told him that he was a Parliamentary messenger and that the Parliament office was desperate for messengers and Tsafendas should apply for a position. He assured him he would be accepted as they were short-staffed. Tsafendas couldn't believe his luck.²⁴⁴⁷

Tsafendas bought a new suit and paid for a shave in a barber's shop. On July 18, 1966, he put on his suit, took his two best references, from Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul and from Fries and Son in Frankfurt.²⁴⁴⁸ He was interviewed by Piet Burger, the Chief Messenger at the Assembly, and two senior messengers Piet Schuin and Sydney Wiehand. It was a standard practice that two messengers would be present when conducting "interviews for the reason being that if they notice something about the person being interviewed, they could bring it to Mr. Burger's attention."²⁴⁴⁹ "Nothing out of the ordinary" was noticed about Tsafendas, who seemed to be "the same as any other person that had worked there."²⁴⁵⁰

Sydney Wiehand noted that a man with his qualifications could easily get a better job elsewhere. Tsafendas replied that he "couldn't find any work at the moment, and he must fill his stomach."²⁴⁵¹ He was so eager for the job that he expressed his willingness to work for R100 per month rather than the normal messenger salary of R238.²⁴⁵² Tsafendas was notified in writing on July 20, 1966 to report for duty at the Parliament on August 1, 1966.²⁴⁵³ Also interviewed on that day was Felix George Miles. Miles did not talk to Tsafendas but "did not notice anything unusual about his clothing or behaviour." Both men started work that same day.²⁴⁵⁴ Tsafendas's salary was R238 per month.²⁴⁵⁵

²⁴⁴⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁴⁷ Interview by Mr T.I. Potgieter, Senior Magistrate, Pretoria with Demitriou Tsafendas at the Pretoria Central Prison on 20 October 1987. Correctional Services. File: 80/0043, A123, Dimitrio Tsafendas, Vol. 1. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁴⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁴⁹ Piet Bester Burger interviewed by Judge van Wyk on behalf of the Commission of Enquiry, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File Excerpts from testimony. NASA.

²⁴⁵⁰ Petrus Robert Samuel Schuin interviewed by Mr. Terblanche on behalf for the Commission of Inquiries. 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File Excerpts from testimony. NASA.

²⁴⁵¹ Sydney William Wiehand testimony to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁴⁵² Die Volksblad, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Dimitri Tsafendas. Nuwe feite oor bode onthul.' K150, Vol. 6, File 4. NASA.

²⁴⁵³ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 73. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁴⁵⁴ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File 1. NASA.

²⁴⁵⁵ Die Volksblad, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Dimitri Tsafendas. Nuwe feite oor bode onthul.' K150, Vol. 6, File 4. NASA.

In 1987, when he was in Pretoria Central Prison, Tsafendas described to a senior magistrate, T.I. Potgieter, how he got the job in the Parliament. He approximately said the same things he would later tell the other witnesses, excluding though some crucial details:

“One day I was sitting in front of the Assembly and I bought fish and chips from a Portuguese shop across the road... I sat on a bench and started throwing pieces to the seagulls... While I was doing that, somebody comes and sits next to me on the bench. He was a small man, dark, he says, ‘What are you doing here?’ I says to him, ‘Well, I’m doing nothing.’ He says to me, ‘Are you out of a job?’ I said, ‘Yes.’ He says to me, ‘Look, there is a part-time job here. Don’t say I told you. Go there and tell them, inquire if you can get the job, but don’t say I sent you or told you about it.’ So, I went there ...”²⁴⁵⁶

In the meantime, and while Tsafendas was working full-time at the Parliament, his application for reclassification was being slowly but thoroughly examined by the South African authorities. After exchanges of files and correspondence among various departments, it was discovered that Demitri Tsafendas was the same person as Demitrio Tsafantakis, who had entered South Africa illegally in 1939 and had been on the Government’s Stop List since September 1959. Consequently, on August 8, 1966, the Secretary of the Interior submitted a memorandum and an order for Tsafendas’s removal to the Minister of the Interior. The following day, August 9, the Minister approved the recommendation and signed a warrant for Tsafendas’s deportation. However, due to the snail’s pace of the movement of the bureaucracy, the warrant was never executed.²⁴⁵⁷

THE ELENI, JULY – SEPTEMBER 1966

Tsafendas spent much of July and August working part-time for Michaelis Augustides, owner of a clothing store, Mike’s Outfitters, in Woodstock, in addition to his full-time job at the Parliament. Augustides said Tsafendas came by his shop one day and said he could contact ships at Cape Town docks and bring seamen to his shop. He agreed and when Tsafendas brought customers he paid him commission totalling about ten rand.²⁴⁵⁸

²⁴⁵⁶ Interview by Mr T.I. Potgieter, Senior Magistrate, Pretoria with Demitriou Tsafendas at the Pretoria Central Prison on 20 October 1987. Correctional Services. File: 80/0043, A123, Dimitrio Tsafendas, Vol. 1. NASA.

²⁴⁵⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter IX. 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria. December.

²⁴⁵⁸ Michaelis Augustides statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

Neville Judson, a salesman at the shop, accompanied Tsafendas to the docks on about three occasions and found customers, some of whom he brought back to the shop by car while others came on their own. Tsafendas always took him to the same Greek ship, the Eleni. Judson chatted a lot with Tsafendas and said that he “never got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared like a normal man with a lot of normal reasoning powers.”²⁴⁵⁹ Nick Augustides, Mike’s nephew, also worked at Mike’s Outfitters at the time, and he remembers Tsafendas “talking violently about politics and about the apartheid system ... he was very passionate about politics. He definitely was not insane.”²⁴⁶⁰

The Eleni had moored in Cape Town for repairs on July 24, 1966, having sustained damage to its rudder en route to the Persian Gulf.²⁴⁶¹ She had a crew of thirty-eight, of whom thirty-four were Greek,²⁴⁶² nine of them from the tiny Greek island of Kasos. When Tsafendas told them he was a former seaman and his origins were also in Kasos, the men were sceptical, thinking that he was simply seeking their friendship. They were surprised when he told them about his step-mother, Marika, who was from the island, and named some of his relatives still living there. That he was an ex-seaman with origins in Kasos immediately made Tsafendas popular with the crew, especially with the Kasos islanders.²⁴⁶³

On his first visit, one of the crew, Emmanuel Tsabouniaris, gave Tsafendas money to buy him a couple of short-sleeved T-shirts and some cigarettes ashore. When Tsafendas left the ship late that night, his crewmates made fun of Tsabouniaris, saying, “Don’t expect to see him or your money again.” However, Tsafendas arrived with the T-shirts and cigarettes early next morning. Said Tsabouniaris, “He gave me the change and I told him to keep it, but he insisted on giving it back to me.” According to Tsabouniaris, Tsafendas was “very friendly and talkative ... good hearted, very polite and very well mannered; a true gentleman.”²⁴⁶⁴

Tsafendas spent much of his time at the Eleni over the next month and half. He felt at home on the tanker and was comfortable with the crew, most of whom were leftists, some Communists. They were all much younger than he was, many in their twenties, and they were ²⁴⁵⁹ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5, Subject: South African Police. NASA.

²⁴⁶⁰ Nick Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

²⁴⁶¹ John Patrick Leach testimony to the COE, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5, Subject: South African Police. NASA.

²⁴⁶² Eleni crew list, 18 July 1966, Greek Department of Maritime Labour, Office D; Eleni crew list, 24 July 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA.

²⁴⁶³ Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015.

²⁴⁶⁴ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

fascinated by Tsafendas's stories from his many adventures around the world and "listened attentively to him."²⁴⁶⁵ He visited every night and often at lunch. Afternoons, he would take crew members on tours of Cape Town, sometimes to Mike's Outfitters, and once to a Greek Orthodox Church service.²⁴⁶⁶ He also taught Emanuel Tsabouniaris, Panteleimon Aspiotis and some other sailors how to fish lobster which was Tsafendas favourite food.²⁴⁶⁷ Some of the men asked Tsafendas to take them to a good Greek restaurant. One evening, he did so, and despite their protests, paid the bill for them all. He said that they were "strangers in his town" and he should pay.²⁴⁶⁸

Many nights aboard the tanker were spent singing Greek songs and sometimes, with some of the crew, Communist and partisan songs. The sailors were surprised that Tsafendas knew the lyrics of all the songs, which he would sing passionately, often weeping during the partisan songs. Some of the Communist crew members' relatives had fought in the Greek Civil War or were imprisoned and exiled afterwards. Tsafendas confided to some of them that he had joined the DSE, too, but "had not shot any fascists" because he was sent to Athens to do clandestine work there. He also spoke to some of them about his arrests and imprisonment by the Portuguese. One day, when some of the crew were telling stories of their compulsory military service in Greece, Tsafendas told them proudly that he had pretended to be crazy to avoid service in the Portuguese army.²⁴⁶⁹

When the seamen asked Tsafendas to recommend shopping places in Cape Town, he urged them not to spend their money in Cape Town's stores since they would be contributing to South Africa's economy. To help the men understand the political situation, Tsafendas took at least eight of them to a "small village area" where Black South Africans lived, probably a township. The men were Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolas Billis, Nikolas Kambouris, George Kantas, Michalis Vasilakis, Manolis (Emanuil) Mastromanolis, Grigoris Pouftis and ²⁴⁶⁵ Peter Protoulis statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. der Stafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁶⁶ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; I. Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁶⁷ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

²⁴⁶⁸ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 15 February 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁶⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

Dimitris Zafiriadis. He explained that they had been displaced from their former homes by the government, that they needed passes to travel from one place to another and that they were forbidden to enter some areas at all. Some of the Africans there knew Tsafendas and greeted him warmly. He took them to a Black family's house where they had tea. Tsafendas knew the family and brought presents for their three young children.²⁴⁷⁰

What they saw had an enormous and profound effect on the Eleni men; saddened and angered, some of them said the Afrikaners “should be taught a lesson.” The boatswain, Manolis Mastromanolis, declared that “the South Africans need a good whipping.”²⁴⁷¹ Michalis Vasilakis, the tanker's fireman, equated the conditions he saw with those in Greece during the Second World War, when that country was under German occupation.²⁴⁷² Dimitrios Zafiriadis, the tanker's “donkeyman,” who was a Communist and had become very close to Tsafendas, was deeply affected. He wept when they left and referring to South Africa's Whites, exclaimed, “What kind of people are these?” Zafiriadis agreed with Tsafendas's suggestion to spend the minimum necessary while in South Africa, and urged the other seamen to do the same.²⁴⁷³ Nikolas Kambouris, the assistant cook, told the author, “Everyone was in shock at the appalling conditions in which these people lived. I had heard of apartheid, but I didn't know it was like this. I saw Black men and children in the streets with poor, torn clothes, but the places they lived was a real shock, not only for me, but for everyone. We were not prepared for it. It hit us very hard; it was like a fist in our bellies.”²⁴⁷⁴ None of those who were taken to this “small village” ever forgot it. While in Cape Town they kept their money in their pockets and even urged men from other vessels to do the same.²⁴⁷⁵

According to some seamen, Tsafendas talked incessantly about politics and was very aware of what was happening around the world. He often discussed the political situation in South Africa with the crew and gave his opinions freely. It was clear to them that he strongly ²⁴⁷⁰ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁷¹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015.

²⁴⁷² Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁷³ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁷⁴ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

²⁴⁷⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

opposed apartheid and colonialism. He repeatedly called Dr. Verwoerd a “bastard” and a “tyrant,” and equated the white government with the Nazis, denouncing government members and supporters as “Hitler’s best students” on account of what they were doing to the non-White South Africans. He also named Cuba as the place he wanted to live the rest of his life, because of its “socialism and exoticism.”²⁴⁷⁶

Cleanthes Alachiotis considered Tsafendas to be “fanatical against apartheid” and said, “He referred to the South African Prime Minister as the monster who created it all. He was very anti-South African, always telling us what the Whites had done to the Blacks. He said most Greeks in South Africa were no better, as they, too, were racist and fascist. He called the Prime Minister ‘Hitler’s best student.’”²⁴⁷⁷

Once, Vasilakis brought a South African newspaper with Dr. Verwoerd’s photograph. When Vasilakis pointed to the picture, Tsafendas directed a spitting gesture at the floor, a classical Greek demonstration of contempt.²⁴⁷⁸ When Kambouris warned that he should be careful about such gestures or he could be arrested by the South African police, Tsafendas smiled, said “I will be fine,” and pointed to his temple, meaning he had the brains to avoid the police.²⁴⁷⁹ Some thirty years later, when Tsafendas was in Pretoria Prison hospital, Father Minas Constandinou showed him a newspaper photograph of Dr. Verwoerd and he repeated the spitting gesture.²⁴⁸⁰

Tsafendas made a very good impression on all the seamen. Georgios Kantas remembers Tsafendas as a “kind-hearted, compassionate man who cared a lot for the people ... an idealist, very passionate about politics; a passionate Communist ... very anti-fascist and anti-colonialist.”²⁴⁸¹ Dionisis Lallis, the wiper of the tanker, did not associate much with Tsafendas, but remembers him as “a very polite man; it looked like he had a good upbringing.”²⁴⁸² Nikolaos Billis was impressed with Tsafendas’s “vast knowledge about ²⁴⁷⁶ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁷⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

²⁴⁷⁸ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; V. Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁷⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

²⁴⁸⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁸¹ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

²⁴⁸² Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

politics and history” and remembers him as “an intelligent and cultured man.”²⁴⁸³ Vasilakis said Tsafendas seemed “able to convince anyone that his political ideas were right. ... You couldn’t disagree with him about anything. He always found a way to convince you that he was right. He was very, very able in reasoning and developing and explaining an argument. He was extremely good with words and arguments.”²⁴⁸⁴

The seamen were surprised by Tsafendas’s knowledge, but also that he was softly spoken.²⁴⁸⁵ “We were all wondering how come he knew all these things. How could he be talking like this? He was talking like a university professor.”²⁴⁸⁶ Some of the crew began calling Tsafendas “Professor” for his fluency and this made Tsafendas laugh. Vasilakis said, “I can’t explain it, but I remember he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct, words. He knew how to speak and how to pick up words. He was talking like a professor; this is what we used to say between us and what we called him ... He was a very knowledgeable man.”²⁴⁸⁷

Soon after he started work at Parliament, Tsafendas realised that it would be possible to secrete a bomb inside the building or to kill Dr. Verwoerd alone. He dismissed the idea of the bomb because Helen Suzman and non-politicians might die too, and decided he would personally assassinate Dr. Verwoerd. The problems were, how to do it and how to get away. He decided he would shoot Dr. Verwoerd from the lobby, run from the building, get to the docks and hide in the Eleni. If he acted shortly before the tanker was due to leave, he could be out of the country within hours.²⁴⁸⁸

Tsafendas now needed a firearm. He knew a licence was necessary and he knew seamen often carried guns for protection, so he approached Vasilis Perselis from the Eleni saying he wanted a weapon to scare people off.²⁴⁸⁹ Perselis referred him to Mastromanolis.²⁴⁹⁰ Mastromanolis told him that he only had a knife and he would not sell it as it was a souvenir from Australia. However, he knew that Nickolas Mavronas, the ²⁴⁸³ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

²⁴⁸⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 5 December 2015.

²⁴⁸⁵ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

²⁴⁸⁶ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

²⁴⁸⁷ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁴⁸⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁸⁹ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

²⁴⁹⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

seventeen-year-old galley boy, had a pistol, a Beretta, which he bought recently in Cape Town. He had not seen it but Mavronas claimed it was genuine. Mastromanolis thought Mavronas might be willing to sell the gun for a quick profit and told Tsafendas that he could let him have it, along with a knife, for eighty American dollars.²⁴⁹¹ Mastromanolis said there were no bullets but Tsafendas assumed they could be bought locally. Tsafendas did not have eighty dollars, so decided to wait until he got his wages at the end of August.²⁴⁹²

Meanwhile, Tsafendas pondered the details of his escape and scoured the tanker for a hiding place. Once, two seamen found him wandering near the engine room. It was unusual for him to be there but Tsafendas said he was lost and the seamen did not think there was anything suspicious. Soon, Tsafendas found his ideal place and decided to test it. One evening after dinner, he pretended that he was leaving, but instead hid in the secret place. He took a can of beer with him, so that if he was found, he could say he got drunk. The rehearsal worked and nobody noticed him. A few days later, he repeated the rehearsal with the same results. He also calculated how long it took to get from Parliament to the Eleni, as well as figuring out the best way of getting there.²⁴⁹³

Sometime in early September, Tsafendas visited the O’Ryans and as usual brought presents for the children. At one point, he told young Reuben that if anything happened to him, he would like him to have his tool box containing his welding equipment. Reuben was only sixteen at the time and did not see anything untoward about Tsafendas’s wish. Reuben never did get the tool box, which is assumed to have been confiscated by the police.²⁴⁹⁴

Tsafendas spent the following days waiting for the repairs to the Eleni to be completed, so he could put his assassination plan into effect. On August 30, the perfect opportunity seemed to arrive when a Parliamentary messenger, Fred Feinauer, asked Tsafendas to work as a waiter at a function organized by Parliamentary correspondents, which Dr. Verwoerd was scheduled to attend. The event was set for Friday, September 2, one day before the Eleni’s scheduled departure and Tsafendas was one of seven messengers asked ²⁴⁹¹ Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015.

²⁴⁹² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁹⁴ Reuben O’ Ryan in a personal interview, 15 April 2016.

to serve drinks.²⁴⁹⁵ He planned to shoot Dr. Verwoerd, flee to the ship, which he knew like the back of his hand, and hide until departure the next day.²⁴⁹⁶

The following day, Thursday, September 1, 1966, a Ministry of Interior clerk typed a letter to be sent to the police directing them to serve the removal order on Tsafendas. However, it was not dispatched in time for the police to act.²⁴⁹⁷ The same time, Tsafendas bought eighty dollars from Barclays Bank on Adderley Street.²⁴⁹⁸ When the clerk, Brenda Jessie Nicholson, asked him why he needed the money, he said he was going to Mozambique. He paid R57.78, mainly in very dirty R2 notes.²⁴⁹⁹

Tsafendas then took a taxi to the Eleni. Mastromanolis, who had forgotten about the deal, said it was not he who had the Beretta but Nikos Mavronas. Mastromanolis was under the impression that the gun was real and it was only when he asked for it from Mavronas that he discovered it was a gas pistol. However, it was a very close replica of the real thing and Mavronas, who wanted to make a quick profit, told Mastromanolis to sell it to Tsafendas anyway and they would share the money. Mastromanolis agreed, reasoning that Tsafendas said he needed a pistol to “scare people off,” not kill them, and the gun would be good enough to do that. Mastromanolis wrapped the weapon in a newspaper, put it in a plastic bag and took it to Tsafendas. Since there were a lot of people around, Tsafendas took the bag without opening it or examining the gun.²⁵⁰⁰ He glanced and saw it was metallic and assumed it was the authentic article.²⁵⁰¹

That night, when Tsafendas got home, he discovered the weapon was only a gas pistol. The following day, Friday, September 2, the day of the function, as soon as he finished his work at Parliament, he returned to the ship with the gas pistol and asked Mastromanolis and Mavronas for another gun or his money back. The men said they had no other firearms and that they had spent the thirty dollars. Tsafendas appealed to the captain but received no

²⁴⁹⁵ Fred Peinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁹⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁴⁹⁷ Report of the COE. Chapter IX, Paragraph 5. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁴⁹⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁴⁹⁹ Brenda Nicholson statement to the police, 12 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁰⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015.

²⁵⁰¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

help from him.²⁵⁰² He then asked Tsabouniaris for a knife he knew he had, but Tsabouniaris did not want to sell it as it was a souvenir.²⁵⁰³ Angered and disappointed, he returned to Parliament and helped to serve drinks at the reception where he had planned to kill Dr. Verwoerd. As it happened, the Prime Minister did not attend.²⁵⁰⁴

After the function, Tsafendas returned to the tanker because the crew had organized a party for their last night in the city. Tsafendas sat at a table with a number of his seamen friends, among them Nikolaos Billis, Giorgos Kantas, Cleanthes Alachiotis, Nikolaos Kambouris, Michalis Vasilakis, Dimitris Zafiriadis and Grigoris Pouftis. Also there was Ioannis Xexenis, the ship's carpenter and, at fifty-seven, the oldest member of the crew. He was a quiet man who mostly kept himself to himself, though Tsafendas knew him in passing. During the conversation after the men's meal, Xexenis mentioned a Greek village, where one of his parents was born. Also from the village, he said, was a Greek man, Ioannis (Jean) Karageorgis, who had assassinated Prince Rwagasore, the first elected President of Burundi after that nation's independence. He asked Tsafendas whether he had met him in Africa. Tsafendas said no, but he had heard of his case. The other crew members were unaware of the assassination, which took place on October 13, 1961, so Tsafendas told them about it. He fiercely condemned the murder, stating that Karageorgis was hired by Belgian colonialists and that he was rightfully executed after his arrest.²⁵⁰⁵

A discussion about assassination ensued, prompting several bored men to leave. Others listened as the conversation extended to other assassinations such as John F. Kennedy's and that of King George I of Greece. Tsafendas said that if Karageorgis had assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, it would have been justifiable, a tyrannicide, because South Africa's Prime Minister was a tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people.²⁵⁰⁶ This, he said, did not apply to Prince Rwagasore, who was democratically elected. The ²⁵⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁰³ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 14 May 2016.

²⁵⁰⁴ Fred Peinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁰⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵⁰⁶ Some thirty years after the assassination, Tsafendas repeated his belief that assassinating Dr. Verwoerd was justified because he was a tyrant and a dictator to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Ioannis Tsaftaridis and Spiros Randos.

conversation lasted late into the night, with some men agreeing with Tsafendas, others disagreeing.²⁵⁰⁷

As we will see in chapters Four and Six, two witnesses told the police and the Commission of Enquiry that three days before Dr. Verwoerd was assassinated on September 6, the evening before the Eleni left Cape Town, the Prime Minister's death was discussed on board the tanker. Judge van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry referred to this in his Report, commenting that "there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning before the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered."²⁵⁰⁸ However, the Commission did not mention anything regarding Tsafendas's justifiable assassination claim; it only speculated about how the conversation might have started, despite the fact that the sailors had told the South African police about this conversation.

The next afternoon, Saturday, September 3, Tsafendas visited the Eleni for the last time. He brought cigarettes and sweets for various friends and gave books to Kambouris, Vasilakos and Zafiriadis. They do not remember the titles but they were "against apartheid" and, according to Tsafendas, were "banned in South Africa."²⁵⁰⁹ At 17.00-17.30 that day, the Eleni weighed anchor and sailed away,²⁵¹⁰ leaving Tsafendas on dry land. On the evening of Sunday, September 4, 1966, Tsafendas attended a service at the home of a fellow church member, a Mr. Hall, in Pinelands, Cape Town.²⁵¹¹

Monday was a public holiday and Rosamund Popkiss, the woman in whose house Tsafendas was then living saw him pacing up and down outside, looking troubled. He told her he was very worried and that he had something in mind. She did not ask him what it was.²⁵¹² With the shooting plan a non-starter, he decided he would use a knife to stab Dr. Verwoerd. He knew that it would not be possible to get away after stabbing him, but he "did ²⁵⁰⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵⁰⁸ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁵⁰⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵¹⁰ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

²⁵¹¹ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol 12, File Verklarings. NASA.

²⁵¹² Rosamund Elizabeth Popkiss statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

not care about the consequences” for what would happen to him afterwards. He was “so disgusted” with apartheid, he decided to go ahead with his plan and kill its architect, hoping that sooner or later a “change of policy would take place” as a consequence.²⁵¹³

TSAFENDAS'S PARTICIPATION IN THE GREEK CIVIL WAR

A hugely important event in Tsafendas's life which has remained largely unknown is his participation in the Greek Civil War as a fighter with the Democratic Army (DSE), the military wing of the Greek Communist Party. Because of the significance of this issue, it is important to check all available evidence on the subject. Tsafendas spoke about this part of his life to several other people who were close to him, such as his immediate family, his first cousin, Mary Eendracht, Artemis Michaletos, his aunt who brought him up in Egypt, and his good friends Andreas Babiolakis, Elias Constantaras, George Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Father Nikola Banovic, Costas Poriазis and Nick Papadakis. None of them doubted that Tsafendas had participated in the war.²⁵¹⁴ Tsafendas told his half-sister Katerina Pnefma and Artemis Michaletos's family that he was recruited to the Democratic Army by his good childhood friend, John Michaletos, who was known to all of them and Artemis's nephew. He also showed them a picture of himself in Bulgaria in 1961 with people he claimed had fought with him in the Greek Civil War.²⁵¹⁵

Tsafendas also talked about his participation in the war to Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis. He did not go into detail, but he said he “never shot any fascists” because his unit was constantly on the run from Governmental forces in the mountains. He said he was sent to Athens to do clandestine work for the DSE because he was not known to the authorities there as a Communist. Leaving the mountains, he buried his partisan clothes in a field near a certain tree, intending to collect them when he was called back for action. He could not go back to the city in such clothes as he would have been arrested or killed. For reasons unknown to the author, he never returned for his clothes. He gave the priests precise details of the burial spot as well as vivid descriptions of the places he saw when he was in the mountains.²⁵¹⁶ He said the same things to some of the Eleni seamen.²⁵¹⁷ None of the priests or the seamen doubted Tsafendas's stories. They believed it would have been impossible for him to describe situations and locations so precisely if he was not present, but also to just lie to them.

²⁵¹³ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵¹⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 19 June 2014; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriазis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²⁵¹⁵ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

Perhaps the strongest evidence for Tsafendas's participation in the war comes from Father Nikola Banovic. Tsafendas talked to him about this period of his life when they lived in the same house in Istanbul in 1961. Father Nikola urged him not to mention this part of his life to anyone in Turkey. At some point during his stay in Istanbul, Tsafendas informed Father Nikola that a "former comrade of his from the Civil War" would come from Sofia, Bulgaria to see him. The priest met this man, but could not remember his name. However, he clearly remembered that he was a dentist who fled Greece and found refuge in Bulgaria after the Civil War, as did many Greek Communists. Father Nikola said Tsafendas and his friend talked in front of him constantly about their time in the mountains during the war. In December 1961, Tsafendas told Father Nikola that he was going to Sofia to see his friend again as well as other former comrades who had also found refuge in Sofia. From there, he planned to travel to Athens to spend Christmas at the house of an old friend who was also a DSE fighter. Father Nikola could not recall the name of the friend, but it was John Michaletos, as Tsafendas later told his half-sister Katerina that he had spent Christmas in Athens with his family. Christmas of 1961 was the only Christmas Tsafendas had spent in Athens, so clearly it was Michaletos he visited.²⁵¹⁸ This confirms Father Nikola's statement that Tsafendas went to Athens to spend Christmas with an old comrade from the Civil War, while it also confirms what he told his half-sister, that he spent Christmas at the home of John Michaletos, the friend who recruited him in the DSE.

Tsafendas told the South African police that he went to Sofia from Istanbul and then moved on to Greece.²⁵¹⁹ This is compatible with what Father Nikola said. Furthermore, ²⁵¹⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁵¹⁷ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵¹⁸ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

²⁵¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Tsafendas appeared in 1963 in Mozambique with silver steel teeth and Father Nikola is positive that he did not have them in Istanbul in 1961. Tsafendas also told several people that he had his teeth made in Bulgaria.²⁵²⁰ This again suggests that the person who worked on Tsafendas's teeth was the dentist mentioned by Father Nikola.

Tsafendas mentioned fighting in the Civil War to some of the Eleni seamen whose relatives had also taken part.²⁵²¹ Nikolas Mavronas, one of the seamen, said in an interview with the South African police that Tsafendas told them that he "joined the Greek Army during the war and that he was an expert shot."²⁵²² It is not clear from the statement which war he was talking about. It seems likely that the South African policeman who questioned Mavronas was unaware that there had been a civil war in Greece and thought Mavronas was referring to the Second World War. Presumably this was why he did not ask him to clarify it. In addition, the full name of the DSE was Democratic Army of Greece. During the Second World War it was called ELAS and some people continued to refer to the DSE as ELAS, since it was basically the same force. ELAS in Greek means Greece, so when Mavronas said the Greek Army, he would have meant ELAS or the DSE, certainly not the regular Greek Army. The six seamen who participated in the conversation remember clearly that Tsafendas told them that he had served with the Allied Navy during the Second World War and with the DSE during the Greek Civil War. They are quite positive that Tsafendas never said he joined the Greek regular Army and that he had indeed joined the DSE. None of them doubted that Tsafendas had joined the DSE. It was clear to them that he knew how the DSE was organized and how it operated.²⁵²³

The South African police were aware of John Michaletos, though it is not clear what exactly they knew about him or his relationship with Tsafendas. However, it is likely that they knew, perhaps because Tsafendas himself told during interrogation, that Michaletos was the person who recruited him into the DSE. Costas Michaletos was asked specifically by the ²⁵²⁰ Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 29 March 2015.

²⁵²¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

²⁵²² Nicolas Mavronas statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

²⁵²³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

South African police about a “John Michaletos.” The police had allegedly found a letter by John Michaletos in Tsafendas’s possession. Costas Michaletos told the police then:

“Dr. John Michaeletos, who also had his schooling in Middleburg (Transvaal) and went to school with Dimetrios, is currently a physician in Greece. He has a clinic in Athens, Greece ... When I visited Greece in 1952, I heard that he was an active Communist... The letter which was found in the Bible of Dimetrios Tsafantakis, supposedly comes from Dr. John Michaeletos of Athens, because they know each other well and grew up together.”²⁵²⁴

That Costas Michaletos refers to John as “an active Communist” suggests that he was specifically asked by the police about a “John Michaletos” who was a Communist. It also suggests that this Michaletos was also active during the Civil War, as was usually the case with the Communists in 1952. The Greek Communist Party was outlawed immediately after the Civil War and its members hunted down. In 1952, eight Communists were executed in Athens while thousands of others were imprisoned or exiled. This would be compatible with Tsafendas’s claim that his childhood and Communist friend, John Michaletos, had recruited him to the DSE during the war, since Michaletos was an “active Communist” at the time. As we have seen, there was another John Michaletos who was very close to Tsafendas; he too had grown up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques and he was also a Communist. This John Michaletos was a professor of literature and a cousin of Dr. Michaletos, the physician with a practice in Athens. He was also a member of the Greek Communist Party and of the DSE. As stated, the author has not been able to establish which of the two recruited Tsafendas to the DSE and corresponded with him at the time, but it appears likely that it was the literature professor, for a reason we will examine soon.

It was known that Tsafendas corresponded with several people around the world and it is likely that the police found some of these letters at the time of his arrest. Then, why would the police ask about someone in Greece corresponding with him? It could have been the contents of the letter (which was not found in the archives), but it could also have been information that Michaletos had recruited Tsafendas to the DSE. The police enquiries about John Michaletos did not stop after the approach to Costas Michaletos. Indeed, they went to great lengths to find out more about this Communist Michaletos. This suggests that Michaletos was not just someone who was corresponding with Tsafendas.

²⁵²⁴ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

On November 7, 1966, the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death contacted the Portuguese Embassy in Pretoria "requesting any possible information regarding an individual named John Machletos from whom, allegedly, Demitrio Tsafendas, who claims to be a Portuguese citizen, would have received mail from abroad." The Commission's request was passed by the embassy to the Director General of PIDE in Lisbon.²⁵²⁵ On November 17, PIDE sent a letter to the Director-General for Political Affairs and Internal Administration in Lisbon stating that "there are no records of John Machletos in the registries of this Police."²⁵²⁶

That the Commission contacted the Portuguese for information about Michaletos suggests that this man was not just someone who was writing letters to Tsafendas, although that cannot be ruled out. It seems rather unlikely that the Commission would have sought information about a simple letter-writer. Tsafendas corresponded regularly with people abroad, like Father Nikola Banovic in Istanbul, Manuel in Lourenço Marques or George Grispos in Rhodesia for example. No inquiries were made about any of them, although it cannot be ruled out that the South African authorities did not become aware of such information. That Michaletos was a Communist and that Tsafendas had claimed he was the one who recruited him to the DSE must have been known to the South African authorities and would explain why they tried to locate him. The logical thing for the Commission to do would have been to contact the Greek authorities since Michaletos was Greek and according to Costas Michaletos, he was a doctor who had a clinic in Athens. However, the obvious failure of the Greeks to locate him would explain why the Portuguese were contacted about him on November 7, two weeks after Tsafendas's summary trial ended.

A feasible explanation for the failure of the Greeks to locate Michaletos is that his name was misspelled by the Commission. It appeared as Machletos in the Commission's request and also in the PIDE letter to the government in Lisbon, therefore it is very possible that it was also misspelled when it was given to the Greek Authorities. It is also very possible that the Greek authorities located Dr. Michaletos, as it could not have been difficult to do so since he had a clinic in Athens, but it turned out that he was not the Michaletos they were looking for. This angle suggests then that it is more possible that Tsafendas's recruiter was not the doctor but the professor.

²⁵²⁵ Confidential Letter of the Director-General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Director of PIDE requesting information regarding John Machletos. 7 November 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁵²⁶ Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Mr. Director-General for Political Affairs and Internal Administration regarding John Machletos. 16 November 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

There are no records of any of the Commission's requests to PIDE in the National Archives of South Africa. However, the Portuguese National Archives contain the Commission's request in PIDE's file on Tsafendas. There are no records of Tsafendas in the Greek National Archives and therefore it cannot be ascertained with certainty whether the Greek authorities were indeed contacted by the South Africans. It seems unlikely that the Commission made enquiries to PIDE about a childhood friend who was just writing to Tsafendas.

Finally, the South African newspaper Die Landstem submitted to the Commission of Enquiry information it had collected about Tsafendas which contained the following reference:

*"In 1947 he was sent to Greece which was in a bad state after WWII. There was general hunger, food shortages and unemployment among the Greek people. Tsafendas wandered around starving and without shelter until he joined the Greek Communist Party, with whom he fought against the Greek Government."*²⁵²⁷

The Commission ignored this information in its Report.

²⁵²⁷ Die Landstem telegram. n.d. K150, Vol 5. NASA.

CONCLUSION

According to testimony from the many people who met him, Demitrios Tsafendas was a gifted, well-read, good-hearted man, an accomplished linguist with an insatiable intellectual curiosity and a deep compassion for the disadvantaged. He was a political animal, with strong socialist views, committed to Marxist principles, anti-imperialist, anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, anti-fascist, a revolutionary with a lively political conscience. His outspokenness often brought him into serious conflict with authority, the result not so much of naiveté as of angry defiance of the political oppression he loathed.

Tsafendas had spent approximately five of his first seven years in Egypt, but he was much loved by his grandmother and auntie there, and was accepted without reservation by his step-mother on his return to Mozambique. Marika protected Dimitri from the knowledge of his birth origins and her own children saw him as a full brother and part of the family. Dimitri worshipped his father, who influenced him enormously, his political attitudes quickly reflected in his son's boyish revolutionary notions, wanting to liberate Mozambique from the Portuguese as Simon Bolivar liberated South America from the Spanish.

Tsafendas was "a man of revolutionary zeal." As a youth and an adult, he strongly supported Mozambique's independence from Portugal and wanted to see "a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation."²⁵²⁸ For this reason, he repeatedly conducted "subversive" propaganda in Mozambique, seeking to raise awareness about Communism and the independence of Mozambique. His anti-colonial activities in Mozambique led to his five arrests by the Portuguese police, to imprisonment and torture, the loss of at least three jobs and the creation of a PIDE file (n° 10.415)²⁵²⁹ which was got bigger with every passing year. PIDE's very detailed file on Tsafendas was around 130 pages long at the time of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination.

Tsafendas stoutly opposed apartheid, considering the National Party to be akin to the Nazis and its members "capitalistic roughs." For him, Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator, a monster, the brains behind apartheid, an evil man, a tyrant who was oppressing the people, and, as he often said, "Hitler's best student," who had applied legislation similar to the ²⁵²⁸ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

²⁵²⁹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

Nuremburg Laws to the non-Whites of South Africa. He wanted to see in South Africa “a Government that would represent all South African People”²⁵³⁰ and was ready to do “anything that would get the South African regime out of power.”²⁵³¹ He joined the British anti-apartheid movement and participated in anti-apartheid and anti-fascist demonstrations in London, often getting into physical fights with fascists; he smuggled banned anti-apartheid and other revolutionary leaflets into South Africa.

He was also a Communist: a member of the South African Communist Party (1939-1941), a member of the Greek Communist Party and its military wing, the DSE, during the Greek Civil War (1947-1949) and associated with Communists in Portugal, Germany, Turkey and England. Very importantly, due to his political activities, Tsafendas was exiled from the place of his birth from 1951 to 1963, leading him to a “forced globetrotting”²⁵³² where he wandered through many countries in Europe and the Middle East. During those twelve years Tsafendas made several applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique, but they were all turned down. Between 1935 and 1959, all requests from Tsafendas to the Home Affairs Department to allow him to enter South Africa were dismissed out of hand.²⁵³³

On September 11, 1959, Tsafendas was placed on the Stop List of the South African Department of the Interior and further requests were also turned down.²⁵³⁴ In total, he made nine applications (1935, 1936, 1938, 1941, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1950 and 1959) for permanent residence in South Africa and they were all rejected.²⁵³⁵ However, with the help of his family, he obtained a temporary permit and entered South Africa in November 1963 and in January 1964, he secured a permit for permanent residence.

Though invariably poor, he was also generous, refusing to take back money he had lent to Jacobus Bornman, giving money to poor White men in Durban, buying food and toys for the O’Ryans as well as gifts for displaced Black children in Cape Town. He helped an old man build a room for his daughter in Beira, worked without pay in his brother-in-law’s coffee shop and taught children free in Turkey and in Mozambique.

²⁵³⁰ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵³¹ Edward Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵³² Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

²⁵³³ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

²⁵³⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter II B, Paragraph 30. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁵³⁵ Report of the COE. Chapter VI, Paragraphs 18 and 20. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

He was argumentative and outspoken and this often got him into trouble. However, he was also well-spoken and reasoned well in conversation, convincing his listeners that his point and his ideas were right. He liked his food but many found his table manners as messy. He spent most of his money on books and then food.

Tsafendas was not only very capable and adaptable; as workmates have testified, he was also highly intelligent. As we will see in the next chapter, tests carried out at the request of his defence team during his trial in 1966, gave him an IQ reading of 125. Usually penniless, he managed to travel to scores of countries in East and West Europe, in the Balkans, the Middle East and Africa, learning as many as eight or nine languages in the process. Though his formal education ended at the age of ten, he managed to work as a teacher of English at Limasollu Naci, then the best private language college in Turkey and find various jobs in numerous countries all over Europe.

More importantly, Tsafendas used his brain to get out of his frequent scrapes. Seven times he was arrested and imprisoned by the authorities in the United States, Mozambique and Portugal and each time he secured his freedom after demonstrating during his interrogation “symptoms of mental illness.” At the same time, each time, he very soon managed to recover from his “illness” and return to freedom on the streets. When homeless and penniless in Germany and England, Tsafendas also used his usual, standard act to survive by admitting himself to hospitals.

It is clear that Tsafendas was able to be “sane” or “insane” according to which condition was most convenient for him at the time. If he needed to be healthy, for example in 1963 in South Africa in order to get a resident’s permit or to get jobs with South African Railways, the City Tramways and the Marine Diamond Corporation, he was found to be perfectly healthy. He was found “mentally ill” when he wanted to secure release from detention, to earn a veteran’s pension, to evade service in the Portuguese Army and to convince the Portuguese authorities that he is “insane” and “harmless” in order to grant him amnesty so he can return to his beloved Mozambique.

Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry said in his final report that Tsafendas was “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him—and therefore (the Commission) adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act.”²⁵³⁶

As we will see in the next chapters, in 1966, the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death interviewed some two hundred people who knew Tsafendas. Not a single one said Tsafendas was schizophrenic or that he had told them about the notorious tapeworm. On the contrary, as we have already seen and will see in more detail in the following chapters, they saw Tsafendas as he is shown here and never as he was portrayed by the Commission or at his trial. Further, none of the statements quoted here, apart from Patrick O’Ryan’s, were used during Tsafendas’s trial, and most were ignored by the Commission of Enquiry in an attempt to misrepresent Tsafendas.

Upon reading Tsafendas’s statement to the South Africa police after he killed Dr. Verwoerd, Professor John Dugard said that it “confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change with nothing to lose personally. Really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed.”²⁵³⁷ ²⁵³⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁵³⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

CHAPTER THREE

THE ASSASSINATION

THE ASSASSINATION

With his shooting plan a non-starter, Tsafendas decided to buy a knife and stab Dr. Verwoerd to death in the Chamber of the House of Assembly; the only part of the building where the Prime Minister was not escorted by his two bodyguards.²⁵³⁸ On Tuesday, September 6, he arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 am, one hour ahead of his normal start time, so that he could get his work done then go out and buy a suitable knife. Two shops which stocked knives were both closed when he arrived and he called at another store and inquired when they would open. He then walked up and down the pavement until City Guns opened²⁵³⁹ and he entered the shop in 57 Hout Street, Cape Town at 9.05 am. He was wearing grey, baggy flannels, a white shirt and light-coloured jacket. He asked the prices of sheath knives displayed in the window and was shown two. He asked about one which had a metal sheath and a spring clip and slipped it inside his trousers. He bought the knife, tendering a R10 note and receiving change.²⁵⁴⁰

Tsafendas then went to Wm. Rawbone en Kie, a local hardware store, and bought for R3.30 another sheath knife, with an aluminium handle more like a stiletto, whose blade was approximately 5½ inches long.²⁵⁴¹ He said, "I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job I had in mind. I thought that something might go wrong and one weapon might be taken away from me."²⁵⁴² He later said he chose knives that were long enough to cause serious damage.²⁵⁴³

Returning to Parliament, Tsafendas took the knives out of their wrapping paper and placed them in his locker. He poured an anti-rust solution on the blades, hoping it would ²⁵³⁸ Alhadeff, 1985: 107; Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵³⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁴⁰ A.J. Harrison statement to the COE, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

²⁵⁴¹ Maurice Klein testimony to the COE, 25 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

²⁵⁴² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁴³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

poison Dr. Verwoerd's blood should he survive the stabbing. He used a small box of anti-rust solution which he kept for his work tools.²⁵⁴⁴ Tsafendas then changed back into his navy blue messenger's uniform under which he wound a waist belt with the two empty sheaths, and walked up to the first floor to serve tea and coffee to the reporters.²⁵⁴⁵ His colleagues said he seemed restive,²⁵⁴⁶ but he said he was waiting for an "important phone call."²⁵⁴⁷ He asked one of them if Dr. Verwoerd was going to speak that day and received a positive answer.²⁵⁴⁸

In the course of the morning, Tsafendas asked a fellow messenger to change lunch breaks with him so that he could take the 1pm-2pm slot instead of his rostered noon-1pm. His colleague refused and Tsafendas said he was going for a walk in the gardens that surround the Parliament, which he did around 12:15. Tsafendas was seen again in the Press Gallery at 13:05²⁵⁴⁹ and a little later he took an order for lunch from Gerald Shaw, the parliamentary correspondent for the Cape Times. When Tsafendas returned with his hamburger and a pot of tea, Shaw paid with a currency note and Tsafendas counted out change which was ten times more than the reporter was due.²⁵⁵⁰ At 1.05 pm, Tsafendas shared his lunch, curry with rice, with another messenger in the messengers' room. When he finished, he brought a member of the South African Broadcasting Corporation staff his curry lunch. The correspondent complained about the meal and Tsafendas asked another messenger to take the uneaten curry back to the cafeteria, saying he was "in a hurry." This was around 1.50 pm. The messenger was still on his lunch break and refused, so Tsafendas took the plate and hurried off. "I have something to do," he said as he went.²⁵⁵¹

A few minutes before 2.10 pm, when the division bell calling Members to the sitting was scheduled to ring, Tsafendas retrieved the knives from his locker and inserted them into the sheaths inside his pants. He then waited in the lobby until Dr. Verwoerd appeared and ²⁵⁴⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015.

²⁵⁴⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁴⁶ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd is slain by assassin in the South African Parliament.'

²⁵⁴⁷ Frankfurter Rundschau, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Motiv für attentat auf Dr. Verwoerd noch völlig unklar.'

²⁵⁴⁸ The Cape Times, 10 September 1966, 'Messenger's journey before killing.'

²⁵⁴⁹ Noticias, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Os movimentos do criminoso.'

²⁵⁵⁰ Shaw, 2007: 57.

²⁵⁵¹ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 1, 'I have something to do, said the assassin.'

followed him into the debating chamber²⁵⁵² just minutes after the bell rang.²⁵⁵³ The Prime Minister's two bodyguards left him and sat in the Public Gallery, about a hundred feet from his bench.²⁵⁵⁴ Verwoerd looked full of life and sat down with a jaunty air. He was expected to make a speech announcing a new South African foreign policy towards the newly independent states of Botswana and Lesotho.²⁵⁵⁵ MP Aubrey Radford, who was a surgeon, walked in behind Dr. Verwoerd and as he did so, he was pushed violently; looking up, he saw the back of a parliamentary messenger hurrying in Dr. Verwoerd's direction.²⁵⁵⁶ Tsafendas's plan was to attack Dr. Verwoerd as he walked towards his place on the front bench and but he had difficulty pulling the dagger from its sheath and by the time he did so, Dr. Verwoerd had taken his seat.²⁵⁵⁷

Tsafendas moved rapidly up the Chamber to the front bench. Dr. Verwoerd looked at him calmly and without suspicion, assuming he was going to hand him a message. Tsafendas came up and stood over the seated Dr. Verwoerd, who leaned forward slightly to listen to what the messenger had to tell him.²⁵⁵⁸ At that point, Tsafendas put his hand into his coat and drew out a long knife.²⁵⁵⁹ His right hand rested on Dr. Verwoerd's left breast. He remained in that position for a portion of a second. When he lifted his right hand, he was holding a knife in his hand.²⁵⁶⁰ Dr. Verwoerd raised an arm to stop the attack, but he was too late as blood was already dripping from his chest.²⁵⁶¹ Tsafendas plunged the knife repeatedly into the Prime Minister's chest and neck.²⁵⁶² Dr. Verwoerd slumped forward in his seat with blood spurting from his neck and chest, which quickly made a large pool on the carpet.²⁵⁶³

²⁵⁵² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁵³ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁵⁴ Alhadeff, 1985: 107.

²⁵⁵⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 7, 'Unsaid speech was expected to set new SA foreign policy.'

²⁵⁵⁶ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁵⁷ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁵⁵⁸ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 7 September 1966: 2, 'O assassinato do Dr. Verwoerd.'

²⁵⁵⁹ Shaw, 2007: 57.

²⁵⁶⁰ Paul van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶¹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 7 September 1966: 2, 'O assassinato do Dr. Verwoerd.'

²⁵⁶² Shaw, 2007: 57.

²⁵⁶³ The Canberra Times, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated in Parliament House.'

For a few moments, there was a stunned silence in the House before Members realised what had happened.²⁵⁶⁴ Then, several MPs jumped up from their seats and chaos reigned.²⁵⁶⁵ Frank Walter Waring, Minister of Sport and Tourism, aged fifty-eight, a former member of the South African Springboks rugby team, jumped from his place behind and to the right of the prime minister, got a neck-lock on Tsafendas and pulled him away. Tsafendas resisted but Waring pulled him further back, over a desk and on top of himself, and spotted a large dagger in Tsafendas's hand.²⁵⁶⁶ Someone shouted, "Get the knife,"²⁵⁶⁷ and someone else, "don't kill him, remember Oswald."²⁵⁶⁸

Many MPs sat immobilised by shock but others joined in and threw themselves onto Tsafendas. Nationalist Party MPs formed a whirling scrum around Tsafendas, punching and kicking him.²⁵⁶⁹ Tsafendas's fingers were clenched around his knife and he managed to slash Waring's trousers before he was thrown to the ground. Dr. W.L. Venter grabbed his hand and with the help of others managed to prise the fingers open and seize the knife.²⁵⁷⁰ M.P. Cas Greyling punched Tsafendas in the mouth, injuring his own hand.²⁵⁷¹ Waring said later that he had spent many years playing international rugby and considered Tsafendas to be as strong as any man he ever tackled.²⁵⁷²

As Tsafendas was manhandled out of the Chamber, he shouted about Waring who had broken his nose, "Where is that bastard? I will get that bastard."²⁵⁷³ His face was covered in blood and the front of his shirt was bloodstained.²⁵⁷⁴ MPs were shouting for an ambulance and Felix George Miles, one of the Parliamentary messengers, dialled for one, but found all the lines were engaged.²⁵⁷⁵ Police Captain Christian Pieter Coetzee found the second knife on ²⁵⁶⁴ The Australian, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd stabbed.'

²⁵⁶⁵ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁶ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁷ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁶⁸ Stephenson, 1978: 27.

²⁵⁶⁹ Shaw, 2007: 57.

²⁵⁷⁰ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Willem L. D. M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁷¹ The Australian, 8 September 1966: 1.

²⁵⁷² Barron, 2005: 336.

²⁵⁷³ Daily Express, 7 September 1966: 2, 'Assassination.'; Deutsche Zeitung, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Sudafrikas Ministerpräsident Dr. Verwoerd im Parlament von einem Weiben erstochen'; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd slain at his Parliament desk.'

²⁵⁷⁴ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 2, 'Desperate fight to reach killer, save Prime Minister.'

²⁵⁷⁵ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

Tsafendas's belt²⁵⁷⁶ and Dr. Venter put the attack knife on the table in front of the Speaker's chair, from where the police retrieved it.²⁵⁷⁷ Shaw looked at the Assembly clock, which was always kept five minutes fast, and scribbled the time in his notebook, twenty past two. He then rushed to telephone his news editor, Tom Jessop, that Dr. Verwoerd was bleeding to death. Jessop did not believe him and put the phone down. Shaw had to call him back to convince him he was serious.²⁵⁷⁸

The dying Dr. Verwoerd was quickly surrounded by MPs, at least six of whom were doctors – Radford, E.L. Fisher, G. de V. Morrison, C.V. Van Der Merwe, Venter and Maud Clark. He was deathly pale and bleeding profusely, with his left arm hanging by his side.²⁵⁷⁹ The front of his shirt was bloodstained and blood dripped onto the green carpet.²⁵⁸⁰ Dr. Muller, the Foreign Minister, placed a cushion under Dr. Verwoerd's head.²⁵⁸¹ Dr. Fisher was the first doctor to treat Dr. Verwoerd.²⁵⁸² He tore open the Prime Minister's shirt and waistcoat²⁵⁸³ and found heavy bleeding from four wounds in the chest.²⁵⁸⁴ At Dr. Fisher's request, Dr. Morrison performed mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.²⁵⁸⁵ Dr. Fisher had his medical bag in the House, in which he kept an emergency supply of drugs.²⁵⁸⁶ He asked Dr. Morrison to fetch the cardiac stimulant, Coramine, from his office and the contents of two syringes were injected into Dr. Verwoerd's heart by Dr. Fisher and Dr. Morrison. He was given four injections in all.²⁵⁸⁷

Dr. Fisher, a psychiatrist and United Party MP, said, "We did everything we could to stop the bleeding. We gave mouth-to-mouth breathing and tried artificial respiration."²⁵⁸⁸ Dr.

²⁵⁷⁶ Christian Pieter Coetzee statement to the police, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA

²⁵⁷⁷ Willem L.D.M. Venter statement to the COE, 19 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁷⁸ Shaw, 2007: 57.

²⁵⁷⁹ Paul van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁰ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

²⁵⁸¹ The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd murdered in the Parliament.'

²⁵⁸² Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

²⁵⁸³ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁴ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated'; Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 7, 'Desperate fight to reach killer, save Prime Minister.'

²⁵⁸⁵ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁶ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

²⁵⁸⁷ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁸⁸ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

Radford felt for Dr. Verwoerd's left pulse. It was completely absent and never returned; he and Dr. Fisher, speaking quietly, decided that the Prime Minister was dead.²⁵⁸⁹ Dr. Fisher said, "We kept on treating him and trying respiratory treatment ... but by then he had no pulse at all. It was hopeless."²⁵⁹⁰ Dr. Verwoerd lay slumped in his seat, his head tilted back. He never uttered a word or a sound during the attack.²⁵⁹¹ He had died within two minutes of being stabbed in the heart.²⁵⁹²

Dr. Verwoerd's wife, Betsy, was brought into the debating Chamber. She had been in the building, but she did not see the killing because the elevator to take her to the Chamber was delayed.²⁵⁹³ She bent slowly over the lifeless body of her husband, stroked his hair and kissed him on the forehead. At about 2.30 pm, an ambulance crew carried Dr. Verwoerd's body from the Chamber on a stretcher past ranks of stunned MPs, and transported it to Groote Schuur hospital. There, a team of three surgeons, two physicians and five medical students were standing by with emergency equipment prepared.²⁵⁹⁴

As MPs, officials and spectators in Parliament began to realise that Dr. Verwoerd was dead, uproar broke out. Two MPs collapsed in the lobby, others bellowed with anger.²⁵⁹⁵ Cabinet Minister and future Prime Minister P.W. Botha turned to Helen Suzman, the lone Member of Parliament representing the Progressive Party, and shaking his finger in her face, shouted in Afrikaans, "It's you who did this. It's all you liberals. You incite people. Now we will get you. We will get the lot of you."²⁵⁹⁶

Around 3.00 pm, some forty-five minutes after the stabbing, Barend J. Schoeman, the Leader of the House, said he believed the Prime Minister was dead.²⁵⁹⁷ Dr. Verwoerd's death was confirmed at 3.05 pm, two days before his 65th birthday, by Groote Schuur's medical superintendent, Dr. J.G. Burger, who said that he had probably died instantly.²⁵⁹⁸ Official ²⁵⁸⁹ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁵⁹⁰ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

²⁵⁹¹ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 7, 'Desperate fight to reach killer, save Prime Minister.'

²⁵⁹² Daily News, 10 September 1966, 'Death inside two minutes says MP.'

²⁵⁹³ Sunday Times (Johannesburg), 11 September 1966, 'Lift delay spared window.'

²⁵⁹⁴ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

²⁵⁹⁵ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd is slain by assassin in the South African Parliament.'

²⁵⁹⁶ Suzman, 1993: 69.

²⁵⁹⁷ The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd murdered in the Parliament'; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, 'Dr. Verwoerd stabbed to death at his desk in Parliament.'

²⁵⁹⁸ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

confirmation of death followed at 3.30 pm, in a statement which said Dr. Verwoerd was dead on arrival at the hospital.²⁵⁹⁹

AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Tsafendas had already been frogmarched out of the Chamber by three policemen, his face covered in blood, “streaming blood from his face,” and the front of his shirt blood-stained.²⁶⁰⁰ A young man, crying hysterically, tried to attack him as he was led through the lobby but was fended off by the police.²⁶⁰¹ Tsafendas was then thrown by the policemen at the back of a police van²⁶⁰² and at 2.30 p.m. he was led by Captain Genis of the South African Security Police, to the police station in Caledon Square round the corner from Parliament.²⁶⁰³

Due to his injuries and bleeding, Tsafendas was seen at 2.50 p.m. by Dr. Ralph Kossew, the district surgeon who had examined him on June 17, 1966 over his claim for a disability grant. Dr. Kossew found that Tsafendas had a gaping wound of one and a half inches from his forehead to the bridge of his nose, which was swollen, and a half-inch cut on the lower lip. Tsafendas answered the questions guardedly but did not appear confused and the doctor noticed nothing wrong with his mental state.²⁶⁰⁴ Immediately the doctor left, the handcuffed Tsafendas was taken to a cell and seriously beaten by policemen. When Brigadier Aucamp²⁶⁰⁵ arrived, he began interrogating the prisoner while the violence continued. Tsafendas was kicked as he lay on the floor, then the policemen made him stand and took turns punching him. When he fell they kicked him and when he stood they punched him. One policeman used his baton.²⁶⁰⁶

At 4:20 pm, with Tsafendas still in the police cell, Captain Genis searched his room, No. 7, at Aldor Apartments, Rustenburg Ave, Rondebosch. In the second drawer of the ²⁵⁹⁹ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 6 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd killed.’

²⁶⁰⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘How Dr. Verwoerd died’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Dr. Verwoerd stabbed to death at his desk in Parliament.’

²⁶⁰¹ The Australian, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd stabbed’; The Canberra Times, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd assassinated in Parliament House.’

²⁶⁰² Sunday Express, 11 September 1966: 15. ‘Schoolgirl: I saw assassin strike.’

²⁶⁰³ Dirk Kotze Genis statement to the police, 24 October 1966. COE, K150, Vol: 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁶⁰⁴ Dr. Kossew’s report on examination in case of alleged assault or other crime, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

²⁶⁰⁵ The author is not certain of the correct spelling, but this is a close phonetic rendering.

²⁶⁰⁶ Tsafendas in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. The clip is available in the rushes.

wardrobe, he found the gas pistol²⁶⁰⁷ that was sold to Tsafendas by Mastromanolis and Mavronas.²⁶⁰⁸ At 4.30, the first statement regarding the assassination was taken by the police. It was the statement of Captain Christian Pieter Coetzee of the Security Police:

“I’m a captain in the South African Police, stationed Security Police, Headquarters, Pretoria. I serve as marshal of the President and is currently in Cape Town for the duration of the parliamentary session. On the 6th September 1966, at 2: 14 p.m., I was sitting in the parliament house and in the box of the president. I sat and watched as Dr. Verwoerd entered the hall. I followed him until he sat in his position on the bench. Dr. Verwoerd sat on the left side of the bench. Shortly after Dr. Verwoerd took his seat, I saw a person dressed in a messenger’s uniform, walk to the bench of Dr. Verwoerd. The person leaned across the bench like he wanted to say something to Dr. Verwoerd. At the same time I saw an object that looked like a knife, in the person’s hand. He stabbed Dr. Verwoerd. I could see that he stabbed Dr. Verwoerd in the left breast. Dr. Verwoerd raised his arms as if he wanted to avoid the stabbing. The person, however, gave two quick stabs to Dr. Verwoerd. The one in the right breast and on in the back. At that point I rushed to aid Dr. Verwoerd. A number of members of the Assembly, however, pounced on the man and overpowered him. Col. Buitendach and I took over the person. I also searched him and a second knife in a sheath, bound with a belt around his body was found. I seized this knife. Col. Buitendach handed me the dagger with which the person stabbed the Prime Minister. The person was arrested and taken to the A.K. Caledon Square. Later I discovered that the person was a messenger employed by Parliament. He was dressed in a uniform of the Assembly.”²⁶⁰⁹

In the police station, because of his injuries from the beating, the officer in charge asked Brigadier Aucamp to take Tsafendas to hospital.²⁶¹⁰ That Tsafendas was taken to hospital after almost four hours in custody supports his claim that he had been tortured. If the injuries were sustained during the brawl in Parliament, he would presumably have been taken there immediately or very soon afterwards, not four hours later. Brigadier Aucamp and his detail must have arrived with Tsafendas at the casualty department of Groote Schuur hospital

²⁶⁰⁷ Dirk Kotze Genis statement to the police, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol: 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

²⁶⁰⁸ Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015.

²⁶⁰⁹ Christian P. Coetzee’s statement to the police, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

²⁶¹⁰ Tsafendas in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. The clip is available in the rushes.

around 6.30.²⁶¹¹ During a heavily-guarded, one-hour visit,²⁶¹² the police imposed a total security blackout on the hospital and nobody was allowed to see Tsafendas. Plain-clothed policemen were by Tsafendas's side constantly, including when he stripped to be examined.²⁶¹³

At 6.40, Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Darby who found him to be "co-operative" and "composed." According to Dr. Darby's report, Tsafendas had a broken nose with blood obstructing the airways, a ragged laceration from the right eyebrow to the nose and a laceration of the lower lip. The cuts were stitched, the nose put in a splint and he was given an anti-tetanus injection. Nothing about his mental state was mentioned in this report.²⁶¹⁴ Policemen stayed with Tsafendas the entire time, even inside the X-ray theatre.²⁶¹⁵ Dr. Darby's examination would have lasted about twenty minutes.²⁶¹⁶ Whether Dr. Darby's report on Tsafendas's injuries was wholly accurate and comprehensive is not something the author can know. There is no evidence to suggest it is less than trustworthy, but it has to be noted that it was written at a time when doctors are known to have colluded with police to conceal crimes by the authorities.

Having been examined by Dr. Darby, Tsafendas was seen at 7 pm for around 30-45 minutes²⁶¹⁷ by a psychiatrist, Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, the hospital's head of psychiatry, at the request of the Security Police and the Casualty Officer.²⁶¹⁸ Dr. Sakinofsky gave to the author a vivid, first-person account of the scene that greeted him when he arrived at the hospital in response to a call to his home by Dr. Tockar, the psychiatry registrar/resident on duty. He said:

"We found Mr. Tsafendas in a room that was milling about with uniformed and plain-clothed security men of all ranks. It would have been impossible to establish any kind of ²⁶¹¹ Tsafendas was examined by Dr. Darby at 6.40, therefore he must have arrived at the hospital just before that.

²⁶¹² Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas in hospital'; Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.'

²⁶¹³ Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.'

²⁶¹⁴ Dr. Darby's statement regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, G.S.H. No: 65/14-081, 6 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁶¹⁵ Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin rushed to hospital.'

²⁶¹⁶ Dr. Darby's report says that he examined Tsafendas at 6.40 pm., while Dr. Sakinofsky's report states that he examined him at 7 pm., which obviously means that Dr. Darby's examination lasted twenty minutes.

²⁶¹⁷ According to the newspaper reports Tsafendas's visit lasted one hour (Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966; Natal Mercury, 7 September 1966.). Since Dr. Darby examined Tsafendas at 6.40 and Dr. Sakinofsky around 7, we can assume that Tsafendas arrived at the hospital around 6.35 the latest, which means that the hour visit gives Dr. Sakinofsky from 7 to around 7.35-7.45.

²⁶¹⁸ Dr. Sakinofsky testimony in Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966: p. 131. K150, Vol. 10. NASA.

rapport with him under these conditions, so there proceeded a stand-off where we refused to examine him until the room was cleared of the security personnel, which we were eventually able to effect only after we contacted the superintendent of the hospital and got his support. After we had interviewed Mr. Tsafendas at length and after calming his agitation at the time and gaining rapport, we did complete our examination. We deliberately refused to make any public announcements until the following day. We would have liked to have detained him in the hospital for further study and treatment but the security authorities overrode our wishes and took him away.”²⁶¹⁹

After the examination, Dr. Sakinofsky concluded that “the patient is not of sound mind, that his thought processes are grossly impaired and deluded, and that he is therefore not in a position to evaluate correctly the consequences of his deed. I consider that it is probable that his mental state is the result of damage caused by previous attacks of a mental disease called schizophrenia. In my opinion further important information on the state of his mind should be obtained by the following:

1. He should be detained in a closed mental hospital ward for a period of observation. I would like myself to assess his mental state over a period of time and at successive interviews.
2. He should have the following special investigations:
 - Electro-encephalogram, blood and C.S.P.
 - Wasserman reaction (occasionally an organic disease of the brain can mimic the clinical picture of schizophrenia).
 - Psychological tests.
3. Medical reports should be obtained via the Portuguese government; and from the Grafton State Hospital, New York, and the Krankenhaus.”²⁶²⁰

Dr. Sakinofsky’s report contains no mention of Tsafendas’s physical condition and the injuries he had just received treatment. Strictly speaking, Sakinofsky’s duty was only to examine Tsafendas’s mental state, but to ignore glaringly obvious physical problems would seem to be taking his instructions rather too literally. It might also be assumed that the physical injuries could have had some effect on his mental condition at the time, but this does not seem to have been explored. Dr. Sakinofsky’s examination is considered in detail in the ²⁶¹⁹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky in correspondence with the author, 30 March 2016.

²⁶²⁰ Dr. Sakinofsky’s psychiatric report on Demitrio Tsafendas, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File 3. NASA.

following chapter. Tsafendas was then driven off in a black American Sedan and returned to the police station in Caledon Square,²⁶²¹ where he was soon again interrogated and beaten by Brigadier Aucamp and his men.²⁶²²

While all this was taking place, the Minister of Justice and Police, John Vorster, summoned the Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. John Keevy, and directed him to place Major-General Hendrik van den Bergh, head of the Security Branch and Deputy Commissioner of Police, in charge of the investigation. He considered him to be “the man best qualified to get to the bottom of this quickly.”²⁶²³ A few hours later van den Bergh was flying to Cape Town, accompanied by Brigadier Gideon Joubert,²⁶²⁴ head of the Criminal Investigation Department (CID). As soon as they arrived, van den Bergh and Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town, took over the interrogation of Tsafendas.²⁶²⁵

Tsafendas claimed that van den Bergh interrogated him all night but he was not tortured or harassed when “the General” was present. His claim is confirmed by a statement by John Vorster²⁶²⁶ that Tsafendas was interrogated for forty-eight hours by General van den Bergh.²⁶²⁷ Furthermore, according to Tsafendas, van den Bergh was very polite, offered him a cigarette, which he turned down, and water, which he accepted. However the General refused to let him sleep, saying he would sleep only when the interrogation was concluded.²⁶²⁸

Tsafendas was held under the 180-Day Act²⁶²⁹ which gave the police authority to keep him in custody and interrogate him for up to 180 days without the presence of a

²⁶²¹ Cape Times, 7 September 1966, ‘Suspect’s jaws broken.’

²⁶²² Tsafendas in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. The clip is available in the rushes.

²⁶²³ D’ Oliveira, 1977: 180.

²⁶²⁴ Born in Transvaal in 1912; joined the police in 1932, served as Deputy Commissioner of the CID from 1964 to 1968, promoted to General and Police Deputy Commissioner in 1968, before becoming Commissioner of the Police in 1972 (International Magazine Services photo archive, n.d.).

²⁶²⁵ Cape Times, 7 September 1966, ‘Suspect’s jaws broken.’

²⁶²⁶ In 1976, Vorster revealed that General van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas for forty-eight hours, adding that “if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh’s questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing” (D’ Oliveira, 1977: 180).

²⁶²⁷ D’ Oliveira, 1977: 180.

²⁶²⁸ Father Minas Constantinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁶²⁹ A Voz, 8 September 1966. ‘A Policia de Joanesburgo pediu as autoridades de Mozambique e Lisboa todas as informacoss possiveis sobre Tsafendas.’

lawyer.²⁶³⁰ Meanwhile, Dr. T.E. Donges, the Finance Minister, had temporarily taken over the duties of Prime Minister.²⁶³¹

ACCURACY OF THE MEDICAL REPORTS DURING APARTHEID

The author is not in position to know the accuracy of any of the doctor's reports, but they must be read against a background of known collusion by physicians with the authorities in those years, especially when in reference to Tsafendas's physical condition. According to Sydney Kentridge, QC, "In South Africa, one after another inquests into deaths in detention found that 'no one was to blame' as the security police, the judiciary and district surgeons conspired to keep torture and murder under wraps."²⁶³²

Professor Alban Burke affirmed to the author the control of doctors and hospitals during apartheid and questioned whether there was any "state pressure on them." He said:

"Yes, I would question it, because there was immense state government control at that point, and they controlled various things. I mean, even the mental hospitals; in those times; psychiatric hospitals, were split between black and white, and the black people ... and I observed it, I mean, I worked in one of those hospitals in the eighties... did not receive the same level of treatment as the white people. It was impossible to become a psychologist or a psychiatrist in those days if you were black, for a number of reasons, so it was a very controlled environment. So, I think there was that fear and that paranoia, as well, and I'm wondering, to what extent, that may have influenced their decision in the end."²⁶³³

A good example is the following: after the Sharpeville massacre, the police insisted that they had used normal bullets and not the banned dum-dum variety. This was after telling medics at the hospital where the dead and injured were taken that it would not be in the national interest for them to make "exaggerated" disclosures. When victims were brought in, ²⁶³⁰ The 180-Day Detention Act (the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act, Number 96 of 1965) allowed the government to detain individuals for interrogation for up to 180 days without a lawyer being present. The public were not entitled to any information, not even the identity or whereabouts of people being detained. Detainees could literally and effectively "disappear." If no charges were laid, Special Branch were required to release detainees after 180 days. At the time, Vorster boasted that this was repeatable "until this side of eternity" ("A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 4; Herbstein, 2004: 75; Mandela, 2013: 402; Vassen, n.d.).

²⁶³¹ The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd murdered in the Parliament.'

²⁶³² Quoted in Bizos, 1998: vii; For a detailed account of deaths in detention, the subsequent inquests and how the State conspired with doctors, jourists and the police "to keep torture and murder under wraps" see Bizos, G. (1998) No One to Blame? A Personal Account of Inquests into Some Deaths in Detention under Apartheid.

²⁶³³ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

police officers removed those bodies that had been badly damaged by explosive dum-dum bullets. The hospital doctors did not interfere or protest. Up to twenty-four dead were buried in secret, ensuring that no post-mortems were carried out which might disclose evidence of the use of dum-dums.²⁶³⁴

The most infamous case of doctors conspiring with the apartheid authorities, however, was that of Steve Biko.²⁶³⁵ Dr. Ivor Lang, the Port Elizabeth district surgeon, examined Biko in detention and stated that he “found no evidence of any abnormality or pathology on detainee.”²⁶³⁶ The doctors who examined him before his death made a diagnosis of malingering in spite of overwhelming evidence that he had suffered traumatic brain injury. The inquest into Biko’s death provided a rare insight into the manner in which state doctors sometimes functioned in relation to the police and during apartheid²⁶³⁷ and “it became clear that the two responsible district surgeons, Drs Ivor Lang and Benjamin Tucker were deeply implicated in Biko’s death through gross neglect and falsification of medical records.”²⁶³⁸

Dr. Lang had “failed, apparently, to see the injury on the forehead on the occasion of his first and subsequent examinations, ... failed to attach any significance to the lip injury, or to other bruises and visible symptoms which Dr. Lang admitted in court having noticed. He failed to ask the patient for his account of how these injuries were sustained. He did not prescribe any treatment, carry out any routine blood or urine analysis tests, or take the patient’s temperature at any stage. He did not recommend to the police that Mr Biko should not be left lying on the floor on urine-soaked bedding. He failed to keep the patient under medical observation following Biko’s transfer from Sydenham Prison Hospital to the Walmer Police Station. He did not keep Drs Hersch and Keeley fully informed about the patient’s condition or of actions taken which may have affected his condition. He failed to insist upon proper hospitalisation, or to oppose Dr Tucker’s acquiescence in the plan to send the patient

²⁶³⁴ Frankel, 2001: 148-149.

²⁶³⁵ For a detailed account of the doctor’s conduct during apartheid and in Biko’s case see: Baxter, L.C. (1985) Doctors on Trial: Steve Biko, Medical Ethics, and the Courts; Berat, L. (1989) Doctors, Detainees and Torture: Medical Ethics v. the Law in South Africa; Dowdall, T.L. (1991) Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid; McLean G.R., Jenkins, T. (2003) The Steve Biko Affair: A Case Study in Medical Ethics; Rayner, M. (1987) Turning a Blind Eye? Medical Accountability and the Prevention of Torture in South Africa; Rayner, M. (1990) From Biko to Wendy Orr: The Problem of Medical Accountability in Contexts of Political Violence and Torture; Silove, D. (1990) Doctors and the State: Lessons from the Biko Case; Zwi, A.B. (1987) The Political Abuse of Medicine and the Challenge of Opposing it.

²⁶³⁶ Baxter, 1985: 137-140.

²⁶³⁷ Silove, 1990: 417.

²⁶³⁸ Dowdall, 1991: 52.

to Pretoria. And only after Steve Biko died did Dr. Lang make any notes or reports of his findings.”²⁶³⁹

Dr. Lang eventually conceded that his diagnosis was incorrect as far as the question of abnormality was concerned and “highly inaccurate” insofar as it related to pathology.²⁶⁴⁰ However, the inquest concluded that “the available evidence does not prove that the death was brought about by any act or omission involving or amounting to an offence on the part of any person.”²⁶⁴¹ The South African Medical Council (SAMDC) also concluded that there was no evidence of improper or disgraceful conduct on the part of the two doctors.²⁶⁴²

It took eight years of intense pressure before the SAMDC took disciplinary action. On 30 January 1985, the Pretoria Supreme Court ordered the SAMDC to hold an inquiry into the conduct of the doctors who treated Steve Biko for five days before he died. In his judgment, Judge President of the Transvaal Mr Justice W. G. Boshoff said that there was prima facie evidence of improper or disgraceful conduct on the part of the Biko doctors in a professional respect.²⁶⁴³ Dr. Land was then stripped of his medical qualifications.²⁶⁴⁴ Biko’s death had serious consequences for the medical profession in South Africa and led to the expulsion of its Medical Association from the World Medical Association, though it was later re-admitted. The British Medical Association expressed the view at the time that “South African doctors do not have the ethical machinery capable of dealing with the affair.”²⁶⁴⁵

Fortunately, not all doctors were like Dr. Lang, ready to cooperate with the apartheid state. For example, Dr. Wendy Orr,²⁶⁴⁶ a district surgeon in Port Elizabeth, would make notes of police brutality and torture when she examined prisoners. Although Dr. Lang happened to be her direct superior, Dr. Orr took her evidence to law and forced the Supreme Court to issue an interdict against the abuse of detainees. As a result of Dr. Orr’s intervention, she was ordered onto “other duties” and barred from visiting political detainees in prisons.²⁶⁴⁷

²⁶³⁹ Dowdall, 1991: 52; Rayner, 1987: 28.

²⁶⁴⁰ Baxter, 1985: 137-140.

²⁶⁴¹ Bizos, 1999: 71.

²⁶⁴² Nicholas, 2014: 19.

²⁶⁴³ SAHO, n.d. “The Inquest into Biko’s death and his funeral.”

²⁶⁴⁴ Nicholas, 2014: 20.

²⁶⁴⁵ Baxter, 1985: 137-138.

²⁶⁴⁶ For more about Dr. Orr’s case see: Dowdall, T.L. (1991) Repression, Health Care and Ethics under Apartheid; Orr, W. (2000) From Biko to Basson: Wendy Orr's Search for the Soul of South Africa as a Commissioner of the TRC; Reyner, M. (1990) From Biko to Wendy Orr: The Problem of Medical Accountability in Contexts of Political Violence and Torture.

²⁶⁴⁷ Dowdall, 1991: 52-53; The New York Times, 6 October 1985, ‘Doctor is shifted by South Africa.’

In 1995, the Medical Association of South Africa apologised “for its attitude and silence during the years of apartheid.”²⁶⁴⁸ Two years later, South Africa’s medical profession found itself in the dock at the TRC hearings, when it was forced to answer for its complicity with the regime during the apartheid years. Evidence was submitted that doctors not only ignored the routine torture of prisoners, but helped some back to health so they could be tortured again. The support of district surgeons in matters of security facilitated the abuse of detainees.²⁶⁴⁹

The Commission heard that more than seventy prisoners died in detention between 1960 and 1990, in some cases largely from negligence. Instead of securing improvements in the health of its people, evidence suggested that the national health policy, because of the way it operated, actually contributed to the ill health of the poor. Such data were covered up to falsify the picture for public consumption. The Medical Association described its members as “both perpetrators and victims of apartheid and human rights abuses.” It conceded that “there was a close relationship between the Association’s leadership, the Department of Health, the security police, and the Medical and Dental council.”²⁶⁵⁰ Given the extent of the abuses throughout the apartheid era, doubt must remain over medical reports and examinations concerning Tsafendas, especially, in view of his political importance.

REACTIONS TO THE ASSASSINATION

Within hours of the assassination, the South African authorities declared that the killing was devoid of political meaning and that the killer was a madman. Although Tsafendas had not even been interrogated and nothing was known about him, the South African embassy in Brussels released a communique along exactly those lines. It said that the murder of Dr. Verwoerd had “manifestly been perpetrated by an unbalanced individual and was therefore devoid of political significance. Independently of the fact that South Africa has been plunged into mourning by the death of a man who, in view of his age, had become a father for both the Whites and Blacks, there will be no changes, despite the speculations which could arise ²⁶⁴⁸ Sidley, 1995: 148.

²⁶⁴⁹ Sidley, 1997: 1850.

²⁶⁵⁰ Sidley, 1997: 1850.

on this subject.” It said work would be continued on the basis of the “peaceful apartheid policy for which Dr. Verwoerd had laid the foundations.”²⁶⁵¹

As result of the assassination, cinemas were closed, regular radio programmes and sports events were cancelled, shops shut and university lectures postponed across South Africa.²⁶⁵² Dr. Verwoerd’s death also had financial implications, “shocking the Rand into numbness”²⁶⁵³ the Johannesburg Stock Exchange shut down²⁶⁵⁴ while in London and Paris the stock market fell.²⁶⁵⁵ Newspapers rushed out special editions with huge headlines and regular radio programmes were halted. A seven-minute documentary film entitled “A Nation’s Tribute” was created within twenty-four hours by Killarney Studios in Johannesburg. Copies were flown to Durban and to Cape Town and shown for a week in the cities’ centre cinemas, then in suburban ones after normal programmes. The documentary opened with a shot of flags flying at half-mast, then, using newsreel film, traced Dr. Verwoerd’s eight years as Prime Minister. It closed on a moment of hope, with requiem music playing as Dr. Verwoerd gazed ahead with a smile on his lips.²⁶⁵⁶

On September 22, 1966, just sixteen days after the assassination, John Vorster who had been selected as Prime Minister, announced that the planned new version of the one-Rand silver coin would bear the head of Dr. Verwoerd instead of that of Jan van Riebeeck, founder of the first colony in Cape Town in 1652.²⁶⁵⁷ One South African government official commented about the assassin, “Thank God he wasn’t Coloured. That would have sparked off a reaction that would make apartheid seem like child’s play.”²⁶⁵⁸

A Black woman in Cape Town told a reporter, “thank God it was not one of our people who did it.” A White bus conductor said, “They have killed our Prime Minister. Now I hope that Vorster takes over and shoots them all. The Communists, liberals, all of them.”²⁶⁵⁹ Describing a tribute session held in Parliament in the wake of the assassination, the Cape

²⁶⁵¹ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966, ‘Devoid of political meaning.’

²⁶⁵² The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 17, ‘Assassination stirs concern among leaders of Black Africa’; Pretoria News, 7 September 1966, ‘Sports cancelled as mark of respect for Dr. Verwoerd’, 7 September 1966.

²⁶⁵³ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 7 September 1966, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s Death shocks Rand into numbness’, ²⁶⁵⁴ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Dr. Verwoerd stabbed to death at his desk in Parliament.’

²⁶⁵⁵ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 69, ‘London stocks fall after Dr. Verwoerd assassination’; Die Welt, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd ermordet’; Sunday Times (Johannesburg) 11 September 1966: 24, ‘Assassination shakes market’; The Canberra Times, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Stock Exchange numbed.’

²⁶⁵⁶ Daily News, 8 September 1966: 3, ‘Durban Indians pay tribute in prayer’; Cape Times, 8 September 1966, ‘Dr. Verwoerd film in city.’

²⁶⁵⁷ The Canberra Times, 23 September 1966: 6, ‘Coins honour Verwoerd.’

²⁶⁵⁸ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁶⁵⁹ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘Dr. Verwoerd stabbed to death at his desk in Parliament.’

Town correspondent of The Australian said the atmosphere was one of “restrained emotion.” Dr. Verwoerd’s green leather front bench was conspicuously empty and on the green carpet next to it there was a faint discolouration where he bled to death.²⁶⁶⁰

SOUTH AFRICA

Reaction to the killing in South Africa ranged from shock and outrage in the Afrikaner community to hilarity among some Black Africans. Some non-White officials condemned the assassination publicly but the vast majority of ordinary non-Whites were delighted²⁶⁶¹ although they were reluctant to demonstrate their support in public. However, where non-Whites lived away from white eyes, they hailed the news that “the tyrant is dead” by singing, dancing and drinking. Black neighbourhoods in Johannesburg were subjected to special police patrols as a “precautionary measure.”²⁶⁶² A song was composed and sung about Dr. Verwoerd’s death and later became a playground ditty for non-White children playing skipping rope.²⁶⁶³ Some non-Whites began to dub Tsafendas “Dimitri Defendus,” meaning Tsafendas “defended us” from Dr. Verwoerd.²⁶⁶⁴ Non-White South Africans were not the only ones who celebrated Dr. Verwoerd’s death though. Stanley Uys, parliamentary correspondent of the Sunday Times, stated many years later that an unnamed member of Dr. Verwoerd’s cabinet threw a party at his home that night.²⁶⁶⁵ None of this was published in the South African press at the time.

On Robben Island, the political prisoners heard the news almost immediately. One of them, Lionel Davis, a prominent anti-apartheid revolutionary, told the author that the news delighted them all and Tsafendas immediately took on heroic stature. He said, “We all saw him as a hero. He was a hero in our eyes. All political, orchestrated political persuasions on the island, hailed him as a hero.” However, they were careful not to show their delight as they knew what would follow.²⁶⁶⁶ This was described by Nelson Mandela as follows: “As often ²⁶⁶⁰ The Australian, 8 September 1966. ‘Murder shocks world, but some leaders are glad.’

²⁶⁶¹ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015; Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 23 January 2016; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

²⁶⁶² Frankfurter Allgemeine, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Sudafrikas Ministerpräsident Dr. Verwoerd im Parlament ermordet’; Noticias, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Proseguem as investigacoes.’

²⁶⁶³ Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

²⁶⁶⁴ Louise O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

²⁶⁶⁵ Baron (Sunday Times), 9 January 2014, ‘Stanley Uys: Veteran journalist who tracked the rise and fall of the Nats.’

²⁶⁶⁶ Lionel Davis in a personal interview, 8 April 2015.

happened on the island, we had learned significant political news before our own guards. But by the following day it was obvious that they knew, for they took out their anger on us. The tension that had taken months to abate was suddenly at full force. The authorities began a crackdown against political prisoners as though we held the knife that stabbed Verwoerd.”²⁶⁶⁷

In contrast to the majority, many prominent non-White leaders condemned the assassination. They included the Rev. Benjamin Rajuili, Chief Whip of the Opposition Transkeian Democratic Party, the Rev. O. Mooki, chairman of the Orlando School Board, and M.P. Vundia, member of the Joint Advisory Board. African supporters of apartheid, including Ephraim Tahabalala, President of the African Foundation, and F.S.M. Mneube, President of the Johannesburg Chamber of Commerce, vigorously denounced the killing.²⁶⁶⁸ The Reverend J.S. Gericke, Moderator of the Dutch Reformed Church, compared Dr. Verwoerd to the Biblical King David, describing him as the victim of vicious attacks and lying propaganda. He added that “if anyone thinks this sad event will break us, he doesn’t know the strength of the people who produced a Hendrik Verwoerd.”²⁶⁶⁹

South African politicians who commented included the Minister of Transport and Leader of the House of Assembly, Barend J. Schoeman, who said Dr. Verwoerd’s death was “an irreplaceable loss to South Africa, but it was God’s will,”²⁶⁷⁰ and Helen Suzman, the sole MP of the Progressive Party, who called the assassination “one of the most ghastly shocks” she had ever experienced.²⁶⁷¹ MP A. E. Trollip said in the House the next day that when Tsafendas’s dagger stabbed Dr. Verwoerd’s heart, “he stabbed in the heart of South Africa.”²⁶⁷² In Britain, staff at the South African embassy in London’s Trafalgar Square reacted with disbelief, then shock. One hour after the news broke, the embassy flag was lowered to half-mast.²⁶⁷³

The Hindu Foundation of Durban held special prayer services,²⁶⁷⁴ and Mr. A. Habib, who sat on the Indian Council, joined the condemnations. The South African Jewish community also held special prayer services for Dr. Verwoerd. A rabbi in Johannesburg praised Dr. Verwoerd as “one of the greatest, if not the greatest, Prime Ministers South Africa

²⁶⁶⁷ Mandela, 2013: 513.

²⁶⁶⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 2. ‘Act condemned by non-white leaders.’

²⁶⁶⁹ The Australian, 12 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd victim of lies says moderator.’

²⁶⁷⁰ Cape Times, 8 September 1966, ‘It was God’s will says Schoeman.’

²⁶⁷¹ The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Assassination condemned by friend and foe alike.’

²⁶⁷² Schoeman, 1975: 2.

²⁶⁷³ The Cape Times, 7 September 1966: 10, ‘Sorrowing South Africa’s solemn tributes.’

²⁶⁷⁴ Daily News, 8 September 1966: 3, ‘Durban Indians pay tribute in prayer.’

has ever produced.” Rabbi Super acknowledged that in 1936 Dr. Verwoerd opposed the admission to South Africa of Jewish refugees from Germany, but added that in 1948 he endorsed the new National Party policy of non-discrimination against any section of the European population in South Africa.²⁶⁷⁵ Chief Rabbi B.M. Casper expressed his personal grief and the “sorrow and dismay of the Jewish community,” while Dr. T. Schneider, President of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies, sent the following telegram to Betsy Dr. Verwoerd: “The South African Jewish community is deeply shocked by this tragic national calamity and offers you and your children heartfelt condolences. We mourn the passing of a dedicated son of this country.”²⁶⁷⁶

Alan Paton, leader of the Liberal Party and known worldwide as the author of the novel Cry, the Beloved Country, said “acts of violence such as this can never achieve anything, no matter what the intention of the assassin.”²⁶⁷⁷ Twenty days later Paton described Dr. Verwoerd in realistic terms in an article in The Star entitled, “Dr. Verwoerd: his world of illusion.” Paton there described the Prime Minister as hypocritical, charging that he was racist during the 1930s, 1940s, and early 1950s, although he changed for the better later.²⁶⁷⁸

The South African media published numerous messages of condolence and condemnation, avoiding any statement applauding the killing, either from inside or outside South Africa. Typical was The Cape Times which published detailed condemnations from politicians, prominent citizens, church leaders and representatives of the Jewish, Indian and Coloured communities, clearly in an effort to demonstrate that all South Africans condemned the assassination.²⁶⁷⁹ Elsewhere, Dr. Verwoerd was characterised as the “father of the nation,” the “Moses of the Afrikaner tribe” and “apartheid’s architect.”²⁶⁸⁰ However, Johnny Makhathini, an ANC exile leader in Algiers, hailed the assassination as “the beginning of the end for apartheid,”²⁶⁸¹ and said that it would “help the morale of guerrilla fighters in South Africa ... it would increase confusion among the Republic’s whites.”²⁶⁸²

²⁶⁷⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Act condemned by non-white leaders’

²⁶⁷⁶ South African Jewish Times, 09 September 1966: 1, ‘South African Jewry share in national grief.’

²⁶⁷⁷ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁶⁷⁸ Paton (The Star), 26 September 1966: 18, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: his world of illusion.’

²⁶⁷⁹ Cape Times, 7 September 1966: 10 ‘Sorrowing South Africa’s solemn tributes.’

²⁶⁸⁰ Lepierre, 2009: 126.

²⁶⁸¹ The Australian, 8 September 1966, ‘Murder shocks world, but some leaders are glad.’

²⁶⁸² The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Assassination condemned by friend and foe alike’; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

Albie Sachs, the South African barrister and freedom fighter who had arrived in London just a month earlier after spending eight months in solitary confinement in Cape Town for anti-apartheid activities, said in an interview on the British television programme Twenty-Four Hours that there would be “jubilation” among Black people in the townships that “a tyrant has fallen.” He added, “One thinks of the people who were killed at the time of Sharpeville... of the other various victims of apartheid.”²⁶⁸³ Asked if he regretted the assassination, he replied, “Murder is foul, wherever it happens, but I would be hypocritical if I said I had any regrets.”²⁶⁸⁴ None of these statements was published in the South African press. Later a judge, Albie Sachs told the author that he had also said during the interview that “assassination never solved problems.” However, this comment was omitted by the newspapers that reported his interview.²⁶⁸⁵

The Afrikaans media responded to the assassination in emotional terms. Die Transvaler wrote, “Dr. Verwoerd is no more. That is a thought which pierces the soul of all who have known him... it is heart-rending... it is not only that a great void has come about in the life of the people of South Africa, but a void has come that cannot again be filled.” Die Burger wrote that “the death of the Prime Minister and the horrible circumstances surrounding it is a shock that will, to a large extent, test our political system and our public life. Winds of excitement and change, of distrust and indignation will blow through our country and they will be fanned by those who seek our destruction.” The newspaper called for “calm and balance” from all sections of society, stating that, “it is with these characteristics that the governing party will have to approach the problem of a permanent successor.”²⁶⁸⁶ On 10 September, author G. H. Calpin, in an article in Die Vaderland wrote: “I cannot think of South Africa without Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁶⁸⁷

Volkshandel, an Afrikaner monthly periodical, characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “a great statesman and a dynamic leader” and added:

“Hendrik Verwoerd will stand in history on the same pedestal as Paul Krueger [the leader of the Afrikaner republics in the Boers Wars]. He is the political as well as economic father of our white Republic ... His sincere efforts to help non-white races developed

²⁶⁸³ The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, ‘BBC News criticized.’

²⁶⁸⁴ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁶⁸⁵ Albie Sachs in a personal interview with the author, 27 September 2016.

²⁶⁸⁶ Pretoria News, 9 September 1966, ‘Assassination swept all away.’

²⁶⁸⁷ Schoeman, 1975: 90.

independently in their own areas has laid the foundation for a future template of multi-racial state with independent ethnic groups.”²⁶⁸⁸

Under the headline “A Heinous Crime,” the English-language Rand Daily Mail said the people of South Africa had experienced the “most profound shock and horror,” adding that “non-white leaders of all political opinions were quick to express horror” at Dr. Verwoerd’s death. The Rev. Benjamin Rajuili, Chief Whip of the opposition Transkeian Democratic Party, said, “If his murderer believed this would help the African people, he must be a misguided madman.”²⁶⁸⁹ The Zululand Times in a very small article condemned this “reprehensible and irresponsible act”²⁶⁹⁰

Around the same time, youngsters play-acting with knives, started yelling at one another, “I’ll Demitrio you” or “I’ll Tsafendas you!” Three weeks after the assassination, two jokes started going around South Africa about Dr. Verwoerd’s death. The first one was set in heaven, where St. Peter asked Dr. Verwoerd, “How did you get here?” He replied, “A messenger sent me.” The second was a “knock-knock” joke, showing that Dr. Verwoerd was already forgotten by some:

“Knock, knock.”

“Who’s there?”

“Hendrick.”

“Hendrick who?”

“Have you forgotten already?”²⁶⁹¹

GREEKS IN SOUTH AFRICA

News that a Greek had killed Dr. Verwoerd had a huge effect on members of South Africa’s Greek community, numbering some 40,000,²⁶⁹² complicated by the “pro” or “anti” reactions of their White and non-White friends. Those who knew Greeks who were of a liberal disposition were not afraid to express their views, congratulating them that a compatriot had ²⁶⁸⁸ Miller, 2016: 40.

²⁶⁸⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Act condemned by non-white leaders.’

²⁶⁹⁰ Zululand Times, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘The late Dr. Verwoerd.’

²⁶⁹¹ Kahn, 1968: 148, 164.

²⁶⁹² Rand Daily Mail, either 7 or 14 September 1966. ‘Greeks are given ‘no retaliation’ assurance.’

assassinated their tyrant. In Cape Town, Peter Protoulis employed a Black woman servant whose brother was imprisoned on Robben Island. She would often point to the island and tell Protoulis about him. After the assassination, she pointed again and told him that her brother would be very happy about Dr. Verwoerd's death. She was delighted that it was a Greek who killed the man she said caused them so much suffering and she told Protoulis that there were celebrations throughout her neighbourhood.²⁶⁹³ Also in Cape Town, some of Elias Constantaras's non-White colleagues congratulated him for being Greek and expressed happiness over the assassination.²⁶⁹⁴ In Johannesburg, Mary Vasilakou's and Akis Apergis's Black friends and colleagues expressed their satisfaction and said there were celebrations in their home communities. Some Black South Africans asked Mary Vasilakou if she knew Tsafendas personally and praised his bravery. Vasilakou said it was the first time in South Africa that she felt so proud of being Greek.²⁶⁹⁵

The reaction of White South Africans was mostly angry and Greek shops became targets for their wrath. In Cape Town, Johannesburg and Pretoria, the windows of Greek shops and houses were smashed,²⁶⁹⁶ some Greek shopkeepers were verbally abused and others received threatening telephone calls. The canopy outside a Greek shop in Johannesburg was set on fire,²⁶⁹⁷ many café customers turned hostile and some walked out after making insulting remarks. An assistant at a Greek café in Sunnyside, Pretoria arrived for work to find one of the glass doors broken. A cartridge case for a 0.25 bullet was found in the doorway and the bullet was embedded in a pile of scattered sweet tins. The owner said he could not understand why people were reacting against the Greeks: "We feel as badly as all South Africans about the assassination of our Prime Minister. There is no proof at all that the man is Greek."²⁶⁹⁸ The Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. J.M. Keevy, ordered that no reprisals be taken against South Africa's Greek community. He said "Tsafendas was not and had never been a member of the Greek community."²⁶⁹⁹ The South African Government also declared that it would not tolerate retaliation against Greeks.²⁷⁰⁰

²⁶⁹³ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

²⁶⁹⁴ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 19 June 2014.

²⁶⁹⁵ Akis Apergis in a personal interview, 24 March 2015; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

²⁶⁹⁶ Akis Apergis in a personal interview, 24 March 2015; Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016; Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

²⁶⁹⁷ The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, 'Attacks on Greek shops.'

²⁶⁹⁸ Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, 'City Greek café hit by bullet.'

²⁶⁹⁹ The Herald (Melbourne), 9 September 1966: 9, 'Don't touch the Greeks.'

²⁷⁰⁰ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Assurances for Greeks.'

Greeks in South Africa, and Mozambique, too, tried hastily to distance themselves from Tsafendas, many claiming he was not Greek so as not to tarnish the Greek name in South Africa.²⁷⁰¹ Most Greeks in South Africa supported apartheid and many were “more royal than the king,” eager to show their loyalty to the regime. Generally, Greeks co-operated with apartheid for commercial, political or personal reasons, but some gave financial support to the army and the National Party. Opponents of apartheid were widely considered to be traitors, including Advocate George Bizos, who was shunned by his fellow countrymen and considered to be a “traitor.”²⁷⁰² The following statement by a “leading South Coast Greek businessman” in The Daily News is a representative example of the attitude of most Greeks at the time: “when I arrived in South Africa some fifteen years ago I had holes in my shoes. With the help of the Government I was able to find employment, and within a matter of six years I had my own business and two cars. I am sure that I speak for all Greeks in South Africa when I say we never had it so good... we as Greeks have always had the highest regard for D. Dr. Verwoerd. He had done a great deal for us, allowed and given us every reason to want to be South Africans and succeed in business.”²⁷⁰³

The Greek community in Pretoria was the first publicly to distance itself from this “infamous and reprehensible assassination.” A spokesman hastily declared that “the criminal was in no way attached to any religious or social Greek organisation and he was not recognized as a Greek.”²⁷⁰⁴ The Consul for Greece in Cape Town, Mr. E. Kallos, stated that “Tsafendas was not a Greek subject and was not registered with any of the Greek consulates in the country.” Another consular official suggested that “Tsafendas was in fact a Portuguese citizen ... he is not of Greek origin at all.”²⁷⁰⁵ A spokesman for the Hellenic Community in Cape Town declared: “we are greatly perturbed by the fact that the assassin seems to have a Greek name. Actually the name is the only indication that he might be of Greek descent, as he is completely unknown to the community and its members. He is also unknown to the Greek priests and has never attended any religious service or social function.”²⁷⁰⁶

A spokesman for South Africa’s Hellenic community expressed “profound and heartfelt sympathy for the tragic passing of Dr. Verwoerd,” adding, “On behalf of the various ²⁷⁰¹ Eleftherotipia, ‘Οι έλληνες φίλοι του απαρχάιντ’, 4 July 2010.

²⁷⁰² Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 15 April 2016; Advocate George Bizos in Manolis Dimelas’s Live and Let Live, 2007.

²⁷⁰³ The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 9, ‘S.A. Greeks had high regard for Dr. Verwoerd.’

²⁷⁰⁴ Noticias, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Proseguem as investigacoes.’

²⁷⁰⁵ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966, 8, ‘Vorster gives Greeks assurance.’

²⁷⁰⁶ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966, 8, ‘Vorster gives Greeks assurance.’

Greek communities in South Africa and all South African Greeks, we wish it to be known that we dissociate ourselves entirely from this infamous and reprehensible act.”²⁷⁰⁷ The leader of the Greek community in Johannesburg, Peter Paizes, said he was a personal friend and admirer of Dr. Verwoerd;²⁷⁰⁸ he spoke of his “tremendous grief” and expressed “indescribable consternation” that the assassin apparently was partly of Greek extraction.²⁷⁰⁹

The President of the Greek Community in Bloemfontein, Georgios Manidis said about Tsafendas, “He must be insane. He does not represent the feelings of the Greeks of South Africa. Most of the Greeks in South Africa are supporters of Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁷¹⁰ In Cape Town, a delegation of Greek leaders called on the Minister of Justice, John Vorster, and expressed deep sympathy. They assured the minister that Tsafendas was not of Greek origin and was not connected in any way with the Greek community in South Africa.²⁷¹¹ On September 8, the Greek Consul in Cape Town asked all Greek traders to close their businesses at 12.30 p.m. on September 10, the day of Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral, and attend a memorial service in his memory.²⁷¹²

The entire South African press found something good to say about Dr. Verwoerd, from eulogies to modest praise, according to the newspaper’s political stance. However, the wildest encomiums came not from the Afrikaner media, but from Acropolis, a Greek newspaper in South Africa. A front-page article by owner and editor Georgios P. Sakellaridis, outdid all others in lauding the slain Premier and characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “perhaps the greatest son of the South African nation ... a philosopher, an intellectual, a true Christian, a philanthropist, a visionary ... a holy symbol of Christian civilization and of real patriotism ... who turned South Africa to the only bastion of Christianity in an atheistic, godless continent and to the only hope of the free people of the continent against the cancer of Communism.” Sakellaridis went as far as to declare Dr. Verwoerd to be “a modern Prometheus Unbound, who has been misunderstood, slandered and wrongfully accused by the unfair and irresponsible international community which is unaware of everything he has done for the black South Africans.”²⁷¹³

²⁷⁰⁷ The Pretoria News, 7 September 1966, ‘City Greek café hit by bullet.’

²⁷⁰⁸ To Vima, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Η δολοφονία του Φέρβειρντ: Ελληνικής καταγωγής ο δράστης.’

²⁷⁰⁹ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Grief expressed by leader of Greeks in Johannesburg.’

²⁷¹⁰ Kathimerini, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Ατομον ελληνικής καταγωγής εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ.’

²⁷¹¹ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966, ‘Vorster gives Greeks assurance.’

²⁷¹² The Cape Argus, 9 September 1966: 1, ‘Greek shops asked to close’; The Cape Times, 8 September 1966: 7, ‘Greek shops to stop for funeral.’

²⁷¹³ Acropolis, ‘Ολόκληρον το Νοτιοαφρικόν Έθνος εκήδευσε τον πρωθυπουργό του’, 17 September 1966: 1.

AFRICA

There was very little mourning in Africa for Dr. Verwoerd's death, indeed there were celebrations in several places. In Dar-es-Salam, Tanzania, Gerge Magomba, secretary of the OAU Liberation Committee, declared that the death of South Africa's Prime Minister would encourage delegates at the Commonwealth Conference, then gathering in London, to demand a continuation of the fight against the ideas defended by the late Dr. Verwoerd, and would serve as a warning to (Ian) Smith and (Antonio de Oliveira) Salazar.²⁷¹⁴ Commonwealth General Secretary Arnold Smith said, "Meaningless violence and assassinations will not solve South Africa's political problems."²⁷¹⁵ In Algiers, Mnoko, representative of the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU), which was banned in Rhodesia, declared that oppression could lead only to death. "The attack ... proved the vulnerability of this fascist empire," he added. Katjivena, representative in Algiers of SWAPO (South West African People's Organization) declared that "the fascist Dr. Verwoerd got what he deserved."²⁷¹⁶

In Zambia, neither President Kenneth Kaunda nor any of his ministers commented on the assassination, but when the news was announced in Parliament by Wesley Nyirenda, the Deputy Speaker, there was laughter by some members of the parliament.²⁷¹⁷ Under the headline, "Death of an Evil Genius," The Times of Zambia editorialised that there were few who more deserved a violent death than the South African Prime Minister. It said, "The society he created in South Africa is sick. For him... the sickness has proved mortal."²⁷¹⁸

The New York Times, reporting from Nairobi, Kenya, wrote that throughout East Africa, "People were shocked but not really distressed." It said, "Black Africans seemed confused by the assassination... it was as if they were not sorry it happened but were worried lest events rush in on them and make a bad situation worse... that Dr. Verwoerd's successor might be worse for Africans." A statement issued on behalf of Kenyan President Jomo

²⁷¹⁴ Le Courrier d'Afrique, 9 September 1966: 3, 'A eleicao do sucessor.'

²⁷¹⁵ Frankfurter Rundschau, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd im Parlament ermordet.'

²⁷¹⁶ Le Courrier d'Afrique, 9 September 1966: 3, 'A eleicao do sucessor.'

²⁷¹⁷ The Globe and Mail, 8 September 1966: 4, 'Dr. Verwoerd Party vows to continue Apartheid'; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, 'Murder shocks world'; The Rhodesia Herald, 7 September 1966, 'World condemns Dr. Verwoerd murder'; TIME, 16 September 1966, 'South Africa: Death to the architect.'

²⁷¹⁸ The New York Times, 8 September 1966: 12, 'Zambians call death deserved.'

Kenyatta said, “Perhaps the assassination will act as a timely lesson to Dr. Verwoerd’s supporters in redeeming their country from many more such deaths.”²⁷¹⁹

The Kenya African National Union, the ruling Party, stated that force would be the ultimate method of overthrowing apartheid. It characterised the assassination as “a symbolic and heartening act, from which millions suffering from apartheid would draw hope.”²⁷²⁰ Kenya’s Minister of Defence, Dr. Njoroge Mungai, said when first told about the stabbing, ‘I hope it is successful. It would be a good thing.’²⁷²¹ The East African Standard reported the assassination without comment, but the Kenya Daily Nation published a front-page editorial signed by the editor, George Githii. It said in part, “Dr. Verwoerd’s regime has been carrying out an inhuman social experiment, but unlike scientific experiments in laboratories, factors affecting the human mind are unpredictable and cannot entirely be suppressed by the force of arms.” MP Henry Wariithi said, “This has been expected. He should not be buried in African soil.”²⁷²²

In Lagos, many Nigerians shouted “hallelujah,” danced in the streets and jumped for joy when they heard the news of the assassination of the “apostle of apartheid.”²⁷²³ Brigadier Ogundipe, leader of the Nigerian delegation in the 1966 Commonwealth Conference, said, “There may be a message in this for Mr. Ian Smith of Rhodesia.”²⁷²⁴ In Ethiopia, a banner headline in the New Times of Addis Ababa said, “The Sharpeville Butcher Stabbed to Death,” and the English-language Voice of Ethiopia said, “He who raises the sword shall perish by the sword.”²⁷²⁵ Ethiopia’s Foreign Minister called Dr. Verwoerd’s death “the natural result of apartheid, which breeds blind hate and evil.”²⁷²⁶ Cairo’s Al Akhbar newspaper said Egypt had “no tears to shed” for Dr. Verwoerd.²⁷²⁷

From Salisbury, Rhodesia, the Rand Daily Mail of South Africa reported that Dr. Verwoerd had become “a sort of idol” to White Rhodesians,²⁷²⁸ while The Chronicle in ²⁷¹⁹ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 17, ‘Assassination stirs concern among leaders of Black Africa.’

²⁷²⁰ The Guardian, 9 September 1966: 11, “Stinking” quotation by BBC.’

²⁷²¹ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁷²² The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 17, ‘Assassination stirs concern among leaders of Black Africa.’

²⁷²³ Daily Express, 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Epitaph for a fanatic’; The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Jubilation at news in Nigeria’; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 1, ‘How Africa took the news’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷²⁴ The Australian, 8 September 1966. ‘Murder shocks world, but some leaders are glad.’

²⁷²⁵ The Globe and Mail, 8 September 1966: 4, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Party vows to continue apartheid.’

²⁷²⁶ TIME, 16 September 1966, ‘South Africa: Death to the architect.’

²⁷²⁷ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 6, ‘Assassination sends a wave of shock around the world’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷²⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 7 September 1966: 7, ‘Ghastly, says a socked Ian Smith.’

Bulawayo characterised him as a “good friend of Rhodesia.”²⁷²⁹ The Rhodesia and World Report wrote that South Africa’s Prime Minister was “misunderstood by those who prefer to misunderstand” and that he “stood with courage and dignity for the principles he held. That these principles may in time be accepted even where they are at present most bitterly resisted is not beyond the bounds of possibility.” The newspaper went on to claim that his death would be “equally” felt in Rhodesia “whose desperate needs he served far above the call of duty or political expediency” and characterised him as “a great man, a humanitarian and outstanding intellect, in whom the spirit flamed with rare brilliance.”²⁷³⁰

In Parliament, Prime Minister Ian Smith, a close ally of Dr. Verwoerd whose country depended on South African economic support, looked pale²⁷³¹ when he said, “I am sure this ghastly event has deeply shocked Honourable Members, as it has myself.” He promised a full tribute next day, then adjourned Parliament two hours early.²⁷³² A little later, he characterised Dr. Verwoerd as “the champion of the ideals of civilization and Christianity”²⁷³³ and described his death as a “tragic loss.”²⁷³⁴

The Economist reflected on the effect of Dr. Verwoerd’s death on a white-ruled Rhodesia beset by British-imposed sanctions. It said Dr. Verwoerd “was much more than a very good friend and neighbour; he was the only national leader of world prominence who gave Rhodesians moral and material support in their struggle to make sanctions less effective... “The weekly magazine said, “There is no immediate fear that Dr. Verwoerd’s successor will alter the South African policy of helpful neutrality ... but one fear has always nagged White Rhodesians... that no fighting war would be waged by South Africa to prevent Rhodesia becoming an African state if that seemed inevitable.”²⁷³⁵ In Umtali, Rhodesia, the Rev. T.C. de Villiers, a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, said Dr. Verwoerd was his fellow student at Stellenbosch University and a personal friend. “He was a born leader as well as a brilliant student... he will live in the hearts of tens of thousands of South Africans and Rhodesians.”²⁷³⁶

²⁷²⁹ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 7 September 1966, ‘Senseless act – Jonathan.’

²⁷³⁰ Rhodesia and World Report, September/October 1966, Vol. 1, No. 5: 1, ‘The pattern of assassination. In memoriam of Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd.’

²⁷³¹ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 1, ‘How Africa took the news.’

²⁷³² The Rhodesia Herald, 7 September 1966, ‘World condemns Dr. Verwoerd murder.’

²⁷³³ Le Courrier d’Afrique, 9 September 1966: 2, ‘A eleicao do sucessor.’

²⁷³⁴ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷³⁵ The Economist, 10 September 1966: 1000-1001, ‘Whites in mourning.’

²⁷³⁶ Umtali Post, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Umtali Minister pays tribute to an old friend.’

Chief Leabua Jonathan, Prime Minister of Basutoland, an ally of Dr. Verwoerd and the first Black African head of government ever to make an official visit to South Africa, forced a motion of condolence through Basutoland's Assembly by a paper thin vote of 29 to 28.²⁷³⁷ He expressed his "shock and grief" at the assassination and said it left him "with a real sense of personal loss."²⁷³⁸ Chief Kasper Matanzima, Chief Minister of the Transkei, said the nation of South Africa had lost its "greater leader of all time" and the African people within its borders a friend and father.²⁷³⁹

In Uganda, many applauded the killing of the "hated leader of the persecution of Africans"²⁷⁴⁰ and danced in the streets.²⁷⁴¹ However Uganda President Milton Obote said, "It is a very bad thing to solve political problems through assassination and I regret his death." Elsewhere, Forbes Burnham of Guyana characterised the assassination as, "interesting," and Dawda Jawara of Gambia said, "I can only hope that the new leader will steer South Africa away from a policy which can only be described as disastrous."²⁷⁴²

The Algerian-French magazine Revolution Africaine applauded the assassination, referred to Dr. Verwoerd as "the apostle of hatred," and said, "The most hated man of Africa is no more. The jailor of the Cape, with more than thirteen million Africans at his feet thanks to the complicity, more or less active, of three million Whites of European origin, and thanks to the indifference, if not complacency, of the Halogen groups, died last Tuesday." In another article, the magazine characterized South Africa as a "ghetto for the Black People," and said that Dr. Verwoerd was "the head of the criminals of the large prison that South Africa had become." It said, "Dr. Verwoerd's madness, and that of his acolytes, turned it into a ghetto for colored people, since South Africa is solely the home of a minority, excluding a majority. This is the principle of the philosophy that inspires the system upon which rests all the politico-social structure reserved to a category of 'supers.'"²⁷⁴³

Finally, the Congolese newspaper Le Courier d'Afrique reported that at the United Nations a few African representatives had planned to celebrate Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, partly as a response to the celebration of the South African delegation about the rejection of

²⁷³⁷ TIME, 16 September 1966: 39, 'South Africa: Death to the architect.'

²⁷³⁸ The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 7 September 1966: 1, 'Senseless act – Jonathan.'

²⁷³⁹ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 6, 'Assassination sends a wave of shock around the world'; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, 'London Conference shocked by slain.'

²⁷⁴⁰ Kathimerini, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Ατομον ελληνικής καταγωγής εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ.'

²⁷⁴¹ Daily Express, 7 September 1966: 2, 'Epitaph for a fanatic.'

²⁷⁴² The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, 'Murder shocks world.'

²⁷⁴³ Revolution Africaine, 9 September 1966: 3, 'The apostle of hatred is no more.'

the International Court of Justice of the action against Pretoria, regarding the mandate over the African Southeast. However, after further consideration, they preferred to refrain from manifestations of this kind.²⁷⁴⁴

EUROPE

In Britain, the newspapers reported the assassination with banner headlines, page-wide photographs and many columns of text. Prime Minister Harold Wilson sent the following message to Dr. Theophilus E. Donges, South Africa's senior Cabinet minister and acting Prime Minister: "I was shocked to hear the news of the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. Please accept condolences on behalf of the British Government and myself and convey our sympathy to Dr. Verwoerd's family."²⁷⁴⁵ The leader of the opposition Conservative Party, Edward Heath, declared that he strongly opposed Dr. Verwoerd's apartheid policy but he was sorry for "this barbaric assassination." The Liberal Party leader, Jo Grimond, commented: "It is obvious that the regime leads to violence of this kind. This should serve as a warning to all of those who wish to lead autocratic regimes in Africa."²⁷⁴⁶

A few hours after the assassination, Sir Arthur Michael Palliser, private secretary to Prime Minister Harold Wilson, reflected on the effects of Dr. Verwoerd's absence on the international scene. In a letter to the British Foreign Office, he wrote, "Whatever one may think of Dr. Verwoerd's policies, no other South African minister has his experience, and prestige and we are likely to regret the disappearance of his skill, caution and realism in the conduct of South Africa's external affairs." He concluded by correctly predicting that John Vorster would be his successor. "The ruthless and former pro-Nazi Minister of Justice seems the most likely candidate," he wrote.²⁷⁴⁷

Initially, the head of state, Queen Elizabeth, remained silent and sent no messages to the Dr. Verwoerd family or the South African government.²⁷⁴⁸ It was understood by the press

²⁷⁴⁴ Le Courrier d'Afrique, 9 September 1966: 2, 'A eleicao do sucessor.'

²⁷⁴⁵ Copy of Harold Wilson's message to Dr. Donges. 6 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. British National Archives (hereafter cited as BNA); The Rhodesia Herald, 7 September 1966, 'World condemns Dr. Verwoerd murder.'

²⁷⁴⁶ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 7 September 1966: 2, 'Qualquer violencia e lamentavel.'

²⁷⁴⁷ A.M. Palliser letter to the Foreign Office. 6 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

²⁷⁴⁸ The Sun (Vancouver), 12 September 1966: 3, 'Advice to Queen shocking'; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, 'Murder shocks world.'

that she took such a decision on the advice of Prime Minister Harold Wilson.²⁷⁴⁹ The Canberra Times of Australia said, “It seems likely that it was considered inappropriate for the Queen to send a message, especially as many of the Commonwealth leaders (then meeting in London) might not have been in sympathy with it.”²⁷⁵⁰ However, a few days later, the Queen sent a private message of condolence to Dr. Verwoerd’s wife, Betsie. The delay came about because the Prime Minister’s office considered such an action would be against precedent. However, the Queen said after Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral that she “would very much like to send a purely private word of sympathy to Mrs. Dr. Verwoerd.” The PM’s Office bowed to her wish, but was at pains to explain to the media that this was not “a formal message, which would be from the Queen to a head of state, but a purely private and personal message, conveyed on her behalf to the widow.” The message, sent on September 10, said: “The Queen was deeply shocked by the news of the assassination of your husband. Her Majesty, who feels very deeply for you in your loss, desires me to convey to you and to all the members of your family an expression of her most sincere sympathy.”²⁷⁵¹

The BBC interrupted its programmes to announce the assassination.²⁷⁵² But there were protests when an unnamed African appeared on a news broadcast and stated that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was the “happiest day of his life and he only wished he had committed the murder himself.”²⁷⁵³ The South African Die Vaderland responded to BBC with an article entitled “Away with the BBC.” The newspaper said that the fact that BBC allowed this man to make such a comment “stinks in nostrils of the civilised world.”²⁷⁵⁴ Nevertheless, the BBC News on the night of the assassination attracted some twelve and a half million viewers, one of the highest audience figures of the year.²⁷⁵⁵

The Daily Mail’s headline on the front page said “the final irony-Dr. Verwoerd, apostle of apartheid is carried out dead... killed by the hand of a White man.” Below the headline was a picture with Dr. Verwoerd’s body being carried out from the Parliament on a stretcher. The Left-wing Daily Mirror’s headline was “Missionary of hate-he shaped the laws

²⁷⁴⁹ Umtali Post, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘No message from Queen.’

²⁷⁵⁰ The Canberra Times, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Matters of protocol.’

²⁷⁵¹ Queen’s condolences message to Betsie Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

²⁷⁵² Pretoria News, 6 September 1966: 1, ‘Shock news on BBC’; Umtali Post, 6 September 1966: 1, ‘BBC reports the death.’

²⁷⁵³ The Guardian, 9 September 1966: 11, “Stinking’ quotation by BBC’; The Times (London), 7 September 1966: 1, ‘BBC news criticized.’

²⁷⁵⁴ The Guardian, 9 September 1966: 11, “Stinking’ quotation by BBC.’

²⁷⁵⁵ The Stage, 20 October 1966: 10, ‘BBC drops further behind in September.’

of apartheid,” while the Right-wing Daily Sketch called Dr. Verwoerd “this misguided man.” The London Times editorial said, “what has been tragically seen in recent years, notably in the murder of President Kennedy is that the closest security system ca pan protect nobody against the private vendetta of a solitary man with a grievance.”²⁷⁵⁶

Writing from London, the historian and politician Lord Altrincham said, “Dr. Verwoerd was certainly the ablest practical and theoretical exponent of apartheid, but the system was not his creation, nor will it die with him. Indeed, his supposed martyrdom may give it additional strength.”²⁷⁵⁷ The London Economist disagreed. After considering Dr. Verwoerd’s possible successors, it said, “Whoever wins, one thing seems certain: the days of apartheid as an intellectualised and rationalised philosophy are over. The death of Dr. Verwoerd is to ‘separate development’ what the death of Lenin was to Communism. The theories will remain but they will ossify.”²⁷⁵⁸

On September 17, the British satirical magazine, Private Eye, carried several cartoons and spoof conversations about the assassination, including a front-page photograph of Africans dancing and leaping. The caption, ironically suggesting they were celebrating their Prime Minister’s death, proclaimed, “Dr. Verwoerd: A Nation Mourns.”²⁷⁵⁹ South Africa’s Publications Control Board banned the issue. A Daily Dispatch reporter who saw the magazine said the cover picture showed Africans in trial dress dancing jubilantly above a caption which suggested they were reacting to news of Dr. Verwoerd’s death.²⁷⁶⁰

In Athens, Foreign Minister Ioannis Toumbas said, “The Greek Government feels horror for the odious crime whose victim was the South African Premier.”²⁷⁶¹ Kathimerini, a leading Greek newspaper of the time, said in a front-page editorial, “Greek public opinion has been struck with horror ... the assassin was probably disturbed in his mind. The fact that he is of Greek origin provokes a national feeling of sorrow.”²⁷⁶² Messages of condolence poured into the South African embassy in Athens from all parts of Greece.²⁷⁶³ In Cyprus, President

²⁷⁵⁶ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 6, ‘Assassination sends a wave of shock around the world.’

²⁷⁵⁷ The Australian, 10 September 1966. ‘Dr. Verwoerd killer: Sad little psychopath or messenger of doom?’

²⁷⁵⁸ The Economist, 10 September 1966: 1000-1001, ‘Whites in mourning.’

²⁷⁵⁹ Private Eye, 17 September 1966: cover, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: A nation mourns.’

²⁷⁶⁰ Daily Dispatch, 14 October 1966: 1, ‘Satire on Dr. Verwoerd death banned.’

²⁷⁶¹ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Grief expressed by leader of Greeks in Johannesburg.’

²⁷⁶² Kathimerini, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Ατομον ελληνικής καταγωγής εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβειρντ.’

²⁷⁶³ Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘City Greek café hit by bullet.’

Makarios, who opposed apartheid, said, “Assassinations are terrible things. I am terribly shocked and express my sympathy.”²⁷⁶⁴

At the Vatican, Pope Paul VI extended his condolences over Dr. Verwoerd’s “tragic death,”²⁷⁶⁵ while the governments of West Germany, Denmark and Norway all expressed shock. Denmark, however, expressed serious criticism of apartheid and announced that the government would not send an official representative to attend Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral.²⁷⁶⁶ Portugal, whose Prime Minister Antonio de Oliveira Salazar was a close ally of Dr. Verwoerd, characterised the murder as a “criminal act,”²⁷⁶⁷ while a spokesman at the Portuguese Foreign Ministry said, “Nobody could deny the personal integrity, the patriotic devotion and the moral courage of the Premier of South Africa.” In Paris, government officials said they were certain the murder would strengthen racial opposition within South Africa,²⁷⁶⁸ although France’s Foreign Minister, Maurice Couve de Mourville, expressed the “sad condolences” of his Government.²⁷⁶⁹ Dr. Borg Olivier of Malta said, “I hope it does not happen to any of us.”²⁷⁷⁰

In Moscow, the Soviet News Agency Tass reported the assassination without comment but it identified Dr. Verwoerd as “the head of the racist regime” in South Africa.²⁷⁷¹ The government newspaper, Izvestia, wrote that “for millions of honest people in Africa and all over the world,” Dr. Verwoerd was “the embodiment of the monstrous doctrine of total racism.”²⁷⁷² It added that although the Russian tradition required a person to say either good things or nothing at all about the dead that was impossible in Dr. Verwoerd’s case.²⁷⁷³ The Communist Party daily Pravda also reported the assassination without comment in a single paragraph of thirteen lines.²⁷⁷⁴

The Melbourne Herald of September 7, 1966, recalled how the Soviet Union once put Hendrik Verwoerd on trial, in absentia. The newspaper said news of Dr. Verwoerd’s death came too late for Soviet officials to be contacted, but added that the Kremlin was unlikely to ²⁷⁶⁴ The Vancouver Sun, 6 September 1966: 3, ‘Verwoerd assassination shocks world leaders.’

²⁷⁶⁵ The New York Times, 8 September 1966: 12, ‘Pope sends condolences.’

²⁷⁶⁶ Pretoria News, 10 September 1966, ‘Denmark will not send diplomat.’

²⁷⁶⁷ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁷⁶⁸ Frankfurter Allgemeine, 7 September 1966: 5, ‘Die Wahler honorieren die Apartheid.’

²⁷⁶⁹ The Rhodesia Herald, 7 September 1966, ‘World condemns Dr. Verwoerd murder.’

²⁷⁷⁰ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁷⁷¹ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷⁷² The New York Times, 8 September 1966: 12, ‘Moscow assails Dr. Verwoerd.’

²⁷⁷³ To Vima, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Απειλούν τους Έλληνες εις την Ν. Αφρική.’

²⁷⁷⁴ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 6, ‘Assassination sends a wave of shock around the world.’

have any regrets. Russia had never had diplomatic relations with South Africa and two years ago, an “international court of public opinion” was set up as a youth forum in Moscow to try Dr. Verwoerd for racist crimes. The court concluded that the South African leader was liable to be condemned as a heinous, international criminal and an enemy of mankind. It “summoned” Dr. Verwoerd to appear before it, a summons, the newspaper said, which he never obeyed.²⁷⁷⁵

In Italy, Corriere Della Sera characterised Dr. Verwoerd as the ‘fanatical executor’ of apartheid. Recalling his comment that “we are Christian, we want to help them (non-whites) stand up,” the newspaper asked, “How could they stand up if they had no room to place their feet, when three million and four hundred thousand whites control 86% of the land and twelve million negroes only 14%?”²⁷⁷⁶

In divided Germany, opinion about Dr. Verwoerd was also divided. In West Germany, most of the media condemned the assassination without commenting on Dr. Verwoerd’s policies. Handelsblatt claimed that Dr. Verwoerd was misunderstood and what he did was for the benefit of the Blacks.²⁷⁷⁷ However, Frankfurter Allegemeine declared that Dr. Verwoerd had “sown hatred and discord.”²⁷⁷⁸ In East Germany, the Neues Deutschland attacked Dr. Verwoerd as “the leader of the white racists ... one of the most eager defenders of apartheid, the barbaric racial oppression of 13 million Africans and Asians, whose methods are barely inferior to the ‘Nuremberg Laws.’” The newspaper reminded its readers that according to the Swiss, German-language daily, Neue Zürcher Zeitung of April 15 this year, the International Agency for Employment in Geneva had declared that the “state of African labour bound to a South African economy under the principles of White supremacy” could “barely be differentiated from slavery.” Nues Deutschland pointed out that West Germany supported Dr. Verwoerd’s fascist racial politics. It was “none other than the current President of West Germany and concentration camp builder Lübke, who visited South Africa in 1959 and told the racist regime that ‘the problems surrounding native peoples are in good hands here.’” The article said Dr. Verwoerd was “a victim of his own politics of violence.”²⁷⁷⁹

²⁷⁷⁵ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁷⁷⁶ Corriere Della Serra, 8 September 1966, ‘L’apartheid.’

²⁷⁷⁷ Handelsblatt, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Sudafrika sucht nachfolger für Dr. Verwoerd.’

²⁷⁷⁸ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 6, ‘Assassination sends a wave of shock around the world.’

²⁷⁷⁹ Deues Deutschland, 9 September 1966: 7, ‘Dr. Verwoerd.’

REST OF THE WORLD

The chairman of the UN Special Committee on apartheid, Mr. Achkar Marof, said, “The international community should be grateful to the assassin if his act produces a change in South Africa’s race policy.” UN Secretary General U Thant expressed deep regret and declared that “any violence is deplorable.”²⁷⁸⁰

In the USA, Martin Luther King also commented on the assassination, saying that “few individuals in modern times have been so insidious and diabolical in their schemes of oppression as Hendrik Verwoerd, but even in this case, one must deplore the fanatical act of assassination.”²⁷⁸¹ Julius W. Hobson, another leading civil rights activist commented, ‘I am not in favour of murder, but that’s not the point. This man has been responsible for the death of thousands of Black South Africans. I am not going to advocate killing anybody, but I am delighted he is dead.’²⁷⁸² US President Lyndon Johnson, who sent a personal message to Betsie Dr. Verwoerd, called the assassination “a deplorable act, a stroke of violence that shakes the sensibilities of men who believe in law and order.”²⁷⁸³ Senator Robert Kennedy, himself to be assassinated two years later, said he was “deeply shocked” and added, “violence is not answer the problems which must be worked out between people, with compassion and understanding on both sides.”²⁷⁸⁴

The day after the assassination, the New York Times carried the headline, “Verwoerd: Relentless Advocate of Apartheid. Pro-Nazi and Harsh Racist, He Seemed Outwardly Genial.” The newspaper described Dr. Verwoerd’s policies as “the harshest race laws since Hitler.”²⁷⁸⁵ In another article on the same page, the newspaper carried another headline dedicated to the slain Prime Minister: “Unafraid of Assassins, Dr. Verwoerd Said in 1962.” The story below said that two years after he was shot by David Pratt, Dr. Verwoerd was ²⁷⁸⁰ The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Assassination condemned by friend and foe alike’; The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷⁸¹ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Johnson decries assassination; Rights leaders echo dismay’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷⁸² The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Johnson decries assassination; Rights leaders echo dismay.’

²⁷⁸³ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world’; The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Johnson decries assassination; Rights leaders echo dismay’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd slain at his Parliament desk.’

²⁷⁸⁴ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Johnson decries assassination; Rights leaders echo dismay’; The Vancouver Sun, 6 September 1966: 3, ‘Verwoerd assassination shocks world leaders.’

²⁷⁸⁵ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Relentless advocate of apartheid.’

asked if he was not afraid someone else might shoot him. “No, I’m not afraid,” he said. “I don’t think anyone wants to kill me.” A reporter pointed out that he was sitting in front of an open window of his office on street level. “My desk just happens to be placed here,” he responded. “If someone really wants to kill you, it’s not a very hard job. One thing is certain, there’s no point going around worrying about it.”²⁷⁸⁶

Also in the United States, LIFE magazine published an article by Anthony Samson, former editor of South Africa’s DRUM magazine and the future official biographer of Nelson Mandela. The article was titled, “Violent end for the apostle of apartheid.” In it, Samson called Dr. Verwoerd a symbol of “reckless white supremacy” whose “repressive policies were applied with police state efficiency to keep twelve million non-Europeans powerless in South Africa and to separate them from the 3.4 million Europeans.” He noted that at the time of his death, Dr. Verwoerd was at “the height of his political power.”²⁷⁸⁷

From Bombay, India, the Economic and Political Weekly warned, “If no tears need to be shed for Dr. Verwoerd, there is equally nothing to take heart in his exit for the future of the Africans in South Africa. For most of the three and a half million Whites, in their psychopathic fear of the Africans who outnumber them so overwhelmingly, apartheid appears as the only means of survival and cling to it they must.”²⁷⁸⁸ Appasaheb Pant, India’s Ambassador to Egypt, offered his sympathy to Dr. Verwoerd’s family but also to the “hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from Dr. Verwoerd.”²⁷⁸⁹

In Canada, acting Prime Minister Paul Martin said, “The Canadian government regrets this shocking act of violence. I have this morning sent to the acting Prime Minister of South Africa a message of condolence. This regret, of course, does not affect the government’s well-known attitude on apartheid. We thoroughly disagree with this policy, but our difference of views does not dilute our regret at this brutal assassination.”²⁷⁹⁰ Tommy Douglas, the leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada, said, “one cannot help but fear that unless there is some reversal of policies in South Africa a great deal more blood will be spilled in that unhappy country.”²⁷⁹¹ The Toronto Star published an article headlined, “The ²⁷⁸⁶ The New York Times, 7 September 1966: 16, ‘Unafraid of assassins, Dr. Verwoerd said in 1962.’

²⁷⁸⁷ Schoeman, 1975: 89.

²⁷⁸⁸ Economic and Political Weekly, 10 September 1966: 146-147, ‘Apartheid unassassinated.’

²⁷⁸⁹ Kathimerini, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Ατομον Ελληνικής καταγωγής εδολοφόνησε τον Φέρβερντ.’

²⁷⁹⁰ The Globe and Mail, 7 September 1966: 3, ‘Canada regrets death but stand still same.’

²⁷⁹¹ The Vancouver Sun, 6 September 1966: 3, ‘Verwoerd assassination shocks world leaders.’

man is dead - his monster grows,” suggesting the monster of apartheid was far from moribund.²⁷⁹²

Prime Minister Harold Holt of Australia condemned the murder as “repugnant.” Premiers Lester Pearson of Canada and Keith Holyoake of New Zealand had identical reactions: “I am shocked.”²⁷⁹³ In Wellington, New Zealand, members of a Maori tribe presented a bouquet of flowers at the South African consulate-general.²⁷⁹⁴ Singapore’s Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew was less sympathetic and said, ‘If you run regimes like that, this is part of the risk.’²⁷⁹⁵ In Cuba, a Radio Havana broadcast commented that “the reactionary bloc has lost one of its infamous representatives. Dr. Verwoerd has left behind him the result of his segregationist policy.”²⁷⁹⁶

TSAFENDAS’S FAMILY REACTION

When Tsafendas’s family heard about the assassination, his siblings and in-laws, apart from Katerina who was in Rhodesia, gathered in Marika’s house in Pretoria. All were deeply shocked, fearing the worst for themselves because they had bribed van den Berg to allow Tsafendas to enter South Africa. They believed that if Tsafendas was tortured, he would reveal everything. Nick Vlachopoulos was the calmest and said that it was very possible the police would not find out because Tsafendas had experience of torture and could possibly to withhold anything damaging to the family. All agreed that if asked, they would deny knowing Tsafendas was not allowed to enter South Africa.²⁷⁹⁷

Marika and her son Victor were the most frightened. Victor suggested they should pack their bags and be ready to leave the country at any time. At one point, he even suggested leaving then and there. Eventually, he and his wife remained, but with their bags packed and ready to flee. All agreed that, if asked, they would distance themselves as far as possible from Tsafendas, claiming they had no contacts with him since he had been away for many years and they were unaware of his political views and activities. They feared that if it became ²⁷⁹² Schoeman, 1975: 90.

²⁷⁹³ The Herald (Melbourne), 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Murder shocks world.’

²⁷⁹⁴ Pretoria News, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Simple Maori tribute paid to Dr. Verwoerd.’

²⁷⁹⁵ Daily Express, 7 September 1966: 2, ‘Epitaph for a fanatic’; The Australian, 8 September 1966, ‘Murder shocks world, but some leaders are glad’; Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷⁹⁶ Washington Post, 7 September 1966: 8, ‘London Conference shocked by slain.’

²⁷⁹⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

known he was a Communist, they would be in trouble for not reporting him since Communism was illegal.²⁷⁹⁸

Fearing an imminent police search of their houses, Marika and her daughter Evangelia burned all of Tsafendas's books, both those in his step-mother's house and in the apartment Vlachopoulos had given him. Every single book went into the flames, although not all of them were political. Marika also burned photographs which Tsafendas had sent them from around the world, along with family photographs from Mozambique. She also destroyed Tsafendas's two records with the Communist songs along with all of Paul Robeson's, just because he was Black.²⁷⁹⁹

However, the person who was most frightened after the assassination was George Michaletos, Tsafendas's uncle and Artemis's husband. It was he who arranged to bribe J.J. van den Berg, the passport control officer at the South African consulate in Lourenço Marques, to ignore Tsafendas's name on the Stop List and issue him a visa. For more than a month after Tsafendas's arrest, Michaletos was unable to sleep and lived in constant fear of arrest. He wanted to flee the country and go back to Greece, but Artemis was calmer and insisted that they should remain. Michaletos cut off any contact with van den Berg, but when he heard that the passport officer had been taken for questioning, he left Lourenço Marques immediately and took refuge in a relative's house in Zambia. He stayed there for three or four weeks, still terrified, and only returned to Lourenço Marques after Tsafendas's summary trial had ended. Even then, he remained nervous and suspicious over the years, fearing that one day bribe might be discovered.²⁸⁰⁰

²⁷⁹⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁷⁹⁹ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

²⁸⁰⁰ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

CHAPTER FOUR

THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this chapter is to examine the findings (and non-findings) of the South African police during their investigation of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. Non-findings include important information regarding Tsafendas which was withheld by PIDE, the Portuguese Security Police. We will look at the statements which the South African police took from people who had known Tsafendas, documents received by the South African authorities from various institutions and organizations around the world, medical reports, police memoranda and police reports.

The investigators were confronted by thousands of documents specific to Tsafendas and many which were irrelevant to the case. This study will look only at documents relevant to Tsafendas and the assassination. Documents which repeated information that we have already seen are also not listed. However, all statements taken by the police from people who knew Tsafendas, including two statements by Tsafendas himself, are included. All the top secret documents are included.

This chapter also includes some of the Press reports published during the investigation to demonstrate how the media covered the issue and to illustrate the "climate" of the day, but also to examine how Tsafendas was portrayed at the time, bearing in mind that most news reports contained false, incomplete or exaggerated information.

BACKGROUND ON GENERAL HENDRIK JOHAN VAN DEN BERGH

Before we examine the police investigation into the assassination, we will explore the nature of the man who was in charge of it. General van den Bergh played a massively important role in the case and was deeply involved in creating the portrait of Tsafendas that emerged from his summary trial and from the proceedings of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death. Arguably the most feared man in South Africa during the 1960s and 1970s Police Chief Hendrik Johan van den Bergh created, headed and became virtually synonymous with the Bureau of State Security (BOSS),²⁸⁰¹ an all-embracing security organisation which he employed ruthlessly in defence of the apartheid state.²⁸⁰² He was the oppressive power behind the apartheid government of John Vorster.²⁸⁰³ At the height of his power in 1976, van den Bergh plotted with two close associates to secure a share of power at the highest level following the expected retirement of Vorster,²⁸⁰⁴ but after exposure of his involvement in a government corruption scandal, he was forced to retire.²⁸⁰⁵

Born on November 27, 1914²⁸⁰⁶ into an Afrikaner farming family in Vredefort, Orange Free State, Hendrik Johan van den Bergh was known to his friends as HJ, the initials of his given names, but to everyone else, he was Lang Hendrik (Tall Hendrik) on account of his height, a towering 1.96m (6 feet 5 inches).²⁸⁰⁷ Van den Bergh joined the police in 1934,²⁸⁰⁸ but when World War Two broke out, he was interned in Koffienfontein camp as a suspected member of the Stormjaers, the military wing of the pro-Nazi organization *Ossewabrandwag*²⁸⁰⁹ (OB - Oxwag Sentinel).²⁸¹⁰ A fellow internee who held general's rank in the OB, was Balthazar Johannes Vorster, the future Prime Minister. He and van den Bergh quickly became friends²⁸¹¹ and subsequently van den Bergh became Vorster's closest ²⁸⁰¹ For more about BOSS and its activities see: Hepple, A. (1969) "South Africa's Bureau for State Security;" International Defence and Aid Fund (1969) South Africa: The BOSS Law; International Defence and Aid Fund (1975) BOSS: The First Five Years; O'Brien, K.A. (2010) The South African Intelligence Services: From Apartheid to Democracy, 1948-2005; Sanders, J. (2006) Apartheid's Friends: The Rise and Fall of South Africa's Secret Service; Swanepoel, P.C. (2007) Really Inside Boss: A Tale of South Africa's Late Intelligence Service; Winter, G. (1981) Inside BOSS.

²⁸⁰² Leonard, 1983: 123

²⁸⁰³ Braid (The Independent), 20 August 1997: 12, 'Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh.'

²⁸⁰⁴ Burns (The New York Times), 23 March 1979: A3, 'Vorster rejects allegations in South Africa's Information Scandal'; Sanders, 1999: 61; TIME, 26 March 1979, 'South Africa: Rhodie's Story.'

²⁸⁰⁵ Sanders, 1999: 64.

²⁸⁰⁶ Pogrud, 1997: 17.

²⁸⁰⁷ The New York Times, 1 April 1979: 10, 'Acid general is key to Pretoria scandal'; Winter, 1981: 34.

²⁸⁰⁸ Hepple, 1969: 437.

²⁸⁰⁹ For more about the Ossewabrandwag see Chapter One.

²⁸¹⁰ Sanders, 2006: 34-35.

²⁸¹¹ O'Meara, 1996: xxxvii.

confident, security advisor and a devoted advisor.²⁸¹² During the time of their detention, van den Bergh was Vorster's "counter-intelligence chief," tasked to seek out and expose the government's agents sent in to spy on the internees.²⁸¹³

After the war, van den Bergh worked as a clerk at the South African Institute of Architects²⁸¹⁴ before re-joining the police in 1950.²⁸¹⁵ He reached the rank of captain in 1953,²⁸¹⁶ but his police career was unspectacular until Vorster became Minister of Justice in 1961.²⁸¹⁷ Van den Bergh was then swiftly promoted to lieutenant colonel and at the end of 1962 he was named by Vorster as head of South Africa's Secret Police.²⁸¹⁸ His progress thereafter was unstoppable: promoted to full colonel in 1963,²⁸¹⁹ when, as ordered by Vorster, he established the Republican Intelligence Service;²⁸²⁰ brigadier in 1964, major-general in 1966,²⁸²¹ lieutenant general in 1968; and in 1969 full general and head of the notorious Bureau of State Security (BOSS),²⁸²² which through the 1970s was the controlling national organisation in South Africa.²⁸²³ South African judges, professors and lawyers, some of them even supporters of apartheid, protested against the methods of the BOSS and condemned its increasing power and unaccountability. The Veg ("Fight"), a journal published by Afrikaner intellectuals, suggested that it should instead be called the Bureau for Intimidation, Victimization and Elimination, or just the Gestapo.²⁸²⁴

General van den Bergh was Vorster's eminence grise, his closest adviser and chief hatchet man²⁸²⁵ and was widely considered the second most powerful man in the country. Some believed that van den Bergh was at the time even more powerful than Vorster; since the Prime Minister was answerable to Parliament and to his Party, while the General was answerable only to the Prime Minister, who was his best friend and closest associate.²⁸²⁶ BOSS, which was modelled on America's CIA,²⁸²⁷ was responsible for some of apartheid ²⁸¹² Rotberg, 1983: 13-14.

²⁸¹³ Bell and Ntsebeza, 2003: 41.

²⁸¹⁴ Sanders, 2006: 35.

²⁸¹⁵ Hepple, 1969: 437; The Times, 19 August 1997: 19, 'Hendrik van den Bergh.'

²⁸¹⁶ Sanders, 2006: 34-35.

²⁸¹⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 15; Sanders, 2006: 35.

²⁸¹⁸ O'Meara, 1996: 211.

²⁸¹⁹ Hepple, 1969: 437.

²⁸²⁰ Sanders, 2006: 35.

²⁸²¹ Hepple, 1969: 437.

²⁸²² Dubow, 2014: 153; O'Meara, 1996: xxxvii; Sanders, 2006: 35.

²⁸²³ Hain, 1996: 84.

²⁸²⁴ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969a: ii-4.

²⁸²⁵ O'Meara, 1996: xxxvii.

²⁸²⁶ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969a: 5.

²⁸²⁷ Grundy, 1986: 42- 43.

regime's worst excesses in the 1970s, with van den Bergh overseeing blackmail, torture and assassination at a time when the Cold War gave the ruling National Party an alibi – fighting international Communism – for its true mission, the prevention of democratic rule.²⁸²⁸

In 1966, van den Bergh publicly denied that he had ever been a member of the OB, although his adherence to the group along with other prominent figures was widely known. He even claimed that he was unfamiliar with the principles and policies of the organization.²⁸²⁹ However, when he acted as a pallbearer at the funeral of Hans van Rensburg,²⁸³⁰ Commanding General of the Ossewabrandwag during World War Two,²⁸³¹ he saluted him with the organisation's Fascist, arm-across-the-chest salute.²⁸³² A life-long Afrikaner nationalist, van den Bergh was also a member of the Afrikaner Broederbond. His membership number was 6745²⁸³³ and in 1964, the Broederbond awarded him a medal for his services.²⁸³⁴

Van den Bergh was fanatically anti-Communist and anti-Semite and in September 1966, he outraged South Africa's large Jewish community by claiming that Jews were becoming Communists because "Communism is the highest form of capitalism." Addressing an anti-Communist symposium at the height of the Tsafendas investigation, he charged that Communists subverted the White South African way of life by engaging in "psychological sabotage." The Communist leaders of the campaign were "white so-called intellectuals," most of whom, he said, were Jewish."²⁸³⁵ In the 1970s, however, he developed close official ties with Israel.²⁸³⁶ Communists, however, remained high on his hate list. He said, the Communist Party consisted of "a very select group of people" and "possessed everything

²⁸²⁸ Braid (The Independent), 20 August 1997: 12, 'Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh.'

²⁸²⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 9 October 1966: 1, 'van den Bergh: I wasn't an OB.'

²⁸³⁰ (1898-1966) A lawyer and Nazi supporter who served as Secretary of Justice in 1933. In 1938, he helped in the formation and organization of the Nazi organization the Ossewabrandwag and he became its commander general from 1941 until 1952. He died on the 25th of September 1966. (Rees, 1990: 401). On the day of his funeral, the newly appointed Prime Minister John Vorster, sent a wreath and ordered all flags in Pretoria to fly at half-mast, a military guard of honour was at the service and ex-OB members gave their semi-fascist salute (Furlong, 2010: 73).

²⁸³¹ Furlong, 2010: 73.

²⁸³² Rand Daily Mail, 9 October 1966: 1, 'van den Bergh: I wasn't an OB'; Sanders, 2006: 35.

²⁸³³ Bell and Ntsebeza, 2003: 28; Serfontein, 1978: 272; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: A239.

²⁸³⁴ Serfontein, 1978: 18, 91.

²⁸³⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 30 September 1966: 1, 'Reds and Jews by v.d. Bergh'; Winter, 1981: 87; van den Bergh, 1967, 21-45.

²⁸³⁶ Polakow-Suransky, 2010: 89-90.

except a person's soul."²⁸³⁷ He also said Communism was furthered by "self-indulgence, self-pessimism and sickly sentimentality."²⁸³⁸

Van den Bergh was known to be unstable and to take pleasure from inflicting pain²⁸³⁹ and throughout his career, he left a trail of violence in his wake. The methods of torture he applied were learned, or refined, from his contacts with the American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and from training he received in interrogation techniques in France and Algeria during the first half of the 1960s.²⁸⁴⁰ Evidence of van den Bergh's cruelty was demonstrated as early as March 21, 1960 at the Sharpeville massacre when he was sent to the Baragwanath hospital where many victims of the police shootings had been taken. His team of White and Black policemen dragged wounded people from their beds, irrespective of their condition, handcuffed them and transported them to Boksburg Prison. There they were stripped naked, hosed down and ordered to dress again in their bloody clothes, which they were forced to wear unwashed for months afterwards as an example of the price of "agitation."²⁸⁴¹

As a reward for this exemplary action against sick and injured people, van den Bergh was awarded a role in the Sharpeville investigation.²⁸⁴² Judge Wessels, the sole member of the Commission of Inquiry, appointed van den Bergh as the chief police investigator to determine, among other things, who fired the first shots and who shouted "shoot." Unsurprisingly, van den Bergh "failed" to discover the guilty parties,²⁸⁴³ but Judge Wessels praised him nonetheless for the industry he displayed.²⁸⁴⁴ As chief police investigator, van den Bergh was also responsible for concealing evidence of the use by the police of illegal dum-dum bullets.

In 1965, Hugh Lewin, a White South African reporter and anti-apartheid activist, was arrested on charges of sabotage, and beaten by police. He was brought before van den Bergh

²⁸³⁷ Rand Daily Mail, 9 October 1961: 1-2, 'van den Bergh: I wasn't an OB.'

²⁸³⁸ Bunting, 1986: 412.

²⁸³⁹ Lambley, 1980: 235.

²⁸⁴⁰ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 16, 195.

²⁸⁴¹ Frankel, 2001: 194-195.

²⁸⁴² Rand Daily Mail, 22 July 1960, 'Sharpeville Magistrate.'

²⁸⁴³ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 154; Roux, 1972: 408.

²⁸⁴⁴ Report of the Commission Appointed to Investigate and Report on the Occurrences in the Districts of Vereeniging (namely, at Sharpeville location and Evaton) and Vanderbijlpark, Province of the Transvaal, on 21st March 1960, 1960: 10.

with a bruised and bloody face. Lewin subsequently brought charges of assault against the police. The accused officers unanimously denied the charges and stated on oath that Lewin sustained his facial wounds when he banged his head accidentally against the door of a police car. For his part, van den Bergh was clearly unafraid to lie before the law, since advocates told the court that he was prepared to testify on oath that no member of his force ever assaulted Lewin.²⁸⁴⁵ Later, van den Bergh affirmed accusations that his department was impervious to legal constraints by stating, “We were fighting a revolution those days. It was not kid-gloves stuff, it was war... as far as I was concerned there was no time for peacetime legal niceties.”²⁸⁴⁶

In July 1961, van den Bergh announced that forty anti-apartheid activists had been arrested in the previous two weeks alone under the 90-day detention clause of the General Law Amendment Act. He said there was nothing arbitrary about recent police actions. “Before we raid anyone or detain them, we give the matter our most thorough consideration... we have files on all leftists in this country. If we do not have a file on a person, the investigating officer’s motivation must be exceptionally strong before we will agree to detention under the 90-day clause.” A panel of six senior officers under his chairmanship decided whether to arrest suspects, he said. “Unless we all agree to the detention, the request is referred back to the investigating officer for further motivation,” van den Bergh stated.²⁸⁴⁷

Van den Bergh’s successes on behalf of apartheid were evident in the steep increase in trials of political activists from the early 1960s onwards which saw thousands imprisoned. As a result, he was credited with having “practically wiped out” sabotage in South Africa.²⁸⁴⁸ His biggest coup was organising the arrests of the most prominent members of the ANC at Liliesleaf Farm in July 1963.²⁸⁴⁹ It was, he said, “one of the most important round-ups so far.” The arrests led to the Rivonia Trial²⁸⁵⁰ the following year when Nelson Mandela and eight ANC activists were sentenced to life imprisonment. For his success, the then Colonel van den Bergh was raised to the rank of brigadier - the youngest holder of that rank in the South African Police.²⁸⁵¹ In addition, in 1964, van den Bergh ordered the arrest of Bram

²⁸⁴⁵ Lewin, 1976: 23-37.

²⁸⁴⁶ Bizos, 1998: 3.

²⁸⁴⁷ The New York Times, 12 July 1964: 5, ‘40 in South Africa arrested in raids.’

²⁸⁴⁸ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 15.

²⁸⁴⁹ Braid (The Independent), 20 August 1997: 12, ‘Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh’; Dubow, 2014: 96; The New York Times, 11 July 1963: 3, ‘17 seized in raid in South Africa.’

²⁸⁵⁰ For more about the Rivonia Trial see Chapter One.

²⁸⁵¹ Sanders, 2006: 35.

Fischer, followed by the arrests of several Communists and anti-apartheid activists.²⁸⁵² Robben Island,²⁸⁵³ the infamous penitentiary where most of the political prisoners were detained during the apartheid era, was described at the time as “van den Bergh’s monument.”²⁸⁵⁴

On July 24, 1964, shortly after John Harris’s bomb had exploded in Johannesburg Railway Station, van den Bergh sat in his car pondering, “Who did this?” Suddenly, he claimed, the name “John Harris” came into his mind, although he had never heard of him. Van den Bergh attributed this flash of inspiration to divine revelation.²⁸⁵⁵ As we will see, it was not the only thing in his life that he attributed to the hand of God. Gordon Winter, a former BOSS agent and very close friend of the General, claimed that on March 31, 1965, van den Bergh offered John Harris,²⁸⁵⁶ on the eve of his execution, the chance to escape from prison in exchange for information about his accomplices. Harris declined to betray his comrades and was hanged the next day.²⁸⁵⁷

In 1965, infuriated by a Rand Daily Mail story alleging torture and inhumane conditions in South African prisons, van den Bergh ordered a raid on the newspaper’s offices.²⁸⁵⁸ Laurence Gandar, the newspaper’s editor, described the police action as an unprecedented campaign of savagery.²⁸⁵⁹ The police swoop was not without gallows humour. After the raid and the presumed bugging of the newspaper’s offices, staff at editorial conferences, when discussing sensitive matters, would look up at the ceiling and say, “Hope you can hear OK, General.”²⁸⁶⁰

Justice Minister Vorster, who in 1966 accepted the additional portfolio of Police and Prisons, instructed van den Bergh that anyone deemed to be a threat to the state should “be taken out of circulation in one way or another, if there are valid reasons for not bringing that person to trial.”²⁸⁶¹ For this reason, in 1969, General van den Bergh created within BOSS a ²⁸⁵² Pike, 1985: 405.

²⁸⁵³ For more about Robben Island see Chapter One.

²⁸⁵⁴ Pogrud, 1997: 17.

²⁸⁵⁵ Pike, 1985: 405.

²⁸⁵⁶ The man who planted a bomb in a Johannesburg train station. For more see Chapter One.

²⁸⁵⁷ Winter, 1981: 99-100.

²⁸⁵⁸ Lelyveld (The New York Times), 27 January 1966: 13; Lelyveld (The New York Times), 2 July 1965: 3; The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, ‘Reprisals in South Africa.’

²⁸⁵⁹ The New York Times, 19 August 1965: 30, ‘Reprisals in South Africa.’

²⁸⁶⁰ Pogrud, 1997: 17.

²⁸⁶¹ D’Oliveira, 1977: 157-158.

special unit known as the Z Squad tasked to eliminate both enemies of the state and security risks.²⁸⁶²

When van den Bergh appeared before the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry²⁸⁶³ into the so-called “Infogate” scandal in 1978, that eventually brought him down, he acquiesced with Vorster’s remark but also hinted that his department had an operational capacity which did not exclude murder. He said, “Mr. Commissioner, I really want to tell you that I am able, with my department, to do the impossible. I can today tell you here, not for your records, but I can tell you, this is not bragging, I have good men, Afrikaners, I don’t have weak men... I have enough men to commit murder if I tell them, ‘Kill’... I don’t care who the prey is. These are the types of men I have...”²⁸⁶⁴ There were several cases which seemed to bear out van den Bergh’s boast.²⁸⁶⁵ In front of the same commission van den Bergh also had added “that if he wanted to do something nobody would stop him and that he would stop at nothing.”²⁸⁶⁶

Working together, Vorster and van den Bergh engineered legislation which gave the security forces virtual carte blanche in their pursuit of apartheid’s interests. In 1969, the General Law Amendment Bill was passed, whose notorious Clause 29 authorised the Prime Minister or his nominee (i.e. van den Bergh of course) to prohibit oral testimony or the production of any document before any court or statutory body should they believe the evidence or document would be “prejudicial to the interests of the state or public security.”²⁸⁶⁷ In reality, this permitted the police and the security forces to conceal or ensure the unavailability of any document or evidence which might jeopardise their cause. As we will see in the following chapters, the Tsafendas case exemplified such a situation, when documents and evidence contradicting the judge’s trial verdict and the “findings” of the Commission of Enquiry were concealed or disappeared.

In 1975, according to the South African Observer, the head of BOSS was so powerful at the time that Prime Minister Vorster would have been “unable to govern the country without having General van den Bergh at his elbow.” The newspaper argued that the ²⁸⁶² Bale, 2006: 43.

²⁸⁶³ The Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate “alleged irregularities” into the Department of Information.

²⁸⁶⁴ Burns (The New York Times), 18 May 1980: 3, ‘Pretoria scandal testimony reveals talk of murder’; Leonard, 1983: 124; Luyt, 1989: 110; Rand Daily Mail, 5 June 1979; Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 18.

²⁸⁶⁵ Leonard, 1983: 124.

²⁸⁶⁶ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, 1978: par. 386.

²⁸⁶⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 11; Jackson, 1980: 40.

Nationalist Party had become “a mere instrument in the hands of these two ambitious men.”²⁸⁶⁸ The close relationship between the minister and the security supremo was made clear by Vorster when he declared, “General van den Bergh is an officer with whom I co-operated intimately during the most difficult years which South Africa experienced at the time, of the Poqo and the ANC and other problems. He is an officer for whom I have the highest regard and respect because of his ability and the manner in which he performs his work.”²⁸⁶⁹ These two men made the police virtually sacrosanct and systematically destroyed not only what little room for democracy remained, but also, from the beginning of the 1960s, opposition from any quarter,²⁸⁷⁰ turning South Africa effectively into a police state.²⁸⁷¹ By 1966, just three years after his appointment as police and security overlord, van den Bergh had trebled the strength of the security police and was promoted from lieutenant colonel to brigadier.²⁸⁷²

In 1971, Ahmed Timol, a thirty-year-old teacher and member of the South African Communist Party and the MK, died after falling from the tenth floor of the notorious John Vorster Square police station while he was in custody. The police version was that Timol flung open a window and leaped out. However, it was common knowledge that Timol had been tortured systematically in detention and almost certainly murdered, prompting people to demand a public inquiry. His fingernails had been pulled out, his right eye gouged from its socket, his testicles crushed, and his body was covered in blue bruises and livid burn marks. General van den Bergh declared that there was no need for a public inquiry, but “there will be an inquest and all the facts relating to his death will be made public then.” The inquest was held in secret and the result of the post-mortem was not released.²⁸⁷³

General Stoffel Buys, head of the CID, who investigated the incident concluded that Timol had “stormed towards the window and jumped through it.”²⁸⁷⁴ Naturally, the usual verdict in such cases was announced: “Suicide.” The Magistrate said in his judgement, “Mr. Timol was not assaulted by any person. I am satisfied that despite the long hours of the ²⁸⁶⁸ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 15.

²⁸⁶⁹ Debates of the House of Assembly, 21 April 1971.

²⁸⁷⁰ Van der Westhuizen, 2007: 96.

²⁸⁷¹ O’Meara, 1996: xxxvii.

²⁸⁷² Bizos, 1998: 3.

²⁸⁷³ Bernstein, 1972: 1-3; Bizos, 1998: 18-36; Jadoo (The Citizen), 27 October 2015, ‘New light shed on Ahmed Timol’s death’; Houston and Magubane, 2007: 440-441; Magubane, 2007: 5; SAHO, n.d., Ahmed Timol; World Peace Council, 1972: 4-8.

²⁸⁷⁴ Bernstein, 1972: 1.

interrogation to which he was subjected, he was treated in a civilised and humane manner.” Timol was the twentieth political prisoner to die in police custody in eight years.²⁸⁷⁵

However, on October 12, 2017, Judge Billy Mothle of the Pretoria High Court, ruled at the conclusion of an inquest which ran from June to September 2017 that Timol was murdered, thereby overruling the verdict of the original inquest. Judge Mothle said in his judgement that the magistrate at the time had relied on “a limited version of events.” Archbishop Desmond Tutu said, “It is sad that it took so long and there are many other TRC matters that haven’t been resolved.”²⁸⁷⁶

During the 1970s, van den Bergh did not confine his techniques of persuasion to the physical. He was one of the brains behind the launch in 1976 of the government-funded English-language newspaper, The Citizen,²⁸⁷⁷ a propaganda sheet designed to counter the liberal political position of the long-established Rand Daily Mail. However, it was his involvement in murky, pro-apartheid propaganda and his bitter relationship with Defence Minister P.W. Botha and South Africa’s Defence Forces that ultimately led to his downfall.²⁸⁷⁸

In 1978, Judge Anton Mostert, the sole member of the one-man Commission of Inquiry into exchange control regulations, discovered evidence of widespread government corruption, particularly at the Ministry of Information. It became known as the “Information Scandal”²⁸⁷⁹ (also nicknamed Muldergate after the Information Minister, Cornelius Mulder), directly involving van den Bergh and Vorster,²⁸⁸⁰ despite their efforts to conceal their involvement long before the scandal broke. In 1976, van den Bergh and Vorster had instructed their associates in the Ministry to destroy all “unnecessary documentation” that would disclose their involvement in the case.²⁸⁸¹ In 1977, these two, along with Mulder, ordered L.S. Reynders, a civil servant investigating the irregularities, to exculpate them from ²⁸⁷⁵ Bizos, 1998: 18-36; Jadoo (The Citizen), 27 October 2015, ‘New light shed on Ahmed Timol’s death’; Houston and Magubane, 2007: 440-441; Magubane, 2007: 5; SAHO, n.d., Ahmed Timol; World Peace Council, 1972: 4-8.

²⁸⁷⁶ Nicolson (Daily Maverick), 12 October 2017, ‘Timol Inquest: He was murdered but culprits are dead, court rules.’

²⁸⁷⁷ Sanders, 1006: 99.

²⁸⁷⁸ Cawthra, 1986: 38.

²⁸⁷⁹ For more about the scandal see: Rees, M., Day, C. (1980) Muldergate: The story of the info-scandal; Rickard, C. (2012) Thank You, Judge Mostert!

²⁸⁸⁰ Smith, 1979: 43; The Globe and Mail, 6 April 1979: 6, ‘Secret life of Pretoria.’

²⁸⁸¹ Sanders, 1999: 62.

any involvement. His “findings” offered van den Bergh, Vorster and Mulder the whitewash they wanted.²⁸⁸²

However, Judge Mostert discovered evidence linking van den Bergh and Vorster, the two most powerful men in the country at the time, to the scandal. Despite heavy pressure from the government, the judge disclosed at a press conference that in seeking ways to influence public opinion in favour of apartheid, the Ministry collaborated closely and covertly throughout the 1970s with van den Bergh’s BOSS.²⁸⁸³ Among Mostert’s findings was that in 1973, Vorster agreed to a plan to shift sixty-four million Rand secretly from the defence budget to fund a series of propaganda projects. These included bribes for international news agencies, an attempt to buy the US Washington Star newspaper for twenty-five million dollars and the expenditure of thirty million dollars setting up an English-language newspaper, The Citizen, as a government mouthpiece in opposition to the liberal Rand Daily Mail.²⁸⁸⁴ For making his disclosures public in his final report, Judge Mostert was fired and the Commission of Inquiry was disbanded.²⁸⁸⁵

As a result of Muldergate, the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry was appointed to investigate. By June 1979, the Commission had issued three reports implicating Vorster and Mulder in misleading Parliament about the secret funding of The Citizen and laying responsibility for extensive financial irregularities on Mulder and van den Bergh.²⁸⁸⁶ When L.S. Reynders was questioned by the Commission, in the words of the Commission report, “he burst into tears and, like a lanced boil, made a clean breast of things.”²⁸⁸⁷ He admitted producing the whitewash under fierce pressure from van den Bergh, saying he feared that had he opposed him, the general would “pulverise” him, because “few people in this land realise what power van den Bergh possesses.”²⁸⁸⁸

In a sign of how the mighty had fallen, van den Bergh had his passport confiscated²⁸⁸⁹ and he even signed a nationwide petition calling for his own prosecution.²⁸⁹⁰ However, when ²⁸⁸² Pollack, 1981: 31.

²⁸⁸³ Burns (The New York Times), 18 May 1980: 3, ‘Pretoria scandal testimony reveals talk of murder’; Hachten and Giffard, 1984: 243-244.

²⁸⁸⁴ Hachten and Giffard, 1984: 250-251, 275.

²⁸⁸⁵ The Globe and Mail, 6 April 1979: 6, ‘Secret life of Pretoria.’

²⁸⁸⁶ Leonard, 1983: 163.

²⁸⁸⁷ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, 1978: chap. 11, par. 383.

²⁸⁸⁸ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Alleged Irregularities in the Former Department of Information, 1978: chap. 11, par. 385.

²⁸⁸⁹ Ashford (The Spectator), 17 March 1979: 8, ‘The revelations of Dr Rhoodie.’

²⁸⁹⁰ The New York Times, 4 February 1979: 5, ‘South African General signs petition for his own prosecution.’

he appeared before the Commission and was accused of being a “ruthless manipulator,” he responded by calling the panel “a big farce” and denouncing its report as “full of lies.” He also boasted about his “sinister network of agents” and his willingness to “stop at nothing” to achieve his ends. The Commission accused him of attempting to manipulate the election of Vorster’s successor as prime minister just a year earlier.²⁸⁹¹

The accusation was true. In 1979, Eschel M. Rhoodie, secretary of the Department of Information and close associate of van den Bergh and Mulder,²⁸⁹² described a plot involving van den Bergh which could be construed as a bid for power. Rhoodie claimed that before Vorster resigned, he (Rhoodie), van den Bergh and Mulder planned to install Mulder as Vorster’s successor, then form a triumvirate at the head of the nation’s affairs.²⁸⁹³ As result of the scandal, van den Bergh was forced to resign and retire. BOSS was subsequently renamed as Department of National Security (DONS), headed by Dr. Niel Barnard.²⁸⁹⁴ Van den Bergh faded from public view, farming broiler chickens quietly for two more decades before dying at Bronkhorstpruit, Pretoria, on August 16, 1997. He was eighty-three.²⁸⁹⁵

Today he is remembered as the sanctioner of assassination and torture on behalf of apartheid and as a consummate blackmailer through his network of spies and informers. Almost anyone who was not a rampant Afrikaner was his enemy. “Tall Hendrik” cast his considerable shadow far beyond South Africa’s borders in his hunt for anti-apartheid activists.²⁸⁹⁶ He was described by the International Aid and Defence Fund as “a cruel and ruthless man with scant regard either for justice or humanity.” Along with Prime Minister Vorster, he was responsible for the torture and death in detention of many opponents of apartheid.²⁸⁹⁷ Judge Mostert described van den Bergh as a “sinister figure who saw himself as the power behind the throne of Prime Minister Vorster.”²⁸⁹⁸ Professor Dan O’Meara said van den Bergh personified “the most paranoid and the most vicious tendencies in Afrikaner

²⁸⁹¹ The New York Times, 1 April 1979: 10, ‘Acid general is key to Pretoria scandal.’

²⁸⁹² Sanders, 1999: 72.

²⁸⁹³ Burns (The New York Times), 23 March 1979: A3, ‘Vorster rejects allegations in South Africa’s Information Scandal’; Sanders, 1999: 61; TIME, 26 March 1979, South Africa: Rhoodie’s Story.’

²⁸⁹⁴ Sanders, 2006: 64, 77, 161.

²⁸⁹⁵ Pogrund, 1997: 17.

²⁸⁹⁶ Braid (The Independent), 20 August 1997: 12, ‘Obituary: Hendrik van den Bergh.’

²⁸⁹⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 15.

²⁸⁹⁸ The Globe and Mail, 6 April 1979: 6, ‘Secret life of Pretoria’; The New York Times, 1 April 1979: 10, ‘Acid general is key to Pretoria scandal.’

nationalism,”²⁸⁹⁹ while Helen Suzman described him in Parliament as “South Africa’s own Heinrich Himmler.”²⁹⁰⁰

There were others who thought him plain mad. The best-selling British author and foreign correspondent Frederick Forsyth²⁹⁰¹ described a disturbing encounter with van den Bergh, whom he described as “the originator and enforcer of apartheid.” Forsyth wrote, “I once found myself enclosed with General van den Bergh, the head of the Bureau of State Security, the dreaded BOSS, and he insisted on telling me a story to prove not only his legitimacy but his sanity as well.”²⁹⁰² This is what van den Bergh told Forsyth:

“I was standing once, quite alone on the High Veldt, when a great storm came up. I knew the land was riven with iron ore deposits and lightning strikes would be often and dangerous. So I took shelter under a large mwataba tree. There was an old kaffir standing nearby, also sheltering. The storm raged with biblical intensity. The thunderbolts poured out of the sky and the thunder was enough to deafen me. The tree was struck and split down the middle, its core a smoking ruin. The old kaffir was struck and at once electrocuted. But the storm passed and the sky cleared, and I was not touched. And that was when I knew that the hand of God was upon me.”

Forsyth concluded that the “master of one of the most brutal secret police forces in the world” was “mad as a frog.”²⁹⁰³

GENERAL VAN DEN BERGH'S INTERROGATION

General van den Bergh spent the evening of September 6 and most of the following day interrogating Tsafendas, while Security Police officers in Cape Town worked through the night on the investigation.²⁹⁰⁴ The fact that General van den Bergh personally interrogated Tsafendas is confirmed in two interrogation transcripts found in the archives at a later date. In his first statement on September 11, Tsafendas refers explicitly to van den Bergh, saying, “I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this.”²⁹⁰⁵ On September 19, in ²⁸⁹⁹ O'Meara, 1996: 211.

²⁹⁰⁰ Winter, 1981: 26; Debates of the House of Assembly, 8 December 1978.

²⁹⁰¹ Author of, among others, The Day of the Jackal (1971), The Odessa File (1972) and The Dogs of War (1974).

²⁹⁰² Forsyth, 2015: 334-335.

²⁹⁰³ Forsyth, 2015: 334-335.

²⁹⁰⁴ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1. ‘All night work’; The Cape Times, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Riddle of Dr. Verwoerd’s assassin’; Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Security men work all night.’

²⁹⁰⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

his second recorded statement, Major Rossouw, who is conducting the interrogation, tells Tsafendas: “You told Gen. van den Bergh about a girl you were interested in ...”²⁹⁰⁶ Furthermore, John Vorster confirmed in a statement²⁹⁰⁷ which we will examine later that Tsafendas was interrogated for forty-eight hours by General van den Bergh.²⁹⁰⁸

What was said during this first interrogation? The author found in the archives two of the written statements which Tsafendas gave to the police and to Major Rossouw, but not the one that was taken by General van den Bergh on that first day. This statement was originally lodged in the archives, along with the two found by the author, but it has been missing for at least the last ten years. That such a statement existed is proven not only by the references above, but because it has been accessed in the past by at least four other persons: Terry Bell, an investigative journalist and anti-apartheid activist; David Beresford, foreign correspondent in South Africa for Britain's Guardian newspaper; Liza Key, a researcher and filmmaker who made a documentary about Tsafendas; and Jan-Ake Kjellberg, a Senior Police Adviser at the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and an investigator in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's National Investigative Unit. All four, in personal interviews with the author, spoke at length about the contents of the interrogation transcript. They were unanimous, that Tsafendas told the general he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he did not agree with his policies, that there was nothing in the transcript to suggest that Tsafendas was not sane, and that van den Bergh was most interested in finding out whether Tsafendas had any accomplices or discussed his intentions with anyone.²⁹⁰⁹

The first person known to the author to have access to the document is Jan-Ake Kjellberg. It was during his work as an investigator for the TRC in 1997 that he came across the document in Tsafendas's police file. Kjellberg told the author that the interrogation transcript indicated that although Tsafendas told van den Bergh that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he “disagreed with him,” the general was more interested in whether Tsafendas had any accomplices and whether he had discussed the assassination with anyone ²⁹⁰⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹⁰⁷ In 1976, Vorster revealed that General van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas for forty-eight hours, adding that “if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh's questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing” (D' Oliveira, 1977: 180).

²⁹⁰⁸ D' Oliveira, 1977: 180.

²⁹⁰⁹ Terry Bell in a personal interview, 10 April 2015; David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015; Jan-Ake Kjellberg in a personal interview, 5 March 2015.

else. Kjellberg also said that there was nothing strange in the statement or anything to suggest that Tsafendas might not be sane.²⁹¹⁰

Around the same time as Kjellberg saw the transcript, it was also accessed by David Beresford and Liza Key. Key, in her 1997 documentary A Question of Madness, and Beresford in articles in the Guardian in 1997 and 1999, made reference to Tsafendas's statement to General van den Bergh and subsequent statements by Tsafendas while he was in custody. Both emphasised in their works that the police had tried persistently to make Tsafendas say that the tapeworm "ordered him" to kill Dr. Verwoerd, but Tsafendas insisted that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with his policies."²⁹¹¹

In an article in the Guardian in 1997, Beresford wrote, "Although there were attempts by police, during interrogation, to suggest to him (Tsafendas) that he believed a tapeworm had 'ordered' him to carry out the killing, he never seems to have made the claim himself."²⁹¹² In the 1999 article in the Guardian, Beresford wrote, "Police interrogators, try though they did, never managed to get his admission that the worm talked to him, much less ordered the murder of the prime minister of the Republic of South Africa."²⁹¹³ Key, in her documentary, said exactly the same thing as Beresford, adding that Tsafendas had also said he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with his policies."²⁹¹⁴ Both Beresford and Key reaffirmed to the author what they had said in their work about Tsafendas. Both also told the author that Tsafendas always maintained to them when they interviewed him over several hours that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he "disagreed with his policies," and he never said to them that the tapeworm had anything to do with it.²⁹¹⁵

Terry Bell was given a copy of Tsafendas's interrogation transcript by Kjellberg. Subsequently, in his 2003 book Unfinished Business: South Africa, Apartheid and Truth, co-authored with advocate Dumisa Buhle Ntsebeza, Bell wrote that Tsafendas, according to the transcript of the interview, gave as his reason for killing Dr. Verwoerd the fact that he "didn't agree with him." Furthermore, still according to Bell and Ntsebeza, the transcript showed that ²⁹¹⁰ Jan-Ake Kjellberg in a personal interview, 5 March 2015.

²⁹¹¹ Beresford (The Guardian), 6 November 1997: 6-7, 'Inside Story: The madness that destroyed apartheid.'; Beresford (The Guardian), 11 October 1999: 18, 'Demitri Tsafendas: Long-jailed assassin of South African premier.'; Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

²⁹¹² Beresford (The Guardian), 11 October 1999: 18, 'Demitri Tsafendas: Long-jailed assassin of South African premier.'

²⁹¹³ Beresford (The Guardian), 6 November 1997: 6-7, 'Inside Story: The madness that destroyed apartheid.'

²⁹¹⁴ Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

²⁹¹⁵ David Beresford in a personal interview, 11 April 2014; Liza Key in a personal interview, 2 April 2015.

Tsafendas had mentioned the notorious tapeworm only in passing, when asked about his hospitalizations, and he replied that he had suffered from tapeworm infestation. According to the authors, the transcript indicated that van den Bergh was more interested in whether Tsafendas had any accomplices and whether he had discussed the assassination with anyone else.²⁹¹⁶ In a personal interview with the author, Bell confirmed in detail the contents of Tsafendas's first interrogation as reported in his book and as stated by Beresford and Key in their respective works.²⁹¹⁷

Tsafendas himself insisted to three priests, Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafaridis, who visited him in Pretoria Prison hospital and in Sterkfontein Hospital in the 1990s that he never told the police that the tapeworm had anything to do with the assassination and stressed that he had mentioned it only once, as the reason why he was hospitalised.²⁹¹⁸ That Tsafendas did not give the tapeworm as a reason for the killing is further validated by the contents of two statements he made to the police which were found in the National Archives. As we will soon see in this chapter, there is no mention of the tapeworm or of anything that might suggest he could be "schizophrenic"; what there is, however, is a lucid and logical political explanation as to why he killed Dr. Verwoerd.

If Tsafendas had told van den Bergh about the tapeworm having something to do with the killing, he would almost certainly have repeated it in his subsequent statements. However, what he said was that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he hoped "a change of policy would take place."²⁹¹⁹ Tsafendas said the same thing to the three priests mentioned above. He told them that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator and a tyrant who was oppressing his people and because he was the "brains behind apartheid," he hoped his assassination would lead sooner or later to the downfall of apartheid.²⁹²⁰ As we will soon see in this chapter, in both discovered statements, Tsafendas told the police much the same as he told the three priests and nothing about the tapeworm.

Further confirmation of the first statement comes from Michalis Michelis, a Greek journalist. In 1988, Michelis published an article about Tsafendas in the Greek political ²⁹¹⁶ Bell and Ntsebeza, 2003: 56-57.

²⁹¹⁷ Terry Bell in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

²⁹¹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁹¹⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹²⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

magazine Sholiastis, which was subsequently cited by Eleftherotipia, the biggest and most reliable newspaper in Greece at the time. The article was titled “I did my duty, what about you?”²⁹²¹ It was based on interviews which Michelis conducted in South Africa and elsewhere with people who knew Tsafendas. Among them were the South African writer, painter and anti-apartheid activist Breyten Breytenbach, who was with Tsafendas in “Beverly Hills,” a section in Pretoria Prison, Dimitris Kalogirou, who gave Tsafendas a reference in Durban in 1965 and who knew him since he was a child, and Dimitris Apostolidis, who knew Tsafendas in Durban. Michelis also interviewed a retired Afrikaner policeman who was present in the police station in Caledon Square when Tsafendas was detained there after the assassination. The policeman told Michelis he saw Tsafendas almost every day and spoke to him on some occasions.²⁹²²

Michelis did not disclose in his article the name of the policeman because the interview was given on condition of anonymity. The policeman told Michelis that he “never heard Tsafendas saying anything about the tapeworm” and that “he seemed to be perfectly sane.” He also added that “none of the policemen thought Tsafendas might be insane.” The policeman said Tsafendas told them that he considered it his “duty” to kill Dr. Verwoerd, hence the title of the article, because he believed him to be a “tyrant and a dictator who was oppressing his people.” Tsafendas would repeat exactly the same statement in the mid-1990s to Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsafataridis. He told them the assassination was morally and politically justifiable because Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator and a tyrant. He said that he had the “chance to kill the tyrant who had created apartheid,” that it was his “social responsibility,” indeed a “duty,” and he would have regretted it all his life if he had not acted when he had the chance.²⁹²³ A detailed account of what Tsafendas told the priests is given in the following chapter.

Tsafendas had also characterised a hypothetical assassination of Dr. Verwoerd as “justifiable” on grounds that he was “a dictator and a tyrant,” when he talked to a group of Eleni crew members three days before the actual assassination. Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a tyrant and a dictator when he was interrogated by Major Rossouw on September 11, 1966 and though he did not use those exact words that was clearly what he ²⁹²¹ Michelis, 1988: 14-15.

²⁹²² Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

²⁹²³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafataridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

meant. He said that in his mind, Dr. Verwoerd was not the real representative of his country. "I wanted to see a government representing all the South African people. I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government."²⁹²⁴

Furthermore, according to Michelis, quoting the South African policeman, Tsafendas had said that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he had created apartheid and he hoped that his death could bring an end to it sooner or later.²⁹²⁵ Tsafendas told Major Rossouw on September 11 that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd because he believed "a change of policy would take place" after his death.²⁹²⁶ Finally, still according to Michelis quoting the South African policeman, Tsafendas said, "I don't care what you will do to me, kill me."²⁹²⁷ Tsafendas would twice repeat an almost similar sentiment while he was interrogated. When he was interrogated by Major Rossouw on September 11, 1966, he said, "I did not care about the consequences for what would happened to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister."²⁹²⁸ On September 19, Tsafendas told the Major, "I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught."²⁹²⁹ Tsafendas also told other witnesses after the assassination that he "did not care what would happen" to him and that he knew he was going to be executed.²⁹³⁰

The marked similarity between what Michelis wrote in 1988 and what Tsafendas told Major Rossouw on two occasions clearly indicates that Michelis's policeman was present when Tsafendas was in custody in Caledon Square police station. Michelis could not otherwise have known the content of Tsafendas's words, since the interrogation transcripts only became publicly available in the mid-1990s, long after the policeman was interviewed ²⁹²⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹²⁵ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

²⁹²⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹²⁷ Michelis, 1988: 15.

²⁹²⁸ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹²⁹ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

²⁹³⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

by Michelis and had his article published. Only someone who was present at the time could have known what Tsafendas told the police then.

Perhaps the strongest evidence that the policeman was present when Tsafendas was held in custody came from the fact that he told Michelis that Tsafendas was visited in his cell by a Greek-South African policeman. Michelis traced then this policeman, but he declined to talk to him.²⁹³¹ However, Tsafendas later told Fathers Minas Constandinou and Spiros Randos that a Greek-South African policeman had indeed visited him while he was in custody,²⁹³² thus confirming that Michelis's police informant had to be in the police station to witness this. We will talk later in this chapter about the role of the Greek-South African policeman in the case.

Tsafendas's interview with General van den Bergh is not his only missing statement. The two statements Tsafendas gave to the Commission of Enquiry have also disappeared. According to the Commission's report, Tsafendas gave evidence twice; on October 25 and November 11.²⁹³³ Neither of these statements can be traced. Apart from the written statements, the Dictaphone recordings of these two testimonies are also missing. It would be a remarkable coincidence for both copies, one typed and one recorded for each of the testimonies, to disappear, whether by accident or incompetence.

As we will see, Tsafendas's statements are not the only ones to disappear. The report of the Commission of Enquiry stated that "one hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission."²⁹³⁴ However, fewer than half of these witnesses' statements were found in the archives. The surprising thing is that in most cases where a typed statement survived, so did the recording; but where a typed statement went missing, the recording did, too. It is not unusual for documents to go missing from archives for a variety of reasons, but it strains credulity that in every case where a written statement disappeared, so, too, did the accompanying recording. The issue of the missing statements will be discussed in detail later in this chapter and in chapter Six.

²⁹³¹ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

²⁹³² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁹³³ Report of the COE. Chapter II D, Paragraphs 18-19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

²⁹³⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

TSAFENDAS'S LEGAL REPRESENTATION

Soon after his arrest, though the author is not in position to know exactly when, Tsafendas formally requested that the well-known anti-apartheid activist and human rights lawyer, Advocate George Bizos, should be appointed to defend him in forthcoming legal proceedings. Tsafendas had not met Advocate Bizos, but was well acquainted with his work as a defence lawyer at political trials and had a very warm relationship with his father, Antonis Bizos. Receiving no response, Tsafendas repeated his request, but the result remained the same.²⁹³⁵ He did not see a lawyer until September 26, when he had been in custody for twenty days, and the lawyer was not Advocate Bizos but a defence team appointed by the State.

According to Advocate George Bizos, he was never contacted by the State or anyone else about representing Tsafendas, although it was a prisoner's legal right to be defended by a lawyer of his choice. Bizos was not surprised since he was himself persona non grata with the State. Not long before the assassination, Police Minister John Vorster's personal lawyer, by name of Krueger, had transmitted a warning from Vorster to Bizos that "Bizos's leash is getting shorter."²⁹³⁶

The rejection of Tsafendas's request for the politically active Bizos to be his defence counsel was mirrored years earlier in the case of Nelson Mandela. Prohibitions against lawyers who had defended anti-government leaders meant that many accused persons were robbed of their right to the counsel of their choice. Mandela's defence counsel was threatened with imprisonment unless he left the trial precincts. This prompted Mandela to address the presiding magistrate as follows: "It is my duty to make this point: One of the few rights left to the Black man in this country is the right to choose his own Counsel. I suspect a deliberate decision to deprive me of Counsel of my own choosing. This is not a reflection on the State prosecutor. I think it is a high-level conspiracy to make it difficult for me to prepare for this trial."²⁹³⁷

²⁹³⁵ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁹³⁶ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 1 September 2016.

²⁹³⁷ "A Distinguished South African Lawyer," 1965: 8-10.

TSAFENDAS TORTURED WHILE IN DETENTIONBACKGROUND²⁹³⁸

In 1976, Prime Minister John Vorster revealed that General van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas for forty-eight hours, adding that “if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh’s questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing.”²⁹³⁹ Van den Bergh himself claimed that “no person in South African history has ever been interrogated as much as Tsafendas.”²⁹⁴⁰ Given that the police of the apartheid era were notorious for their use of torture during questioning, we must assume that some violence was inflicted on Tsafendas. After all, he was interrogated more than any other prisoner during the apartheid years and he had committed the greatest possible crime by killing the architect of apartheid.

It is indisputable and now widely accepted that the South African police tortured, even murdered, detainees during the apartheid era. It is also a fact that detainees were routinely tortured for lesser crimes than those of Tsafendas. According to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission “torture was the dominant form of violation by the apartheid police during the 1960s.”²⁹⁴¹ Through the General Law Amendment Act of 1963 (the 90-day detention law), the police were given the power to detain individuals without charge and to use solitary confinement.²⁹⁴² In 1965, the 90 days were doubled and thus became the 180-day law. From June 1963 to September 1966 three detainees under this law, the same law under which Tsafendas was held, “killed themselves” while in police custody.²⁹⁴³ In total, between 1960 and 1969, twenty prisoners died in detention. Of these deaths, eleven were labelled suicides and seven the result of natural causes, of which two were described as “slipping” accidents and one an accidental fall down stairs.²⁹⁴⁴

At that time, the police used torture widely against prisoners accused of crimes far less serious than those laid against Tsafendas. Tsafendas was not the first or last prisoner to be tortured by the apartheid police, nor were the techniques used reserved for him only.²⁹⁴⁵ As we will see, most of what happened to Tsafendas was simply routine and the torture ²⁹³⁸ For a more detailed account of torture during apartheid see Chapter One.

²⁹³⁹ D’ Oliveira, 1977: 180.

²⁹⁴⁰ Pike, 1985: 461; Winter (The Citizen), 20 October 1976: 1, ‘Why I killed Verwoerd.’ ???

²⁹⁴¹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 3, 1998: 530.

²⁹⁴² Eades, 1999: 16.

²⁹⁴³ Rand Daily Mail, 28 January 1967: 2, ‘Three 180-day detainees have killed themselves’; Sachs, 1970: 26.

²⁹⁴⁴ Fullard, 2004: 362.

²⁹⁴⁵ Since it would take a whole new study to list all the torture cases and torture techniques of the apartheid authorities, for anyone interested in learning more see: the reports of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

techniques used on him, apart from the mock hanging, as far as the author can tell, were employed routinely by the apartheid police, especially the use of electric shocks.²⁹⁴⁶ Minister of Justice and former Nazi collaborator, John Vorster, had essentially legalised torture after the passing of the Sabotage Act of 1962, “It is not a very nice thing to see a human being broken... I have seen it... the men taking these powers must be responsible for them.”²⁹⁴⁷

Since then, torture had become increasingly vicious the widespread use of electric shocks,²⁹⁴⁸ solitary confinement, constant exposure to bright lights, partial suffocation and beatings.²⁹⁴⁹ Several detainees of this period had described a wide range of mistreatments, including being beaten, tortured with cold water, forced into uncomfortable positions, told lies and interrogated for hour after hour, and degrading treatment such as being strip-searched.²⁹⁵⁰ Many victims developed psychiatric problems and had to be transferred to mental hospitals.²⁹⁵¹ By the early 1960s, about sixty four deaths of people being held in detention were reported, and the government did not even bother contesting them.²⁹⁵² Large numbers of prisoners committed suicide rather than submit to yet more torture.²⁹⁵³

Between 1960 and the middle years of the sixties, torture became more refined, moving beyond routine physical assault to techniques designed primarily to extract information. In January 1964, Minister Vorster told Parliament that forty-nine complaints had been received about the ill treatment and torture of prisoners, twenty-eight alleging assault and twenty electric shock. He said thirty-two had been investigated and found to be of no substance. Contemporaneous claims of torture across region, rank and organisation nevertheless bore a remarkable consistency²⁹⁵⁴ and Helen Suzman, speaking in the House of Assembly, urged a review of prison regulations. Vorster refused, claiming that the system was “operating efficiently.”²⁹⁵⁵

²⁹⁴⁶ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 3, 1998: 38.

²⁹⁴⁷ Asmal et al, 1996: 118.

²⁹⁴⁸ Fullard, 2004: 356.

²⁹⁴⁹ Foster, 1987: 5.

²⁹⁵⁰ Foster, 1987: 127: 235.

²⁹⁵¹ Bunting, 1986: 227-233.

²⁹⁵² Foster, 1987: 2.

²⁹⁵³ Fullard, 2004: 357.

²⁹⁵⁴ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 198.

²⁹⁵⁵ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1967: 1

THE TORTURE

On September 26, 1966, twenty days after the assassination, David Bloomberg, one of Tsafendas's lead lawyers, visited him for the first time. He said Tsafendas had "some facial injuries" which Major Cerff, the police officer who accompanied Bloomberg to the cell, claimed had "occurred during the struggle to subdue him in Parliament." Bloomberg "doubted this explanation since three weeks had elapsed since the assassination", but he decided he would "not reveal" his "misgivings" as "the injuries appear to be superficial."²⁹⁵⁶

The assumption is that Bloomberg would have taken action over more serious injuries. However, Bloomberg was not a doctor and not qualified to determine whether or not the injuries were superficial. Further, since Tsafendas was fully dressed, Bloomberg could not know if Tsafendas carried injuries to his body, such as would be caused by beating or electric shocks. The use of violence and electrical shock torture was widespread at the time, as Bloomberg, a lawyer, should have known. Lyttelton Mngqlikana, who was held in Vooruitsig Prison in 1964, stated that the warders were "careful not to hit a prisoner on parts of the body which would show. It was futile to complain about a beating unless a prisoner could show marks."²⁹⁵⁷

During a subsequent visit, Bloomberg again found Tsafendas with "visible injuries."²⁹⁵⁸ He has given two different descriptions of this encounter. According to his 1997 account in Liza Key's documentary A Question of Madness, he discovered Tsafendas "huddled in a corner and badly bruised." Bloomberg said Tsafendas told him that a "madman, in his own words, got into his cell during the night and had beaten him up." Then "after further investigation, not only from the police, but around the town," Bloomberg discovered that on the night of the beating, a very famous horse trainer²⁹⁵⁹ had been out drinking with a very senior policeman. At the end of their drinking binge, the men went to the police station where Tsafendas was held and the "horse trainer was allowed into the cell and performed what I,²⁹⁶⁰ what he, probably thought was a very loyal act and beat him up." Bloomberg said the horse trainer had to be restrained from beating Tsafendas even more. In effect, Bloomberg attributed Tsafendas's injuries to an unnamed individual who had somehow gained access to ²⁹⁵⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 74-75.

²⁹⁵⁷ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1967: 43.

²⁹⁵⁸ David Bloomberg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. The part is available in the rushes.

²⁹⁵⁹ By coincidence, Abe Bloomberg, David Bloomberg's father, was president of a racecourse club in Cape Town. Judge Beyers was a board member of this club and a friend of Abe Bloomberg.

²⁹⁶⁰ This is exactly what David Bloomberg said. The 'I' must have been a slip of his tongue.

the cell. Not only did he absolve the police of any blame, he credited them with preventing Tsafendas from being more severely beaten.²⁹⁶¹

In his 2007 memoir My Times, Bloomberg downplayed the incident. In this version, Tsafendas is not “badly bruised,” but only had “some scratches and minor bruising on his face.” Bloomberg claimed that Tsafendas told him he was woken in the middle of the night by a police officer and a man in civilian clothes. The man in civilian clothes “suddenly rushed at him and started punching him and the officer intervened to restrain him and the two then left.” According to Bloomberg, the duty officer “denied that any unauthorised person could possibly have been allowed into this high security part of the police station and said that Tsafendas must have had a dream.” Bloomberg did not enquire how it was possible to acquire facial injuries by dreaming.²⁹⁶²

This was the second time Bloomberg had found Tsafendas with facial injuries and again he did nothing. Instead of asking for a doctor to examine Tsafendas’s face and body, he ignored the matter. Judges Gerald Friedman and Robin Marais, both of whom were practising counsel then and had no connection with the case, thought that it would ordinarily be the duty of a lawyer to whom a client complained of having been assaulted while in continuing police custody to take the matter up with higher authority and, if material physical evidence of assault was still detectable, to require a medical examination to take place.²⁹⁶³

According to Advocate George Bizos and Professor John Dugard given the seriousness of Tsafendas’s offence, and because of the police’s reputation for torture and brutality, Bloomberg should have asked that Tsafendas be examined by a doctor to determine if there were other injuries and if the facial injuries were indeed only superficial.²⁹⁶⁴ Professor John Dugard told the author:

“You must remember the environment of the time in South Africa. The mid-sixties were undoubtedly the worst period in South Africa for that kind of treatment. And so I think that lawyers... I don’t know Bloomberg at all, but I know that lawyers were afraid to raise complaints of this kind. In my book on it, I mentioned the handful of lawyers who I thought ²⁹⁶¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 82.

²⁹⁶² Bloomberg, 2007: 82.

²⁹⁶³ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 18 August 2016; Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

²⁹⁶⁴ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

were good, brave lawyers, and Wilfrid Cooper was one. So I would have expected him to raise it. He certainly would have. But other lawyers, advocates and attorneys were terrified.”²⁹⁶⁵

Judge Robin Marais seriously doubts whether a civilian could have walked through many locked doors and beaten up Tsafendas.²⁹⁶⁶ Professor Dugard described Bloomberg’s claim as “absolute nonsense,”²⁹⁶⁷ Judge Gerald Friedman founds the story “unbelievable”²⁹⁶⁸ and Advocate George Bizos believes it to be a “lie.”²⁹⁶⁹

Tsafendas later told several people that he was tortured severely by the police while in custody, both mentally and physically, and he described the torture in detail. Those he talked to include the cinematographer Liza Key, journalist David Beresford, Alexander Moumbaris,²⁹⁷⁰ an Umkhonto We Sizwe freedom fighter and fellow prisoner in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, and three priests²⁹⁷¹ who visited him in prison and later in the two hospitals (Pretoria prison hospital and Sterkfontein), namely, Fathers Minas Constandinou and Spiros Randos and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis.²⁹⁷² The South African policeman who was present while Tsafendas was held in Caledon Square Police Station told Michalis Michelis that Tsafendas was “badly tortured” while in custody, but he only mentioned severe beatings.²⁹⁷³

²⁹⁶⁵ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²⁹⁶⁶ Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

²⁹⁶⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

²⁹⁶⁸ Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 18 August 2016.

²⁹⁶⁹ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

²⁹⁷⁰ Alexander Moumbaris, born in Egypt to Greek parents in 1938, was arrested in 1972 on the Botswanan border, along with his two-to-three months’ pregnant French wife Marie-Jose, while he was attempting to smuggle MK fighters into South Africa. He was charged under the Terrorism Act, and was found guilty of conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, of aiding “terrorists,” of distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968 and of reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings. He was sentenced to twelve years’ imprisonment. He was sent to Pretoria Central Prison, from where he escaped in December 1979, along with fellow political prisoners and anti-apartheid activists Stephen Lee and Tim Jenkins. During the 1980s, he ran the ANC office in Paris. For his efforts in the anti-apartheid struggle he was later awarded the national order of Grand Companion of O.R. Tambo Medal and the Sabotage Campaign Medal (Keable, 2012: 122-131; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 19 July 2014; Pike, 1985: 474-478). For Moumbaris’s activities in South Africa see Keable, K. (ed.) (2012) London Recruits: The Secret War against Apartheid. For the amazing story of Moumbaris’s escape see Jenkin, T. (2003) Inside Out: Escape from Pretoria Prison.

²⁹⁷¹ Tsafendas was also visited during the late 1980s and early 1990s by a fourth priest, Father Michalis Visvinis. Father Michalis was extensively interviewed several times by the author on the condition that what he said would not be published. He agreed to talk in order to “point the author to the right direction.” Everything he said is completely compatible with what Tsafendas told his three fellow priests and several other witnesses.

²⁹⁷² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁹⁷³ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

Tsafendas said he was never tortured while “the General” was present. The “only thing” that van den Bergh insisted upon was that Tsafendas should not be allowed to sleep until the interrogation was finished.²⁹⁷⁴ The no-sleep tactic was not a first. Bram Fischer, who defended Nelson Mandela at the 1963-64 Rivonia trial, was captured after a woman he knew was interrogated and threatened for seventy hours non-stop.²⁹⁷⁵ Tsafendas said that at first his torture was designed to find out more about him and whether he had any accomplices, but later it simply became revenge for his killing of Dr. Verwoerd.²⁹⁷⁶

Tsafendas claimed that while in custody in Caledon Square Police Station, policemen would enter his cell several times a day and kick him and beat him with their fists. There was no bed and he was forced to lie, often naked, and handcuffed, on the concrete floor. Sometimes, he would be put in a straitjacket and beaten, and this continued after he was transferred to prison. Tsafendas also said that he was given electric shocks. He described a small wooden box with wires, which he said the police used to electrocute him after they had removed some of his clothes. At the same time, they poured water over him to heighten the shock while tightening a burlap sack or a plastic bag around his head, causing a suffocating effect. He often lost consciousness and when he came to found himself half-naked on the floor. Tsafendas admitted, crying, that a few times he realised he had urinated on himself. He wore the same soiled clothes day after day and was only given clean clothes and allowed to have a bath when he was seen by his defence team or was examined by doctors.²⁹⁷⁷

In addition to purely physical violence, Tsafendas was subjected to a series of mock hangings, which combined bodily and psychological torture. Almost every day, starting shortly after his arrest, Tsafendas would be taken blindfolded and with his hands tied, to another room. On the way there, the policemen shouted, “Now, you bastard, now your time has come.” Inside the room, they placed him on a chair with a rope around his neck. They then asked him if he had a last wish. A few seconds later they pulled the chair from under him, leaving him hanging from the rope. Tsafendas dangled for a few seconds in mid-air while the policemen shouted and laughed, before they loosed the rope and let him fall. Once ²⁹⁷⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁷⁵ Peires, 2004: 107.

²⁹⁷⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

²⁹⁷⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

on the floor he was kicked and beaten again. After a few days of this, Tsafendas did not have the strength to stand and the police had to carry him into the “hanging” room.²⁹⁷⁸

In another form of psychological torture, Tsafendas was taken to the window in a different room where the police threatened to throw him out, saying they would claim he had tried to escape.²⁹⁷⁹ Abdullay Jassat, an anti-apartheid activist arrested in 1963, described a similar torture: “they then pushed me into a louvre-fitting window and [I was] made to lie on it. I was held by both my feet by the police whilst they were simulating me trying to commit suicide. This was a known method of killing people in detention and they were well co-ordinated in their actions whilst the one was holding my foot and the other making as if to let me fall down from the window. I was then fearing that I was going to die.” Jassat was also given electric shocks and was severely beaten.²⁹⁸⁰

Tseliso Phofu, an anti-apartheid activist and one of the student leaders during the Soweto uprising, also experienced the “window treatment.” He said, “During the night, they’d open a window and hold you by your legs, lying looking downwards, and they’d tell you that if you don’t tell the truth ‘we can leave you here and you’ll drop down. And when you are dead, we will just tell the people whom you are leading that you tried to commit suicide, you tried to run away.’”²⁹⁸¹ Interestingly, in 1971, Ahmed Timol²⁹⁸² died while in detention. The police claimed that he had opened a window and jumped from a 10th floor office of the John Vorster Square police station, where he had been detained, brutalised and interrogated.²⁹⁸³

All the torture techniques used on Tsafendas, apart from the mock hanging as far as the author can establish, were widely used by the enforcers of apartheid. For example, in 1963, Isaac Tiale was given electric shocks and was tied into a straightjacket. He described how he was handcuffed and subjected to electric shocks with a bag tied over his head until he lost consciousness twice.²⁹⁸⁴ Around the same time, Ndovela Nxasana almost lost his hearing from electric shocks and had the bones of his joints broken from beatings.²⁹⁸⁵

²⁹⁷⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁷⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

²⁹⁸⁰ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 539.

²⁹⁸¹ Tseliso Phofu in Discovery Channel’s Apartheid’s Last Stand, 1998.

²⁹⁸² For Timol’s biography see Cajee, I. (2005) Timol – Quest for Justice.

²⁹⁸³ Houston and Magubane, 2007: 440-441; Magubane, 2007: 5; SAHO, n.d., Ahmed Timol; World Peace Council, 1972: 4-8.

²⁹⁸⁴ Transition, 1976: 53.

²⁹⁸⁵ Fullard, 2004: 357.

Looksmart Ngudle, a member of the ANC and the Communist Party, and leader of the MK in the Western Cape, is generally considered to be the first person to die in detention.²⁹⁸⁶ He was found hanged in his cell on September 5, 1963.²⁹⁸⁷ In November 1963, counsel for his family, Vernon Berrange, stated that twenty witnesses told him they were subjected to “gross brutalities” to make them talk. They were told to undress, made to jump up and down continuously and, when exhausted, they were blindfolded and handcuffed in a squatting position with a stick under their knees. They were then given electric shocks until, in some cases, they lost consciousness.²⁹⁸⁸

On January 24, 1964, James Tyitya became the first political detainee to die in police custody in Port Elizabeth. The cause of death was given as “suicide by hanging.”²⁹⁸⁹ Four years later, the police claimed that James Thabiso Lenkoe, who was held in police custody under the 180-day detention law, “committed suicide” by hanging himself with his own belt. There was clear evidence from autopsy results that electrical torture had been used during his detention.²⁹⁹⁰

Laloo Chiba, an MK fighter, was also given electric shocks and was severely beaten. Chiba stated that the police officers poured water during the electrocution process and Jassat said he was taken to a three-storey window and ordered to jump. When he refused, police thrust him through the window, holding him upside down by his ankles. Periodically, they would let go of alternate ankles, so at times he was hanging by one limb held by a single policeman. Mountain Qumbela was beaten, given electric shocks and forced to hold physical positions for long periods. Zollie Malindi was given the helicopter treatment, suffocated with a plastic bag and given electric shocks.²⁹⁹¹ Since all of the aforementioned prisoners were given electric shock torture, it is clear this was routine and it can be no surprise that it was applied to Tsafendas too.

Other forms of torture were used widely, though not on Tsafendas. In 1966, some thirty-seven SWAPO members were hung from pipes by their handcuffed wrists with their toes barely touching the ground for days at a time.²⁹⁹² On April 6, 1965, Thami Mhlambiso ²⁹⁸⁶ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 532.

²⁹⁸⁷ Fullard, 2004: 363.

²⁹⁸⁸ Transition, 1976: 53.

²⁹⁸⁹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 3, 1998: 41.

²⁹⁹⁰ Bernstein, 1972: 30-31; Madida, 2016: 15

²⁹⁹¹ Fullard, 2004: 358-363.

²⁹⁹² Fullard, 2004: 362.

was forced to walk barefoot across rough ground littered with broken glass.²⁹⁹³ Women were not immune from torture. Eleanor Kasrils was beaten, spat in the face and had her head banged on a table by Lieutenant Grobler as he shouted, “You bitch! I’ll break you or hang you!”²⁹⁹⁴ Violet Weinberg, Bram Fischer’s friend, was interrogated continuously for almost three days and nights, at times by three officers at once; she was threatened with committal to a mental and forced to listen to threats against her children, one of whom was disabled.²⁹⁹⁵ Stephanie Kemp of the African Resistance Movement was punched in the face and her head was slammed repeatedly against the floor.²⁹⁹⁶ On her release, she was ordered to report to the then Brigadier van den Bergh. She refused, but after receiving a telegram from van den Bergh himself, she agreed. Under interrogation by him, she broke down and made several revelations about the ARM.²⁹⁹⁷

Even children were tortured. A 1986 study by the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights reported that children under eighteen who were arrested by the security forces were “routinely assaulted with fists, rifle butts and sjamboks (whips.)” During five days in detention, a boy aged sixteen was repeatedly beaten and given electric shocks and had to undergo surgery afterwards. At least three children, including a three-year-old, died in detention during 1985 as a result of police abuse.²⁹⁹⁸ In 1987, a sixteen-year-old Soweto boy was dragged into a mini-bus by members of a “mobile torture squad” that was active at the time. He was kicked and punched and wired up to a hand-cranked electric generator. After his release, a pathologist found burn marks on his skin consistent with electric shocks.²⁹⁹⁹ Archbishop Desmond Tutu reported that Johnny Mashiane, aged fifteen, was detained in a psychiatric hospital for a month. He was a normal child before his arrest; after it, he was barely able to speak.³⁰⁰⁰

In 1967, the Terrorism Act was introduced, providing for indefinite detention without trial. Soon after this, there was a spate of deaths in detention. Renowned anti-apartheid activist, Law Professor Barend van Niekerk, was indicted for contempt of court because he urged the judiciary to reject evidence secured under pre-trial conditions. Professor Niekerk had already ²⁹⁹³ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1967: 42.

²⁹⁹⁴ Kasrils, 2012: 6.

²⁹⁹⁵ Peires, 2004: 107.

²⁹⁹⁶ Fullard, 2004: 362

²⁹⁹⁷ Pike, 1985: 415.

²⁹⁹⁸ Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, 1986: 4-7.

²⁹⁹⁹ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1988: 21.

³⁰⁰⁰ Tutu, 1987: i.

stated that “the very purpose of the detention clause of the Terrorism Act is to procure evidence by way of torture.”³⁰⁰¹ He argued that the reluctance of the courts to rule out confessions taken from detainees increased the likelihood of prisoners being abused.³⁰⁰²

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission received statements from the families of three of the people who died while being held under this legislation. Official explanations for the deaths included suicide by hanging, “slipped on a bar of soap,” and “jumped from the tenth floor of John Vorster Square.” Forensic evidence indicated torture and assault in these cases, but inquests found no-one responsible for the deaths.³⁰⁰³

More than a decade later, General van den Bergh appeared before the Erasmus Commission of Inquiry into the so-called “Infogate” scandal. He declared: “I can today tell you here, not for your records, but I can tell you, this is not bragging, I have good men, Afrikaners, I don’t have weak men... I have enough men to commit murder if I tell them, ‘Kill’... I don’t care who the prey is. These are the types of men I have...”³⁰⁰⁴ If van den Bergh’s men were willing to kill, then clearly they would have no qualms about torture. The Minister of Police, Jimmy Kruger, also defended his force against accusations of violence. In an interview with the New York Times on October 22, 1977 regarding the death of Steve Biko, he said, “I don’t believe that my police have done anything wrong ... if there is anything wrong in the Biko case, I will be surprised ...”³⁰⁰⁵

TSAFENDAS TORTURED IN PRISON

The torture of Tsafendas did not stop after he left Caledon Square. He was physically and systematically abused in prison for many years after the assassination. Tsafendas himself has described how he was beaten, brutalised, tortured and his food contaminated by the warders’ urine.³⁰⁰⁶ He told Liza Key and David Beresford:

“It was very bad in prison. They used to hang people there next to my cell, half a dozen at a time ... six a week, mostly Coloureds from the Cape ... The warders ... they used to ³⁰⁰¹ Dugard, 1978: 294-302.

³⁰⁰² Rayner, 1990: 173.

³⁰⁰³ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 532.

³⁰⁰⁴ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 18; Burns (The New York Times), 18 May 1980: 3, ‘Pretoria scandal testimony reveals talk of murder’; Leonard, 1983: 124; Rand Daily Mail, 5 June 1979.

³⁰⁰⁵ Malan, 1997: 68.

³⁰⁰⁶ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

take me into a disguised locker of clothes ... and they used to put a straight-jacket on me and then they used to punch me until I fell unconscious to the floor. Every morning the two officers used to come out in my dormitory, my room. I had to follow them. They took me out into the place and I had to walk. They wanted me to walk for exercise. Back. Long like this. And Potgieter followed me with a baton behind. He was a rugby player and used to beat me with club on the head. Mostly behind the head here. Blood used to come out. One men there stood up for me. He says, ‘that’s enough! That’s too much.’ One officer. I still remember him... they used to take me into the laundry room where they kept their clean clothes and they used to beat me. Scale, see my weight and then I’d jumped down and they’d start punching, all around the room. I couldn’t get away. Small laundry room... then when I came out of the laundry room, I couldn’t stand up straight. I couldn’t walk straight. I had to bend from the waist-line down ... They used to take me into a locker of clothes and put a straight-jacket on me and then they punched me until I fell unconscious.”³⁰⁰⁷

In December 1968, Bernard Mitchell, a former inmate in Pretoria Central was interviewed about his time in prison. He briefly mentioned Tsafendas, saying:

“They built a special cell – a flat they called it – for him [Tsafendas] in the death block in Pretoria Central Prison, where I was at the time. This mate of mine in the death wing told me they put a screen around the landing in front of the cell and ‘exercised’ Tsafendas there. A screw would stand in each corner and Tsafendas’s exercise would consist of dodging their truncheons as they threw him from one side to the other. We used to exercise in the yard below his cell and you could hear him screaming.”³⁰⁰⁸

Apart from the physical abuse, Tsafendas underwent the psychological torture of spending twenty-three years in a cell right next to the death chamber where the hangings took place. The apartheid authorities were at that time the world’s “busiest hangman,” executing about one hundred people per year. In order to cope with the “workload” and make the executioners’ work easier, the authorities had erected a special gallows at Pretoria Central Prison which could hold a number of nooses, for occasions involving multiple hangings.³⁰⁰⁹ Tsafendas’s cell was right next to this gallows.

Each execution, and they were frequent (on average two persons per week), involved ³⁰⁰⁷ Dimitris Tsafendas in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

³⁰⁰⁸ de St Jorre (The Observer), 1 December 1968: 7, ‘I was glad that cancer got me out of Vorster’s jail.’

³⁰⁰⁹ Sachs, 1970: 1.

at least a week of mental agony for Tsafendas because the condemned man was moved into the cell next door seven days before his due date. There then began physical preparations for the hanging, including testing of the mechanism which operated the trapdoors, a procedure which caused a loud creaking noise. The day before the execution, political prisoners and other condemned men on Death Row would begin to sing.³⁰¹⁰ Tsafendas himself would weep and wail when the hanging took place, always at dawn. He later said he saw the ritual as a reminder of what to expect if he ever became sane.³⁰¹¹

A vivid picture of how it must have been for Tsafendas spending years within earshot of men being hanged was offered by a fellow prisoner and anti-apartheid activist, Professor Renfrew Christie. He recalled that “we were also put as close to the gallows as possible... we listened to about three hundred hangings ... you would hear the sound of the trapdoors opening and half an hour later you would hear the sound of nails being driven with a hammer, which meant the people were dead and were being placed into coffins.”³⁰¹²

During most of his twenty-three years next to the death chamber, Tsafendas was kept in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours a day, sometimes not allowed out of his cell even for the permitted sixty minutes, often left there for days without explanation; he was not in contact with any fellow prisoner and was not allowed access to newspapers, magazines or books, apart from the Bible; his guards urinated in his food and beat him daily, sometimes several times a day, and sometimes after putting him in a straightjacket so he was unable to protect himself.³⁰¹³

In 1971, the issue of Tsafendas’s treatment was raised by Professor Barend van Niekerk.³⁰¹⁴ The Professor informed Progressive Party MP Helen Suzman and Justice Ludorf,³⁰¹⁵ that “Tsafendas is being subjected to the cruellest possible treatment. Perhaps you

³⁰¹⁰ Beresford (The Guardian), 9 June 1989: 12, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s insane killer being brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell next to gallows for 71- year old prisoner’; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Ledwaba (News 24), 7 January 2012, ‘My ANC: ‘We were put close to the gallows’; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Thornycroft and Lee (Sunday Tribune), 15 May 1994, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’

³⁰¹¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁰¹² Ledwaba (News 24), 7 January 2012, ‘My ANC: ‘We were put close to the gallows.’

³⁰¹³ Breyten Breytenbach in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Mather (The Observer), 1 August 1976: 17, ‘Horror in black and white.’

³⁰¹⁴ (1939-1981) Prominent South African Law Professor. Passionate human rights activist and outspoken critic of apartheid.

³⁰¹⁵ (1913-1982) Joseph Francis Ludorf. Member and strong supporter of the National Party. He had admitted being an officer of the pro-Nazi Ossewabrandwag during the Second World War (International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969: 4). He was one of the judges in the Treason Trial but had to withdraw when the defence argued there was a conflict of interest and he could be prejudiced because he had represented the Government in 1954.

may raise the question of his treatment in the Justice vote. I think it is shocking that he should at all be detained in gaol, where he probably does not get the psychiatric treatment he needs.”³⁰¹⁶ The same year, A.M. Towert, a civil servant, informed Suzman that Tsafendas was kept in the “execution block at Central Gaol, Pretoria.”³⁰¹⁷ Suzman responded that it would be best if she raised the matter privately with the Minister of Justice and the Commissioner of Prisons, knowing that if she raised it in public, she “will simply get a flat denial.” She felt that by doing it privately, there was a “chance that something might be done.”³⁰¹⁸

However, despite Suzman’s efforts, the torture did not stop, with claims of brutality as much ten years after the assassination. Tsafendas’s torture was also the subject of an article in the British Sunday newspaper, The Observer, on 1 August 1976. A former prisoner, Brian Price, claimed that Tsafendas “was treated with gross inhumanity and was a broken man.” He said that the guards urinated in Tsafendas’s food then forced him to eat it and he was routinely beaten and kicked. “For the first five years or so, the warders used to lay into Tsafendas. He was a plaything for sadists.”³⁰¹⁹ The fact that Tsafendas was still being systematically tortured was confirmed by another two prisoners, anti-apartheid activists Alexander Moumbaris and Breyten Breytenbach, by two other unnamed prisoners and later by Tsafendas himself.³⁰²⁰

Breyten Breytenbach, convicted of sabotage and jailed for nine years,³⁰²¹ who was with Tsafendas in Pretoria Maximum Security Prison in the mid-1970s, told Liza Key:

He was a lawyer for the police when Harold Wolpe sought a court interdict to eject the police from a meeting of the Congress of the People (Mandela, 2013: 29-30). He was the judge in John Harris’s trial. He found Harris guilty and he was hanged (Beresford, 2010: 326-341). Nevertheless, in the late 1960s, he protested against the BOSS’s methods and increasing power (International Defence and Aid Fund, 1969a: 4).

³⁰¹⁶ Letter to Helen Suzman from Professor Barend D. van Niekerk of Wits referring to the “cruellest” treatment being meted out to Dimtri Tsafendas in jail, 9 April 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

³⁰¹⁷ Letter to Helen Suzman from A.M. Towert informing her that Tsafendas is held in the “execution block” at Central Gaol, Pretoria, 16 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

³⁰¹⁸ Letter from Helen Suzman to Prof. B.D. van Niekerk (Wits) who’d written to her saying that “Tsafendas is being subjected to the cruellest possible treatment.” 5 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.6. University of the Witwatersrand.

³⁰¹⁹ Mather (The Observer), 1 August 1976: 17, ‘Horror in black and white.’

³⁰²⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Thornycroft and Lee (Sunday Tribune), 15 May 1994, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’, Tsafendas and Breyten Breytenbach in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁰²¹ Abel, 1995: 16.

“[The warders] were martyring the man. There was no doubt about that ... throw out his food, throw it on the floor, walk in it, have him clean it up, throw a bucket of water on his floor and get him to dry it... this seems to be a continuing and ongoing sport amongst the warders They felt personally responsible of called upon to punish him for what he had done. He was never going to be tried and he was never going to be executed ... were really egging one another on to see who could be the most awful. Some of them felt that they personally had to take it out on him for having killed Dr. Verwoerd. He had to be punished day after day ... ‘you killed our leader’ kind of thing... although they themselves had never known Dr. Verwoerd, they were too much too young to be concerned with that... but there was this kind of revenge ... generally using him as a punching bag.” Breytenbach also confirmed that he had seen Tsafendas in a straight-jacket, but the warders told him that they put it on to him because he was “out of control.”³⁰²²

Breytenbach also told Key:

“Under those circumstances ... one-is extremely sensitive to the slightest change in regime ... when you get your food late, when you get your food cold ... when they come to tip over your bed and you have to do it all over again ... And they used to do things like that all the time to him, throw out his food, throw it on the floor, walk in it, have him clean it up ... throw a bucket of water on the floor ... get him to dry it ... pour water on his bed ... And this seems to be a continuing and ongoing sport among the warders ... they were really egging one another on to see who could be the most awful. Some of them felt that they personally had to take it out on him for having killed Dr. Verwoerd. He had to be punished day after day... ‘You killed our leader’ kind of thing ... although they themselves had never known Dr. Verwoerd, they were too much too young to be concerned with that... but there was this kind of revenge ... generally using him as a punching bag.”³⁰²³

Alexander Moumbaris said about Tsafendas in 1980, “He was being buried alive. The warders beat him several times a day. Although he is not a sane man, the treatment he is getting for his illness is non-existent. He told me and this was corroborated that he was often put into a straight-jacket and his testicles twisted by warders.”³⁰²⁴ In a personal interview with the author, Moumbaris clarified his reference in the Guardian to Tsafendas as “not a ³⁰²² Breyten Breytenbach in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁰²³ Breyten Breytenbach in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁰²⁴ Omond (The Guardian), 22 January 1980: 7, ‘South Africans demand POW status.’

sane man.” He said, “I couldn’t tell otherwise. This is what they thought. If they knew he was sane, they would have killed him.”³⁰²⁵

Two unnamed former inmates of Tsafendas told the Sunday Tribune that Tsafendas was “beaten and brutalised time and time again for his assassination of Dr. Verwoerd.”³⁰²⁶ Advocate George Bizos told the author, “The information I got from Alex Moumbaris and others [fellow prisoners] regarding Tsafendas’s treatment in prison was enough to make one throw up.”³⁰²⁷ Professor Renfrew Christie, an anti-apartheid activist who was sentenced for passing to the ANC important secret information on the apartheid government, including its nuclear development plans, was also an inmate at Pretoria Central Prison. He met Tsafendas briefly in the early 1980s. He told the author:

“I was left alone with Tsafendas for a very short time. He was shocked and his face, his hair, were bleached grey/white and he was clearly a man who had been through immense stress and he was, and the best word to use is, a ghost. Neither of us was expecting this meeting; I think one of the warders must have said, ‘This is Tsafendas.’ But I don’t know if I was identified although I think he understood that I was there for my opposition to apartheid and we had three sentences together, no more, as a greeting. He was a man sleep-walking and in great, great shock; distinctly distressed.

My sense is that these particular warders wanted to do him a favour and let him see some other person but I cannot say what their motive was... I believe that the warders who arranged this accident were trying to do him a favour, to let him see some other person, and they picked me. Maybe they thought I was friendly, I don’t know, but we said little more than, ‘Hello. How are you?’ Polite conversation and, of course, the warders were present and we could not say anything serious... I cannot say that the person I met was insane in any way, I can say he was deeply, deeply stressed and he looked like a ghost but that doesn’t make him insane, that makes him someone who’s been in solitary for fifteen or eighteen years or whatever the number is.”³⁰²⁸

In 1989, Tsafendas was seventy-one, but still on Death Row and still being tortured, according to the British Guardian. The newspaper made a widely noted point that instead of ³⁰²⁵ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 28 August 2013.

³⁰²⁶ Thornycroft and Lee (Sunday Tribune), 15 May 1994, ‘Amnesty for Tsafendas?’

³⁰²⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 6 April 2016.

³⁰²⁸ Professor Renfrew Christie in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

being detained in a psychiatric hospital, as the law required for the mentally ill, he had been kept not only in a maximum security prison, but on Death Row.³⁰²⁹

³⁰²⁹ Beresford (The Guardian), 9 June 1989: 12, 'Dr. Verwoerd's insane killer being brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell next to gallows for 71-year old prisoner.'

THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

What follows is a detailed diary of the police investigation that followed the assassination. It contains all the statements made by persons interrogated about Tsafendas, correspondence of the police and the government with various agencies and foreign governments, embassies' reports, police reports, an account of the PIDE's role and many of the press reports for each day.

WEDNESDAY, 7 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

The morning after the assassination, September 7, 1966, van den Bergh continued his interrogation of Tsafendas while his men began interviewing people who knew the accused. At the same time, the police contacted the PIDE in Mozambique for information about Tsafendas.³⁰³⁰ That day, the first full day of the investigation, at least eleven people³⁰³¹ were questioned and they are the following:

MARIKA MICHAEL TSAFANTAKIS³⁰³²

I am the widow of the late Michael Tsafandakis who died at Pretoria on 14.2.62, and lives at No. 1 in Fatti's Building, in Paul Cruger Street, Pretoria. I married Michael Tsafandakis in 1920 in Port Said, Egypt and we moved to Lourenço Marques during 1921. At the time of our marriage I heard that Michael had a child with another woman, Amelia William. The child was then living with Michael's mother in Alexandria, Egypt. This child was named Demitrio Tsafendas. According to a birth certificate which I now produce, he was born at Lourenço Marques during July 1918. In 1924 the grandmother wrote to Michael stating that she was ill and unable to care for the child. The child was then brought to Lourenço Marques, where he lived with us and went to school in Lourenço Marques. When the child was approximately ten years old, we sent him to school in Middelburg, Transvaal. As far as I can remember, he attended school at Middelburg between three and five years. I cannot remember the name of the school, but as far as I know it was a government school. Eventually he was brought back to Lourenço Marques and he then attended a Portuguese school.

At the age of fifteen and even before, he was difficult to control and his father often had to punish him in order to get him disciplined. His association with other children at this stage, however, was good. He showed a particular interest in the use of gunpowder and explosives at this stage and at one time nearly blew up our house. Also at this stage I often found him gazing in space and when I asked him what he was doing, his reply was that he was thinking.

³⁰³⁰ Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 1; '180-day prison for Tsafendas.'

³⁰³¹ "At least" as some statements have disappeared from the archives and we cannot say for sure how many people were questioned.

³⁰³² Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He left school at the age of about sixteen and refused to attend further school. He then started work as a shop assistant and in his spare time took up boxing. He became a particularly good boxer and took part in many tournaments. I do not know him ever to have been injured in boxing. I remember that he was suffering from malaria over a period of years. He however never had blackwater fever. I also remember having taken him to a doctor at the age of about seven-eight years old as one of his teeth took too long to come out. The doctor then told me that this child was showing tendencies of idiocy.

During 1936 he was offered employment by a British firm, apparently building a base or an aerodrome in Mozambique, on account of him being able to speak English and Portuguese. I then lost trace of the accused and my husband and I moved to Johannesburg during 1937. During 1939 he however turned up at my home in Johannesburg and stayed with us until 1940. He at that time tried to get permanent residence in South Africa. Before this was finalised, he left for Durban and took up employment on a ship. I saw him for the first time in 1963 when he came to Lourenço Marques. During this period I received letters from him from all over the world and he was always asking for money.

When he returned during 1963 he told me that he wanted to settle down and he wanted me to help him. I then caused him to come to South Africa and he subsequently got permanent residence in the Republic. In Pretoria he took up employment with Poole's engineering as a welder and general maintenance. He did not live with us while working in Pretoria. Within a year he disappeared again and I never saw him again. The Greek legation in Lisbon at one time wrote to me that the accused was imprisoned in Lisbon but I do not know what for. I also heard from friends that he was at one stage in prison in Lourenço Marques. I also believe that he was in prison in Beira about two years ago.

I do not know to which religion the accused belongs. He however often mentioned that he is a Christian. As far as I know, the accused never showed any tendencies towards violence or criminality. The accused also told me that the ship he was working on during the war was torpedoed. As far as I know the accused was in America, Portugal, Egypt, Germany, Palestine, South Arabia at one or other stages of his life. I do not know the accused to be in any way politically inclined. He has never discussed politics with me. As far as politics is concerned, the Portuguese Government would be in position to furnish more definite information.

Pretoria 7.9.66. (SGD) J.W. Strumpher. Justice of the Peace.

COMMENTS ON MARIKA TSAFANTAKIS'S STATEMENT

Marika naturally revealed that she was aware that he was imprisoned in Beira, as she could not have done otherwise with such a well-known incident. She also volunteered that her stepson had had an interest in explosives as a teenager, and “nearly blew up” their house, as this too was such a well-known event among the Greek community in Lourenço Marques that the police would almost certainly have heard about it. However, she stated that Tsafendas “never discussed politics” with her and that he was not “in any way politically inclined.” As we have already seen, Marika Tsafantakis had often disagreed with her stepson’s political ideas and these ideas and his outspokenness were among the main reasons that he was left behind in Lourenço Marques in 1937 when the family immigrated to South Africa.

According to Katerina Pnefma, Marika’s daughter and Tsafendas’s half-sister, who was in Rhodesia at the time and was questioned there twice after the assassination by the police, her mother deliberately did not mention to the police Dimitri being a Communist nor did she refer to his anti-apartheid ideology. Pnefma told the author that this was something every member of the family did. She said:

“What could she have told them [about Tsafendas’s political ideas]? It was natural for my mother to say that she did not know anything about his political ideas. We all said the same thing: he never discussed politics with us ... how could she and us have told them that he was a Communist? That he was anti-apartheid? That he was anti-colonialist? That he called Dr. Verwoerd ‘bastard,’ ‘Hitler’s student’ and ‘dictator?’ That he has been getting us into trouble because of politics since he was child? They [the police] would have said ‘Why did you bring him here then [to South Africa]? Why didn’t you report him to the police?’ They might have even thought that we had the same ideas as him. Remember these were very difficult times for anyone who was even suspected of being a Communist and anti-apartheid. The Communist Party was illegal at the time in South Africa ... my mother had not only known that he was a political animal, but she had helped him to come to South Africa. Can you imagine what would have happened to her and to us if they knew that we knew that he was Communist and anti-apartheid and we helped him to come to South Africa?

My poor mother was so terrified that they might find out they had bribed this guy in the Embassy in Lourenço Marques and that they would all go to jail. None of us told the police that he [Tsafendas] was a Communist and anti-apartheid. How could we have said such things then? They might have deported us all or even worse ... who knows what they could have done to us if they had found out that we knew. Even so, it took another twelve years before our application to reside permanently in South Africa was accepted. We had to hire lawyers and appeal several times. We spent a fortune ...”³⁰³³

Fotini Gavasiadis, whose brother Nick Vlachopoulos, was Marika’s son-in-law, and who became extremely close with Tsafendas over nine months in Pretoria in 1963-1964, also stated that the “family tried to distance themselves as much as possible from Dimitri. They also couldn’t admit that Dimitri was a Communist and against apartheid. They all said ‘we knew nothing about his political ideas. He never discussed them with us.’ They were terrified, absolutely terrified. They did not know what would happen to them.”³⁰³⁴

Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s cousin, who was in Pretoria at the time agreed. She told the author:

“We could not admit we knew [that Tsafendas was a Communist and anti-apartheid], especially about what he thought about Dr. Verwoerd [being a dictator and a tyrant]. You could not have admitted any of these things, we would have been into big trouble... They [the family] could not have hidden that they drove all the way to Lourenço Marques to pick him up and bring him back to South Africa. All their friends knew and the police would have easily found out. Yes, just like Katerina said, they [the police] would have said, ‘Why did you help him come to South Africa when you knew his political ideas?’ It was a very difficult time even for us [her own family].”³⁰³⁵

Finally, Marika testified to the Commission of Enquiry on October 21, 1966. According to Judge van Wyk of the Commission, this is what she told him:

“Tsafendas was favoured over the other children and sent to Middelburg because Portuguese children could only receive a proper education either there or in Swaziland. After he returned from Middelburg, he was again sent to a Portuguese school...She had heard that ³⁰³³ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰³⁴ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁰³⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

Demitrio had worked at a café, but that he only worked intermittently and that he had been sent back to Lourenço Marques around 1937 or 1938 after the Police had been summoned as he had been accused of being a Communist. In 1963 someone phoned Mrs. Tsafandakis from Lourenço Marques to tell her that Demitrio had asked her to intervene in bringing him back to his family. She had felt it to be her duty to do so as Tsafendas's father had died. Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tape worm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria. According to his stepmother, Tsafendas only learned that he had coloured origins when he looked for work at the aircraft factory. He had grown up as one of her children. He was depressed after he had learned about this, but never said anything about it."³⁰³⁶

ROBERT HARPUR SMITH³⁰³⁷

White male, aged 64 years, Durban.

I am an adult White pensioner and now reside at the above address. From March, 1965, until December, 1965, I was employed as Night Clerk at the reception office of the Durban Men's Home, 160 Queen Street, Durban. During this period I was also residing on the premises. On 21.6.1965 a White Male, Demitrio Tsafendas, I.D. No. 963/081129 (W), obtained accommodation at the said Men's Home. On 24.8.1965 Demitrio Tsafendas left the home.

During his period I often used to converse with him. He invariably discussed politics and he told me that if this was a Communistic state, there would be no need for a Durban Home because everybody would have sufficient.' He made mention that he had met Mr. Canon Collins and Solly Sachs in London and that they had assisted him. He did not state when that was but I gathered that it must have been fairly recently.

One night I was again approached by Tsafendas and he asked me if I knew what Mr. Arenstein, the solicitor's residential address was. I replied that I did not. Tsafendas stated that there would be a revolution throughout the Western world and that the Communists ³⁰³⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³⁰³⁷ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

would rule. He said that the South African Government's policy was "rotten" and often simulated conditions in South Africa with that of Russia, stating, "Look at all the poor people in South Africa, such conditions don't exist in Russia because Russia is a Communistic state."

Tsafendas did not state that he was a Communist but he was definitely pro-Communistic. Tsafendas was in my opinion a fanatic on politics and seldomly spoke of anything else. He said that "the United Party and National Party officials and members were capitalistic roughs" and continually stated that the time was drawing closer for a change throughout the world. Eventually Tsafendas's political philosophy and fanaticism irritated me to such an extent that I would try to avoid him.

About a week before Demitrio Tsafendas left the Men's Home, he told me that a friend of his would take him to Cape Town but did not give any reason or state where he was going to stay. Demitrio Tsafendas did receive mail at the Men's Home but this was only a small quantity. I am also aware that he has a large quantity of literature but do not know the nature thereof. Tsafendas did not associate with residents of the Home and kept himself to himself most of the time. I am unable to state what associates he had outside the Home. I never saw Demitrio Tsafendas again after he left the Men's Home.

The above statement taken by (Sgd.) R.D. Wilson. No. 40205 D/Sergt. Commissioner of Oaths.

Durban 7.9.1966 – 11.20 a.m.

JOHANNES TOBIAS BENADE³⁰³⁸

White male, Pretoria.

I live at above-mentioned address and am working for City Engineering and Carron, 30 Zeiler Street, Pretoria West. Mr. Dimitri Tsafendas is known to me. From 09/12/63 to 03/02/64 he was working for the same firm as me. He pretended to be a welder fitter.

³⁰³⁸ Johannes Tobias Benade statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

According to the work he delivered, it was clear that he did not have much knowledge on the subject, and as a result he was dismissed on 03/02/64. While he worked here, he did not draw my attention in the political field, although he did seem egotistical. He was even-tempered. He carried out his orders without objections.

Statement taken by me this 7th of September 1966 in Pretoria. (Sgd.) D.J. Bezuidenhout D/SGT. Commissioner of Oaths. S.A. Police, Pretoria

KENNETH HEUGH ROSS³⁰³⁹

White male, aged 66 years, resident and employed at Durban Men's Home, Durban.

I am a member of the staff of the Durban Men's Home, 160 Queen Street, Durban. The inmates of the Durban Men's Home and the Stores fall under my supervision. I have been employed at the said address since 1960. According to the records maintained by the Home and to which I have access by virtue of my position, Demitrio Tsafendas I.D. No. 963/081129 (W), a White Male, obtained accommodation at the said Home from 21.6.1965 until 24.8.1965. Demitrio Tsafendas was born on 14.1.1919 in Lourenço Marques and by accommodation was an interpreter at the Magistrates Courts. He was also employed at Fraser and Chalmers for a period of two months until 31.5.1965, when he left as a result of an injury sustained in a stabbing incident.

During Demitrio Tsafendas's period of residence in the Durban Men's Home, I became fairly friendly with him. We often discussed his travels, in which he revealed that he had been to Egypt, Angola and many other countries. As far as I can recollect, he never mentioned that he had visited countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Tsafendas often stated that the political position of South Africa was unfair and that everybody should have the right to franchise. He sympathised with the Communistic principle of collectivism and objected to the Communists being banished to Robin-Island because of their political opinions and actions. In general, Tsafendas opposed to every decision taken by the South African Government and freely voiced his opinion to me.

³⁰³⁹ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas was very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government, and was definitely pre-Russian, but did not state that he was a Communist or that Communism was the solution to South Africa's problems. I am aware that Tsafendas possessed a large quantity of literature but did not take note of the names of the books he read.

The above statement taken by (Sgd.) R.D. Wilson. No. 40205 D/Sergt. Commissioner of Oaths.

Durban 7.9.1966 – 10.25 a.m.

CORNELIUS JOHANNES RUDOLPH³⁰⁴⁰

I am the head court interpreter on the staff of the Magistrate of Durban, and as such I act and arrange for interpreters in the different courts, and if necessary I get or take temporary interpreters in employ where foreign languages are required. I keep a register of interpreters who can interpret in foreign languages. In the register, among other names, is the name Demitrio Tsafendas. About a year ago, the latter approached me and asked whether a suitable vacancy on the staff exists where he can be appointed. I told him that no such vacancy exists and that a Greek or Portuguese interpreter is seldom used in the courts. I was led to believe those were the two languages in which he is proficient. I took his name and address, and wrote it in my register, and also his phone number and promised him that if I need a Greek or Portuguese interpreter, I would get in touch with him.

It happened that I made use of services on several occasions. He was in the habit of regularly reporting two or three times a week to ask whether there is any interpretation work. I got to know him pretty well and would have no trouble identifying him. He later also gave me different addresses where I could contact him, all the addresses are written in my registry. He was away for some time and I did not see him, and upon his return he told me that he worked at Mandeni, Zululand, and he now got work on the Railways. Later he visited me again at the office and told me that he lived at the "Durban Men's Home", 160 Queen Street, and was unemployed. Thereafter he came back to my office and told me that he would now move to Cape Town, because he cannot get work here in Durban. It was about eight months ago. I have not seen him since. I spoke with him several times, he seemed to be a normal person and intelligent. He spoke English properly.

³⁰⁴⁰ Cornelius Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966 at 11.30 a.m. (Sgd.) A. Geysler. No. 72504.

ANTONY MAW³⁰⁴¹

I arrived in Lourenço Marques September 1919 with my wife and a little while later rented a small house in Rua Andrade Corvo. In the semi-detached house next to us lived a Greek, Michael Tsafandakis by name, and a half-caste baby boy named Dimitri of between one and two years of age, and an African girl Maria to look after the latter. The father was employed as fitter and turner at the Buccellato workshop in Rua Lapa.

In 1919 or 1920, the man approached my wife asking her to request a certain Greek lady (Schinas by name) who was about to embark on a sea trip to Athens via Port Said, to take under her wing the baby Dimitri. It was arranged that Mr. Tsafandakis' mother and sister would proceed from Alexandria to meet the boat at Port Said to take delivery of the baby. Dimitri stayed in Alexandria a few years where he attended school and arrived back in Lourenço Marques some years later (I guess between 1926 and 1928) and I have a vague recollection that he attended school in Middelburg (Transvaal). After this period Dimitri lived in Lourenço Marques for some years and then went to sea as a merchant seaman.

A few years after the war, he touched port aboard a steamer and claiming illness was hospitalized here. The local Authorities would not let him stay (on confidential grounds of suspected Communist tendencies) and compelled him to leave by the same steamer. Prior to entering hospital, he approached me and asked in case of death he did not wish rites from a priest or the Church. I did not lay eyes on him again until approximately 2 or 3 or 4 years ago when he called in at my office very unexpectedly. He said he had been all over the world and was here aboard a passenger steamer. He said he was calling on me with a view to obtaining information as to the identity of his mother and the location of her grave. I advised in reply that I remembered only himself as a baby living with his father and an African servant girl.

³⁰⁴¹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

Sometime later I learnt that he had obtained permission to reside in South Africa. Mr. Michael Tsafandakis, during Dimitri's sojourn in Egypt, journeyed there and married a Greek girl in Port Said. Both Dimitri's father and step-mother originated from the island of Crete and the family name is Tsafendis or Tsafantis, the father having been known also as Tsafandakis, it being usual for Cretans to append -akie to the family name.

Dimitri's father Michael Tsafandakis and subsequent family lived in Lourenço Marques for some years but immigrated to Pretoria where he was employed at Iscor. A little while after his retirement he died and was buried there. Dimitri Tsafendis (or Tsafandakis) was baptised in Lourenço Marques by a Greek orthodox priest and he was registered in the local Administraçao Civil as a son of Mr. Tsafandakis (or Tsafendis). From 1926 to 1936, I was assistant (honorary) to an eminent local citizen, Mr. P. dos Santos Gil, in respect of his duties as Honorary Consul for Greece (1926-1936) and from 1936 to 1954 (the time when I myself was Honorary Consul for Greece) Dimitri Tsafendis (or Tsafandakis) was never registered in the Consular register as a son of Michael Tsafandakis, and in fact a Greek passport was refused him by me in line with Greek Civil Code. I am ignorant with what nationality and passport he has circulated.

Lourenço Marques, 7th September, 1966.

*Signed by A. Maw (Antony Maw) in my presence this seventh day of September, 1966. (Sgd.)
G.C. Nel*

COMMENTS ON MAW'S STATEMENT

In his statement, Maw uses the phrase “claiming illness” to describe Tsafendas’s attempt to enter Lourenço Marques after being denied entry. According to Katerina Pnema, Maw told her and her father that Tsafendas had “pretended to be suffering from appendicitis” after the Portuguese authorities refused to let him disembark in Lourenço Marques. According to Pnema, Maw also told her and her father that Tsafendas staged this trick to be allowed off the ship and onto land, where he was taken to a hospital from which he subsequently escaped.³⁰⁴² According to Katerina Pnema, Helen Grispos and Ira Kyriakakis, the fact that Tsafendas pretended to be suffering from appendicitis in order to enter Mozambique was well known by the all the Greeks in Lourenço Marques.³⁰⁴³

GARNET VINCENT MULLER³⁰⁴⁴

I am Senior Running Foreman on the South African Railways at the electric running sheds, Umbilo, Durban. I am resident at 183 Frere Road, Durban – telephone no. 358112.

During the morning of 16th March, 1965, Demitrio Tsafendas, who was up to then unknown to me, arrived at my office and produced a letter from the System Manager’s Staff Office, Durban, to report for duty as a shed attendant, under my supervision. From my observations I could see that Demitrio Tsafendas was a foreigner and he informed me at that time, that he was a Portuguese and had then just arrived from Lourenço Marques to seek employment in Durban. On his own accord, Demitrio Tsafendas informed me that the people where he came from are dying from starvation.

Demitrio Tsafendas also informed me that he had no money to pay for his transport to and from work daily and that he also had by then not found accommodation. I collected among my staff and I handed Demitrio Tsafendas the amount of approximately two rand (R2) and I also arranged accommodation for Demitrio Tsafendas at the E.R. CARNEY Hostel at Montclair. He later furnished me with his room no. as 166.

³⁰⁴² Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁴³ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁴⁴ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

In his capacity as shed attendant, Demitrio Tsafendas's duties consisted of removing jumper cables from between electric unit sets and replacing the jumper cables as and when required. He also had to assist the shedman under whose immediate supervision he worked. Demitrio Tsafendas worked 12-hourly shifts, i.e. 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and every alternative week night shift, i.e. 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. While on day shift, Tsafendas would come under my control as from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Demitrio Tsafendas worked his last shift from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. on the 7th April, 1965. He did not report for further duties and he was eventually regarded as having absconded from the service as from the 7th April, 1965.

Tsafendas usually conversed in English. He did say to me on an occasion that this job is unsuitable to him and said he was a boilermaker by trade. He gave me to understand he took on this position on a temporary basis. The position as a shed attendant entailed no academic qualifications and could be undertaken by any person of low school qualification. After having been employed for a few days, I observed Demitrio Tsafendas to possess intelligence above that of the average person who is likely to accept a position with the little responsibility which is attached to that of shed attendant. This is all I know about Tsafendas.

KYRIAKOS SKORDIS³⁰⁴⁵

I am the proprietor of the Cuban Hat Tea Room, North Beach, Durban. I know Demitrio Tsafendas. I cannot remember the date, but it was about a year ago or more, he came to me at the Cuban Hat. At that time I was the president of the Greek Community in Durban and Natal. He introduced himself to me and I asked him where he came from. He told me that he was from Lourenço Marques and that he was looking for a job. I asked him whether he had any relations in the Republic and he said that he had some, but did not tell me who they were, neither did I ask him who they were.

After a few days he came and told me that he was offered a job at the law courts as an interpreter and told me that he know four or five foreign languages. He asked me whether he could use my address to give to the officials at the Court House, so that they could contact him, whenever they needed him through me. I agreed to this. At that time he told me that he had a room at the Parade Rooms. A few days later he informed me that he had obtained accommodation at a hotel off Muagrave Road, Berea. He was contacted through me by the Court authorities.

³⁰⁴⁵ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I cannot remember how long he was here in Durban, then he disappeared. After a couple of months he re-appeared. I asked him where he was and he told me in Zululand. He did not mention what he did in Zululand. He stayed for a while in Durban. I cannot say where, but he just disappeared shortly after his return from Zululand and I have not seen him since. He never discussed his previous life with me, neither did I have any discussions with him. He appeared to be quite normal and was apparently in a poor financial position. At that time I was living in a flat in Prince Street in Crown Point Plats, number 1404. He never visited my home.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966 at 3.15 p.m. (Sgd.) A. Geysler. No. 72504: W/O.

JOHANNES JACONUS UYS AURETS³⁰⁴⁶

I am a European Male employed by the 3.A. Hallways as a Shedman at the South African Railways, Umbilo, Durban. During the early part of 1965, I cannot recollect the exact date, a European male accompanied the Senior Running Foreman, Mr. G.V. Muller, to my office where he introduced the man to me as Demitrio Tsafendas, a Shed Attendant to work under my supervision. Demitrio Tsafendas thereafter worked under my direct supervision. We worked shifts, one week from 6.00 a.m. to 6.00 p.m. and the following week 6.00 p.m. to 6.00 a.m. The duties of Tsafendas entailed connecting and disconnecting air pipes and vacuum hoses between electric units and the removal and replacement of electric cables between electric units as and when required.

Tsafendas was a well-mannered and well-spoken person. He associated with those working with him. He was soft-spoken and appeared to be of a good nature. During the time he was employed under my supervision i.e. for approximately 3 weeks, I did not see him being cross at any time. He was a good worker. I can remember one night whilst on duty, it was approximately 2.00 a.m., he was relaxing in the office when the Shedman (known as the Outside Shedman) Mr. P.A. Louw, threw a paper bag containing water at Tsafendas where he was lying on a bench. Tsafendas stood up, water running down his clothes. He appeared to be a bit annoyed and asked how he could work in wet clothes. Mr. P.A. Louw has then run away so as not to be seen. Tsafendas then said that he was going home as he was not going to work in wet clothes and walked off. About a week later he returned and took some personal effects of his. He then mentioned that he was working for a firm somewhere on the North Coast.

³⁰⁴⁶ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

During the time he worked under my supervision, he often related about his travels overseas. He also mentioned that he was of mixed origin - Portuguese and Greek. He further stated that he was an interpreter in Court and that he could speak several languages. He never showed any signs of being of violent nature. Occasionally he complained about his wages. I do not know anything more about Tsafendas.

The deponent acknowledges that he knows and understands the contents of this affidavit and that it is the truth. Read over, sworn to and signed before me this 7th day of September, 1966, at 2.40 p.m. at Durban.

(Sgd.) V.H. Dyssel, D/Sergt. 3250. S.A.R. Police: Durban. EX Officio: Commissioner of Oaths. R.S.A

CAROLINE BARBEAU³⁰⁴⁷

Durban.

During about April, 1965, Demitrio Tsafendas came to the above address presenting himself as being one of the members of our church viz. The Christian Church. In all, this person stayed with us for about 5 days, but he visited us quite frequently. During this time and his visits, he told us his life history and as I recollect it now, he told me that he was interned for a couple of years during the war in Greece because he did not want to join the Army. At the time he stayed with us, he told me that he was working on the S.A.R. & H. and had a very inferior job to his intelligence and left the S.A.R. & H., apparently because he was unhappy with his work. Then he got a job at the Mandini Paper Factory and not long after he came back and he had been involved in some knife fight with another Greek at the Mandini Factory. During this fight his right hand was injured and he was treated at the Addington Hospital.

³⁰⁴⁷ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

During my conversations with him, he told me also that he has a brother and a sister in Johannesburg and somehow I got the impression that he was the black sheep of his family. I also got the impression after having known him for some time, that he was not all there. Then one day after he came back from hospital, he told me that he was going to the Cape and he wanted some addresses of people he might visit there. He then left. I believe he stayed with a Daniels family in 1, St. Souci Road, Bellville, Cape Town (Bellville South) for about 3 months. I also got the impression that Tsafendas was a rolling stone and a sponger because he never stayed long in one place and never offered to pay any rent.

When this Greek was staying with the Daniels family in Belleville, I heard by rumour only that he wanted to marry a Miss Daniels and was going to take out a Coloured identity for the purpose. He told me also that he was working in South West Africa at one time and that he was a well-travelled man. I believe also that he told me that at one time he stayed at the Railway Hotel. From his actions he was a very strange man and not very talkative; he liked to pity himself saying that his family did not want him but at the same time he never thanked one for any kindness shown him. He never discussed politics with us and I cannot say if he had any difficulty with his attempt at obtaining a Coloured identity card.

The deponent has acknowledged that she knows and understands the contents of this affidavit which was affirmed to before me and signed in my presence.

(SGD.) D. Wessels, 25689 D/W/O. Commissioner of Oaths

COMMENTS ON BARBEAU'S STATEMENT

Many of the Church's members resented being linked to Tsafendas through his membership of their sect and were deeply embarrassed to be questioned by the police.³⁰⁴⁸ They considered the association with Tsafendas reflected badly on their Church and, like the Greek community in South Africa, tried to distance themselves and the Church from him.³⁰⁴⁹

Tsafendas had also clashed with the Church leaders because they advocated "the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government," including to the governing National Party and its policy of apartheid, a stance which he hotly disputed.³⁰⁵⁰ None of the Church members mentioned this to the police, apart from Patrick O'Ryan.³⁰⁵¹ When O'Ryan asked fellow members at a prayer gathering to pray for Tsafendas, his suggestion was met with angry protests and a minister of the Church pleaded with him to distance himself from Tsafendas and not present him as "one of us."³⁰⁵² Barbeau and another Church-goer, James Johnston, who would also testify to the police, were the only ones to speak negatively about Tsafendas's mental state.

CASPER ANDRIES WILLEMSE³⁰⁵³

I am the housemaster at E.R. Carney, Clair Wood (telephone no. 310-7590). Beginning 15 March 1965, lodging was allocated to one D. Tsafendas who had been employed under the supervision of the chief Loko, Elektrotegnies, Umbilo. Room no. 166 was granted to him and he lived in the home until 14 April 1965. When Tsafendas took up residence, he gave next of kin as one Mr. N. Vlachopoulos (brother), Church Street 600, West End, Pretoria. Room furnishing included a Bible, it is the New Testament in English and Afrikaans, and after he vacated his room, the Bible was missing. I had no opportunity to ask him to give an ³⁰⁴⁸ The Observer, 18 September 1966: 2, 'Police question S. African sect.>'; Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

³⁰⁴⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁰⁵⁰ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

³⁰⁵¹ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁰⁵² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁰⁵³ Casper Andries Willemse statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

explanation as to the missing Bible. The amount of 60 cents was charged in respect of the Bible from his payroll.

To the best of my knowledge, Tsafendas had no special friend in the home and number 166 is a single room. During his stay, I was requested on three occasions by the court to convey a message to Tsafendas to report to the court to act as an interpreter. I asked him about it and Tsafendas told me that the interpreter job was only temporary. He usually spoke English. He made no political statements, and I did not receive any reports relating to such statements and or behaviour on the part of Tsafendas from any of the other residents and/or servants.

Statement taken by me at Durban this 7th September 1966. (Sgd.) T.J. Gunter. Commissioner of Oaths.

WILLEMSE'S INTERVIEW IN THE SUNDAY TIMES

In an interview with the Sunday Times, Willemse described Tsafendas as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.”³⁰⁵⁴

COMMENTS ON STATEMENTS

According to documents found in the South African archives, the aforementioned eleven people were interviewed by the police on September 7, 1966, the first day of the murder investigation. As we saw, Tsafendas is portrayed by people who knew him as being well versed in politics,³⁰⁵⁵ who talked politics fanatically and constantly,³⁰⁵⁶ freely expressing his ³⁰⁵⁴ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8, ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

³⁰⁵⁵ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁵⁶ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

political views,³⁰⁵⁷ pro-Russian and Communist³⁰⁵⁸ and for this reason denied entry to Mozambique.³⁰⁵⁹ He was further described as against apartheid³⁰⁶⁰ and having characterised members of the National Party and United Party as “capitalist roughs,” of once being associated with the South African trade unionist and anti-apartheid activist, Solly Sachs, and the campaigning Anglican priest, Canon John Collins,³⁰⁶¹ and having a large quantity of literature.³⁰⁶²

Tsafendas was also described as a normal person and intelligent,³⁰⁶³ indeed to possess above-average intelligence,³⁰⁶⁴ a well-mannered and well-spoken person,³⁰⁶⁵ quite normal,³⁰⁶⁶ a good worker, non-violent,³⁰⁶⁷ someone who wanted to be reclassified as Coloured in order to marry Helen Daniels.³⁰⁶⁸ On the other hand, other witnesses claimed that Tsafendas did not discuss politics with them,³⁰⁶⁹ that he was a strange man and not very talkative who indulged in self-pity.³⁰⁷⁰ Marika also denied that he ever discussed politics³⁰⁷¹ with her, but this was ³⁰⁵⁷ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁵⁸ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁵⁹ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub File: 1/8. NASA.

³⁰⁶⁰ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶¹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶² Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶³ Johannes Rudolph statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁴ Garnet Vincent Muller statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁵ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁶ Kyriakos Skordis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁷ Johannes Jacobus Uys Aurets statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁸ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁶⁹ Casper Andries Willemsen statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁷⁰ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁷¹ Marika Tsafantakis statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

for the reason we have set out already.³⁰⁷²

It is not surprising that the above statements contain differences. It was natural for Tsafendas to discuss politics with some people and not with others. This could be for a number of reasons, perhaps that he did not trust the person, or the person did not seem interested in politics. It is also possible that they did discuss politics with Tsafendas and that he told them what he told other witnesses, such as being against apartheid and like Marika and her family members, they chose to not reveal it.

THE AUTOPSY ON DR. VERWOERD

An autopsy performed on Dr. Verwoerd established the cause of death as “multiple stab wounds, one of which penetrated the left ventricle of the heart.” The doctor who performed the examination reported that “there were no grounds for a rumour that the wounds had been inflicted by an expert stabber.” They were “quite ordinary,” he said.³⁰⁷³

VORSTER: “ONE-MAN JOB”

On the afternoon of the same day, just twenty-four hours after the assassination, Minister of Justice John Vorster publicly declared that, “Present information indicates that it (the assassination) was the deed of one individual, and his actions and movements are being investigated in the finest detail.” The statement said in full, “Present information indicates that it was the deed of one individual, and his actions and movements are now being investigated to the finest detail. I am aware that much speculation is going the rounds and I want to warn the public not to attach exaggerated value to rumours. Our departed leader believed in law and order. In this case also, the law will take its relentless course and the public will be kept informed as necessary.”³⁰⁷⁴

According to Vorster, it was General van den Bergh who informed him that the assassination was a “one-man job,” after he personally interrogated Tsafendas.³⁰⁷⁵ As we will ³⁰⁷² Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁰⁷³ Report of the COE, Chapter: II D, Paragraph 12. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁰⁷⁴ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966 (late edition): 1, ‘Killer was a Lone Worker.’

³⁰⁷⁵ D’Oliveira, 1977: 180.

see later in his two subsequent statements to the police, Tsafendas maintained that he planned and executed the assassination alone. Vorster most probably had learned from van den Bergh of Tsafendas's statements to the police and of his long history of political activism. Desperate to ensure that no-one would suggest that the "greatest political crime ever committed in South Africa" was politically motivated, he immediately spread the word assiduously that the assassin was "a simple-minded man whose action could not have political implications of any kind."³⁰⁷⁶

It should also be mentioned that six years previously, just twenty-four hours after David Pratt had shot Dr. Verwoerd, the police had made the exact same statement. On that occasion it was the Deputy Commissioner of Police in the Western Cape, Colonel Terblanche, who had stated that "the attack on the Prime Minister was not an organised one: it was purely an isolated attack by an individual."³⁰⁷⁷

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Tsafendas's assassination of Dr. Verwoerd received blanket coverage in South Africa and wide attention overseas. The Daily Dispatch of East London reproduced on its front page two teletype messages received from the South African Press Association newsroom in Parliament, each marked FLASH, the most urgent of news agency designations. The first, timed at 14.15, said, DR. VERWOERD ASSAULTED BY KNIFE IN THE ASSEMBLY. The second, sent at 15.30, said PRIME MINISTER DEAD.³⁰⁷⁸ South African newspapers carried blow-by-blow descriptions of the murder scene in Parliament, along with early reactions from local and world leaders.³⁰⁷⁹

The Cape Argus published an interview that Tsafendas had given to it six weeks ago, in which he described himself as an "anti-Portuguese rebel and an antagonist of the Portuguese dictatorship." However, during the interview, which the paper said lasted seventy-five minutes, Tsafendas did not express any hostility towards South Africa's political leaders. He claimed he had become anti-fascist during his time in Middelburg, Transvaal, that he was imprisoned without trial for three years in Portugal and "brainwashed," a procedure from ³⁰⁷⁶ Lapierre, 2009: 126.

³⁰⁷⁷ The Cape Times, 11 April 1960, 1, 'Isolated attack, says police chief'; The Cape Times, 11 April 1960: 10, 'Dr. Verwoerd'; The Times (London), 11 April 1960: 10, 'Dr. Verwoerd moved to Pretoria.'

³⁰⁷⁸ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

³⁰⁷⁹ See 'Assassination Reaction,' Chapter Four.

which he said he had never fully recovered. He also spoke about his imprisonment in Lisbon, in Barca d'Alva, in Aljuba and at the Machinegun Regiment 1 where he refused to serve in the Portuguese Army. He said that he was not allowed to return to Mozambique until 1963.³⁰⁸⁰ Tsafendas did not explain what he meant by brainwashing but he believed that the Portuguese were trying to change his Communist ideology and his anti-Portuguese convictions. That Tsafendas was telling the truth about all these matters is confirmed, apart from the torture, by the PIDE in its "Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas, no: 2707/64/SR, of November 15, 1964."³⁰⁸¹

Newspaper reports after the assassination described Tsafendas as being "something of a mystery man" to his fellow workers in Parliament. Early articles said he had travelled widely and he had two obsessions – a quotation from the Book of Kings in the Bible which puzzled him, and the cost of living for poor Whites in South Africa.³⁰⁸² He was a bitter, withdrawn man with few friends³⁰⁸³ and according to a Pretoria News dispatch from Lourenço Marques, he was also "a Red," having been deported from Mozambique for alleged Communist connections after the Second World War. The dispatch said he had an African mother and it quoted local Greeks as scoffing at any suggestion that Tsafendas might have been the key figure in an international plot to assassinate Dr. Verwoerd.³⁰⁸⁴ The Cape Argus reported that according to reports from Mozambique, Tsafendas was "violently anti-Portuguese."³⁰⁸⁵

A Cape Town landlady, Alice Theyser, told The Cape Times that Tsafendas had lodged with her in the Woodstock neighbourhood for two months. She described him as a strange, untidy man with silver-capped teeth. "He was not a happy man, I feel sorry for him," she said.³⁰⁸⁶ Theyser also told the Cape Argus that Tsafendas left water on the bathroom floor after he had bathed and one time burnt out her electric kettle by forgetting to switch it off and she made him reimburse her for it. Eventually, she asked him to leave because of his habits and attitude. A neighbour said Tsafendas was given the nickname "The Texas Millionaire" because of his bearing. H.J. Summers, proprietor of Barling's Tea Lounge in Woodstock, said

³⁰⁸⁰ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 3, 'Brainwashed in jail held man told Argus.'

³⁰⁸¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

³⁰⁸² Daily Dispatch, September 7, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

³⁰⁸³ The Sun (Vancouver), 7 September 1966: 'Assassin bitter about white pay.'

³⁰⁸⁴ Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dimitrio a Red, they alleged.'

³⁰⁸⁵ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966: 1, '180-day prison for Tsafendas?'

³⁰⁸⁶ The Cape Times, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Landlady tells of strange, untidy lodger.'

Tsafendas would order tea and scones there from time to time. Once, when he described South Africa as a “bastard country,” Summers ordered him out.³⁰⁸⁷ Twenty days after he made these remarks in a newspaper interview, Summers was questioned by the police. He did not mention the above incident and described Tsafendas as “a quite normal, innocent type ... I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally unbalanced. He acted quite normal.”³⁰⁸⁸ The Pretoria News came closest to providing a reasonably accurate description of Tsafendas’s life with a report from its Durban correspondent who had met Tsafendas. He said Dr. Verwoerd’s assailant had travelled widely, spoke many languages, was a former seaman and had been a casual interpreter at Durban law courts.³⁰⁸⁹

Greeks throughout South Africa and in Mozambique, too, sought hastily to distance themselves from Tsafendas. Some people who had never met Tsafendas before and knew nothing about him claimed that he was insane or that he was not Greek.³⁰⁹⁰ Georgios Manidis, President of the Greek Community in Bloemfontein and supporter of apartheid, said Tsafendas “must be insane. He does not represent the feelings of the Greeks of South Africa. Most of the Greeks in South Africa are supporters of Dr. Verwoerd.”³⁰⁹¹

In Mozambique, some Greeks described him as “a strange man who could easily have been mentally unbalanced,” and expressed astonishment that a person of his “mental calibre and background” was able to get a job at the Parliament.³⁰⁹² As we will see, none of the Mozambique Greeks who described Tsafendas as “a strange man ...” testified to the police. The senior South African police officer, Col. van Wyk, was in Mozambique at the time seeking out people who knew Tsafendas, and he did not report any such contacts or claims. The belief generally held by Greek expatriates was that to kill the prime minister, Tsafendas “must” or “could” have been unbalanced. It is a stance that remained unchanged over the years. When the author interviewed several Greeks in Mozambique in 2015, some said that “Tsafendas must have been insane,” although they did not know him. Their reasons? Dr. Verwoerd had done nothing to Tsafendas so Tsafendas must have been crazy to kill him; a normal person would not kill such a popular and “good” Prime Minister; Tsafendas was a ³⁰⁸⁷ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas seen as a bitter, withdrawn man.’

³⁰⁸⁸ Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁰⁸⁹ Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dimitrio a Red, they alleged.’

³⁰⁹⁰ Eleftherotipia, 4 July 2010, ‘Οι έλληνες φίλοι του απαρτχάιντ.’

³⁰⁹¹ Kathimerini, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Θλίψις εις την Ελληνικήν παροικίαν του Γιοχάνεσμπουργκ.’

³⁰⁹² Pretoria News, 7 September 1966: 1, ‘Dimitrio a Red, they alleged.’

Communist going around saying things against the Portuguese, so he could not have been normal; he had no reason to kill Dr. Verwoerd - if he was Black it would have been different.

Most Greeks at the time, including government officials, sought to distance themselves from Tsafendas so as to protect their communities and to demonstrate their loyalty to state authorities, either the apartheid regime in South Africa or the Portuguese colonialists. There was often a racist undertone, too. Some Greeks interviewed by the author said they did not consider Tsafendas to be Greek because he was born in Mozambique and his mother was Mozambican. One said, “How could someone with a Black mother be Greek?” None of these Mozambique Greeks was ever interviewed by the police because they had never met nor even seen Tsafendas. That is hardly surprising. Between 1939, when he left Mozambique as a twenty-year-old for South Africa, and the assassination in 1966, Tsafendas spent only eleven months in Mozambique: three months in 1951, two months in 1963 and six months, three of them in prison, in 1964/65.

The Greeks of South Africa, who were likewise unacquainted with Tsafendas, considered that he “must have been crazy” because he killed Dr. Verwoerd, who was a “wonderful man,” a “great man,” and a man “loved by both Blacks and Whites.” The willingness of people to talk about someone they do not know is well-known to journalists looking for on-camera comments. Interviewees often claim knowledge of a person in the news when the only thing they have in common is that they are of the same nationality or live in the same neighbourhood.

When news of the assassination broke, journalists flocked to the home of George Michaletos, Tsafendas’s uncle, in Lourenço Marques, but none of the family spoke to them.³⁰⁹³ Ira Kyriakakis, Tsafendas’s childhood friend in Lourenço Marques, was also sought out for interview but refused.³⁰⁹⁴ As did Costas Poriazis, Nick Papadakis and Andreas Babiolakis in Beira.³⁰⁹⁵ Elsewhere it was different. Not only were Greeks in Mozambique and South Africa keen to declare Tsafendas a non-Greek and probably a lunatic, so at least was one Greek in Greece itself.

The following incident is a perfect example of the attitude of most of the Greeks. The Athens newspaper To Vima of September 9, 1966 published an article headlined, “Dr.

³⁰⁹³ John and Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁰⁹⁴ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³⁰⁹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

Verwoerd's assassin was unstable since he was child, says an Athenian who met him." The newspaper declared, "The assassin of South Africa's Prime Minister, Hendrik Verwoerd, must be unstable. He is not Greek. He is the illegitimate son of a Greek from Egypt, M. Tsafendas, and of a mixed-race woman, Amelia Williams."³⁰⁹⁶

The article was based on an interview with a certain Mr. Charitakis, who said that he met Tsafendas when he was on holiday in Lourenço Marques and Tsafendas was thirteen years old. He said, "I don't know his past well. I only happened to meet him by chance when we were in Lourenço Marques." Charitakis added, "Generally, he was a strange guy with strange behaviour...we did not hang around together much because my holidays finished and I left Lourenço Marques." He also claimed that Tsafendas told him that he had been sick and admitted to a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. Referring to the assassination, Charitakis said, "I believe he must have been crazy in order to reach this point and do such a thing. Dr. Verwoerd was very much loved by everyone and was keeping the prestige of the white race in the Dark Continent."³⁰⁹⁷

Like all the other Greeks, Charitakis uses the words "must have been crazy," deducing this from the fact that Tsafendas killed the much-loved Dr. Verwoerd, that he was a strange boy when he was thirteen and that he had been in a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. In fact, according to police records, his family's statements to the police and the Commission of Enquiry, his medical records and people interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas when he was a child, he was never admitted to a psychiatric hospital in Pretoria. Indeed, he had never been to Pretoria during the first thirteen years of his life. Again, like his fellow Greeks, Charitakis assumed that Dr. Verwoerd was loved by everyone and concluded that to kill him must be an act of insanity.

How reliable as a witness was Charitakis, a man who briefly met a thirteen-year-old boy thirty-five years earlier? Certainly such testimony would never have been brought to court but was obviously good enough for a newspaper desperately seeking local angles on an event of international significance. The key factor emerging from this interview, however, is not so much the reliability of the witness as his personal opinion – that Tsafendas "must have been crazy" to kill a man "loved by everyone," who was "holding up the prestige of the white race in the Dark Continent."

³⁰⁹⁶ To Vima, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Από παιδί ήταν ανισόρροπος ο δολοφόνος του Φερβέρντ.'

³⁰⁹⁷ To Vima, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Από παιδί ήταν ανισόρροπος ο δολοφόνος του Φερβέρντ.'

THURSDAY, 8 SEPTEMBER 1966

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN LISBON

At 08.40 on the morning of September 8, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received a secret telegram from the South African embassy in Lisbon, written and sent from there the previous evening at 7.23 p.m. It said that according to “a very reliable local source,” Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances, including shouting pro-Communist anti-Portuguese slogans,” but that he had “never been convicted as courts have found him to be of unsound mind.” The telegram concluded with the following sentence: “If information correct, we suspect Portuguese may play down assassin’s previous political activities and we would suggest full details in this connection be sought.”³⁰⁹⁸

This telegram contained two important pieces of information: the fact that Tsafendas had a criminal record and that he had been arrested several times. Both were correct. Tsafendas was arrested three times while in Mozambique and twice while in Portugal for political reasons. PIDE indeed had a file on him (n° 10.415) since he was “suspected of distributing Communist propaganda” in 1938.³⁰⁹⁹ As we will see, even though the embassy in Lisbon warned the South African authorities through this telegram about the Portuguese authorities’ likely reaction, the South African police did not investigate Tsafendas’s political past, but accepted what was given to them by the Portuguese.

PIDE’S INVOLVEMENT

More importantly, the embassy’s telegram could not have predicted the Portuguese reaction more accurately. That same day, the Chief Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon sent a top-secret telegram to the Sub-Director of PIDE in the “Overseas Province of Mozambique,” instructing him that any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of your country should not be transmitted to the South African authorities, despite the relations that ³⁰⁹⁸ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 07 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁰⁹⁹ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. 25 August 1951. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

exist between your delegation and the South African Police” (informo ainda V.Ex^a. que às autoridades da Africa do Sul, mesmo ao nível das relações directas entre essa Delegação e a Polícia Sul-Africana, não devem ser dadas informações que indiquem o TSAFENDAS como partidário da independência dessa Província).³¹⁰⁰

To ensure that there would be no mistakes concerning the information given to the South African police, PIDE in Lisbon compiled a report on Tsafendas, and it was sent to the Sub-Director of PIDE in Mozambique along with the above communication. The report was to be given to the South African authorities and it had downplayed and even omitted several of Tsafendas’s political activities. This report is as follows, translated into Afrikaans by the South African police:

DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS or DEMETRIO TSAFANDAKIS -

Illegitimate child of Michel Tsafendas, of Greek nationality, and Amelia William, of mixed race, Portuguese, maritime salesman and interpreter. Born in Lourenço Marques on 19th January, 1918. Left at school-going age for South Africa to study and afterwards returned to Mozambique to start work. While residing in that Province, he was twice a suspect of communist activities, but evidence of such activities was never found.

On arrival in Portugal on 8th November, 1949, he was detained at the post of Barca d’Alva, due to insufficient documentation. There were doubts as to whether he was Portuguese. The documentation which was seized made it clear that he had been expelled from the United States of America by the Immigration Authorities and sent to Greece. The investigations made concluded that he was entitled to Portuguese nationality, but as he had not performed his military service, he was handed over to the Military Government in Lisbon, on the 6th of February, 1950, as a deserter.

In December 1951 he boarded on a ship to Mozambique, but due to his past, he was not allowed to reside in that Province, having to go back to the Metropolis. In 1952 he tried to leave the country in possession of a Greek “Laissez-Passer” nationality, which he also had a right to, but was detained for investigation. During the interrogations he gave signs of mental disability, which was confirmed by the Hospital do Ultramar. On 23rd April, 1953, he was handed over to the 'Albergue da Mitra' in Lisbon, where he left in August of the same year. It appears that during the political disturbances in Lisbon, and while he was at the Institute, he would gather around him several other 'guests' of the hostel.

³¹⁰⁰ Top Secret letter of the head Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the Subdirector of PIDE in Mozambique regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

In the 16 of November 1964, he was brought to the Substation of this Police in de city of Beira, by the P.S.P [Public Security Police], being accused of spreading subversive propaganda amongst the native masses. Specifically, and amongst other phrases, he was accused of the following phrase: "This country is not called Portugal, it is called the United States of Mozambique. We already have money, what we need is to not make the mistake of saying we are Portuguese. No. We are Africans. I do not like the Portuguese Flag." Under interrogation, he confessed to the accusation, having plead that when he said these and other sentences, he was in a hotel bar in Gondola, with other nationals of the black race, having had a little too much to drink and in a state of exaltation. He added, though, that his words are the product of his ideals regarding the independence of Mozambique, a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they white or black, and therefore separated from the Mother-nation. TSAFENDAS described a history which was his life, an authentic adventurous romance, travelling through several countries of the world. He denied being part of any subversive organization or party that would be working towards the independence of Mozambique, as well as having developed any subversive activities against the security of the State, although he is a partisan of the independence of this province. Although, as above mentioned, TSAFENDAS is mentally deficient, the truth is you find in him an obvious spirit of rebellion against the Portuguese Administration, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique.

His criminal and police records have nothing against him. However, and as already noted, TSAFENDAS had already annotations in his Police Registration Certificate, as he himself confessed. Analyzing his declarations, and taking into account that he was mentally ill – and therefore not imputable in the juridical system – his case was archived and he was freed, since he was not considered dangerous.

This is what, in sum, is known about DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS.

7/9/66 xxx³¹⁰¹

³¹⁰¹ Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

COMMENTS ON PIDE'S ROLE

As we see from this report, the PIDE in Lisbon downplayed some of Tsafendas's political activities while completely omitting others. More importantly, PIDE provided information that was of no great importance or was already known to the South Africans, without offering them anything fresh or significant. For example, that Tsafendas was suspected of Communist activities while living in Mozambique had been known to the South Africans since June 29, 1937. The information was contained in a letter from the South African Consul General in Mozambique in response to a request from the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Johannesburg.³¹⁰²

While some of Tsafendas's arrests are mentioned, others are omitted and the specific reasons for his arrests are not given. His arrest in Gondola in 1964 by the Portuguese Police was an incident which was well known to many in Mozambique while it had already even appeared in the South African press and so could not have been concealed. However, the incident is downplayed and important details are not mentioned. These included the fact that he had anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist and Communist literature in his suitcase and that he was subsequently accused of preaching "under the guise of religion in favour of Mozambique's independence."³¹⁰³

On the other hand, the report states that even though Tsafendas was mentally deficient, "the truth is you find in him an obvious spirit of rebellion against the Portuguese Administration, and a clear adhesion to the independence of Mozambique." This is presumably included because PIDE knew that it would be extremely easy for the South African police to find out about it by talking to people who knew Tsafendas, since most of the Greeks were well aware of his political beliefs and arrests and that he was widely known among their community as "The Red." The following points include the omitted material:

- First and most important, the report lied that Tsafendas's "criminal and police records have nothing against him." In reality, PIDE had a detailed file of 130 pages on Tsafendas ³¹⁰² Report of the COE. Chapter II A, Paragraph 16. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³¹⁰³ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriazis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

entitled Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis.³¹⁰⁴ The file contained details of his political and other activities since 1938 when he was first “suspected of distributing Communist propaganda.”³¹⁰⁵ The file shows Tsafendas as a passionate supporter of independence for Mozambique.

- Absent are the reasons he was denied entry to Mozambique in October 1951 and his subsequent imprisonment for two weeks when he was interrogated regarding his past “unclear activities.”³¹⁰⁶ The report simply says “owing to his past,” but gives no details. According to another PIDE report³¹⁰⁷ and the statement by Greece’s honorary Consul in Lourenço Marques, Antony Maw,³¹⁰⁸ this was due to his suspected Communist tendencies and the suspicion that he was involved in subversive activities.
- Tsafendas’s arrest in Lisbon in January 1952,³¹⁰⁹ immediately after his arrival from Mozambique, is omitted. Presumably this is because of the reason behind his arrest; that the Portuguese Police in Lisbon had been informed by PIDE in Lourenço Marques about his political activities in Mozambique in the 1930s and wanted to question him about them.³¹¹⁰
- No reference is made to the fact that Tsafendas was banned from entering and residing in Mozambique and was forced to live in exile from 1951 to 1963.³¹¹¹ In this way, the fact that the ban was on account of his political ideas and activities was concealed.
- The fact that he was only given amnesty to return to Mozambique in 1963.³¹¹²

³¹⁰⁴ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. 25 August 1951. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁰⁵ Confidential Report of the Police Body of the Province of Mozambique regarding Demetrio Tsafendas. No: 726/694/PI, 3 May 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁰⁶ PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; John Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³¹⁰⁷ PIDE Confidential Report about Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁰⁸ Antony Maw statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³¹⁰⁹ PIDE report regarding Demetri Tsafendas to the Minister of Interior. 07 June 1955. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; PIDE Record of questions. 25 November 1964. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹¹⁰ PIDE Report regarding Tsafendas, 5 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹¹¹ Confidential Letter of the Director of PIDE to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, no: 2.077- S.R., 03 May 1961. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas’s exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹¹² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

- The fact that Tsafendas made several applications to be allowed to return to Mozambique and they were all turned down, each time after PIDE supplied the Ministry of Interior with information regarding his “political and professional activities.”³¹¹³
- The fact that he remained in prison for ninety-three days following his last arrest by the Public Security Police.³¹¹⁴
- The fact that he was arrested a second time by the Portuguese Police while in Beira in February 1965.³¹¹⁵ The South African, Portuguese and the international media were aware of the arrest and had referred to two arrests of Tsafendas while in Mozambique and not one.³¹¹⁶
- The fact that each time he was arrested by the Portuguese police, “during his interrogations he gave signs of having some sort of mental disability.”³¹¹⁷

CONCLUSION REGARDING PIDE’S ROLE

We can only speculate as to why the Portuguese authorities wanted to conceal information pointing to Tsafendas “as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique,” but the likeliest reason is that he was a Portuguese citizen. It would have looked bad for Portugal if the Prime Minister of a friendly country was murdered by a Portuguese national who was known to the security authorities for his long history of revolutionary and subversive activities. It would appear significantly less damaging if the assassin were labelled as a psychopath rather than a political revolutionary. Because he was known to be a revolutionary and a Communist who had often been arrested, many people would have wondered how such a man was allowed by ³¹¹³ Letter of the Directorate-General of the Political and Civil Administration of the Overseas Ministry to the Director of the International and State Defence Police. 07/04/1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹¹⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³¹¹⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Costas Poriadis in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³¹¹⁶ The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’’; The Herald (Melbourne), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘The killer: Five passports and a record of subversion’; The Rhodesia Herald, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassin said to have been deported from P.E.A. for Communist connections.’ The Star, 10 September 1966: 3, ‘Assassin had five passports.’

³¹¹⁷ PIDE Confidential Report, 3.282.-S.R, regarding Demitrios Tsafandakis sent to the Chief of Staff of the Interior Minister, 9 May 1956. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

the Portuguese to walk free. Even worse, that someone with a 130-page police dossier and known for his anti-Portuguese and Communist beliefs, managed to walk free in Mozambique.

TSAFENDAS'S HEARING

At 2.15 pm on Thursday, September 8, 1966, Tsafendas was brought before Cape Town's Chief Magistrate, Mr. C. Willman, in a room at the police station in Caledon Square, where he was being held. A high-ranking official said, "This was done in the interests of the accused. We did not want a repetition of what happened between Lee Harvey Oswald and Jack Ruby in Texas."³¹¹⁸

Mr. H.C.F. Jacobs, Senior Public Prosecutor, asked that Tsafendas be remanded in custody until October 6. A certificate from Cape Attorney General Willem van den Berg was presented to the Chief Magistrate. It said in part that "I, Willem van den Berg, in the interests of public order, hereby order that Demetrio Tsafendas, who has been arrested on a charge of having committed murder, shall not be released on bail or otherwise before sentence has been passed or before he has been discharged, as the case may be." Mr Willman asked Tsafendas if he understood the application and Tsafendas replied "I understand, my lord." The magistrate then granted the application and ordered that Tsafendas be detained in the police cells in Cape Town.³¹¹⁹

Tsafendas wore a white, open-necked shirt and grey flannel trousers and answered his name firmly. The charge sheet described him as a male adult, aged forty-eight, a messenger, of Portuguese nationality. He gave the impression of considerable physical strength. He was not handcuffed. The hearing began exactly forty-eight hours after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination and lasted five minutes. Eight police officers were present, including Major D.J. Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town.³¹²⁰ The Commissioner of Police, Lt. Gen. J.M. Keevy, said Tsafendas might appear again in court before the October 6 remand date since the police investigation was expected to be completed in the next week or two.³¹²¹ He said the case might take the form of a preparatory examination, but there was also ³¹¹⁸ Daily Dispatch, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas in court'; The Globe and Mail, 9 September 1966: 4, 'Dr. Verwoerd's slayer appears for formal hearing in court.'

³¹¹⁹ Daily Dispatch, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas in court.'

³¹²⁰ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas: fear for life.'

³¹²¹ Daily Dispatch, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas in court'; The Star (Johannesburg), 9 September 1966: 3, 'Tsafendas remanded and questioned'; The Herald (Melbourne), 9 September 1966: 9, 'Don't Touch the Greeks.'

provision in the Criminal Procedure Act for a murder case to be heard summarily by the Supreme Court. Documents would be laid before the Attorney-General, who would decide.³¹²²

STATEMENTS

HENDRIK JOHANNES VAN LOGGENBERG³¹²³

White male, manager of “Baron’s Meubels” Pretorius Street 191, Pretoria.

The last time I saw Dimitrio Tsafendas known to me as Miemie, was about 2 to 3 years ago. I am well known among the Greek community. I know the accused’s stepmother Ant-Marika very well and also his other family in Pretoria. It was through his family members that I met the accused. I occasionally ate with the accused at his family. He also ate at my house.

The accused was work-shy for hard work and considered himself very worthy and learned, which he obviously was not. He constantly changed jobs as well as habitation. He was never satisfied. In accord with my observation taken, he was not welcome among his own people and they cast him out. The accused had a sombre appearance and was never upbeat. He constantly carried a Bible with him. I do not know what religion he belonged to. From the stories the accused told, he had to visit a lot of overseas countries. He mastered several languages. It was against the accused’s principle to use strong liquor. Accused definitely came across as normal and was an unmarried man. He also seemed healthy and did not smoke.

Pretoria 8.9.1966. Statement taken by me. (Indecipherable name). Commissioner of Oaths.

³¹²² Rand Daily Mail, 9 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas may reappear in court.’

³¹²³ Hendrik Johannes van Loggenberg statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

MAGDALENE WARLASS DOROTHEA SANDERS³¹²⁴

Coloured Female, 66 years old, 65 Wills Road, Durban.

Demitrio Tsafendas attended church services in my house on several occasions and also delivered his testimony on the verse or chapter he had read from the Bible. He gave me the impression he was a firm believer in God. I don't know where he was staying at the time. On one occasion, he arrived at my house with his suitcase and placed it in the pantry. I told him I had no accommodation and he had to go elsewhere. He had one meal here. Whenever he arrived for church service, he had his Bible with him ... First time saw him was about two years ago and the last time was when he had injured his arm. His hand was bandaged. I don't remember which one. He never discussed politics.

PAUL STEFANUS VAN DEN MERWE³¹²⁵

603 Portman Place, Fir Ave, Sea point and Welgeluk, Otjiwarongo, S.W.A.

I am an adult white man and a Member of Parliament for Midlands. I am a member of the National Party in the Assembly and hold a seat behind the Prime Minister. My seat is two steps behind that of the Prime Minister.

On Tuesday, 06/09/66, I entered the Assembly Hall at approximately 2:17 pm according to the Council's watch. (Official time 2:12 pm.).

I entered the hall through the main door. I was still on my way to my seat when I saw the deceased at his seat. He had just arrived at his seat and was about to sit down. There were other council members who were still on the way to their seats.

I walked past the late Dr. Verwoerd and sat in my seat. I noticed that I did not have a notebook and got up and went to the Speaker's table to fetch a book. To get to the Speaker's table I have to pass on the left-hand side of the late Dr. Verwoerd.

³¹²⁴ Magdalene Warlass Dorothea Sanders statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹²⁵ Paul Stefanus van der Merwe statement to the police, 8 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

On the way back to my seat, I decided to discuss something with Dr. Verwoerd. I stood on the left-hand side of Dr. Verwoerd. At that time he was looking in the direction of the Opposition, i.e. right in front of him. I bowed to talk to him.

Before I could say a word, I noticed that a messenger whom I later had identified as the accused Dimetrio Tsafendas, cast himself halfway across Dr. Verwoerd's seat on top of him. I noticed that his right hand rested on Dr. Verwoerd's left breast. Tsafendas remained in that position for a portion of a second. When he lifted his right hand from Dr. Verwoerd's chest, I saw a dagger of about 8 inches in his hand. Only then did I realize that he stabbed Dr. Verwoerd with the dagger.

From where I stood on the left side of Dr. Verwoerd's table/seat, I immediately tried to fend off the assailant, but he was too far away from me and before I could get around the seat, he had given different blows to Dr. Verwoerd's body with the dagger.

Other members of the Assembly, had at this stage grabbed the assailant from behind and removed him from the hall.

Cape Town

8/9/66. 2.50 p.m.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) A.J. van Dyk. Captain.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Forty-eight hours after the assassination, South African newspapers front-paged plans for Dr. Verwoerd's funeral on September 10, carried speculation about his successor and probed further into the life and character of his assassin. They also published further messages, mostly of shock and condolence, from world and local leaders.³¹²⁶

The evening edition of The Cape Argus, reported that Tsafendas appeared that afternoon before Cape Town Chief Magistrate Mr C. Willman in an office in the Caledon Square police station in connection with the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. He was remanded in custody until October 6.³¹²⁷ Newspapers carried the first photograph of Tsafendas, apparently a file shot, showing him in shirt and tie, smiling slightly. The Rand Daily Mail headlined the photograph “Face of the Assassin,”³¹²⁸ and in another article, Dr. Samuel Schmahmann, a former schoolmate at Middleburg, recalled Dimitri as being “not very bright at school,” but “a popular boy and not the least introverted.” He said, “I particularly remember him singing a Greek song at a school concert. He was very funny and had us all in stitches.”³¹²⁹

³¹²⁶ See 'Assassination Reaction' Chapter Four.

George Sakellaridis, editor and owner of Acropolis, a Greek newspaper in South Africa, was a passionate supporter of apartheid and such an admirer of Dr. Verwoerd that he hung his portrait on his office wall.³¹³⁰ Sakellaridis published a eulogy for the slain Prime Minister which outdid all other encomiums in its unctuous adoration. It praised him as “perhaps the greatest son of the South African nation ... a philosopher, an intellectual, a true Christian, a philanthropist, a visionary ... a holy symbol of Christian civilisation and of real patriotism ... who turned South Africa into the only bastion of Christianity in an atheist, godless continent and the only hope of the free people of the continent against the cancer of Communism.” Sakellaridis characterised Dr. Verwoerd as a modern “Prometheus Unbound,” who had been misunderstood, slandered and wrongfully accused by the unfair and irresponsible international community which was unaware of everything he had done for Black South Africans.³¹³¹

Although Sakellaridis had never met Tsafendas, he told a negative story about him which was picked up and published by most of the South African media. He claimed that he had made inquiries among some Greeks in South Africa, and discovered that when he was a child Tsafendas was called “Blackie,” causing him to have “an inferiority complex.”³¹³² Both claims were untrue but no-one questioned them and the story became widely accepted as fact. Even today, half a century later, the story persists in some quarters. However, those people who grew up with Tsafendas are adamant that he was never called “Blackie,” that he was not black anyway and showed no signs of having an inferiority complex.³¹³³

³¹²⁷ The Cape Argus, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas appears in court.’

³¹²⁸ Rand Daily Mail, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Face of the assassin.’

³¹²⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘Boyhood days of Tsafendas.’

³¹³⁰ Mary Vasilakou in a personal interview, 25 March 2015.

³¹³¹ Acropolis, 17 September 1966: 1, ‘Ολόκληρον το Νοτιοαφρικόν Έθνος εκήδευσε τον πρωθυπουργό του.’

³¹³² Rand Daily Mail, 8 September 1966: 2, ‘Boyhood days of Tsafendas’; Natal Mercury, 8 September 1966: 5, ‘The face of Demitri Tsafendas.’

³¹³³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

William Mare Volbrecht, a psychologist and Tsafendas's schoolmate in Middleburg, testified to the police that "at that stage, Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. I cannot remember whether he was ever guilty of misconduct; he was never a loner and mingled freely with us."³¹³⁴ According to his step-mother's testimony to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death, Tsafendas "association with other children at this stage, however, was good." His half-sister, Katerina Pnefma, described him as a boy to the author as such: "He was very white, peculiar as it is, as white as all the family. But he had different hair. But it wasn't so much like the Blacks; it was like the Coloureds. But he did not look Black at all, he was as white as me."³¹³⁵ Furthermore, according to his cousin Mary Eendracht, Andreas Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Helen Grispos, who all grew up with him, Tsafendas was never called "Blackie." They said his skin colour was white and it was not possible to tell he was of mixed race. Photos of Tsafendas as a schoolboy and in later life confirm this. A man cannot be very dark as a child but become whiter with the passage of time. In fact, none of the children, including Helen Grispos's husband George, who was one of Tsafendas's best friends and classmate, knew at the time that Tsafendas was of mixed racial origin; their parents knew, but not the children.³¹³⁶

Katerina Pnefma told the police shortly after the assassination, that growing up with Tsafendas "to all intents and purposes it was understood" by her and her siblings that "he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European."³¹³⁷ As for bullying, none of these witnesses ever remembered anyone bullying or mocking Tsafendas for his colour. Tsafendas was much bigger and stronger than most of the boys of his age and given his outspoken and aggressive character, it would not have been easy for someone to intimidate him.³¹³⁸

³¹³⁴ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Verklaring deur Majoor Venter. NASA.

³¹³⁵ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³¹³⁶ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³¹³⁷ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³¹³⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 June 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

Sakellaridis also claimed that Tsafendas's family had disowned him.³¹³⁹ This, too, was false, but also came to be widely believed. What is true is that his family sought to distance themselves from him after the assassination, but up to then he was an accepted family member. His step-mother, his brother-in-law, his half-brother and his half-brother's wife had all travelled by car from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques three years earlier to meet him and take him back to South Africa even though they were aware that he was banned from entering the country. His family bribed J.J. van den Berg, the passport officer at South Africa's Consulate in Lourenço Marques, to ignore the fact that Tsafendas was on the South African Stop List and to issue him with a visa. It was his family who then gave him a job in a family business and a rent-free apartment in Pretoria for eight months upon his return to South Africa. These are hardly the things a family would do for someone it has disowned.

Another story current at the time concerned a comment attributed to Tsafendas – that “the government worried too much about the Black population and did nothing to help the poor whites.” He was said to have made this remark while working in Parliament, although none of his fellow messengers recalled him making such a statement when they were questioned by the police. If he had told them something of the sort they would have probably mentioned it. The story was started by the Parliamentary correspondent of Die Vaderland newspaper, the National Party's mouthpiece. He said that Tsafendas complained frequently that the Government did more for Blacks than for Whites.³¹⁴⁰ It is perfectly possible that Tsafendas made such a comment, knowing he was talking to a reporter for a pro-Government newspaper, perhaps to distract any suspicions from his own political sentiments, or perhaps simply from sarcasm. Several people who knew him very well testified to the author that Tsafendas was often sarcastic.³¹⁴¹ The author asked forty-four people who were acquainted with Tsafendas, including some who knew him very well, and all denied that Tsafendas could have made such comments. If he did, they said, he could not have meant them.

Examining Tsafendas's assault upon Dr. Verwoerd, the Pretoria News said Tsafendas carried three knives, and published a photograph of a blade it said was similar to the one used against the prime minister.³¹⁴² The newspaper also said Tsafendas told an

³¹³⁹ Rand Daily Mail, 8 September 1966: 2, 'Boyhood days of Tsafendas.'

³¹⁴⁰ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, 'O assassinio do primeiro-ministro Sul-Africano.'

³¹⁴¹ For example Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015 and many others.

³¹⁴² Pretoria News, 8 September 1966: 1, 'He carried three knives.'

acquaintance that he could not leave Cape Town because he “had a job to finish here first.” The remark came in a conversation with two men who also stayed at his lodging house during a discussion about leaving to work in South West Africa.³¹⁴³ The same newspaper also raised the question of Parliamentary security: “Was he properly screened at Parliament?” And how, as a temporary messenger, was he able to enter the Chamber and make the attack without security officers preventing him?³¹⁴⁴

The Daily Dispatch said Tsafendas took advantage of the Sergeant-at-Arms’ absence from the lobby for duties connected with the Speaker’s procession to slip into the Chamber.³¹⁴⁵ The Cape Times also carried a facsimile of his signature, apparently from a job application form. The same newspaper, in another article published a description of Tsafendas’s bedroom as he left it in his Rustenburg Avenue lodgings on the morning he set out to kill Dr. Verwoerd. A reporter who was allowed to see the room under security guard described Tsafendas’s quarters as untidy and grimy, with an unmade bed and personal effects strewn across the floor; on the dressing table were a hammer, a file, a pair of socks, polish, shoe brushes, cutlery, a hair brush and an Oxford English Dictionary.³¹⁴⁶ However, this was after the police had searched the room and the likelihood is that it was their search which left it in that condition.

The Daily Dispatch, The Daily News and the major Portuguese newspaper, O Primeiro de Janeiro, published a news report from Frankfurt containing interviews with some of Tsafendas’s colleagues. In these reports Tsafendas was described “as extremely nice and friendly by people who met him.” Mr Horst Hartmann, senior personnel officer at the heavy engineering company Fries & Son, where Tsafendas worked as a welder, said, “Yes, sure, I remember him. He drove up here in a big, battered American car. I thought he was more likely to apply for an executive job than as a welder. Well-dressed and well-mannered, he was extremely courteous, a very pleasant man...he made a good impression and he spoke good German, so I took him on. He left of his own accord. We would have liked to keep him.”³¹⁴⁷

³¹⁴³ Pretoria News, 8 September 1966, ‘Said he ‘had a job to do’.’

³¹⁴⁴ Pretoria News, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘What screening did Tsafendas have.’

³¹⁴⁵ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassination a one man’s job – says Vorster.’

³¹⁴⁶ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, ‘Untidiness, grim in his bedroom.’

³¹⁴⁷ Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘He made a good impression’; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

Although he was with Fries & Son for only six weeks, Tsafendas made a lasting impression on Guenter Haafe, the factory doorman, who eight years later still remembered the jovial greeting Tsafendas gave him every morning. “He was a jolly man, always smiling and friendly. He would almost always come into my locker room to say hello. He was really one of the friendliest workers I have met, and trust me, in my twelve years as a doorman, I have seen thousands and thousands of faces coming in and out. This man was courteous, they do not make them like that anymore.”³¹⁴⁸ Three other colleagues in the same job said about Tsafendas that “He was a nice guy,” “He was a good comrade” and “He left me with a good impression.”³¹⁴⁹

The Cape Times, the Daily Dispatch and The Daily News also revealed that Tsafendas was a schoolteacher in Turkey, that he had “taught the phonetics of elementary English” at an Istanbul college five years ago.³¹⁵⁰ Although this was a significant pointer to Tsafendas’s abilities, it would not be mentioned again, not even during Tsafendas’s summary trial. The Sun of Vancouver, Canada, front-paged a different, unsmiling, photograph of Tsafendas, alongside a Cape Town-dated dispatch from the Associated Press, which said, “There are reports he was anti-Nazi, anti-fascist, anti-everything.”³¹⁵¹ The Chronicle of Bulawayo, Rhodesia, spelling his name “Stafendas,” said Tsafendas was “a mystery man who had few friends.” It repeated fragments of information which were becoming current, including his origins in Lourenço Marques, deportation from Mozambique due to his Communist tendencies, time in the Merchant Navy, reactions in Frankfurt and the remarks of his former landlady, Mrs. Theyser.³¹⁵²

The Daily News, The Herald of Melbourne, Australia, the Rhodesia Herald and the Herald African News Service reported that Tsafendas was picked up in Mozambique holding five passports and was questioned about his “suspicious activities” in an area on the Malawi-Mozambique border where unrest had developed among the Africans. The reports said that while he was in Mozambique, Tsafendas was arrested twice for subversive activities and that after the Second World War he was deported because of “Communist activities.” They said

³¹⁴⁸ The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man’; O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

³¹⁴⁹ O Primeiro de Janeiro, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas trabalhou como soldador em Frankforte.’

³¹⁵⁰ The Cape Times, 8 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas taught Turks English’; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas taught English in Turkey’; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, ‘Tsafendas seen as ‘mystery man.’

³¹⁵¹ The Sun (Vancouver) of September 8, 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd assassin painted as anti-everything loner.’

³¹⁵² The Chronicle (Bulawayo), 8 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas: Mystery man of parliament.’

the South African police were investigating how he got a job as a messenger in Parliament.³¹⁵³ All of this information was correct, including the five passports. However, it seems there was nothing sinister about the passports, as no mention of them is made by PIDE who arrested Tsafendas on this occasion. They could easily have been Tsafendas's old passports that he had kept. If they were forgeries or there was something suspicious about them, this would almost certainly have been stated by PIDE in its reports.

The French national news agency, Agence France-Presse, quoted workers at the Julio de Matos Psychiatric Hospital as saying that Tsafendas appeared for a medical appointment there on March 2, 1962, but never returned after that first appointment. The story said that people in touch with him on that occasion described him as "a reserved man who didn't want his past to be mentioned."³¹⁵⁴ The "people in touch with him" must have had exceptional memories to remember, four and a half years later, a man they met once in their lives, while their work required them to see tens, perhaps scores, of people every day. It is possible that Tsafendas made such a big impression on them that they did remember him. However, they still did not say anything regarding his mental state.

VORSTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

The main news story of September 8 was Justice Minister John Vorster's statement from the previous night that present information indicated that the assassination was the work of one individual.³¹⁵⁵ Ten years later, Vorster revealed that General H.J. van den Bergh had questioned Tsafendas for forty-eight hours, adding that "if a man does not break after forty-eight hours of van den Bergh's questioning, then you know that he does not know a thing."³¹⁵⁶ Van den Bergh himself declared that "no person in South African history has ever been interrogated as much as Tsafendas."³¹⁵⁷ Given that the South African Police at the time were notorious for their use of torture during interrogation, we can conjecture with a high

³¹⁵³ Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, 'Tsafendas seen as 'mystery man''; The Herald (Melbourne), 8 September 1966: 1, 'The killer: Five passports and a record of subversion'; The Rhodesia Herald, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin said to have been deported from P.E.A. for Communist connections.'

³¹⁵⁴ Agence France-Presse, NOTIC DSR 16, 8 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³¹⁵⁵ The New York Times, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Plot is doubted by South Africa'; Daily Dispatch, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Assassination a one man's job says Vorster'; The Australian, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd's assassin acted alone, Police say.'

³¹⁵⁶ D' Oliveira, 1977: 180.

³¹⁵⁷ Pike, 1985: 461; Winter (The Citizen), 20 October 1976: 1, 'Why I killed Verwoerd.' ???

degree of certainty what must have been done to Tsafendas during his interrogation. Vorster's statement regarding van den Bergh's efficiency during interrogation can safely be interrupted as an allusion to torture by van den Bergh and his men.

After van den Bergh completed his questioning of Tsafendas, he informed Vorster that this was a one-man job and that Tsafendas was not responsible for his actions ...³¹⁵⁸ However, this latter conclusion is flatly contradicted by the investigation itself. Firstly, if Tsafendas told van den Bergh what he told the police in the two subsequent statements (which is obviously the most likely scenario), then there was no sign of insanity in Tsafendas's words. According to Terry Bell, Jan-Ake Kjellberg, Liza Key and David Beresford, who saw the transcript of the first interrogation, there was no sign of insanity and Tsafendas, as he did in his next two statements, gave political reasons for the assassination.

Furthermore, according to Michalis Michelis, the Greek journalist who interviewed a South African policeman who was present while Tsafendas was in custody after the assassination, none of the policemen who interacted with Tsafendas at this time believed that he was insane. Importantly, none of the witnesses who had testified so far claimed that Tsafendas was insane or that there was something wrong with him. On the contrary, everyone, along with the report of the South African Embassy in Portugal, was talking about a man with strong political convictions; a Communist. Therefore, even though the evidence suggested that Tsafendas was perfectly sane, a Communist and passionate about politics, van den Bergh ignored this and declared him to be insane. It is worth asking why, if Tsafendas was insane or van den Bergh really believed he was insane, he did he not ask a psychiatrist to examine him while he was in custody. Finally, why did it take twenty days for lawyers to be appointed to defend Tsafendas if he was insane?

³¹⁵⁸ D' Oliveira, 1977: 180.

FRIDAY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1966

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON

At 9.00 am on September 9, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Cape Town, received another secret telegram, this time from the South African embassy in Washington, DC. Written in telegraphic style, this stated that a “very reliable source with first-hand knowledge” informed them that the U.S. Immigration authorities had a file on Tsafendas, which had already been handed to Attorney-General Katzenbach with “suggestions it be made available” to the South African embassy in Washington, something the Attorney-General was “reluctant to do at this stage.”

The reason was that the State Department believed that “handing over information at this stage could have undesirable consequences at the Commonwealth Conference since file apparently reveals Tsafendas is quarter Negro or African.” Tsafendas’s file contained “full particulars” of his time in the United States. “He is understood to have shown under psychiatric treatment that he was unstable though not (not)³¹⁵⁹ insane, but type of man who would easily be used as instrument of Communist or hostile organizations. Impression of U.S. Immigration people at the time was that he had been manipulated and was under influence of someone or some organization. He was subsequently deported to Europe.”

The author of the telegram then suggests that his embassy should contact the U.S. authorities for any possible information on Tsafendas, given that they know he served in the U.S. merchant navy at one time, but without revealing knowledge of the above information. The telegram concludes that if the U.S. authorities “refuse or deny existence of material, it could be very embarrassing for U.S. if existence of material subsequently leaked out.”³¹⁶⁰ As we will see in the following chapter, this document, along with anything else which suggested that Tsafendas was not insane, would be ignored by the police, by the Commission of Enquiry and also during Tsafendas’s summary trial.

³¹⁵⁹ This is exactly how it appears in the telegram. There is a second ‘not’ within brackets.

³¹⁶⁰ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

SECRET TELEGRAM FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN EMBASSY IN LONDON

That same morning, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Cape Town received another secret telegram, this time from the South African embassy in London. It stated that Tsafendas arrived in England on May 16, 1959 and wanted to take a language test and be granted landing permission to be employed as a kitchen porter at a hotel. Both requests were refused. He then asked for permission to remain in the UK as a student, but this request was also refused and he was ordered to leave on September 2, 1959. On September 12, 1959 Tsafendas admitted himself to a mental ward claiming that he "had a fixation that he had a tapeworm." He left the hospital later in September - the exact day is not given - with the police looking for him since he was now in the country illegally. Tsafendas admitted himself to the Whitecroft Hospital in the Isle of Wight on October 4, 1959. On December 3, 1959, he was arrested at the hospital and deported to Germany.³¹⁶¹

MEMORANDUM OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN SALISBURY³¹⁶²

On this day, the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Salisbury, Rhodesia, sent its first report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas to the South African Police:

MEMORANDUM

XY6. 194/B/11/22.

Demitrio TSAFENDAS

1. The abovenamed, born in Lourenço Marques, Portuguese East Africa, on the 14th January, 1918, first entered Rhodesia at Bulawayo by train on the 19th July, 1964. He was travelling on Portuguese passports number 6511/63, issued in Lourenço Marques on the ³¹⁶¹ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³¹⁶² Memorandum of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Salisbury regarding Demitrio Tsafendas, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

2nd November 1963, and valid until the 2nd November, 1965. He gave his race as white, his marital status as single and his nationality as Portuguese.

2. Stating that his last permanent address was 600 Proclamation Hill Café, West End, Pretoria, he said that his occupations were Linguist, Translator, Interpreter and Maintenance Fitter. He was in possession of £50 and gave the purpose of his entry as a visit to his sister, Catherine HARALAMBOS, of Marandellas Store, Marandellas.

3. He was granted an Alien's Tourist Permit, valid to the 9th August, 1964, and it is noted that this permit is endorsed with a stamp indicating that he re-entered Rhodesia via Salisbury Airport on the 27th July, 1964, until this date and no indication as to the country from which he re-entered.

4. On the 11th August, 1964, following the expiry of his Alien's Tourist Permit, TSAFENDAS was requested to produce a return ticket to South Africa or to pay a deposit if he required an extension. At this stage he sought employment in Rhodesia from the Public Services Board, an official of which asked the Immigration Department if there was a vacancy to which, as a linguist, he could be appointed.

5. The Immigration authorities wrote to TSAFENDAS at the O.E. Bottle Store and Liquosetto, Efthyvoulos House, King George Road, Avondale, on the 19th August, 1964, informing him that his permit had expired and that he must immediately report to their offices. On the following day they informed the Public Services Board that TSAFENDAS was in the country illegally and could not be given employment in Rhodesia.

6. He reported to the Immigration offices on the 21st August, 1964, stating that he was without funds and was seeking employment. He was informed that, as he was not in possession of a Police Certificate, the Residence Permit for which he would have to apply before being permitted to work would take a minimum of four weeks to be completed, and that he could not be allowed to remain in the country during that period. He then stated that he had once been a missionary in Egypt and North Africa and belonged to a Christian community which was not a recognised denomination and had no church. From this community he had received the cost of a rail fare to Vila de Manica. He was then advised to leave Rhodesia on the following day, and he accordingly departed by train, crossing the border at Umtali on the 22nd August, 1964.

7. TSAFENDAS again entered Rhodesia at Umtali on the 9th October, 1964. He was not in possession of the required visa and was declared a prohibited immigrant in terms of Section 6 of the Immigration Act, 1954. On this occasion he gave his intended destination as Galanakis Grocery Store, Main Street, Umtali, his race as Greek and his nationality as Portuguese. His last permanent address was 600 Church Street, West End, Pretoria and he stated that he was employed as an Interpreter and Technician by the Companhia Do Pipeline Mocambique, on whose behalf he wished to enter on a business visit to the Hume Pipe Company. He was given a Temporary Permit for two weeks, but when the circumstances of his previous visit became known, the permit was withdrawn on the following day and he was instructed to leave Rhodesia forthwith. He accordingly departed from Umtali on the 10th October, 1964.

Special Branch Headquarters,

SALISBURY.

9th September, 1966.

STATEMENTS

FATHER HANNO PROBST³¹⁶³

Priest, white male, Manete, Dist. Mtuhzini. 5.45 pm.

Sometime during 1965 I cannot remember the month, I went to Mandini store. When I came out of the store, I saw a man sitting on a bench in front of the store and I noticed that one of his arms was bandaged. He looked a bit lost and I went up to him and asked him what had happened. He told me that he had been stabbed in the arm. I could see that he was not a South African, and I asked him whether he had come from Mozambique, he said "how do you know that" I told him that I could see. He started swearing at the Mozambique Government, and said that they had no sense and did nothing for the black people. I said to him, you are a Portuguese and you should love your Government and when you behave in that spirit, you are not liked in South Africa. I asked him how long he had been in Mozambique, he said that he was not there for long.

He told me that he could speak eight languages. I tried him with a few languages and I found that he spoke them all perfectly. He asked where I was born, I told him that I was born near Munich in Germany. He then started to talk in Munich dialect. I then tried him in Spanish, Italian, German tried a few words in Czech and he answered me in Czech. I asked him where he had learned all these languages, he told me that he was in Russia and that he had learned these languages in a training school in Russia.

³¹⁶³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He asked me to which church I belonged and I told him that I was a Roman Catholic Priest. He started to swear against the Roman Catholic Church and said that they should be done away with. I asked him why and he said that in Mozambique the Roman Catholic Sisters in the Hospitals Inject the Bantu people with something to get rid of them, and they died like flies and it is being done with the approval of the Mozambique Government. I told him that it was the same propaganda like in the Congo, against the sisters. I said to him you speak like a Semba of the Congo. I got annoyed with him and I warned him about his attitude, told him that he would not get very far in South Africa, I called him a communist and I left him.

NIKOLAAS JACOBUS NEL³¹⁶⁴

I am a 34 year old white male resident at the above address and working in Howden, James and Safanco, Booysens.

About the middle of 1964, I was still working at FA Poole Engineering Works, Carl Street, Pretoria West. The same time there was a man working with the name Dimitrio Tsafendas. He is the same person who is currently accused of killing Dr. Verwoerd. Accused was employed as a Fitter and Welder. While the accused and I were busy off-loading cranes from the truck on a certain day, we had quarrelled. He wanted to exercise authority, while I was in charge of the specific work and the Bantus who were helping us. During our argument the accused threatened that he would stab me with a knife. He had no knife with him nor did he bring one forth. Accused and I never spoke to each other again. Accused was certainly unpopular among white workers. Accused adapted more to the non-whites. He could speak several languages and seemed normal. Accused had a messy and dirty appearance. I do not know much more of him because I did not want to have anything to do with him after of our argument. Accused said he was of Greek descent. However I cannot say which nationality he was from.

³¹⁶⁴ Nikolaas Jacobus Nel statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

JAN BANIS³¹⁶⁵

White male, employed at Quix Snax, Cape Town.

I met him (Tsafendas) about three months ago, when he came to eat at 42 Chamberlain Street, Woodstock. He was a table boarder at this address. I saw him there on and off for about a month before I first had occasion to speak to him. I asked him where he was employed and he told me that he was looking for a job. He then told me his name. He told me that he had found a job in South West Africa, but before going there he was going to take a job in the House of Parliament for two months. He did not tell me why he wants a job in the House of Parliament.

GLADSTONE DUNN³¹⁶⁶

54 years old, Coloured Male, Good Hope Farm, Dist Mtunzini. 4.00 pm.

During May, 1965, a man came to my house. He introduced himself to me as Demitrio Tsafendas. He told me that he had just come from court, where he had charged another man with assault on himself, but that the other man was found not guilty. He told me that he was working for Fraser and Chalmers at Mandeni, that the assault took place in the messroom. He told me that before he had come to Mandeni, he had heard about me from E. Barbeau, 41 Botanic Avenue, Durban. Tsafendas spoke about religion, it then transpired that both of us belonged to the same Faith. I belong to Christs Church. During the conversation Tsafendas told me that the present Government was not playing fair with the non-whites. He said that the wages paid to non-whites was very unsatisfactory, as well as the political situation. When he said this to me, I asked him why he did not go back to the place where he had come from.

³¹⁶⁵ Jan Banis statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁶⁶ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He said that he could not get on there.

He also told me that from here he would be going to Cape Town where he will change his identity, he said that he would become a coloured. He told me that he had been to Germany, France, Portugal and South America. He said that while he was in Portugal he refused to join the army and was imprisoned and after his release he returned to Mozambique. He also told me that he could not get on with his family and that they did not want to have anything to do with him... He told me that he came to Durban where he got a job at the law courts as an interpreter, from there he went to the railways where he also worked. I cannot remember what he did on the railways. When he left the railways he came to Mandeni where he worked for Frazer and Chalmers. He slept the night at my house and the next morning I took him back to Mandeni.

ANTONIO TEIXEIRA DA SILVA³¹⁶⁷

Welder at F.A. Poole's Engineering Works, Pretoria

I started employment with, this firm during March 1964 and saw the accused Demetrio Tsafendas for the first time. He was also employed by this firm. I met him on the first day as I was working next to him in the shop. During the first two days of my employment I had a conversation with the accused and he made enquiries what I did whilst in Mozambique. I told him that I served in the Portuguese Army for three years.

He then enquired how life in the army was and what salary I got. He also asked me whether the army had many activities and whether we often had trouble with the natives. I told him that the only thing I had against the army was that the period of training was too long. The accused also questioned me as to what my opinion was about Dr. Salazar the Prime Minister of Portugal. I told him that I was not interested in discussing this with him. Soon after this discussion, I noticed that the accused became aggressive towards me and started accusing me falsely of not doing my work properly. He also made several reports against me to the works foreman Mr. Vercueil. The accused pretended that he was an educated man but according to his manners and approach to other people I would say that he was very ill-mannered. Otherwise the accused was acting normal and I never noticed anything wrong with him. I have seen an insane person before but I can state that the accused never behaved as an insane person whilst employed here.

³¹⁶⁷ Antonio Teixeira Da Silva statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

ROSAMUND ELIZABETH POPKISS³¹⁶⁸

Aldor Apartments, Rustenburg Avenue, Rondebosch.

I am the temporary manageress of the above-mentioned apartments. On 31.6.1966 Mr. Dimitrio Tsafendas moved into room no.7 which was vacant and which was advertised. The rent for the room is R20 p.m. Although he spoke to some of the other residents he seemed very reserved. On Monday 5.9. 1966 at about 6.30 p.m. I met him outside in the garden. I was looking for ray cat and he was just walking up and down. To me he looked very worried. I then spoke to him and asked him whether he saw my cat. I told him that I was very worried about the cat. He then said that he was also very worried and that he had something on his mind. I did not peruse this any further and left him there.

Rondebosch. 9.9.1966. 8.20 pm.

(SGD.) R.E. Popkiss.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) A.J. van Dyk. Captain.

FRANK WALTER WARING³¹⁶⁹

White male, Cabinet Minister in the Parliament of the Republic of South Africa, Cape Town, 5.30 pm.

On 6/9/66 I entered the Assembly shortly after the bells rang at 2.10 p.m. and sat down at my desk. My desk is behind and to the right of that of the Prime Minister... A noise attracted my attention and I looked up to see Dr. Donges apparently trying to clutch at ³¹⁶⁸ Rosamund Elizabeth Popkiss statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/8, NASA.

³¹⁶⁹ Frank Walter Waring statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

someone who, at the same time, I saw plunge something into the right hand shoulder of Dr. Verwoerd. I jumped at him and put a neck lock on him and pulled him away. He resisted and seemed to play around with his arms to get out of my grip. I pulled him further back and over on top of me on the bench of Dr. Donges which is to the right of that of the Prime Minister.

It was then that I saw he had a large dagger, of the type exhibited, in his hand. His hand movements were now restricted by the bench and desk, although momentarily, his hand freely held the dagger. In a matter of seconds, however, his hand was held by other members and the dagger removed. He was then pulled off me and when I got up, also in a matter of seconds, was on the floor where I grabbed hold of his right leg and could see his face clearly for the first time. Those who held him on the floor were making an effort to drag him outside. At that stage the State President's body-guard, Capt. Buytenbach also grabbed hold of his leg and told me to leave it to him which I did and moved away and sat next to Sen. Trollip. Some ten minutes later it was pointed out to me that the left hand leg of my trousers had two tears which appeared could have been made by the dagger. The one is about two inches and the other about one inch in length. I, however, received no injuries.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Perhaps the biggest story of the day was a false one, a report in the Rand Daily Mail that Amelia Williams, Tsafendas's mother, was alive and living in Lourenço Marques. The Mail had lifted the erroneous report from the Portuguese newspaper, Diario de Lisboa, of the previous day.³¹⁷⁰ It was one of a number of false stories published about Tsafendas at the time. The Cape Times reported that police had visited a mill at Mandini where Tsafendas had a fight with a fellow worker, Nikolas Vergos, and took statements from men who met Tsafendas.³¹⁷¹ However, only one statement taken that day in Mandini was found in the National Archives, that of Gladstone Dunn.³¹⁷² This must mean either only this man gave a statement that day or the other statements have gone missing.

³¹⁷⁰ Diario de Lisboa, 8 September 1966, 'A mae de Dimitrio ainda vive nos arredores de Lourenço Marques'; Rand Daily Mail, 9 September 1966, 'Tsafendas' Mother still alive'; Diario de Lisboa, 13 September 1966, 'Localizada a Mae de Tsafendas.'

³¹⁷¹ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, 'Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.'

³¹⁷² Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Further newspaper investigations of Tsafendas's past turned up Nikolas Vergos of Johannesburg, aged sixty-one (of fifty-four according to other reports), who described a fight he had with Tsafendas when they worked for the same company in Mandini, Zululand, in May, 1965. Vergos said one day in the canteen, Tsafendas knocked him to the ground twice and so he drew a razor and slashed his wrist. He thought Tsafendas hit him "because he resented the fact I would have nothing to do with him." The men's foreman, Charles Woods, described Tsafendas as a very good worker and "far from being a crank. He seemed to be a fairly intelligent man but he was a violent type and we couldn't keep him."³¹⁷³

The Daily Dispatch carried a reproduction of Tsafendas's signature and an analysis by Dr. R.M. Schweitzer of East London, South Africa, who it described as a graphologist of thirty years' standing. Dr. Schweitzer managed to portray Tsafendas quite accurately, indeed more accurately than any psychiatrist would do in his summary trial. He suggested the writer experienced difficulty in accepting discipline, had unsteady working habits, showed evidence of vindictiveness, but was idealistic, a person of great enthusiasm and a quick thinker. By studying loops, whirls and letter shapes, Schweitzer concluded that the signatory was intelligent and "capable of learning and thinking logically and can at times co-operate," but he also nurtured emotional inhibitions and needed more sympathy in his emotional life. By underlining his signature three times, the writer signalled that he could be extremely vain.³¹⁷⁴

The written media presented a jumble of false claims about Tsafendas. The Pretoria News said Tsafendas lived in Pretoria for about two years. It quoted an unnamed colleague of Tsafendas at a city engineering firm as saying that Tsafendas lived in an empty car packing box. "In the evenings he bought meat and fried it on the fire at work, then he would take it back to his motor-car box," the man said.³¹⁷⁵ The story did not name the company, which must have been City Engineering or FA Poole Engineering Works, as these were the only two firms Tsafendas worked for in Pretoria, apart from his sister's café. Every aspect of the story is false. Tsafendas lived in Pretoria for nine months, not two years and he lived for a few days at his half-sister's house, for a few weeks at Fotini Gavasiadis's house and then for the rest of his time in the rent-free-apartment given to him by Nick Vlachopoulos. His whole family

³¹⁷³ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, 'Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.'

³¹⁷⁴ Daily Dispatch, 9 September 1966: 1, 'The hand the killer wrote', ³¹⁷⁵ Pretoria News, 9 September 1966: 1, 'Dimitrio lived in Pretoria.'

testified to the Commission of Enquiry that “he always had proper accommodation in Pretoria.”³¹⁷⁶

The author also asked two people, Fotni Gavasiadis and Mary Eendracht, who saw a lot of Tsafendas at the time and both dismissed the newspaper’s report. Tsafendas lived in the house of Fotini Gavasiadis and her husband Markos for several weeks. When he left, he moved into an apartment next to their house, where he stayed for the next eight months, seeing Fotini and Markos every day, and spending a lot of his time at their home. Tsafendas and Fotini also worked together for nine months in her brother’s café. Mary Eendracht, Tsafendas’s cousin, lived in Pretoria at the time and was close to him throughout his stay. Both characterised the report as a “lie” and confirmed that throughout his time in Pretoria Tsafendas had only lived either with Marika in her house, or with Fotini and Markos in their house or in the rent-free apartment given to him by Vlachopoulos and never in a packing case.³¹⁷⁷

A Cape Times story said Tsafendas was stopped by Israeli border police in Jerusalem on January 22, 1961. The newspaper’s London correspondent said Tsafendas arrived at the Mandelbaum Gate at the entrance to the old city of Jerusalem with a Portuguese passport issued in Hamburg but without money. He said he was sure the Greek churches in Israel would not let him starve. The immigration officer turned Tsafendas over to the security police, who denied him entry.³¹⁷⁸ In about October 1964, Tsafendas was seen in Umtali, Rhodesia, where he visited a café. The lady owner was curious about his teeth, which looked as if they were made of silver. She quoted Tsafendas as saying they were false teeth which were made for him when he visited Russia. He said he travelled a lot and did not belong to any country.³¹⁷⁹ Police in Cape Town combed the city for anyone who had met or had any associations with Tsafendas, but it was believed that nothing had been discovered that remotely connected Tsafendas with any political organisation in South Africa or abroad.³¹⁸⁰ ³¹⁷⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³¹⁷⁷ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³¹⁷⁸ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas: Fear for life.’

³¹⁷⁹ The Umtali Post, 9 September 1966: 1, ‘Assassin was seen in Umtali.’

³¹⁸⁰ The Australian, 9 September 1966, ‘Search goes on for killer’s friends.’

SATURDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

COSTAS MICHAELETOS³¹⁸¹³¹⁸²

White man, 51 years, born in Greece, South African citizenship acquired during 1955, owner of Metro Cafe, Vryburg, telephone number 213, declares:

I am well acquainted with the alleged attacker of the late Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa, His Excellency Dr. H. F. Verwoerd. The full name of the attacker is Dimetrios Tsafantakis or Mimis and he is of mixed descent. His father is a Greek by birth and his mother was a Portuguese Coloured woman. Tsafantakis is an illegitimate child and was born in Lourenço Marques at about 1916. The exact date of his birth is unknown to me.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis' father is Michael Tsafantakis who emigrated from the island Crete to Mozambique. Michael Tsafantakis is a brother of my uncle, George Michaeletos's wife. George Michaeletos is currently living at PO Box 187, Lourenço Marques. George Michaeletos married Diana Artemis.

During the time Dimetrios Tsafantakis was born, I was also living in Lourenço Marques and Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up before me, and I even taught him at school in Lourenço Marques. Later Dimetrios Tsafantakis went to Middelburg (Transvaal) where he completed his schooling.

The father of Dimetrios Tsafantakis was seeing a Portuguese Coloured woman named Amelia. Because of the relationship between Michael Tsafantakis and Amelia, Dimitri Tsafantakis was born out of wedlock. Michael Tsafantakis has discussed the birth of his illegitimate child with me several times.

When Dimetrios Tsafantakis was about 10 years old, his father married a Greek girl with the name Marika Sakelis, who hails from Port Said and from this marriage three children were born in with the name - ³¹⁸¹ Costas Michaeletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³¹⁸² The correct spelling is Michaeletos, not Michaeletos.

a) Bagela, a daughter who later married a certain Nissiotis, who currently owns a cafe at the Municipal Market in Pretoria and who is well known to the Greek community in Pretoria.

b) Victor, a son who has a disability in his left leg.

c) Then there was a daughter named Bussa, who later married a Greek, presumably with the name Kuwaris. The Kuwaris' owns a cafe in Pretoria but the name of the cafe is unknown.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis is well known to a certain Tamos Tamburazis who works at the Tattersalls in Pretoria.

Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family.

During 1933-1934, Dimetrios Tsafantakis left Lourenço Marques when he joined the Navy. I can, however, not say which country's navy Dimetrios Tsafantakis joined.

I left Lourenço Marques during 1935 and came to South Africa and shortly afterwards the Tsafantakis family also came to South Africa. Michael Tsafantakis worked about 20 years for Iscor, Pretoria. Michael Tsafantakis died about four years ago. Michael Tsafantakis' wife is still living somewhere in Pretoria, but her address is unknown to me.

Since Dimetrios Tsafantakis left Lourenço Marques during 1933-1934, I had not seen him again. On 8/9/66, however, I saw a picture of Dimetrios Tsafantakis in the newspaper and recognized him immediately. Dimetrios Tsafantakis looks just like his father.

Dr. John Michaeletos who also had his schooling in Middelburg (Transvaal) and went to school with Dimetrios, is currently a physician in Greece. He has a clinic in Athens, Greece. Dr. John Michaeletos' mother, Sophia Michaeletos, lives in Aharnon Street, Athens.

There is also a professor John Michaeletos in Greece, but I do not know where he currently finds himself. When I visited Greece in 1952, I heard that he was an active communist. I also think that the doctor and the professor know each other. Mrs. Helen Kallos, the Greek consulate in Cape Town is well acquainted with both the doctor and the professor. Mrs. Kallos' maiden name is also Michaeletos and she is a cousin of mine.

Ever since I knew Dimetrios Tsafantakis, I never/anytime observed that he showed any deviations. He also never was an aggressive type person. I am aware of the fact that Dimetrios Tsafantakis was a withdrawn type person, possibly due to the fact that he never actually was recognized as a member of his family.

The letter which was found in the Bible of Dimetrios Tsafantakis, supposedly comes from Dr. John Michaeletos of Athens, because they know each other well and grew up together.

Of the actions of Dimetrios Tsafantakis as a mature person I have no knowledge.

That's all I want to say.

COMMENTS ON MICHALETOS'S STATEMENT

As we can see, Michaeletos was asked by the police about a "John Michaeletos" who corresponded with Tsafendas (a letter of his was found inside a Bible). It seems highly unlikely that the police would have made enquiries about a simple pen friend of Tsafendas, given that at the same time he was corresponding with several people overseas – for example, Father Nikola Banovic and Limasollu Naci in Istanbul – and none of them, as far as the author can establish, was contacted about his relationship with him. The fact that Tsafendas's friend John Michaeletos was a member of the Greek Communist Party and of the DSE, and had even recruited Tsafendas into the DSE, must have been known to the police; that is surely why they made inquiries about him. Such information could have easily become known to the police through the interrogation of Tsafendas or the content of the letter. The fact also that Costas Michaeletos then explicitly refers to one of the two "John Michaeletos" he mentions as "an active communist", suggests further that he was specifically asked about the political ideas of that person. Furthermore, as we will later see, the fact that subsequently the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry made inquiries regarding this "Michaeletos" to PIDE, and almost certainly to the Greek police too, suggests even more strongly that the man they were looking for was not just a pen friend.

CONFIDENTIAL SECURITY REPORT OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN UMTALI

On September 10, a second confidential security report from the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Rhodesia, written by D/S/O/ Stannard, was sent to the South African police. It contained information about Tsafendas's movements in Rhodesia, plus interviews from people in the country who knew him.

It has been ascertained that, on the 9th October, 1964, Demitrio Tsafendas entered Umtali from Mocambique through Forbes Border Post. Immigration register details state that Tsafendas gave out that he was Portuguese, and a Technician from Pretoria. A Temporary Permit, No. 892, was issued to him, valid until 23rd October, 1964.

Tsafendas gave out that he was on a business visit to the Hume Pipeline, and that his address in Umtali would c/o Mr. GALANAKIS, Main Street, Umtali. His Permit instructions were that he was to leave Rhodesia though Bulawayo/Beit Bridge. Immediately beneath this entry, and on the same date, was the fact that one, Carmelo da Silva, Portuguese, a clerk in Beira, had entered Rhodesia en route to Salisbury. It is possible, although not confirmed, that Tsafendas entered in this man's company. Photostat copies of the Temporary Permit are attached for your information and retention.

It has been ascertained that Tsafendas visited the Umtali Green Grocers, situated in Main Street and spoke to Nikolas George SPANOS, the owner. SPANOS has been interviewed and states that he remembers this occasion, and states that TSAFENDAS said that he was on a business trip. He asked SPANOS if he was from Egypt, and whether or not he spoke any foreign languages. Spoke to SPANOS in French, and Greek, but when asked what nationality he was, he declined to comment. SPANOS states that he was a mysterious man. SPANOS was asked if he was related to GALANAKIS. He replied that he was a cousin, and thereafter referred TSAFENDAS to John GALANAKIS, who owns the Gala's Cash Store, Main Street, Umtali.

John GALANAKIS stated that Tsafendas entered his shop, having been referred to him by SPANOS. He states that he formed the impression at the time that TSAFENDAS was on the scrounge, but realised that he was an intelligent man and that he spoke Greek, Portuguese and Afrikaans fluently. He asked GALANAKIS how Africans in this country live and what their conditions were. He also stated that he had owned some form of tapestry factory in Madeira, but that this concern had since fallen through, and that he was looking for employment. He stated that he might try and secure employment with the Oil Refinery, as he considered he would be an asset, being fluent in several foreign languages. He asked GALANAKIS if he could rent his farm in Vila Nanica, Mocambique, but this offer was declined, as GALANAKIS realised he had no money. TSAFENDAS stated that he was looking for accommodation, and in this regard, he was introduced to the local Greek priest Father CONDOS, who approached one Mrs KAVADIAS. She agreed to accommodate him and he is known to have stayed there for two nights.

Father CONDOS when seen reiterated what GALANAKIS has said, and stated that he merely secured accommodation for him. He did add, however, that he was convinced that TSAFENDAS was not of Greek origin, but of Turkish extract.

Mrs. Helen GRISPOS, the daughter of Mrs. KAVADIAS, was seen and stated that she met Tsafendas while he stayed with her mother. Described him as being well mannered and intelligent. She stated that he was collected by Immigration officials after his two nights with her mother as his papers were not in order, and that he would have to go.

TSAFENDAS was also known to have visited the Vumba Milk Bar, owned by Mr. Spiros RAFTOPOULOS. RAFTOPOULOS stated that he remembered this man well, and that he visited his shop on two occasions. He mentioned that he was trying to secure a job with the Pipelines. RAFTOPOULOS mentioned that the most outstanding thing" about Tsafendas was his silver or platinum coloured teeth. When he asked TSAFENDAS about this, he replied that he had them done while he was staying in Russia. He also mentioned that he was born in Lourenço Marques, but that he had not been there for some considerable time, and that he had visited Cyprus, Turkey, and in fact, most places in the world.

It is known that Tsafendas visited two Greeks in Gondola after being declared a Prohibited Immigrant. These two Greeks are Andrew KAVALIERATOS and Paul BABIOLAKIS. He was arrested by the Portuguese Police at Maforga, 5 miles from Gondola, when he was living and mining with Africans in that area. He was thereafter conveyed to Beira for interrogation. He was not seen in Umtali since that occasion.

All the persons above state that Tsafendas had silver and platinum coloured teeth. The only luggage Tsafendas had was one small blue suitcase.

Comments: Mrs. KAVADIAS is now living at Cedult Farm, 10 mile peg, Melsetter road. Enquires continue to ascertain whether or not there was any connection between TSAFENDAS and GALANAKIS. It is considered curious that TSAFENDAS should give the name GALANAKIS as his address when entering Rhodesia, and yet GALANAKIS states that he only met with him by chance, having been referred to him by his cousin SPANOS. It is also understood that TSAFENDAS visited Rhodesia on two previous occasions in July and August, 1964, via Bulawayo and Salisbury, and that he left Rhodesia via Umtali by train on the 22nd August, 1964.

Special Branch Headquarters,

Salisbury.

9th September, 1966.³¹⁸³

COMMENTS OF HELEN GRISPOS AND ANDREAS BABIOLAKIS TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING THEIR STATEMENTS

For unknown reasons, Sophia Kavadias was apparently not questioned by Special Branch, although Tsafendas stayed at her house and was arrested there. She had long known Tsafendas and his family, having lived next door to them in Lourenço Marques in the mid-1930s. However, her daughter, Helen Grispos, was questioned. Helen was married to George Grispos, who was a very close friend of Tsafendas and his schoolmate in Lourenço Marques. In an interview with the author, Helen Grispos remembered the police asking her about Tsafendas after Dr. Verwoerd's assassination:

“I don't remember if my mother spoke to the police then ... I remember George was away in Mozambique at the time, so he was not questioned... I can't remember if he was questioned by the police in Mozambique, but I think not ... I don't remember at all what I told them [the police] ... I don't think I would have mentioned that he was a Communist.” Asked if she told the police that her husband was Tsafendas's friend, she replied, “I don't remember, but I don't think I would have done it after what he [Tsafendas] did!”³¹⁸⁴

Andreas Babiolakis was a good friend of Tsafendas from childhood and had stayed at his house in Beira for a couple of months. In a personal interview with the author, he said that he and Kavallieratos were questioned by the police after the assassination. However, their statements were not found in the archives. Babiolakis does not remember exactly what he told the police or by whom he was questioned. He clearly remembers trying to distance himself from Tsafendas as much as possible, but also telling the police about Tsafendas's two ³¹⁸³ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³¹⁸⁴ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

arrests in Beira two years earlier, knowing that they would be aware of them. As for the Report's question regarding Galanakis's statement that he only met Tsafendas by chance, it is true that Galanakis knew Tsafendas from the past, very probably from back when they were children. He obviously lied in order to distance himself from Tsafendas, as did most people at the time.³¹⁸⁵

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

Five days after the assassination, newspapers reported that Tsafendas would appear for summary trial in the Cape Town Supreme Court on a charge of murder. The Cape Times said the Judge-President of the Cape, Mr. Justice Beyers, would probably preside with two assessors; the Attorney General of the Cape, Mr. Willem van den Berg, would appear for the State, and Judge Beyers would likely appoint a defence advocate, or two, for Tsafendas. Van den Berg was expected to spend the weekend studying statements from the police, after which an indictment would be drawn up.³¹⁸⁶

The Daily Dispatch quoted van den Berg as saying that the tightest possible security measures would be taken. "Everything possible will be done to see that these measures are watertight for the safety of all concerned," he said. The available courts were small, seating no more than 120 members of the public and only four reporters. Special measures would be taken to accommodate more Press representatives. Tsafendas was still being held at Caledon Square police station.³¹⁸⁷

The New York Times reported that Tsafendas carried on a twenty-year feud with the United States, culminating in a demand for extensive damages. In an affidavit drawn up by lawyers in Cape Town, Tsafendas declared he was suing the United States for $100,000 because in 1947 he was deported by US authorities to Greece instead of to South Africa, as he wished. He also claimed $50,000 for loss of salary and mental and physical suffering and $50,000 for "inconvenience imposed upon me during the past twenty years, which was entirely due to the negligence of the American authorities."³¹⁸⁸ In a dispatch from Washington, The New York Times reported that Tsafendas had been deported from the USA

³¹⁸⁵ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

³¹⁸⁶ The Cape Times, 10 September 1966:1, 'Top security for trial of assassin.'

³¹⁸⁷ Daily Dispatch, 10 September 1966: 1, 'Security clamp-down for trial of Tsafendas.'

³¹⁸⁸ The New York Times, 10 September 1966: 15, 'Assassin planned suit against the USA.'

in 1947 on grounds that he entered the country illegally. There was no record of his having sued the United States but he had threatened to do so during numerous visits to the US Consulate in Cape Town.³¹⁸⁹

Newspapers began searching for any news about Tsafendas, even if it was previously published elsewhere. The Dagbreek and The Star printed the report of Tsafendas being picked up in Mozambique with five passports, his arrests there (two according to The Star and three according to Dagbreek) and his deportation after the Second World War because of “communist activities.”³¹⁹⁰ The Star also published the story that had been in the Pretoria News two days earlier about Tsafendas telling an acquaintance he could not leave Cape Town because he “had a job to finish here first.”³¹⁹¹ The Natal Witness republished interviews with some of Tsafendas’s Frankfurt colleagues.³¹⁹²

DR. VERWOERD’S FUNERAL

Dr. Verwoerd’s body, accompanied by his bulldog Punch, was flown from Cape Town to Pretoria on September 8.³¹⁹³ Wilhelm Verwoerd, Dr. Verwoerd’s eldest son, wanted a small, family funeral, but government ministers insisted that a State funeral was necessary and he eventually agreed.³¹⁹⁴ Dr. Verwoerd was buried on Saturday, September 10, at 2.15. A mile-long cortege, led by a Mounted police escort, processed through the heart of the capital to Heroes’ Acre in the Old Cemetery on Church Street West. The ceremonies were watched by the biggest crowd ever seen in South Africa, estimated at 250.000.³¹⁹⁵

The State funeral began with a one-hour religious service in the amphitheatre of the Union Buildings, attended by 10,000 people led by State President Charles Robert Swart and including many diplomats in formal dress. The only national leader mentioned was Ian Smith, Prime Minister of Rhodesia. Separately, in the shadow of the West Wing, sat

³¹⁸⁹ The New York Times, 11 September 1966, ‘Records show deportation.’

³¹⁹⁰ Dagbreek, 11 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas het vir V.V. in Persie gewerk’; The Star, 10 September 1966: 3, ‘Assassin had five passports.’

³¹⁹¹ The Star, 10 September 1966: 3, ‘He had a ‘job’ to do.’

³¹⁹² Natal Witness, 10 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas was so friendly ...’

³¹⁹³ The Globe and Mail, 9 September 1966: 4, ‘Dr. Verwoerd’s slayer appears for formal hearing in court.’

³¹⁹⁴ Goodman, 2001: 154-155.

³¹⁹⁵ House of Assembly Debates (Hansard), 6th September and 7th September, 1966; 2015-2016; Personality, 29 September 1966: 19-24, ‘The State funeral of Dr. H.F. Verwoerd, Prime Minister’; Scope, 23 September 1966: 12-18, ‘The entire nation mourns ... and a critical world press passes caustic comments’; The Star, 11 September 1966: 1, ‘Vast crowds pay last respects to Dr. Verwoerd.’

Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima and some twenty Africans representing seven ethnic groups. Representatives of the Indian and Coloured communities also sat there.³¹⁹⁶

The coffin was carried in by eight military officers flanked by eight senior Cabinet ministers and the mourners rose when Mrs. Dr. Verwoerd took her place with her children. The national anthem rang out and an Air Force guard of honour saluted as the casket was placed on a purple and black draped catafalque in front of the pulpit. The service was conducted by the Rev. J.H. Louw of the Pretoria East Ned Geref Kerk, of which Dr. Verwoerd was a member; the Lesson was read by Church of England Bishop S.C. Bradley, and the funeral eulogy was delivered by the Rev. J.S. Gericke, Moderator of the Ned Geref Kerk of the Cape.³¹⁹⁷

The service lasted for just over an hour, whereupon the cortege moved slowly towards the cemetery headed by thirty-eight Mounted Policemen, motorised army detachments and four hundred troops. Overhead, in a clear blue sky, flights of Harvard aircraft formed the letters "HV." The committal at the cemetery was restricted to family and the Cabinet, but as the coffin was carried to the graveside, the thousands gathered outside heard nineteen-gun salvos fired from the hills around Pretoria.³¹⁹⁸ The funeral proceedings were aired by the South African Broadcasting Corporation in eleven different languages so that people from all around the world could follow them.³¹⁹⁹

Die Vaderland, the National Party's mouthpiece, declared on its front page that although Dr. Verwoerd was gone, "his message remains."³²⁰⁰ Most of the foreign press was not so complimentary. David Holden of the London Sunday Times wrote: "So now he goes, respected by many, hated perhaps by many more according to the colour of their skin, but not apparently very much loved. His former minions have surrounded his funeral with some of that aloofness and isolation that characterised his policies by refusing all visiting correspondents like myself any official facilities for covering the event." John Griff of the London Guardian wrote: "He leaves behind him a system established by force, and which ³¹⁹⁶ The New York Times, 11 September 1966, '10.000 people attend funeral service'; The Canberra Times, 12 September 1966: 5, 'Dr. Verwoerd buried in Heroes' Acre.'

³¹⁹⁷ The Times (London), 12 September 1966: 7, 'Hundreds file past grave of Dr. Verwoerd'; The Cape Argus, 11 September 1966: 1 (late edition), 'Magnificence for "quiet man"'; The Star, 11 September 1966: 1, 'Vast crowds pay last respects to Dr. Verwoerd.'

³¹⁹⁸ The Illustrated London News, 17 September 1966: 1, 'The State funeral of Dr. Verwoerd'; The Star, 11 September 1966: 1, 'Vast crowds pay last respects to Dr. Verwoerd.'

³¹⁹⁹ The Cape Times, n.d. 'State funeral on air in 11 languages.'

³²⁰⁰ Die Vaderland, 10 September 1966: 1, 'Hy is weg, maar syboodskap bly.'

only force can destroy ... His work may endure for several generations – the power of the modern state is so hard to shake – but in the long run it must surely be doomed.”³²⁰¹

³²⁰¹ Scope, 23 September 1966: 12-18, ‘The entire nation mourns ... and a critical world press passes caustic comments.’

SUNDAY, 11 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT TO THE POLICE³²⁰²

Major Rossouw questioned Tsafendas in a session which started on this day, September 11, and ended on September 12. Copies of the transcript were found in the National Archives in Pretoria. Maj. Rossouw, head of the Security Police in Cape Town, was an experienced interrogator, having also questioned John Harris, Stephanie Kemp and other ARM members, all of whom were tortured during their time in detention.³²⁰³ This is what Tsafendas told Major Rossouw:

Demetrio Tsafendakis or Tsafendas,

States:-

I have been warned by Maj. Rossouw that he is investigating a charge of murder against me arising from the death of the late Prime Minister, Dr. H. F. Dr. Verwoerd. My rights have been explained to me and I understand the warning given to me. I am in my sound and sober senses and I have not been influenced in any way to make this statement. I am prepared to make a statement.

1.

I was born on the 14th of January, 1918 in Lourenço Marques, Portuguese East Africa. My father was a marine engineer named Michael Tsafendakis. He was originally from the island of Crete and according to my knowledge, he was of Greek nationality. Only later in my life did I find out that my mother was a non-European woman, a person known in Portuguese as a Mulato woman, meaning a Portuguese Coloured woman. Her name was Amelia Williams and she was of German origin. My father wasn't married to my mother and I never knew my mother. I ascertained later that my father separated from my mother and that my father had sent me to Egypt when I was one year old. I was in Egypt until I reached the age of six. I resided in Egypt with my grandmother, i.e. my father's mother. By that time my father had ³²⁰² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³²⁰³ South African Democracy Education Trust, 2004: 362.

married again and had sent for me to be brought back to Lourenço Marques. We then lived at the Britannia Hotel. This was about 1925.

2.

I remained with my father until the year 1927 when I was sent to a kindergarten school called the Anglican Mission in L.M. As I could not get along with my stepmother, my father decided to send me to boarding school in Middelburg, Transvaal. I used to go home then only every six months.

3.

During the depression in 1930 my father lost his partnership in the firm Vucellato, a shipbuilding and engineering firm in Lourenço Marques, and because of financial difficulties he took me out of school in Middelburg and I went back to the Anglican Mission School in Lourenço Marques. I was at the latter school until 1933. From 1933-1935 I attended the Portuguese Mission School evening classes. I reached standard 5 in English and standard 4 in Portuguese.

4.

It was about 1936 when I was about 18 years old, I left L.M. and went to the Transvaal and obtained a job at the Fountains Cafe near the Pretoria railway station. I was there for about two or three months when I decided to go to Johannesburg. I worked in different places in Johannesburg. I remember working in the City Tea-room in Hillbrow, the Elgin Café in Jeppe Street and at the Cosmopolitan Restaurant.

5.

When war broke out in 1939 I started attending fulltime classes at the Progress College, Johannesburg studying to do welding. I only attended the Progress College for three months. I then obtained work at British Mining Supply Company in Eloff Street Extension, Johannesburg. I worked there until 1941 when I decided to go to Cape Town.

6.

I was in Cape Town for 15 days when I joined a merchant ship called SS Eugene Livanos, as a mess boy. Shortly after joining, the boat left for Canada. When the boat arrived in Canada I deserted. I went to the Canadian Immigration Department and told them I did not want to go back to the SS Eugene Livanos because the crew members were too rough. They were smoking dagga and marijuana and were fighting amongst themselves. Instead of sending me to another boat I was detained by the Immigration Authorities in a detention barrack for seamen in Montreal. From there I was sent to Halifax. From this detention station me, myself and two other seamen, ran away and crossed the American border. We were arrested on the American border and sent to the American Immigration Authorities, in Boston. There we were placed on an American ship, the SS Pillory, which went to Greenland. I was not in detention while on the Pillory. I was doing war service.

7.

When the SS Pillory arrived back in Boston I got a job on a liberty ship, the name of this ship has slipped my memory. I wish to explain that I was on different liberty ships till the end of the war in 1945.

8.

At the end of the war I fell ill on one of the liberty ships on way to England. I was taken off this boat and flown to an American base in England. From there I was sent back to America. I was unconscious when I was removed from the boat. When I came to my senses I found myself in the Grafton State Hospital in Massachusetts. I was in this hospital until 1947. I do not know what the medical diagnosis was but two medical board meetings were held on my health condition. I was then asked whether I wanted to return to Africa. The medical services authorities decided to send me back to Africa, but the Immigration Authorities decided that it could not be done.

9.

I had a Portuguese passport before leaving Cape Town, but because Portugal was a neutral country and I did not want to be neutral, I obtained a Greek passport from one of the Greek Consulates in either Johannesburg or Cape Town. This puzzled the American authorities because, apart from holding a Portuguese and a Greek passport, I was then also in possession of American seaman's papers. Instead of sending me to Africa the American authorities deported me to Greece. I was a complete stranger in Greece and could not find work. In order to survive I sold my clothing which I brought from America.

10.

Eventually I managed to obtain employment with the American Reconstruction Mission under the Marshall Plan. This job was as a foreman and interpreter. I cannot say whether this was a United Nations organization body or whether it was an American Aid Scheme. I remained on this job until 1949 when the project was concluded. I could not find alternate employment and eventually decided to go to the Greek Immigration Authorities. After some time I managed to obtain a refugee passport. I had no money and went to a shipping company where I was allowed to work my way on a ship, the Correnthia, to Marseilles.

11.

I left the boat at Marseilles and as I could not get a job there I went to Paris. I went by train after having purchased a train ticket with the money I had from my previous employment. This was during 1949. I moved from there to Ruan and Marseilles and back to Paris without being able to find work. From Paris I boarded a train through Spain to Portugal. I arrived in Portugal towards the end of 1949.

12.

When I arrived in Portugal with the refugee passport the immigration authorities did not recognise my passport and consequently detained me for about 6 months. I had already lost my Portuguese passport while in Canada. Before I left Greece I handed in my Greek passport in order to obtain a refugee passport. From the military detention depot I was sent to Machine Gun Depot Nr. 1 in Lisbon. There they wanted me to do military service and I refused to do military service. I told them I was a Christian and did not want to do military service. I was accused of deserting from Portuguese East Africa and for doing military service for foreign powers.

13.

I told the Portuguese authorities in Lisbon that I had been rejected by a recruiting board in Portuguese East Africa in 1936 because of my mother being a Coloured. They said there was no racial discrimination in Portugal and there was no reason for my refusal to do military service in Portugal. I still refused to do military service on the grounds of my Christianity. I was accused of disloyalty and they eventually discarded me. I was allowed to look for work in Lisbon but I was not allowed to leave the country. I could not find work but managed to survive through selling goods as a hawker. I sold embroidery and postcards and watches mainly to shipping passengers.

14.

I remained in Portugal until about 1953. I then tried to leave the country on my refugee passport but I was arrested by immigration authorities and was detained for over a year at the Port of Casias.

15.

After my release I managed to obtain a Portuguese passport and left for Western Germany. I also went to Sweden and Denmark. I fell ill in Western Germany and was admitted to Oxensoll Krankenhaus for about six months. I deserted from this hospital. I returned to friends in Hamburg where I had stayed before going to hospital. I went to the Portuguese authorities in Hamburg and they arranged for my return to Portugal. I went back to Portugal and remained there until 1958. I worked as a hawker as I had done before.

16.

In 1958 I went to the Brussels Fair in Belgium to sell embroidery. This was not a success on account of too much competition from the Chinese. I was all over Western Europe trying to sell embroidery. As this business was unsuccessful, I found a job with the Anglo American Fashion and Designers in Frankfurt for three months. I also worked for Fries and Son, the American Army printing works in Höchst. I remained in these jobs in Germany until 1959.

17.

In 1959 I decided to leave Western Europe and try my luck in England, When I arrived in England I had many difficulties in finding employment because I had a Portuguese passport. I did casual work. I fell ill in England and was hospitalised on the Isle of Wight for about three to four months. This was a continuation of my previous nervous trouble. The immigration authorities decided in 1959 to deport me to Germany. They wanted to deport me to Portugal but I told them I came from Germany and I asked them to send me to Germany. I found a job in Munich in a tractor factory. I remained there for six months. I received my money and decided to go to Egypt. I travelled through the Balkan States from Germany by train to Pireus harbour from where I travelled by ferry-boat to Alexandria.

18.

My purpose was to travel through the Africa States south so South Africa. I went to the Egyptian authorities and explained my plight, but instead of helping me I was detained at a place outside Cairo for about 6 months. I was sent to Alexandria where I obtained help from the Red Cross to get to Beirut on a ferry-boat. I remained at Beirut for a few days and met some people of my church - the Christian Church - and they assisted me to purchase an airline ticket to Jerusalem. I was living on my wits for about 4 months on the Jordan River and had a look at the Holy Land.

19.

I found I was unable to get back to Southern Africa so I decided to go back to Europe through the Middle East. Eventually I managed to get through Serbia³²⁰⁴ to Beirut and from Beirut to Tripoly, from Tripoly to Loadikia, from Loadikia to Hallipo, from there to Ohms and from there to Turkey to a place called Addena and from there to Ankara through the Torres Mountains. This journey was by bus. I was in Ankara for about a month and then went to Istanbul. I managed to obtain a job there as an English teacher, in the absence of a teacher at the Tarban College. I remained there for two months. I was stuck without money and gave blood transfusions at Istanbul. I was paid about one pound for a pint of blood.

20.

Sometime during 1961 I left by train to Western Europe through the Balkan States. I went as far as Bulgaria where I got off at Sofia. I could not find a job and after two weeks I boarded a train back to Istanbul. From Istanbul I got a free ride by a fish cooling truck to Athens.

21.

I remained in Athens for a few days and then got a ferryboat from Pireus to Crete to visit my father's relatives. I was destitute then. I did not know where to find my father's relatives but managed to trace some relatives in Crete. I stayed there for three days when I was told that they could not keep me. I went to the Christian Church Mission in Hercules and then to Rethinon.³²⁰⁵ I stayed in Crete for about 20 days before I got a ferry-boat back to Pireus. From Pireus I got a bus to Corfu. From there I went by ferry-boat to Southern Italy. I went to the Vatican embassy (Portuguese) in Rome and they supplied with fare to return to Portugal.

22.

I arrive in Portugal with the intention of getting back to Africa. This was in 1962. I stayed in Portugal for over a year and during this time went to various embassies in an endeavour to obtain assistance to get back to Africa.

23.

³²⁰⁴ The spelling mistakes of names here are of the transcript, not of the author.

³²⁰⁵ The correct spelling is Heraklion and Rethimnon.

In August or September, 1963 I received amnesty and the Social Services agreed to pay my boat fare to Lourenço Marques. I left immediately on the Princippi Porfeeto and arrived in L.M. during approximately October, 1963. I stayed in L.M. with an uncle of mine for a few days. They contacted my half-brother in Pretoria and he and my stepmother came to L.M. to fetch me to Pretoria. In Pretoria I found a job with City Engineering Company in Mitchell Street, Pretoria as a maintenance fitter. I remained on this job for about three months. I then found another job with Pool Engineering in Pretoria and stayed there for about three to four months. I saved some money and then left for Rhodesia during June or July, 1964. I went to visit my half-sister, Catherine Pnematikatos. Things were politically upset in Rhodesia and I failed to find a job there. I had an apartment house in Avondale, Salisbury for one month. I left Rhodesia and went to Nyassaland in search of work. I stayed in Nyassaland at Lake Malawi for about 20 days before returning to Salisbury.

24.

Prom Salisbury I went to Umtali to look for a job with the Central African Petroleum Corporation. I failed to get a job so I crossed the Portuguese border to Beira. I found casual work in Beira and worked there for a few days. From there I found, a job with Central African Petroleum Corporation³²⁰⁶ at Gondola in Portuguese territory. I was there for about one month. I was arrested on the job by the Portuguese authorities because I criticised the Portuguese government for their policy in regard to petrol distribution. I was detained in Beira for 93 days.

25.

After my release I met business people of the Greek community in Beira who gave me money for a shipping ticket to Durban. I arrived in Durban during February, 1965. I found a temporary job as cable fitter in Durban on the railways. This job lasted about one month. I then took another job with Fraser & Chalmers in Manzini, Zululand as a structural fitter. I was with them for three months when I had an argument with another Greek who insulted me. We came to grips. Later on he came to my room with a knife and he cut me all up. I did not know he had a knife. I am showing a scar on my right forearm, and hand. I had to undergo an operation. I did not wish to return to the job after what had happened. After I was operated I want to stay in Durban Men's Home for a couple of months during which time ³²⁰⁶ Tsafendas meant here the Hume Pipe Company.

I underwent medical treatment for my injured right arm. While I was still living at the Durban Men's Home I was trying to obtain a lift to Cape Town. I managed to get a lift with a director of a cardboard factory in Cape Town in a Ford Sedan car. I got a lift with this man as far as Port Elizabeth.

26.

From Port Elizabeth I bought a train ticket Cape Town. I arrived in Cape Town during September or October, 1965. When I arrived in Cape Town I went to stay at 1 San Sauci Street, Belville with the family of a girl who was staying there and who had written to me previously to say that she wanted to marry me. Her name was Helen Daniels, a Coloured woman. She belong to the same church as me, i.e. "The Christian Church." I did not want to get married. This was her idea. I stayed there for almost two months while I was searching for a job. I found work at the Table Bay Power Station. When I found work I paid the Daniels family for my board and lodging.

27.

After I left the Daniels family I found a room at a boarding house in front of the traffic department in Green Point. I worked at Table Bay Power Station for a couple of months - two or three months, when I was discharged. I was out of work for several months and lived on my wits and my savings, until I found a job on the Marine Diamond Corporation Barge Colpantoon. I had to take care of 25 machines and pumps and found, the job too strenuous on account of my health, so I resigned after two months. I came back with my savings to have an ear, nose and throat operation at Grootte Schuur Hospital. I was operated there.

28.

After the operation, I stayed at Milton House, Milton Road, Observatory, for about two to three months. When I left Milton House to stay at 5 Wrench Road, Observatory with a Mrs. Vos.

29.

Mrs. Vos wanted a friend of hers to stay with her so she gave me notice. She found a place for me to stay at 48 Devon Street, Woodstock.

30.

After I was discharged from Table Bay Power station, while I was unemployed, I stayed at 9

Westminster Street, Lansdowne with one named Pat Ryan, a Coloured family. I stayed there for about a month or two but I wasn't paying board and lodging. I shared a room, with his children. I also stayed at 10 Walnut Street, Lansdowne for about one week to 10 days.

31.

At the time of my arrest I was staying Eldor Apartments, Rustenburg Road, Rondebosch. At this stage I feel tired and request that I be given a rest. I will continue this statement tomorrow.

(Time 11.45 pm on 11/9/66.) Accused's request complied with.

32.

I now wish to state something which I had forgotten to tell you last night. In 1927 when I came from Egypt my stepmother began to corrupt me because I was the Heir to my father's property. She got her brother to rape me when I was a child to try and destroy my manly qualities. Her brother forced me into a room and committed an unnatural deed with me. I got very scared, I was a child. This is what I had not stated before.

33.

I am politically inclined but do not belong to any political party. I like to read what goes on. I like to read foreign papers and I am generally internationally minded.

34.

I cannot say that I agree with world politics, but I was always in favour of the politics of the western world. I am a liberal but I would not describe myself as a leftist. I did say previously that I was a leftist but I had to say something.

35.

In England I did not associate much with other people because I was in hospital most of the time. In America I was on ships most of the time. While I was staying in England I did attend some political meetings. I attended meetings of the Committee of African Organisations and I attended meetings at Caxton Hall. I also attended political meetings Hyde Park in London. They were anti-colonial meetings, anti-apartheid meetings and anti-racial meetings. It's a long time ago and I cannot remember the names of all the speakers I remember speeches by Barbara Castle, Fenner Brockway and Callaghan. I used to like to attend these meetings and be present at the meetings to contribute so their way of thinking.

I did take part in a protest and propaganda meeting at Trafalgar Square. It was anti-colonial protests. I was holding the posters up but I did not speak at those meetings. I was never approached to become a member of the Communist Party. I was anti-colonial, against slavery and in favour of all colonies which were controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal to be afforded self-government. I was against apartheid because it separated the people of different races and brought a big barrier amongst them which is difficult to describe. It brought wrong ideas among the people causing the different races to hate one another. It caused misunderstanding and suspicion amongst the different races, and made them afraid to talk to each other. People in buses did not know where to sit. South Africa is a nation of minorities of Europeans, Africans, Coloureds and Indians, I mean that South Africa consists of various races. All the apartheid laws made things confusing amongst the different races. I refer especially to the laws applying to mixed marriage because people are unable to marry whom they want to marry according to their economic means. That is what I term oppression. If there was freedom there would be no restrictions and there would be evolution so that eventually there would be only one race. That is what I mean by evolution.

36.

I was in sympathy with the people fighting racialism hence the reason for attending the meetings mentioned above. Whilst attending these meetings it never struck me that by killing the Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa the apartheid laws could be changed.

It is true that I mixed with South African people in London, some of whom were leftists. In private conversations with some of these people it was said that the South African Prime Minister deserves to be shot, I cannot remember by whom this statement was made because it was merely during private conversation that this statement was made. This sort of statement was made more than once by different people. I cannot remember any particular person having made such a statement. It was just casual talk. These were isolated statements by people happened to come across by chance. To say that this was the main thought amongst leftists, is a bit exaggerated. I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this.

I used to agree with the idea that the Prime Minister deserves to be shot. I sometimes agreed with them. Sometimes we used to discuss that Dr. Verwoerd was lucky he did not die the first time he was shot. There was no decision made that he should in fact be killed – I mean I did not decide on anything at that time. I never took upon me the task of killing the Prime Minister nor did I tell anyone that I would kill the Prime Minister. I did believe that with the disappearance of the South African Prime Minister a change of policy would take place. I did set myself the task of destroying the Prime Minister. It was my own idea to kill him. No one offer me any reward for doing so. I did not care about the consequences for what would happened to me afterwards. I was so disgusted with the racial policy that I went through with my plans to kill the Prime Minister.

Nowhere in the world where I have travelled did anyone ever tell me to kill Dr. Verwoerd. In Western countries people know very little about the South African policies.

At this stage the deponent was again warned about the seriousness of the charge against him. It was explained to him that he faces a charge of murder and that there is a danger of him being hanged for a deed which he is alleged to have committed as the result of the incitement of another. Deponent replies that no one incited him to commit the murder. Apart from what I have read in papers and on account of inflationary conditions no one has ever incited me to murder the Prime Minister.

A contributory cause was also my dissatisfaction about the existent racial laws in South Africa. I say this because it caused me a lot of frustration as I was unable to mix with the class (financial) to which I belong. I was classed as a white person and I wanted to marry a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels. I went to the Department of Interior and complained to a Mr. Rossouw that I wished to be classified as a Coloured person. I had an European identity card which I gave to Mr. Rossouw same time last year when I applied for re-classification. I could not get myself an European wife therefore I wanted a blank identity card which was given to me but later taken back by Mr. Rossouw. I visited Mr. Rossouw's office frequently and then he always wanted to know where I was staying and whether the people I was staying with were White or Coloured. This was one of the main reasons for making me upset.

37.

The Coloured woman referred to above wrote to me and sent me her photograph while I was in Durban. She got my address through some people of my church in Benoni where she was on holiday. These people are named Tillik, a Coloured family. They live in Benoni or Brakpan.

38.

It is no true that I returned to South Africa from England with the purpose of working my way to South Africa to kill the Prime Minister.

39.

It is true that I went to Rhodesia after my arrival in South Africa to visit my sister. I did this because I have not seen her for a long time. I did not go there to say good-bye because I thought I would never see her again. At that time I did not think about the serious mission which I would not survive. It was only after I came back to Gape Town that I decided to murder the Prime Minister.

40.

Because I was out of work I went to the Labour Department to look for work. At the labour department I learned that casual labourers would be required at the House of Assembly. I went to the House of Assembly three times to look for work. I contacted Mr. Wiese at the main entrance, who directed me to Mr. Burger and Mr. Wiehand in the basement.

I went there two or three times, but there was no work. I completed certain application forms and produced my identity card, residence papers and whatever was necessary. The second last time I was told to come at the beginning of August. I went there at the beginning of August and spoke to either Mr. Burger or Mr. Wiehand who signed me on. I started work as messenger the same day.

41.

Some days after I started working in the House of Assembly, all kinds of thoughts came to my mind about murdering the Prime Minister. I saw an opportunity of shooting the Prime Minister from the lobby. I thought of obtaining a firearm. I knew that I had to obtain a licence for a firearm. Obtaining a licence would take too long. This I found out at one of the shops where I enquired about purchasing a firearm in Durban. I thought of going to a ship, the Eleni, which I knew was in Cape Town for repairs. I was acquainted with the crew members of the Eleni. While I was unemployed I used to take the crew members to Mike's shop in Main Road, Woodstock where I get commission on goods sold to the crew members. I also got free meals from the ship. I had an idea that I might be able to buy a firearm on the ship because some sailors carry firearms. I went to this ship about three to four weeks before the assassination of the Prime Minister. I saw the man in the engine room (the donkey man), who told me that the 'bosun' foreman of the crew may know where I could obtain a firearm. He said he could get me a "Beretta" revolver and a knife. I also enquired from him about a springleaf knife, which he said he could get for me. He said he wanted 80 dollars for the two items. I told him I wanted the revolver and the knife for self-defence, he said he wanted the money in American dollars. He did not show me a revolver or a knife. I said I would return in a couple of days with the money. I waited until the end of August when I got my pay. It was, I think, R95.00. I went to Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town and enquired to buy 80 American dollars. I was told that it would cost R56. The lady teller wanted my passport.

The next day I brought my passport and she gave me the 80 dollars. I took a taxi and went to the ship. There I saw the "bosun" and told him that I have brought the money for the gun and the knife as arranged. He said he did not have the gun, but the galley boy had a small gun which he would try and get for me. The 'bosun' went to the galley boy and brought a small gun which he said I could have for 30 dollars.

I thought it was a small calibre pistol and I decided to buy it. I took it without examining it. They had no bullets. I thought I could buy bullets from local stores. I took the pistol home where I examined it and discovered that it was a gas revolver. On Saturday the 3rd of September, I took the gas pistol back to the ship. I found the 'bosun' with the intention to return the firearm to him. Both the 'bosun' and the galley boy told me that they had spent the money. I wanted another firearm or the return of my money but ended up getting nothing. I went to the captain to protest, but as I saw I could get nothing and did not want to cause a scandal I gave up and left. I returned to my room in Rondebosch.

42.

The next thing is that I decided to use a knife to stab the Prime Minister in the House of Assembly. I never discussed my plans with anybody. The shops were closed over the weekend and the following Monday was a public holiday. At about 9 a.m. on Tuesday, 6/9/66, I went to town to buy the knives. I bought one knife from the first shop which was open. This shop is known as City Guns. Then I went to another shop further down the road and bought another knife. Both shops were closed when I arrived. I walked up and down the pavement waiting for the shops to open. I enquired at a certain shop as to when the sports shop would open. I cannot remember whether I spoke to a man or a woman.

I started work at 7.49 a.m. on 6/9/66. I arrived at the House of Assembly at 6.45 a.m. on 6/9/66. I went to work early in order to do my work and then to go out to buy the knives. I did not ask for permission to go to the town to buy the knives. I entered City Guns first and purchased a dagger. I paid R.3.30 for this dagger. I then went to the other shop where I bought another dagger - the one with the aluminium handle. It was more like a stiletto. I bought two weapons in order to make certain of the job which I had in mind, I thought something might go wrong and that one weapon might be taken away from me. Both weapons were wrapped up in brown paper. After I bought the weapons I returned to the House of Assembly where I removed the paper wrappings from the weapons and left the paper wrappings in my locker. I also left the two daggers in my locker. I started working that morning wearing a khaki overall. When I went to the shops to buy the weapons I changed into a grey suit. When I came back I changed into my navy-blue messenger's uniform, then I changed into my uniform. I had a waistbelt underneath my uniform pant, to which two sheaths were attached. I left the two knives in the locker. I then went to the first floor to serve coffee and tea. I waited for the lights to go on indicating which offices were calling for tea and coffee. I was there until about 2 p.m. that afternoon.

43.

A few minutes before the Assembly bells began to ring for the starting of the session, I went to my locker to fetch the knives. I put them into the sheaths inside my pants and went into the Assembly lobby to wait for the Prime Minister's arrival. I had previously planned to stab the Prime Minister in the Assembly hall whilst walking to his bench. I watched him walk past and followed him into the Assembly hail. I tried to pull the dagger from the sheath but had difficulty in pulling it out. Eventually I managed to pull it out, but by that time the Prime Minister had already sat down in his bench. I was very nervous and confused that I cannot remember where I stabbed him the first blow, but I aimed at his chest. I remember stabbing him twice and then the people caught hold of me. They beat me up, kicked me and dragged me into lobby. I was disarmed and arrested.

44.

I deny that I am a Communist. I am a Christian and I believe in the Bible. I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me.

45.

The meeting between Dr. Verwoerd and Chief Leabua Jonathan was a contributory fact in my decision to murder Dr. Verwoerd. I say this because I thought the Prime Minister was dealing with the wrong person. Both Dr. Verwoerd and Jonathan were, to my mind, not the real representatives of their countries. I wanted the Paramount Chief of Basutoland to represent the Basuto notion. I wanted to see a government representing all the South African People. I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.

46.

I have a savings account at Barclays Bank, Adderley Street, Cape Town. It contains only a few rand. I deny that I ever received an amount of R5,000 from Pretoria while I was in Mozambique. I did receive about £10 to £15 from my brother for furniture he sold for me. I received no financial support from anyone.

(SGD.) Demetrio Tsafendas

Witness: (SGD.) D.J.V. Troost 23505 D/Sgt.

ANALYSIS OF TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT

Before we discuss the content of Tsafendas's statement, it is important to consider something that Tsafendas told Major Rossouw which has not been placed on record. The following is an extract from Rossouw's testimony to the Commission of Enquiry:

COMMISSION: What was your impression, how does he feel about his deed? Does he regret it, or is he indifferent about it or did he not show any obvious emotion about it?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I shall answer you to the best of my ability. When I originally questioned him, I accused him of being a horrible murderer. To which he answered: "That is what you think, but the world thinks differently!"

Major Rossouw then testified that at a later stage, when he asked Tsafendas again, Tsafendas told him that "he did feel remorse and that he was very sorry about what he had done." Rossouw also told the Commission that Tsafendas "told the truth – I never got the impression that he tried to evade any question. He answered all the questions spontaneously” and he was “totally prepared to answer everything.”³²⁰⁷

We are not in position to know why Tsafendas’s remark that “the world thinks differently” was not written down. What is most likely is that the exchange took place on another occasion, possibly when Rossouw spoke to Tsafendas for the first time, soon after the assassination. What is important is that at that point of time at least, Tsafendas not only had no regrets for killing Dr. Verwoerd but believed that the assassination was applauded by people around the world. He appears to be happy and proud of what he had done.

It is also very important that we have Major Rossouw’s testimony that Tsafendas was “totally prepared to answer everything,” that he did not try “to evade any question” and answered “all the questions spontaneously.” This statement could have been very important for the State vs. Tsafendas, but it was ignored. As we will see, the psychiatrists who examined Tsafendas claimed that he was unable to function on a reasonable level, unable to follow a conversation after fifteen minutes, that he was talking in a disjointed manner and suffered from thought blocking. Major Rossouw, not a psychiatrist but a very experienced interrogator, failed to notice any of these symptoms, not only during this two-day interrogation but throughout the whole time that Tsafendas was in custody and interrogated by him.

Looking at the September 11/12 statement now, we see that Tsafendas refers to something he said previously to General van den Bergh, and presumably this was in the statement that went missing, “I must have made a mistake by telling General van den Bergh this.” Significantly, Tsafendas does not mention the tapeworm. He does not mention it in the next statement either, the one that was taken on September 19. On the contrary, Tsafendas gives clear political reasons for his actions. He states that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with the racial policy.” That he considered Dr. Verwoerd, to be a dictator is an opinion he expressed to many witnesses. In this instance, he does not use the word dictator but says he did not consider Dr. Verwoerd to be a real representative of his country, and he wanted “to see a government representing all the South African people.” He said, “I do not think the nationalist Government is representative of the people and I wanted to see a different government.” Dr. Verwoerd represented only the 13.8 per cent of South Africans who were White and eligible to vote, so Tsafendas was entirely correct. Even though Tsafendas did not employ the word “dictator” for Dr. Verwoerd, it is obvious that this is how he saw him.

³²⁰⁷ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

Furthermore, Tsafendas said he believed that by killing Dr. Verwoerd, “a change of policy would take place.” It is clear that Tsafendas assassinated Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons, hoping that a change would come once the architect of apartheid was “removed.” Stating that apartheid “oppresses” people and there is no freedom under Dr. Verwoerd is another way of calling him a tyrant, the word he had used to more than thirty witnesses.³²⁰⁸

Tsafendas characterises his ideology as political, describing himself as against apartheid, slavery and colonialism and “in favour of all colonies controlled by Belgium, France and Portugal being afforded self-government.” He talked freely about his political past in England, where he participated in political meetings, anti-apartheid gatherings and protests, and where he held up placards, all confirmed by witnesses.³²⁰⁹

At one point, Tsafendas denies that he is a leftist (“I did say previously that I was a leftist but I had to say something”³²¹⁰) or a Communist (“I deny that I am a Communist”³²¹¹). However, at the beginning of his statement he said he was a member of the South African Communist Party in the late 1930s and 1940s, while many people who knew him told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist, even a dangerous Communist.³²¹² As we will see later in this chapter, in 1965 Tsafendas was described and reported to the South African Police as “the largest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”³²¹³ That Tsafendas was a ³²⁰⁸ For example: Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016 and many others.

³²⁰⁹ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³²¹⁰ See Tsafendas’s statement, paragraph 34.

³²¹¹ See Tsafendas’s statement, paragraph 44.

³²¹² For example: Johannes Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Van Vuuren statement to the police, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Robert Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²¹³ See J.J. Botha’s statement on October 3, 1966; Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Communist, was evident even to people who had just met him, as in the case of Father Probst.³²¹⁴ Several witnesses told the author that Tsafendas considered himself a Communist and that he was “preaching” Communism.³²¹⁵ He had even joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party which he had joined during the Greek Civil War.³²¹⁶ Since Tsafendas himself initially admitted his belief to General van den Bergh, the question is, why did he deny it here?

According to Father Minas, Tsafendas said that the Greek-South African policeman at Caledon Square police station tried to become friendly with him and give him “advice.” Tsafendas told the priest that he believed the policeman had been instructed by General van den Bergh to become friendly with him and to play the “good cop” in a “good cop/bad-cop”³²¹⁷ scenario in order to find out more about him. Tsafendas characterised the policeman as “pathetic” and as “van den Bergh’s lackey.” Tsafendas was not even sure if he was Greek, as his name did not sound Greek, and he could not communicate in Greek, although he could speak some Greek. Tsafendas did not give more details about this policeman.³²¹⁸ Michalis Michelis met him in the mid-1980s and said that by then he had retired from the police force. He appeared to be in his mid to late sixties, thus in his mid to late forties when he knew Tsafendas.³²¹⁹

One piece of advice the Greek-South African policeman gave to Tsafendas was to stop saying he was a Communist and Dr. Verwoerd was a dictator because it irritated the ³²¹⁴ Father Hanno Probst statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²¹⁵ For example: Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Andreas Babioulakis in a personal interview, 19 May 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016 and many others.

³²¹⁶ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016; Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³²¹⁷ This was also common practice by the apartheid police (Owusu, 1992: 180; Schalkwyk, 2001: 19; Wieder, 2013: 139; Wilson (The Telegraph, 13 December 2013, ‘Arsenal’s chief executive Ivan Gazidis: Nelson Mandela, dad and the fight against apartheid).

³²¹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³²¹⁹ Michalis Michelis in a personal interview, 12 December 2015.

police and made things worse for himself.”³²²⁰ Tsafendas did not tell Father Minas or anyone else that this policeman was the reason he denied being a Communist or that he had indeed denied being a Communist during interrogation. What he said was that he was “advised” by this man to stop proclaiming his allegiance, so perhaps considered it advantageous to do so at the time. As we will see later, Tsafendas stated frankly in 1976 that he was a Communist then. He would also tell Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in the 1990s that he was a Communist and would die a Communist.¹²³¹³²²¹ We can only assume that Tsafendas denied being a Communist to ease the torture. He had done the same in Portugal in 1952 when he was tortured by the Portuguese, pleading that he was not a Communist anymore. Then in 1963, in order to convince the authorities to give him amnesty and allow him back into Mozambique, he assured them that he was not a Communist and his anti-colonial ideas belonged to the past.

Tsafendas claimed in his police statement that his step-mother asked her brother to rape him when he was nine. In 1946, in Grafton State Hospital, he spoke extensively about his sexual life and past sexual “traumas,” all of which he invented, but he did not mention a rape and instead claimed that his step-mother wanted to have sex with him. Tsafendas brought the rape story up with Dr. Cooper when he examined him for the defence at the summary trial. The author is not in position to know if such a rape occurred. What is almost impossible to believe is that his step-mother asked her brother to do such a thing and that Tsafendas really believed it happened. He spoke negatively about his relationship with his step-mother to two psychiatrists, but never to anyone else. On the contrary, he often described how loving she was and how she treated him as her own child. Tsafendas talked at length about his life and childhood to Fathers Minas, Ioannis and Spiros and invariably praised Marika, calling her mother and not stepmother. Several witnesses, including some who knew Tsafendas since he was a child, declared it impossible that Tsafendas would ever have believed Marika could have done such thing. Even if there had been a rape, he could never have believed Marika was the instigator. In addition, several witnesses told the author that at the time of the alleged rape, there was no uncle in Mozambique.³²²²

³²²⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³²²¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

³²²² For example: Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January

Later in life, Tsafendas said two claims were necessary to make an “insane act” look real and convince someone you are mad:

- a. To have a family history of insanity and
- b. To have a childhood trauma.

The above seems to explain why Tsafendas said negative things about his step-mother to the psychiatrists, but not to anyone else or to the police, since at the time, he was not trying to prove he was insane. On the contrary, his statements do not show any sign of schizophrenia. It is very possible that Tsafendas made the rape claim to the police because he knew he might need to pretend madness to avoid torture or worse as a consequence of killing Dr. Verwoerd. If a mad act became necessary, having a childhood trauma in his past would add authenticity. The fact that he had talked about childhood traumas at the Grafton State Hospital back in 1946, without mentioning the rape, but by making up another absurd claim, would further strengthen his claim. However, the author has not been able to establish for a fact why Tsafendas made a claim of rape or whether such an incident ever occurred.

Could Tsafendas’s statement to Major Rossouw have been as a result of torture and intimidation? Certainly not for two reasons:

- What Tsafendas said about his political ideas, for example being anti-apartheid and anti-colonialist, is something he told several witnesses. They were his own, undisguised beliefs and no force was needed to make him say these things. Although Tsafendas is quite mild in describing Dr. Verwoerd and does not employ his usual denunciation of him as a dictator and a tyrant, he gets close by declaring that he is not the real presentative of all South African people. Tsafendas’s participation in anti-apartheid activities and demonstrations in London was confirmed to the police by Edward Furness’s statement.³²²³ Tsafendas said in his statement that he hoped a change of policy would take place after the death of Dr. Verwoerd, exactly what he told witnesses several years later.
- Assuming Tsafendas had been forced to make this statement, what was its purpose? It was not used during his summary trial or by the Commission of Enquiry and it was not publicised at the time, nor even later. Why would the police force Tsafendas to make such a statement when it was not going to be used anywhere and no one was going to see it?

2013; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015, and several others.

³²²³ Edward Furness statement to the police 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

Perhaps the best indication that the statement represented Tsafendas's true feelings is that the ideas he set out were the same, cherished beliefs he had reiterated many times to numerous witnesses. If they were couched in milder terms, that would be natural, considering his circumstances at the time.

With reference to Tsafendas's statement about the psychiatrists' testimony at the summary trial, Professor Tuviah Zabow, a forensic psychiatrist, commented as follows:

"I have read the information with interest particularly the collateral background provided. Much of this was not available at time of psychiatric assessments or in the Court. Of interest is the Tsafendas statement which was done early on the investigation and much of the information he must have been able to provide or a least agreed upon if coerced to sign. If he was psychotic and unable to marshal his thoughts, this would not have been possible. This is significant in relation to the expert testimonies which are so central to the discussion that all these were provided without background factual information at than stage."³²²⁴

Neither Reyner van Zyl, the clinical psychologist who examined Tsafendas for the defence during the summary trial, nor Professors Alban Burke and Tuviah Zabow saw any signs of schizophrenia in the statement, nor any of the symptoms described by the psychiatrists in the court.³²²⁵ Tsafendas's statement was not given to his defence team and probably not to the State either. Van Zyl stated that "those sentiments expressed in the statement that he made to the police weren't ever mentioned to any of the psychiatrists." Van Zyl believes the statement should have been given to all of those who examined Tsafendas.³²²⁶

Professor Alban Burke told the author said about Tsafendas's statement:

"If he had been psychotic at the time that he was committing the murder, he would have been psychotic at the time of his arrest, because it doesn't disappear like that, so you would have picked up traces of that already in his statement. His statement would not have made sense; you would have had a lot of irrelevant detail in there, so it is, again, not the picture of somebody who committed a crime whilst he was under, or in, a state of psychosis."³²²⁷

³²²⁴ Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 3 September 2016.

³²²⁵ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 4 April 2016; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016; Professor Tuviah Zabow in a personal interview, 11 April 2016;

³²²⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³²²⁷ Professor Alban Burke in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

Denis Goldberg told the author that Tsafendas's statement "clearly shows that he was politically motivated [for killing Verwoerd] and not insane ... the man is determined to kill the Prime Minister because of the racism... [Tsafendas] has a clear political opinion about racism."³²²⁸ Professor John Dugard told the author that "the statement completely confirms the view that Tsafendas was not insane. It reads like a very normal story of a politically informed person, angry with apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd, determined to make a change with nothing to lose personally - really an incredible statement which was carefully concealed."³²²⁹

STATEMENTS

CONRAD OELEFSEN³²³⁰

White male, Durban, 5.18 pm.

I know Demetrio Tsafendas by sight. During 1963, about June, I met this man in Kitwe. He borrowed a lorry-jack from me one day. I often saw this chap afterwards. He was always with a few Bantu in a five-ton truck. I do not know whether he was the owner of the truck. He was carting fish — Luapala river to the Buchu compound in Kitwe, where it was sold. I saw this man for a period of about five months in Kitwe. I did not converse with this man at any time. During that period I did not know his name. I recognised him from a photo in the Sunday Tribune of September 11, 1966. I know nothing else about this man.

COMMENTS ON OELEFSEN'S STATEMENT

The report of the Commission of Enquiry states that "Tsafendas denies that he ever visited that country, and says that he did not leave Portugal until August or September, 1963."³²³¹

³²²⁸ Denis Goldberg in a personal interview, 12 April 2016.

³²²⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³²³⁰ Conrad Oelefsen statement to the police, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

³²³¹ Report of the COE, Chapter II B, Paragraph. 41. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

RUI FORJAZ³²³²

Beira, in a Memo to: Mr M.R. Hall.

I presume you know by now that Dimitris Tsafendas, the assassin of Dr. Verwoerd, worked on the Beira/Feruka oil pipeline for a very short time, the Police came and took him away. When he was freed, he called on us to claim a few days' wages with overtime Mr Ballard authorized me to pay him the amount of 1.644#40 as per copy of Debit Note no. 142 attached. This Debit Note is signed by him. I thought this information might be of interest to you.

Yours Faithfully

Rui Forjaz

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The Johannesburg Sunday Times published that day a strikingly inaccurate portrait of Tsafendas by several anonymous "leading psychiatrists and psychologists," presenting him as "the classic picture of an incipient or an actual paranoid schizophrenic." Basing their diagnosis on scraps of information emerging in the first four days since the assassination, they pegged him as feckless, rootless, lacking in motivation and suffering from an inferiority complex. Contradicting evidence that Tsafendas was reared in a loving family environment, they declared that he was rejected by his family and spent his early years in an atmosphere of hostility. From this, they said, could have developed a fear and distrust of the outside world. This was a travesty of the truth, which, as testified by several people who knew him well, was that Tsafendas was gregarious, talkative and open to people. The psychiatrists concluded that Tsafendas did not get married because it was usual for "paranoiac-schizophrenic" people to see others as "threats," and women in particular could be seen in this light.³²³³

The experts were presumably unaware of Tsafendas's association with Helen Daniels, and, as we will soon see, his interest in marrying Sybie Barendilia or Stella. The medics also referred to Tsafendas allegedly being called "Blackie" at school, something reported by ³²³² Rui Forjaz in a Memo to Mr. M.R. Hall, 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³²³³ Smith (Sunday Times), 11 September 1966: 1, 'Classic picture of a psychotic.'

Sakellaridis, the racist Greek editor and supporter of Dr. Verwoerd who had never met Tsafendas and heard it by someone who do not even know if he really knew Tsafendas, which turned out to be a lie.³²³⁴ We will not examine every, invariably mistaken, deduction carried in this ludicrous report, but it is hardly surprising that the “leading psychiatrists and psychologists” mentioned remained unnamed.

On the same page, however, the same newspaper carried a markedly different story, in which Tsafendas was described as “a man who loved South Africa and seemed to worry about what he believed to be social injustices.” In addition, under the headline “Assassin – man with a chip on his shoulder,” the paper’s Durban correspondent wrote that Tsafendas had impressed the police in that city as being deeply concerned about South Africa’s Immorality Law. The story said he frequently visited Durban’s North Beach restaurants. Tsafendas was well liked by Mr. Willemse, once his landlord, who described him as a “sophisticated, friendly and well-spoken man.” On the other hand, workers at the Mandini, Zululand factory described Tsafendas as a “violent sort of person” on account of his fight with Nikolas Vergos. A fellow interpreter at Durban court described him as a “whiner” who often complained about the working conditions and his lack of money.³²³⁵

The Sunday Tribune of Durban reported what it called an “amazing blunder” concerning Tsafendas’s status. It said he was declared a prohibited immigrant in 1950 and his name was still on the Stop List for visas. Yet this year he was granted permanent residence. The paper said attempts to confirm this with government departments drew a complete blank.³²³⁶

³²³⁴ Smith (Sunday Times), 11 September 1966: 1, ‘Classic picture of a psychotic.’

³²³⁵ Sunday Times, 11 September 1966: 1, 8, ‘Assassin-man with a chip on his shoulder.’

³²³⁶ Sunday Tribune, 11 September 1966: 2, ‘Tsafendas-amazing blunder is disclosed.’

MONDAY, 12 SEPTEMBER 1966

LT. COL. VAN WYK ARRIVES IN MOZAMBIQUE

On this day, Lt. Col. P.J.P. van Wyk of the South African Police arrived in Lourenço Marques to investigate Tsafendas's past and to interview anyone who knew him or might have useful information about him. His local assistant was sub-Inspector A. Vaz of the Portuguese police, who explained to van Wyk the strict instructions he had received from his headquarters in Lisbon. These were that he should help with the investigation where possible but that he must not become so deeply involved that other organisations might learn of it with possible negative repercussions for his government. Vaz briefed van Wyk about Tsafendas's arrest and release at Beira during 1964-65 and undertook to send a copy of the file to General van den Bergh.

Captain Rui Távora, the Police District Commander in Beira, also gave assistance to van Wyk. This officer circulated an official request for anyone knowing Tsafendas to come forward for interview; he provided a room where such interviews could take place.³²³⁷ As we will see, a copy of the Beira arrest file was duly dispatched to General van den Bergh. However, as instructed by sub-Inspector Vaz's superiors in Lisbon, "all information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique" was left out.

STATEMENTS

BRENDA JESSIE NICHOLSON³²³⁸

Teller at the Adderley Street Branch of the Barclays Bank, Cape Town.

She recognized Tsafendas as the "customer who had shortly previous been to the bank to my counter. I could not place the transaction but have since checked my records. I now remember that this man had been to the bank to purchase some American Dollars. I remember having asked him why he wanted the dollars. He said he was going to Mozambique. I asked him to bring me his passport. According to my sheets I have on ³²³⁷ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 12 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³²³⁸ Brenda Jessie Nicholson statement to the police, 12 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

1.9.1966 sold 80 American Dollars for R57.78. I am sure that this deal was made with the accused. I also remember that the money he gave me was very dirty, I think all R2-notes.

Statement taken by D/Sergt. D.J.V. Troost.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The biggest story of the day, in the Pretoria News, said rumours that Tsafendas had hanged himself in his cell “spread today like wildfire.” A police spokesman dismissed the report with a laconic, “We know nothing about it.”³²³⁹ Most South African newspapers, with Dr. Verwoerd’s funeral over, refocussed on Tsafendas, describing him as a “drifter and an outcast”³²⁴⁰ and listing his deportations from Britain and America.³²⁴¹ A front page story in The Cape Times, headed “Tsafendas in turmoil all his life,” presented a lengthy and largely accurate account of Tsafendas’s life, stressing that though he was deported from Britain, the United States and Mozambique and had been treated for mental illness, he still managed to gain employment in South Africa’s Houses of Parliament.³²⁴²

The Daily Dispatch quoted a spokesman for the British Home Office as saying Tsafendas was given permission to stay in Britain for three months but at the end of that period he appeared to have no money and was required to leave. He did not leave voluntarily and a deportation order was enforced on December 3, 1959. US Immigration Service records showed that Tsafendas was deported from the United States three times.³²⁴³ The Toronto Globe and Mail quoted US officials in Washington as saying that Tsafendas entered the United States by crossing the Canadian border at St. Stephen, New Brunswick.³²⁴⁴

³²³⁹ Pretoria News, 12 September 1966: 1, ‘Suicide of Tsafendas rumoured.’

³²⁴⁰ The Cape Times, 12 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas in turmoil all his life.’

³²⁴¹ Daily Dispatch, 12 September 1966: 2, ‘Tsafendas was deported from Britain and America’; The Globe and Mail, 12 September 1966: 2, Dr. Verwoerd slayer entered USA from Canada’; The Rhodesia Herald, 12 September 1966: 1, ‘Britain deported Tsafendas.’

³²⁴² The Cape Times, 12 September 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas in turmoil all his life.’

³²⁴³ Daily Dispatch, 12 September 1966: 2, ‘Tsafendas was deported from Britain and America.’

³²⁴⁴ The Globe and Mail, 12 September 1966: 2, Dr. Verwoerd slayer entered USA from Canada.’

VORSTER: “NO FILE ON TSAFENDAS”

The most important announcement came from John Vorster on his last day as Minister of Justice, Prisons and Police, and the day before he became Prime Minister. Vorster declared that the South African Security Police had no file on Tsafendas. The previous day, Die Beeld had claimed that the Security Police had a file on Tsafendas. Vorster denounced the report as “devoid of all truth.” He said many published reports were unduly sensational and some were totally untrue. He promised that a complete statement would be made when the time arrived. “The whole matter is still being investigated continuously and after the trial it will, as is proper, be disclosed to the public.”³²⁴⁵

As it turned out, Vorster was “misinformed” and the report was entirely correct since the Security Police did in fact hold a file on Tsafendas. Indeed, three further files on Tsafendas had been created by the Security Police, but only one could be found in September 1966. According to the report of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd’s death:

*“Tsafendas’s name was in fact on the so-called “stop list”, and the Security Police had had a copy of the list since 1964. However, General van den Bergh was not aware of this when he made his statement to the Prime Minister, and in any case the denial did not refer to this list.”*³²⁴⁶

Unknown to Die Beeld when the report was printed, and unknown to General van den Bergh when the denial was made, was the fact that there was an old Police file, W.D. 10/10/4102, on Demetrios Tsafandakis. It was not until 13th September, 1966, that this file was traced by the Security Police as a result of information found in the files of the Department of the Interior. It is true that the file was found in a building which is now being used by the Security Police, but it was explained to the Commission that the room in which it was found is actually used to store so-called “dead files” of the Divisional Commissioner of the Witwatersrand.

This file contained, inter alia, the letters dated 13th October, 1941, and 20th October, 1941, quoted in paragraph 25 of Chapter II A of this report. It also appears from these letters that in 1941 the Commissioner of Police in Pretoria had a file 6/1835/3697 (the correct reference is 6/835/3697) on Demetrios Tsafendakis.

³²⁴⁵ Pretoria News, 12 September 1966: 11, ‘Vorster: Police had no file on Tsafendas.’

³²⁴⁶ Report of the COE, Chapter XI, Paragraph 4 December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

The Security Police Branch was established in 1947, and in 1950 files which were of importance to the Security Police were transferred to them. This file was apparently not considered important, and was destroyed in 1963.

*... There were also two other files of the Witwatersrand Division, W.D. 10/3/305 (see paragraph 16 of Chapter II A) and W.D. 2/2078/366, but the former cannot be traced and the latter was destroyed in 1946.*³²⁴⁷

Thus, according to the Commission, General van den Bergh was not aware of the existence of the file and inadvertently misinformed Vorster. Then the very next day the file was found, but Vorster did not make a new announcement to correct his mistake. Eventually the Commission discovered that there were FOUR files in total on Tsafendas and although two have been destroyed, the fourth had disappeared and no-one was able to locate it. What was in Tsafendas's missing file is something that the author is not in position to know, as the file is still missing.

The Commission's report, like most of the reports by similar Commissions at the time of apartheid, whitewashed the negligence of the Security Police and covered up for Vorster's apparent "mistake," attributing it to misinformation. This, of course, could have been true. However, the possibility that Vorster deliberately lied about the existence of the file in order to protect the Security Police, cannot be excluded. Vorster's waywardness with the truth had already been demonstrated in 1964 when he publicly denied that political prisoners were tortured despite widespread reports to the contrary. It will later be proven that Vorster had lied.³²⁴⁸

³²⁴⁷ Report of the COE, Chapter XI, Paragraph 5. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³²⁴⁸ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 198.

TUESDAY, 13 SEPTEMBER 1966

CONFIDENTIAL SECURITY REPORT OF D/S/O/ GRIST OF THE SPECIAL BRANCH OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE IN UMTALI³²⁴⁹

I refer to report of even referenced dated 8th September, 1966, from P.S.B.O. Mashonaland in connection with the above.

The Katherine HARALAMBOS mentioned therein has been identified as being identical to Mrs. Katherine Cleo PNEUMA (nee TSAFANDAKIS, born Lourenço Marques 1928).

According to Mrs. PNEUMA her father was named MICHAEL TSAFANDAKIS and was a marine engineer carrying on business in Lourenço Marques. Mr. TSAFANDAKIS evidently died in Pretoria four years ago, but her mother, Maria Tsafandakis is still resident there. Mrs. TSAFANDAKIS commutes between two daughters and a son, all resident at various addresses in Pretoria but the only one that Mrs. PNEUMA remembers is that of her younger sister, Mrs. Helen VLACHOPOULOS, 39 Quagga Road, Proclamation Hill, Pretoria.

Catherine Cleo PNEUMA is married to a Greek National Gerald Stephen Peter PNEUMA (Bn. Greece, 15/8/13, ent. Umtali June 1921) who carries the business of General Dealer in Marandellas under the trading name of "Marandellas Trading Company."

Mrs. PNEUMA alleges that DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS is the illegitimate son of her father who was born some years prior to her father marrying her mother. Although DIMITRIO was much older than his step brother/sisters, he nevertheless spent school holidays with the family and to all intents and purposes it was understood by Mrs. PNEUMA and her brother and sisters that he was a member of the family... his complexion was such – as also his manner – that he passed as a European.

It was about this time -1937- that Mrs. PNEUMA states she saw DIMITRIO for the last time for many years, in fact it was some twenty-six years later than she saw him, this time in Pretoria. She was visiting his sisters and mother there where she learned that DIMITRIO had 'turned-up' and was hanging around sponging. He was then met by her at her sister's house and within a short time she could agree with the other members of the family that he was unbalanced, talking nonsense most of the time -to the extent that the young children of the family were laughing at him. He had scrounged money for ... (indecipherable). One of the most outstanding recalls Mrs. PNEUMA had of her half-brother at the time (1964) was that he talked on and on for hours about his travels in various parts of the world and also discussed the bible and Religious teaching. He was well dressed and gave a good appearance although as far as she could see he had no visible means of support.

³²⁴⁹ Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

The next time she saw this man was when he suddenly arrived unannounced in Marandellas. He made considerable inquiry in Marandellas to locate her and from what she says she was thoroughly embarrassed by the intimation that he was her brother and that she did eventually see him in the store, after a short while, she told him to go and that he did. She said that during the time she spoke to him, he was talking rubbish although she could not remember outright to what in fact he had actually said. When he left, he told her that he intended leaving for Portuguese East Africa via Umtali (this would appear the visit to the country that he made in July 1964 when he entered via Bulawayo). The next time she heard of him was during the Easter holiday 1965 which she and her husband spent in Beira, whilst there they learnt that he had been in Prison in Beira. The reason for his detention was not known. The next and last encounter with him occurred when his name and photograph appeared at the front of the Rhodesia Herald.

From other sources it is learnt that the foregoing are well known facts among the more senior and well established Greek families, both in Marandellas and in Salisbury. It is also reliably reported that the TSAFANDAKIS family hold a good reputation among the Greek community and there are suggestions that MICHAEL³²⁵⁰ TSAFANDAKIS made a big mistake in attempting to raise his illegitimate son as a full member of his family.

At the time of the interview Mrs. PNEUMA was considerably upset and her opinion and facts might be slightly biased and inaccurate. She was unable to assist further with information as to Dimitrio's contacts and movements.

³²⁵⁰ Michael is the English for the Spanish/Portuguese Miguel. Michalis in Greek.

COMMENTS OF PNEFMA TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HER STATEMENT

In an interview with the author, Katerina Pnefma said:

“Of course I was upset! He [Tsafendas] had ruined my life. I knew he had the moment I heard about it [the assassination]. I knew the destruction he had caused us. We had to be protected from reporters. My sister-in-law – my brother’s wife – and my two sisters at their businesses, the Afrikaans people would come and spit at them. Their houses, their windows were broken. They used to throw stones. We suffered an enormous amount. Now, I lived in a small town, so people would turn around to see me, to look at me, because I was Tsafendas’s sister.... I had this community, in which I was very high up in business, and we knew the whole little town, in which, of course, after that, I never felt the same. And, as I said before, we never went anywhere, anyway. And, after that, we were all stigmatised. My sister, Michalis’ mother, also never went anywhere. My poor sister that is now alone, she also... none of us, we were all totally destroyed. From then on my brother’s career was at a stop. He never went higher; he remained as he was. So he destroyed my brother’s career. He destroyed us as a family, because wherever we went, they knew who we were.

Then the police came – a lieutenant and two policemen – and I said, ‘Look, I have nothing to do with this man. He is only related to us from our father, but we have had nothing much to do with him.’ I remember it as if it was yesterday. I was by myself in the house ... no, they [the policemen] didn’t have a typing machine; they were keeping notes ... I didn’t say anything. I was so shocked that I don’t think... all I could think of was, ‘what are we going to do now he has disgraced us?’ I don’t remember saying that he was unbalanced, he certainly was not ... none of thought he was unbalanced. He was perfectly sane. He was very clever, cleverer than any of us [the family]. I must have meant that he had crazy political ideas, I don’t remember saying that at all... I remember saying that he was talking rubbish! He was always talking rubbish, but I couldn’t tell the police what exactly he was saying! He was saying that the South Africans are Nazis, he was calling Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student ... that us and most whites were exploiting the black Rhodesians ... he was calling the Greeks racists, saying that one day the Rhodesians would kick us all out and take back what we stole from them ... that one day the Blacks in South Africa would throw the Whites into the sea ...

He believed Mozambique and South Africa should have a colourful flag, like a rainbow or something in order for each colour to represent each race! Have you heard anything more absurd? He used to say that Jesus Christ was socialist and that if he was alive today he would have been a revolutionary, fighting apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique! Can you believe it? Well, this is what he was saying, all this kind of nonsense! How could I have told all these things to the police? They would have said ‘Why didn’t you report him to the police since he had such crazy ideas? Didn’t you know he was dangerous?’ You can’t imagine how many people had told my poor father to do something with him and his crazy political ideas. You can’t imagine how many! Even my poor mother told him to talk to him because he would get us into trouble someday, as he was often doing, but my dad did nothing. It was actually all his fault. He taught him all these things, but my father was a cautious man, he was not like Dimitri; he wouldn’t go around saying all these stupidities. His son was the opposite; he couldn’t keep his mouth shut ... what about the other thing? He changed his name because he thought it was insulting to be called Tsafantakis since this was the name given to our ancestors by the Turks! Wasn’t this nonsense?

I must have made a mistake or a lie to the police about seeing him for the first time after twenty or so years in Marandellas. I had seen him in Pretoria the previous Christmas [1963]. Yes, it was also a mistake or a lie that he came unannounced in Rhodesia. I had invited him to come meet my husband...”³²⁵¹

Finally, Tsafendas’s step-mother, two half-sisters and their husbands, his half-brother and his wife, all gave evidence to the Commission of Enquiry. Every one of them said clearly that Tsafendas “was definitely not insane.”³²⁵²

STATEMENTS

CHRISTOFFEL JOHANNES VAN VUUREN³²⁵³

White Male, 56 years old, Mandini, Zululand.

I am employed at the Mandini Paper Factory in Zululand as a security officer. I’ve been in the service of this factory for the past seven years. I have never been a member of the South African police, but have been part of the South African Permanent Force. At 5:55 pm ³²⁵¹ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³²⁵² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³²⁵³ Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

on Friday 05/07/1965, while I was on duty at the factory, a man who was known to me as Demetrios Tsafendas came to my office and showed me a wound to his right forearm. The wound looked serious and bleeding profusely. Demetrios told me that he was assaulted by one Nick Vergos, who is known generally among us as "Nicky the Greek, with a razor." I then took Demetrios to the emergency room, where he received treatment for the wound. I ordered him to come to me after the treatment. He came back and told me the whole story - I can only remember that he said they had an argument, but I cannot remember why. At the time of this incident Demetrios Tsafendas was employed by Fraser & Chalmers, an engineering company, working for our factory at Mandini. Nick Vergos was also employed by the same company. I fetched Nick Vergos at the recreation club and brought him to my office. On the way to the office Vergos admitted that he assaulted Demetrios with a razor, because the latter tried to assault him with a knife. Meanwhile, Demetrios Tsafendas was waiting at my office for us.

I summoned the SA police from Inyoni and while we waited for their arrival, the two spoke very hostilely and in a foreign language with each other. It was clear that they loathed each other. I suspect that they spoke Greek to each other. Among other things, Vergos told me in English that Demetrios was not a Greek, but a kaffir and a communist. However, I did not pay much attention to their comments and bad mouthing. The SA Police of Inyoni later came and removed both of them. I later learned that Vergos was found guilty and fined and that he paid his fine.

During the afternoon of 05.08.1965, Father Hanno of Mangete Catholic Church came to my office to get some information about a certain person. While Hanno and I stood together chatting, Demetrios Tsafendas stood just outside my office with his arm wrapped in a bandage. Father Hanno pointed to Demetrios and remarked to me: "That man there is a dangerous man - he is a communist. He can also speak nine different languages. Why don't you get rid of him?" That's all he said to me regarding Demetrios Tsafendas. However, I am not much bothered by him, because he (Hanno) is a man who likes to talk a lot and jump to his own conclusions. After Hanno spoke to me, I one day mentioned to Demetrios' employer (Mr. Woods) what Hanno had told me about Demetrios. Mr. Woods then told me that Demetrios will be dismissed anyway.

A few days after my conversation with Mr. Woods, Demetrios left Mandini and about a month afterwards I bumped into him again in West Street, Durban. He recognized me first and greeted me. I then asked him where he was working, which he then said that he does not work, but that he is going to the Cape. He did not say when nor what he would be doing in the Cape. We went our separate ways and I never saw him again. One morning a few days after the attack on Dr. Verwoerd, I noticed the killer's portrait in a newspaper and immediately recognized him as Demetrios Tsafendas that previously worked for the company Fraser & Chalmers at Mandini and who was involved in the assault case.

Mandini 13 October 1966 at 10.00 am.

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable name)

VORSTER SELECTED AS PRIME MINISTER

On September 13, exactly a week after Dr. Verwoerd's death and after Leader of the House Barend J. Schoeman withdrew from the contest, Justice Minister John Vorster was chosen unanimously to be South Africa's new Prime Minister.³²⁵⁴ Vorster was only thirteenth in order of party seniority³²⁵⁵ and owed his win to the support he got from the National Party's extreme right wingers, the Broederbond, of which he was a member (Broeder number 3737³²⁵⁶), and the Dutch Reformed Church, of which his brother Jacobus was a leading minister.³²⁵⁷

In his first statements after his election, Vorster called for unity between English- and Afrikaans-speaking people for the sake of the fatherland. Emphasising his concern for the security of the state, he declared apartheid to be the only practical policy meeting the interests of all sections of the community. Vorster reaffirmed Dr. Verwoerd's assurances that South Africa would not interfere in the affairs of neighbouring states and asked that South Africa

³²⁵⁴ TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man.'

³²⁵⁵ Miller, 2016: 29.

³²⁵⁶ Bell and Ntsebeza, 2003: 28; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: A290.

³²⁵⁷ TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man.'

should be accorded the same consideration and be left alone to work out her own salvation.³²⁵⁸

Vorster also promptly gave notice that he would follow in the doctrinaire footsteps of his predecessor, with apartheid remaining the country's guiding principle, promising to "walk further along the road set by Dr. Verwoerd."³²⁵⁹ He signalled that there would be no easing of security measures by announcing that he would retain responsibility for the police. Like Dr. Verwoerd, Vorster claimed that apartheid was the will of God, "I believe that we still have a long way to go in the process of fulfilling our calling and that God who has so called us through His Grace, will not abandon us until we have completed our task."³²⁶⁰ He then declared "I believe in the Nationalist Party and its principles and the full implementation of them with all their consequences" and praised his predecessor saying that no man in the history of South Africa had done more to promote national unity than Dr. Verwoerd. He added "as far as the people of this country are concerned, they want to come together and to stand together not because they are being forced to do so by outside circumstances but because they and I believe in this." He concluded by saying that as far as God gave it to a man to work out his own destiny, the destiny of South Africa would be decided in this country by South Africans themselves.³²⁶¹

Predictably, Vorster's accession disappointed the English-speaking press while delighting the Afrikaans media. The best the English newspapers appeared to hope for was some softening of Vorster's hard line against liberalism under the responsibilities of national leadership. The Cape Argus pointed out that "a demonstration of clemency would not detract from the complexion of strength or from the conviction of all South Africans that they are opposed to any interference in their affairs." However, the Star feared that Vorster's past record rendered the outlook for freedom bleak.³²⁶²

The Afrikaans press portrayed Vorster's appointment as evidence of the continuity of principles within the Nationalist Party, demonstrating the rewards of unity and solidarity. Die

³²⁵⁸ South Africa's New Prime Minister. Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³²⁵⁹ The New York Times, 14 September 1966: 1, 'South African Party Picks Vorster as Prime Minister.'

³²⁶⁰ Mzimela, 1980: 155; van Jaarsveld, 1977: 17.

³²⁶¹ Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³²⁶² Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

Burger said Vorster had become a controversial figure because of “the hard and unpleasant task which Dr. Verwoerd gave him,” but the paper considered he was well equipped for the highest office and expressed confidence that he would “grow into it.” It noted that it had become a familiar phenomenon “to sing praise at the end of a Premier’s career, which began with prophecies of doom.” Afrikaner reaction generally was a closing of ranks in support of a necessarily strong leader. As for the South African Broadcasting Corporation, the British ambassador Sir Hugh Stephenson, said it “indulged in fulsome praise of Vorster, which at times was reminiscent of the adulation heaped on Hitler or Stalin.”³²⁶³ The New York Times said that South Africa’s Nationalists had “flouted world opinion in the most dramatic manner possible by selecting Vorster as their new Prime Minister” since “none of the other prospective successors to Dr. Verwoerd symbolise so utterly the Republic’s oppressive racial policies and police-state laws ...”³²⁶⁴

Six days after he became Prime Minister, a confidential report by the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office compared Vorster to Dr. Verwoerd in these terms:

“Vorster apparently did not share Dr. Verwoerd’s idealistic convictions about the policy of apartheid in the sense of separate development in equality. Dr. Verwoerd, despite his preeminence in Afrikaner politics - which Mr. Vorster does not share, was himself never able entirely to carry his followers with him in support of the very great efforts and expenditure he wished to devote to his conception of apartheid.”³²⁶⁵

The Portuguese newspaper Portugal Democratico announced Vorster’s win in an editorial entitled “South Africa’s Hitler.” It said, “It would be hard to find in all of Africa a man more extreme in his opinions about racism, more obstinate in the application of a dogma and more persuaded of the justice of his convictions.”³²⁶⁶ Very soon, Vorster appeared to justify the newspaper’s argument by placing old Nazi supporters and inmates from the internment camps of the Second World War into high positions in the security apparatus. The best known of them were General Hendrik van den Bergh, who became head of state security, and P.J. Rieketer who became his economic advisor.³²⁶⁷

³²⁶³ Telegram No. 525 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³²⁶⁴ The New York Times, 14 September 1966: 46, ‘South African Party picks Vorster as Prime Minister.’

³²⁶⁵ Confidential letter from the Foreign and Commonwealth Offices to Certain Missions. 19 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³²⁶⁶ Portugal Democratico, October 1966: 1, 3, ‘O Hitler da Africa do Sul.’

³²⁶⁷ Marx, 2011b: 559; Wilkins and Strydom, 1979: 107.

JOHN VORSTER'S BRIEF BIOGRAPHY³²⁶⁸

John Vorster (1915-1983) was the thirteenth of fourteen children of a wealthy Afrikaner farmer. He studied law at Stellenbosch University,³²⁶⁹ graduating with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1936 and a Bachelor of Law in 1938. His first job was Registrar for the Judge President of the Cape, Justice H.S. van Zyl.³²⁷⁰ Although he graduated as a barrister, he practised as an attorney in Port Elizabeth.³²⁷¹ At the age of twenty-six, on December 20, 1941, Vorster married a former fellow student at Stellenbosch, Martini Malan, and they raised two boys and a girl. Martini became active on the public scene, managing Vorster's political campaigns after a spending time as a social, worker.³²⁷²

Vorster was a fanatical Nazi supporter and a leading member of South Africa's own pro-Nazi paramilitary organization, the Ossewabrandwag (OB). He first became a "Stormjaer" (Storm Trooper),³²⁷³ then, aged twenty-five in 1941, and later was appointed a "general" in the Port Elizabeth district.³²⁷⁴ In 1942, he said of the OB, "We stand for Christian Nationalism, which is an ally of National Socialism. You can call this anti-democratic dictatorship if you wish. In Italy, it is called Fascism, in Germany, National Socialism, and in South Africa, Christian Nationalism."³²⁷⁵ Later that year, after expressing his admiration for Adolf Hitler and his contempt for democracy, Vorster was arrested as a Nazi agent and spent fourteen months in an internment camp at Koffiefontein in the Orange Free State.³²⁷⁶

³²⁶⁸ For more about Vorster see: D'Oliveira, J. (1977) Vorster – the Man; Giliomee, H. (2012) The Last Afrikaner Leaders: a Supreme Test of Power; Schrire, R. (ed.) (1994) Leadership in the Apartheid State: From Malan to de Klerk; Terblanche, H.O. (1983) John Vorster: Ob-General en Afrikanervegter.

³²⁶⁹ TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man.'

³²⁷⁰ Centre for African Studies, 1978: 2.

³²⁷¹ Uys (The Guardian), 12 September 1983: 8, 'Embitter leader, lies a spent force.'

³²⁷² Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.'

³²⁷³ Moodie, 1975: 257; Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.'

³²⁷⁴ TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man.'

³²⁷⁵ Bunting, 1986: 98; Okoth, 2006: 160; The New York Times, 25 July 1985: 22, 'Many of South Africa's leaders were pro-Nazi.'

³²⁷⁶ Legum and Legum, 1964b: 28; TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man.'

He was prisoner No. 2229/42 in Hut 48, Camp 1,³²⁷⁷ and at one point, he staged a hunger strike.³²⁷⁸ His wife was not allowed to tell the rest of his family where he was being held, so she sent a telegram reading “John is staying at the King’s Hotel,” and they got the message.³²⁷⁹ It was there that he met fellow proto-Nazi inmate, H.J van den Bergh.³²⁸⁰ They bonded quickly³²⁸¹ and before long van den Bergh was Vorster’s security advisor, closest confidante and best friend.³²⁸² Vorster was released on parole in January 1944 and placed under house arrest in Robertson.³²⁸³

Throughout his life, Vorster maintained that what he did during World War Two “was right.”³²⁸⁴ His views were too extreme even for the National Party, at least in those early days. In 1948, when the National Party came to power, it turned down his application for membership on grounds that he “believed in the ‘authoritarian state’ principle and advocated the destruction of parties.”³²⁸⁵ Rejected by the NP, he stood for Parliament on the old Afrikaner Party ticket and lost by four votes.³²⁸⁶ However, times changed and not long after the Sharpeville massacre, Dr. Verwoerd named Vorster as Minister of Justice, apparently signalling a hard-line approach to the enemies of apartheid.³²⁸⁷ In his first speech in that office, he made his intentions clear, declaring that “the rights of free speech, assembly and protest are getting out of hand.” Subsequent clampdowns in these areas earned him the nickname “Jackboot John” in some opposition newspapers, which took to caricaturing him as a jackbooted Nazi.³²⁸⁸

Fanatically committed to apartheid, an anti-Semite and anti-Communist,³²⁸⁹ Vorster targeted South Africans of a liberal disposition, arguing that “wittingly or unwittingly,” ³²⁷⁷ Bunting, 1986: 98.

³²⁷⁸ Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, ‘John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.’

³²⁷⁹ Woods, 1987: 2.

³²⁸⁰ Fullard, 2004: 349,

³²⁸¹ O’Meara, 1996: xxxvii.

³²⁸² Rotberg, 1983: 13-14.

³²⁸³ Bunting, 1986: 99.

³²⁸⁴ TIME, 28 June 1976: 11, ‘Vorster: Man on a wagon train.’

³²⁸⁵ The Economist, 17 September 1966: 1119, ‘South Africa: Victory for the hero of the white ideal’; Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, ‘John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67’; TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, ‘South Africa: The security man.’

³²⁸⁶ Centre for African Studies, 1978: 2.

³²⁸⁷ The Economist, 17 September 1966: 1119, ‘South Africa: Victory for the hero of the white ideal’; TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, ‘South Africa: The security man.’

³²⁸⁸ Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, ‘John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.’

³²⁸⁹ Bunting, 1986: 73-77.

liberals were “the prime promoters of Communism.”³²⁹⁰ He expressed his sorrow that the sons of good white South African parents should turn to violence in opposing the Government. Vorster was greatly admired by Afrikaners. He was seen as the man who had secured their safety by turning the police into a highly efficient force and effectively destroying the illegal opposition to the government. Even the English-speaking South Africans gave Vorster some credit, although he was hated by White liberals and non-Whites.³²⁹¹ It was Vorster who engineered the passage of such brutal laws as the Anti-Sabotage Act and the 90-day (and subsequently the 180-day) detention law. He justified his actions by declaring that he was “at war with the enemies of the volk.”³²⁹²

In 1962, as Minister of Justice, Vorster presented the General Law Amendment Bill giving the government sweeping authority over South African citizens. The Bill proposed to extend ministerial powers, allowing it to tighten control over the media, ban public meetings and forbid specified persons from speaking to the Press. He argued that the Bill was necessary because of the Cold War and of the Communist Party in South Africa whose growing strength was a threat to white supremacy.³²⁹³ Passed into law, it gave the government legal power to crush apartheid’s opponents. The detention clauses of the Act allowed the police to arrest anyone suspected of anti-government activism and hold them without charge, initially for twelve days without access to family or lawyers. It even empowered postal workers to intercept and investigate letters or parcels or other communications which they suspected may contain anti-government material.³²⁹⁴ Further amendments to the law extended the twelve days holding period to 90 days, then to 180 days and even beyond.³²⁹⁵ Vorster said such suspects could be held until “this side of eternity.”³²⁹⁶

The Sabotage Act in 1962 listed a series of activities forbidden to any banned person and anyone named under the Suppression of Communism Act of 1950.³²⁹⁷ These included preparing material for publication, communicating with other such persons, joining organisations, entertaining visitors and attending social gatherings. Editors and publishers

³²⁹⁰ Spence, 1966: 413-415.

³²⁹¹ Telegram No. 526 of Sir Hugh Stephenson from Cape Town to the Foreign Office. 13 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³²⁹² Bunting, 1986: 99.

³²⁹³ Ballinger, 1969: 48.

³²⁹⁴ South African Institute of Race Relations, 1964: 27; Thompson, 1966: 190.

³²⁹⁵ Beck, 2000: 145.

³²⁹⁶ “A Distinguished South African Lawyer,” 1965: 4; Herbstein, 2004: 75; Mandela, 2013: 402; Vassen, n.d.

³²⁹⁷ Sachs, 1965: 249.

were forbidden to print anything said by anyone who had been banned under the Sabotage Act. Nevertheless, in 1962, a total of 103 people were stated to have broken these laws. Meanwhile Vorster listed 437 people as Communists, banned the left wing newspaper, New Age, and proscribed the left-leaning Congress of Democrats. The government's definition of Communism was so broad that it could be taken to include anyone seeking improved wages or advocating racial tolerance.³²⁹⁸

Also in 1962, the police were given new powers by Dr. Verwoerd to torture suspects under the terms of the Sabotage Act.³²⁹⁹ Vorster was clearly aware of the implications of this dispensation in moral and human terms, when he said, "It is not a very nice thing to see a human being broken... I have seen it... the men taking these powers must be responsible for them."³³⁰⁰ That Vorster was aware of the high level of abuse and repression being wielded in the name of apartheid can be seen in his attempt to justify such methods in a speech on Republic Day, May 31, 1963. Vorster said, "We have reached the stage in our national life where we realize more and more that there are times in a nation's history when not only reason must speak but blood as well – and that time is now."³³⁰¹

In 1965, Vorster was accused of turning South Africa into a police state. He replied, "This is no time to be sensitive about principles. In such times, it is the things that weigh heaviest that should count."³³⁰² To Vorster's Justice Portfolio, Dr. Verwoerd added responsibilities for Police and Prisons in 1966, whereupon Vorster gave instructions to van den Bergh that anyone thought to be a threat to the State should "be taken out of circulation one way or another, if there are valid reasons for not bringing that person to trial."³³⁰³ Aware of these developments, Britain's Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) characterised Vorster shortly after his accession to power as "probably the most unpopular man in South Africa as far as the non-whites are concerned."³³⁰⁴

Vorster lost no time in defending the policy of apartheid. The day after his accession to prime ministerial office, he declared in a radio broadcast that apartheid was "not a denial ³²⁹⁸ Sachs, 1952: 68.

³²⁹⁹ Lodge, 2011: 178.

³³⁰⁰ Asmal et al, 1996: 118.

³³⁰¹ Bunting, 1986: 522.

³³⁰² TIME, 23 September 1966: 34-37, 'South Africa: The security man'; The New York Times, 12 June 1965, 7, 'South African aide defends jailing law.'

³³⁰³ D' Oliveira, 1977: 157-8.

³³⁰⁴ Confidential letter from the Foreign and Commonwealth Offices to Certain Missions. 19 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

of human dignity,” but that it “gives the opportunity to every individual within his own sphere to develop and advance without restriction.”³³⁰⁵ In 1968, he cynically admitted, “It is true that there are blacks working for us. They will continue to work for us for generations, in spite of the ideal we have to separate them completely... The fact of the matter is this: we need them, because they work for us ... but the fact that they work for us can never entitle them to claim political rights. Not now, nor in the future... under no circumstances.”³³⁰⁶

One of his first actions as Prime Minister, on September 19, just six days after assuming power, was to secure the passage of legislation crucial to the National Party’s prospects. The Prohibition of Improper Interference Bill was drafted while Dr. Verwoerd was still alive, but was held up by his death. According to Sir Hugh Stephenson,³³⁰⁷ the British ambassador and former High Commissioner in South Africa, the Bill was Dr. Verwoerd’s brainchild and “generally held to be very much an expression of his personally rigid, logical conception of “separate development,” but his death stopped him from passing it. “Its purpose was to prevent the election of Progressive Party candidates for the four seats in the House of Assembly held by White representatives of the Cape Coloureds. The text of the Bill confirmed that this was its immediate purpose, but it went much further in restricting democratic rights.”³³⁰⁸

Furthermore, still according to Sir Hugh, “the Bill (which makes difficult reading because it talks of “interference in the affairs of any population group by persons not belonging to that population group” when it merely means in practice participation by Whites in non-White politics) is a complicated one with eleven clauses. The most important of these prevents Whites from helping non-Whites to register as voters (an activity which was the basis of the success of the Progressive Party candidates for the Cape Provincial Council seats the previous year), prevents their help with the organisation of non-White political parties, and prevents them taking any part in the political activities of non-Whites. The result of this was to make racially mixed political parties illegal. Under the Bill, no White may be elected to represent Coloured voters if he was a member or in any way connected with a White political party during the three years preceding his nomination as a candidate, although the

³³⁰⁵ Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, ‘John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.’

³³⁰⁶ Davis, 1978: 5; First et al, 1973: 41; Schmidt, 1980: 2.

³³⁰⁷ Sir Hugh was present in the House of Assembly when Dr. Verwoerd was killed.

³³⁰⁸ Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

position of sitting members is safeguarded. The press is, however, protected by a sub—clause which says that the terms of the Bill are not applicable to newspapers. The Bill represents a further major step to enforce the Government's policies of racial separation in the political field in one of the few areas in which racial cooperation is still possible. It illustrates the determination of the Government to close the remaining legal doors through which the non-Whites can express their opposition to the Government's apartheid policies."³³⁰⁹

Dr. Steytler, leader of the Progressive Party, said about the Bill:

“This is a hideous measure, totalitarian in its concept, extreme in its provisions and measured in terms of its long -term consequences, disastrous for South Africa ... This is an attempt, behind the facade of the ballot box system, to exercise State control of our political parties to give the State the power to approve or withhold approval of candidates for election, to enable the State to impose its will of political discussion in South Africa - to attempt to force South Africans to repudiate the effect of South Africa's multi-racial character.”³³¹⁰

In the aftermath of Dr. Verwoerd's assassination, the National Party entered a period of internal conflict which resulted in several hard-line rightists being dismissed from the Cabinet. The conflict reached its peak in 1969 when Vorster accepted the presence of Māori players in the country during a visit by the New Zealand Rugby Union team. The decision alienated NP extremists, who formed a splinter group, the Herstigte (Restored) National Party, led by Albert Hertzog, son of the former Prime Minister, General J.B.M. Hertzog.³³¹¹ At the same time, Vorster turned the Broederbond into a tool of the National Party,³³¹² regularly consulting its leaders on important governmental decisions.³³¹³

His concession to the Maoris apart, Vorster oversaw one of the most violent, brutal and repressive periods in the history of apartheid, with constant accusations of torture and otherwise violating the rights of liberals, anti-apartheid activists and Communists. With van den Bergh, he was accused of responsibility for the deaths in detention of many anti-apartheid activists³³¹⁴ and the 1970 report of the U.N. Special Committee on Apartheid noted ³³⁰⁹ Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³³¹⁰ Telegram of Sir H. Stephenson from Cape Town to the British Foreign Office. 20 September 1966. South Africa. Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd, Prime Minister of South Africa. PREM 13/1211. BNA.

³³¹¹ Brotz, 1977: 45; Miller, 2014: 122-123; Murray, 1987: 25; The Illustrated London News, 13 December 1969: 17, 'Revolt in South Africa.'

³³¹² Callinicos, 1995: 30.

³³¹³ TIME, 21 November 1977: 85, 'Broederbond's big brother act.'

³³¹⁴ International Defence and Aid Fund, 1975a: 15.

that “torture at the hands of the Security Police has become the regular feature of political prisoners in South Africa.”³³¹⁵ Replying to concerns about the number of deaths in dubious circumstances in detention, Vorster said in 1970: “The Opposition can howl until the cows come home and the English-language editors can break down in fits of sobbing, but we will use our powers in the interests of South Africa.”³³¹⁶

In 1973 Vorster, praised the police for their “restraint” in an incident where they shot eleven men dead and wounded seventeen others. The men, workers at Western Deep Levels gold mine in Carletonville, Transvaal, were striking for higher wages. The final indictment of the apartheid system was given unconsciously by the Deputy Minister of Police when excusing the killings by his men at Carletonville: “They had no alternative but to shoot. You must remember that there were about 8,500 men in that compound.”³³¹⁷

A major crisis during Vorster’s term was the 1976 Soweto uprising, which series of protests led by high school students. It began on the morning of 16 June, when an estimated 20,000 students took to the streets of Soweto to protest against the introduction of Afrikaans as the medium of scholastic instruction. They were met with a brutal response by armed police. The government claimed that “only” twenty-three students were killed by police but a realistic death toll of students and supporters was estimated independently at 600 to 700.³³¹⁸ During the uprising, which continued for many months, one of the chants sung by the students was, Where are you now that we need you, Dimitri Tsafendas? It echoed Where are you now that we need you, Harvey Oswald? sung by opponents of US President Richard Nixon at the time of Watergate.³³¹⁹

Faced with growing national and international pressures, Vorster sought to rebrand racial segregation and create new networks of legitimacy for the apartheid regime. He reached out to the newly independent African nations, establishing diplomatic relations where feasible, for instance with the Malawi of the dictatorial Dr. Hastings Kamuzu Banda, and with South Africa’s neighbour mini-states, Lesotho, Swaziland and Botswana.³³²⁰ He held talks with African countries such as Ivory Coast, Zambia and Liberia, whose leaders were ³³¹⁵ Farah, 1974: 86.

³³¹⁶ Cook, 1974: 28; The Star, 17 October 1970.

³³¹⁷ Cook, 1974: 18.

³³¹⁸ Brink et al, 2010: 9; Harrison, 1981: 143.

³³¹⁹ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³³²⁰ Bloomberg, 1989: 229.

less doctrinaire in regard to the apartheid regime, and he permitted diplomats from black Africa to reside in white areas in South Africa.³³²¹

The height of Vorster's diplomatic involvement on the continent was working with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia to bring together Ian Smith's regime in Rhodesia and the black liberation movements which opposed him.³³²² Vorster engineered the release of several nationalist leaders fighting for an independent Zimbabwe so that they could talk peace with the Salisbury regime. Smith's white minority government had unilaterally declared independence from Britain in 1965, placing its South African neighbour in a diplomatically tricky situation. Vorster supported Rhodesia publicly but refused to accord recognition to the UDI regime for fear of angering America.³³²³ White South Africans supported Smith and Vorster sought to appease them by supplying materiel to Rhodesia in the form of helicopters, arms and ammunition. However he withdrew a South African paramilitary police force from Rhodesia.³³²⁴

Despite Vorster's pragmatism, South Africa remained anathema to the newly independent African nations. In 1976, Vorster again became involved in the affairs of another African country, in this case Angola. This vast West African colony of Portugal gained independence in mid-1975, as did Portugal's other African territory, Mozambique, which promptly turned Marxist. Fearing that Angola would follow suit, and encouraged by the US government, Vorster invaded the country in August 1975.³³²⁵ Although the South African army was initially successful, it was driven out of the country by March 1976 after a major counter-offensive by Angolan troops supported by other African countries, but mainly by Cuba.³³²⁶ US Secretary of State Henry Kissinger visited South Africa in August 1976 and was greeted by Vorster.³³²⁷

In 1975, Vorster was interviewed by Mr. Ogunsanwo, Editor of the Sunday Times of Lagos, Nigeria. Asked how he justified apartheid, he replied, "I don't know what you mean." Then the following dialogue took place:

OGUNSANWO: How do you explain separate facilities, separate shop entrances, separate ³³²¹ TIME, 28 June 1976: 11, 'Vorster: Man on a wagon train.'

³³²² Miller, 2014: 115-129.

³³²³ de St. Jorre, 1976: 186.

³³²⁴ TIME, 28 June 1976: 11, 'Vorster: Man on a wagon train.'

³³²⁵ Giliomee, 2012: 120; Holness, 1983: 8-9.

³³²⁶ Gleijeses, 2002: 254-262; Holness, 1983: 8-9.

³³²⁷ Miller, 2014: 115.

residences etc?

VORSTER: There is no single shop in South Africa having separate entrances for the races, there are different queues and entrances in the post offices but not in shops. This is because of our policy of separate development of the races. We do not discriminate against anybody on account of race or colour, the policy is very often misunderstood, especially by people in Africa. Certain measures are taken to avoid frictions between peoples and furthermore it is the policy that different peoples should be served by their own people and in that job opportunities are created for black people which never existed before. It is only since this government came to power that black postmasters came into being. Previously, there were no black policemen. It is my government that made it possible for blacks to become professors, school heads, etc. If and when we find it no longer necessary for the reasons I said to have this policy, it will be abolished, otherwise it will remain.

OGUNSANWO: Is there any possibility that our African political detainees, Nelson Mandela, Robert Sobukwe, would be released someday to lead their normal lives?

VORSTER: I don't have any political detainees. Nelson Mandela and Co. are not political detainees, they are serving sentences. They were convicted by judicial courts after being found guilty of having committed overt criminal acts. As far as Robert Sobukwe is concerned, he is under a banning order.

OGUNSANWO: Would you allow me to go and see Mandela on Robert Island?

VORSTER: I can only allow the International Red Cross to visit him.

OGUNSANWO: Finally, Prime Minister, let me ask you, could you bring yourself to think of the possibility of African majority rule in South Africa in the immediate or remote future?

VORSTER: Oh yes, there will be African majority rule in South Africa in Zululand, in the Transkei, in Botswana.³³²⁸

Exulting in a huge parliamentary victory for the Nationalist in November 1977, the largest in history, Vorster gave a speech which mixed bravado and defiance: "Let the world know," he said, "let it know tomorrow, let it know for all future time to come, small as we are, situated as we are, we will fight to the end with what we have got."³³²⁹ However, just a year later, after twelve years in office, Vorster retired as prime minister. In September 1978, he was succeeded by Defence Minister P.W. Botha and became State President, an honorary position, but eight months later, Vorster resigned in disgrace over the Muldergate scandal.³³³⁰

³³²⁸ Sunday Times (Lagos), 30 March 1975: 8-9, 'Sunday Times editor interviews John Vorster.'

³³²⁹ Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.'

During his tenure as the country's primary leader, Vorster did not manage to keep apartheid stable and untouchable as Dr. Verwoerd had done. Despite his fierce reputation, it was Vorster who presided over apartheid's deterioration from a halcyon era of economic growth and white control to instability and uncertainty and finally into a landscape of rudderless chaos by the time he left the office in 1978.³³³¹ Vorster's fingerprints were evident in politics at the highest level even after he left office. In 1980, he denounced critics of apartheid as "no friend of the country, of the Afrikaner or of the white man," and in 1983, he rejected suggestions of black and white power-sharing "in whatever form." Later that year, he was rushed to hospital with a lung infection and after a blood clot developed in a lung, he died on September 10, 1983. He was sixty-seven.³³³²

³³³⁰ Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.'

³³³¹ Miller, 2014: 115.

³³³² Treaster (The New York Times), 11 September 1983, 'John Vorster, former South African Prime Minister, dies at 67.'

WEDNESDAY, 14 SEPTEMBER 1966

BRITISH EMBASSY REPORT

On this day, the British Embassy in Cape Town sent a letter to the South African police which informed them that Tsafendas had made enquiries at the British Consulate-General in Cape Town regarding his application to emigrate to Zambia. The letter also states that Tsafendas had offered his services as Portuguese interpreter to the British ships on the Beira patrol.³³³³

STATEMENTS

CHRISTOFFEL JOHANNES VAN VUUREN³³³⁴

*White male, 56 years old, security officer at Mandini Paper Factory, Mandini, Zululand.
11.30 a.m.*

On the 7th of May of 1965 I was on duty when a male person of Greek heritage, Demitrio Tsafendis had lodged a complaint of assault. He had a wound to his arm. I then fetched Nick Vergos from the mess hall in Mandeni with the aim to later hand him over to the South African Police. After I told him that there was a complaint of assault filed against him, he declared that Tsafendis is a bad person and that he was also a dangerous communist. He gave no reason why he said so and I did not question him further on his allegation. Later during the night I handed Tsafendis and Vergos over to the South African Police in Inyoni. I'm not sure, but it is possible that I told the Police officer what Vergos said about Tsafendis. I'm not sure what Police Officer investigated the case, but I think it was Sargent Snyman. During his stay at Mandeni he was a quiet person who always moved around alone, but nevertheless, he appeared to be a person with a cruel nature.

³³³³ British Embassy in Cape Town letter to the South African Police regarding Tsafendas, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³³⁴ Christoffel Johannes Van Vuuren statement to the police, 14 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; This is the second statement taken from Van Vuuren, who was also interviewed the day before.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The big story in the Press this day was Vorster's unanimous election as South Africa's new Prime Minister. As for the murder inquiry, the Rand Daily Mail quoted a senior police officer in Cape Town as saying that investigations were still far from complete and it was doubtful the case could be ready by Tsafendas's October 6 remand date. "We still have hundreds of inquiries to make into Tsafendas's movements... the questioning of Tsafendas himself has not yet been completed and it is quite likely we shall have to ask for a further remand on October 6," he said. The story added that Tsafendas was believed still to be at Caledon Square police station.³³³⁵

A friend's view of Tsafendas appeared in a Rand Daily Mail interview with a Greek café proprietor in Durban. Peter Pappas said that eighteen months ago Tsafendas often ate at his café, always curry and rice, and he found him pleasant. Tsafendas said he liked the South African police and people generally but complained that South Africa was not the wonderful country he remembered as a child. Pappas, a former Greek army officer, said Tsafendas spoke angrily about the Salazar regime in Portugal and about the Mozambique police; he also denounced America, where he felt he had been badly treated. Tsafendas was friendly with white down-and-outs and when he had some money he would give them a few cents. "When his luck was out, I sometimes gave him a free meal, but when he started work he paid me," Pappas said. Pappas also described Tsafendas as "very powerful. I remember him once picking me up, playfully like a baby, and I am six feet tall." He said Tsafendas had a suitcase containing references he had collected from overseas jobs. One of them, which Tsafendas showed him, was from Frankfurt.³³³⁶

³³³⁵ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'File on assassin far from completed.'

³³³⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, 'Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.'

THURSDAY, 15 SEPTEMBER 1966

PIDE REPORT

On this day, the military attaché at the South African embassy in Lisbon sent a folder containing various documents regarding Tsafendas to the Director of Military Intelligence in Pretoria. It included the following PIDE report written in Lisbon on February 21, 1962, which covered Tsafendas's story, from his entry to Portugal on February 8, 1949 to his applying for permission to work as a hawker on board ships in 1958:

DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS alias DIMITRIE TSAFANDAKIS,

(Portuguese) National

The man under reference entered Portugal on the 8th February, 1949, through the frontier of Barca d'Alva, where he was arrested by this Police and taken to Porto, from where he was transferred to this Office. Having come to the conclusion that he was a Portuguese national, he was handed over to the Headquarters of the Military Government due to the fact that he had not yet come before the Military Inspection Board on the 6th February, 1950. Before the Board, he was exempted from all military service. Once his situation was normalised, he applied for an identity card as a Portuguese national and began to ply the trade of itinerant vendor of various articles on board the ships lying in the Port of Lisbon.

In October, 1931, he proceeded to Lourenço Marques on the ship Sara, but was forced to return to Portugal, on the ship Angola, both owned by the Companhia Nacional de Navegacao, due to the fact that he was not allowed to land by order of the General Administration (Governo geral).

On the 14th January, 1952, he arrived in Portugal on board the ship Angola.

On the 17th March, 1932, he entered the Hospital do Ultramar, at the instance of the Instituto de Medicina Tropical, with the diagnosis of "intestinal parasitosis; maniacal-depressive psychosis (parasitose intestinal; psicose maniaco-depressiva)", having been discharged on the 9th April of the same year.

On the 24th May, 1952, as he was preparing to leave the Country with the passport with which he had entered on the 8th November, 1949, through the frontier at Beira, he was detained by this Police and conducted to this Office, where he was detained until the 23rd April, 1953, date on which he was handed over by this police to the Lisbon Mendicants Shelter (Mitra), and where he remained until the 4th August of the same year. On this date he left the said Shelter due to the fact that he was given permission to make use of a Maritime Card to go on board the ships lying in the Tagus.

On the 8th July 1954, he left the Country on passport No. 12325/53 issued by the Governo Civil de Lisboa on the 26th of November, 1953, travelled through various countries of Europe, and on the 11th February, 1956, he was interned in a hospital for nervous complaints in Hamburg, Germany, suffering from mental depression. As he was destitute, application was made for his urgent repatriation to the Portuguese Consulate in that city, which repatriated him on the 11th June of the said year of 1955 on board the Portuguese ship "India."

During the years 1957 and 1958 he applied for, and was granted, permission to go on board ships lying in the Tagus, in order to ply his trade of itinerant vendor of regional articles and embroideries; after this date there is no further reference to this individual in the records of this Police.

Lisbon, 2nd February, 1962.

(sgd) Antonio Teixeira da Silva.

Agent.

The PIDE report stated that in October 1951, Tsafendas was denied entry to Mozambique by order of the General Administration, though it does not give the reason for the refusal. The report also does not say why Tsafendas was arrested on May 24, 1952 and detained until April 23, 1953. It then mentioned his hospitalization in Hamburg, suffering from mental depression, and his subsequent repatriation to Portugal. The report stopped in 1958, stating that "there are no further references to this individual in the records of the Police."³³³⁷ ³³³⁷ Letter of the Military Attaché of the South African Embassy in Lisbon to the Director of Military Intelligence in Pretoria with a PIDE report regarding Tsafendas attached, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van verdediging. NASA; Translation of PIDE report regarding Dimitrio Tsafendas alias Dimitrie Tsafandakis, 21 February 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van verdediging. NASA.

PIDE's report does not contain anything about Tsafendas's life prior to 1949, thus none of his political activities in Mozambique before then are included. Most importantly, it stops in 1958 and thus does not contain any information regarding his activities after that year, including, importantly, his arrests and imprisonment in Mozambique in 1964. That PIDE had run a file on Tsafendas since 1938 is also absent.

However, this is to be expected because the 1962 PIDE report was written at the request of the Social Services, who were interested not in his political ideas and activities, but in his life story and medical history, since he was then a patient in the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare of Lisbon. He was admitted there after he had applied for permission to end his exile and return to Mozambique. Since all his previous requests had been turned down, he had proclaimed himself to be a reformed person, no longer a Communist, but harmless and perhaps a little mad. The police had sent him to the Institute for evaluation, and the Institute had asked for information about him from the police. It seems clear that once again PIDE gave the South African authorities another document, the third, withholding vital information about his political activities and containing nothing indicating Tsafendas was a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.

The folder also contained a copy of a certificate written by Dr. Pegado of the Institute of Psychiatric Welfare of Lisbon on April 6, 1962, during Tsafendas's visit there, where it states that: "Demitrio Tsafandakis is fundamentally a psychopath who leads an always unstable and adventurous life. At the moment he does not show signs of psychosis. I agree entirely with Captain Cascais in that one should wait for information regarding his family before finally deciding what destination he is to be given."³³³⁸ Thus, PIDE clearly promotes the idea that Tsafendas was a psychopath without any reference to his political ideology and activities.

³³³⁸ Dr. Pegado's report regarding Dimitrio Tsafandakis, 6 April 1962. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/6, subject: Departement van Verdediging. NASA.

STATEMENTS

HELEN DOROTHY DANIELS³³³⁹

Coloured woman, 36 years old, 46 Kasselsvlei Way, Belville South.

During April 1965 I was visiting friends in Boksburg. There I learned of Demitrio Tsafendas. It was told to me that they would want me to meet him - he's a nice man. I never met him and later returned to Cape Town. When I was in Cape Town, I thought to correspond with him and wrote to my friends to find out his address. They said he was in Durban (the time I was in Boksburg), and when I requested his address, the friends did not respond. Other friends of mine went on holiday to Durban and I then wrote a letter to Tsafendas and asked my friends to give this to him. Our preacher is in Durban and I hoped to trace Tsafendas through the church. He was one of our parishioners, as he pretended.

I wrote my letter during the June holidays in 1965 and received a reply from him on July 10, 1965. I wrote in my letter that I would like to meet and wanted to marry him. His answer was that he wanted to meet me first before giving me a positive answer. I wrote to him again - four letters – all of which he answered. I sent him a picture, but he did not send me one in return. He sent word that he would come to Cape Town for our church conference - it would be in November 1965.

I lived with my parents and on August 28, 1965 - he arrived at my parents' house. When I saw him, his clothes were dirty and neglected and I had a very bad impression of him. However, I received him with friendliness. He said he was in Cape Town looking for work and his belongings are at the station. My brother went to fetch his belongings on one of the Cape stations. When belongings came, (there were two suitcases and a bunch of pots and pans and a large bundle of dirty laundry) I was very disappointed when I saw the state of his property. We had a spare room and gave him lodging. After he was with us a few days, I decided that I could never marry such a man. He also did not try to establish a relationship with me. I also heard from him that he has a blank identity card – although I never saw it. He said his father was a white Greek and his mother a native woman from Mozambique and that he is working on it to be registered as a Coloured. It did not impress me, as I had already made up my mind and he never discussed our relationship, thus I was happy that my earlier proposal died a silent death.

³³³⁹ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

Meanwhile, he got a job at the power station in Cape Town. He had a lot of bad habits such as: helping himself to items in our stove and refrigerator - his table manners were ugly and messy - he simply laid with his shoes on the bedspread and such. When he found work, my father said he should pay lodging. He then became angry and wanted to know why my father never stated that in the first place. Shortly afterwards on October 16, 1965 at 9:00 pm, he left our house and I had never seen him again. Apart from the above, he was interested in the Bible and discussed church matters with us. He attended all of our services, sang together, prayed together, and used communion. On the face of it, his faith was beyond reproach. He said he sometimes gets headaches. Besides his messy ways I did not notice anything abnormal about him. There was never any indication that he was mentally abnormal. His stories about traveling abroad was interesting. He was mostly quiet and very withdrawn – he spent a lot of time in his room.

In March 1966, I left for the Free State. I have not heard anything again from Tsafendas. The Wednesday before the end of August 1966 I arrived back in Cape Town. About two weeks later I saw Tsafendas's picture in Cape newspapers and that he was detained in connection with the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. We never discuss politics in our home. He also never talked politics. When the identity card was mentioned he indeed said he was unhappy that he could not be classified as a Coloured. However, he did not criticize the country's laws and made no negative remarks in our presence. Our church does not have a building and our services are held from house to house mostly. Our rallies are held at Mrs. B. Bezuidenhout on the farm Bethany, Durbanville. The church in Cape Town is run by Mr. J. Johnson p/a J. Slater, "DELBY" Athlone Avenue, Plumstead. The belief is known as the Christian church. There are many branches of this faith throughout the world.

Statement taken by D/Sergt. D.J.V. Troost.

HELEN DANIELS AFTER HER STATEMENT

Helen Daniels immediately after the assassination, aware that the press would soon or later find out about her, and in advice of her family and friends, went to complete seclusion in a family friend's house, the Snyders. She refused to speak to anyone and to make public appearances. The only people who saw her and spoke to her were the policemen who questioned her, a Post journalist for all of thirty seconds, and later Tsafendas's lawyers.³³⁴⁰ According to the Sunday Times (Johannesburg), Daniels was questioned by the police for more than an hour.³³⁴¹

On September 18 two articles involving Helen Daniels appeared in the South African Press. One was at the Sunday Times and the other one at the Post. The Sunday Times contained an interview of her brother, Peter Daniels, where he twisted the facts and flatly lied about his sister's relationship with Tsafendas and how they had met. He told the newspaper that it was Tsafendas who had chased and written to Helen several times, but their meeting "did not result in a great friendship." He said, "Helen was not interested in marriage."³³⁴² This is a contradiction to the statement his sister gave to the police three days ago where she claimed that she heard about Tsafendas and wanted to meet him, so she asked for his address and she wrote to him.³³⁴³ Tsafendas also made a similar statement to the police.³³⁴⁴ However, Peter Daniels was not the only who twisted the facts in this article. A member of the Snyder family had also stated that "there was never a question of Helen and Tsafendas coming together as husband and wife. She was not interested in this. She has devoted her life to missionary work."³³⁴⁵

The second article in the Post, written by Security Police and later BOSS agent Gordon Winter, also contained an interview by Peter Daniels. Peter Daniels again completely twisted the facts behind his sister's meeting with Tsafendas. He claimed in this interview that "Tsafendas first came into contact with Miss Daniels through religious correspondence early last year." Tsafendas then travelled to Cape Town to meet her and while he was staying in her house he "became very fond" of her and "later told friends that he loved her. But Helen did not return his love. She was not impressed by his rather abrupt manner and general untidiness." She told her father, "Demetrio does not come up to the standards I am looking ³³⁴⁰ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016; Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

³³⁴¹ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

³³⁴² Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

³³⁴³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

³³⁴⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³³⁴⁵ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 18: 5, 'Tsafendas's brothers are quizzed.'

for in a man.” When she was forced to make this clear to Tsafendas, he told her family: “She would have been just right for me ... It’s a pity she is so fussy.”³³⁴⁶

The article suggests that Winter has interviewed Helen Daniels and this is how he got some of these information as it also claims that she asked the Post not to publish her picture. However, Helen was not interviewed since she was still in seclusion and the remarks were in fact made by her brother, Peter. Winter saw her and spoke to her for thirty seconds on her doorstep. She refused to comment or answer any questions but asked that her picture should not be published, which the newspaper respected.³³⁴⁷ It is understandable that the member of the Snyder family and Peter Daniels tried to protect Helen’s reputation, especially since she was a missionary of the Christian Church, as it would probably have sounded bad for her if it had become known that she had written letters to Tsafendas, the man who was just assassinated Dr. Verwoerd, asking him to meet and marry. Peter Daniels would be a leading defence witnesses in the forthcoming summary trial and he would again lie and misrepresent the case.

Helen Daniels was not asked to testify at Tsafendas’s trial, either for the defence or the State, even though she had been close to Tsafendas and must have been an important witness. On the other hand, her brother and her sister-in-law, neither of whom knew Tsafendas as well as Helen, testified for the defence. As we will see, their testimony was a complete contradiction of the statement given to the police by Helen Daniels. We will examine this case in the Summary Trial Chapter.

MARY KATHLEEN SCOTT³³⁴⁸

Housewife, Woodstock.

I am a housewife and reside at the above address, where I keep some table boarders. Demitrio Tsafendas had his meals with me for about six weeks prior to his working in Parliament house. I do not remember the exact dates but he was with me part of June 66 and July 66 up to two days after his commencing work at Parliament. Before that he was out of work, and had newspaper cuttings to show that he was looking for a job. Whilst out of work

³³⁴⁶ The Post, 18 September 1966: 1, ‘I jilted Tsafendas, says Coloured girl.’

³³⁴⁷ Gordon Winter in a personal interview with Dr. James Sanders on behalf of the author, 19 August 2016.

³³⁴⁸ Mary Kathleen Scott statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

he showed some of my boarders a newspaper cutting about a job in S.W.A. It was shown in my presence and purporting to be an engineering job to which a good salary was attached. The boarders suggested that he take the job. He made an odd remark "Oh! No, I cannot go to S.W.A. I have a job to do here before I go back."

I knew nothing of his life, and that he might have been to S.W.A. previously, apart from him mentioning that he has been to S.W.A. and said that S.W.A. was the only place where one can make money. The remark sounded odd for reason of him being unemployed at time, and knowing that there was money in S.W.A. Whilst the accused had his meals with me, I found him to be very poorly mannered - so-much-so that I named him "Vark" (pig). His clothing however was clean and always tidy. He even appeared fussy about his clothing. I never had conversations with him, as I disliked his manners, eventually giving him notice for that reason. He was a very restless man. I never got the impression that he could be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared perfectly normal. He talked to the boarders about being a Christian, belonging to no religion or church etc.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

COMMENTS ON SCOTT'S STATEMENT

Pamela Abrahams, a South African, who often visited Scott's house along with her Greek boyfriend and future husband, Panagiotis Peroglou, said Tsafendas was very well mannered, especially with women. She does not remember him having bad manners or being named "The Pig" by Scott. According to Abrahams, "Tsafendas was a gentleman. He would always get up from the table to greet you and he always offered you his seat or went to find you a seat... he was certainly very well mannered."³³⁴⁹

Panagiotis Peroglou was a good friend of Scott but also disagreed with her characterization of Tsafendas. He does not remember Scott ever complaining about Tsafendas or calling him a pig and is very surprised to hear such comments. Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being "very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people ... he was very talkative and friendly and he had a lot of respect for the women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair.” Peroglou remembers Tsafendas as being “well educated, especially about Greece’s history and Christianity.”³³⁵⁰ Peroglou and Abrahams associated with Tsafendas for about three months and both “never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said anything to make us think he was insane. He was definitely sane.” Peroglou and Abrahams do not remember Tsafendas talking politics.³³⁵¹

³³⁴⁹ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Elias Constantaras, another Greek, was friendly with Scott and often ate at her house. He was surprised to be told that she called Tsafendas a pig, saying she never did so in front of him. He also strongly disagreed that Tsafendas had poor manners. The only complaint he remembered from Scott, which she mentioned two or three times, was that Tsafendas talked politics persistently at the table in front of her boarders and she suspected him of being a Communist. According to Constantaras, Scott was afraid of Tsafendas talking like that and she asked him to tell Tsafendas to stop. Constantaras did so and though Tsafendas was not happy that Scott did not tell him herself, he complied with her request. In terms of mental stability, Constantaras remembers Tsafendas as being “perfectly fine. He was not insane. None of us ever got the impression that he could be insane ... I remember I was impressed by the way he was talking ... he talked very nicely; he knew how to speak properly. He sounded like an educated man ... he was very friendly and easy-talking with everyone ...”³³⁵²

Stratis Vamvarapis, another Greek, lodged with Mrs. Scott at the same time as Tsafendas and knew him for about a year. He found Tsafendas to be a “strange man - strange as a character, not mentally strange. He was easily crossed when he disagreed with people.” Initially, Tsafendas had little to say, but became more talkative as they grew to know each other, though he never discussed politics with him. Tsafendas never appeared to be schizophrenic or insane and he never heard him mention a tapeworm. He recalls him eating a lot but does not remember if his manners were messy and he never heard Mary Scott call Tsafendas “The Pig.”³³⁵³

³³⁵⁰ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³³⁵¹ Pamela Abrahams and Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³³⁵² Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³³⁵³ Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

JOHANNES JACOBUS BOTHA³³⁵⁴

White male, 51 years. Security officer at South African Pulp and Paper Industries, Mandeni.

On or about 7 May 1965 I was on duty at the service office at the entrance to the factory. I received a call about a fight that is going on at the living quarters which are used by workers of the different contractors. A little while later after I received the call, a white male of Greek descent, Vergos, reported to me and told me about the incident, which happened to be of the said fight. During his conversation, he told me that Demitrio Tsafendis, the person with whom he was involved in a fight, is the biggest communist in the Republic of South Africa. I told him that I will bring it to the attention of the South African Police. I was not present when the police investigated the matter on the day.

On a certain date afterwards I did in fact share Vergos' comment with a member of the South African Police of Inyoni. I cannot remember to whom I conveyed the information. It had to be one of the white members of the force at Inyoni. The following members were stationed at Inyoni during that time: Germishuys, Francois Ferreira and Jannie Fourie. At a later date, after the fight occurred, a Roman Catholic priest also declared to me that Demitrios Tsafendas is a communist. In both cases, there were no reasons given as to why Tsafendis was suspected of being a communist. The name of the priest is not known to me. I suspect that he is from Stanger. He was dressed in a black suit with a collar that Priests usually wear. He had a full beard. That's all I know about the case.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 S/Sergt. at 11 p.m.

RICHARD POGGENPOEL³³⁵⁵

Adult Coloured Male, Rosedene, 10 Walnut Street, Lansdowne.

I'm a member of the "Mission." Our church actually has no name, but is the same faith as Helen Daniels of Belville. Around December 1965, I met Demitrios Tsafendas through our church, at O'Ryan of Westminster Street, Lansdowne. We knew that he was ³³⁵⁴ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³³⁵⁵ Richard Poggenpoel statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

sleeping with the O’Ryan children and there was little space and so offered that he can come stay with us until he finds accommodation and work. During December 1965 he stayed with us for 14 days. During his stay with us, he behaved very well. He attended our services and was generally quiet. He wrote many letters for work and during the day went searching for a job.

There was no mention or impression that he was mentally abnormal. He lived a completely normal life. He left as a result of a letter we received. The author pointed out that our daughter who lives with us and who is widowed, could receive a bad reputation because an unmarried man is living with us. I showed him the letter and he made his own decision to leave. He went to live with O’Ryan again. He never talked about any political issues. He just told us of his travels around the world and said that he had faced many troubles. He did not pay lodging, but later brought R4 to the woman.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 S/Sergt.

COMMENTS OF POGGENPOEL TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HIS STATEMENT

Richard Poggenpoel stated in a personal interview that Tsafendas often talked politics when people were around, but he personally had no interest in politics. He remembers Tsafendas being “very much against apartheid.” He did not reveal this to the police because he thought that it would be better for Tsafendas.³³⁵⁶ As we will see, Patrick O’Ryan, a very good friend of Poggenpoel, also did not tell the police about his political discussions with Tsafendas for the same reason.³³⁵⁷

³³⁵⁶ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

³³⁵⁷ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

FRIDAY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S NAME MENTIONED IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

That day was the first time that Tsafendas's name was heard in the Assembly after the assassination. It was mentioned by Sir de Villiers Graaff, the Leader of the Opposition. He raised the question of Tsafendas's entry into South Africa, the conditions under which he came into the country and how he was granted permanent residence. He stated that he would not pursue the matter himself since the Commission of Enquiry planned to investigate all this.³³⁵⁸

³³⁵⁸ The Cape Argus, 16 September 1966: 4, 'Dramatic moment as name of Tsafendas is mentioned.'

SATURDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

RALPH LIGHTON³³⁵⁹

Employed with Marine Diamond Corporation, Cape Town. 9 a.m.

I have known Demitrio Tsafendas for the period of 9-10 weeks, approximately February - March 1966 when he was employed with M.D.C. aboard the Colpontoon in S.W.A. He was employed as machine operator. For the first half of his employment he worked under the maintenance foreman Mr. Reginald Spence. I got to know that he was lazy and inefficient, so I was requested to show him the care of two auction-dredge pumps which was much less work, and responsibility. By that time I have had conversation with him and knew he was of mixed Nationality and spoke Portuguese which appeared to be his home language. I found him to be a complete boar. He used to mix with the coloureds rather than with the Europeans. He got good audience from them.

He never mentioned to me what his political lookout was. He spoke about his world-wide travels and a woman keeping him in Germany. He stated frequently that he was about to get married, as he was 45 and thought is high time to get a wife. He never complained that he was physically incapacitated. He was a good eater. I have knowledge that he resigned for the following reasons - i.e. that the small transfer boat to get to our transport boat the Marina was too dangerous. He also said that the climbing of the ladders were too much for him.

I am fluent in Portuguese which I spoke to him. I never got the slightest impression that he was mentally unsound. He had excellent reasoning powers, but despite his former career in Merchant Marine, was unsuitable for our work. He stated that he had been a steward most of his time. He mentioned having been to Canada, the U.S.A about 6 yrs., to Britain, all of Europe, Turkey, Italy, Israel, North Africa, Greece, Portuguese East Africa - stating that he had a Portuguese Passport. He might be known to a security man of M.D.C. a Mr. Martincich (23 Yrs. old) Accused said he had Jewish Religion.

³³⁵⁹ Ralph Lighton statement to the police, 17 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

PATRICK O'RYAN

As we will see in the chapter on the Summary Trial, according to the trial transcripts Patrick O'Ryan was also interviewed this day. The following dialogue took place between Attorney-General Willem van den Berg and Patrick O'Ryan:

VAN DEN BERG: You made a statement to the Police on the 17th September 1966, is that correct?

O'RYAN: Most probably. Yes, the date must be.

VAN DEN BERG: You can have a look at the statement?

O'RYAN: I did make a statement. Correct.³³⁶⁰

O'Ryan's statement was not found in the archives. His statement is extremely important, as we will see in the following chapter, because of remarks by Attorney-General van den Berg during his cross examination of O'Ryan. After O'Ryan had referred at length to the importance of the tapeworm in Tsafendas's life, van den Berg noted that O'Ryan had not mentioned anything to the police about the tapeworm and wondered why he had not done so since he claimed that it was so important to Tsafendas. According to the trial transcript, the following are excerpts from Patrick O'Ryan's statement to the police on September 17, 1966: "He (that is the accused) stayed with me for approximately 3 months, 2 weeks of which he stayed at Poggenpoel's, but afterwards returned to me. He read the newspaper and it was apparent that he was against the state policy of both South Africa and Portugal. He made the impression with me that he was favourable towards the Coloureds and he repeatedly applied to be classified as a Coloured.

He said that he had a blank identity card, in other words his race was not recorded on it. He labelled the apartheid policies as unfair. His reasoning was not very intelligent. I did not encourage him, because we advocate the Biblical idea of subservience to a Government. His spiritual view seemed confused, but he was not spiritually or mentally disturbed. On the contrary, even though I did not consider him to be particularly intelligent, he was well spoken and had good vocabulary. I never got the impression that something was wrong in his mind.”³³⁶¹

³³⁶⁰ Patrick O' Ryan testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

COMMENTS ON PATRICK O’RYAN’S STATEMENT

Patrick O’Ryan later said that Tsafendas was “very anti-white, excitedly referring to the treatment of Blacks and Coloureds by the Whites.” One day, Tsafendas told him that if he “ever got hold of Dr. Verwoerd, he “would bash his skull.” O’Ryan said he did not reveal any of their political discussions to the police when they questioned him about Tsafendas.³³⁶²

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

On this day, the first physical description of Tsafendas’s mixed-race mother appeared in the Press, in a Rand Daily Mail interview with Mr. Gugliemo (Willy) Conte, a friend of Tsafendas’s father, Michalis. In an interview with the paper’s reporter, Hazel Goldstein, Conte said he met Michalis soon after he (Conte) arrived in Lourenço Marques, aged eighteen, and they became business associates. He said Michalis and Dimitri Tsafendas’s mother lived together on the first floor of a white, two-storey house on 24th July Avenue, Lourenço Marques. He described Dimitri’s mother as “a plump, clean-looking woman with ivory-coloured skin.” She dressed in “native clothing – a print blouse with a white sash around her body.” Conte said that contrary to reports, Demetrios was not rejected by the family. Except for his school years in Middleburg, he said that he had always stayed with his father and Greek stepmother and their family.³³⁶³

³³⁶¹ Patrick O’ Ryan testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³³⁶² Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

³³⁶³ Rand Daily Mail, 17 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas timid and puny as a boy.’

SUNDAY, 18 SEPTEMBER 1966

No statements or any other evidence were found in the archives for this day.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

The Sunday Times headlined its top story, ‘Tsafendas’s brothers are quizzed’ by the police. It said Durban, Johannesburg and Cape Town members of the “Fellowship of Christ,” to which Tsafendas belonged, had made statements to the police.³³⁶⁴ They included Helen Daniels, who was interviewed by security officers for more than an hour. It was also the day when the two interviews which her brother Peter Daniels gave to the Post and the Sunday Times that were discussed earlier in this chapter were published. Finally, Attorney General van den Berg told the Sunday Times that Tsafendas would probably appear in court within the next fortnight. Mr. van den Berg said he had read some documents but new evidence was being investigated by the police.³³⁶⁵

³³⁶⁴ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 5, ‘Tsafendas’s brothers are quizzed.’

³³⁶⁵ Sunday Times, 18 September 1966: 5, ‘Tsafendas’s brothers are quizzed.’

MONDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S SECOND STATEMENT

Tsafendas's interrogation is again recorded this day and this is his second statement found at the archives. As we will see, unlike the previous one, it contains the questions Tsafendas was asked to answer. This is his statement:

Further Questioning of Demitrio Tsafendas at 2.45 p.m. on 19/9/66 by Maj. Rossouw³³⁶⁶

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Is it true that you told the American authorities that you have joined the Communist Party at the age of 20?

TSAFENDAS: I cannot remember having made such a statement to the American authorities. I was a member of the Communist Party. I joined the Communist Party just before the war in Johannesburg. I was about 19-20 years old then. It was during 1936, 37 or 36 - I cannot remember the date.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Where and with whom did you join the party?

TSAFENDAS: I was a member of the boiler workers and welders union when I joined at the Trades Hall in Johannesburg. I cannot remember whom I joined with - I mean who the person was - but I remember having received a Communist membership card and I used to pay two shillings and sixpence monthly as membership fees. I continued paying membership fees until I left in 1941. I paid my membership fees at an office in the Trades Hall. I paid my Trade Union fees at an office and the C.P. membership fees at a different office in the Trades Hall.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you ever attend Communist Party meetings?

TSAFENDAS: I did attend meetings on the City Hall steps in Johannesburg. I went there to listen to their speeches. They used to carry banners. I remember one Wolfson and one named Joffe who made speeches on the City Hall steps. I also went to see two film shows in the public library. The Communist Party was legal then and so was the Ossewa Brandwag. I made one mistake and that is that I told no one that I was leaving South Africa. After I left Johannesburg I paid no more monthly subscriptions. That was the end of my Communist Party membership.

³³⁶⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you contact members of the Communist Party in America?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. I did not attend any C.P. rallies in America. I don't remember telling anybody in America that I was a member of the S.A. Communist Party.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you associate yourself or attend any Communist Party meetings elsewhere in the world?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. I attend meetings at Hyde Park, but not Communist Party meetings. I also attended Labour Party meetings in England at Caxton Hall, but they were not Communist meetings.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you lose interest in Communist Party activities after you left South Africa?

TSAFENDAS: I was an inactive person as far as politics were concerned and for that reason did not maintain political connections. Since leaving South Africa I did not consider myself a member of the Communist Party.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you name the hospitals in all the countries where you were hospitalised during your absence from South Africa?

TSAFENDAS: I received medical treatment at the Boston Psychosomatic Hospital, Sheepshead Bay Hospital for seamen outside New York, the Grafton State Hospital, Massachusetts. I also received medical attention at St. Pancras Hospital, London and at the Isle of Wight. In Europe I was in Oxensoll Krankenhaus in Hamburg and in the Tropical State Hospital in Lisbon. I was also a patient at the Government Hospital in Beira. I was in Addington Hospital in Durban for a state wound on my right arm. I also had an ear, nose and throat operation in Grootte Schuur Hospital, Gape Town during 1966.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you tell me what the nature of your illnesses were for which you received hospital treatment at the various hospitals?

TSAFENDAS: The diagnosis for being sent, to Boston Psychopathic Hospital was depressive psychosis. At Sheepshead Bay Hospital for depressive psychosis and exhaustion, at Grafton State Hospital for schizophrenia. That means a split personality. At St. Pancras Hospital I was also treated for depressive psychosis and at the Isle of Wight I was also hospitalised on account of a nervous condition. Also at Oxensoll Krankenhaus I received treatment for a nervous condition. I don't know what happened but I woke up after receiving shock treatment. At Beira I was hospitalised for recovery from an exhaustive condition.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: I think you left Lisbon out.

TSAFENDAS: There they must have done something to my brain because I was never the same again because I was always suffering from a persecution complex. After that something went wrong with my heart and my nervous system. The last time I was hospitalised for a nervous condition was in 1953 at Oxensoll Krankenhaus.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: You told Gen. van den Bergh about a girl you were interested in somewhere in Woodstock and whom you wanted to marry.

TSAFENDAS: Oh, her name was Miss Baxendella, an Indian girl - she was a mixed breed between Indian and Coloured. That was about six months ago when I was interested in her. She works in a shop near Woodstock Police Station. It is a grocery shop on the right hand side just before you reach Woodstock Police Station from Cape Town. I cannot remember the name of the shop but I can point it out to you.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: When did you first become a member of the Christian Church?

TSAFENDAS: I got to know about the church in 1933. To become a full member one has to be baptized, I left here in 1941 without being baptized. I was baptized in Greece (Athene) on the beach in 1948 or 1949.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Is it true that you must be self-supporting before you can become a member of the Christian Church?

TSAFENDAS: Yes, you must work. I do not consider myself a very faithful member because I did not comply with the requirements of the church.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you describe your church to me?

TSAFENDAS: My church consists of a group of people coming together holding a communion of gospel meetings. We have no church temple and we hold meetings according to where you stay. If I stay in Woodstock I attend meetings in the area where I stay. I used to attend meetings in Pinelands. We hold a convention once a year. Last year I attended a convention on n Mr. Bezuidenhout's farm in Durbanville.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Can you speak, read and write Arabic language?

TSAFENDAS: I can only speak a little bit of Arab language from what I learned in Egypt, Jordan, Beirut and Siria.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Name the languages in which you are fluent, others which you know less fluently and those in which you can help yourself?

TSAFENDAS: I am fluent in English, Greek, Portuguese. I am less fluent in German, French and Italian. I can help myself in Arabic, Afrikaans, Shangaan. I only know a few words in Turkish.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Were you ever indoctrinated by any person to commit the unlawful act for which you are now charged?

TSAFENDAS: No, I was not. I did not do it at the instigation of anyone. I did it on my own because I thought it was the right thing.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: It appears that you planned the assault on Dr. Verwoerd over a long period - can you tell me when your planning to kill Dr. Verwoerd first started?

TSAFENDAS: The idea of destroying Dr. Verwoerd entered my mind a few days after I started work as a messenger in the House of Assembly. I saw an opportunity to do so in the House of Assembly because I was inside the house. I first thought of buying a gun with which I could shoot him and then run away. I did in fact buy a gun from the crew of the Eleni hut I found that the gun was useless. I bought the gun at the end of the month when I got my pay. I went there before to try and get the gun but I had no money. I then waited until I got my pay. I was going to buy a Beretta but the man didn't keep his word and gave me the other pistol. He made all kinds of excuses. It was only after I found that the gun was useless that I decided on using a knife.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you ever discuss your plans of wanting to destroy Dr. Verwoerd with any person?

TSAFENDAS: No, I did not. The crew of the Eleni were discontented because they could not go out and have a good time with the Coloured women. They were bitter about not being able to have the woman outside but I did not discuss my intentions with any of them. I remember some of them mentioning, during casual conversation, that these people should be taught a lesson. The "bosun" was one for example. He did not put it in the same words as I put it. I explain in Greek what he said. His words is translated in English to mean; "The South Africans need a good raping.” I did not express my intentions to the “bosun” or anyone else. I cannot say that the strong feelings of the Eleni crewmen persuaded me to do what I already had in mind, but it did contribute to the final execution of the deed. None of them knew of what I was going to do. They asked me what I wanted the pistol for and I said I wanted it for self-defence.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: And if you managed to escape after assassinating the Prime Minister, where were you going to hide yourself?

TSAFENDAS: I was going to find refuge on the tanker, the Eleni, which I knew was sailing to South America. My plans were, however, upset when I could not get the right pistol. The boat sailed on the Saturday before the Tuesday on which I stabbed the Prime Minister.

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Did you know that the Eleni had sailed before you attacked, the Prime Minister? If so, what were your plans to get away?

TSAFENDAS: Yes, I knew the ship had already left. I never thought about hiding if I had to do the job with a knife. I didn't have much of a chance of getting away when using a knife. I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught. I just happened to do it that way. I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander.

This statement was read over to the deponent and he was asked whether the contents was correct in every respect, he acknowledged that the replies to questions put to him were answered freely and voluntarily without him being forced to do so in any way.

Are you prepared to sign this statement? Yes, I am prepared to sign it.

You have listened to the statement as read over to you. Is it correct? Yes, it is correct. Do you wish to read it over yourself? No, sir, I do not.

(SGD) DEMETRIOS TSAFENDAS

19/9/1966: CAPE TOWN

ANALYSIS OF TSAFENDAS'S STATEMENT

Once again, Tsafendas does not mention the tapeworm, even when he is asked why he was hospitalised in each hospital. Furthermore, he maintains that he did “the right thing” and that he did not care about the consequences. He also repeats the assertion that he bought a gun from the Eleni and adds that he was planning to escape after the assassination by hiding in the tanker. Tsafendas also referred to the Eleni extensively in his statements on the 11th and now he does so again, therefore it is natural to assume that he also mentioned it when he was first interrogated by General van den Bergh.

Thirteen seamen from the Eleni who came to know Tsafendas in Cape Town all strongly deny that any of the crew were upset about the Immorality Act, describing such a claim as ridiculous. They said those who wanted to have sex with Coloured South African women went ahead and did so, not on board, and Tsafendas knew about it. None of them was “bitter” or discontented. Only very few actually wanted to have sex with Coloured women but opportunities were available for those who did. Some of the crewmen had asked Tsafendas about women and he told them he did not know any prostitutes. The men eventually found ready access to both White and Coloured women through a Greek man named Panagiotis (Peter),³³⁶⁷ who was not known personally to Tsafendas, though Tsafendas was aware that he had “business” dealings with some of the crew.

Why would Tsafendas claim that the crew was discontented if there was no problem about sex? The men who were interviewed by the author suggested the existence of a political factor, specifically a hostility among the crew to apartheid. Some of the crew, especially those who were friendly with Tsafendas, were Communists and adopted an unfriendly attitude towards White South Africans since they considered them to be fascists. After the township visit, several of the crew began referring to South Africans as Nazis. Some of the men, especially Vasilakis and Zafiriadis, became quite aggressive towards visiting White South Africans. Vasilakis even got into an argument with one South African supplier over the treatment of non-Whites. Tsafendas told them to be careful about the way they talked because they could get into trouble. Vasilakis, Mastromanolis and Kambouris believe Tsafendas might have used that as an excuse to explain the hostility of the crew towards White South Africans that might have been reported to the police after the assassination.³³⁶⁸

³³⁶⁷ None of the witnesses remembers his surname.

Mastromanolis confirms to the author that he said South Africans needed “a good whipping.” He says he made the comment after Tsafendas organised the township visit. Mastromanolis repeated this comment several times in reference to White South Africans he happened to encounter, saying things like, “What a good whipping this racist needs.” The phrase soon became a running joke within the crew and others would repeat it when they came across White South Africans. Tsafendas told Mastromanolis and the others to be cautious since Greek visitors to the Eleni could also be supporters of apartheid. It was also after the township visit that another sailor, probably Dimitris Zafiriadis, said that the South Africans needed to be “taught a lesson.” Both comments were the result of seeing conditions in the Black township and the men’s recognition of the reality of apartheid and had nothing to do with the Immorality Act.

Some of the seamen believe, and it sounds logical, that Tsafendas lied to the police in order to protect them. Their theory is that Tsafendas came to believe that some of the South Africans and the Greek-South Africans coming on board noticed the hostility of the crew towards them or heard them talking negatively about South Africa and that Tsafendas used the Immorality Act as a reason for their hostile behaviour. The fact that Tsafendas attributed Mastromanolis’s comment to the Immorality Act and not to the township visit strongly suggests that he did so to protect him. He may have feared that Greek visitors heard the comment and if so would have told the police about it. Of course, all of this is speculation and the author is not in position to know for certain what Tsafendas’s motives were in referring to the Immorality Act. However, the fact is that the crewmen were not discontented about the Act and freely admit that whoever wanted to have sex with a Coloured woman went ahead and did so.³³⁶⁹

The importance of the Eleni would also be highlighted later by the Commission of Enquiry for four reasons:

- That Tsafendas visited the vessel almost every day for forty-two days before the ³³⁶⁸ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³³⁶⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

assassination,

- That he bought a weapon from the crew
- That he was intending to escape aboard this ship.
- Three days before the assassination, Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed on-board the Eleni.

On the question of the Christian Church, Tsafendas is lying or mistaken or just not very clear about when he first heard of it. He stated here that it was in 1933. He would then have been aged fifteen and living in Lourenço Marques. It is possible that he meant 1943, when he was in hospital in the United States. He told several people he first came across the sect in an American hospital through the person of Tom Tuff. Tsafendas also said this to the doctors in the Grafton State Hospital in 1946. All of the witness interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas in the 1930s stated flatly that Tsafendas was not associated at the time with this sect.

Tsafendas also declared in the above statement that he got the idea of killing Dr. Verwoerd after he began working in Parliament. In fact, he later claimed that previously he hung around Parliament's precincts to work out whether it would be possible to shoot Dr. Verwoerd or to kill him with a bomb. It was while doing this that, by chance, he got the opportunity to work there. When he realised he could easily kill Dr. Verwoerd, he did not hesitate. He considered that he had the chance of getting rid of a tyrant and if he had not done so, he would have regretted it all his life. He told the police at the time and repeated it thirty years later, that he hoped by killing Dr. Verwoerd "things would change" because Dr. Verwoerd was "the brains behind apartheid." He considered him to be a "monster" and an "evil person." He knew that things would not change overnight, but he hoped the prime minister's death would be a stepping stone towards the end of apartheid.³³⁷⁰

Tsafendas declares in his statement that "I always had a grudge against the South African Government on account of its racial policies and I hated Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner - a Hollander." Tsafendas characterised Dr. Verwoerd in a similar fashion in his interview with Dr. Sakinofsky immediately after the assassination. However, he never told any of the two-hundred or so people who were questioned by the South African police and the Commission of Enquiry or the sixty-nine interviewed by the author that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd because he was a foreigner. What he told several witnesses was that he considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a dictator, a tyrant, an oppressor of his own people and “Hitler’s best student.”

³³⁷⁰ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Why then did he make the allusion to “foreigner?” True, Dr. Verwoerd was born in Amsterdam, Holland, but Tsafendas was clearly using the word in a wider sense. In Mozambique in 1964, Tsafendas was accused of “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”³³⁷¹ When interrogated by the PIDE, he said he wanted to see “a Mozambique governed by the natives of that Province, be they White or Black, and therefore separated from the mother nation.”³³⁷² This was a firmly held belief which he mentioned to numerous people, including Helen Grispos, Ira Kyriakakis, Katerina Pnema, Andreas Babiolakis, Mary Eendracht and Fathers Ioannis Tsafaridis and Minas Constandinou. They all said that Tsafendas considered the Portuguese rulers of Mozambique to be “foreigners” and “conquerors” and that he used those words to describe them. He believed the Portuguese had commandeered the land from its rightful owners.³³⁷³

In the case of South Africa, Mozambique and Rhodesia, he considered these to be “occupied lands” under the oppressive minority rule of incomers such as Dr. Verwoerd, Ian Smith and the Portuguese colonialists. He exempted Whites who backed majority rule but considered as classic occupiers those settler Whites who had made large fortunes from vast tracts of land effectively stolen from the indigenous non-Whites. What Tsafendas meant by “foreigner,” “occupier” or “conqueror” was “colonialist.” His position was that Mozambique was a province, i.e. a colony, of Portugal, and the Portuguese who ruled it were therefore colonialists, foreigners, incomers from Europe. He also believed that South Africa and Rhodesia should be governed by the majority and not by a handful of Whites. For Tsafendas, the word “foreigner” meant “colonialist.” With the witnesses mentioned above, he used the Greek word for foreigner, which can carry a darker shade of meaning than in English. He believed that all those who supported the Portuguese and the white Rhodesian and South ³³⁷¹ PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA.

³³⁷² PIDE Record of questions, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³³⁷³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

African Governments were foreigners who had stolen the land from the native Mozambicans and Rhodesians and set themselves up as unilateral rulers. Equally, he believed that apartheid-supporting Whites in South Africa were also foreigners and occupiers who had seized and settled native land forcibly removing the non-Whites.³³⁷⁴

Father Minas told the author about Tsafendas's political ideas:

“Dimitris used to say that apartheid was like colonialism, because a few Europeans were ruling a land which belonged to Blacks because their ancestors had invaded and conquered it. I remember he used to call the Portuguese in Mozambique and I think the whites in South Africa too, ‘conquerors’ and ‘occupiers;’ he considered Mozambique and South Africa to be ‘occupied lands,’ conquered by foreigners. He used to say that Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student, because he had learned from him some of his methods and laws and he was applying then to the Blacks.”³³⁷⁵

As for Tsafendas seeing Dr. Verwoerd and the Whites in South Africa, Rhodesia and Mozambique as “foreigners,” he was certainly not the only one who thought that way. Even Dr. Verwoerd himself acknowledged this idea in a speech on February 8, 1961: “There are people who are far away and do not understand us. They see this southern point of Africa only as a White-dominated country in a large continent with over 200 million people who are black. And then they say we do not fit here, we are foreign to the body of Africa.”³³⁷⁶

Tsafendas considered apartheid to be a form of colonialism, not very different from the out-and-out colonialism of Mozambique and Rhodesia. We should note here that in 1963, the policy of apartheid had been declared by the South African Communist Party to be “colonialism of a special type.”³³⁷⁷ It is possible that this pronouncement confirmed Tsafendas’s own convictions on the subject.

Tsafendas also gives a detailed account of his various hospitalizations, but he does not mention the tapeworm. What is more, he presents the diagnoses in a less serious fashion than it appeared in the hospital’s reports. For example, he says he was hospitalized on the Isle of ³³⁷⁴ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³³⁷⁵ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³³⁷⁶ Pelzer, 1966: 494.

³³⁷⁷ Visser, 1997: 79; Volpe, 1988: 28-35.

Wight and at the Oxensoll Krankenhaus Hospital merely for a “nervous condition.” However, the diagnosis by both hospitals was that Tsafendas was suffering from a psychotic illness.³³⁷⁸

As with Tsafendas’s previous statement, there are these questions: Could the police have forged it or imputed to Tsafendas things he did not say or did not mean? But then why would they work on something that was never going to be used? The statement was not tabled for the summary trial or the Commission of Enquiry.

TSAFENDAS’S MEDICAL EXAMINATION

At 3.30 this day, and after Tsafendas had been interrogated by Major Rossouw, he was examined by a doctor. The doctor’s name is indecipherable, but his medical report reads as follows:

“He (Tsafendas) complained of mild breathlessness at times and a feeling of discomfort in the throat. On examination, he appeared in good physical condition and nil abnormal was found in the chest. His temperature was 98.0 F. I came to the conclusion that he was suffering from hyperventilation at times and prescribed a multivitamin tablet containing phenobarbitone gr 1/2.”

Signed: ... (Indecipherable name) ...³³⁷⁹

ACCURACY OF THE MEDICAL REPORT

The author is not in position to know the accuracy of this doctor’s report, but as stated before, it must be read against a background of known collusion by physicians with the authorities in those years. Since collusion and cover-up were commonplace in apartheid South Africa, doubt must remain over any doctor’s report concerning Tsafendas, especially with regard to his physical condition while in police custody.

³³⁷⁸ Dr. Harold Cooper’s testimony on Tsafendas’s summary trial, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³³⁷⁹ Memorandum to Maj. Rossouw re. Demitrio Tsafendas, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 3, NASA.

STATEMENTS

DR. AUBREY RADFORD³³⁸⁰

Specialist surgeon, Member of Parliament representing Durban Central Constituency. 12. p.m.

On 6/9/66 at about 2.13 p.m. I approached the main entrance to the debating chamber of the House of Assembly. This entrance is protected by a screen and as I approached from the northern end Dr. Verwoerd approached from the southern end accompanied by two members of Parliament with whom he was talking. I stopped to allow Dr. Verwoerd to go in before me. He and his companions entered and I followed immediately. Entering the House on the right side of the gangway, just before I reached the seat of the Chief Messenger, I was violently pushed from my left rear. This was so unusual that I glanced to see who had done it. I saw the back of a messenger going towards the left to where Dr. Verwoerd walked. I sat down in my seat almost opposite the seat usually occupied by the Prime Minister.

I heard a scuffle and looking towards the sound I saw arms and legs struggling with someone at Dr. Verwoerd's seat. At the same time Sir de Villiers Graaff ran across and before he reached Dr. Verwoerd he shouted - "Doctor." I ran to Dr. Verwoerd across the floor and found Dr. Fisher already there. Dr. Verwoerd's face was bloodless, his left arm hung over the side of the bench. Dr. Fisher tore open his shirt and waist-coat. There was then visible a stab wound in the area behind which lay the heart. This wound was bleeding slightly and Dr. Fisher put his hand over this wound to control any bleeding. I felt Dr. Verwoerd's left pulse. It was completely absent and never returned. Dr. Fisher lifted his hand from the wound and there was no bleeding. Bleeding came from the wound in the left base of the neck, but had seized when I looked at the wound. Dr. Morrison came to the second bench and Dr. Fisher asked him to give mouth to mouth breathing, which he did. Dr. Fisher then asked Dr. Morrison to go to his (Dr. Fisher's) office and bring down Coramine and a syringe. Dr. Morrison arrived with a full syringe which I passed to Dr. Fisher, who then injected it into the heart of Dr. Verwoerd. He asked for another syringe full which Dr. Morrison supplied quickly and I injected this into the same area. Dr. Fisher and I speaking quietly decided that Dr. Verwoerd was dead. We waited there until Dr. Verwoerd's body was removed by ambulance ... Coramine is a powerful stimulant for the heart, especially in the case of an emergency.

³³⁸⁰ Dr. Aubrey Radford statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

(SGD.) A.J.P. Louw 16457 SGT.

CHARLES EDWIN WOODS³³⁸¹

White Male, aged 64 years, supervisor at Fraser and Chalmers, Mandeni, Zululand.

On 19.4.1965, Demitrio Tsafendas took-up employment with Fraser and Chalmers, and was posted to Mandeni. He was recruited in Durban, and was employed as a Fitter and Turner. He was qualified as a Fitter and Turner and was a good tradesman. Demitrio Tsafendas was discharged on 9.5.1965 because he had been involved in a fight with another White male, Nicholas Vergos. Demitrio Tsafendas sustained a severe laceration of the right wrist. During the time Demitrio Tsafendas was employed by ay firm, I never had any discussions with him along political lines. We discussed his travels in which he related that he had visited many countries but made no mention of any countries which he may have visited behind the iron curtain.

On the 9.5.1965, Demitrio Tsafendas told me that the fight between him and Nicholas Vergos was as a result of a political argument. He did not state anything further. I also interviewed Nicholas Vergos, who was employed by Congella Erection, who told me that I should get rid of Demitrio Tsafendas "as he is a Communist." Demitrio Tsafendas was not a person who mixed freely and kept to himself most of the time.

(SGD.) R.D. WILSON. D/SERGT.

COMMENTS ON WOOD'S STATEMENT

Two days after the assassination, Woods had described Tsafendas in an interview with the Cape Times as "a very good worker, far from being a crank, fairly intelligent, but a violent type."³³⁸²

³³⁸¹ Charles Edwin Woods's statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³³⁸² The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, 'Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.'

TUESDAY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1966

LT. COL. VAN WYK'S REPORT³³⁸³

On this day, Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk wrote his first report "regarding the activities of Demitri Tsafendas in Rhodesia and Mozambique," from interviews he had conducted in both countries. The report was then sent to the offices of the Commissioner of the South African Police in Pretoria and of the Security Police in Cape Town. This is Lt.-Colonel P.J.B. van Wyk's report:

*A. The Commissioner, South African Police,
Privatebag 94
Pretoria.*

*B. The officer in Charge,
Security Police
Cape Town.*

Activities: Dimitrio Tsafendas: Mozambique and Rhodesia.

Following my recent visit to Mozambique and Rhodesia and my investigation into the activities and background of the subject, I wish to report the following:

LOURENÇO MARQUES: 12.09.66

³³⁸³ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

While at Lourenço Marques, I spoke with the following persons:

Members of the P.I.D.E:

Upon my arrival I was welcomed by Sub-Inspector A. Vaz and told that he received instruction from his headquarters in Lisbon to assist us wherever possible with the investigation in this matter, but that they must by no means be involved to such an extent that it came to the knowledge of other organizations and have possible international repercussions for their government. He briefly described the circumstances leading to the arrest and release of the subject at Beira during 1964/65, and promised to personally send a photocopy of the file to General van den Bergh.

George Liberopulis³³⁸⁴

George Ananiades

These people, both Greek, mentioned to me that they both went to school in Lourenço Marques and the Republic. During the beginning of 1965 they met the subject. He practically forced himself upon them and they treated him and often paid for his meals but further had nothing to do with him. He never spoke about politics with them. They describe him as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.

Manuel Hazis

He immigrated to Mozambique during 1963. During the beginning of 1965, he could not remember the date or period the subject came to his business, a bakery, and started a conversation with him. The subject said that he was an evangelist and he spoke out of the Bible often but never politics. He does not know Tsafendas and cannot furnish further information.

Mr. John Gianouris - Greek Vice Consul at Lourenço Marques

He is a literate and pleasant personality that has received much of his education in the Republic and without any doubt can be seen as a supporter of the Republican policy. He also met Tsafendas during the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas called on him for financial assistance. Tsafendas could not convince him that he is a Greek citizen and therefore he did not meet Tsafendas's request. He describes the subject as a normal and intelligent person. Mr. John Gianouris promised to make the necessary further inquiries among the Greek community and disclose any information that may be of importance to me. I believe that he will do his utmost to obtain more information for us.

³³⁸⁴ The surname is misspelled; the correct spelling is Liberopoulos.

Mr. Vaz promised to investigate the allegations of Tsafendas having received money from the Republic.

BEIRA

Here I was met by the District commander of the Police, Captain Rui Tavara who was very helpful during my investigation there. He even had an office made available to me, and people who knew the subject were called to the office. I spoke to the following persons there:

Inspector Horacio Ferreira P.S. Police (Uniform Branch)

He is in charge of the police cells and informs me that Tsafendas was detained in the police cells at Beira for a period of around 14 days from 14 November 1964 due to the fact that he spread subversive propaganda to the Bantu people. According to him, Tsafendas is intense anti-white and went as far as to tell him that the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites. Otherwise Tsafendas was normal and he regarded him as a very intelligent person. During his detention, it was often seen that he read books which were written in Bantu languages, but never the Bible.

Stelios Marangos

He is the owner of a boarding house and knows the subject who stayed at his lodgings from 28 August 1964 to 8 October 1964. He was unemployed and had only paid his lodgings for the period 28 August to 28 September. When he left he said he was going to look for work at the firm that lies the pipeline from Beira to Rhodesia. During his stay in the boarding house he was very quiet and almost never spoke. It was often seen that he carried a Bible with him. He never talked politics.

John Verghis

He is the owner of a café in Beira and met the subject during 1964. However, he could not remember the month or date. On a day the subject entered his shop where he spoke to other people in the cafe. He then frequently visited the cafe where he spent time in the company of other Greeks. The subject was quiet and never spoke much and never about politics. It seemed to him that the subject always visited the café to see just if someone would give him something to eat or drink. After the subject left Beira, he once received a letter from him that was posted from Durban. In this letter he only enquires of lottery tickets. Tsafendas was not a drinker. He only saw him drinking a beer once. According to him Tsafendas was a normal person. On one occasion Tsafendas told him that he was arrested by the Security Police of Mozambique but that nothing could be proved against him. He did not say why he was arrested.

John Emmanuel Marvis

He was in the Scala Café on the day when Tsafendas entered the cafe. After they determined that he speaks Greek, he was invited to join him and the other Greeks who were present. After that he often came into the cafe and they sometimes bought him food and drink. On one occasion he placed a letter on the table in the cafe and said that he had received it from his sister in Rhodesia. He was very upset and said that his sister is coming to Beira for a marriage ceremony but told him that she does not want to see him whatsoever, because he is a disgrace to the family. He took off his hat, which he never removed, pointed to his hair and said: "You see, my father is a Greek and my mother is a coloured. That is reason why my brothers and sisters do not want anything to do with me." He also told them that he left Lourenço Marques during the last war and travelled around the world. He visited all the countries in Europe except a few. Tsafendas never talked politics. On one occasion, however, he spoke in favour of full integration and intermarriage between coloreds and whites. He said that it is high time that a new race came into being. Tsafendas never had money. He mentioned once that he sold household objects in Johannesburg and made a bit of money. On one occasion he borrowed 10 escudos from Mr. Marvis.

Mr. Marvis did not have a 10 escudo piece and therefore had given him 20 escudos. A few days later Tsafendas came to him and took a 100 escudo note from his money-wallet to repay him with. There was a pack of 100 escudo notes in his wallet. (This money is probably his wages for the four days when he worked at Beira for Huma Pipes. See attached documents marked "A"). During the time Tsafendas lived in Beira, he was away for about 20-30 days. After his return, he said that he worked at the firm that lays the pipeline, but that the Rhodesian government deported him for reasons unknown to him. He left Beira and was never seen again.

Captain P.A. Sanianos, the Greek Consul to Beira

He also visited the Scala Cafe often and was often in the company of the subject, Marvis and others had several conversations with him. He never talked politics and is regarded by him as a very intelligent person. On one occasion Tsafendas visited him at his office and requested help. He refused to help because he did not accept him as a Greek citizen. According to Mr. Sanianos, Tsafendas could also speak Russian. He was usually broke and took advantage others. Tsafendas once told him that he got R5000 from his family in Pretoria. Captain Sanianos is undoubtedly a supporter of the R.S.A policy and promised to convey all information to us regarding the background and associations of Tsafendas that came to his attention.

Jose Lopez Baltazar

He is attached to the fire department in Beira. He knows Demitrio Tsafendas and he met the latter at the beginning of 1965 when Tsafendas came to the fire department and asked permission to sleep on the premises because he had just been released from the police cells and had no money for lodging and food. Tsafendas slept on the premises for 10 nights and made sure that he arrived at mealtimes, he was then also always invited to join in the meal. He accepted Tsafendas as a white, but noticed that when Tsafendas was in the presence of whites he said little or nothing but was friendly and talkative with the Bantu. On one or two occasions Tsafendas, while talking with Bantu, stopped talking when he approached. Tsafendas left without thanking them for their hospitality and was never seen again.

In Beira, it was determined that he (Tsafendas) was examined there by a surgeon. I tried obtaining a copy of his report, but was told that we should formally apply for it; necessary steps are being taken.

RHODESIA

Mrs. C.C. Pneuma, the half-sister of subject.

During my conversation with her, she said she had already made a statement to the Rhodesian Security Police concerning what she knew about the subject. However, I asked her what he came to do at her and what he would have said. She told me that they had absolutely nothing in common, and that he only asked her for money, which she refused. It is noticeable that this lady is very upset about the events and that she never accepted the subject as a brother and had very little or nothing to do with him during her lifetime. She saw him at the beginning of 1964 in Pretoria and said that he talked a lot of nonsense.³³⁸⁵

SUMMARY:

Copies of reports by Security Police of Rhodesia attached, labelled A, B, C & D.

According to available information received and reports by the Security Police of Rhodesia it seems that on 02.11.63 the subject went to Lourenço Marques with a Portuguese passport No. 6511/63 valid until 02.11.65. On 19.07.64 he entered Rhodesia for the first time and gave the following personal details: he is white, single and his nationality is Portuguese, last residence Proclamation Hill Cafe, West End, Pretoria and his career as a linguist, translator, interpreter and mechanic.

He was in possession of £50 and the reason for his visit was that he wanted to visit his sister at Marandellas Store, Marendellas, Rhodesia. He was issued with a temporary tourist permit, valid until 09.08.64. According to an endorsement on his permit, he entered Rhodesia again on 27.07.64. There is no record whatsoever of the date on which he left Rhodesia after his first entry in 1964, nor any indication from which country he came to Rhodesia. On 11.08.64, after the expiry of his tourist permit Tsafendas was asked to show a return ticket to South Africa or to deposit an amount if he wanted to extend his permit. At this stage he was looking for a job as linguist at the Public Services Board of Rhodesia. On 19.08.64, the Department of Immigration wrote a letter to Tsafendas and requested him to report to their offices. On the following day the Public Services Board was notified by the Department of Immigration that Tsafendas was in the country illegally and that they cannot give him employment in Rhodesia. He reported to the Immigration offices on 21.08.64 and said that he did not have money and was looking for work. He was told that he is not in possession of a police-certificate, and that the permit for his stay in Rhodesia which he must apply for will take four weeks to be issued and that he cannot be allowed to remain in the country. On this occasion, he stated that he was a missionary in Egypt and North Africa and that he is a member of a Christian community that is not regarded as a Church Fellowship and that it is from this community that he received the money for his train ticket to Rhodesia. He was ordered to leave the country the next day and crossed the border of Mozambique at Umtali the following day. From the 28th August 1964 to the 8th October 1964 he lived in the boarding house at Stelios Marangos Pension Gloria in Beira.

³³⁸⁵ Katerina Pnema's response regarding what she said to Lt. Col. van Wyk is the same as her statement to the Rhodesian Police.

After leaving the boarding house on the 9th October 1964, he again entered Rhodesia via Umtali on 09.10.64, and since he was not in possession of the necessary visa, he was declared a prohibited immigrant and sent out of the country. From there he went directly to Gondola near Beira, where he was arrested by the Security Police of Mozambique because of subversive activities on 16.11.64 while he worked at Hume Pipe, Gondola.

On 26.01.65, he was released again and slept for 10 days at the fire department in Beira. On 17.02.65 he demanded his wages for the few days he worked at Hume Pipe and the amount of 1644 escudos 40c was paid to him, which if it was paid in 100 escudo notes to him, 16 notes would make a thick pack. It is probably these notes which were seen in his possession by Mr. John Marvis. On the 5th March 1965 he left Beira per Indian Ocean liner Karanja for Durban. It is clear that during the period 22.08.64 to 05.03.65 he stayed in Beira.

It is therefore determined that he

- never talked politics with any whites; that he has no political soul mates among whites and that it is not at all possible to obtain any information regarding his political affiliations in Mozambique;
- was most of the time without money and took advantage of others; (However, he was always neatly dressed);
- for all purposes can be seen as a normal, intelligent person.
- was an outcast in his family, a fact that grieved him immensely;
- most probably as a result of this and knowing full well that he had Coloured blood in him, was intensely anti-white.

COMMENTS ON LT. COL. VAN WYK'S REPORT

First and foremost, the report confirms what everyone who was questioned by the South African police at the time said, that Tsafendas was not insane. Col. van Wyk concludes that he is a normal, intelligent person. His report also contains a statement by a Portuguese police officer that "Tsafendas is intensely anti-white" and believed "the Portuguese Government has never done anything for their non-whites." The policeman also thought Tsafendas was normal and he regarded him as "a very intelligent person." We have already discussed the "outcast" issue. Katerina Pnema said that everything she said to the author about her previous statement to the Rhodesian Police on September 13 also applied to the one she made to van Wyk.³³⁸⁶

Col. van Wyk's statement that Tsafendas never talked politics is inaccurate, but this is what he was told. None of the Greeks who were questioned by the police would admit that he spoke to them for fear of being suspected as sympathisers and possibly accused of withholding information about someone who was talking against the Portuguese Government. George Ananiades did indeed tell the author that Tsafendas did not discuss politics with him. However, George Liberopoulos told the author that Tsafendas constantly spoke about politics, and that it was clear to him that he was "strongly in favour of independence for Mozambique." Tsafendas also admitted to Liberopoulos that he was a ³³⁸⁶ See Confidential Security Report of the Special Branch of the British South African Police in Umtali, Subject: Assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

Communist. Liberopoulos told the author that he did not reveal this to the police because “I did not want them to know that. It was not a good time to say that you had been talking to someone who you knew to be a Communist and who was expressing anti-Portuguese ideas, especially after what he did (Tsafendas killing Verwoerd).”³³⁸⁷ Several other witnesses, including all the members of Tsafendas’s family,³³⁸⁸ Patrick O’Ryan,³³⁸⁹ Helen Grispos³³⁹⁰ and Richard Poggenpoel,³³⁹¹ harboured the same fears as Liberopoulos and would not tell the police about their political conversations with Tsafendas. According to Nick Papadakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Andreas Babiolakis also often present at political discussions with Tsafendas was John Marvis and John Verghis, who presumably adopted the same attitude to the police for the same reasons.³³⁹²

Verghis testified that when he was in his café, Tsafendas “never spoke much and never about politics.” According to Andreas Babiolakis, Ira Kyriakakis and Nick Papadakis, all of whom knew Verghis well and visited his establishment over many years, this statement is untrue. They said Tsafendas often talked politics in the café and in Verghis’s presence. More importantly, it was in Verghis’s café that Tsafendas called for a toast to the FRELIMO rebels, an incident that became a local talking point. He bought a beer for everyone and asked them to drink with him, paraphrasing Mark Anthony in Shakespeare’s Julius Caesar, “Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your glasses.” However, when he called on them to drink to a recent attack by FRELIMO rebels, everyone froze and lowered their glasses untouched while Tsafendas downed his beer. Verghis politely asked Tsafendas to leave and he never returned, though he left for Durban just a few days later anyway.³³⁹³ It was natural for Verghis to omit the above incident and pretend that Tsafendas never talked politics; all Greeks distanced themselves from Tsafendas at this fraught time.

The report’s conclusion that Tsafendas “was most of the time without money and took advantage of others” is accurate according to the information which Lt.-Colonel van Wyk ³³⁸⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

³³⁸⁸ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³³⁸⁹ Patrick O’ Ryan in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³³⁹⁰ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013.

³³⁹¹ Richard Poggenpoel in a personal interview, 30 July 2013.

³³⁹² Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

³³⁹³ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

collected. However, it must have been more than coincidence that such information came only from people who knew him in Beira. The police and the Commission questioned about two hundred witnesses³³⁹⁴ and it was only those in Beira who made such comments. None of the witnesses in South Africa or elsewhere described Tsafendas in such terms, indeed some, such as Bornman and Pappas, testified that Tsafendas was the exact opposite and helped people financially.³³⁹⁵

The fact that while he was in Mozambique Tsafendas had problems finding work, was arrested twice and spent three months in solitary confinement might have been contributing factors to any untoward behaviour. At one point during his stay, Tsafendas asked Nick Vlachopoulos, his brother-in-law, to sell some furniture which he had left in storage in Pretoria. Vlachopoulos did so and sent the proceeds to Tsafendas in Mozambique. It is unlikely that Tsafendas would have sold off his furniture unless he was in a desperate financial situation, since he could have done so before he left Pretoria and not left them in storage. The author also asked ninety-six witnesses whether Tsafendas was as described and all strongly denied it. Their statements and comments on the subject will be discussed in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry.

When interviewed by the author, George Ananiades and George Liberopoulos denied ever telling van Wyk that Tsafendas had “practically forced himself upon them,” and both strongly condemned this use of words as being completely inaccurate. Ananiades remembers being questioned by the police, but he does not remember what he said in his statement. Anyway, he did not know Tsafendas well, and had only seen him only once or twice during the latter’s short stay in Lourenço Marques. When the author read to him the comment regarding Tsafendas “forcing himself upon them,” Ananiades said:

³³⁹⁴ The figure of 200 witnesses is arrived at as follows:

- 112 statements made to the police by witnesses who were questioned after the assassination were found in the archives. The study has established that at least another 37 witnesses were questioned but their statements were not found in the archives. However, these witnesses either spoke to the author about their interviews or the author found evidence that they were interviewed (the remaining 32 Eleni seamen, Eleni Vlachopoulos, Evangelia Nissiots, Panagiotis Peroglou, and Elias Costantaras) or the content of their statements became known at the trial (Patrick O’Ryan). This takes the total of witnesses questioned by the police to at least 149. It is likely that there were further witnesses who were not located by the author and whose statements have gone missing, therefore we are not in position to know the exact number of people questioned by the police.
- The Commission interviewed 105 people, including Tsafendas, thus 104 witnesses. However, 53 of these had also been questioned by the police, which gives us 51 new witnesses. Therefore the total number of witnesses questioned by the police and the Commission is at least 200.

³³⁹⁵ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA; Rand Daily Mail, 14 September 1966, ‘Tsafendas: in the eyes of a friend.’

“No, no, no, no. It was nothing like that. I met him one day in Costa do Sol where we had coffee. We spoke and he said he was leaving the next day for South Africa. That was all. He never asked me to pay anything for him or to give him any money. Nothing. Never. I can’t say if he generally was a beggar, but he was not like that with me and did not give me any such impression. He did not look or act like a beggar. It is not true (that Tsafendas forced himself upon him). I don’t know why it is in my statement, but I never said anything like that.”³³⁹⁶

George Liberopoulos associated more than Ananiades with Tsafendas during the latter’s short stay in Lourenço Marques, and they met again later in Beira. Liberopoulos does not remember what he told the police, but he too denies that Tsafendas “forced himself upon them.” He told the author that when he first met Tsafendas, he had paid for his dinner over Tsafendas’s protests because he was “a stranger in the town,” and it was a Greek tradition that those who lived there paid for a visitor’s dinner. The next day, “he (Tsafendas) insisted on paying for both” of their meals. Liberopoulos also told the author that although he did pay for some drinks for Tsafendas, “Tsafendas always paid for the next round.” This was the custom among Greeks in Mozambique: “one would pay for one round and the other for the next round.” Liberopoulos characterised Tsafendas to the author as a “proud man and no beggar.”³³⁹⁷

Babiolakis, Kyriakakis and Papadakis also disagree with Verghis’s opinion that Tsafendas “seemed always to visit the café just to see if someone would give him something to eat or drink.” It is true that many Greeks offered to buy drinks for Tsafendas, but not because he was begging. Firstly, most Greeks there were quite wealthy and Tsafendas was very poor. The Greeks always sat together and when Tsafendas came in, he would be invited to join them. Whoever had bought the current round of drinks would buy one for Tsafendas, the newcomer, according to drinking tradition. Babiolakis and Papadakis both said Tsafendas would accept such a drink only when he had enough money to buy the next round. Most times, it was obvious that he could not afford to buy everyone a drink, so he would decline the drink, but would sit in their company and talk with them.³³⁹⁸

³³⁹⁶ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

³³⁹⁷ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

³³⁹⁸ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

Another important issue is that, according to Marvis, Tsafendas “spoke in favour of full integration and intermarriage between Coloureds and Whites” and “said that it is high time that a new race came into being.” This is entirely true. Several witnesses confirmed to the author that Tsafendas said that. However, Marvis does not explain the context or the origin of Tsafendas’s thinking. Tsafendas was disturbed by racism and conflicts throughout the world and believed that things would never change as long as there were different countries, nationalities, races and religions. Babiolakis and Papadakis, along with Marvis, were in the Scala Café talking politics with Tsafendas when this subject came up. Tsafendas believed that the world would become a better and safer place if there were no countries, no religions, and all people were the same colour. When asked how the last of the three could be achieved, Tsafendas had jokingly said that “everyone should have sex with someone of a different colour, so a new race will be created where everyone will be the same colour or at least they will all be mixed! Only then will there be no racism and discrimination anymore!”³³⁹⁹ It was clear to them that Tsafendas said the sex part as a joke, but that he was serious about the rest of his theory.³⁴⁰⁰ Tsafendas would later repeat his theory and his comment about sex in the same conversational context, half-joke and half-serious, to several people.³⁴⁰¹ As we will see, his comment was misconstrued at the summary trial as meaning that Tsafendas was paranoid and wanted to create a new race, like some mad villain in a movie.

In an interview with the author, Katerina Pnema offered an explanation of his statements based on her long acquaintance with her half-brother:

“He was saying that the South Africans are Nazis, he was calling Dr. Verwoerd Hitler’s best student ... that us and most Whites were exploiting the Black Rhodesians ... he was calling the Greeks racists, saying that one day the Rhodesians would kick us all out and take back what we stole from them ... that one day the Blacks in South Africa would throw the Whites into the sea ... He believed Mozambique and South Africa should have a colourful flag, like a rainbow or something in order for each colour to represent each race! Have you heard anything more absurd? He used to say that Jesus Christ was socialist and that ³³⁹⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

³⁴⁰⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

³⁴⁰¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

if he was alive today he would have been a revolutionary, fighting apartheid and for the independence of Mozambique. Can you believe it? Well, this is what he was saying, all this kind of nonsense! How could I have told all these things to the police? They would have said ‘Why didn’t you report him to the police since he had such crazy ideas? Didn’t you know he was dangerous?’ You can’t imagine how many people had told my poor father to do something with him and his crazy political ideas. You can’t imagine how many! Even my poor mother told him to talk to him because he would get us into trouble someday, as he was often doing, but my poor dad did nothing. It was actually all his fault. He taught him all these things, but my poor father was a cautious man, he was not like Dimitri; he wouldn’t go around saying all these stupidities. His son was the opposite; he couldn’t keep his mouth shut. What about the other thing? He changed his name because he thought it was insulting to be called Tsafantakis since this was the name given to our ancestors by the Turks! Wasn’t this nonsense?’³⁴⁰²

Pnefma also remembered the wedding mentioned by Marvis at which she told Tsafendas that she did not want to see him because he was an embarrassment to the family. She confirmed that this is what she told him. Her anger flared after Tsafendas was dismissed from a job at the docks in Beira which Pnefma and her husband had helped him obtain. Tsafendas had asked the Mozambican workers to strike against the dock owner in support of their working rights.³⁴⁰³ Pnefma and her husband were rightly embarrassed since they had intervened on behalf of Tsafendas to get him the job. Furthermore, Pnefma learned that Tsafendas had been arrested twice by the Portuguese Security Police and that he had spent three months in prison.³⁴⁰⁴

³⁴⁰² Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁴⁰³ For details about the incident see Chapter Two.

³⁴⁰⁴ Katerina Pnefma in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

PIDE REPORT

The same day, a PIDE report regarding Tsafendas, written in Beira, on January 19, 1965, was sent by PIDE Sub-Inspector A. Vaz to General van den Bergh. It started with the following note:

Dear General,

I attach herewith a photocopy of a document which was requested from me by Col. van Wyk. I must inform you that this is the first time that a copy or the contents of this document has ever been revealed to anybody, not even to my Government.

My most respected compliments.

(SGD.) Vaz.

REPORT.

EXCELLENT SIR:

SUBJECT: DIMITRIO TSAFENDAS OR DIMITRIUS TSAFENDAKIS, single, without profession, born 14.1.1918. in Lourenço Marques, son of MIGUEL TSAFENDAKIS and of AMELIA WILLIAM, without permanent residence.

On 16th November last year, he was handed over to this sub-delegation by the P.S.P. (Uniformed Branch) of his city (Beira), accused of making subversive propaganda to the native masses.

TSAFENDAKIS or TSAFENDAS among many other phrases, was accused of having said the following:- "This land is not called Portugal, but United States of Mozambique. We already have money and what we do now need is not to be cheated when saying that we are Portuguese. No, we Africans and I do not like the Portuguese flag." When questioned, the accused confessed that he had said this, but that at the time, when he pronounced these words at the hotel bar of Gondola, among many Bantu people, he was under the influence of liquor and also under exultations (excitement). On the other side, he also said that these words were caused by the ideas which he had about the Independence of Mozambique, a Mozambique governed by natives whether white or black, but separate from the mother-country (Portugal).

The accused describes on previous interrogations a history which has been his life, an authentic romance of adventure, in which he has travelled through diverse countries of the world.

The individual referred to states that he had never been a member of any subversive organization, neither has he ever worked for one in the direction of obtaining the independence of Mozambique. He also states that he has never been involved in subversive activities against the security of the State, even though he is all for the Independence of this Province.

After the accused was analysed by his actions and reasons, we have verified that he must be an individual who is mentally deranged and this has also been proved by the overseas hospital in Lisbon, where he was a mental patient, according to pages 19 of information which was given to us by the General Delegation of this Police Force. The individual referred to has on previous occasions been in the cells of this Police Force in Lisbon about twice. This was confessed by himself in statements. The first time in 1940, when crossing the border post of Barca d 'Alva to enter the country, without sufficient documentation. The second time in 1951 after arriving from Mozambique where he was not accepted and forced to return to Lisbon.

Even though, as has been said before, that he is mentally deranged, the truth is that it can be seen in him a certain spirit of revolt in relation to the institutions responsible for holding back the Independence of Mozambique.

On the other hand, as mentioned on the final portion of this information, already referred to, given by the General Delegation, he is an individual with a very bad moral background.

The accused has on many occasion been interned at the poor-house in Lisbon.

On the criminal registers nothing is registered against him. In the meanwhile as mentioned before, the Accused had already previous defaults on his Police register as by himself confessed on the statements.

Here is everything with respect to the accused and which I have the honour to forward to your Excellency, for a better judgement and your convenience.

Finally, I inform your Excellency that the Passport No. 6.511/63 issued in favour of the Accused, in Lourenço Marques on 2.11.63. and valid for S.A. S.R. N. Rhodesia, Malawi, Swaziland, Bechuanaland and Basutoland, is attached to the case docket. With the Passport is also a Bulletin of admission of the Portuguese Airways who escorted this man when he was handed over by this Police Force.

*BEIRA, 19th January, 1965.*³⁴⁰⁵

COMMENTS ON PIDE'S REPORT

This report is the translation of a report sent by the sub-Director of PIDE in Lourenço Marques to the Director General PIDE on January 19, 1965, while Tsafendas was in police custody for “making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses.”³⁴⁰⁶ The report was accompanied by a letter stating that this report was the “opinion, dispatch and conclusion of the progress indicated in the margin, whose defendant is the national of African race, Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis.”³⁴⁰⁷ Seven days later, on January 26, 1965, Tsafendas was freed,³⁴⁰⁸ only to be arrested again a few days later.³⁴⁰⁹ Naturally, the second arrest could not have been included in the report. However, this is not the only important omission from the report.

As they did before, PIDE again fed the South African authorities with unimportant or known information. Vital facts regarding Tsafendas's political activities are once more ³⁴⁰⁵ PIDE report regarding Demitrio Tsafendas or Dimitrius Tsafendakis, 19 January 1965. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁴⁰⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demitrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁴⁰⁷ Letter of the Subdirector of PIDE in Lourenço Marques to the Director General of PIDE in Lisbon, 23 February 1965. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT

³⁴⁰⁸ South African Police report regarding the activities of Demitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA; Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 19. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁴⁰⁹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016; Nick Papadakis in a personal interview, 30 January 2015.

missing. There is no mention of the fact that PIDE held a detailed file of 130 pages on Tsafendas,³⁴¹⁰ nor that he was arrested in 1964 in Mozambique accused of pretending to be a religious missionary while in reality, preaching “in favour of Mozambique’s independence.”³⁴¹¹ Missing also are the reasons he was denied entry to Mozambique in October 1951, that he was forced to live in exile from 1951 to 1963,³⁴¹² that he was only given amnesty in 1963 after convincing the Portuguese he was insane, and that he made several applications for permission to return to Mozambique and all were turned down -- each time after PIDE supplied the Ministry of Interior with information about his “political and professional activities.”³⁴¹³

Furthermore, parts of this report are identical, word for word, with the PIDE report sent by the Head-Inspector of PIDE in Lisbon to the sub-Director of the PIDE on September 8, 1966, which asked him not to reveal to the South African authorities any “information indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the Independence of Mozambique.” Obviously, PIDE is still attempting to downplay, at times omit entirely, his political activities, and to conceal any information picturing Tsafendas “as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique.”

STATEMENTS

J.J. VAN DEN BERG³⁴¹⁴

The following is the statement of J.J. van den Berg; the passport control officer at South Africa’s Consulate in Lourenço Marques, who was bribed by George Michaletos and Nick Vlachopoulos to turn a blind eye and issue a visa to Tsafendas despite his being on the “Stop ³⁴¹⁰ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. 25 August 1951. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁴¹¹ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁴¹² Letter of a police agent to the Ministry of Interiors regarding Tsafendas’s exile. 30 October 1962. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁴¹³ Letter of the Directorate-General of the Political and Civil Administration of the Overseas Ministry to the Director of the International and State Defence Police. 07/04/1958. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁴¹⁴ J.J. van den Berg statement regarding the ‘Admission to the Republic of Demitrio Tsafendas’, 20 September 1966. Report COE, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

List” of persons forbidden to enter South Africa.³⁴¹⁵ Naturally, van den Berg does not mention he was bribed.

The Consul General

Regarding: Admission to the Republic Demitrio Tsafendas

With reference to par. (3) of your query, I wish to point out that as a rule, the “Stop Lists” in this office are thoroughly checked before Temporary Permits or Visas (if necessary) are issued to persons who wish to enter the Republic for visits.

In the case of Tsafendas, it is extremely difficult to recall the exact circumstances in which this man was granted admission to the Republic. According to the data on the D.I.10, it was a Saturday morning and this office issued 64 actual permits - indicating that it must have been extremely busy. When reviewing the “Stop Lists,” the only explanation I can think of is the possibility that I looked the name up among the index letter “S”, following the sound association in the pronunciation of his surname. Under such busy conditions, I might not have taken the passport or D.I.10 form with me to the lists. (I may mention here that this was indeed the case when I heard the first reports of the incident and reviewed the records - I looked up the name Stafendas.)

Furthermore, if it did so happen that I did not check the list in the case of Tsafendas, the following factors would possibly have lead me to believe that the man’s bona fides left no hint of doubt. He presented a Portuguese passport which was issued to him that morning by local authorities. This passport would describe him as a resident of Lourenço Marques and also further state that he was born here. With the knowledge that the Portuguese authorities are extremely thorough when reviewing an applicant’s circumstances and background before a passport is issued, it was a determining factor which, together with the other information, made him come across as one of many bona fide visitors.

The fact that he wanted to visit family relatives whom have been staying in the Republic a long time, as well as the address in South Africa that he had given, which spoke of a good neighbourhood, would under the pressure of work contribute to justifying not ³⁴¹⁵ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas’s Live and Let Live, 2007; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

checking the records extremely intensively. I'm afraid that there is nothing more that I could add. However, I am deeply touched by the fatal consequences of admitting the man and will not easily live with it.

J.J. van den Berg.

Passport control officer.

Lourenço Marques

20 September 1966.

NEW EVIDENCE CONCERNING J.J. VAN DEN BERG'S ROLE IN THE CASE

In October 1964, Marika Tsafantakis, along with her son Victor, his wife Anna, and her son-in-law, Nick Vlachopoulos, Eleni's husband, arrived in Lourenço Marques by car from Pretoria. It was known to the family that Tsafendas was banned from South Africa.

According to Tsafendas, as well as his half-sisters Katerina Pnema and Elena Vlachopoulos, and his cousin Mary Eendracht, the passport officer, J.J. van den Berg, was bribed by George Michaletos, Tsafendas's uncle in Lourenço Marques, and Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas's brother-in-law, to overlook the fact that Tsafendas was on South Africa's Stop List and to issue him with a visa. It was Tsafendas's aunt Artemis who convinced her husband, George Michaletos, to arrange it.³⁴¹⁶

The Commission of Enquiry, most likely unaware of the bribe, would later find van den Berg guilty of "a clear case of neglect of duty."³⁴¹⁷ However, the South African police very probably discovered the truth and made van den Berg pay the price. Arriving at his home one day, security officers arrested van den Berg, refused to tell his family where he was being taken, then subjected him to extended torture while in their custody. According to his son, Gavin, his father was interrogated non-stop and not allowed to sleep or to use the toilet. "He was kicked till his ribs were broken ... they made him stand naked for days on end in his own urine and faeces..." When he was finally released, this former diplomatic officer could find no regular work and the family lived for a time in a relative's garage. Van den Berg moved "from job to job" and his children "from school to school."³⁴¹⁸

³⁴¹⁶ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas's Live and Let Live, 2007; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁴¹⁷ Report of the COE, Chapter V. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

Even by South African police standards, this was extraordinarily harsh punishment for someone who simply "neglected his duty," raising strong suspicions that the police had learned about the bribe.³⁴¹⁹ If so, the fact was never revealed, obviously because of the huge embarrassment it would have caused to the Government if it was known that one of its employees accepted a bribe from the man who assassinated the Prime Minister.

Another factor that appears to support the theory that the police found out about van den Berg's bribe is that no action was taken against Piet Burger, the Chief Messenger at the Assembly, and two senior messengers, Piet Schuin and Sydney Wiehand, who had approved Tsafendas for employment in Parliament. These three men failed to screen Tsafendas properly and were arguably more to blame than van den Berg for Tsafendas getting so close to Dr. Verwoerd. The report of the Commission said about them, "They are good, decent people who did their duty as they saw and knew it. One can hardly blame them for the appointment which was made. They simply did not have the knowledge, ability and insight to make a proper selection."³⁴²⁰ The three continued working in Parliament as before. Furthermore, no action was taken against the three officials of the Department of Immigration who on three different occasions interviewed Tsafendas in Pretoria in November 1963 regarding his application for permanent residence. Tsafendas made a very favourable impression on all of them and they issued him with the required certificate.³⁴²¹ These three officials were unaware of "the fact that Tsafendas's name appeared on the Department's stop list."³⁴²²

In addition, according to the Commission's Report, "on 10th July, 1964, Tsafendas applied in writing to the Department of the Interior for a return visa to enable him to visit Mozambique and Southern Rhodesia. Miss J. Markram, an assistant in that Department, ³⁴¹⁸ Gavin van den Berg, son of J.J. van den Berg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

³⁴¹⁹ Again, we can imagine what the South African police must have done to Tsafendas if they did all this to this man.

³⁴²⁰ Report of the COE, Chapter X, Paragraph 12. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁴²¹ Memorandum about the application for permanent residence in terms of the Aliens Act from Demetrio Tsafendas, drawn up by the Secretary for Immigration, n.d. K150, Vol. 4, File: 1/7, Departement van immigrasie. NASA.

³⁴²² Report of the COE, Chapter II C, Paragraph 2. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

checked the stop list and indicated that Tsafendas's name did not appear on it. In fact, it did appear on the list."³⁴²³ Further, always according to the Commission of Enquiry,

“On 5th March, 1965, Tsafendas left Beira on board the Indian liner Karanja and arrived at Durban on 8th March, 1965. When the Karanja arrived at Durban on 8th March, 1965, it was the duty of the officials of the Department of the Interior who went on board, inter alia, to check the passenger list with the stop list. On the stop list the names TSAFENDAKIS: DIMITRIO a TSAFENDAS: DEMETRIO appeared, and on the passenger list the name TSAFENDAS: DEMITRIO. Once again, for some reason or other, it was not ascertained that Tsafendas's name appeared on the stop list.”³⁴²⁴

Clearly all the above officials were no less negligent than van den Berg, since, like him, they missed the fact that Tsafendas's name was on the Stop List. However, they all kept their jobs and faced no consequences. Van den Berg was brutally and disproportionately punished for his “negligence,” although his “crime” was exactly the same as that of the Immigration and Interior officials and to a lesser extent that of the messengers. The fact that van den Berg received such viciously different treatment suggests that the police must have had discovered he had taken a bribe.

³⁴²³ Report of the COE, Chapter II C, Paragraph 11. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁴²⁴ Report of the COE, Chapter II C, Paragraphs 23 and 24. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

SATURDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER 1966³⁴²⁵

STATEMENTS

ESPERANZA THERON³⁴²⁶

Secretary, White woman, Durban. 10.30 a.m.

During 1963 my husband Daniel B. Theron moved his offices as an attorney to 101 Lincoln House, Masonic Grove. The offices occupied by my husband were situated adjacently the offices occupied by the listed communist, Rowley Arenstein. I was my husband's secretary and was thus always in the office. During 1965 or late 1964 I observed a White or Coloured male whom I have since identified from photographs in the newspapers as Demitrio Tsafendas, frequenting the offices of Rowley Arenstein. Demitrio Tsafendas used to pay visits to Arenstein's office regularly and on occasion he would greet me.

I observed Demitrio Tsafendas actually entering the general office of Rowley Arenstein but am unable to state for what purpose he visited Arenstein. I am unable to state the period of time that he used to visit Arenstein, but the visits were very regular. I have also observed Demitrio Tsafendas in the presence of Rowley Arenstein walking down the corridor from Arenstein's office.

(Sgd). R.D. Wilson D/Sgt.

TSAFENDAS AND ARENSTEIN

As a result of Theron's testimony, Arenstein and his secretary, Thelma Beryl Suddes, were questioned by the South African police. She testified that "to the best of her knowledge," she had never seen Tsafendas in Arenstein's office.³⁴²⁷ Arenstein was questioned on September ³⁴²⁵ No statements or other evidence were found in the archives for the previous three days.

³⁴²⁶ Eperanza Theron statement to the police, 24 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁴²⁷ Thelma Beryl Suddes statement to the COE, 22 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

24, 1966, by Brigadier Baster “at office Nr.505, The Grays, Johannesburg in connection with the assassination of the late Dr. Verwoerd.”³⁴²⁸

Arenstein denied knowing Tsafendas. This was a natural thing for him to do, especially at the time, since he was about to go on trial. On October 31, 1966, he was sentenced to four years’ imprisonment under the Suppression of Communism Act for furthering the aims of Communism.³⁴²⁹ Tsafendas later spoke at length to Father Minas Constandinou about meeting in Durban with a “Jewish Communist lawyer.” Tsafendas was probably given his address by someone from the anti-apartheid movement in London. Father Minas did not remember the name of the Durban lawyer, but Ronnie Kasrils stated in a personal interview with the author that “Arenstein was the only Jewish Communist lawyer in Durban.”³⁴³⁰

COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY RAISED IN PARLIAMENT

The previous day, opposition leader Sir de Villiers Graaff listed six questions which he urged should be considered by the Commission of Enquiry into the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd. In an intervention in the Assembly, de Villiers Graaff expressed confidence in the Commission judge, Mr. Justice van Wyk, and suggested that his terms of reference should seek answers to the following questions:

- What could be done to ensure, so far as was humanly possible, that nothing of this nature happened in South Africa again.
- How Dimitrios Tsafendas came to be admitted to South Africa and how a person of this sort had gained the right to permanent residence in the light of reports that had subsequently come to light.
- Whether the Department of Labour recommended his employment at Parliament, and if so, whether procedures of scrutiny were adequate.
- Whether there was sufficient liaison between the various departments of Government in matters of this kind.

³⁴²⁸ Johannes Christoffel Broodryk statement to the COE, 24 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁴²⁹ South Africa History Online (n.d) Rowley Israel Arenstein.

³⁴³⁰ Ronnie Kasrils in a personal interview, 16 May 2016.

- How Tsafendas came to be employed as a messenger at Parliament and how he had secured access to the Assembly Chamber.
- Whether the security arrangements for people occupying high offices were adequate.³⁴³¹

Prime Minister John Vorster replied that the terms and references of the forthcoming Commission of Enquiry were wide enough to cover all these points.³⁴³²

³⁴³¹ The Star, 24 September 1966: 3, 'Questions on Tsafendas.'

³⁴³² The Canberra Times, 23 September 1966: 5, 'South Africa: Assassination Inquiry.'

MONDAY, 26 SEPTEMBER 1966

THE APPOINTMENT OF TSAFENDAS'S DEFENCE TEAM

Tsafendas was held in police custody without legal representation, a situation which was lawful at the time. Under the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96 of 1965,³⁴³³ police officers were permitted to detain anyone suspected of a political crime and to hold him without access to a lawyer for one-hundred and eighty days. For this reason, the legislation was popularly known as the 180-day Detention Act.³⁴³⁴ Only three days earlier, on September 23, 1966, it was revealed that Hendrik Bahula,³⁴³⁵ a member of the PAC, was held in isolation in a police cell for eighteen days without being formally charged.³⁴³⁶ Tsafendas was held for twenty days after the assassination without legal representation before a defence team was appointed to represent him pro deo, meaning his legal costs were met by the State.

As we have seen, Tsafendas soon after his arrest asked for a lawyer, specifically for human rights and anti-apartheid advocate George Bizos, but his request was turned down. Instead, the State appointed its own choices on September 26, exactly twenty days after the assassination. The first was attorney David Bloomberg, whose father Abraham was a good friend of Judge Beyers and a board member at a horse-racing club of which Bloomberg Snr was president. The second appointment was that of advocate Wilfrid Cooper, to whom the judge made it clear that that Tsafendas had only one line of defence and that was insanity. Otherwise, he warned, he would “swing.”³⁴³⁷

WILFRID COOPER (Advocate) 1927 –2004

Wilfrid Edward Cooper was born in Cape Town in 1926. He matriculated from Wynberg Boys High School, Cape Town, in 1944 and the following year enrolled for a BA (Law)

³⁴³³ The 180-Day Detention Act (the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act, Number 96 of 1965) allowed the government to detain individuals for interrogation for up to 180 days without a lawyer being present. The public were not entitled to any information, not even the identity or whereabouts of people being detained. Detainees could literally and effectively “disappear.” If no charges were laid, Special Branch were required to release detainees after 180 days. At the time, Vorster boasted that this was repeatable “until this side of eternity” (“A Distinguished South African Lawyer,” 1965: 4; Herbstein, 2004: 75; Mandela, 2013: 402; Vassen, n.d.).

³⁴³⁴ Herbstein, 2004: 75; Nelson Mandela Organization, n.d., 1965. Criminal Procedure Amendment Act No 96; Rudolph, 1984: 12; World Peace Council, 1972: 14.

³⁴³⁵ The surname in the newspaper cutting is not clear, but seems to be Bahula.

³⁴³⁶ Rand Daily Mail, 23 September 1966, ‘Prisoner complains.’

³⁴³⁷ Wilfrid Cooper in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997.

degree at the University of Stellenbosch. He received his degree in 1947.³⁴³⁸ In 1948 he went to work as a clerical assistant in the Senate, where he encountered Hendrik Verwoerd and heard the future prime minister deliver his first Senate speech. For two days, he performed the duties of a parliamentary messenger, exactly like Tsafendas.³⁴³⁹

Between 1950 and 1952, Cooper clerked for Mr. Justice Herbstein while also acting as a prosecutor in Wynberg Magistrates Court and reading for his LL.B degree from the University of South Africa. Obtaining this qualification in 1952, he was called to the Cape Bar, then in 1965 appointed Senior Counsel.³⁴⁴⁰ Embarking on an illustrious academic career, Cooper held part-time positions as lecturer and examiner at the Universities of Cape Town and the Western Cape. In 1972, he received a Ph.D. from the University of Cape Town for his thesis, “The Letting and Hiring of Immovable Property in South Africa.” He authored fourteen books on such topics as motor law in South Africa, on which he was considered the foremost authority; for example, the 865-page South African Motor Law.³⁴⁴¹ He was also an avid reader of literature and was able to quote extensively from James Joyce.³⁴⁴²

Cooper’s career at the Cape Bar spanned thirty-six years. He was nicknamed “Tiger” by Justice Cyril Newton Thompson³⁴⁴³ for his fearlessness and the cross-examination skills³⁴⁴⁴ he demonstrated at a number of trials. He is remembered primarily for leading the defence team for Tsafendas, but he also figured prominently in such political cases as the 1962 trial of three members of the Armed Resistance Movement,³⁴⁴⁵ as defence counsel in 1976 for Jeremy Cronin and David and Susan Rabkin, charged under the Terrorism Act³⁴⁴⁶ and acted for Steve Biko just before his death in July 1977.³⁴⁴⁷

He appeared for the families of a number of anti-apartheid activists who died in detention, such as Imam Abdullah Haron in 1970³⁴⁴⁸ and Mapetla Mohapi in 1977.³⁴⁴⁹ He was also involved in the sensational criminal trial of Marthinus Rossouw for the murder of ³⁴³⁸ Gavin Cooper in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³⁴³⁹ The Daily News, 21 October 1966: 3; Cape Times, 19 October 1966.

³⁴⁴⁰ The Cape Argus, 10 March 2004

³⁴⁴¹ Gavin Cooper in a personal interview, 10 April 2016; Kahn, 1968: 154.

³⁴⁴² Kahn, 1968: 154.

³⁴⁴³ Cape Times, 19 October 1966.

³⁴⁴⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 75.

³⁴⁴⁵ Sachs, 1968: 68.

³⁴⁴⁶ Cape Times, 20 September 1976.

³⁴⁴⁷ Woods, 1978: 76.

³⁴⁴⁸ Desai and Marney, 1978: 73.

³⁴⁴⁹ Daily Despatch, 17 January 1977.

Baron Dieter von Schauroth in 1961³⁴⁵⁰ and in 1975 he successfully appealed the death sentence of Marlene Lehnberg, known as the “Scissors Murderess.”³⁴⁵¹ In South West Africa in 1976, he appeared for six members of SWAPO who were charged under the Terrorism Act for acts related to the assassination of Chief Minister Filemon Elifas in August 1975.³⁴⁵²

In August 1988, Cooper was appointed to the bench as an Acting Judge in the Eastern Cape Division and in March 1989 was permanently appointed.³⁴⁵³ In March 1991 he was transferred to the Cape Division and remained there until his retirement due to poor health in January 1991.³⁴⁵⁴ He died in 2004, having donated part of his private law library to the Cape Bar, now known as the Wilfrid Cooper library.³⁴⁵⁵ According to Professor John Dugard, Cooper was one of the very few brave South African lawyers who demonstrated the courage and dignity, in a hostile and fevered political atmosphere, to defend political detainees of all races during the apartheid years.³⁴⁵⁶

DAVID BLOOMBERG (Attorney) (1932-)

David Bloomberg was born in Sea Point, Cape Town, in 1932. His father, Abraham, widely known as Abe, was an attorney and at one time Mayor of Cape Town (1945-1947), and his mother Miriam, was a professional ballet dancer. David Bloomberg followed in his father’s footsteps by also becoming a lawyer and Mayor of Cape Town – in 1973, the youngest in the city’s history – and reflected his mother’s interests by involving himself in South African theatre.³⁴⁵⁷

Bloomberg, though Jewish, was educated by Roman Catholic teachers at the Christian Brothers’ College before graduating in law from the University of Cape Town.³⁴⁵⁸ He was a man of many talents. Alongside his legal career, he became a prominent theatrical impresario, responsible for several acclaimed productions; he brought famous performers to South Africa³⁴⁵⁹ and established the Barn Theatre at Constantia.³⁴⁶⁰ For more than two decades, he ³⁴⁵⁰ May, 1968: 131.

³⁴⁵¹ The Cape Argus, 20 June 1975.

³⁴⁵² South African Press Association, 11 March 2004.

³⁴⁵³ Eastern Province Herald, 06 March 1989.

³⁴⁵⁴ Cape Times, 24 November 1997.

³⁴⁵⁵ South African Press Association, 11 March 2004.

³⁴⁵⁶ Dugard, 1978: 243.

³⁴⁵⁷ Business Day Live, 29 March 2011.

³⁴⁵⁸ Business Day Live, 29 March 2011.

³⁴⁵⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: cover.

³⁴⁶⁰ Green, 2004: 164.

was Director of the Cape Performing Arts Board, and he wrote an arts column for two Cape Town newspapers.³⁴⁶¹

In 1965, Bloomberg caused some controversy in the USA by publically praising, defending and supporting apartheid. In an article in the New York Times on May 23, 1965, Bloomberg denounced Arthur Miller,³⁴⁶² Edward Albee³⁴⁶³ and other prominent American playwrights for refusing to allow their works to be performed in South Africa unless before mixed audiences, which had recently been prohibited. He said their refusal would “only succeed in harming the theatrical producers and directors who have been endeavouring to keep theatre in South Africa alive” and theatre would be set back fifty years. However, he added that a government as strong and stable as South Africa’s was unlikely to be intimidated by a group of American playwrights into changing its laws.³⁴⁶⁴

In an evident endorsement of apartheid and Dr. Verwoerd’s policies, Bloomberg described racial separation as “South Africa’s answer to the problem of achieving peaceful coexistence of different people at different stages of their development ... it is designed to make it possible for various racial groups to enjoy the full privileges of a free society, each in their own area, unhampered by the strains imposed by a multi-racial society. Apartheid is not a political ruse, but merely a notion that people get on best with their own kind.”³⁴⁶⁵

Bloomberg also wrote that the government, “in its wisdom,” had decided that separate development was “a more harmonious and peaceful solution than enforced integration” and was “in the best interest of the non-White population.” It was “regrettable” he wrote, that “American playwrights consider themselves qualified to pass judgement on a country about which their knowledge is minimal,” having been influenced by portions of the American Press which presented South Africa in a “most distorted picture.”³⁴⁶⁶

³⁴⁶¹ Bloomberg, 2007: cover.

³⁴⁶² Arthur Miller was America’s leading playwright at this time and works by him such as Death of a Salesman, The Crucible and A View from the Bridge were sought out by theatrical companies worldwide. In 1956, Miller was sub-poenaed to appear before the House Un-American Activities Committee but refused to name friends who shared his left-wing political stance. He was found guilty of contempt of Congress, fined, sentenced to prison, blacklisted and had his passport confiscated. This decision was overturned in 1958.

³⁴⁶³ Edward Albee’s best-known plays, such as Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? and The Zoo Story, were hailed for their realistic examination of the modern condition. Virginia Woolf (1962) examined the breakdown in the marriage of a middle-class couple and contains dialogue which has been hailed as some of the greatest in all of American theatre. The play was filmed in 1966 with Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor as the overwrought couple.

³⁴⁶⁴ The New York Times, 23 May 1965: xi, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa.’

³⁴⁶⁵ The New York Times, 23 May 1965: xi, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa.’

³⁴⁶⁶ The New York Times, 23 May 1965: xi, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa.’

Bloomberg went on, “Little do these self-same authors know of the country’s achievements in the field of racial relations (or in any field); little do they know of what has been done for the non-white in the fields of hospitalization, education, housing and on a hundred and one other fronts, all of which have enabled a race to emerge from the darkness of ignorance and superstition in an astonishingly short time.”³⁴⁶⁷ Bloomberg’s defence of apartheid’s achievements for non-Whites does not bear scrutiny. What was actually done for non-Whites in education was the Bantu Education Act, and what was done for housing were forced removals, the Bantustans, and the denial of any land rights.

Bloomberg told the author in 2014 about Dr. Verwoerd: “Verwoerd was a gentleman, if a person who holds those views can be a gentleman [laughs]. But was a very polite man. I think Verwoerd believed in his theories and the theory of apartheid. He probably was an honest man.” When asked if he thought Verwoerd was racist, Bloomberg replied, “Of course he was a racist, yes.” He then volunteered, “I don’t think he was corrupt. There was never any evidence that he was corrupt. All the subsequent people, particularly John Vorster and one or two of the other people, you know, they had a reputation of being corrupt.”³⁴⁶⁸

In 1969, Bloomberg was elected a Cape Town city councillor, a position he held for twenty years. In 1971 he was elected Deputy Mayor of Cape Town, then was Mayor from 1973 to 1975. At forty-one years and one month, he was the youngest mayor since his father, who was forty-one years and six months when he assumed office in 1945. A newspaper reporter said of Bloomberg, “He looks like a smoother version of Canada’s heart-throb Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau.”³⁴⁶⁹

As mayor, Bloomberg was hailed as “hands-on” and “thoroughly modern.” According to him, his main achievements being the tackling of gangsterism on the Cape Flats, the opening of the Nico Malan theatre to people of all races and his campaign against petty apartheid and to speed up the fire department’s responses.³⁴⁷⁰ Four months into his mayoralty, Bloomberg launched what he described as “a campaign against petty apartheid... practices which did not necessarily create hardship but which were extremely humiliating to people of colour.” This was not an attack on the classic structures of apartheid, rather an attempt to address relatively minor complaints, such as discriminatory signs on lifts, toilets

³⁴⁶⁷ The New York Times, 23 May 1965: xi, ‘David Bloomberg: Yes to South Africa.’

³⁴⁶⁸ David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

³⁴⁶⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 158-161.

³⁴⁷⁰ Bloomberg, 2007; The Cape Argus, 19 June 2011: 18, ‘Links in the mayoral chain.’

and entrances. After investigation of the complaint, Bloomberg would telephone the responsible parties and “invariably obtained their co-operation.” Other cities joined in the campaign, prompting Prime Minister Vorster to warn that the government would intervene if politically expedient actions by councils caused friction or disturbed the peace. In response to Vorster’s warning, he wrote, “My council is not a political body and does not practise a political system and its views with regard to petty apartheid are certainly not politically motivated.”³⁴⁷¹ Later, Bloomberg played golf with Vorster at the invitation of the district commandant of police.³⁴⁷² Bloomberg also claimed that he had tried behind the scenes, though unsuccessfully, to stop the destruction of District Six.³⁴⁷³

While Mayor of Cape Town, Bloomberg also became involved in at least two incidents which the Western press perceived as propaganda for apartheid. In 1974, South Africa’s Foreign Minister, Hilgard Muller, France’s ambassador to South Africa, M. Michel Legendre and Bloomberg discussed the possibility of twinning Cape Town with Nice, known as the capital of the French Riviera, and “how such a twinning could be the basis for a clandestine, second-tier diplomatic relationship in the event of formal ties between the two countries being suspended.”³⁴⁷⁴

Bloomberg liked the idea, even though Nice’s Mayor was the infamous Jacques Medecin,³⁴⁷⁵ a fascist and racist politician, anti-Semite and holocaust denier, and according to

³⁴⁷¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 175-177

³⁴⁷² Bloomberg, 2007: 177.

³⁴⁷³ Bloomberg, 2007. 169-174.

³⁴⁷⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 177.

³⁴⁷⁵ Medecin had admitted publicly to agreeing with 99.9 per cent of the positions held by Jean-Marie Le Pen’s extreme right-wing National Front Party (Bresson (Liberation), 18 November 1998, ‘L’ancien maire de Nice est mort hier en Uruguay’; Riding (The New York Times), 13 June 1990, ‘French artists boycott museum opening’). He had allowed Le Pen to hold a congress of his party in a Nice municipal hall when no-one else would host it (Jewish Telegraphic Agency, 4 April 1990, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice resign to protest ties with Le Pen’; Facaros and Pauls, 2001: 145), and subsequently, in his role of Mayor, received Le Pen and Franz Schonhuber, a former SS officer and head of the West German ultra-nationalistic Republican Party (Riding (The New York Times), 13 June 1990, ‘French artists boycott museum opening’). Three Jewish city councillors resigned in protest against Medecin’s association and cooperation with Le Pen, a man who called the Holocaust fraudulent (Jewish Telegraphic Agency, 4 April 1990, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice resign to protest ties with Le Pen’). Medecin was also a fanatical anti-Semite, often making derogatory remarks about Jews, blaming them for his troubles. “It is the Jews who have created a fuss in a scandalous manner,” he said, declaring that they “are ungrateful people after all you have done for them.” He said he “did not know any Jew who will refuse a gift offered to him, even if he doesn’t like the gift” (Riding (The New York Times), 13 June 1990, ‘French artists boycott museum opening’).

In the early 1980s, Medecin was to gain international notoriety after being accused of corruption by British author Graham Greene in his pamphlet ‘J’Accuse.’ In 1990, exposed as a crook and an embezzler and currently being pursued by the courts and tax authorities for alleged serious financial irregularities, Medecin resigned the mayoralty he had held for 25 years and fled to Argentina and later to Uruguay (Eder (The New York Times), 5 February 1982, ‘On the Riviera. A morality tale by Graham Greene’; Lichfield (The Independent), 20 November 1998, ‘Obituary: Jacques Medecin’; Tempest (Los Angeles Times), 12 November 1990, ‘Mayor of Nice Takes

John Lichfield of The Independent an “indefatigable defender of apartheid.”³⁴⁷⁶ Medecin’s opinions did not seem to bother the Jewish Bloomberg, and he accepted the twinning idea with enthusiasm. He later did say that he had “fundamental political differences” with Medecin, but they did not stop him from becoming a close friend of the fascist and racist Frenchman.³⁴⁷⁷

The twinning arrangement came into effect on July 6, 1974. The move caused controversy not only in France³⁴⁷⁸ but around the world, with political parties, trade unions and civil rights organizations denouncing the link-up as “scandalous.”³⁴⁷⁹ France’s Peace Movement against Racism and anti-Semitism characterised the South African visitors to the ceremony in Nice as a “racist delegation”³⁴⁸⁰ and protestors gathered outside Bloomberg’s hotel characterised him as “this fascist Bloomberg representing his racist government.”³⁴⁸¹

During the ceremony, Medecin told Bloomberg, “We have much to learn from you. There is no segregation in your country corresponding to slavery, but parallel development of two populations. Life in Africa, the South, should be better understood, better explained.” Bloomberg appeared to be “thrilled” with Medecin’s comments³⁴⁸² and spoke about South Africa’s need for friendship and understanding abroad, claiming that his country had become “the prey of vultures who take vicarious delight in the troubles of others.”³⁴⁸³ Bloomberg claimed that after his return from France, Foreign Minister Muller sounded him about a Flight in a Blow to French Politics: Scandal: He’s accused of skimming money, accepting kickbacks when corruption is a hot national topic’; Whitney, (The New York Times), 19 November 1998, ‘Jacques Medecin, 70, Dies; French Mayor.’). Bloomberg was “deeply shocked” when he heard of the accusations against his good friend (Bloomberg, 2007: 183), but he would later find himself in a similar position, also accused of corruption, and like Medecin, he moved from the country of his birth to escape prosecution.

³⁴⁷⁶ Jewish Telegraphic Agency, 4 April 1990, ‘Three Jews on City Council of Nice resign to protest ties with Le Pen’; Lichfield (The Independent), 20 November 1998, ‘Obituary: Jacques Medecin.’

³⁴⁷⁷ Bloomberg, 2007: 179-183.

³⁴⁷⁸ Officially at the time, France had imposed sanctions to South Africa. However, they did not stop France from assisting South Africa with the Koeberg nuclear plant, being involved in a coal-to-petrol project at “Sasol,” importing South African coal and sending “co-operants,” like Pierre-André Albertini, to do their service there. Earlier, in the late 1950s and early to mid-1960s, several South African policemen, members of the security services and military personnel had visited Algeria and France to study the methods of interrogation and torture used by the French there. One of them was General van den Bergh (Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 2, 1998: 16, 195).

³⁴⁷⁹ The Times (London), 8 July 1974: 4, ‘Protest in Nice at twinning with Cape Town.’

³⁴⁸⁰ The Cape Times, 8 July 1974, ‘Bloomberg: SA the prey of vultures.’

³⁴⁸¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 180.

³⁴⁸² Nice-Matin, 2013.

³⁴⁸³ The Cape Times, 8 July 1974: 4, ‘Protest in Nice at twinning with Cape Town.’

foreign diplomatic posting, but he refused because it was conditional upon his becoming a member of the National Party, something he was not prepared to do.³⁴⁸⁴

A few months later, Bloomberg was involved in another controversial incident as Mayor of Cape Town, when he was accused of seeking to promote South Africa's government at a time when a hostile London government was applying severe sanctions against the apartheid regime. When a flotilla of the British Royal Navy sailed into Table Bay on October 16, 1974, he invited the commander, Vice-Admiral Henry Leach, and his senior officers to lunch at City Hall and in an impromptu speech referred to the many links between the city and Britain's fighting ships.³⁴⁸⁵

The British government was not pleased and Foreign Secretary James Callaghan accused Bloomberg of "manipulating the visit" and giving it "a badge of respectability." He said the British government had "nothing in common with the policies of apartheid and racialism, which are repugnant to us," and he ordered that in future all British ships which needed to call at Cape Town should refuse hospitality. The London Times said Bloomberg and the South African government had "turned the operation into a propaganda exercise, saying that the visit is a demonstration of Britain's good will towards the Republic."³⁴⁸⁶

Bloomberg responded that the city council was "not politically structured or motivated" and his invitation "was not a clandestine attempt to influence foreign relations." He described the affair, which received wide international press coverage, as "an absurd incident."³⁴⁸⁷ Bloomberg described his two years as mayor as "a personally exhausting but stimulating experience." Some councillors suggested he stand for a further term, but "I was satisfied that I had done my job and it was time to move on."³⁴⁸⁸

According to Bloomberg, he was not a member and never voted for the National Party, "the party of the oppressor" as he characterised it, because of its pro-Nazi and anti-Jewish proclivities."³⁴⁸⁹ However, his hands-off approach to the party did not seem to affect Bloomberg's lofty public status. According to the ANC, it was because of his relationship with the National Party that he escaped prosecution in the late 1980s.³⁴⁹⁰ At that time, ³⁴⁸⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 184.

³⁴⁸⁵ Bloomberg, 2007: 199.

³⁴⁸⁶ The Times (London), 25 October 1974: 1, 'Callaghan apology in navy visit dispute.'

³⁴⁸⁷ Bloomberg, 2007: 200.

³⁴⁸⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 222-223.

³⁴⁸⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 275.

³⁴⁹⁰ Parliamentary Bulletin, 16 September 1996.

Bloomberg, along with casino magnate Sol Kerzner, was accused of bribery, corruption, fraud and perjury.³⁴⁹¹ The Bantustans were reputed to be places where an easy profit could be guaranteed and many White South African and international business men turned their attention to the Transkei.³⁴⁹²

A September 16, 1996 statement by the Parliamentary caucus of the ANC, by then ruling South Africa after the collapse of apartheid, said, “Sol Kerzner and David Bloomberg were accused of paying R2 million in bribes in December 1986 and January 1987 to the former Transkei premier, George Matanzima, in exchange for a gambling monopoly in Transkei. In 1988, Kerzner and Bloomberg admitted the payment to the Harms Commission on cross-border irregularities but claimed they were subject to undue pressure by Premier Matanzima. In 1990, the Transkei Attorney General began preparations for extradition against Kerzner and Bloomberg and forwarded extradition applications to the National Party government in 1991.”³⁴⁹³

In 1993, the National Party “tried to kill off the case and defended Bloomberg’s involvement” in the casino contracts when the Transkei Government demanded his extradition³⁴⁹⁴ on grounds that there was no case to answer and the case was shelved, despite the insistence of Transkei’s Attorney General that there was a case to answer. The ANC statement accused the National Party of interfering to prevent the two men’s trial by “dragging its heels for ten years.”³⁴⁹⁵

Later in life, Bloomberg took to writing, publishing six books. Two were novels - Simon’s Destiny (2012) and highly acclaimed The Don: Story of an Actor (2014) – preceded by the story of a Holocaust survivor, Won’t Forgive, Can’t Forget (2006), reflections on politics, Meet the People (1975) and The Chain Gang: Mayors Who Served in Cape Town’s City Hall (2011), and his autobiography, My Times (2007). In the mid-1990s Bloomberg moved to England and later to Switzerland, where he currently resides.

³⁴⁹¹ Parliamentary Bulletin, 16 September 1996.

³⁴⁹² Gibbs, 2014: 142.

³⁴⁹³ Parliamentary Bulletin, 16 September 1996.

³⁴⁹⁴ Gibbs, 2014: 142.

³⁴⁹⁵ Parliamentary Bulletin, 16 September 1996.

BLOOMBERG AND TSAFENDAS

Immediately after Tsafendas's trial ended in his indefinite incarceration, David Bloomberg bought a number of blue neck-ties bearing a pattern of small worms which looked like tapeworms and gave them as gifts to all the members of the defence team, including lawyers, psychiatrists, psychologists and investigators, to celebrate their victory. He named them members of the "Tapeworm Club."³⁴⁹⁶ When asked about this during Liza Key's interview for her documentary, Bloomberg appeared extremely uncomfortable and asked her to stop the camera and "wait a moment, let me think about it." He then conceded that it was a "pretty naughty thing to do," and, referring to the film, asked Key, "You are not running this, are you?"³⁴⁹⁷ Bloomberg made no mention of the Tapeworm Club in his memoir.

During the first ten years of Tsafendas's imprisonment, Bloomberg was the only person who visited him, and that was twice. Throughout this period and for another thirteen years Tsafendas was kept in solitary confinement on Death Row in the maximum security section (Section C) of Pretoria Prison. He was placed in a cell close to the execution room where condemned prisoners were hanged, so he could hear their screams and cries. Tsafendas was forbidden to have any contact with his fellow prisoners and was not allowed access to newspapers, magazines or a radio.³⁴⁹⁸ Bloomberg's first visit was in January 1968³⁴⁹⁹ and the second was in 1976.

After visiting Tsafendas in January, 1968, Bloomberg wrote to Brigadier Floris Coetzee, whose position is not specified in the letter, thanking him for arranging the visit. He said in the letter:

"Physically, Tsafendas seems to be very well indeed. He has obviously lost an enormous amount of weight which is satisfactory, as he was previously grossly overweight. He told me that he has been well treated by the prison authorities, and certainly he has a much happier and friendlier disposition than when I last saw him. As to his mental condition, you will of course appreciate that I am really unqualified to express an opinion. However, through Tsafendas and other legal matters, I have picked up a fair amount of lay knowledge ³⁴⁹⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016; Willie Burger in a personal interview, 9 April 2015; David Bloomberg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁴⁹⁷ David Bloomberg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁴⁹⁸ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Beresford (The Guardian), 6 November 1997: 6, 'Inside Story - The madness that destroyed apartheid'; Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁴⁹⁹ David Bloomberg letter to Brigadier Coetzee, 26 January 1968. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

concerning mental conditions. My impression of Tsafendas at the present time is that outwardly he has improved, but that basically he still has the same obvious symptoms which resulted in his being diagnosed as a chronic schizophrenic. My view, for what it is worth, is that he is still mentally disordered in terms of the Mental Disorders Act.”³⁵⁰⁰

Just eleven months after Bloomberg’s visit, Bernard Mitchell, a former prisoner, revealed in the British Sunday newspaper The Observer that Tsafendas was tortured and kept in a cell built especially for him on Death Row.³⁵⁰¹ It seems that Bloomberg did not notice that Tsafendas had been tortured or that he was detained in a special Death Row cell. Indeed, he found him to be “very well indeed.” He did notice that Tsafendas had lost a lot of weight, in reality twenty to twenty-five kilos, during the first fourteen months of his imprisonment.³⁵⁰² This he saw as something positive.

On August 1, 1976, the British Sunday newspaper, The Observer, published a lengthy article by Ian Mather entitled “Horror in black and white.” It consisted predominantly of a first-person account of life in Pretoria Central Prison and other South African penal institutions by Brian Price, a Briton who managed to escape while serving an eleven-year sentence for dealing the drug LSD.³⁵⁰³ The Observer said it published the story only after its editors “closely cross-examined” Price and checked his allegation as far as they were able. They decided to publish because the story was “consistent with reports from other sources.”³⁵⁰⁴ Ian Mather also confirmed to the author that Price’s story was thoroughly checked as much as possible and that the newspaper had no reason to doubt its authenticity.³⁵⁰⁵

In a long and detailed article about violence to prisoners, Price referred briefly to Tsafendas, claiming that “he was treated with gross inhumanity and was a broken man.” He said that the guards urinated in Tsafendas’s food then forced him to eat it and he was routinely beaten and kicked. “For the first five years or so, the warders used to lay into Tsafendas. He was a plaything for sadists.”³⁵⁰⁶

³⁵⁰⁰ David Bloomberg letter to Brigadier Coetzee, 26 January 1968. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

³⁵⁰¹ de St Jorre (The Observer), 1 December 1968: 7, ‘I was glad that cancer got me out of Vorster’s jail’; ³⁵⁰² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁵⁰³ Mather (The Observer), 1 August 1976: 17, ‘Horror in black and white.’

³⁵⁰⁴ The Observer, 11 November 1976, ‘South Africa’s evasions.’

³⁵⁰⁵ Ian Mather in a personal interview, 2 February 2015.

³⁵⁰⁶ Mather (The Observer), 1 August 1976: 17, ‘Horror in black and white.’

This was not the first or the last time that Tsafendas's fellow inmates revealed that he was physically abused and psychologically tortured. As we have seen, Breyten Breytenbach, Bernard Mitchell and Alexander Moumbaris, as well as two unnamed inmates in Sunday Tribune in 1994 spoke about it in the Press.³⁵⁰⁷ Journalist and BOSS informer Gordon Winter, who interviewed Tsafendas in 1976, confirmed later that Tsafendas was tortured.³⁵⁰⁸ Professor Barend van Niekerk had become aware of the ongoing abuse and attempted with the help of Helen Suzman to put an end in it.³⁵⁰⁹ As far back as 1971, a civil servant, A.M. Towert, also informed Suzman about Tsafendas's treatment and the fact that he was kept on the "execution block."³⁵¹⁰

The Observer article came at a sensitive time for apartheid – just six weeks after the Soweto uprising, which began on June 16, 1976, and coinciding with accusations of atrocities, including torture of prisoners, by South African troops in Namibia.³⁵¹¹ According to Bloomberg, Price's story "was syndicated widely and caused quite an international stir."³⁵¹² The South African government swiftly denied that Tsafendas was ill-treated and called the claim "a travesty of the truth." The apartheid government then invited The Observer to name a legal expert of its choice, who would be given "complete freedom to investigate the alleged facts contained in Price's story." The newspaper nominated Louis Blom-Cooper, QC, an acknowledged penal expert, chairman of Britain's Howard League for Penal Reform, member of the Home Secretary's advisory council on the penal system and one of the founders of Amnesty International. The South African government turned him down without explanation and instead sent a list to The Observer naming the lawyers they would accept.³⁵¹³

³⁵⁰⁷ Beresford (The Guardian), 9 June 1989: 12, 'Dr. Verwoerd's insane killer being brutalised on SA Death Row: Cell next to gallows for 71- year old prisoner'; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; de St Jorre (The Observer), 1 December 1968: 7, 'I was glad that cancer got me out of Vorster's jail'; Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015; Thornycroft and Lee (Sunday Tribune), 15 May 1994, 'Amnesty for Tsafendas?'; Dimitris Tsafendas in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁵⁰⁸ Winter, 1981: 476-479.

³⁵⁰⁹ Letter to Helen Suzman from Prof. Barend D. van Niekerk of Wits referring to the "cruellest" treatment being meted out to Dimtri Tsafendas in jail, 9 April 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

³⁵¹⁰ Letter to Helen Suzman from A.M. Towert informing her that Tsafendas is held in the "execution block" at Central Gaol, Pretoria, 16 May 1971. Helen Suzman Papers 1944-2009. Mb2.10.1.5. University of the Witwatersrand.

³⁵¹¹ The Guardian, 30 August 1976, 'Pretoria troops in rape of Namibia'; The Guardian, 31 August 1976: 2, 'International inquiry demanded into Namibia atrocities.'

³⁵¹² Bloomberg, 2007: 122.

³⁵¹³ The Observer, 11 November 1976, 'South Africa's evasions.'

The British newspaper refused and naturally asked, “if the South Africans are so keen to let the world know they have nothing to hide in their country, why do they persistently refuse entry visas to our reporters?”³⁵¹⁴ The editor of The Observer said the government’s handling of the matter “served only to reinforce the impression we have had throughout this affair - that your motive has not been to establish the truth about prison conditions in South Africa at all, but to score publicity points against The Observer.” He added, “We found it difficult at first to believe in all the barbarities described by Mr. Price. South Africa’s subtle evasions since then have now persuaded us that they must have something very serious to hide.”³⁵¹⁵

On September 27, 1976, a South African ex-soldier testified before the UN’s 25-nation Council for Namibia that South African military men gave electric shocks and water torture to Namibian prisoners, causing “screams of pain.” His testimony set off a storm of controversy adding to the regime’s embarrassment following The Observer’s allegations only the previous month.³⁵¹⁶

The day after the soldier’s testimony, September 28, and at the height of the Namibian torture controversy, David Bloomberg visited Tsafendas in prison, something no Western journalist, no other lawyer or The Observer’s nominee managed. This was despite the fact that Bloomberg was no longer Tsafendas’s legal representative and therefore the authorities were not obliged to give him access. On October 2, 1976, Bloomberg released a statement to the media, describing Price’s allegations as a “diatribe” and “without foundation.” Bloomberg said he found Tsafendas to have aged, but he was still “alert, has a sound memory, is personable, reasonably well-informed and not without a sense of humour.” He said that while Tsafendas “remembers having spoken to Price briefly on occasions,” he “firmly denies” that he suffered any ill-treatment. Bloomberg said, “Tsafendas spends his days reading, mainly the Bible, helping with gardening and has added Afrikaans to the many languages he speaks.”³⁵¹⁷

The following is an extract from Bloomberg’s statement:

“I found Tsafendas in apparently good physical condition and seemingly far healthier than he was ten years ago. His major mental aberration, that he has a giant tapeworm, which

³⁵¹⁴ The Observer, 19 December 1976: 8, ‘Pretoria propaganda.’

³⁵¹⁵ The Observer, 11 November 1976, ‘South Africa’s evasions.’

³⁵¹⁶ The Cape Times, 28 September 1976: 6, ‘Ex-SA soldier tells of torture.’

³⁵¹⁷ The Cape Argus, 2 October 1976: 1, ‘Tsafendas- is no broken man-Bloomberg.’

dictates his life, remains dominant in his thought processes. However, apart from this obsession, he is mainly rational and one is able to carry on a reasonably intelligent conversation with him.

I questioned him closely as to whether he had been ill-treated in any way. He had no hesitation in stating that he was completely satisfied with his treatment, cell conditions, exercise facilities and with the food given to him. He told me that he received the same rights and privileges as other maximum security prisoners and was perfectly happy in prison and had no desire to be released ... ”³⁵¹⁸

According to prison records, Bloomberg’s September 28 visit started at 14.15 p.m. and ended at 14.40 p.m., a total of twenty-five minutes, while two officers, a lieutenant and a prison warden, were present throughout the visit.³⁵¹⁹ Bloomberg must have known there was no chance that Tsafendas would admit in front of his guards that he had been tortured. It was also unlikely that he would make any such confession to Bloomberg, who well knew that Tsafendas had been beaten in custody in 1966 and had done nothing about it then.

Bloomberg said prison officials told him they liked and had “affection” for Tsafendas.³⁵²⁰ In this case, surely the guards would not admit that they tortured him. In addition, the fact that Bloomberg spent time talking privately to the guards means that he must have spent at least five minutes with them, leaving a maximum of only twenty minutes for Tsafendas - twenty minutes with a man who was in solitary confinement twenty-three hours per day and had not received a single visitor in eight years.

Furthermore, the similarities in Bloomberg’s description of Tsafendas with the way he described him in 1968 are more than obvious. Bloomberg presents Tsafendas as a satisfied and happy man with no desire to be released. The truth is Tsafendas was allowed only one hour per day outside his cell – presumably enough for Bloomberg to claim that he had access to exercise facilities and gardening. The most extraordinary claims in Bloomberg’s report are that Tsafendas was satisfied with his cell conditions and that he had no desire to be released. The fact that Tsafendas was in a cell in the Death Row and next to the room in which prisoners were hanged is not mentioned.

On March 1996, Tsafendas was asked during a visit to the Sterkfontein Hospital by ³⁵¹⁸ The Cape Argus, 2 October 1976: 1. ‘Tsafendas- is no broken man-Bloomberg.’

³⁵¹⁹ Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123 Vol 2. NASA.

³⁵²⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 102.

former MK fighter and fellow prisoner at Pretoria Maximum Security Prison, Alexander Moumbaris, if he wanted anything. Tsafendas replied, “I want my freedom.”³⁵²¹ At the same visit, Tsafendas told Marie-Jose Moumbaris, Alexander’s wife and also an anti-apartheid activist and former prisoner at the women’s section at Pretoria Central Prison, “I want to see the sea once again before I die.”³⁵²² Tsafendas repeatedly told the priests who visited him that he hoped one day he would be released. He often used the Latin saying, dum spiro spero (“While I breathe, I hope”).³⁵²³

Bloomberg claimed that he had “retained an interest” in Tsafendas’s “mental condition and welfare” ever since he defended him, which was why he visited him on this occasion.³⁵²⁴ However, this hardly squares with the fact that he only spent around twenty minutes with him. Twenty minutes with a man who had no visitors in eight years and was in solitary confinement most of the time. The fact is he visited his erstwhile client only twice in his thirty-three years in custody. Bloomberg claimed he did not visit Tsafendas more often because the apartheid authorities made it “difficult” for him.³⁵²⁵ However, the authorities apparently had no problem about him seeing Tsafendas following The Observer’s allegations, while refusing the newspaper’s nominee and its reporters. Bloomberg no longer had a legal tie to Tsafendas which would have required the government to allow his visit, thus suggesting that the ever-suspicious authorities were confident he would not report anything unfavourable.

It might be purely a coincidence that Bloomberg visited Tsafendas immediately after the ex-soldier’s torture testimony. However, it is a fact that The Observer story about Tsafendas was published on August 1, 1976 and it took Bloomberg almost two months after that to visit Tsafendas and check if the newspaper’s claims were correct.

Questions about Bloomberg’s motives in visiting Tsafendas could also be raised by a letter dated October 7, 1976, which he sent to one of the prison officials who assisted him when he saw Tsafendas. This is what it said:

“Dear ... (the name is censored)

³⁵²¹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

³⁵²² Marie-Jose Moumbaris in a personal interview, 8 March 2010.

³⁵²³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁵²⁴ David Bloomberg in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. The part is available in the rushes.

³⁵²⁵ David Bloomberg in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997. The part is available in the rushes.

I would like to thank you very much indeed for the courtesy extended to me when I visited Tsafendas recently. I thought you might be interested to read the statements which I issued to the press following this visit, and I enclose herewith a copy of same. This has received prominence in the South African press and, hopefully, will be published in England as well.

You might not have seen the article in the Argus, and I am enclosing a copy of that for you.

*Again, my grateful thanks to you for your co-operation and with kind personal regards ...*³⁵²⁶

It is normal that Bloomberg should write and thank the official for his assistance. What is surprising is Bloomberg's keenness to tell him of the statement which he issued denying The Observer's allegations and the fact that it had been reported widely in South Africa and hopefully would be published in England, too. It is clear Bloomberg assumes the official will be happy to hear a rebuttal of claims that were damaging to South Africa and to the official's prison. He goes so far as to enclose copies of his statement to the media and the article published in the Cape Argus newspaper, highlighting what he felt to be the main achievement of his visit. Bloomberg makes no direct reference to Tsafendas himself, ostensibly the reason for his visit.

Shortly after Bloomberg's visit, General van den Bergh sent Gordon Winter, a BOSS agent and journalist of The Citizen, the government's mouthpiece, to write a denial about the Observer story. Winter did this, but a few years later had the decency to admit that this was a propaganda stunt and that Tsafendas was indeed tortured.³⁵²⁷ The Observer characterised the government's handling of the case as "Pretoria propaganda," describing as "extraordinary" the lengths to which it would go "to score a dubious propaganda point."³⁵²⁸ And Bloomberg had once again offered an enormous help to apartheid, most probably not in official co-operation with the government, but as an individual who always knew which way the political winds were blowing. The inescapable question was: If Tsafendas was not tortured ³⁵²⁶ David Bloomberg letter to unnamed prison official, 7 October 1976. Correctional Service. Demitrio Tsafendas, File number: 80/0043, A123, Vol. 1. NASA.

³⁵²⁷ Gordon Winter in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997; Winter, 1981: 476-479.

³⁵²⁸ The Observer, 19 December 1976: 8, 'Pretoria propaganda.'

and the authorities had nothing to hide, why were the Observer's reporters and nominated lawyer not allowed to see him, but David Bloomberg and Gordon Winter were?

In 1997, Bloomberg was asked by filmmaker Liza Key, who was making a documentary about Tsafendas, whether he thought the assassination "changed the course of history in South Africa." Bloomberg replied, "I think that by assassinating Dr. Verwoerd, he certainly changed the course of history of that time. I have no doubt that the eventual outcome would have been the same with the passage of time, that one couldn't suppress the majority of the people of South Africa for all time ... Probably in retrospect, I think Tsafendas may have hurried things a little ..." ³⁵²⁹

However, sixteen years later, Bloomberg offered a different take on Tsafendas's place in South Africa's history. On October 22, 2013, Christian Martins, Eastern Cape MP for the ruling African National Congress, suggested that "homage should be bestowed upon Dimitri Tsafendas, a hero and martyr for the cause of the South African people," and that his grave should be declared a heritage site. ³⁵³⁰ Bloomberg was quick to respond. Two days later, he gave a statement to the Cape Times expressing "astonishment" at such an "outrageous request," since Tsafendas was a schizophrenic without any political motive whatsoever. ³⁵³¹

Bloomberg's letter is full of inaccuracies in an attempt to prove that Tsafendas does not merit such recognition. In challenging Martin's claim that Tsafendas "changed the course of post-war South African history," Bloomberg contradicted his own statement to Liza Key in 1997. Now, he said, "Dr. Verwoerd was succeeded by John Vorster and P.W. Botha, both strict adherents of the apartheid policy, and business continued as usual." ³⁵³² This hasty, latter-day analysis does not bear scrutiny. The fact is that Bloomberg contradicted his own 1997 statement to justify his view that Tsafendas should not be honoured by South Africa

TSAFENDAS MEETS HIS LAWYERS

Late in the morning of September 26, 1966, Tsafendas was seen by his three lawyers: Advocate Wilfrid E. Cooper and Attorney David Bloomberg, with Will Burger as his junior. The first of the defence team to visit Tsafendas was Bloomberg, who, passing through a ³⁵²⁹ David Bloomberg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁵³⁰ The Cape Times, 22 October 2013, 'South Africans must 'honour' Dr. Verwoerd, Tsafendas.'

³⁵³¹ The Cape Times, 24 October 2013: 12.

³⁵³² The Cape Times, 24 October 2013: 12.

“succession of locked and barred doors,” arrived in “a large cell guarded on the outside by an armed policeman.” Tsafendas was “huddled in a corner” with a “dazed expression and seemed uninterested in his visitors.” As we saw earlier in this chapter, Bloomberg quickly noticed that Tsafendas “had some facial injuries, ‘which Major Cerff, the police officer who accompanied Bloomberg to the cell, claimed had “occurred during the struggle to subdue him in Parliament.” Bloomberg doubted this explanation since three weeks had elapsed since the assassination, but he decided “not to reveal” his “misgivings” since “the injuries appear to be superficial.”³⁵³³

Later, Tsafendas was visited by Wilfrid Cooper, who also found Tsafendas as a “bundle in the corner” on a dirty blanket on the floor. When he told Tsafendas that he was appointed to defend him, Tsafendas responded by saying that according to the tenets of his religion, he did not need legal defence. Cooper explained that it was in his best interest to be defended, to which Tsafendas responded: “I don’t know why the good Lord should have chosen such an infirm person like me.” According to Cooper, Tsafendas was aware of the implications of what he had done, but his emotional response was that of someone who “had participated in a dream.” Tsafendas’s description of the cause of Dr. Verwoerd’s death, while very exact in its clinical details, demonstrated what Cooper referred to in the film as “a certain remoteness about him, as if he wasn’t there.”³⁵³⁴

Cooper recalls his first interview and Tsafendas’s response when he told him that he had been appointed by Judge Beyers to act for him. Tsafendas responded immediately with a lie, saying that he did not believe in legal representation as it was against his religious beliefs.³⁵³⁵ In fact, it was not against his religion beliefs to have legal representation and Tsafendas had actually asked to be represented by Advocate George Bizos.³⁵³⁶ In addition, just ten months ago, in November, 1965, Tsafendas had instructed a Cape Town lawyer, Ismail Essop, to represent him in a $100,000 compensation claim from the American government for his “forced deportation” from the United States to Greece in 1947.³⁵³⁷ Tsafendas was given a full hearing.³⁵³⁸ This is an indication of how Tsafendas’s attitude had changed since he was arrested and a pointer to how he would act in the future, lying when he ³⁵³³ Bloomberg, 2007: 74-75.

³⁵³⁴ Cooper, 2016: 101; Wilfrid Cooper in Liza Key’s A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁵³⁵ Cooper, 2016: 101-102.

³⁵³⁶ Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁵³⁷ Demetrios Tsafendakis Affidavit, November 1965. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen, NASA.

³⁵³⁸ Shaw, 2007: 58.

considered it expeditious to both his defence and to the medics who examined him.

When Cooper asked him why he had killed Dr. Verwoerd, rather than answering the question, Tsafendas told a long and irrelevant story about horse-racing. After several attempts to get a coherent answer out of him, Cooper said, "I gave up." Cooper noticed a strong "incongruity" about Tsafendas. "He had the appearance of a hobo, a rough looking individual, yet when he spoke, he described his feelings with a certain measure of delicacy."³⁵³⁹

The same afternoon, the entire defence team, Cooper, Bloomberg and Burger, saw Tsafendas together. According to Bloomberg, Tsafendas "looked tired and somewhat dazed and at first spoke slowly but coherently. He was polite and co-operative, but generally uninterested in the questions that were put to him. Gently, we tried to extract from him a life history, but this proved difficult as his powers of concentration wavered. When he did answer, he would start in the right direction and then go off at a tangent, with a series of non sequiturs, forgetting what the question was." However, "painstakingly," they "were able to learn" Tsafendas's background and of his travels around the world. Bloomberg opined that "he was not unintelligent, for along the way, he had learned to speak several languages and was reasonably well informed."³⁵⁴⁰

According to Bloomberg, "after a while he relaxed more and what became strangely apparent was that he showed no signs of distress or anxiety. The man knew that he was going to be charged with murder but showed an abnormal emotional attitude to his situation and surroundings. At one stage he said, 'I suppose when this whole thing is over, it will be difficult for me to live in Cape Town. Oh, well, I suppose I will have to live elsewhere!' Later he said: 'You know I didn't really like my work in Parliament. I don't think I will apply again for a job there.' Questioned about his health, he revealed that he had been in hospital a number of times, including the St Pancras Hospital in London, a hospital on the Isle of Wight, the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, the Sheep's Head Hospital and the Grafton State Hospital in New York, and the Ochosen Krankenhaus outside Hamburg in Germany. When pressed for the reasons why he had been a patient in these hospitals, he said it was all to do with a tapeworm that made him feel unwell and nervous."³⁵⁴¹

³⁵³⁹ Wilfrid Cooper in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997.

³⁵⁴⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 76.

³⁵⁴¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 76.

It is noteworthy to remember that although during his questioning by the police Tsafendas mentioned all these hospitals, he said nothing about the tapeworm, simply telling them the diagnosis he received at each hospital and downplaying its importance. Tsafendas also told his defence team about his examination by Dr. Kossew when he had applied for a disability grant, who had found him to be schizophrenic. However, he did not mention any of the nine doctors who had examined him over the last three years for his permanent residency permit or for various job applications, all of whom had found him to be perfectly sane and healthy.

According to Bloomberg:

“Tsafendas went on to say that the tapeworm in fact controlled his life and that at one of the hospitals he had received electro-convulsive therapy to rid him of what he variously described as a ‘demon’, a ‘dragon’ and a ‘snake.’ Tsafendas told us that he had consulted many doctors and chemists to obtain medicines to enable him to pass the tapeworm and gave a lurid account of a portion of the worm emerging and snapping off in his hand. He described the tapeworm as being two inches wide with serrated edges and said that he could feel it wriggling around inside. If he passed near food that had good smells the tapeworm became aroused and the only way he could exercise any control over it was to eat and ‘the tapeworm then purred like a cat. He insisted that the tapeworm influenced his behaviour: ‘It has meant a lot to me, sir. It has caused me to see how other people live. If I didn’t have a tapeworm I’d really ... I’d probably only be living for myself, I would not know what the rest of the world was like, what other people thought, their difficulties. I would have taken life, I would have taken life, eh ... I would have only seen things eh ... well I would have taken life for granted, I would have just gone through life enjoying myself, taking life ... eh things easier.’”³⁵⁴²

Bloomberg claimed that when Tsafendas was asked if he remembered what had happened in Parliament on September 6, he related that on that morning he had walked into the city and purchased two long knives at a shop. He had then returned to Parliament, changed into his parliamentary uniform and concealed the knives beneath his jacket. His account of events then became very vague and his mind constantly wandered. While he acknowledged stabbing Dr. Verwoerd, he could provide no precise details of the attack. “I don’t even remember how it happened, in other words how I began stabbing the man. I can only remember when the people grabbed hold of me. If the people had not grabbed hold of me I would probably be ... probably just kept on stabbing him or how shall I say ... even though he were dead I could just keep on stabbing him but... eh ... not that I was... I don't know if you can call that angry."³⁵⁴³

³⁵⁴² Bloomberg, 2007: 76.

According to Bloomberg, the only motivation that emerged was that Tsafendas had feelings of frustration towards life, in particular towards doctors and heads of state. Tsafendas told them that in the United Kingdom he had had a job for a short while in the Houses of Parliament but couldn't get close enough to Harold Macmillan to attack him; and that in the USA he did not like President Harry Truman but couldn't get employment at the White House.³⁵⁴⁴

That Tsafendas was lying to his defence team can easily be deduced by examining the above statement. The South African police received several reports from the British authorities regarding Tsafendas, and a very detailed report regarding his movements in England from the South African embassy in London. In none of them is there any indication that Tsafendas ever worked in the Houses of Parliament, which surely the British authorities would have known about. What's more, the South African embassy's secret telegram of September 9, 1966, states correctly that Tsafendas was not given a permit to work in the UK when he asked for one. In fact, he was refused permission to remain as a student and as a result was in the country illegally.³⁵⁴⁵ Furthermore, a confidential PIDE report regarding Tsafendas dated November 25, 1964 states that while in England, Tsafendas was forced to work "clandestinely, because legally he was not authorized."³⁵⁴⁶ Since he was not authorized to work in Britain, or even be in the country, it is inconceivable that he could have got a job in the Houses of Parliament. Tsafendas never told anyone but Bloomberg that he ever held such job.

In addition, Tsafendas, when he was questioned, did not tell the police he was frustrated in London and wanted to attack the British Prime Minister. What he told several people was that London was his favourite city because there were so many people from various races and there was no racism. He said that he supported the Labour Party and admired Macmillan. He said he would have liked to live in London but he could not because ³⁵⁴³ Bloomberg, 2007: 77.

³⁵⁴⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 77.

³⁵⁴⁵ Secret Telegram from the South African Embassy in London to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³⁵⁴⁶ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

he was not able to get a work permit.³⁵⁴⁷

As for Truman, Tsafendas was indeed anti-American, but not only did he not have a work permit, he did not have permission to reside in the United States and was arrested many times for violating its immigration laws. To even have applied for a job at the White House would have been the height of absurdity. More importantly, according to the several reports from various institutions, including the detailed account from the Grafton State Hospital, Tsafendas lived only in Massachusetts and New York, never in Washington. Finally, Tsafendas did not mention any of this to the police or to the psychiatrists who examined him. However, the likelihood is that none of this was known to the defence at the time, since they did not have access to the documents submitted to the South African police and authorities.

Bloomberg said that while Tsafendas could not give any motive for the assassination, he seemed to believe that society was against him and he saw Dr. Verwoerd as the head of that society. According to Bloomberg's 2007 memoir My Times, the tapeworm was paramount in Tsafendas's thoughts, and while he denied that the tapeworm had ordered him to kill the Prime Minister, its presence induced him to perpetrate the attack. However, ten years earlier, in 1997, Bloomberg gave a different story regarding the tapeworm. He said Tsafendas told him that it was the tapeworm which told him to kill Dr. Verwoerd. "I think the tapeworm determined that the time had arrived that Dr. Verwoerd should be removed and the tapeworm delivered this message to him."³⁵⁴⁸

Bloomberg said the defence team questioned Tsafendas "extensively about whether he had received instructions or advice, locally or from abroad, about the assassination, whether anyone had suggested to him that it would be a good idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd, and whether he had any accomplices. His response was negative on all these counts, and it seemed that his only confidante was the tapeworm. While he never disputed the stabbing, he seemed to fail to appreciate the magnitude of the crime or the consequences of his action."³⁵⁴⁹

Bloomberg quoted Tsafendas as speaking as follows:

"Yes, I see it as very serious ... I see it is very serious, because I doubt very much ...

³⁵⁴⁷ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁵⁴⁸ David Bloomberg in Liza Key's A Question of Madness, 1997. This part is available in the rushes.

³⁵⁴⁹ Bloomberg, 2007: 77.

eh ... I wonder at times if... eh ... people see it as serious as I do. Well, not because it involves me ... I... am practically nothing but ... eh ... from what... eh ... I don't think it takes much thought to see that ... eh ... situation is serious ... me ... the situation is serious where we are getting to a stage in a ... eh ... stage or a period in ... eh ... where it does not concern countries anymore ... it is probably nothing now ... that concerns the whole universe."³⁵⁵⁰

None of the witnesses interviewed by the author who knew Tsafendas recognised the above as the way he spoke. All strongly denied that he could have spoken in such a way without doing it intentionally. Continuing their observation, the defence listened as Tsafendas “described how the tapeworm climbed into his throat and made him feel weak, feeble and distressed, and sometimes took over his being. He seemed to believe in witchcraft and thought that this might have something to do with the tapeworm.” After more than two hours, the defence team left to consider the information they had obtained. “We felt pretty confident that Tsafendas had been truthful with us and had not deliberately attempted to conceal any facts,” Bloomberg wrote later. “The presence of a tapeworm that controlled one’s life was a revelation to us and, from our laymen’s point of view, we considered our client to be seriously mentally disturbed. It was obviously necessary for us to have Tsafendas examined by experienced psychiatrists, to endeavour to make contact with the overseas hospitals where he had been treated and to interview the people he had lived with recently in Cape Town. To accomplish all this and other necessary investigations, and prepare for trial in the space of three weeks was going to be a gigantic task.” Bloomberg and his assistants began contacting hospitals and mental institutions in Europe and the USA whilst also searching for people in Cape Town who knew Tsafendas.³⁵⁵¹

Bloomberg demonstrated how inaccurate his picture of Tsafendas was and how little he knew of him when he told the author: “[Tsafendas] was opposed to apartheid, but he wasn't a political animal at all. I don't think that politics played a great part in his life and in his thinking.”³⁵⁵² However, Bloomberg was unaware that Tsafendas had been arrested four times and imprisoned three times by the Portuguese because of his political activities, that he was banned from entering South Africa and Mozambique for the same reason, that he had been a member of the SACP and the DSE, and that PIDE had opened a file on him as long ago as 1938.

³⁵⁵⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 77.

³⁵⁵¹ Bloomberg, 2007: 78.

³⁵⁵² David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

Going back to the Tsafendas's defence, if the South African authorities wanted a demonstrably fair trial with the world watching, why did it not appoint Advocate George Bizos, the lawyer Tsafendas had specifically requested, and promptly when he asked for him, not twenty days later? Without suggesting that the lawyers appointed by the State were incompetent or puppets of the authorities, the fact is that Tsafendas was not allowed to have his preferred lawyer. Bizos was not asked by the authorities at any time to act for Tsafendas.³⁵⁵³

The other question is why it took twenty days for Tsafendas to get legal representation. If Tsafendas had shown signs of mental disorder while he was in custody, at least during the first two weeks, why did not the police ask a psychiatrist to examine him? If it was such a straightforward case and General van den Bergh believed Tsafendas was insane, as he later claimed, why did he not appoint a psychiatrist to examine him to confirm this?

THE TAPEWORM

The tapeworm, which from now on will be associated constantly with Tsafendas, makes its first appearance when Tsafendas is seen by his lawyers. That was on September 26, twenty days after the assassination, during which time he was in police custody. As we have seen, Tsafendas made no mention of a tapeworm during his questioning by the police, and none of the witnesses interrogated by the police testified that Tsafendas had ever mentioned such a thing. Further, in both of Tsafendas's statements found in the National Archives, he gives clear and logical political reasons for killing Dr. Verwoerd, reasons which were entirely compatible with all the other evidence the South African police collected regarding Tsafendas's political ideologies, namely that he was anti-apartheid, anti-colonialist, considered Verwoerd not to be the real representative of all the South African people and believed that by killing him a change of policy would take place. Tsafendas later repeated this exact statement to three priests who visited him in hospital and in prison, each at different times, Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Rados and Ioannis Tsafataridis.³⁵⁵⁴

³⁵⁵³ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 1 September 2016.

³⁵⁵⁴ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafataridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

In response to his police interrogators, Tsafendas's use of language is precise; he does not hesitate, stumble or repeatedly say "eh?" or "er" and his thought processes appear perfectly lucid. Tsafendas's statements to the police are coherent and quite unlike the halting, confused way in which he speaks to his defence team. Not once does he mention a tapeworm; instead he sets out a cogent set of political beliefs and motivations, and more than that, gives details of how he planned and executed the assassination.

The question then is, why does Tsafendas act so differently with his defence lawyers? The facts: Tsafendas gives the police a clear political motive for his actions and speaks perfectly logically in his statements of both September 11 and September 19, his last statement. On September 11, he said, "I did not think I would get away after murdering the Prime Minister. I did not care what happened to me"³⁵⁵⁵ and on September 19, he said, "I didn't care much and didn't give it a second thought that I would be caught."³⁵⁵⁶ The September 19 statement is of great importance because it carries the specific questions and Tsafendas's exact answers. His answers are lucid, logical and to the point and make no mention of a tapeworm or anything like it. Then, on September 26, exactly a week later, when he sees his lawyers, he has completely changed his tune. Obviously, something happened between the 19th and the 26th which led him to this change.

When Fathers Minas Constandinou and Ioannis Tsafaridis asked Tsafendas how the tapeworm had come up, he gave no specifics. He broke down and weeping said that he "couldn't take the torture anymore." He repeated this phrase and then said that he feared he would experience an "undignified" death, "hanged in his cell" while in custody, and that the police would claim he was insane and had committed suicide. He was led to believe, from what was happening to him through the torture he had sustained while in custody, that this was the arranged outcome. He believed that one day one of the mock hangings would turn out to be a real hanging and that would be the end of him. He realised that nobody would then know that he killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons and that he would simply be categorised as insane without political motive, like David Pratt.³⁵⁵⁷

Tsafendas was deeply emotional on this subject and was embarrassed to tell the ³⁵⁵⁵ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁵⁵⁶ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 19 September 1966. COE, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁵⁵⁷ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 6 April 2015.

priests the details of how he had used the tapeworm to escape death. He clearly considered this to have been an act of cowardice. He said although he had played the fool in the past to escape detention and torture by the Portuguese, this time he was determined not to do so. Although Tsafendas did not say so, the priests gathered, that at one point, the prospect of stopping the torture and escaping “death by suicide,” and spending the remaining years of his life in a hospital as a result of playing the fool, attracted Tsafendas. After all, he had done the same thing before with the Portuguese police. Tsafendas said he knew that he was only going to get out of prison as an insane person, the crucial question being insane dead or insane alive. He chose the latter.³⁵⁵⁸

At some point after September 19, Tsafendas apparently did or said something which convinced the South African police that he was insane, and he was then given a team of defence lawyers. He told the priests that soon after he started playing the fool, the police stopped torturing him and allowed lawyers to see him. Observing that Tsafendas was reluctant to talk about that part of his life and appeared to be ashamed of his charade the priests never asked him about it again.³⁵⁵⁹

The author is not in position to know how the tapeworm first came into the frame. Although we do not know the exact day that Tsafendas changed his tune, nor what exactly he did or said to make the authorities think he was deranged, we can certainly state that it happened sometime between September 20 and 25. Lacking this specific knowledge, we can nevertheless state that up to September 19, Tsafendas talked perfectly logically to the police and that on September 26 when he first saw his defence team he was a completely different person. It seems abundantly clear that at some point after September 19, Tsafendas decided to “play the fool” once again, in other words pretend madness, to stop the torture and avoid being murdered while in custody.

REACTIONS OF PEOPLE WHO KNEW TSAFENDAS TO THE TAPEWORM STORY AND TO THE WAY HE SPOKE TO HIS DEFENCE TEAM

The most important testimony regarding the tapeworm and how Tsafendas spoke came from the approximately two hundred people who were questioned by the police and the ³⁵⁵⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁵⁵⁹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Father Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

Commission. Not one of them said they had heard Tsafendas mention the word tapeworm or talk in the way described by Bloomberg.³⁵⁶⁰ Major Rossouw, who questioned Tsafendas while in custody on at least two occasions and for at least three days, gave testimony to the Commission of Enquiry; he made no mention of Tsafendas speaking in the way claimed. What he said was that he “never got the impression that he (Tsafendas) tried to evade any question, that he answered all the questions spontaneously and that he was “totally prepared to answer everything.”³⁵⁶¹

It is also clear from both of Tsafendas’s statements that he did not speak in the way described by his defence lawyers when he was questioned by the police. In both statements, his speech is clear, as is his logic. More importantly, in the second statement, taken on September 19, which sets out the exact wording of the questions and answers, Tsafendas replies to all the questions perfectly logically. In both statements he gives a lucid and solid account of his movements, his life and his motive in a perfectly normal way.

The author has read everything which Tsafendas, according to David Bloomberg, told his defence team, to forty-four individuals who knew him. Nineteen of them knew Tsafendas very well. They included family members, such as his half-sister, a cousin, his sister-in-law, as well as people who shared accommodation with Tsafendas, who knew him since he was a child, and three priests who were close to him during the last ten years of his life. None of them recognised Tsafendas as talking in the incoherent way he did to his defence team or referring to a tapeworm, while some told me flatly they did not believe Tsafendas ever said these things. The author is not implying that Bloomberg made up these remarks, since Tsafendas came out with similar statements to the psychiatrists who examined him shortly before the trial. However, it is indisputable that no-one, apart from his defence team and the psychiatrists who examined him during this period, ever heard Tsafendas talk in this way.

Apart from Fathers Minas Constandinou, Spiros Randos and Ioannis Tsaftaridis, who were aware of Tsafendas’s play-acting with the tapeworm, none of the other witnesses the author interviewed knew anything about such a ruse. Equally important witnesses were Tsafendas’s family. As we will see in the Summary Trial Chapter, the defence claimed that Tsafendas had the tapeworm since he lived with his family in Lourenço Marques in the mid-³⁵⁶⁰ Patrick O’Ryan will mention it to the Commission but not to the police. The issue is discussed in the summary trial chapter.

³⁵⁶¹ Major Rossouw testimony to the Commission of Enquiry, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

1930s. He lived with them from age six until nineteen and again from age twenty-one to twenty-three and then in South Africa from age forty-five to forty-eight.

Every member of his family flatly denied any knowledge of a tapeworm when they were questioned by Judge van Wyk for the Commission of Enquiry. They included his stepmother, Marika, who, according to his defence psychiatrists and witnesses in the summary trial, was supposedly responsible for the tapeworm. All told the judge that Tsafendas “never mentioned” any tapeworm and that he was “definitely not insane.”³⁵⁶² Charles Nissiotis, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law, told the police, “As far as I could established he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.”³⁵⁶³ Tsafendas’s half-sister Eleni confirmed this years later in 2007, as did his other half-sister Katerina in 2015.³⁵⁶⁴ The issue of the tapeworm and its “existence” will be examined in detail in the following chapter. However, let us examine here what Tsafendas told his defence team and the way he spoke.

An extremely important witness is Fotini Gavasiadis, sister of Nick Vlachopoulos, Tsafendas’s brother-in-law. Tsafendas lived in Fotini’s and her husband’s house for a few weeks, then for the next eight months in an apartment next to hers. Throughout this period in Pretoria in 1963-1964, they were very close; she saw and talked to him every day and they worked together in her brother’s café. The author read to her the transcription of Tsafendas’s halting remarks to his defence team, she laughed and said:

“There is absolutely no way Dimitri would have talked like that. This is a different man speaking. This is not only nonsense, which Dimitri would have never said, but he did not talk in that way. I don’t believe he said these things. It’s true, he ate a lot, but he never attributed [his appetite] to any tapeworm. He just liked food, he was a big man; it was natural to eat more than most people.”³⁵⁶⁵

Gavasiadis never heard Tsafendas mention a tapeworm and she ate with him at least once every day for nine months. She is certain that Tsafendas was pretending to avoid being executed, and said, “He was certainly capable of putting on an act like this. He was very, very clever. But he would never, never talk like this under normal conditions. Never! I cannot ³⁵⁶² COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³⁵⁶³ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁵⁶⁴ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas’s Live and Let Live, 2007.

³⁵⁶⁵ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

picture him talking all this nonsense, no way, unless he did it deliberately. He was talking very nicely; if anyone had heard him talking, you would know these couldn't have been his words." She said, "Dimitri could buy you and sell you³⁵⁶⁶ any time he wanted, and as many times as he wanted to. He was so clever. I was with him almost every day for a year and we practically lived together for a few months. If he was talking like this or if there was something wrong with him, I would have noticed it." Furthermore, according to Gavasiadis, Tsafendas had a very distinctive way of talking and this was not it.³⁵⁶⁷

Another very important witness is Mary Eendracht, born in Egypt in 1923, was a first cousin of Tsafendas. She first knew him in Egypt and they grew up together in Mozambique. As an adult, Eendracht continued her close relationship and Tsafendas often confided to her his thoughts on various matters. He never mentioned a tapeworm or anything else that might suggest he was schizophrenic. She, too, dismissed the notion that Tsafendas ever spoke the way he was presented. She believed he was perfectly sane and made up the tapeworm story so as not to be executed. "I knew him all my life; we grew up together and he confined, I think, everything that had happened in his life. He trusted me. I was with him every day until 1939 when he went to South Africa. He was like a real brother to me. I don't believe for a moment he said these things to these people and he meant them. No way ..."³⁵⁶⁸

Another important witness is Father Nikola Banovic. Father Nikola had Tsafendas living with him for four months in Istanbul in 1961, saw him there almost every day for another two-three months and kept in touch with him with by letter until 1966. He is one of those who became very close to Tsafendas. Like Gavasiadis, Father Nikola laughed when I read Tsafendas's words to him and initially refused to believe it was Tsafendas talking. Tsafendas "was not talking like that and would never have spoken like that; these are the words of a madman, this is not Dimitri." He said that if he had been asked at the time to testify before a court, he would have sworn that Tsafendas was perfectly sane and that the statements attributed to him could not possibly have come out of his mouth. The only reason he might have talked in that way would have been to convince the police he was insane. The priest said Tsafendas never said anything that might suggest he was insane. "I assure you he was not insane. I am positive he made it up in order not to be hanged."³⁵⁶⁹ ³⁵⁶⁶ This is a Greek expression to describe someone who is extremely intelligent and extremely able.

³⁵⁶⁷ Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015.

³⁵⁶⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014.

³⁵⁶⁹ Father Nikola Banovic in a personal interview, 21 August 2014.

Ira Kyriakakis is another very important witness as she grew up with Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques. Throughout her life, she was friendly with him and never heard him say anything about a tapeworm or something that would suggest he was insane. She is certain he did not believe he had one, that he would have told her if he thought he did, and that he simply made it up. She also does not believe Tsafendas could have spoken in the disjointed way described by the defence. “Dimitri was a devil since he was child; he was extremely intelligent and capable. If he wanted something, he would find a way to get it. Nothing and no one could stop him. He was not mad, he was very clever. Dimitri was so clever and able that he could even convince the devil to buy a Bible. You will never meet anyone who knew him well, apart from these psychiatrists and lawyers you told me about, who will tell you he was mad. He was not.”³⁵⁷⁰

Helen Grispos was born in 1930, when Tsafendas was twelve, and lived for nine years in the house next to the Tsafendas family in Lourenço Marques. George Grispos, who became her husband, was three years older than Tsafendas, but they were boyhood best friends. Helen Grispos’s mother was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother, Marika. Neither Helen nor her husband or mother ever heard Tsafendas talk about a tapeworm and Helen does not believe he would have spoken as claimed. When she and her husband read newspaper trial reports about the tapeworm, they had no doubt Tsafendas was making it up. Because a lot of people knew that her husband had grown up with Tsafendas, they often asked about the tapeworm. George invariably replied that Tsafendas never mentioned such a thing. He was certain that if he believed he had a tapeworm, he would have told him about it.³⁵⁷¹

Father Minas Constandinou knew Tsafendas for about thirty-five years. He met him first in 1963 in Lourenço Marques, he visited him in Pretoria Prison in the late 1970s and throughout the 1980s, and he continued seeing him in Pretoria Prison hospital and the Sterkfontein hospital in the 1990s until Tsafendas died. We have just seen what he said about the tapeworm story based on what he was told by Tsafendas. Father Minas was another who laughed when he read Tsafendas’s words to his defence team. He told the author:

“Ha, ha, he told me what he did, but not in such detail. Fascinating! Even, if he had not told me that he had deliberately played the fool, I wouldn’t have believed that these were ³⁵⁷⁰ Ira Kyriakakis in a personal interview, 27 March 2015.

³⁵⁷¹ Helen Grispos in a personal interview, 22 January 2013 his words. Impossible! Even at the beginning, when I asked him why he did it and he pointed with his finger to his stomach, he did not say all these things. He didn't talk like this even then and he never told me anything like this, his speech was perfect. Even when he told me about the tapeworm, I was not sure that he was mad because everything else he was saying and the way he spoke did not suggest that he was mad ... later, when he told me that everything about the tapeworm was a lie, it all made sense."³⁵⁷²

Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis arrived in South Africa in 1993. He had heard a lot about Tsafendas from Rika Nikolatos and Father Minas Constandinou and was eager to meet him. He was very surprised that both considered Tsafendas to be perfectly sane when officially he was insane, even more that Minas considered him to be a hero of the anti-apartheid struggle, although he had killed a man. One day in 1994, Father Minas took Ioannis to the Pretoria Prison hospital and he met Tsafendas for the first time. The two priests visited him together once again a few weeks later, and Ioannis visited Tsafendas a third and last time, accompanied by Father Spiros, in Sterkfontein hospital at Christmas 1998.³⁵⁷³

Tsafendas eventually confided the truth about the tapeworm to Bishop Ioannis, but the priest said that even if he had not done so, he could have easily told that the words read to him by the author could not have naturally been spoken by Tsafendas under normal conditions. Bishop Ioannis told the author: "He never spoke like this. He never said anything like this; not only about the tapeworm, but generally he never said anything that would make me think 'this man is not mentally well.' He talked beautifully. I am certain that he deliberately talked like this to his lawyers and to the doctors."³⁵⁷⁴

Father Michalis Visvinis visited Tsafendas very regularly for five years in prison (1989-1994) and got to know him very well. They spent hours talking. He told the author:

"I felt that he [Tsafendas] needed to speak, so several times I would just let him speak. He enjoyed speaking and he could speak for hours. I also often asked him questions about his life, and his answers were always logical and what one would expect. He never evaded any question and I never had to repeat myself to him for a second time, nor was his answer ever off the subject. He never spoke to me this way [the way he did with the defence]. His speech was always absolutely fine. He always spoke like a normal man. [His speech] was ³⁵⁷² Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

³⁵⁷³ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁵⁷⁴ Bishop Ioannis Tsaftaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

not disjointed or anything else. It was perfectly articulate and logical, always very coherent. He never said anything to suggest he had a mental problem or that he had any difficulty speaking or thinking and expressing himself properly. I really can't imagine him talking like this [the way Tsafendas did with his lawyers and those who examined him]. I find it hard to believe that he spoke like this."³⁵⁷⁵

Katerina Pnema, Tsafendas's younger half-sister, remained forever extremely angry with Tsafendas, believing that he ruined her life. She strongly condemned his murder of Dr. Verwoerd. In 1994, efforts were made under the first democratically elected government in South Africa to grant Tsafendas amnesty. He was aged seventy-six at the time and unable to care for himself. Judge Jody Kollapen, and subsequently governmental officials, asked Tsafendas's family to take him into their home and care for him. They refused and Tsafendas spent the remaining years of his life in Sterkfontein Hospital.³⁵⁷⁶ Despite her anger towards her half-brother, Katerina Pnema considers "it's impossible" for Dimitri to have spoken as his defence team described. "He would never have said anything like this ... what you read to me, it's nonsense; he never spoke like this and I don't believe he ever said those words ... I don't believe he even said it deliberately to play the fool. He was certainly capable of doing it [pretending to be mad], but to say all this nonsense? No, I don't believe it. Dimitri never spoke like this..."³⁵⁷⁷

Alexander Moumbaris met Tsafendas in late 1972 at Pretoria Maximum Security Prison while awaiting trial on political charges. He was found guilty of "conspiring with the ANC to instigate violent revolution in South Africa, aiding terrorists, distributing ANC pamphlets in Durban in 1968, and reconnoitring the Transkei to find places for seaborne landings."³⁵⁷⁸ Moumbaris spoke to Tsafendas for at least one hour every day for about three months. Initially, Tsafendas was cautious and although very talkative, it was obvious to Moumbaris that he did not trust him. However, as time passed, Tsafendas began opening up. One day, Tsafendas told him proudly in Greek about Verwoerd: "I got τον Ντσή τους" ("their tough guy" or "their champion," but in a pejorative sense). Moumbaris told the author that Tsafendas never mentioned a tapeworm to him or said anything to suggest he was insane; all the conversations they had were perfectly normal and he found Tsafendas to be "a very ³⁵⁷⁵ Father Michalis Visvinis in a personal interview, 11 July 2015.

³⁵⁷⁶ Memorandum of Jody Kollapen of Lawyers for Human Rights, 24 November 1994. Tsafendas's file in the Lawyers for Human Rights collection (AL3183). SAHA.

³⁵⁷⁷ Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁵⁷⁸ South African History Online. Alexander Moumbaris, n.d.

intelligent, witty, serious and knowledgeable person.” Tsafendas even asked him to teach him Algebra, but the lesson was short-lived as the warders forbade it. Moumbaris is certain that Tsafendas acted the fool in order to not be hanged. Moumbaris told the author: “I not only regard Dimitri Tsafendas as a sane man but also as the bravest and ill-treated man I have ever met.”³⁵⁷⁹

Andreas Babiolakis lived with Tsafendas for two-three months in 1964 in Beira and had grown up with him in Lourenço Marques. He strongly denies that Tsafendas could have spoken like this or believing to have a tapeworm. He does not recognise the babbling, broken phrases which Tsafendas used to his lawyers and the psychiatrists and is convinced that he made those up, too. Babiolakis heard in Beira in 1964 that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in police custody. When he later asked Tsafendas about it, Tsafendas seemed embarrassed and said that he had a nervous breakdown but was now ok. Babiolakis believed then that Tsafendas had made up the Saint Peter act and later believed the same about the tapeworm.³⁵⁸⁰

Of his language to his defence, Babiolakis told the author:

“I never heard Dimitri talking like this; this is someone else talking. He couldn’t have said these things unless he did it deliberately, which is what I think he did. Dimitri’s speech was very good and clear, whether it was in Greek, in English or in Portuguese. I’ve never heard him talking like this and I can’t believe he ever did. We were flatmates for three-four months; he was not talking like this and I never, ever thought even for a second that there could be something wrong with him. Never and not just me, all of us. I was not surprised when I heard about the tapeworm, because I knew he had lied before when he was arrested by the Portuguese and he told them he was the apostle Peter or the apostle Paul.”³⁵⁸¹

John Michaletos, Tsafendas’s cousin and the son of Artemis, Tsafendas’s aunt who brought him up in Egypt, met Tsafendas in 1951 and got to know him well between 1963 and 1965. During those years, Tsafendas spent a lot of time in John’s house and slept there on several occasions. Michaletos never heard him talking about the tapeworm or anything else that might suggest he was insane. He finds it hard to believe that Tsafendas spoke this way to ³⁵⁷⁹ Alexander Moumbaris in a personal interview, 13 December 2015.

³⁵⁸⁰ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

³⁵⁸¹ Andreas Babiolakis in a personal interview, 19 March 2016.

his lawyers. He is absolutely certain that Tsafendas was perfectly sane. “I have no doubt about it, I never had,” he told the author. Michaletos added to the author:

“Dimitris never spoke like this. This is gibberish, I can’t imagine him talking like this. He always spoke clearly and made sense. We talked many times and for very long. He was an excellent story-teller. He could talk about so many things; he was very knowledgeable. We all enjoyed his company because of the way he talked. You could not have been bored talking to him. Never, not even once, he said anything that did not make sense or there was the slightest suspicion that there was something wrong with him. We all considered him to be very intelligent. When we heard about the tapeworm, we all fell off the clouds [a Greek adage, meaning we were completely taken by surprise], but we did not believe that he really thought he had one; we all knew he had made it up and the fact that he was talking like this to the doctors and lawyers confirmed it; he never spoke like this before.”

Irene Michaletos, John’s wife, knew Tsafendas for more than a year in 1964 and 1965 and he often visited and stayed at her house in Beira. They had several long conversations and she never experienced any problems conversing with him; on the contrary, she found Tsafendas to be an excellent and interesting conversationalist. She told the author:

“It is certainly false that he was unable to follow a conversation or that anyone had any difficulty talking to him. As a matter of fact, it was the exact opposite. I found the conversations with him very easy and interesting, too. He was a great storyteller. I had many long conversations with him. He was from the kind of people who have something to tell you, that you could sit and listen to them for hours. And I did that, I very much enjoyed talking and listening to him. He was not boring, he could talk to you about religion, politics and history, his travels and adventures around the world. But he did not show off when talking; he was a humble man, he never tried to show off, like that he had travelled in so many countries or that he was very knowledgeable. He was very modest and very down to earth, a serious man.”³⁵⁸²

Antony Michaletos, John’s brother and Artemis’s son, was also present when Tsafendas stayed in their house. He always considered him to be a “very clever and very logical person,” and he never doubted his sanity when he read in the newspaper about the tapeworm. He never believed that Tsafendas really thought he had a tapeworm and concluded immediately that his cousin had made it up “to save himself.” Michaletos also told the author about the tapeworm:

³⁵⁸² Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

“What a hell of an invention, isn’t it! How he thought that up I don’t know. It was Antony [his brother] who first told me [that Tsafendas had spoken to his defence team about a tapeworm] and I did not believe him. I thought John was making it up, I knew Dimitris would have never said that. He insisted, but I still did not believe him. I honestly thought he was joking. I only believed it later that day when he showed me the newspapers. I burst into laughs when I read it. I remember me reading aloud from the newspaper what he had allegedly told the doctors and everyone laughing about it [his brother, his sister-in-law and his parents]. My mother got a real kick out of it; she really enjoyed hearing it. In our house, after we read the first day [of court proceedings] we couldn’t wait for the next one to see what else will be said, and again, we will sit around the table all together and I will read out loud. I remember there was also an old woman who lived next door to our house, she lived by herself, and she knew Dimitri since he was a little child. She could not read and she would ask me to read every single thing that the newspaper was writing about Dimitri. She even understood that he was making it up, but found it very amusing to hear all about it. I remember that when I was reading something that sounded very strange to her, especially about the tapeworm, she would ask me ‘Dimitri said that?’ and then she would cross herself in disbelief. He [Tsafendas] made it up to save his skin, no doubt about that. I knew it, I had no doubt about it, I did not even think about it for a second, it was impossible to believe such a thing, impossible.”³⁵⁸³

All the above witnesses are willing to swear under oath in any court that Tsafendas did not talk in the manner attributed to him and that he would never have said any of things attributed to him unless he was pretending to be mad.

Further testimony to Tsafendas’s cleverness came from his half-sister, Eleni Vlachopoulos, who was closer to Tsafendas than any of his siblings. Eleni Vlachopoulos was born in 1936 and thus spent only her first five years in the Tsafendas family situation, but Tsafendas maintained touch with her thereafter through letters and postcards and he spent nine months in 1963-1964 as her neighbour in Pretoria. Vlachopoulos testified to the police in 1966 that Tsafendas never spoke to her or to anyone in the family about a tapeworm. She said exactly the same thing in 2007 in Manolis Dimelas’s documentary about Tsafendas, Live and Let Live, when she also claimed that her half-brother “was not crazy, he was very, very clever; cleverer than any of us and very able. If he wanted to do something, if he had a target, he would always achieve it.”³⁵⁸⁴

³⁵⁸³ Antony Michaletos in a personal interview, 2 May 2016.

Apart from the witnesses mentioned above, the author read out Tsafendas’s reported words to another forty-seven people who had some kind of contact with him, and all declared he could not have spoken as claimed, or if he did, it was to mislead his interrogators. Further, they never heard him mention a tapeworm. Of this total, the author has not listed those who did not know Tsafendas well or who were very young at the time – Tsafendas’s nephews, for instance. The twenty-nine named here all knew Tsafendas for several months at least, while the Eleni seamen knew him for at forty-two days. Some of the crewmen were with Tsafendas for every one of those forty-two days. Brief accounts of the interviews with them follow.

1. Costas Chagios, a Cape Town café owner, got to know Tsafendas on a friendly basis in 1965 when he walked into his restaurant. In the year up to his arrest in 1966, Tsafendas visited the restaurant more than fifty times. Chagios does not believe “even for a moment” that Tsafendas said what is claimed to his defence team. “If he did, he was lying to save himself ... He was very intelligent and this was not the way he talked, he talked very nicely; excellent use of words.”³⁵⁸⁵
2. Irene Michaletos met Tsafendas in 1964 in Beira and associated with him until 1965. She never heard him saying anything about a tapeworm or anything else that might be seen as strange. She does not believe Tsafendas meant what he told his defence team. Tsafendas, she said, was perfectly sane and a “very, very clever man.”³⁵⁸⁶
3. Elias Constantaras met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott’s boarding house and saw him daily until his arrest. He never heard him say anything “ridiculous” such as what he said to his defence team and has no doubt Tsafendas was perfectly sane. “I remember how he talked and I cannot see these words coming from his mouth. He did not talk like that.”³⁵⁸⁷
4. Peter Protoulis was a supplier of foodstuffs to the tanker Eleni. He met Tsafendas on board and in the forty-two days that the vessel was docked in Cape Town, he never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane.³⁵⁸⁸

³⁵⁸⁴ Eleni Vlachopoulos in Manolis Dimelas’s Live and Let Live, 2007. This part is available in the rushes.

³⁵⁸⁵ Costas Hagios in a personal interview, 24 March 2015.

³⁵⁸⁶ Irene Michaletos in a personal interview, 16 April 2016.

³⁵⁸⁷ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³⁵⁸⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

5. Alexandra Vaporidis knew Tsafendas for about six months in Istanbul. She doesn't remember everything they discussed, but she is certain Tsafendas was a "completely normal man ... he never mentioned this tapeworm." Her husband, Father Agathagos Vaporidis, was close to Tsafendas during the six months and Alexandra says he would have told her if he had noticed anything wrong with him.³⁵⁸⁹
6. Nick Papadakis became close to Tsafendas when the latter was in Beira and Gondola. They lived in the same accommodation for two months and worked together for one month at the Hume Pipe Company. He too had heard at the time that Tsafendas had claimed to be Saint Peter while he was in Portuguese custody. He and several other Greeks at the time who had discussed the issue were under the impression that Tsafendas had made it up, as they were with him every single day prior to his arrest and never said anything like this. Papadakis does not recognise Tsafendas's words to his Defence team and to the psychiatrists and he is positive that he was making it up.
7. Panagiotis Peroglou was another who met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept up with him until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything crazy and has no doubt that he was quite sane.³⁵⁹⁰
8. Pamela Abrahams met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965. He made a good impression on her due to his politeness and good manners and she never heard him say anything to indicate he might be insane.³⁵⁹¹
9. Stratis Vamvarapis met Tsafendas in 1965 in Cape Town when they both had their meals at Mary Scott's boarding house. He never heard Tsafendas saying anything like the remarks attributed to him by his lawyers or anything else to suggest he was insane.³⁵⁹²
10. Cleanthes Alachiotis was a member of the crew of the Eleni and one of those who became closest to Tsafendas. Tsafendas told him about "pretending to be mad" in order not to not serve in the Portuguese army and Alachiotis believes that his reported speech in custody was another such act since he considered it "completely impossible" that Tsafendas spoke as claimed. "He was either joking or he had a specific reason to do it. Obviously, it was the second, since he wanted to save his head. If the police had asked me to testify in court, I would have sworn that he was making it up. He was nothing like this, but I am not ³⁵⁸⁹ Alexandra Vaporidis in a personal interview, 23 August 2015.

³⁵⁹⁰ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³⁵⁹¹ Pamela Abrahams in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

³⁵⁹² Stratis Vamvarapis in a personal interview, 31 May 2016.

surprised he did it since he had done it before.”³⁵⁹³

11. Nikolas Billis, Eleni crewman. He was with Tsafendas every day for the 42 days the tanker was in Cape Town. He is not surprised by Tsafendas’s words to his defence as he has no doubt that he made up the tapeworm story so as not to be hanged. Tsafendas had told him how he pretended to be mad to avoid service in the Portuguese Army. “No doubt he did it again. If you met him, you could tell that this man’s brain was a level above the rest. He could easily manipulate you and convince you of anything. I am not at all surprised that he told this to the police. He definitely made it up. He did not talk like this. He talked very well, like a teacher.”³⁵⁹⁴
12. Nikolas Kambouris, Eleni seaman, who was with Tsafendas every day for the 42 days the tanker was in Cape Town and became a very close friend. “I would bet my house that Dimitri did not say these things ... well, if he did, he must have had a reason and he did not really mean them. I am positive about it. These are the words of a madman and Dimitri was an intelligent and cultured man ... he must have been pretending with them as he did with the Portuguese. He was saner than a lot of people I knew ... I don’t believe that he told these people these things. He was a serious man; he was not talking like this. I was with him for forty-two days and he never said anything stupid like these things.” Kambouris states that Tsafendas “did not talk rubbish; he was an idealist; a man with high principles...”³⁵⁹⁵
13. Michalis Vasilakis, Eleni seaman, became friendlier with Tsafendas than any of the crew. This was his reaction when I read to him what Tsafendas told his defence:
“A tapeworm? Did Dimitri say that? Are you sure? He couldn’t have said that. A tapeworm? It’s unbelievable. Dimitri was a very clever man; he was not talking nonsense. He knew as much as all of us knew and he was talking better than a professor. I was the one who first called him ‘Professor.’ I have no doubt that if he really said these things to the police he must have done it to save himself. He couldn’t possibly have believed them and I am telling you he did not believe them. He would have told me if there was such thing. He told me a lot about his life and I can tell you this man was one of the smartest people I have ever met. You could see some rare dignity and pride in him. You could see from the way he was talking about politics and the world how politically passionate he ³⁵⁹³ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

³⁵⁹⁴ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

³⁵⁹⁵ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

was. You don't meet men like that every day. I don't think that anyone who met him would tell you that he was crazy. This is complete nonsense."³⁵⁹⁶

14. Georgios Kantas, Eleni seaman, who spent some time with Tsafendas almost every day during the vessel's stay. Like Billis and Alachiotis, he is not surprised that Tsafendas spoke about a tapeworm, although he never mentioned any such thing to him. However, Tsafendas told him about his act with the Portuguese in order to not serve in the Portuguese army and Kantas firmly believes that this was just another mad act:

"He never spoke in this way and I can't imagine him talking like this, though I believe he did it as he was capable of doing it. You could tell that this man was very able. He did not talk this way. I can't explain it, but I remember that he had a very specific way of talking, using not very common, but absolutely correct words. He was talking like a professor. That is what we used to say and what he called him."³⁵⁹⁷

15. Grigoris Pouftis, Eleni seaman, agrees with his crewmates that Tsafendas was putting on another 'mad' act as he did with the Portuguese:

"He was certainly not crazy. He was a little peculiar because of the way he was talking. I mean he was sometimes over polite and it seemed to me that his personality did not fit with his job. We met hawkers all around the world and none was ever like him ... I would describe him as an aristocratic hawker, if such a thing exists! I couldn't believe that a man with his manners and knowledge could be doing this job. That was the only peculiar thing about him."³⁵⁹⁸

16. Manolis Mastromanolis, the Eleni boatswain who was involved in procuring a firearm for Tsafendas, spent a lot of time with Tsafendas and never heard him speak in the way he did to his defence team. Mastromanolis does not believe that Tsafendas could have said such things. "He did not talk like that; definitely not," he told the author.³⁵⁹⁹

17. Emanuel Tsabouniaris, Eleni seaman who also spent a lot of time with Tsafendas. He considered Tsafendas to be "a gentleman and a very sophisticated man." Like Pouftis, he found it strange that Tsafendas, "such an educated and well-mannered man, could do such job." However, this was the only thing he found strange about him. He believes Tsafendas couldn't possibly talk as he did and mean what he said unless he did it ³⁵⁹⁶ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁵⁹⁷ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

³⁵⁹⁸ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

³⁵⁹⁹ Emanuel Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

- deliberately to get something out of it.³⁶⁰⁰
18. Ioannis Speis, Eleni seaman: Tsafendas never said anything to him that bears the slightest resemblance to what he told his defence.³⁶⁰¹
 19. Vasilios Perselis, Eleni seaman and a very good friend of Tsafendas. He never heard Tsafendas say anything like his statement and has no doubt that he did so to escape hanging. “He spoke very nicely; not nonsense like that. He knew how to speak and everything he said made sense. He was not crazy.”³⁶⁰²
 20. Dionisis Lallis, Eleni seaman. He did not associate with Tsafendas as much as some of the other crew members, but he spoke to him several times and never got the slightest impression of insanity.³⁶⁰³
 21. Panteleimon Aspiotis, Eleni seaman. A good friend of Tsafendas, also never thought that he could be insane and could not imagine him saying the nonsense he told his defence.³⁶⁰⁴
 22. Miltiades Kaldis met Tsafendas in Cape Town in 1965 and kept in touch until his arrest. He never heard Tsafendas say anything close to what he told his defence.³⁶⁰⁵
 23. Antonis Nichas, a supplier to the Eleni, met Tsafendas in 1966. He never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane or anything similar to what he told the police.³⁶⁰⁶
 24. George Ananiades met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and described him to his statement to the police “as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”³⁶⁰⁷ He added in a personal interview with the author that “Tsafendas seemed like a very lucid man. He was definitely not insane.” Upon reading to him the Tsafendas’s comments to his defence team and the psychiatrists, he expressed his complete surprise and cannot believe that Tsafendas might have said such things.³⁶⁰⁸
 25. George Liberopoulos met Tsafendas in Lourenço Marques in 1963 and associated with him for a few weeks. He described him to his statement to the police “as a normal person with a very high-intelligence.”³⁶⁰⁹ He added in a personal interview with the author that it ³⁶⁰⁰ Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

³⁶⁰¹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

³⁶⁰² Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

³⁶⁰³ Dionisis Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

³⁶⁰⁴ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

³⁶⁰⁵ Miltiades Kaldis in a personal interview, 12 March 2016.

³⁶⁰⁶ Antonis Nichas in a personal interview, 31 March 2016.

³⁶⁰⁷ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁶⁰⁸ George Ananiades in a personal interview, 21 June 2016.

³⁶⁰⁹ Col. van Wyk’s report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

“never crossed” his mind that Tsafendas “might be a schizophrenic.”³⁶¹⁰

26. Nick Augustides is the son of the owner of Mike’s Outfitters in Cape Town for whom Tsafendas worked on commission. He knew Tsafendas for three-four months and never heard him say anything to suggest he was insane. He told the author that Tsafendas “definitely did not look or sound insane.”³⁶¹¹

27. Marina Tsihlakis. She met Tsafendas in Beira in 1964. Her father was good friend of Tsafendas. She never heard him speak in the way his defence statement conveyed.³⁶¹²

28. Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis met Tsafendas in Germany at different times in the 1950s and never heard him saying anything that would indicate that he might not be sane. He also visited him in the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital. Although Tsafendas was admitted supposedly because of the tapeworm, he did not tell Father Efthimios anything about it. The priest does not remember what Tsafendas told him was the reason for his hospitalization, but he is certain that he did not mention the tapeworm.³⁶¹³

29. Dimitris Skoularikis met Tsafendas in prison in the early 1990s. He never got the impression that Tsafendas was insane. One day he asked him, “How is the tapeworm Dimitri?” Tsafendas replied, “I don’t have one; they [the prison guards] think I have one.”³⁶¹⁴

The author includes here three witnesses who did not meet Tsafendas personally but were close to people who did. The author considers the statements they were told, though second hand, to be entirely reliable.

1. Advocate George Bizos. His mother-in-law was the best friend of Tsafendas’s step-mother and knew Tsafendas very well from childhood. She told Bizos that he was perfectly sane.³⁶¹⁵
2. Dr. Costas Gazidis’s³⁶¹⁶ first cousin Rika Nikolatos was a social worker and visited Tsafendas in prison and then in Sterkfontein Hospital. In total, she spent some ten years ³⁶¹⁰ George Liberopoulos in a personal interview, 6 July 2015.

³⁶¹¹ Nikos Augustides in a personal interview, 19 February 2016.

³⁶¹² Marina Tsihlakis in a personal interview, 3 April 2015.

³⁶¹³ Father Efthimios Eleftheriadis in a personal interview, 27 January 2011.

³⁶¹⁴ Dimitris Skoularikis in a personal interview, 26 April 2015.

³⁶¹⁵ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016.

³⁶¹⁶ A prominent anti-apartheid activist, member of the Communist Party of South Africa, the Pan Africanist Congress, and of the South African Congress of Democrats (COD). He was arrested in 1964 and spent the next two years in prison. He was released in 1966, only to be banished shortly afterwards for two years (Makgale IOL) 13 November 1999, ‘The white doctor in the PAC.’ Retrieved from <https://www.iol.co.za/news/politics/the-white-doctor-in-the-pac-19558>). ??? move up meeting Tsafendas and they were extremely close. She told Dr. Gazidis, “He is completely sane, there is nothing wrong with him.” Tsafendas never said anything to her to suggest he might be insane and she always maintained that he was “completely sane.” Dr. Gazidis is willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what he was told by Nikolatos.³⁶¹⁷ Nikolatos’s statement is also confirmed by Father Minas Constandinou and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis. She had discussed his case extensively with them both and she and Father Minas had often visited Tsafendas together.³⁶¹⁸

3. Janet Gazidis, Costas’ wife is also willing to sign an affidavit and swear under oath that this is exactly what Nikolatos, too, was told.³⁶¹⁹

Finally, valuable testimony comes in the form of Tsafendas’s medical report from Grafton State Hospital, which states that while in the United States in 1943 “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships.”³⁶²⁰

How convincing was Tsafendas’s play-acting and was he capable of putting on an authentic display of insanity? All evidence says he was, including Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk of the Commission of Enquiry. In his final report, the judge said that Tsafendas is “quite knowledgeable about mental disorders—he also admitted to the Commission that he had read fairly extensively on the subject in order to determine what was wrong with him... and therefore adopted a somewhat sceptical attitude towards him. It is clear that his word cannot be relied upon, and that he is sufficiently intelligent to put on a fairly good act...”³⁶²¹

Finally, Tsafendas’s file at the Prison Service, File: A5078, described him as, “A person of Colour, an extremely resourceful and cunning individual who is physically and mentally able to plan and execute escape.”³⁶²²

³⁶¹⁷ Dr. Costa Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

³⁶¹⁸ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

³⁶¹⁹ Janet Gazidis in a personal interview, 10 April 2015.

³⁶²⁰ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³⁶²¹ Report of the COE, Chapter II D, Paragraph 18. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁶²² Marais, 1992: 208.

STATEMENTS

ALFRED EDWARD GRAY³⁶²³

K/S/Sergeant in the S.A. Police stationed at Epping and serve under the command of the District Investigation Officer, Athlone.

During November 1965 to March 1966 I often went to friends of mine in Roy Road, Lansdowne. I then also always went to a Muslim store in Delhi Road, Lansdowne. I kept the owner, Parker, company. During these times I found a male with a Jewish appearance in the store about three or four times. The man always bought foodstuffs. I have never seen the man previously. Parker did not tell me that he knew him. On one of those occasions, I stood outside the store when the man came to me. He was alone. He asked me what he should do to procure a Coloured person identity card because he had a white person identity card. I referred him to the Department of Coloured Affairs. He was pleased and walked off.

About 3 to 4 weeks after that I encountered the man in Yorke Road, Lansdowne. He was alone and so was I. He told me that he was unhappy because he was unsuccessful at the Department of Coloured Affairs. He continued and also said that he does not like the police, but that I will be shocked when I saw what he was going to do to one of our big chiefs. I said nothing back to him. I did not take him seriously as many Coloureds had such an attitude. He then walked off. I was aware that he was boarding at a Coloured teacher, O’Ryan, in Westminster Street, Lansdowne. I’ve seen the man go in to the mentioned address.

The man always spoke to me in English. On Thursday, 15/09/1966, I saw the picture of Tsafendas in the Herald as well as the house where he lived. I immediately recognised the man as the man I met in Lansdowne. I am not mistaken about identifying him. On 24/09/1966 I reported the matter to Captain van Niekerk, Athlone.

(SGD) G.A.G van Zyl. NR. 34069 S/A/O.

³⁶²³ Alfred Edward Gray statement to the police, 26 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

SAREL JOHANNES VENTER³⁶²⁴

A major in the South African Police Force attached to the staff of the Divisional Commissioner, SA Police in Cape Town.

Major Venter was the officer in charge of police services at the Parliament Building. He described in his statement the disposition of officers and the extent of their authority. He said the police were not informed of new staff appointments, had no control over messengers and that he did not know of the employment of Tsafendas. Had he done so, he would have had him investigated because of his name and the fact that he was a stranger. Nothing else about Tsafendas or the assassination is mentioned in his statement.

³⁶²⁴ Sarel Johannes Venter statement to the police, 26 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: verklaring deur Majoor S.J. Venter, NASA.

TUESDAY, 27 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

ELIZABETH MAGDALENA GROVES³⁶²⁵

Owner of a boarding house for elderly people in Observatory, Cape Town.

Demitrio Tsafendas stayed at my lodgings for about 6-7 weeks from about April to May 1966. He had two roommates, one a Mr. Fisher who disappeared, and the other a young traffic cop, Jacobus Bornman from the Cape Traffic Department. D. Tsafendas was a very good eater. He mastered many languages and behaved properly. Besides his rough table manners, I have nothing against him. He was completely normal. I was a nurse and worked in lunatic institutions. He was a normal person to the best of my knowledge. I received complaints that he was argumentative and towards me he said that we Afrikaners are a backward nation. It was clear that he had nothing good towards Afrikaners. For the sake of my other tenants, I asked him to leave my place. He was referred to me by Mrs. Beeslaar, a social worker from Grootte Schuur Hospital. When he left me, I knew he went to another part of Observatory and later at Woodstock, but I never got his address.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

REGINALD ROBERT MAILE³⁶²⁶

Shipguard for Larpente Agency, Cape Town.

On 24th July 1966 the Greek ship ELENI docked at the mole in Cape Town Docks. I was informed that the ship was in for repairs due to having lost its rudder. I did the day-shift guard duty to this ship (7 a.m. to 7 p.m.) for the period it remained in harbour, i.e. for 42 days.

³⁶²⁵ Elizabeth Magdalena Groves statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶²⁶ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

When I saw the photographs of Dr. Verwoerd's assassinator in the local papers, I realised that I knew the man. He was a regular visitor to the ship, and I knew his face quite well, and have also spoken to his, though I have not been introduced to him. During the ships stay the accused came on board approximately every day. He had the captain's permission to come aboard. This ship was not under police protection as it was not discharging or tokening on cargo. I had my meals on the boat in the general crew messroom. I had my own table. The accused also had his meals on this ship. He was easting with the crew, at their table.

The crew of the Eleni were approximately 100% Greek, The accused could speak their language very fluently. I of course could not follow their conversations. On one occasion the accused requested me to call on him if I wanted to tell the crew anything - as they could not understand English and he could then interpret. On the first occasion I asked him to tell the crew that there was a circus in Town, which would be worthwhile to see. On another occasion he asked me if there was a telephone on board. On one occasion he wanted to know if the second engineer was on board - he said this man owed him some money. This happened about 5 days before the ship left. The ship left on Saturday night the 3rd of September 1966.

The accused was on very friendly relations with the crew. It struck me though as very peculiar that on the day when he called for the second engineer, the bosun told me that the accused was mad, I should not let him onto the ship. I got the definite impression that there was some ill feeling from the bosun towards the accused. The bosun was usually eating at my table (also the ships carpenter). I cannot remember that the bosun had contact with the accused in my presence. Apart from my meals, I kept to my office which was on the ship at the telephone. The time when the accused used the phone, I went outside. I never listen to other people's phone conversations. The accused never had personal discussions with me. The times I saw him with the crew, and also when he spoke to me, I never got the impression that he could be mentally defective. He was sober, polite and perfectly normal.

On 3rd of September, 1966, when the ship left, I was on duty. It was about 5 p.m. – 5.30 p.m. The accused came to see the ship off. He joined two Greek women and a gentleman who were also waiting for the ship to depart. These people were also frequent visitors to the ship. I got the impression that they were husband, wife and daughter. I have an idea that one of the crew members was their nephew. They have also visited the captain's office, but mostly spent their time with the crew - also had meals with the crew.

When the gangway was already up I recollected that they were also at the ship in the morning when I arrived. At that time in the morning, the ship was shifted from the top of Jackson Wall to the bottom. The gangway was lifted before my arrival. The three Greeks were waiting, and we all moved down slowly with the ship. I had a Cape Times under my arm. The older woman asked me if "DR. VERWOERD WAS DEAD." I opened the Times quite surprised, and said there was nothing like that in the paper.

Witness: (1) J. Oliver. D/H/CONST. (Railways).

(2) D.J.V. Troost. 23505 D/Sergt.

MARIA KOKKINIDOU³⁶²⁷

Visitor of the Eleni. Sea Point. 12. p.m.

I know the captain of the Greek ship Eleni. He is Michaelos Fondudos,³⁶²⁸ who is from Kilimnos, Greece, my place of birth. When I arrived in Cape Town (from Pretoria³⁶²⁹) on about the 26th of July, 1966, I heard that the Eleni had been docked about 3 days earlier. I went to the boat with a lady Mrs. Vyanos, and upon arrival at the ship, was introduced to the captain. I however recognized him as an old acquaintance - though he did not recognize me. I brought my son and daughter with me to Cape Town. My son was out of work trying to find a job in Cape Town. He also visited the ship where he met a young friend (old school mate) of his from Greece. This friend asked him why he did not join the merchant navy. As result I had a chat with the captain and my son was signed on as a crew member on 1st August, 1966.

During the delay of the ship in Table Bay, I went to the ship every day. I had my meals with the crew upon their invitation - this being a friendly Greek Custom. I went there with my daughter, and a male friend Mr. Nicolaou Christodoulos³⁶³⁰. During my visits to the boat, I got to know that two persons who were not members of the crew, were also having meals there. One was a watchman who had his meals at regular mealtimes, twice daily, ³⁶²⁷ Maria Kokkinidou statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁶²⁸ The correct spelling is Michalis Fountotos.

³⁶²⁹ Note of the author

³⁶³⁰ Christodoulos is the first name, Nicolaou is the surname.

lunchtime and suppertime. The other man came at odd times. He was a tall man with a beard. He looked a real tough customer and had fair hair. I got to understand that he was from another ship docked nearby. I have seen photo's in the local newspapers allegedly of the man Tsafendas. I do not recognize having seen him on the ship.

On the 3rd of September 1966 when the ship was due to leave, I went to the ship again in the morning about 8.30 a.m. That time the ship was to be moved from its moorings to another anchor place. I was on the ship with Mr. Christodoulos, before it was moved. We did not know that the ship was going to be moved. We left about 10 a.m. to fetch my daughter. The ship was still not moved. The three of us went onto the boat upon our return. After lunch it was cold and Mr. Christodoulos left to fetch coats for myself and my daughter. Whilst he was gone, the boat moved with me and the daughter on board. Mr. Christodoulos walked along till the ship docked again. He came aboard and all three of us remained on board till 4.30 p.m. before the ship finally moved off. Then we waved goodbye to my son. That time we were joined by a Mr. Nichas (i.e. the man from Vacuum Dry Cleaners, Sea Point). A lot of other people were around but only the four of us were together.

In the morning when I arrived at the boat, the drawbridge was pulled up. I stood with Mr. Christodoulos on the ground. There were a lot of people waiting for the bridge to come down. The same time the ship's crane was defective and people were trying to repair it, and there were more than one person in uniform. There was one man near us with a newspaper. My son Costa and another man wearing a blue uniform were on the ship. My son called down to me "Did you hear the news - Dr. Verwoerd is dead." I asked who said so? He pointed to the man next to him, saying that this man said that the man with the newspaper had told him so - pointing down to the man next to us. I asked this man for the newspaper. He said there was nothing. (I have asked him if Dr. Verwoerd was dead). He laughed and said the man upstairs had understood him wrong. I recognized the man who was the watchman on the ship, as one man eating upstairs, but I cannot say he was the same man as the person with the newspaper. He might have been the same person, but I am not sure.

I am also not sure who had started the rumour about Dr. Verwoerd being dead. The man standing with my son upstairs, was not a Greek. He was in a blue uniform. Apart from them, there were about 5 other workmen in overalls. These were joined and mingling with other people filling the boat with fuel. In general, there were quite a few people walked about upstairs. I deny that I have on my own account said anything about Dr. Verwoerd being dead. I spoke Greek to my son. I asked for the newspaper trying to speak English. I can understand English, but have difficulty to speak it. Three days after this Dr. Verwoerd was in fact murdered. I got to know this through newspapers. I did not even refer to the incident at the boat, as I have completely brushed this aside as nonsense. I never gave the incident a second thought.

Above statement taken by me. Translated from Greek to English by Mr. Elias Constantoras³⁶³¹ of Louis fruiterers, Sea Point.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

JAMES SUMMERS³⁶³²

Owner of the "Barlings Tea Lounge." Woodstock. 6.55 p.m.

About the beginning of July, 1966, I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. He came into the Tea Lounge and had tea and smoked snoek. After that he came in more regularly - practically every day. He started telling me about his travels, mentioning that he had been to 57 different countries and could speak 7 or 8 languages. He never had personal or political conversations. Ha once showed me two passports - one Portuguese and one Turkish. On the latter passport he had s beard.

He frequented the place for about 6 weeks. On the last regular occasion he came in about 6 p.m. He ordered tea and cake which I served. I told him I was closing and had to leave in half hr's time, as I was going out. Ha said it was all right, but was reluctant to leave. He was doing his latter writing at the table. I had to push him out eventually. It was his habit to do his correspondence at the table in my tea lounge. I did not really mind. He was no nuisance and appeared to be a quite normal innocent type.

Whilst I know him, I never had reason to even suspect that he could be mentally ³⁶³¹ The correct spelling is Constantaras.

³⁶³² Herbert James Summers statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

unbalanced. He acted quite normal. After the night I had to ask him to leave, he stayed away for two weeks. The Sunday morning before the assassination, at about 10.30 a.m. he walked into my Tea Lounge. He then asked as if I was cross with him and if he could have a cup of tea and cake. Next I heard of him was through the reports in the newspapers. When he visited me, he always had his Bible with him. I took him for a religious parson and never queried him about the bible.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

COMMENTS ON SUMMERS'S STATEMENT

Summers was interviewed on September 7 by the Cape Argus, when he claimed that he had ordered Tsafendas out of his shop because he called South Africa a "bastard country."³⁶³³ However, as we see here, he did not mention any such incident to the police.

ALICE MARY THEYSER³⁶³⁴

Housewife and shop-assistant at the O.K. Bazaars, Woodstock. 7.35 p.m.

On the first of July, 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas came to my house. He said that Mrs. De Vos had told him that I had a room to let. I have previously advertised the room, I knew Mrs de Vos as a member of our Trade Union. I let the room to Tsafendas, not supplying him any meals. After a very short period I found him to be an untidy character. I decided that I would not keep him so at the end of July I told him that I was not satisfied with him as a lodger, and gave him notice in writing. He chucked the notice on the floor. He left on the 30th of August 1966. During his stay with us he was very quiet, and being a lodge only, we did not have much conversations. He kept to his room most of the time. I knew that he went to some church on Sundays - he mentioned Pinelands. He said his faith did not have any church or temple, but that they attend house gatherings. I did not question him on his faith, though.

³⁶³³ The Cape Argus, 7 September 1966, 'Tsafendas seen as a bitter, withdrawn man.'

³⁶³⁴ Alice Mary Theyser statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I never got the impression in any way that he might be mentally unbalanced. To me he appeared a quite normal person. He did not greet for the last two weeks that he lived here, but I took it to be, that he was annoyed because I had given him notice. He never received visitors. When he came to me he was not working. He went out every day and mentioned not having been able to find work. He did mention later that he thought he would get fixed up with a job at Parliament House, where he had been supplied with some form to fill in for a messenger's Job. He later confided that he got the job. After he left ay place, I first saw the reports about him in the papers.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

WEDNESDAY, 28 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

REGINALD ROBERT MAILE³⁶³⁵

Shipguard for Larpen Agency, Cape Town.

Reginald Robert Maile further states:

I have now been shown a statement of one Maria Kokkinidou. It is obvious that she is the person to whom I have referred in my original statement.³⁶³⁶ I want to stress the following:

- (a) She was already at the Eleni on the quay-side upon my arrival at 7 a.m.
- (b) The person referred by her as standing on the boat with her son, must have been the night watchman, because the drawbridge was drawn up - he could not get off the boat, same as I could not get up to take over from him.
- (c) She must have known Tsafendas, as she had frequent meals with him at the same table.
- (d) She originated the approach to me with the words "Is Dr. Verwoerd dead." Nobody had mentioned Dr. Verwoerd before that. I shouted up to the nightwatch asking if Dr. Verwoerd was dead. She spoke English to me and I am sure I did not misunderstand her.
- (e) I am also sure that when the boat was due to leave, Tsafendas was one of the people to see it off.
- (f) I know the following people who came off approximately the last, i.e. Old Mr. Faros, Captain Lamb who had to go to England by plane, the agent for supplies, a young man of whom I do not know the name, and also the agent for the ship working for J.T. Rennie. The latter is an elderly man who brought the wages for the crew and officers. I now emphatically remember that the nightwatch could not get off the ship for 2 hours - this time he wanted to claim later on as overtime from our office.

³⁶³⁵ Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁶³⁶ This was the second statement by Maile, who had given a statement the day before, September 27.

(SGD.) R.R. MAILE.

Statement taken by me. (SGD.) D.J.V. TROOST. 23505 D/Sergt.

HULSE³⁶³⁷

Student at UCT – SRC member. Rondebosch.

Mr. Hulse knew Tsafendas met him while he was working Marine Diamond Corp during holiday December 1965-12th March ...³⁶³⁸ Tsafendas was a machine operator. As far as he can remember, Tsafendas was still working there when he left. Tsafendas was very talkative and always expressed his ... (indecipherable word). Mr Hulse can't remember him (?) keen on the Bible. After Tsafendas started work at Parliament, Mr Hulse met him there when visiting a MP. It was approximately two weeks before 6.9.66. He chatted with him on that occasion. He again saw him at the Houses of Parliament on Friday 2.9.66

Tsafendas informed him that he left MD as the work was too hard for an old man like him although the pay was "a ..." He did not appear to be ... disturbed at any stage. Mr Hulse got the impression that Tsafendas was a wanderer. He always ... about everything. He was surprised to see him working in Parliament. When he heard the news 6.9.66, Mr Hulse immediately ... about Tsafendas and asked the police whether the messenger concerned was a man with silver capped teeth. He made a statement to the police.

PETER PROTOULIS³⁶³⁹

E/M/A, manager of Hermes Ship Chandlers, Cape Town.

I know the Greek ship the Eleni since its breakdown and call at Cape Town harbour. A few days prior to the ship's arrival, as result of a message at my office, I went to the Grand ³⁶³⁷ Hulse statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Hulse's first name is not given in this statement, but in Henk van Woerden's A Mouthful of Glass the name is given as John.

³⁶³⁸ These queries are missing because the edge of the document was not copied, so words are missing.

³⁶³⁹ Peter Protoulis statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

Hotel where I met Captain Lamb from Brays Shipping Co., London. He requested me to attend to the ship upon arrival for attending to their supplies. The ship arrived on Sunday, July 24, 1966. I went down with Mr. Nichas (a friend) and we met the Captain of the ship — Michaelos Fountotos (pronounced phonetic Fondontos). Since that day I have been in regular contact with the ship and often visited it - every day.

I got to be very well acquainted with the Captain and his wife as also the Chief Officer John N. Toutountsolou and his wife. They often went out with me and Nichas and we took them on picnics, to bioscope and on drives, suppers and dancing. We also dined on the ship and in fact had a few parties with them. I saw who is now known as Dr. Verwoerd's assassinator (Tsafendas) on the boat. The first time I saw him, was on the first Monday after the boat's arrival - i.e. the 25th July, 1966. I went down with my driver to the ship. I looked for the chief steward in process. I went into the ship's kitchen where I saw Tsafendas in conversation with the kitchen staff. They were all attentively listening to him. They were speaking Greek. When I entered he accosted me, asking who I am, also asking if I was from Faros (another ship chandler agency). I did not confirm but said "No I am the other fellow." He said "anyway it makes no difference to me, I am not prejudiced." By that time he spoke English to me. I left him in the kitchen, ignoring him.

Upon my subsequent visits I had no dealings with the crew and do not recollect seeing him until the day the ship sailed. Then I was there with my girl-friend, Nichas and his wife and children. Mrs, Nichas asked the Chief Officer's wife who that man was, indicating Tsafendas. The latter replied that he was a merchant of clothing of sorts. Later I was standing in the Captain's corridor where the latter was busy with the Port and Immigration officials, Tsafendas came to the small inter-leading passage to the Captain's office. He stood diagonally across from me impatient, as someone in a hurry to see the Captain. The Captain's door was open and he later shouted to the Captain - "I want to see you." I thought this very rude, but did not comment. I do not know what happened to him as the Captain later came over to talk to me.

Sometime later I saw Tsafendas talking to a man who I think was the ship's bosun. This man was tall, dark-haired and dark complexioned. I have previously seen him in the Chief Officer's quarters. I did not see him leave the ship. I left the ship at about something past three p.m. for the last time. All of my company left together though Mr. Niohas said that he would return to say good-bye. The next I saw Tsafendas's photos in the local newspapers.

I know the shipguard, an elderly short man, by sight. I have often spoken to him, but do not know his name.

I know that a Greek woman who had a son joining the ship, was also a visitor. I was present on the occasion when she first boarded the ship. She told the Captain in my presence that she was from his native origin: - mentioned the island Kalimnos. He stated that he couldn't recollect her, but she started mentioning names of his relatives which probably convinced him. On the day of the ship's departure she came to thank the Captain for certain courtesies he had done for her. There was also another young man on the ship whom this woman knew. I remember that she kissed him twice when greeting him. I saw her taking pictures of a baby from her bag, which she showed to us, and also to this young man. She was Mrs. Kokkinidou.

(SGD.) D.J.V. TROOST. 23505 D/Sergt

COMMENT OF PROTOULIS TO THE AUTHOR REGARDING HIS STATEMENT

Peter Protoulis remembers being questioned at his place of business by two or three policemen.³⁶⁴⁰

³⁶⁴⁰ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

FRIDAY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1966

STATEMENTS

DR. C. BEEN³⁶⁴¹

Pretoria.

This is to certify that Mr D. Tsafendas consulted me during 1963 or 1964 for burns on his body whilst employed at Poole's. I also examined him for permanent residence and a certificate was issued.

J. BOISKIM³⁶⁴²

Representative of a Tobacco Company. Cape Town.

Took cigarettes to ... (Indecipherable word) Building. Few days before the opening of Parliament. Nobody questioned me. Wrote down room numbers. Thought "this is funny." Started off with Prime Minister. Had no idea was so easy to get to Private Secretary. Surprised to note that there was no security measures.

JACOBUS JOHANNES DE KOKER³⁶⁴³

Assistant Master of the High Court in Pretoria.

De Koker's declaration talks about the estate and distribution of the personal effects of the deceased Michalis Tsafandakis who died on 14 February 1962. The only mention of Dimitri Tsafendas is on paragraph 10: "according to my records, neither Tsafendas nor ³⁶⁴¹ Dr. C. Been note to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁴² J. Borskim statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 6, File: 4. NASA.

³⁶⁴³ Jacobus Johannes De Koker statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

anyone else, except Marika Tsafandakis, received any amount or benefit from the above-mentioned estate.”

IAN JAMES MURDOCK BOSWELL³⁶⁴⁴

Administrative assistant at the Department of Labour, Cape Town.

I came to know Demetrio Tsafendas in my official capacity as employment officer for the unskilled European Male section of the above department. The abovenamed was originally registered with the skilled section of the department but as he could not produce a certificate of fitness or any documents or testimonials that could prove his claims of being a tradesman, he was transferred to the unskilled section and classified in the category for caretakers or supervisors.

Mr. Tsafendas shortly after produced a certificate to the effect that he had been treated for a nasal complaint at Groote Schuur Hospital. This was accepted as a certificate of fitness and an application for Unemployment Benefits taken by myself. As the applicant had already exhausted all his benefits in a previous claim, the above mentioned application was refused by the claims officer in terms of the relevant section of the Unemployment Act. On informing me that he was fit and willing to commence work as an operator-welder (unqualified welder), I contacted the Chrysler Motor Co., at Elsie's River and was told that they required such a person. I gave the applicant a card (Lab. 141) of introduction to the Chrysler Motor co.

Some days later Mr. Tsafendas returned to the office and informed as that he had not been accepted by the above- mentioned company. This was the last time I interviewed him as a Lab. 23 card issued to him was returned to the employment section by post, informing the office that he had obtain employment in the capacity of messenger in the House of Assembly. (Lab. 23 cards are issued to all persons registering for employment. They are requested to return these cards when obtained employment in order to record the number of unemployed persons obtained employment.)

³⁶⁴⁴ Ian James Murdock Boswell statement to the police, 30 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64. NASA.

I did not and would not have sent him to the houses of Parliament, as the vacancies for messengers were always given to the better class of active pensioners. I can only remember this person through originally having difficulty both in spelling and pronouncing his surname. He was at all times neatly dressed and never gave the impression of being destitute. Aside from being over talkative he showed no symptoms of abnormality, during his interviews with me.

MONDAY, 3 OCTOBER 1966³⁶⁴⁵

COLONEL E.G. MCINTYRE'S REPORT ON TSAFENDAS³⁶⁴⁶

THE HISTORY OF THE PERSON HAD INFLICTED THE FATAL WOUNDS TO THE LATE

DR. VERWOERD

DRAFTED BY COLONEL E.G. MCINTYRE:

1. The following details of the person, Demetrio Tsafendas, was compiled after examining the following documents: -
 - a) A voluntary statement he made to major D.J. Rossouw of the Security Police, Cape Town, on 11 and 12 September 1966.
 - b) An examination of the same person by major Rossouw on 09/19/1966.
 - c) Statements of persons who came into contact with him.
 - d) Secret documents from reliable contacts in other countries.
2. Where the subject was vague or uncertain about certain dates, names and places, the dates, names and places were determined from documents in 1(c) and (d) above.
3. Where subject's version of his history and relevant events differed from the documents in 1(c) and (d) above - his as well as the witnesses or reports are set out from documents in 1(d).
4. All the data is, where possible, confirmed by statements or documentary evidence.
5. All the documents and statements are available for inspection, but some documents are of a secret nature and disclosure will not be in the public interest and will likely be an embarrassment to the Government of the Republic of South Africa as the documents are from official sources of other countries and are provided on condition that this fact is not publicly disclosed.

LIFE HISTORY OF DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS:

³⁶⁴⁵ No evidence from October 1 and 2 were found in the archives.

³⁶⁴⁶ The history of the person who inflicted the fatal wounds to the late Dr. Verwoerd drafted by Col. McIntyre, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Subject: Leer W.D. 10/10/4102 der Stafendas. NASA.

1. Subject is known by the following names and surnames in different countries by different persons:

Surname: Tsafendas alias Tsafendakis, Tsafantakis, Tsafendos, Tsafendis, Tsafantakis and Williams.

Names: Demetrio alias Dimitrio, Dimitro.

2. He is born on 14.01.1918 in Lourenço Marques out of wedlock and is the child of:

Father: Michaelatos alias Michael alias Miguel Tsafendakis or Tsafandakis, a Greek citizen to Candia, Crete, born in 1885.

Mother: Amelia William aka Amelia Williams, a colored woman, citizen of Portuguese East Africa region of Mozambique. Her birth date is not confirmed.

3. Subject's father died in Pretoria on 14.02.1962.
4. His mother died in Lourenço Marques on 12.01.1927 according to him. He is in possession of a note on which his mother's first and last name is written and says that he had confirmed the date at the Registrar of Births and Deaths in Lourenço Marques.
5. He never knew his mother because when he was too young to remember, his father took him to Egypt where he lived until the age of about 8 years with his grandmother - his father's mother.
6. In the meantime, his father married Marika Sakelis, a Greek of Port Said, and during 1926 his father had him return home to Lourenço Marques to stay with him and his wife, as a member of the family.
7. Subject was then placed in an Anglican Missionary School, but according to him, he and his stepmother could not get along, and therefor his father sent him as a boarder to the English medium Primary school in Middelburg (Transvaal). He then went home twice a year with the school holidays.
8. According to him his father landed in financial difficulties during the depression years and could no longer afford to keep him in school in Middelburg. In 1930, when he was in standard three, he was sent back to the Anglican Missionary School in Lourenço Marques until 1933.
9. According to his stepmother, he then refused to continue school and he started work as an assistant in a shop. According to him he was doing evening classes at a Portuguese Missionary School and he passed st. V in English and st. IV in Portuguese in 1935.

10. In 1936 he went to the Transvaal alone where he worked in Pretoria and Johannesburg in various cafes. For some reason he never worked at a place for longer than two or three months.
11. In 1939, he ran evening classes at the “Progress College”, Johannesburg, where he only learned for three months to do welding and then got a job at the British Mining Supply Co. in Johannesburg.
12. He worked there until 1942 and then went to Cape Town... [The rest of the sentence is cut off the page.]
13. He was in possession of a Greek passport nr.27 dated 18.05.1942, issued by the Greek consulate in Johannesburg under the name of Demetrius Tsafantakis and valid for one year. He was also in possession of a Portuguese passport nr.143 dated 05.03.1942, also valid for one year.
14. When the ship arrived in Canada, he absconded and was detained by Canadian Immigration authorities. However, he escaped and entered the United States of America by walking across the ice of the St.Croixriver.
15. He went to Bangor, Maine, USA and was arrested in December 1942 for the breach of US Immigration Laws and was then detained.
16. During his detention, he showed symptoms of mental illness and was admitted into the Boston Psychopathic Hospital and from there transferred on 23.04.1943 to the Metropolitan State Hospital. Here his illness was described as “Psychoneurosis-mixed type”.
17. He was released from hospital on 14.08.1943 and placed on the American ship “Pillory”. He was also issued with American documents that allowed him to perform military service on the said ship.
18. He did service on several US ships but from time to time he was admitted into different hospitals, including an US Army hospital in England.
19. From the latter hospital, he returned to America in 1944 and was then admitted into a hospital in Charleston, South Carolina. However, he ran away from this hospital but was arrested in Boston and sent to the Ellis Island Hospital, New York.
20. On 25.02.1945 he was placed on the Greek ship, “Maria Nicolao”, but on 03.12.1945 he returned to New York as a waiter on the ship “Robin Locksley.”
21. He was arrested again and charged under the US Immigration Laws.

22. On 10.02.1946 he was placed on the ship "Hood Victory" for deportation, but on 10.03.1946 he returned with the same ship. He showed symptoms of mental illness again and was admitted to the Grafton State Hospital where he remained until 27.09.1947. His illness was then described as "Schizophrenia Hebephrenic"³⁶⁴⁷ Type".
23. On 27.09.1947 he was placed on the ship "Marine Jumper" and deported to Greece.
24. During 1950, 1953 and 1954 while he was in Europe, he applied to be admitted into the United States but his applications were dismissed every time.
25. Previously he has never been in Greece and at first could not find a job, but later found work as a foreman and interpreter at the American Reconstruction Mission. He indicates that he worked there until 1949, when the work was finished... [The rest of sentence is cut of at end of page.]
26. In Greece he could not get other work, but managed to gain a refugee-passport from the Greek Immigration Authorities. He was however obligated by them to hand in his original Greek passport.
27. He then went to France by ship, but because he was not able to find any work, he went to Portugal.
28. The Portuguese authorities did not want to accept his refugee passport and when he explained that he had lost his Portuguese passport, they did not believe him. Consequently, he was detained there for about six months before being allowed to seek work in Lisbon. He could not find a job but later made an existence by selling embroidery, postcards, watches and costume jewellery to travellers.
29. During 1953, he tried to leave Portugal but was arrested by the Portuguese authorities and detained for about one year.
30. Thereafter a Portuguese passport was issued to him and he went to Germany, Sweden and Denmark. In Germany, he fell ill again and spent about 6 months in Oxensoll Krankenhaus Hospital. He worked at different places, but because he could not find a suitable, rewarding job in the various countries mentioned he returned to Portugal in 1958 and continued his peddling business.
31. The same year, however, he returned to Germany and again worked at different places until 1939 when he decided to go to England.

³⁶⁴⁷ On one document, the word is spelled "Hebephrenic" and on another it is spelled "Hebephremic."

32. There he could not find work and the English Immigration authority deported him back to Germany. He then worked in a tractor factory in Germany for about 6 months.
33. He then went to Egypt but was immediately arrested for violating the country's immigration laws.
34. When he was released, he was put on a ship to Beirut.
35. From there he went to Palestine and Turkey where he got work as a teacher of English in Istanbul. He held this job only for two months.
36. He then went through the Balkan states and back to Greece.
37. From there he went to Crete during 1962 to visit his father's family. He only spent a few days and because the family could not house him, he first travelled to Italy and then back to Portugal.
38. In August or September of 1963, he set off to Lourenço Marques and stayed with an uncle for a short while. His stepmother in Pretoria was informed of his arrival and she fetched and took him to Pretoria.
39. From 09.12.1963 to 03.02.1964 he worked at the City Engineering and Carron Company in Pretoria as a fitter... [The rest of the sentence is cut off at the end of the page.]
40. On 07.02.1964 he got work again as a welder at Pool Engineering, Pretoria. However, on 10.07.1964 he was fired because of shoddy work and the trouble he caused among the other employees. When his foreman, Mr. Albert Vercuil, notified him that he was dismissed, he pointed his finger in Mr. Vercuil's face as if he wanted to assault him and said: -

"You are just like your bloody Government. I will kill your Prime Minister yet."
41. Shortly afterwards he left Pretoria by train and on 19.07.1964 he arrived in Bulawayo, Rhodesia. He then travelled with a Portuguese passport nr.6511/63 issued on 02.11.1963 at Lourenço Marques. He listed his race as white, his marital status as single and his nationality as Portuguese.
42. He had R100 with him and declared that the reason of his travel was to visit his sister, in fact his stepsister, Catherine Harlanbos of Marandellas. It is now established that his stepsister's married surname is Pneuma and her husband has a business in Marandellas.
43. He was then issued with a stranger tourist permit by the Immigration Officers of Rhodesia, valid until 09.08.1964.

44. It has now been established that he had visited his stepsister in Marandellas, but according to her, she told him that he could not stay and that he immediately left.
45. He had to have left Rhodesia in some way without reporting to any immigration officials because on 27.07.1964 he arrived by plane in Salisbury. It has thus far not been established from where he came. His contact address was then given as O.E. Bottle Store, Avondale.
46. He immediately sought work, including at the Public Service Board of Rhodesia, and according to him also at various other towns in Rhodesia and Malawi.
47. When the Rhodesian Immigration Department realized that the subject had not left the country on 09.08.1964, they wrote to him at his contact address at Avondale on 19.08.1964 and ordered him to report to their office immediately.
48. He arrived on 21.08.1964 and asked to be allowed to stay longer and seek work. This request was refused and he was told to leave immediately. On 22.08.1964 he travelled by train to Mozambique.
49. On 09.10.1964, however, he again entered Rhodesia from Umtali. The Immigration Officers issued him a temporary visitor's permit, valid for 14 days, but on 10.10.1964 they received notice of his previous visits and they declared him an illegal immigrant and gave him instructions to immediately leave the country. According to official records he departed on the same day, but according to a Mr. Galamakis, a Greek priest, Contos - and a Mrs. H Crispos, all of Umtali, he only departed on 11.10.1964. He visited many Greeks in Umtali, but as far as known, there is nothing... [The rest of the sentence is cut off at end of page.]
50. He then went to Beira where he got a job after some time near Gondola at the Central African Construction Corporation. He worked there for about a month when he made certain statements one night in a bar in the presence of non-whites and as a result of which he then was arrested by the Portuguese East African Police.
51. According to himself he was arrested: "Because I criticised the Portuguese Government for their policy in regard to petrol distribution. I was detained for 90 days." According to Portuguese Police, he (Tsafendas) said the following: "This country is not Portugal. It is called the United States of Mocambique. Its flag is of a blue colour with a rainbow. That rainbow represents all the colours. We already have money, and any day now all this will come to an end because what is necessary is not to be fooled into saying we are Portuguese because we are Africans. Long live our country, the United States of Mozambique.”

52. According to the Portuguese police, he admitted that he made the remarks. Also, according to the police, he said that he had said this in response to his own ideas of independence of Mozambique separate from Portugal.
53. After he was released, he travelled by ship and arrived in Durban during February or March 1965.
54. On 15.03.1965 he found accommodation in room 166 of the home E.R. Corney, Fairwood, Durban, and on 16.03.1965, he accepted work as a Shed Attendant in Umbilo, Durban at the South African Railways and worked there until 07.04.1965. On this date he was on a night shift. He worked from 6pm on 06.04.1965 and had to remain on duty until 6am on 07.04.1965. While he was lying on a bed during the aforementioned night, another employee drenched him with a paper bag full of water. He did not see which person did it, but rose, was very angry and said that he could not work with wet clothes. So he walked off and never again returned to this work.
55. During this period he was used as a temporary interpreter in court at Durban on different occasions.
56. On 19.04.1965 he accepted work as a fitter at the company Fraser and Chalmers in Mandeni.
57. On 07.05.1965 he had an argument with another employee in the mess hall and in the fight that followed, he was inflicted a serious knife wound on his right arm and was admitted to the hospital. He reported the incident to the police and the person who inflicted the knife wounds, appeared in the court, but was acquitted. This person cannot be found now. He however said to the other employees on the afore-mentioned date that the subject is a dangerous Communist.
58. In the hospital, he underwent surgery and the scar is still visible on the right arm.
59. After his discharge from the hospital he found accommodation in the “Durban Men’s Home” on 31.06.1965. There he... [The rest of sentence is cut of at end of page.]
60. During his stay in Natal, he didn’t contact, as far as could be established, any undesirable, restricted or communist people.
61. He however told a Roman Catholic priest whom he met in Mandeni that the Portuguese Government in Mozambique have no sense and do nothing for the non-white population. When he came to know that the priest belonged to the Roman Catholic Church, he started swearing and said that the Roman Catholic Church should be wiped out and that the Roman Catholic nurses in the hospital injected poison into non-Whites so that they die like flies and they do so with the knowledge and approval of the Mozambique Government.

- 62. He then travelled with a yet unknown person by car from Durban to Port Elizabeth and from there by train to Cape Town, where he arrived on 28.08.1965 and went straight to the home of a coloured family, Daniels, at 1 San Sousie Street, Belville.*
- 63. He went there because a daughter of the Daniels family, namely Hellen Dorothy, 36 years old and unmarried had written to him in Durban after she attained the subject's address from friends in Boksburg. The Daniels family, as well as the friends in Boksburg, all belong to the same religion as the subject - and while he was in Durban – they exchanged letters.*
- 64. The Daniels family took him in to their home and he immediately started looking for a job.*
- 65. On 13.09.1965 he got a job at the Cape Town Municipality as a fitter in the Table Bay Power Station, Cape Town.*
- 66. On 25.10.1965, however, he received seven days' notice of termination of his employment. He then resigned on the same day to avoid dishonourable discharge. The service he rendered was unsatisfactory.*
- 67. After he got the job in September 1965, Helen Daniels's father told subject that since he is now employed and earns money he has to pay rent. He was angry but remained there until 16.10.1965.*
- 68. He himself claimed that he got accommodation in a boarding house near the traffic-department in Green Point, Cape Town, and stayed there until about the middle of November 1965. The place where he boarded is not yet determined.*
- 69. Around this time he went to the house of a certain Patrick Henry O'Ryan - a coloured teacher - at 9 Westminster Way, Lansdowne, Cape Town, with all his belongings. He met the O'Ryans during a church conference of his faith on a farm near Durbanville, Cape Town. The O'Ryans gave him a place to stay, although they did not have a room for him. He had to share a room with the children of the O'Ryans.*
- 70. Another parishioner of the same faith, namely Richard Poggenpoel of "Rosedene" Walnut Street, Lansdowne, had a spare room that he offered.*

71. The subject then lived with them for 2 weeks during December, 1965. When Poggenpoel informed the subject of the contents of the letter, he (Tsafendas) immediately returned to the O'Ryans.
72. During the period he lived with these people, he daily went for job interviews. He also wrote numerous letters to try and find work.
73. It was established that he was at some company on probation as bus conductor but he told O'Ryan that he was too fat and could not climb the stairs up and down and was therefore not employed.
74. He was without work for about two months and stayed at the O'Ryans for free when he finally found work during February 1966 at the Marine Diamond Corporation on the company's barge "Colpontoon".
75. This job he held for only about two months and claimed that he had to abandon the work because it was too demanding for him because of his poor health.
76. To others he said that he had to abandon the work because he found it too dangerous when he had to get from the tow boat with a rope ladder onto a small boat to go to the transport ship "Marina".
77. To O'Ryan he said that another employee on the Colpontoon is jealous of him (Tsafendas) and thus does not want to teach him (Tsafendas) the job.
78. When he started earning money again, he got accommodation at Milton House, Milton Road, Observatory, and then departed from the O'Ryans.
79. He stayed there for about two months and then again moved to 5 Wrench Way, Observatory, where he rented a room from a Mrs. Vos. The latter, however, shortly thereafter gave him notice and on 01.07.1966 the subject rented a room from a Mrs. Theyser at 48 Devon Street, Woodstock. He had his meals at a Mrs. Scott at 42 Chamberlain Street, Woodstock. On 30.08.1966 he left.
80. On 31.08.1966 he moved to room 7, Elnor Apartments, Rustenburg Road, Rondebosch, and was arrested there for the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd.
81. Subject admits that before the outbreak of the Second World War he became a member of the Communist Party of South Africa in Johannesburg and that he regularly paid his monthly subscription of 25 cent per month until he left Johannesburg in 1942 and went to Canada. He expressly denies that afterwards he ever had anything to do with the Communist Party or contacted any Communists in South Africa or elsewhere.

82. He does admit however, that while in England he attended various political meetings in connection with:
- a) Committee of African Organisations*
 - b) Anti-Colonial:*
83. Subject stated that the following speakers were present at the said meetings:
- a) Barbara Castle*
 - b) Fenner Brockway*
 - c) Callaghan*
84. Above-mentioned persons are all Communists and members of the British Labour party.
85. In the presence of Mrs. Scott, referred to in paragraph 79 above, he told the other tenants that he can get a good job in S.W. Africa, but that he could not go there because there is a certain task in Cape Town that he first must perform.
86. Mrs. Popkiss, manageress of Eldor Apartments announced that she encountered the subject in the garden on the afternoon of 05.09.1966. She noticed that he looked very worried and talked to him. She asked him if he saw her cat and told him that she is very concerned about the animal. He replied: "I am also very worried. I have some thing on my mind."
87. According to most people in the Republic of South Africa with whom the subject came into contact with, other than those already mentioned above, the subject did not talk about politics. However, he said to several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a colored.
88. To Patrick O’Ryan, mentioned above, he also said that the Republic’s apartheid policy was unfair and that these policies often frustrate him.
89. Subject’s stepmother claimed that he always asked for money; others said that he usually tried to get meals from others and always gave the impression that he is needy.
90. Subject belongs to a religion called the Christian Church, which does not have any solid building which serves as a church. Services are held from house to house. It seems that only non-whites belong to this faith.
91. No members of this faith in the R.S.A. has drawn unfavourable attention to them, and fans of this belief are not suspected of subversive activities.
92. As far as has been established, the subject himself has never before been guilty of any criminal offense other than the offenses under the Immigration Laws of different countries.

93. Subject is a total abstainer of strong drink and does not smoke.
94. From 24.07.1966 to 03.09.1966, the Greek ship "Eleni" was in the Cape Town docks for repairs. The subject visited the ship daily. He befriended the crew and often enjoyed meals with them on... [The rest of sentence is cut off at end of page].
As a result, one of them offered him a revolver, which he bought. Later he found that the weapon was in fact not a revolver, but only a gas pistol. He tried to get his money back but did not succeed. The seller told him that he had spent all the money.
95. This gas pistol was found among his property when he was arrested for the assassination.

COMMENTS ON COL. MCINTYRE'S REPORT

The report follows Tsafendas's life from the day he was born until his arrest for the murder of Dr. Verwoerd. It includes his hospitalizations, his travels to and within several countries, and some of his arrests and imprisonments. The report is accurate about his travel and his various jobs, but it misses many important aspects of his life, especially Tsafendas's political ideas and activities in Mozambique. Col. McIntyre and the South African police were not given Tsafendas's complete file by the Portuguese authorities and therefore were presumably unaware of some of his arrests and political activism there. Nevertheless, the report comprehensively downplays Tsafendas's politics, including crucially the fact that he was a Communist. That he was a member of the South African Communist Party before the Second World War is mentioned (par. 81), as is the fact that Nikolas Vergos characterised him as a "dangerous Communist," (par. 57) but little else.

Facts known to Col. McIntyre which are omitted include that Tsafendas was fired from a job in Lourenço Marques and banned from re-entering Mozambique due to his Communist ideas, plus that several witnesses testified that he had Communist ideas. More importantly, the report says in paragraph 87 that "according to most people in the Republic of South Africa with whom the subject came into contact, other than those already mentioned above, the subject did not talk about politics. However, he said to several people that he was upset because he was not classified as a Coloured." As to the first part of the sentence, seven witnesses testified to the contrary:

- Kenneth Ross said Tsafendas was “very fond of discussing politics and gave me the opinion that he was well versed in politics. He was blatantly opposed to the National Party policy, the policy of the present Government and was definitely pro-Russian.”³⁶⁴⁸
- Robert Smith testified that Tsafendas was “definitely pro-Communist. Tsafendas was in my opinion a fanatic on politics and seldom spoke of anything else.”³⁶⁴⁹
- Gladstone Dunn testified that Tsafendas discussed politics with him.³⁶⁵⁰
- Horacio Ferreira also said Tsafendas discussed politics with him.³⁶⁵¹
- In addition, Johannes Jacobus Botha had informed the police that Tsafendas was described by Nick Vergos as “the biggest Communist in the Republic of South Africa.”³⁶⁵²
- Father Hanno Probst also characterised him and reported him to a security officer as a “Communist and a dangerous person.”³⁶⁵³

Also omitted is the fact contained in the report of the South African embassy in Lisbon that Tsafendas “has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances including shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans.”³⁶⁵⁴ Nothing about Tsafendas’s criminal record in Mozambique is mentioned by Col. McIntyre, but this could be because the Portuguese authorities did not reveal such information to the South African police.

The McIntyre report does not give an opinion on whether or not Tsafendas was insane, but merely records the diagnoses from some of the hospitals where he was treated, including the Grafton State Hospital (par. 22). However, McIntyre omits important information regarding this latter hospital. Although he had access to the Grafton’s document, ³⁶⁴⁸ Kenneth Heugh Ross statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁴⁹ Robert Harpur Smith statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁵⁰ Gladstone Dunn statement to the police, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁵¹ South African Police report regarding the activities of Dimitrio Tsafendas in Mozambique and Rhodesia. 20 September 1966. K150, Vol 3, Sub file: 1/5. NASA.

³⁶⁵² Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁵³ Father Hanno Probst statement to the COE, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA; Christoffel Johannes van Vuuren statement to the police, 13 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁵⁴ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Lisbon, to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

he omits the reference to Tsafendas admitting he “faked mental illness”³⁶⁵⁵ when he was arrested for violating American immigration laws. Also omitted is the statement by the South African embassy in Washington, based on US Immigration Department documents, that Tsafendas was “unstable but not insane.”³⁶⁵⁶

ATTORNEY-GENERAL’S MEMORANDUM

The same day, the Attorney-General of Cape Town, Willem M. van den Berg, who had been appointed to lead the case for the State in the forthcoming summary trial of Tsafendas, released the following memorandum:

Detailed Information for a Memorandum Regarding Demetrio Tsafendas³⁶⁵⁷

Paragraphs 1 and 2:

Michael Tsafendakis and his common law wife Amelia Williams separated shortly after the birth of Demetrio. On 5 December 1920 Michael Tsafendakis and Maria Sakellis were married in Port Said, Egypt. Demetrio was in the care of his paternal grandmother in Alexandria, Egypt, until around the age of 6.

He was then returned to his father in Lourenço Marques, where he received his first school education at a mixed race school, the “English Mission School.” Next he was sent by his father to the Middelburg Primary School, English, in the Transvaal. He possibly stayed there until 1933 and he seems to have passed Standard 6 there (the first year of high school). Thereafter he returned to Lourenço Marques when for 6 years he worked at the “Vulcan Iron Works”, General Engineers, as an Oxy-Acetylene electrical welder. According to testimonials from this firm, he had performed his duties in a satisfactory manner. These testimonials were included with his application for permanent residence in South Africa.

Three daughters and one son were born out of the marriage of Michael and Maria, (now known as Marika). They are Victor, Evangeline, Helen and Catherina. Except for ³⁶⁵⁵ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demetrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³⁶⁵⁶ Secret Telegram from S.A. Embassy, Washington to Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Cape Town, 9 September 1966. K150, Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/8. NASA.

³⁶⁵⁷ Detailed information for a Memorandum regarding Demetrio Tsafendas by Attorney-General W.M. van den Berg, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, Subject: Beweerde Omkoperij. NASA.

Catharina, who is married and lives in Salisbury, Rhodesia, they have all been living near Pretoria, South Africa, for many years. It would seem that Demetrio was estranged from them.

Paragraph 3:

It is not known whether the following kiosk still exists. According to a letter from Demetrio to the Secretary of Home Affairs on 31 December 1935 requesting permanent residence in South Africa:

“Chai et Kiosk,

Praca 7 da Marco,

P.O. Bos 702,

LOURENÇO MARQUES.

Prop. P. Sideris”

Demetrio Tsafendas' Communist activities were at that time restricted to the distribution of Communist propaganda. Up to 1942, when he left South Africa, no further information in this regard has been found. In a statement to the South African Police on 19 September 1966, Demetrio Tsafendas admitted that he had joined the Communist Party shortly before World War II. He also attended their meetings and paid the fees but denied that he had any further association with the Communists after he left South Africa in 1942; except that whilst in England he attended meetings in Hyde Park and Caxton Hall; he furthermore stated that the participants were Leftist members of the Labour Party and not Communists.

Paragraph 4-7:

Demetrio Tsafendas was found guilty of contravening Article 2(a) of Act 1 of 1937 in the Johannesburg Magistrates' Court on 6 August 1941. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a fine of 12 pounds 10 shillings or a one month jail term. He paid the fine. However, he was not deported, but freed, as a temporary residence permit had been issued to him on the grounds that he had performed important war production work at the “British Mining Supply Company. At that time he worked for the firm as a welder in the transport department. It is not clear whether or not he lost his job there because of malingering. The Secretary of Home Affairs is in possession of a testimonial from the above firm which reads as follows: “During this period (from 7 May 1940 until the date of the testimonial, 8 August 1941) of service we have found his work to be perfectly satisfactory and his conduct good.”

Paragraph 8:

On 8 June 1942 Tsafendas applied for a permit to travel to England to join the British Army.

This request was refused in June 1942 as England refused entry to Tsafendas. His temporary residence permit was nearing the expiration date. He was unemployed and travelled to Cape Town, from where he boarded the “Eugenie Livanos” on 13 June without a permit, with the help of the Greek Consul in Cape Town, who was unaware of the fact that Tsafendas was not permitted to leave the country. He never turned up in Lourenço Marques.

The first news of him is the letter from Boston, Massachusetts, as found in paragraph 7, in connection with the 3 pound deposit received for his expired temporary residence permit. As no notification was received from Tsafendas to his father to authorise this amount, it was declared to be forfeited on 21 July 1955. From various sources, including his own declaration, Tsafendas travelled on the Eugenie Livanos from Cape Town to St. John on the east coast of Canada. He and a friend left the ship there and were sent by the Canadian authorities to Halifax where they were detained. However, they escaped and walked over the frozen St. Croix River near Calais, Maine, in the U.S.A., where they were again arrested and sent to Boston, U.S.A. Tsafendas appeared before the U.S.A. Immigration officials on several occasions for transgression of the time limits given to sailors for temporary residency. During this period he worked on several American ships. During World War II he mainly served on “Liberty” ships. He described this as “risking my life on submarine infested seas.”

Between 1942 and 1947 Tsafendas received treatment in various hospitals for “Psychosis, Psychosis undetermined, Schizophrenia” and nervous breakdowns. The U.S.A. refused to grant him permanent residence rights and in 1947 he was deported to Greece where he started work at the American Reconstruction Mission. This had something to do with the Marshall Aid Plan. He also worked as interpreter for three months for Messrs. Steers-Grove in Piraeus Harbour in Greece. This was also an American firm whose HQ was in New York. After this Tsafendas was again unemployed in Greece which led to the request mentioned in para. 8. It is not known how Tsafendas got to London in 1950.

Paragraphs 9 and 10:

Demitrio Tsafendas between his requests to Internal Affairs departments in 1950 and 1959 from Athens and London respectively, are not known. According to him, he was mostly in Portugal from 1950 to 1958, and was again imprisoned there for several years. He declared that he sold clothes in Lisbon and that he also visited West Germany and Brussels. In 1959 he reached England from West Germany and to which he was once again deported by the British in whose hospitals he had also been treated for his nervous breakdowns. In his application to Internal Affairs in SA from London, he named his former employers as "The American Reconstruction Mission, Greece and U.S. Army, Germany." The nature of the work he did for the U.S.A. Defence Force is unknown. He also declared that for 6 months he was treated in the Oxensoll Krankenhaus, but that he absconded and went to friends in Hamburg. Before he went to England in 1959 he also travelled in Sweden and Denmark. After he left England he worked for a while in a tractor factory in Munich.

Then he decided to return to Egypt and travelled by train through the Balkans to Piraeus, Greece and thence by boat to Alexandria, Egypt. In Cairo he was jailed for 6 months. Then he travelled by boat to Beirut and thence by plane to Jerusalem. He roamed around along the Jordan River for 4 months. Then he travelled to Ankara and Istanbul, in Turkey, then returned to Athens, but en route also visited Sofia in Bulgaria. From Athens he visited his father's family on the Island of Crete. He said that he also returned to Portugal and from there decided to return to Africa. He maintained that the Portuguese Social Services gave him a ticket to return by boat to Lourenço Marques in September 1963.

Paragraphs 11 and 12:

From 1935 to 1959 all requests from Demitrio Tsafendas to Home Affairs to grant him permanent residency were dismissed out of hand. But on 2 November 1963 he received a temporary permit from the South African Consul-General in Lourenço Marques to enjoy a holiday in the Republic. It is not known to me who was responsible for issuing this permit, but it was done without reference to the HQ in Pretoria. Tsafendas soon accepted work in Pretoria. Permission was also granted to him to hold the position while waiting for the result of his application to the Immigration Board in Pretoria for permanent residence in SA.

On 20 January 1964 his request for permanent residence was approved. He also received his Identity Document soon thereafter. In March 1964 he wrote to the Dept. of Internal Affairs to complain about corruption amongst the Public Servants and accused them of demanding large amounts of money for obtaining an Identity document. These complaints were investigated by the Police but were dismissed as unfounded.

Paragraphs 13-16:

In June-July 1964 Tsafendas again left the country and travelled to Salisbury, Rhodesia and from there to Malawi. According to him he went there to look for work. He returned to Umtali in Rhodesia and from there he went to Beira. He worked for a while on the Beira-Umtali oil pipeline but was arrested by the Portuguese police and placed in detention for 90 days. Friends of Tsafendas then rallied round him and gave him passage by boat to Durban. He stayed there for a while and worked for Fraser & Chalmers in Mandini for a while. He was dismissed after involvement in fighting. Then he returned to Cape Town where he worked for a while for Marine Diamond Corporation. In Cape Town he stayed in various places for short periods. According to a statement in my possession there was never any question of a marriage between him and the coloured woman Helen Daniels from Bellville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicate that he applied for reclassification as a coloured because he wanted to apply for a business license in a coloured area. Investigations continue, especially overseas and any further developments will be provided as soon as I receive information.

W.M. van den Berg

Attorney-General

Cape Town. 3 October 1966.

COMMENTS ON VAN DEN BERG'S MEMORANDUM

A great deal of information about Tsafendas, some of it very important and known to the South African police, does not appear in van den Berg's so-called "detailed" account of Tsafendas's life. That this information is absent does not mean van den Berg deliberately omitted it, perhaps because he deemed it unimportant or wanted to downplay Tsafendas's Communism and political activities. A possible explanation is that he was not given all the information held by the South African police.

We cannot know with certainty what was provided to van den Berg, but the content of the memorandum suggests that he had access to Tsafendas's affidavit from 1964, perhaps the PIDE reports given to the South African authorities, the Department of Interior reports concerning Tsafendas's applications for permanent residency, plus letters from Tsafendas to the Department of the Interior seeking permission to enter South Africa. He does not seem to have the statements given to the police by Tsafendas during his interrogation, or statements by people who knew Tsafendas, including his family. The secret telegrams from the South African embassies in Washington and Lisbon are also absent. Of course, it cannot be ruled out that van den Berg had access to these documents and chose not to use them.

The memorandum does not cover Tsafendas's political past, including several of his arrests. Analytically, it is surprising that the memorandum does not mention the reason for Tsafendas's arrest in Beira in 1964: that he was accused of "making subversive propaganda against the Portuguese government and spreading subversive propaganda among the native masses."³⁶⁵⁸

Van den Berg must have known the reason as it was given in the PIDE's reports and various other documents in the possession of the South African police. Either he considered it unimportant to mention why Tsafendas was arrested and spent ninety days in prison or he did not want to politicise the arrest. Tsafendas's second arrest by the Portuguese police in February 1965 is omitted altogether. Even though there was no mention of it in PIDE's reports, the South African press had referred to two arrests, not one.³⁶⁵⁹ Despite the ³⁶⁵⁸ PIDE Confidential Report regarding Demetrio Tsafendas: no: 2707/64/SR, 25 November 1964. SR. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT; Vertaling. Information: Demetrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. K150. Vol: 6, File: 3. NASA; PIDE report: Information: Demetrio Tsafendas or Demetrio Tsafandakis. 7 September 1966. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

³⁶⁵⁹ Dagbreek, 11 September 1966, 'Tsafendas het vir V.V. in Persie gewerk.'; The Daily News, 8 September 1966: 17, 'Tsafendas seen as 'mystery man''; The Herald (Melbourne), 8 September 1966: 1, 'The killer: Five passports and a record of subversion'; The Rhodesia Herald, 8 September 1966: 1, 'Assassin said to have been omission, one would have expected the South African police to be aware of it since it was reported in South Africa's newspapers, and then to make inquiries about it.

The memorandum states that Tsafendas's Communist activities in Mozambique in the mid-1930s were "restricted to the distribution of Communist propaganda." Although the Sideris Kiosk is mentioned, the fact that Tsafendas was fired from his job there for conducting Communist propaganda is not; nor is the fact that while in Mozambique he was twice officially suspected of Communist activities. These incidents were well known to the South African authorities. They were the reason Tsafendas's early requests for permanent residency in South Africa were turned down, and they were mentioned in several documents held by the South African authorities. The reason Tsafendas's applications for permanent residency in South Africa were "dismissed out of hand" is also not given.

The South African embassy report that Tsafendas "has a criminal record in Mozambique, where he is said to have been arrested on several occasions after creating public disturbances including, shouting pro-Communist and anti-Portuguese slogans," is not included. Also missing are the facts that Tsafendas was not allowed to enter Mozambique in 1951 because of his "past," his arrest that followed, and his subsequent twelve years of enforced exile.

Van den Berg's memorandum states that Tsafendas appeared before US immigration officials "on several occasions for transgression of the time limits given to sailors for temporary residency." It also mentions the medical treatment Tsafendas received in the United States between 1942 and 1947 plus what the diagnosis was. However, that Tsafendas was regarded by American immigration officials as "unstable, but not insane" and the fact that he was caught "faking mental illness" are also not included. Naturally you would have expected the police to provide all these documents regarding Tsafendas to the Attorney-General who was handing the case. However, it seems that they either did not do it or van den Berg did not think that these information were important to include them in his memorandum. We will get back to this issue shortly.

The memorandum contains two evident errors. It says Tsafendas went to London in 1950 when the year was 1959. It also says Tsafendas seemed to be estranged from his family. It is a fact that Tsafendas did not see his relatives between 1941 and 1963. However, he kept deported from P.E.A. for Communist connections.' The Star, 10 September 1966: 3, 'Assassin had five passports.'

in touch with them across those twenty-two years, especially with his father and his half-sister Eleni, and later with his step-mother. They exchanged letters frequently and Tsafendas would send postcards from wherever he was, informing them of his whereabouts. Tsafendas had a loving, life-long relationship with his father. After he died, his step-mother Marika, his half-brother Victor and his half-sister Eleni helped Tsafendas to reunite with them in South Africa. They drove from Pretoria to Lourenço Marques to meet him and then brought him back. Of course, van den Berg was not to know that they went so far as to bribe a South African immigration official to overlook the fact that Tsafendas was on the Stop List of the Department of Interior.

On reaching Pretoria, the family gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment. Tsafendas's relations with his other two half-sisters, Evangelia and Katerina, were not as warm, but in no sense was he "estranged" from them. It is important to note that Tsafendas's family sought to distance themselves from him after the assassination, a natural reaction in the emotional frenzy of the time and knowing what the apartheid authorities were capable of.

Costas Michaletos, who knew Tsafendas from infancy, told the police that "Dimetrios Tsafantakis grew up with his half-brothers and sisters and was always treated as part of the family."³⁶⁶⁰ Guglielmo Conte, a friend and business partner of Tsafendas's father, who also knew Tsafendas from the day he was born, denied that Dimitri was estranged from his family and stated that except for his school years in Middleburg, he always stayed with his father and stepmother and their family.³⁶⁶¹

The strangest section of the memorandum concerns Tsafendas's relationship with Helen Daniels and questions of his racial classification. Van den Berg says that, "According to a statement in my possession, there was never any question of a marriage between him and the Coloured woman, Helen Daniels, from Belleville South. Information from Home Affairs files indicates that he applied for reclassification as a Coloured because he wanted to apply for a business licence in a Coloured area." The Home Affairs files which van den Berg referred to were not found in the archives. Nor was anything discovered relating to Tsafendas's application regarding his reclassification. As already stated, the author has not been able to establish why Tsafendas applied to be reclassified as a Coloured person.

³⁶⁶⁰ Costas Michaletos statement to the police, 10 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁶¹ Rand Daily Mail, 17 September 1966, Tsafendas timid and puny as a boy.'

However, that is not the issue here. What is important is that van den Berg appears not to be in possession of the statements which Tsafendas and Helen Daniels gave to the police.

In those statements, Tsafendas³⁶⁶² and Daniels³⁶⁶³ stated clearly that there was a question of marriage between them. In his statement of September 11, 1966, Tsafendas said he applied for reclassification in order “to marry a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels.”³⁶⁶⁴ Helen Daniels testified to the police on September 15 that she wrote to Tsafendas with the intention of meeting and marrying him. Tsafendas replied to her letter that he was willing to visit, but he wanted to meet her first before agreeing to marry. Daniels also stated that after they met, Tsafendas appeared to have no interest in marrying her since he made no effort to establish a relationship with her.³⁶⁶⁵ Caroline Barbeau also testified that Tsafendas wanted to be reclassified in order to marry Helen Daniels.³⁶⁶⁶

Van den Berg was either not given these statements - two by Tsafendas and one by Daniels - by the police or he chose to ignore them. As Attorney-General, he was entitled to all statements taken during police interviews, especially those of the accused.³⁶⁶⁷ Had he received them, he must have included them in his memorandum and his failure to do so suggests the police did not provide them. The question therefore is why he not given these statements? Since the marriage question was relatively unimportant, the assumption must be that the documents contained other information which the police did not wish to reveal. That this was indeed the case became obvious during Tsafendas’s summary trial.

As we will see, the three statements, especially the two by Tsafendas, flatly contradicted his portrayal as an insane, apolitical man who killed Dr. Verwoerd because his tapeworm told him to. Tsafendas declared in his statement that he killed Dr. Verwoerd because he was “disgusted with his policies,” that Dr. Verwoerd “did not represent all the people of South Africa,” and he believed that by killing him a “change of policy will occur.” He also testified that he was a former member of the Communist Party of South Africa, that ³⁶⁶² Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁶⁶³ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

³⁶⁶⁴ Demetrio Tsafendas statement to Major Rossouw. 11 September 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: Verklaring van Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁶⁶⁵ Helen Dorothy Daniels statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol 1, File VDSO 17/64, NASA.

³⁶⁶⁶ Caroline Barbeau statement to the police, 7 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁶⁷ Advocate George Bizos in a personal interview, 5 April 2016; Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Judge Gerald Friedman in a personal interview, 11 April 2016; Judge Robin Marais in a personal interview, 3 June 2016.

he was against apartheid and colonialism, and that he had participated in anti-apartheid meetings in London. More importantly, there was nothing in his statements to suggest that he was insane, and not once does he mention the tapeworm that would become so central in his summary trial and would be associated with him for the remainder of his life.

It is important to mention here that the report of the Commission of Enquiry flatly contradicts van den Berg's report. It states that, "On 30th August, 1965, he applied as Demitrio Tsafendas to the Regional Representative of the Department of the Interior to be reclassified as a Coloured person. He gave the reason that he regarded himself as a Coloured and that he wished to marry a Coloured. On 1st September, 1965, he made a sworn statement in support of his application."³⁶⁶⁸ Clearly, the Commission and van den Berg had different information about the issue and the author is not in position to know for certainty which version is correct. The likelier guess is that the Commission is right since Tsafendas also regarded himself as a Coloured man.

We cannot rule out the possibility that van den Berg was in possession of these statements and deliberately did not use them. However, it seems in the highest degree unlikely that his motive was to cover up such an unimportant issue as Tsafendas's reclassification. In building a case for Tsafendas's insanity, the information that would pose the greatest danger to such a line of argument was that concerning Tsafendas's political activities and beliefs. Therefore the likelier scenario is that the police withheld the Tsafendas and Daniels statements from van den Berg. If so, this would not be the first time the police sought to block important evidence regarding Tsafendas's background, character and motives.

That said, the Attorney-General's role in the case is quite strange, even suspicious, and will be examined in detail in the Summary Trial Chapter. It should be mentioned here though that as we saw in his memorandum, van den Berg mentioned that Tsafendas had told the police he was a former member of the South African Communist Party and that he had participated in distribution of Communist propaganda. None of this would become known during the summary trial and the word "Communist" would never even be heard in the court. However, on October 30, twenty-seven days after van den Berg wrote his memorandum, The Post revealed that Tsafendas was a former member of the South African Communist Party. Van den Berg was interviewed by the newspaper and when asked whether he knew about ³⁶⁶⁸ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 39. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

Tsafendas's membership, he lied, saying, "This is news to me – I certainly had no knowledge of it until this very moment when you brought it to my notice."³⁶⁶⁹ This was twenty-seven days after he had written about it in his memorandum.

STATEMENTS

MIKE JOSIAS GERMISHUYS³⁶⁷⁰

White male, 29 years old, sergeant in the South African Police, Mandini.

I was stationed at Nyoni from 02/05/1965 to 06/30/1966 when I took my dismissal. I remember there being received a call at Nyoni during 1965, about an assault at Mandini. As far as I can remember, Constable J. Fourie and I went to give the complaint attention. When I arrived at Mandini, I found that a certain Vergos and Tsafendas, two whites who were employed by Frazer and Charles, during duty, was involved in the case. Tsafendas was the plaintiff in the case. Tsafendas claimed that he was assaulted with a razor by Vergos. Tsafendas had lacerations on one of his arms. As far as I can remember, his shirt was also cut across the chest, but he had no cuts on his chest. Vergos was arrested and charged with assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. Vergos made no report to me that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. I also know Mr. J.J. Botha, a security officer at Sappi, Mandini, he also never reported to me that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. Vergos was under the influence of alcohol at the time of the arrest. I cannot furnish the dates, however if I were granted permission to view the registers, I will find it.

JOHANNES JACOBUS BOTHA³⁶⁷¹

White male, 51 years. Security officer at South African Pulp and Paper Industries, Mandeni.

Further to my statement I made on 15/09/1966, I wish to add, that Vergos told me that ³⁶⁶⁹ The Post, 30 October 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas: I was a communist.'

³⁶⁷⁰ Mike Josias Germishuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁷¹ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafandos is the biggest communist in the R.S.A. I think it was during May, 1965 when he said it to me. Vergos and Tsafandos were both still in the employ of Frazer and Chalmers at Mandeni. I can remember that I told a member of the South African Police, Nyoni, that I heard from Vergos that Tsafandos is the largest communist in South Africa. But I cannot remember who the member is to whom I said it.

Affidavit by J.J. Botha witnessed by ... (Indecipherable name) Nr. 19026 (V) S/SGT at 12.59 p.m.

JACOBUS CHRISTOFFEL SNYMAN³⁶⁷²

Nr. 25817 Sergeant in the South African Police, stationed at Nyoni.

Tsafendas, Vergos, M.J. Germishuys and J.J. Botha are known to me. During May 1965, I was stationed at Nyoni. During that time neither Vergos, M.J. Germishuys nor J.J. Botha gave me report that Tsafendas was a dangerous communist. Neither afterwards did any of the three of them report such things to me.

Affidavit by J.C. Snyman Nr. 25817 'V' Sgt at 5 p.m.

NEVILLE JUDSON³⁶⁷³

Salesman at Mike's outfitters. Woodstock.

During about July 1966 I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. I met him at the shop where he came to introduce himself. The proprietor (Mr. Mike) asked me to take Tsafendas to the boats as he said he could make business contacts there. I went there about 3 occasions and in fact got some customers, some of whom I brought by car to the shop. Some came in on ³⁶⁷² Jacobus Christoffel Snyman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁷³ Neville Judson statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

their own. We only went to one boat, the Greek ship Eleni. During my conversations with the accused I got to know from him about his travels abroad.

I never in no way got the impression that he could be mentally deranged. He appeared to be a normal man with normal reasoning powers. He appeared to be an unsuccessful kind of person. He mentioned being the black sheep in his family. He said nothing detrimental against this country or the people. On the other hand, he said this country was on the right track, especially when buying the new oil tankers. He seemed very impressed by this move.

Accused appeared to have a very friendly way of talking to the sailors at the Eleni. To me he also mentioned that he wanted to married, that is why he had applied for and obtained a job with the Government as an interpreter. He did not mention to me who that woman was he wanted to marry. He mentioned that he had been to the Eleni on his own, apart from our trip there. He mentioned having had lunch and supper on the boat.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

JAN JOHANNES ALBERTUS FOURIE³⁶⁷⁴

Sergeant of the South African Police, Newcastle, Natal. 2 p.m.

I remember during 1965, I cannot remember the date, Mr. Nick Vergos working at Congella Erection, c/o. South African Pulp and Paper Industries assaulted a certain person, Tsafendas who was working at Fraser and Chalmers, c/o. South African Pulp and Paper Industries.

The case, which was assault with intent to cause serious bodily harm was reported at the Nyoni police station by Tsafendas, I investigated the case. The accused Nick Vergos was later found innocent on the charge by the magistrate in Nyoni. I cannot remember exactly, but it must have been before the court case, Vergos one day told me that Tsafendas was a "Communist Bastard." I cannot remember whether anyone else was present. Vergos said nothing further about Tsafendas. I did not take notice of the comment because Tsafendas and Vergos were angry at each other. I did not ask Vergos why he made such an accusation. I did not report the accusation made by Vergos to my Station Commander. I do not know if Vergos has made any similar statements about any other person. Tsafendas who was the complainant at Nyoni in the assault case was the same person who murdered the late Honourable Dr. Verwoerd. I saw photos of Tsafendas in the newspapers after the murder of late Honourable Dr. Verwoerd.

³⁶⁷⁴ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Statement taken by Captain N.J. Rossouw.

WILHELMINA SOPHIA DE VOS³⁶⁷⁵

White female, manager of "American Maid," Woodstock Observatory.

On 04/06/1966 the Demitrio Tsafendas came to my house to rent a room I advertised. I gave him the room rental. He said he is from the "Marine Diamond Corp." in South West Africa and currently here for treatment in Groote Schuur Hospital to his nose. After a few days he said that he (as outpatient) was dismissed at Groote Schuur and he need not return. I asked if he was going back South West Africa, he said no. I asked whether he should go back, he then said the men there told him if he does not "fit" in with them, then they will throw him overboard. To this I said it does not exist and that I do not believe him, because there is tight security at such places. He gave me the impression that he is work-shy. I have in the meantime discovered that he was dirty and had bad habits and his house manners were poor.

He later sought work, which he told me about. He said he was looking for messenger or caretaker jobs or as messenger at a bank or something. I asked if he did not have a trade, on which he said he was a "fitter and turner." I told him to look for work in his trade, but he had all kinds of excuses. I told him directly that he was strong and healthy and he had to work. He also said that he applied for a welfare pension. Later he said that if he cannot find work, he will join the Navy which lies in Mozambique. He was talking about the British Navy who was doing the oil blockade. I said to him how can you go against your own people (the ³⁶⁷⁵ Wilhelmina Sophia de Vos statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Portuguese) with another superpower, then he is a traitor - he then kept quiet and walked away.

After three weeks (late June) I notified him to leave immediately, because I could not endure his messy ways any longer. He went off to Mrs. Theyser whom I saw was advertising a room. He was boastful, but I could see that he had an inferiority complex and his upbringing was not good. I considered him to be a completely normal person.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. 23505 D/Sergt.

FRED FEINAUER³⁶⁷⁶

I am a messenger in the Assembly and I am the senior messenger in the press gallery. I am aware that the press annually holds a function in the parliament house. Many dignitaries get invited to this annual event. The prime minister is usually invited to this annual event. As far as I know, Dr. Verwoerd was invited to the press function which was held on Friday, 02.09.1966. I was in charge of the messengers serving drinks at the press function. Altogether there were seven messengers that helped to serve drinks that evening. Tsafendas was one of the messengers who helped to serve drinks. Tsafendas was one of the messengers who worked under my supervision on the press gallery. I requested Tsafendas to help on 02/09/1966 at the press function. I asked him about two days prior to this function to serve at the function. He arrived that night and helped serve at the press function. Dr. Verwoerd did not attend the function on 02/09/1966.

Statement taken by Major D.J. Rossouw

³⁶⁷⁶ Fred Feinauer statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

CORNELIUS FRANCOIS FERREIRA³⁶⁷⁷

Sergeant in the South African Police, stationed at Nyoni Station as Commander.

On 07/05/1965 at 1.45 pm. Sergeant Germishuis and I were out on duty. We returned at 9.5 pm. the same day. At my return to the station, I saw that there was a complaint from Mandeni in the incident register, it was about an assault by a white on a white. Sergeant Germishuis was instructed to investigate the matter. He left at 9.20 pm the same day investigate the matter at Mandini. I have no further knowledge of what happened on 07/05/1965 in connection with this assault.

On Saturday, 08/05/1965 at 9.45 I resumed service. In the registers, I noticed that a white man, called Nicholas Vergos, was charged and detained. The white man was released on 08/05/1965 at 8.55 am on bail. I never saw said white man at any time, nor had any conversation with him. At the time of the trial I saw both Vergos and Stafendas, but I had no conversation with them. Raa 14/5/65 refers to the relevant case - Assault with intent to inflict serious injury. Mr. J.J. Botha, a security officer at Sappi, Mandini is known to me. At no time did he report anything to me regarding Stafendas. On 03/10/1966 I had access to the Raa register at Nyoni Police Station. Raa 14/5/66 refers to accused Bantu man Mbotenzi Ngwenya who was charged for failing to show pass book.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) 19026 S/Sergt at 3.45 p.m.

MICHAELIS AUGUSTIDES³⁶⁷⁸

White male, owner of Mike's Outfitters, Woodstock

I know the man Demitrio Tsafendas. He was having meals in Woodstock with a Mrs. Scott where some of my assistants also reside and have their meals. He came to the shop about July, 1966. He said he could make contacts with people at the ships in Cape Town docks and could bring some customers to my shop. I said O.K. if he brought any customers to ³⁶⁷⁷ Cornelius Francois Ferreira statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁶⁷⁸ Michaelis Augustides statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

my shop I would give him a commission. I know in fact that some customers were brought to my shop and that I have paid him about R10 commission. I never had other dealings with him. One of my salesmen accompanied him to the boats. I got to know he was Greek and heard that he has been abroad, but did not have personal conversations with him. He appeared to be an unsettled type. He mentioned to me finding a job at court as interpreter.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

BAREND BUYTENDAG³⁶⁷⁹

Lt. Col at the South African Police and Dr. Verwoerd's bodyguard.

Buytendag explained at length the measures taken to ensure the security of the prime minister, including the dispositions of his motorcades, the routes his car would use, arrival arrangements at Parliament and searches in contiguous areas. Buytendag stated that Dr. Verwoerd's appointments were made available to him and if there were doubts about any planned visitors, the local security police would be contacted. The PM's office was constantly searched for hidden microphones and his telephones were checked for espionage efforts. Dr. Verwoerd never handled post or packages. A special police guard unit was formed consisting of 82 officers and men. Nothing in Col. Buytendag's statement was directly relevant to Tsafendas.

SYBIE BARENDILLA³⁶⁸⁰

Coloured female, 28 years, Shop Assistant at Astoria Stores, Woodstock.

I belong to the Christian fellowship of which Demitrio Tsafendas was a member. During November, 1965, I attended a meeting (church) at Abrahams, 112 Kipling Street, ³⁶⁷⁹ Barend Buytendag statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklarings van Lt. Kol. B. Buytendag. NASA.

³⁶⁸⁰ Sybie Barendilla statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

near my house. After I have been in the house, Tsafendas arrived. He was also attending our meeting and had a bible with him. After the service he introduced himself to me.

During about May, 1966 I again met him on a bus when I was returning to work after lunch. He remembered me, spoke to me and said he was on his way to Town to buy a pair of shoes. He enquired how my uncle was in America. I do not know how he came to know that I had an uncle in America and I did not ask him. The next day after this incident he walked past the shop where I was employed. He paused in the door, waved to me and walked on. The following day he came into the shop and bought a chocolate. I got the impression that he wanted to talk to me, but I cut him short and carried on with my work.

On a public holiday, I think the 11th of July, 1966, he came to my house and enquired for me. My sister opened the door and spoke to him. He was insistent to see me, but my sister put him off. I heard the conversation and told my sister that I did not want to see him. That was the last time I have any knowledge of him. After that I saw his picture in the local papers in connection with the assassination of Hr. Dr. Verwoerd.

JACOBUS JOHANNES BORNMAN³⁶⁸¹

White male, 22 years old, Traffic officer at Tramway Company, Cape Town.

I lived at 57 Milton Road, Observatory during May to July 1966. Living with me in the same room was Demitrio Tsafendas. When I started living together with him, I found him to be a friendly and plausible person. He left the impression that he really liked me. On one occasion I had no money and then Tsafendas gave me five cents. I later wanted to return the money to him, but he would not take it.

Tsafendas read his bible late into the night and I got the impression that he was a great Christian. He also told me that he was a Christian. He went to church four or five times. It was usually during the night. I do not know what denomination he belonged to, but I believed him to belong to the Catholic Church. This, however, was of little importance to me. On one occasion he told me that he met a woman who attended the same church as he did. As far as I know, Tsafendas loves women, he talked a lot about women and I believed that he attended church services so often to make contact with the woman he met there.

³⁶⁸¹ Jacobus Johannes Bornman statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

There was also a person, a German, whose name I do not remember, sharing the room with us. I remember that one day Tsafendas told us that if he should marry one day and have children, those children would be either genius or mad because of all the feelings in him over the years and what he has experienced over the years. I want to mention the following incident, which I found odd, to be put on recorded. On Tsafendas's wardrobe were paper bags and on top of the paper bags were three of his hats. I reached up to a paper bag to put in certain items of clothing. When I reached for the paper bag on top of his closet, he leaped swiftly from where he lay on his bed reading. When I saw, Tsafendas stood beside me. It surprised me to see how quickly he can move since he had a big and clumsy posture and I believed that he was a lazy person. I asked him why he so quickly jumped up and he said he was afraid I would knock his hats from the closet. I have often noticed that Tsafendas removed his wallet and personal belongings at night from his pockets and place it under his pillow instead. I often saw that he placed his wallet under his pillow. Maj. Rossouw today showed me a wallet which I know belongs to Tsafendas.

As I said, Tsafendas read Bible late into the night. We had an argument because he left the light burning while I wanted to sleep. After that, he did not talk to me much, but he talked a lot with the German. Tsafendas's conversations were always about women and politics. He never talked about anything else. Tsafendas was dissatisfied with conditions in R.S.A and he has often criticized the government, his exact words I don't remember, but it seemed to me that he had a grudge against Dr. Verwoerd. He stood up a lot for the Coloureds. On a day a Bantu woman brought food for Tsafendas while he was in bed from his illness with his nose operation. He said he would like to have intercourse with her. This he said after she left the room. I rebuked him by saying that it is not allowed in the R.S.A. He said it did not bother him.

During the time I lived with Tsafendas, his behaviour was normal. He did not drink or smoke. I regarded him as a normal and very intelligent person. He told me that he was a sickly person and therefore cannot do very hard work. He told me that he was an interpreter by profession. According to my observation, Tsafendas was a gentle person. He was neat on his person, but his eating habits were not up to scratch. He was messy.

Tsafendas said he was born in Lourenço Marques, he went to school in Middelburg and that he visited many foreign countries. I know that he could speak several languages. Of Germany he talked a lot and he also spoke of the Russians, but not that he had ever visited Russia. He and the German spoke German. What was remarkable was that Tsafendas always told everyone that he is a Christian. As far as I know he just read his Bible in his room. Tsafendas never received any visitors, but he walked around a lot. I got the impression that Tsafendas was very secretive in his actions.

Statement taken by Major D.J. Rossouw and Troost

PIETER BENJAMIN GELDENHUYS³⁶⁸²

White male, employment officer at the Department of Labour, Cape Town.

On 05/25/1966 I was working at the department as employment officer when a white man, Demitrio Tsafendas came to seek assistance for work. At that time he was unemployed and wanted to register for work. Because he was on sickness benefits and staying in a nursing home "The Milton Convalescent Home", I insisted on a medical certificate which states that he is suitable for work. On 06/06/1966, he again came to the office, but was not in possession of the required medical certificate. On this day he was very talkative and blamed everyone except himself for the fact that he was unemployed. Because he could not produce the necessary medical certificate, I did not refer him to any work.

I got the impression that this man was eager to find work and according to his physical appearance, he appeared to be a person who is able to do work. He was neatly dressed. Because he did not have the necessary certificate, I did not take note at that time of what kind of work he can do. He did report to me that he could speak several languages and stated that he would like to be an interpreter.

³⁶⁸² Pieter Benjamin Geldenhuys statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, Sub File: 1/1, Department of Labour. NASA.

I spoke with this man twice and I never got the impression that there was mentally anything wrong with him or that he acted abnormally. The first time I spoke with him, I completed the record report cards with the necessary information.”

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

ROSENBERGH³⁶⁸³

Demitrio Tsafendas (he has a brother and sister in Pretoria who are classified as whites) has applied to the Dept. of the Interior to be classified as Coloured because his intention was to marry a Coloured woman. Information given by Mr Rosenbergh to Coetzee in the Detective Dept.

WILLIAM MARE VOLBRECHT³⁶⁸⁴

I am an adult white male, vice principal and chief psychologist associated to Porters Reform School, Tokai. I am also known as Billy.

I was born in Middelburg, Transvaal, where I began my schooling at the “English Medium Primary School”. I was a pupil from 1929 and stayed there until St. VI, that is to say more or less until 1935. The principal at that time was Mr. J. C. Cox.

I can remember that while I was a student, there were a group of Greek and Portuguese students who studied there mainly with the aim to improve their English. When they studied there, they were sent to a lower standard to learn the basics first. These students usually created the impression that they were at a higher level in certain subjects and we regarded them as very intelligent.

³⁶⁸³ Rosenbergh statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150. Vol. 4, Sub file: 1/7, Subject: Department van Immigrasie. NASA; Rosenbergh’s first name is not given in the statement.

³⁶⁸⁴ William Mare Volbrecht statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Verklaring deur Majdor Venter. NASA.

As I can remember very well, Demitrio Tsafendas was during that time, one of the group of Portuguese and Greek students.

This school was well known for its healthy atmosphere where personal interests in the children are given which is most important for a child in his forming years. This also applies to the residence - Nelson House - where they were living.

At that stage Tsafendas was seen as white and there was never anything that pointed to someone regarding or treating him as a non-white or to him being discriminated against. He participated in the school activities and sports, for example, without excelling.

I cannot remember any case where he was ever guilty of misconduct. He was as far as I can remember, never a loner and freely mingled with us. There were no noticeable deviations. If there are cases of which I am unaware, it is possible that it may be recorded in the punishment book.

It was clear to us during those years that this group of Portuguese and Greeks who were a bit older than us and more often mixed with each other, made a habit of sodomy.

From the time I was in Standard III, I never saw him again.

According to my knowledge Mrs. Looock was the standard II teacher who, if she is still alive, will have a very thorough knowledge of him. A certain Miss. Peters, later Mrs. Verryn and later Mrs. Piking, now residing in Middelburg, was the Grades-teacher and she should remember him very well. The housemaster at Nelson House and later a principal of a school in Potchefstroom, Mr. J. Martindale, is another person who will know him very well.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/Sgt.

TUESDAY, 4 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

MELDON TILLEK³⁶⁸⁵

Coloured man, Reiger Park, Boksburg.

I was born on 17/4/1941 in Benoni. I am married and live with my parents.

Approximately in 1963, on a Sunday morning, I answered the telephone in my parents' home at 100 Montague Street, ACTONVILLE, BENONI. The person on the phone said he was at Benoni station and that he desired to attend the morning church service in our home and that he needed me to give him directions to find the house. A few minutes after the phone call that person arrived alone at our house and introduced himself as DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS and said that he was a member of our Church, which is called "The Way." Our Church is also known as "Two by Two" and "True Saints of Christ." I was also a member of this Church at that time. My Father, Harry Tillek, is an Elder in this Church and he conducts a service in our home every Sunday.

Tsafendas attended the service which my father conducted that morning. We talked together after the service. Tsafendas told me that he worked at ISCOR in Pretoria. He never gave me his home address. He said that he had travelled in many different countries in the world. However, he said that he had experienced many difficulties in the Republic of South Africa because of the strict Apartheid Policies because he had a dark complexion and was regarded as a Coloured person. He added that he had applied to be registered as a Coloured, but that he had been classified as a white person instead. He said that the white people always looked down on him and that consequently he felt more at home amongst Coloured people. He attended the morning service, had lunch with us and also attended the afternoon service. He departed from Benoni Station late that afternoon.

About a month after his visit at my parents' home, Tsafendas again pitched up on a Sunday for a service which was led by my father. He left directly after the service and I do not know what happened to him after that. We did not converse on that occasion. Tsafendas never mentioned the name of Dr. Verwoerd in my presence and he never made any other comments about politics. His behaviour and conversations with me were normal and I never noticed anything unusual about him. I do remember that on the occasion of his first visit to my parental home, that one of the fellow residents suggested to him that as there were many Coloureds in our Church in Cape Town, he would probably find it easier to mix with the people there. I know a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels who is from Cape Town. I met her when she attended Church Conferences in Benoni and she often stayed at my parental home on those occasions. I cannot recall that any of our residents ever mentioned her name to Tsafendas.

³⁶⁸⁵ Meldon Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Although Tsafendas never made any comments other than those previously mentioned, he gave the strong impression that he was very unhappy here as a result of the Government policies regarding separate development. I have read that a person named Demetrio Tsafendas has been detained in connection with murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd. I should definitely be able to identify the Tsafendas who visited my parents' house. I am prepared to testify about the facts contained in this declaration in any Court.

The declaration was taken by me in Benoni on 4/10/1966 at 10.15a.m.

Signed by Captain Pretorius.

Witnessed by Sergeant van der Merwe.

WALTER HARRY TILLEK³⁶⁸⁶

Coloured man, Reigers Park, Boksburg.

I was born on 29/12/1908 in Johannesburg. I am married and live with my family at the above address. I am a member and Elder of the "TRUE CHURCH OF CHRIST." I have been living at the above address for approximately the last 18 months. Previously I lived for 38 years at 100 Montague Street, ACTONVILLE BENONI. While I live in Actonville, Benoni, ³⁶⁸⁶ Walton Henry Tillek statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

we held communal Church Services at my home every Sunday. We did not have a Minister and I conducted the services as an Elder.

In about 1963, one Sunday morning, before the Church Service, a person who appeared to be a white person, arrived alone at my home, which was situated in a Coloured area. He introduced himself as Demetrio Tsafendas. He said that he had come to attend the morning Church Service in my home. He said that he was from Pretoria. He did not give me his address or any other personal details. He said that he simply was very interested in the church and that he wanted to attend the service. He never discussed either any church or government policies. I did not notice any abnormal behaviour by him and he behaved in a normal way. I led the service.

As far as I can remember Tsafendas was the only white person present at the service. The rest of the congregation were Coloureds, Bantu, and Indians. After the service which lasted about an hour, all the congregation left, including Tsafendas. About a month after the first service, Demetrio Tsafendas again arrived alone for a service. On that occasion we again did not discuss anything and he left after the service conducted by me. On both occasions Tsafendas stated that he had travelled per train from Pretoria. Tsafendas said that he had been given my address by one of our church's preachers. I know a Coloured woman named Helen Daniels and all I know about her is that she lives in Cape Town. I do not know her areas. I met her in Putfontein, Benoni, about ten years ago, at the time of a conference of our Church.

After that, I saw often saw her at Church Conferences. We never corresponded and I do not know her address. She is unmarried and a preacher in our Church. I am sure that I never gave the name or address of Helen Daniels to Demetrio Tsafendas, or discussed her with him. My church only spreads the good news of the Bible. I have been a member of this church since 1936. This church does not possess any buildings. I have no idea for how long Tsafendas has been a member of this church and do not have any knowledge of his personal details. After the death of the late Dr. Verwoerd I read that Tsafendas was being detained in this connection.

Declaration taken by me at Benoni on 4/10/66.

Signed: Captain Pretorius

Witness: Sergeant van der Merwe, 30849.

KEITH TERRENCE BERTRAM MARTINCICH³⁶⁸⁷

E/M/A. Lansdowne.

I am employed with Marine Diamond Corporation on the Colpontoon. When I signed on, on the 8th February, 1966, I found Tsafendas employed there as a pump operator. We were on the same shift, in adjoining cabins, and enjoying the same facilities on the boat. He spoke to me every day and I got the impression that he was sociable type. He mentioned to me that he has been to various countries. He did not have much clothing with him, and I got the impression that he was a poor man. I stood him a few drinks. When we were off and to Cape Town I stood him a meal at Cape Town station. After that we had some drinks at the buffet. He could not drink much and usually talked nonsense when he had been drinking.

On quite a few occasions he had discussed politics with me. He said he did not like the Government and that he was given a hard time in South Africa. He said the Government won't reign very long. He always referred to we don't like the Government. I asked him who was 'we'. He said "silence is Golden" and dropped the subject, and walked away. On various occasions he had said that he was staying with a coloured or Malay family in Lansdowne. He also said the coloureds were better than the Europeans. He said they were more friendly, and had more sense than the Europeans, and showed more understanding. When I said he was talking nonsense, he got cross and lifted himself as though he wanted to tackle me. I lifted myself as if I was going to defend myself, in doing so pointed my fingers pressed stiff together towards him. He immediately asked me if I was going to use Karate on him. I said yea, he was a bigger man than myself. He then sat down and asked me pardon.

I noticed that he was very familiar with the coloured crew on the boat, about which I reprimanded him. He mentioned to me about belonging to a gang or crowd of coloured people who were enjoying themselves in Cape Town. He never mentioned the church or that he was a Christian or a religious person. Mentioning the gang, I got the impression he meant a number of people. When off duty on shore leave I saw him travel the train to Lansdowne. He got off towards the coloured area. When I have been with him about 2 or 3 trips he said I must not say anything, as he was not coming back. He said he was expecting a large amount of money and is a big business man and that he was wasting his time with the firm on the boat.

³⁶⁸⁷ Keith Terrence Bertram Martincich statement to the police, 4 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

He appeared fit, and I never got the impression that he was sick. He never complained that he was sick. I often watched him at his work. He appeared to be one of the laziest persons that I have ever seen. The only complaint he ever had, was about climbing the stairs and the rooking of the boat, and I used to see him walk in the passages as if he had all the time in the world. He was definitely lazy. The dredge pumps sucked up crawfish quite often. He was more interested to catch the crawfish than in his work. I chased him on a few occasions away from the gravel screen on account that diamonds came up there, though it would be very difficult to get to the gravel. The crawfish come on top, and can be caught by hand. He was often saying he wished he found himself a girlfriend for the night.

He said he was against the colour bar in the country. He spoke against the Government, but never against any individual. In many ways he had very childish manners. His table manners were very bad. He had a good appetite at all meals and enjoyed his meals in a messy way. I have watched him at times from behind, and noticed he was mumbling to himself. I overheard him mentioning that he had dived-from our boat to save people, like a hero in a dreamworld. He even clapped hands by himself, and jumped up and down like a child. I found this very amusing, thinking that there was something mentally wrong with him. When he noticed me, he carried on with his work. Once he said he would not mind getting a couple of diamonds. I told him he could try if he wanted to land in gaol.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

WEDNESDAY, 5 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

CAREL SEBASTIAAN VAN HEERDEN³⁶⁸⁸

Senior security officer of the Colpontoon, diamond boat of Marine Diamond Corporation, Wynberg.

Around January or February 1966, Demitrio Tsafendas made his first appearance on the same shift as I on the Colpontoon. We were transferred from the Marina with a small outboard boat to the Colpontoon. It was terrible rough seas, so much so that almost all of us old hands got seasick. It struck me that Tsafendas adapted well. He was one of the few who were not sick. With landing he filled the mess-basin on the lower deck with water and started shaving. His calm way struck me that he must know the sea.

Tsafendas was employed as a pump-or engineer operator and did not work under my direct supervision. I introduced myself to him and talked to him. He was friendly, outgoing, and was not aloof.

I noticed that his eating was messy. Otherwise he was completely normal. It was notable that he never slept as long as the others slept after his shift on duty. The shifts are 12 hours on and 12 hours off. Usually the night shift sleeps until about 6 pm. Tsafendas was very often already awake by 3 or 4 pm. He then came across as fit and rested. He never complained to me that the work bored him or made him weary. I have never conducted personal conversations with him with regards to his origin or background.

My shift was 10 days on and 10 days off. He had 20 days on and 10 off with the result that afterwards we were not often together on duty. I was later transferred to another boat and lost contact with him, with the result that I do not know what has become of him. As far as I know he did not drink.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

³⁶⁸⁸ Carel Sebastiaan van Heerden statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

HENDRIK JOHANNES MULDER³⁶⁸⁹

White male, accountant at Tecosa Knitting Mills, Claremont.

I am an expert in the field “Kung Fu” or better known as Chinese karate. I’m also an expert in the field of firearms, explosives and manufacturing of bombs. From 1944-1950 I was a professional deep sea diver in South America. I learned karate here. During this period I visited Argentina with friends and was arrested and detained, because it was alleged that I and others tried to kill Juan Peron, then the president of Argentina. We escaped and returned via a torpedo boat to Venezuela where I worked. January 1951 I returned to South Africa. I worked in Port Elizabeth for six years and then moved to Cape Town.

During 1960 or 1961, an article in the supplement to “Die Burger” appeared which discussed my skill with firearms, etc. There were also pictures of me with the article. Shortly after the article appeared, three men came to my house one night. All three were white. They did not introduce themselves to me. One person asked me: “do you like money,” I replied, “of course, who does not?” He then said that they wanted me to perform an assignment of theirs. It is dangerous yet easy. I wanted to know what they want me to do. They then told me that I had to shoot Dr. Verwoerd and I will receive £20,000 in compensation. I would receive £10,000 as soon as I sign a document stating that I will do the shooting and £10,000 to me or my wife as soon as the job is done. The people spoke English and seemed to be Jews. I made them understand that I was not interested in such a thing at all. The next day I called the Security Police. The same day, two members of the Security police came to see me and took the statement. The one was Erasmus (I’m not sure, but I know he is now in diamond research), the other one was van Wyk. I gave all details and the description of the three persons.

During April the following year, Dr. Verwoerd was shot by Pratt. Before this incident, the people called me several times and asked if I would not accept their offer. I cannot remember well, but I doubt that the Security Police came to see me after the shooting. I also gave the Security Police information about the South African Freedom Movement. About a year ago, a person called me one night. I do not have a phone in my house, but my neighbours Mrs. Christian, receives phone calls for me and called me to the phone. It happens often so she will not be aware of this particular case. A male person referred to the earlier offer made to me and then said that it could be arranged that I get a job in the Parliamentary house and then I will be near Dr. Verwoerd and can "reach him easier." I once again said that I was not interested in it. I phoned the Security Police the next day and reported the incident. I think I spoke with Captain. Rossouw. It was by telephone. He thanked me and said everything is being done to protect our Prime Minister and I don't have to worry at all. This conversation was a roughly a year before the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd occurred.

³⁶⁸⁹ Hendrik Johannes Mulder statement to the police, 5 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

About 14 days ago, someone called me at work and told me that they have someone in the Parliamentary House for their work and that Advocate Vorster will be First minister for exactly six months before he will be killed. After a notice appeared in the press that an investigation will occur and where people were invited to provide information I telephoned and stated my willingness to give a statement. I gained my knowledge about explosives and time bombs in my course as deep-sea diver. The incident about Advocate Vorster I did not report to the Security Police, because I felt that I was making a fool of myself.

COMMENTS ON MULDER'S STATEMENT

On October 6, the police interviewed Petrus Gerhardus Loubser,³⁶⁹⁰ a former Security Police officer, in connection with Mulder's statement (his statement made on the day in question is included later in this chapter). Subsequently, on October 14 the Commission of Enquiry interviewed Mulder and Loubser again, along with Det. Sgt. Johannes Petrus Francois van Wyk, who was also involved in the case. Mulder's testimony to the Commission is similar to his statement here and is given in the following chapter, in the section titled "The Mulder Case."³⁶⁹¹

Loubser testified to the Commission (his testimony is given in the following chapter, see "The Mulder Case") and to the police that he interviewed Hendrik Mulder after he told police he had been offered a large sum of money to blow up the Die Burger newspaper by ³⁶⁹⁰ The surname in his statement to the police is given as Loubser, while in his testimony to the COE it is given as Laubser.

³⁶⁹¹ Hendrik Johannes Mulder testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

planting a time bomb, but he could not describe the men who made the offer. On another occasion, he said he was working as a mechanic at a garage when a customer tried to persuade him to shoot Verwoerd. He said he could not describe the customer and the garage itself was by now closed. Laubser said, “My opinion is he has a fantastic imagination.”³⁶⁹²

Detective van Wyk testified to the Commission (his testimony is available in the following chapter, see “The Mulder Case”) that after Mulder reported the alleged offer to blow up the Die Burger newspaper building, the police secretly observed his house. Mulder later told him the two men had returned during this period, but the police watchers said no-one visited. The detective said Mulder claimed a man at his workplace held Communist meetings, an allegation police found to be false. As for the blindfolded visit to a block of flats, van Wyk said the police considered it “altogether too fantastic and entirely implausible.”³⁶⁹³

By reading the two policemen’s testimonies about Mulder, we may note the inconsistencies in his far-fetched story (for example he was asked to kill Dr Verwoerd in 1959, but he reported it to the police only in 1962); his inability to describe any of these contacts with precision; and his two clear lies (the alleged Communist meetings and his claim that someone visited him while the police secretly had his house under observation). This strongly suggests that both men had every right to think that Mulder was lying. As to his connection with Tsafendas, the only remote connection was when Mulder claimed his contacts told him they could arrange access to Dr Verwoerd by securing a position in Parliament.

That Tsafendas had reached Dr. Verwoerd by just such a method, as a Parliamentary messenger, had been all over the newspapers for more than a month. It is well within the bounds of possibility that an evident fantasist such as Mulder could have made up such a claim retrospectively to strengthen his story.

³⁶⁹² Petrus Gerhardus Laubser testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁶⁹³ Johannes Petrus Francois van Wyk testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

THURSDAY, 6 OCTOBER 1966

TSAFENDAS'S HEARING

As instructed by the September 8, 1966 remand order of Chief Magistrate C. Willman, Tsafendas appeared on Thursday, October 6, 1966 before a specially constituted court in Caledon Square police station. The hearing lasted for four minutes and fifty seconds and Tsafendas was remanded for summary trial on October 17 at the Criminal Sessions, Cape Town, on an allegation of murder.³⁶⁹⁴ The proceedings took place before Mr. Willman in a room measuring some fifteen feet by fifteen feet and containing seven policemen and four reporters, as well as court officers. Willman presided, Bloomberg appeared on behalf of Tsafendas, (though Wilfrid Cooper was named as defence counsel), and Mr. H. Jacobs appeared as senior prosecutor. Tsafendas wore a crumpled brown suit and white shirt without a tie; he was not handcuffed and stood with his hands clasped behind his back; he had no waist belt and hitched up his trousers from time to time.

At 10.30 am, Willman was ushered into the room and Jacobs asked that the preparatory examination opened on September 9, 1966 against Tsafendas be remitted for trial. He said the indictment had been served on Tsafendas and advocate Cooper had been informed of today's proceedings.³⁶⁹⁵ The indictment read: *That DEMITRIO TSAFENDAS is guilty of the crime of MURDER IN THAT upon the 6th September, 1966, and at Cape Town, in the District of the CAPE, he did wrongfully, unlawfully and maliciously Kill and murder DR. THE HONOURABLE HENDRIK FRENSCH VERWOERD, Prime Minister of the Republic of South Africa.*³⁶⁹⁶

Willman told Tsafendas he was being committed for summary trial and meanwhile would be detained in the cells at the police station. Tsafendas spoke for the first and only time. According to the South African Press of the time, Tsafendas, leaning forward slightly, said, "My lord, I do not understand the word summary." Willman replied, "It means that you will be tried without preparatory examination." Tsafendas responded, "Yes, my lord," and the court adjourned.³⁶⁹⁷ According to Bloomberg, Tsafendas asked him and not the magistrate

³⁶⁹⁴ The Cape Argus, 6 October 1966:1, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court.'

³⁶⁹⁵ The Cape Argus, 6 October 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court.'

³⁶⁹⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 80-81.

³⁶⁹⁷ The Cape Argus, 6 October 1966: 1, 'Tsafendas: Question to Court.'

what “summary trial” meant.³⁶⁹⁸ With policemen holding onto his jacket sleeves, Tsafendas was escorted across a narrow passage to a lift giving access to the cells.³⁶⁹⁹

STATEMENTS

PETRUS GERHARDUS LOUBSER³⁷⁰⁰

White male, former Security Police officer, Bellville.

From September 1961 to 1963 I was involved in the security section of the SA Police in Cape Town. Then I left the police. A white man, Mr. Hendrik Mulder, is known to me. I met him in connection with work that I had done for the security police while I was still in the service. I cannot remember exactly, but it was during 1962 when Mulder telephoned the Head of Safety of that time, Colonel Van der Westhuizen. I was then instructed to meet with him. That same evening I went to see him. He then said to me said that three unknown persons paid him a visit. They told him they had seen a report in a supplication of “Die Burger” reporting his skill with firearms. They would say to him that they could use him. He would have asked them what they wanted to use him for and they would say that they want him to bomb the offices of “Die Burger.” They proposed to him that he return to the offices of “Die Burger” and give a further story about his skill with firearms. He had to take a package with him that contained a time bomb. He had to leave the package somewhere in an office.

Mr. Mulder said he wanted the people to return, therefore he had told them that he would reflect on the matter and that they can come and see him again. He wanted to, in fact, use the time to inform the police, which he did afterwards. Arrangements were made with Mr. Mulder to inform the Security Police when the men arrived again, but he never did that. I was scouting for a long period, but no one was ever noticed at his home. On a second occasion, a few days later, I spoke to Mulder again and he said that when the three persons came to see him, they also told him that they wanted to establish a “Task Force”, that they already have 20,000 members and that they wanted to use to him as an instructor. I found it strange that he didn’t give such an important report to me before. A time later I saw Mr. Mulder again at ³⁶⁹⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 81.

³⁶⁹⁹ The Cape Argus, 6 October 1966: 1, ‘Tsafendas: Question to Court.’

³⁷⁰⁰ Petrus Gerhardus Loubser statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 1, File: VDSO 17/64, NASA.

a shop in Woodstock. He told me that he took his car to a garage in District Six for repairs and that the owner, a Jew, had requested an absurd amount for the repairs, he could not pay the amount. The Jew then offered him an absurd amount of money if he would kill Dr. Verwoerd. Mulder said that the incident happened a few years ago, just after Dr. Verwoerd became prime minister. He could not give the Jew's name and could not give the address where the garage was. He said the garage no longer exists. Mr. Mulder was usually very vague and could give no direct information that could be followed up. I deny that Mulder ever reported to me that three Jews approached him to shoot Dr. Verwoerd. I never took a statement from him.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

REDVERS QUINTIN WAKFER³⁷⁰¹

I am an adult white male employed by the Cape Town City Council at the Power Station, Dock Rd., Cape Town and reside at 25 Forth Ave., Fish Hoek. On 10/09/65, Mr. D. Tsafendas applied for a job as a fitter at the Power Station. I interviewed him and subsequently he was taken on as a fitter in the ash plant. This was on the 13th of September, 1965. He appeared to be quite normal and was neatly dressed. I never worked with him but received a report that he was not a good worker and I have instructions that he should be dismissed. He was then dismissed on 25/10/65. To avoid dismissal he resigned.

(SGD.) R.Q. Wakfer

Statement taken by me – (SGD.) J.P.F. van Wyk D/Sgt.

Cape Town 6/10/66.

³⁷⁰¹ Redvers Quintin Wakfer statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, Sub File: 1/5, Subject Suid Afrikaanse Polisie. NASA.

OWEN SMORENBURG³⁷⁰²

White male, employed at the Power Station, Dock Hd., Cape Town.

The person Tsafendas is known to me. He worked with me during September/October, 1965. He worked with me for about five weeks. At that time I was doing work in the Cape Town docks. Mr. Tsafendas was assisting me with rough engineering fitting. During that time I got the idea that he was very headstrong. He did not want to work according to instructions but wanted to do things his way.

Mr. Tsafendas was very talkative and gave the impression that he was very friendly. He wanted to talk to everybody and it became known to me that he was able to speak different languages. While working there one day he spoke to people on a boat but he was speaking in a strange language and I could not understand him. The job we did in the docks was about 40 ft. underneath the ground and he was obviously scared of working there because it was too dangerous he said. Sometimes Mr. Tsafendas acted childish and did things which you wouldn't expect from a man of his age. One day for instance he loosen a bolt which was rusted. He asked whether he should put on a new one and when told to do so, he went along and put the rusted one back again.

He never discussed politics with me, but one day I told him laughingly that the place where we work was an ideal place for Min. Vorster to put his political prisoners. In a short discussion that followed he mentioned that Min. Vorster was the right man in that job and also said something to the effect that the then Prime Minister, Dr. Verwoerd, was the right man to be in that position. Mr. Tsafendas was never satisfied with his salary. He always complained that it was not enough. He was no good as a fitter and was dismissed for that reason, but instead of dismissing him, he was given the opportunity to resign. On the day when he was dismissed he said that he worked all over the world but now that he was working for a stupid place like the Cape Town City Council, he was told that he was not good enough.

Statement taken by J.P.F. van Wyk S/SGT.

³⁷⁰² Owen Smorenburg statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

HARRY HALL³⁷⁰³

European male, lift technician at the Cape Town Medical School.

About during March, 1966 I first met Demitrio (now known as Tsafendas). I am a member of the Christian Church and as such meetings are held at my house for members of the faith. We have evening meetings on Wednesdays and Sundays as well as a morning meeting on Sundays. Demitrio came to my house on advice from one of the elder preachers - Mr. Johnson - who had directed him to my house. I accepted him as such. He did not attend regularly, but about 2/3s of the meetings. He participated at times in our Bible readings and discussions. I got the definite impression that he had no proper understanding at the meaning of the Bible. We could not look upon his as an enlightened person as far as the teaching of the Bible was concerned.

After meetings people never stay socially, so I had very few discussions with him. He told me he had been in the American Merchant Marine during the last war, also that he had been to many places. He never discussed anything political, I did not even know where he worked. He said he was living in Observatory, and after been missing for some time, he said he had moved to Woodstock and that it was out of the way. I regarded him as a sub-standard intellect but otherwise found him to be reasonably normal.

On Sunday 3/9/66 he attended both services at my house. I have on occasions noticed that when he sat with his hands on his knees, his legs would tremble quite violently. I cannot remember if I had noticed anything peculiar about him the very last Sunday. During the following week I learnt through the newspapers that he had been detained in connection with the assassination of the Prime Minister (Dr. Verwoerd).

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost D/Sergt. 23505

³⁷⁰³ Harry Hall statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

VICTOR RIBTON³⁷⁰⁴

White male, proprietor of Victor Ribton Agencies Camps Bay.

On the morning of the 6th September, 1966 I was on my way to George. I stopped at the General Post Office Cape Town opposite the Darling Street entrance to post letters and to clear my post box, the time being approximately 9.15 a.m. On passing the telephone booths on the right hand side I noticed a white men whom I immediately recognised as one Carrol who served with me in the South African Naval Forces during World War 2. I did not get a full view of his face but, although I only saw him side faced I am 90% certain that it was Carrol. He did not see or recognise me.

I then noticed that he was waiting outside the centre booth, all the booths being occupied at the time. He appeared restless and agitated which I thought at the time was due to the fact that the booths were all occupied. Later on in the day, on the National Road just past Riversdale when I heard the news of the Prime Minister's death on the car radio, I had given Carrol's presence at the Post Office some thought but had not been suspicious until the following day when the newspapers reported that the assassin had left the Houses of Parliament earlier that morning to go to town and I knew that Carrol was employed at the Parliament. When I later read that all information, however trivial, should be reported, I decided to report this incident.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable name) D/W/Officer, S.A. Police. Commissioner of oaths.

GILLIAN CLAIRE LIEBERMAN³⁷⁰⁵

White female, personnel secretary at Marine Diamond Corporation. Cape Town.

About during March 1966 I got to know Demitrio Tsafendas. He came into my office at M.D.C. as an employee with a query. He said that he had some trouble with his ears and ³⁷⁰⁴ Victor Ribton statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: 3, Sub File: 1/5. NASA.

³⁷⁰⁵ Gillian Claire Lieberman statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

nose and wished to see a doctor. I questioned him to ascertain whether his complaint was private or due to an injury on duty. He mentioned that the vibration and noise in the pump room (on the Colpontoon) were effecting his ears. I made an appointment with the Co. Doctor (Dr. Lazzard. It later came to my notice that he had been referred to Mr. Breme Goldman (ear and nose specialist) in Medical Centre, CT. After this, he came into my office on more than one occasion. I had various discussions with him. I got quite interested in him as an individual. He mentioned that he was well-travelled; he mentioned having been to Portugal, England and the Continent. I think he also mentioned the East. He said he could speak the language of the countries he had been to. He mentioned Portuguese, and I think German. He spoke to me quite good English but with an accent.

He complained about the type of man we had employed — meaning the people who worked with him. He mentioned particularly the Afrikaans co-workers as being intolerant of the white South African people. I asked him how can he generalize, as no person is the same. He inferred that he was a lone person and with no ties or family or friends. He also mentioned that he would like to have his meals alone on the boat. He complained about the stops and ladders which he had to climb as also again about the noise of the pumps. He was a very dissatisfied person. I told him we could not arrange separate facilities for him, and inferred that as he is so very dissatisfied, it would be better for him to resign. He said that would be the best.

About his intolerance of the South African white people, he probed me for my political opinion. By his talks he gave me the impression that he does not agree with authority (Governmental or other). I cut him short, saying that in my capacity of my work I do not discuss politics. I found him intelligent, someone apparently able to reason in conversation, but a strange type of person, a unique character. Apart from him being well travelled etc. I got the impression that he was physically different in dress and appearance. He was a big man, with a particularly striking big hat, stainless steel teeth, sloppy dirty clothing.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of oaths.

JAMES JOHNSTON³⁷⁰⁶

Coloured male. Minister of the Christian Church. Plumstead.

We have no church building but we gather together for worship in the homes of members of our denomination. The Christian Church caters for both European and non-European races. We are not multi-racial but we do gather with coloured members of the church during our annual Christian Church conference. We, however, obey the apartheid laws. By this I mean that members of different races eat and sleep separately. We go out in two's and we receive no salary whatever. Our needs are met by voluntary contributions from the members of our church. The Christian Church organisation is worldwide. I am not sure of the membership for the whole of the Republic but membership for the Western Province is in the vicinity of 800. Our church does mission work. The function of the organisation consists of missionary work and evangelistic meetings. We adhere strictly to the teaching and example of Christ. We spread no literature of any kind and members are encouraged to abide strictly by the scriptures. Our members of the church gather together in their respective organs every Sunday morning and evening and Wednesday evening for the study of the scriptures. Members residing in the various suburbs gather together in an appointed home in the. Suburb. We have no collections. Mr. H. Hall residing at 3 Glenroy, Pinelands, is one of the members in whose home church gatherings are held.

I know Mr. Demitrio Tsafendas. I met him during last year i.e. shortly after he arrived in the Caps. He told me he was residing at Mr. Daniels in Bellville and attending services that were held in the coloured homes in Bellville South. I then asked him seeing he was s Greek or Portuguese, whether he considered himself a European or a coloured men. He told me he classified himself as coloured. I asked him if he had his identity card and he said this was being attended to in Pretoria. I saw Tsafendas periodically after that, but I had no discussions with him.

In the early part of 1966 Tsafendas came to see me at Mr. Slater's home. He then told me that he has work on the Marine Diamond Corporation boats. The subject of his race came up again and he then showed me a small slip of paper, which was typed, with his name and address and identity number. I told him then that it appears that he was classified as a European and that he must on that account withdraw from worship gatherings in the coloured homes. He told me he had a room in Observatory and I then asked him to attend services in Mr. Hall's house in Pinelands.

³⁷⁰⁶ James Johnston statement to the police, 6 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

I do not know Tsafendas very well and the longest discussion I had with him was for about 10 minutes at each occasion. He told me he was anxious to get married especially to some coloured girl. I told him he could not do that whilst classified as a European. He told me this could be done by going to Lourenço Marques or Basutoland. I told him it was entirely against the law and advised him strongly against it. Tsafendas never discussed politics with me. He did tell me about his travels and his knowledge of different languages.

After he had left Marine Diamond Corporation, Tsafendas came to see me and said that he would be seeking other employment but did not mention seeking employment in the House of Assembly. He never discussed his reasons for moving among the coloured people, nor did he give me to understand that he was more sympathetic towards the coloureds than towards the Europeans.

The Sunday night before the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw Tsafendas at a service in Mr. Hall's home in Pinelands, but he did not discuss anything or take part in the service that night. He appeared to be perfectly normal. I must say I did not speak to him, apart from saying good night. I did think Tsafendas to be slightly unbalanced and that he seemed to have a mysterious background but otherwise he appeared to be all-right.

Statement taken by Maj. D.J. Rossouw.

FRIDAY, 7 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

FELIX GEORGE MILES³⁷⁰⁷

European male, 56 years, Messenger at the House of Assembly, Parliament House, Cape Town.

States:

I have been in the employ of the House of Assembly as a messenger since the 1st of August, 1966. I applied for a messenger's position at the House of Assembly in person about a month prior to the 1st of August, 1966. I received a written notification on 29/7/66 to the effect that I must be available on 1/8/66 for an interview.

I arrived at the House of Assembly at about 8 am on 1/8/66. There were about 6 or 7 of us who waited to be interviewed that morning, amongst others TSAFENDAS. We applicants were having a general conversation among ourselves whilst we were waiting for our turn to be interviewed. I never spoke to TSAFENDAS. I do remember him saying to someone or other that he is able to speak seven languages and that he expects to get a position as an interpreter. Both Tsafendas and I were accepted that morning and commenced duties that same day. Tsafendas and I were put to perform duties at the main entrance. I never spoke to him on that day.

The next day I was sent to work at Mr Burger's office, where I still am to this day. I do not know what happened to Tsafendas after this or what his duties entailed. I saw him occasionally after this but never bothered to talk to him. Between 2.10 and 2.15 pm on 6/9/66 I was standing in Mr Burger's office. The bell had just started to ring notifying the members that the House is about to start. I saw Tsafendas entering the office. I do not know where he had come from. He started talking to me and said that he had not seen me for a long time. I told him that I had been away for the long week-end. I was under the impression that he had come to collect newspapers. It was the usual time for various messengers to collect the newspapers for the individual members. I told him that the newspapers have not been delivered yet. At that moment, one of the members entered my office to collect the money for a cheque I had cashed for him.

³⁷⁰⁷ Felix George Miles statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 2, File: 1. NASA.

Tsafendas must have left the office when the member entered. I cannot say where Tsafendas went after he left Mr Burger's office. After I had given the member his money, the phone rang. I had been on the telephone for about a minute and had just put the receiver down when I heard people shouting at the door leading to the chamber. People were shouting that an ambulance should be requisitioned. I tried to get through to the ambulance but all the lines were engaged. I learned afterwards that Dr. Verwoerd had been stabbed by Tsafendas. When Tsafendas had been with us in Mr Burger's office I did not notice anything unusual about his clothing or behaviour. I consider it rather strange that Tsafendas should have talked to me that day. I have never spoken to him before except to greet him.

Statement taken by ... (Indecipherable signature) Comm. of Oaths

EDMUND GEORGE STOLLENKAMP³⁷⁰⁸

White, Male. 7 Allgate Street, Woodstock.

I'm a night watchman employed by the Larpens Agency. I serve at the ships in Table Bay docks and remember the ship Eleni. The last night of my service, I remember well. I served from 7am on Sunday 04/09/66 until 9am Monday, 05/09/66. My shift was over at 7am, but that morning I could not come down from the ship because the gangplank (drawbridge) was disabled and was drawn up. The ship was also moved and I had to wait until the bridge was lowered. The day guard, Maile, arrived shortly after 7am and waited below. He had the morning newspaper with him. After waiting below for a long time, he talked to me. He told me that Dr. Verwoerd is dead. Next to me stood a young man who worked on the ship. This man's mother was on the quay below. I told Maile he should not say everything. (I thought he made a joke.) He said Dr. Verwoerd - the Prime Minister. I asked the young man next to me if he had heard that Dr. Verwoerd is dead. The young man then spoke with his mother in Greek and I could not understand what he was talking about. I forgot the incident and later went home. Maile did not tell me that the woman said that Dr. Verwoerd is dead. He made me understand he read it in the newspaper. I am convinced that I understood correctly. I cannot say at what time the woman came there. The young man pointed to a man who was with his mother and said his father was dead and that man is going to become his father. There was no other woman with them.

³⁷⁰⁸ Edmund George Stollenkamp statement to the police, 7 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505. Commissioner of oaths.

MONDAY, 10 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

REGINALD THOMAS ARTHUR DANIELS³⁷⁰⁹

Adult European male, Cape Town.

I am a European male resides at above address. I am not in possession of a Passport and have never been outside the Union of South Africa, since my date of birth. Demetrio Tsafendas is unknown to me, and I have never seen him before. I don't know any doctor by the name of Ahlhelm and also never received letters from outside the RSA.

(Signed) R. Daniels

Cape Town. 10³⁷¹⁰/10/66. 11 am.

Statement taken by me (Indecipherable signature.)

³⁷⁰⁹ Reginald Thomas Arthur Daniels statement to the police, 10 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷¹⁰ The date could also be the 18th of October as the number is handwritten and it is not very clear.

WEDNESDAY, 12 OCTOBER 1966

THE ELENI

This was a crucial day for the investigation, when, exactly one month and six days after the assassination, the South African police finally interviewed the crew of the tanker Eleni. The vessel had arrived in Cape Town on the 24th of July 1966 and remained docked there until the 3rd of September 1966, sailing out just three days before Dr. Verwoerd's assassination.³⁷¹¹ Tsafendas visited the ship daily and became very friendly with the crew.³⁷¹²

Tsafendas had testified to the police, as seen in his two statements of the 11th and the 19th of September, that he visited the Eleni every day while she was docked in Cape Town. The crew's testimonies were therefore important in determining Tsafendas's movements in the days before the assassination. Tsafendas had bought a gun from two members of the crew and was planning to escape on board the Eleni. Perhaps more importantly, Reginald Robert Maile, a ship guard, had testified to the police that three days before the assassination he was asked by Maria Kokkinidou, a woman who often visited the Eleni, where her son had been hired on a temporary basis, if "Dr. Verwoerd is dead?" Edmund George Stollenkamp, the ship's night watchman, had also participated in the conversation. As we will see in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry, the Eleni would have a prominent role in the investigation. The Commission of Enquiry had a file specifically on the Eleni and the Report contains a big section of ten long paragraphs about it.

The report of the Commission of Enquiry declared that the statements by crew members (four of which are appended below) were taken on October 12, 1966, in Venice, Italy. Twelve of sixteen crew members interviewed by the author confirmed that they, along with all other Eleni crewmen, were questioned by the South African police in Venice (The reason the other four were not questioned will be discussed shortly), though no-one remembers the exact date. However, only four statements (plus one sheet of testimony by Dimitrios Zafiriadis) from the thirty-eight men interviewed, were found in the National Archives of South Africa.

³⁷¹¹ Michael N. Fountotos statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁷¹² Reginald Robert Maile statement to the police, 27 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA; Peter Protoulis statement to the police, 28 September 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Leer W.D. 10/10/ 4102 oor Stafendas. NASA.

The report of the Commission of Enquiry talks extensively about the importance of the Eleni. About that specific incident, it states: “It is impossible to establish with any certainty exactly what was said (in the Eleni about Dr. Verwoerd’s death). However, there is no doubt that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned on that morning three days before his death. What makes these incidents more than a coincidence is the fact that this was said at the ship which was visited daily for almost 40 days by the man who killed Dr. Verwoerd, where he bought a pistol and tried to buy a knife which he wanted to use —according to at least one statement made by him subsequently— to kill Dr. Verwoerd. The fact that Dr. Verwoerd’s death was mentioned at that ship was probably more than pure coincidence.”³⁷¹³

In reference to the above incident, the Commission of Enquiry asked Major Rossouw:

COMMISSION: Another thing is that there is a lot of evidence that on the Friday morning BEFORE the murder people had been running back and forth screaming to one another that Dr. Verwoerd had been murdered – are you aware of this?

MAJ. ROSSOUW: Yes I am aware of that ...³⁷¹⁴

Taking all the above under consideration, it is logical that the police would interview all the crew and fifteen of the sixteen members of the crew interviewed by the author declared that the entire crew was indeed interviewed by the South African police in Venice. The sixteenth sailor interviewed by the author, Dionisis Lallis, met Tsafendas in Cape Town, but he does not remember being questioned by the police nor even of being in Venice at the time. It is very possible that he was not questioned, as he was almost certainly one of those crew members who were replaced by other Greek seamen after the Eleni left Cape Town. Lallis remembers Tsafendas clearly, but has no recollection of anything else.³⁷¹⁵

Two men, Vasilis Perselis, a steward and a cousin of Emanuel Perselis who was already working on the Eleni, and Ilias Kokkinos, assistant cook, were with the Eleni in Venice at the time, but they were not questioned by the police because they were not present in Cape Town. They joined the Eleni in Venice as crew replacements. However, they do remember their shipmates being questioned by the police over several hours.³⁷¹⁶ Emanuel ³⁷¹³ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 86. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁷¹⁴ Major Daniel Jacobus Rossouw testimony to the COE, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Uittreksels uit Getuienis. NASA.

³⁷¹⁵ Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

³⁷¹⁶ Ilias Kokkinos in a personal interview, 30 August 2014; Emanuel Perselis in a personal interview, 30 November 2015.

Sakellaridis was captain of the Eleni up to April 1966, when Michael N. Fountotos took over and was very familiar with the crew. He was not present in Venice or in Cape Town, but said in a personal interview with the author that he was told by Captain Fountotos and several members of the crew that everyone who met Tsafendas in Cape Town was questioned in Venice.³⁷¹⁷ The fact that the police recorded the few remarks made by Dimitris Zafiriadis, a member of the crew who refused to give a formal statement, suggests that the police must have recorded all the other crewmen's answers or remarks, too. However, as stated before, only four of these statements were found.

THE ELENI AFTER CAPE TOWN AND BEFORE VENICE

According to thirteen of the thirty-eight men who were on board the Eleni in Cape Town, a radio message was transmitted to the ship from the Greek Ministry of Shipping a few days after they left Cape Town and while they were still at sea, though no one remembers the exact date. The message said that the South African police wanted to speak to them urgently regarding the South African Prime Minister's assassination by someone who had visited the Eleni and bought a gun from a member of the crew. The Ministry asked everyone to cooperate to the utmost with the South African authorities. According to Grigoris Pouftis, the Eleni's radio operator, the South African police appeared desperate to speak to the crew and the Greek Ministry even asked the captain to return to Cape Town, so the police could question them there. After consulting with the tanker's owners, Captain Fountotos suggested to the Ministry that it made more sense to meet with the police in Mina Al-Ahmadi port in Kuwait, which was the tanker's destination, as it would take half as long to get there as to return to Cape Town.³⁷¹⁸

According to the thirteen seamen, everyone panicked when they heard about the assassination. The captain gathered the crew together and told them they were going to be questioned by the South African police in Kuwait. He urged them to be truthful and tell the police everything they knew about Tsafendas, adding that Tsafendas himself, under questioning, would have disclosed all of his activities, including his association with them.

Fearing that the ship would be searched, Kambouris and Vasilakis retrieved the ³⁷¹⁷ Emanuel Sakellaridis in a personal interview, 19 January 2014.

³⁷¹⁸ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.???

banned books about apartheid which Tsafendas had given them and threw them overboard. Zafiriadis thought they were overreacting and just hid his books.³⁷¹⁹ Zafiriadis also urged his crewmates not to co-operate with the police since this would be tantamount to supporting apartheid and also could incriminate Tsafendas, who he admired for what he had done. Captain Fountotos, though he opposed apartheid, told Zafiriadis and the crew that they would be in trouble if they did not co-operate and he urged Zafiriadis to stop trying to influence his colleagues. Captain Fountotos reminded the crew that many civilians were on board Eleni while they were docked in Cape Town and that the police would already know about Tsafendas's relationship with them.³⁷²⁰

Every day until they reached Kuwait, the crew discussed what they would tell the police. They believed that Tsafendas would have told everything under torture. Kambouris, Vasilakis, Kantas and Zafiriadis did not want to testify to the police at all, seeing them as representatives of apartheid. The crew held several meetings to decide what should be said and to agree a joint approach.³⁷²¹ Vasilis Perselis and other crew members teased young Mavronas about selling a gun to Tsafendas, even though they knew he could not have killed him with it. At the time, they were not aware that Dr. Verwoerd had been stabbed to death.³⁷²²

Alachiotis, Aspras, Kantas, Billis, Pouftis and Zafiriadis decided not to reveal that they sang Communist songs with Tsafendas, since this would expose them as Communists and possibly cost them their jobs. Captain Fountotos knew that some of his crew were Communists, but did not care and probably did not know about their singing with Tsafendas. According to Alachiotis, Billis, Vasilakis, Kantas, Perselis, Mastromanolis and Pouftis, the majority of the crew were left-wing and quite a few were Communists. Most of those who were not left wingers had no interest in politics and only three-four were rightists or royalists. The Communists knew who the royalists were; they were very careful with them and never ³⁷¹⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁷²⁰ Ibid.

³⁷²¹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁷²² Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

discussed politics with them.³⁷²³

That period, late-1966, was a tense one in Greek politics. The wounds of the Greek Civil War were still open and the nation was only months away from a military coup that would herald a seven-year military dictatorship. Most important, the Greek Communist Party was illegal and Communists were watched and prosecuted. Informers were everywhere, spying on political suspects and reporting their activities to the police. The singing of Communist songs had taken place on an evening where none of the right-wingers was on board and it involved only the Communists. Since it would have been impossible for the police to know that such thing occurred, they decided not to reveal it.

The other seamen who had discussed politics with Tsafendas, decided not to reveal the fact, or at least to downplay it. They thought this would be better for them, and many knew little about politics anyway. Billis, Kantas and Zafiriadis decided to say nothing about the books Tsafendas gave them unless they were asked directly. Zafiriadis was adamant that he would not testify because he did not want to incriminate Tsafendas.³⁷²⁴

An important issue was whether they should tell the police that Tsafendas had taken them to the township in Cape Town. Tsafendas himself had said the police had informers in most of these places. Captain Fountotos, who was aware of their visit, said they should mention it to the police. What's more, most of the crew knew about it and keeping it secret would have been next to impossible. They therefore decided to be open about their visit, saying they just wanted to see how Africans lived and perhaps buy some African souvenirs. There was also the question of sex; some seamen had slept with African women, which was forbidden by apartheid. Tsafendas had warned them against that, since the police had "ears and spies everywhere." The crew decided to take their chances and not mention it.³⁷²⁵

A crucial issue for those who had taken part in it was the discussion about justifiable homicide. On his last night aboard the tanker, Tsafendas had proposed that it was morally justifiable to kill a tyrant and that Dr. Verwoerd came into that category. Whether or not to tell the police about this discussion divided opinion. A lot of the men had been present, ³⁷²³ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; ??? Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁷²⁴ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁷²⁵ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

including some civilians. Aspras, Kantas and Pouftis believed they should mention it because it was important and the chances were Tsafendas had already told the police. Alachiotis and Billis disagreed, fearing such a topic might get them into trouble and considering it was only a theoretical discussion. The issue was argued about for days. As for Tsafendas's revelation about "playing the fool" to avoid service in the Portuguese army, this was not discussed. No one thought of it as they considered it to be unimportant and irrelevant.

By the time the Eleni reached Mina Al-Ahmadi, opinion was still divided. However, this proved irrelevant since the South African police were not there. After the ship left Kuwait, they did not return to the issue, thinking the police would no longer want to see them. Fifteen of the men interviewed by the author said they were not told they would be interviewed in Venice.

None of the crew remembers the exact date of the interviews, but according to the report of the Commission of Enquiry, it was October 12.³⁷²⁶ Early that morning, while the tanker was docked in Venice, South African policemen went on board. They wore civilian clothes and were accompanied by an official from a Greek consulate somewhere in Italy³⁷²⁷ who translated for those who did not speak English. He was perhaps also intended to demonstrate the Greek Government's willingness to assist in the matter. Captain Fountotos told his crew that he had only just been informed and asked them to co-operate with the police. Some of the crew believed the police deliberately kept them in the dark so they could not prepare their answers.³⁷²⁸

The number of policemen involved in the questioning was probably three, though this is not certain. Six of the men said three while the remaining nine could not remember. However, all say the interviews were conducted on a one-to-one basis, that is, three policemen simultaneously interviewed three witnesses. As soon as the interview with one man was completed, another took his place.

The consular officer advised the crewmen to tell the truth and disclose everything they knew about Tsafendas. He repeatedly stated that the case was almost closed and the investigators knew everything about Tsafendas anyway. He said Tsafendas had told them ³⁷²⁶ Report of the COE. Chapter II C, Paragraph 78. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

³⁷²⁷ None of the sailors remembers from which Consulate he came from.

³⁷²⁸ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emanuil Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

about his time on the tanker, and warned that the men they would get into trouble, possibly charged as accessories, if they lied or held anything back. He said the Greek Government was co-operating fully with the South African authorities and the Government was asking them to do the same. Some of the men said their consular representative looked more “threatening” than the policemen.³⁷²⁹ He said Tsafendas was not Greek, but Mozambican, but that he had caused Greeks in South Africa to be attacked by South Africans who considered them responsible for Dr. Verwoerd’s death.³⁷³⁰

According to the sailors interviewed by the author, every crewman who was on the Eleni in Cape Town had met Tsafendas, including the captain, and was therefore questioned. Two men, Emanuel Perselis and Elias Kokkinos, were not interviewed because they were not on the ship in Cape Town, having joined in Venice. Dionisis Lallis who had met Tsafendas was also not questioned, probably because he was not present in Venice.

The crew said everyone was asked some standard questions, such as, “How did you meet Tsafendas? What did he do? What did he talk about? What was your impression of him? Did he discuss politics? Did he say anything about the Prime Minister? When did he come to the tanker and why? Did you notice anything strange about him?” They wanted to know everything Tsafendas had said to them and they asked about the sale of the gun. According to the sailors who were interviewed by the author and the police, the policemen used pens to make notes, unlike the police in South Africa, who used portable typewriters. Some of the men remember being asked to sign their statement. According to the sailors, the interviews started early in the morning and lasted until late in the afternoon and lasted between twenty and thirty minutes each.³⁷³¹ This is confirmed by the fact that the statements carried times between 10.30 a.m. and 4.10 p.m.

³⁷²⁹ Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷³⁰ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷³¹ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Manolis Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 13 January 2015; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Emmanuel Tsabouniaris in a personal interview, 6 June 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

THE STATEMENTS FOUND

The following are the statements from the Eleni crew found in the archives:

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS³⁷³²

White male, 37 years, Kasos Island, Greece.

I am the bosun on the Eleni. The Eleni was docked at Cape Town from 24th July, 1966 to 3rd September, 1966. While in Cape Town Harbour a man Demitri Tsafendas came on board to have lunch and to take the crew to a shop in town I did not go with him to town. He was accompanied by a man about 37 years, thin build, with bold hair, little hair on top of his head with a strip of hair in the middle, already grey.

Demitri came on board almost every day. About a week before sailing from Cape Town he asked us on board if we can sell him a pistol or knife. I knew that Nicolas had a pistol which I considered as a toy. I got the pistol from Nicolas and sold it to Demitri for 30 dollars and gave Nicolas 20 dollars.

The day 3rd September, 1966 we left Cape Town, Demitri came on board and—worked to get his money back because he claimed that the pistol did not work. We did not give his money back and he left with the pistol. It is a black pistol with a white handle. The companion of Demitri is unknown to me. I cannot say of what Nationality he is.

10.30 a.m. 12.10.1966.

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS IN A PERSONAL INTERVIEW³⁷³³

As we see from his statement, the police interview with Mastromanolis appeared to focus solely on the gun, but he told the author that discussion of the pistol lasted less than five minutes and the rest of the time was spent answering questions about Tsafendas's character and activities. Mastromanolis said he was questioned by a South African policeman for "around twenty-thirty minutes." He was first asked how he met Tsafendas and about his time ³⁷³² Emanuil Mastromanolis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁷³³ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

with him. He then brought up the matter of the gun without being asked since he was aware the police knew about it.

Mastromanolis acknowledged that his statement is accurate and was what he told the policeman. He claims, however, that he lied in saying he thought the gun was a toy, because he was actually “under the impression that Mavronas’s pistol was a real one.” He had heard from Perselis that Mavronas had just bought a gun while in Cape Town and he was given the impression that it was real since Perselis also assumed it was real. Mavronas, who was only seventeen, had boasted about buying the gun and believed it was authentic, although some of the crew considered he had been fooled by the seller.

Mastromanolis thought that Mavronas might be willing to sell it to Tsafendas for a quick profit and only found out that the gun was fake when he suggested this to the boy. Mavronas proposed selling the gun to Tsafendas anyway, since Tsafendas had told everyone he needed a pistol to “scare people off,” not to kill anyone, and it could do such a job. Mastromanolis agreed reluctantly, considering it would meet Tsafendas’s requirement for a weapon just “to scare people off.” Mastromanolis claims that he could not have told the police he was willing to sell Tsafendas a real firearm, which was why he called it a toy while hiding his impression that it was real.

After the Eleni left Cape Town for Kuwait, according to Mastromanolis and Perselis, they and Mavronas discussed the issue of the gun’s sale to Tsafendas. Their initial thought was to tell the police that they believed Tsafendas was looking for a fake gun since he had told them that he wanted to “scare people off.” Eventually, they decided to say they intended to play a joke on Tsafendas as they believed he would not be able to tell whether or not the gun was real.

Mastromanolis was surprised and relieved when he realised that the policemen were less interested in the gun than in Tsafendas’s activities and character. Very early in the questioning, he was asked about a comment which Tsafendas attributed to him in his statement, that “the South Africans need a good whipping.” Mastromanolis was surprised and concluded that Tsafendas must have talked extensively to the police since this was something he had said after Tsafendas took some of the seamen to the township in Cape Town. He denied to the policeman making such a remark, but he admitted to the author that Tsafendas had told the truth to the police and that he did make such a statement after they left the township. Mastromanolis does not remember if he was asked or if he told the police about the visit to the township.

Mastromanolis said the rest of the questioning was about the sort of person Tsafendas was, and realising that the police knew all about his frequent visits to the tanker and what Tsafendas talked about, he told them everything he knew. He does not remember everything he told the police, but he described Tsafendas as being a “normal, intelligent person.” He remembered Tsafendas as “a kind man, very much into politics and very well-informed about what was happening around the world,” and he believes this is what he told the police. He is certain that he was not asked whether Tsafendas had mentioned a tapeworm and is adamant that Tsafendas was sane. “I’ve met many men, all around the world, and some of them were mad. I can say for sure that this man was not insane. There was nothing ever to make me believe that he might be insane. It was impossible for him to have been insane.” He clearly remembers the police asking if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. Mastromanolis replied, “No, never. If he had said such thing, I would have gone to the police.”

During his interview with the author, Mastromanolis recognised his signature on the hand-written statement found in the archives. This statement was later typed out and the typed copy was found in the archives attached to the hand-written statement. However, Mastromanolis is adamant that his interview with the police lasted about “twenty-thirty minutes,” and that he said much more than appeared in his statement, although he can no longer recall precisely what else he told his interrogator. However, he is certain that he referred to Tsafendas’s state of mind and his sanity, and to the “good whipping” comment which Tsafendas attributed to him.

Given that the transcription of the interview focussed almost exclusively on the gun, which may have taken a maximum of five minutes, the questions that require answers are: What other topics were discussed and why were they omitted? Since Mastromanolis is not sure what exactly he told the police, it is difficult to establish why this information was omitted. It is also possible that the policeman who questioned him did not consider Mastromanolis’s opinion about Tsafendas’s sanity and his denial of Tsafendas’s attribution of the “good whipping” remark to be of sufficient importance to be included.

NICOLAS MAVRONAS³⁷³⁴

White male, 17 years, Sinies Village, Corfu Island, Greece.

I am a Galley boy working on the Eleni. Eleni was docked in Cape Town from 24.7.66 to 3.9.66. I was in possession of a small pistol which I considered as a toy. I got it from a young man which I met in Cape Town namely Mr. D. Ravell, Phone 779820 (friend of his), 25 Haroldene Rd., LANSDOWNE, CAPE.

A man Dimitrio came to our ship almost every day while in Cape docks. He took some of the crew to a shop on shore. I did not go with him. About the 26 - 27 August, 1966 Dimitrio talked to some of us on board and said he wanted to buy a pistol or a knife. He told us that he get a job at a Hotel and will be paid £2000 (two thousand pounds) at this job. He needed a weapon for his protection. We considered him foolish and decided to joke with him. So we sold this pistol to him for 30 dollars. The bosun took 10 dollars and I got 20 dollars. The last day on 3.9.1966 Dimitrio came on board and told me that the pistol is not working and I must give back his money. I refused. He then asked me to sell him an automatic knife. I told him that I don't have a knife to sell. He then asked the bosun to sell him an automatic knife the bosun said "Oh leave me alone, do you think I am a Cowboy." Dimitrio then went to the galley to eat. The ship left the same day and I did not see Dimitrio again. He took the pistol with him. When he complained to me about the pistol he said, I am a poor man. I work a week to get this 30 dollars, do you expect me to lose it. He told us that he joined the Greek army during the war and that he is an expert shot.

1.20p.m. 12.10.1966.

COMMENTS ON MAVRONAS'S STATEMENT

According to Vasilis Perselis, who was good friend of Mavronas, Tsafendas told them that he was working at a hotel and that he needed a firearm for protection and to "scare people off." Michael Vasilakis confirmed Perselis's statement to the author. Mastromanolis does not remember Tsafendas saying anything about a hotel, but he remembers him saying he needed a gun to "scare people off." Mastromanolis claims that he did indeed tell Tsafendas "Do you take me for a cowboy!” when Tsafendas asked if he could find him another pistol or a knife.

³⁷³⁴ Nicolas Mavronas statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

Billis, Kantas, Kokkinos, Vasilakis, Kambouris, Mastromanolis and Perselis all says that Mavronas’s claim that they “decided to joke” with Tsafendas was inaccurate. They were all initially under the impression that Mavronas’s gun was real, as this is what he told them. They said Mavronas, was showing off his gun unaware that it was fake. Kambouris was the first to find out that the gun was not real. Kambouris believes, though he is not 100 per cent sure, that Mavronas bought the gun under the impression that it was genuine and was fooled by its owner. Mastromanolis claimed that he only realised the gun was fake when he asked Mavronas to sell it to Tsafendas. Mavronas then admitted that the gun was not real, but still offered to sell it to Tsafendas, believing that it would be “good enough to scare people off.”

During his questioning, Mavronas said Tsafendas told him he had joined the Greek army and was an expert shot, though he does not state which war. The last war in Greece was the Civil War. According to six of the Eleni crew interviewed by the author, Tsafendas told them he had joined the Democratic Army of Greece during the Greek Civil War, not the “Greek army.”³⁷³⁵ The South African policeman who questioned Mavronas seems to have misunderstood him, probably unaware that there had been a civil war in Greece and thought he was referring to the Second World War. The full name of the DSE was Democratic Army of Greece. During the Second World War it was called ELAS and some people continued to refer to the DSE as ELAS, since it was basically the same force. ELAS in Greek means Greece, so when Mavronas said the Greek Army, he would have meant ELAS or the DSE, certainly not the regular Greek Army. The six seamen who participated in the conversation remember clearly that Tsafendas told them that he had served with U.S. Liberty Ships during the Second World War and with the DSE during the Greek Civil War.³⁷³⁶

The witnesses interviewed by the author do not remember Tsafendas telling them he was “an expert shot,” though they could not swear that he did not say it. The fact that Mavronas mentions the Greek Army is nevertheless important as other seamen said they were asked if Tsafendas had served in any army or if he had any military training. It is thus likely that Mavronas was questioned on this matter rather than volunteering the information.

³⁷³⁵ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷³⁶ Ibid.

MICHAEL N. FOUNTOTOS³⁷³⁷

Athens, Greece

I am the Captain of the Eleni. The Eleni lost its rudder and was docked in Cape Town for repairs from 24.7.1966 to 3.9.1966. I saw this man Dimitrio Tsafendas on board of Eleni in Cape Town. He often came on board to eat and took some of the crew to town. He came to me to enquire what was wrong with the ship. He suggested that he will get an engineer to repair the rudder. I thought that he must be foolish because it is not a simple repair but a major repair to fix a rudder. So I merely dismissed him.

The last day on 3rd September, 1966 he came to me and complained that he bought a pistol from one of the crew and the thing is not working and now he wanted me to give him the money and deducted it from the boys pay. I was very busy and he was a nuisance to me, so I told him to go and arrange with the boy because I had nothing to do with their business. So he left. I considered this man as childish. His conversation is normal but very childish. How can he come and tell me that he will get an engineer to repair a rudder, which in the dry dock costs me £30.000. He must be joking. He did not appear to me to be a criminal, his appearance was friendly.

COMMENTS ABOUT CAPTAIN FOUNTOTOS

According to Peter Protoulis, a food supplier to the Eleni while she lay in Cape Town, Captain Fountotos was a “real gentleman, an exceptional and dignified man.”³⁷³⁸ The crew also characterised him as a “gentleman, a compassionate, good, quiet man,” who was very attentive to his crew and cared about them.³⁷³⁹ None of the crew knew his political stance, but they believed that he was leaning towards the right-centre. However, he was a democratic man and strongly opposed apartheid, and when he discovered what Tsafendas had done, he said, “I feel so sorry for him. Who knows what they are doing to him right now! God help him ...”³⁷⁴⁰ However, he insisted that his crew must tell “the truth and everything they knew ³⁷³⁷ Michael N. Fountotos statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die ‘Eleni.’ NASA. Michael Fountotos has died.

³⁷³⁸ Peter Protoulis in a personal interview, 28 May 2016.

³⁷³⁹ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

³⁷⁴⁰ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

about Tsafendas as they might get into trouble if they didn't."³⁷⁴¹

DIMITRIOS ZAFIRIADIS³⁷⁴²

Donkeyman, Eleni.

This man did not want to make a statement. However, he said the following:

Dimitrio Tsafendas said that he wanted to buy a pistol or knife because he travels through a Bantu area to get to his house. He needed the weapon for self-protection. He laughed at Tsafendas and said that he should get a knife from the chef because it is a good weapon. He handed a ticket over of the business to which Tsafendas took him and other members for shopping. Tsafendas was always accompanied by a man who acted as driver. About 35-40 years old, slender, slightly bald with a line of hair in the middle of his head, slightly grey, wearing glasses. They drove a grey Volkswagen station wagon. They never talked politics.

NEW INFORMATION REGARDING ZAFIRIADIS

Zafiriadis died a few years ago and was not interviewed by the author. However, he was a close friend of crew members Nicolas Billis, George Kantas and Panteleimon Speis, all of whom were interviewed by the author. According to these three, Zafiriadis was a Communist and a very good friend of Tsafendas. Zafiriadis was almost always present when Tsafendas was on board and was certainly there when Tsafendas told the crew about pretending to be mad in order to not serve in the Portuguese Army, when he made the spitting gesture towards Dr. Verwoerd and when he said that it would be justifiable to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant.

Zafiriadis was one of the few seamen who agreed with Tsafendas's belief in a justified assassination and strongly supported his argument. Zafiriadis was also the one who ³⁷⁴¹ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

³⁷⁴² Dimitrios Zafiriadis testimony to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

was most affected by the visit to the township.³⁷⁴³ He supported Tsafendas's suggestion that they should not buy anything while in South Africa, apart from absolute necessities, so as not to contribute the country's economy. Zafiriadis clearly admired Tsafendas and urged his crewmates to refuse to talk to the police in order not to incriminate him.³⁷⁴⁴

According to Billis, Kantas, Speis and Vasilakis, Zafiriadis refused to answer any questions about Tsafendas. The South African police interrogator informed the Greek Consul and the Consul tried to change his mind. However, Zafiriadis held to his position and refused to give a statement. The Consul was unhappy and asked Captain Fountotos to intervene, but the captain declined, stating that what he chose to do was up to Zafiriadis.³⁷⁴⁵

Eventually, Zafiriadis agreed to comment about the pistol and the knife since his name had been mentioned by Tsafendas with regard to the pistol. Zafiriadis claimed in this statement that he and Tsafendas never talked politics, a claim that was rejected by Vasilakis, Kambouris, Alachiotis, Kantas, Speis, Pouftis and Billis, who said Zafiriadis was always present when Tsafendas and the crew discussed politics. These men assumed that Zafiriadis lied in order not to incriminate Tsafendas by stating that he was Communist and anti-apartheid. Zafiriadis also kept a book about apartheid which Tsafendas gave him. After the questioning in Venice ended, some shipmates joked with him that he might make a lot of money in a few years by selling Tsafendas's book.³⁷⁴⁶

CONSTANTINOS KOKKINIDIS³⁷⁴⁷

I am a Greek born. My mother is Maria Kokkinidis Olympic CRT. 14, Green Point, Cape Town. My sister is Themis Zagorauou, Grape Vine, 204 Esselen Street, Sunnyside, Pretoria. My mother went to South Africa in 1964. I joined my mother in South Africa July, 1964. I ³⁷⁴³ None of the sailors remembers the name of the places or whether it was a township. The sailors are referring to it as 'village' and 'area' where Black South African lived.

³⁷⁴⁴ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012;

³⁷⁴⁵ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷⁴⁶ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 November 2013; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷⁴⁷ Constantinos Kokkinidis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol 3, File Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

stayed with my mother in Pretoria for 2 years. My mother and I left for Cape Town, July, 1966. My mother is a widow. I lost my father in 1961.

I was looking for work and so it came that my mother and I went to the Eleni in Cape Town docks. Mrs Vogianou - Caretaker of the flats at Olympic CRT. 14, Green Point, Cape Town, took my mother and myself with her car to the Eleni to introduce us to the Captain because she knows the Captain and told us that he is from our country. We met the Captain and he invited us for dinner at a later date. The three of us came later and had dinner with the Captain and some other people. The Captain asked my mother whether I make enough money, she said that I make good money but I spend it all because of bad friends. He suggested that I came with him on the ship so I can save my money.

I came on board on the 1st August, 1966 and started work on the 2nd August, 1966. I am still on the Eleni. On the 3rd of September, 1966 the day when we left, I was on the ship when the night-watchman told me "Do you know what." I said no. He said "Dr. Verwoerd has been killed." I asked him who said so, he actually pointed to the day watchman and said "He told me." I turned around and spoke to my mother who was standing on the harbour, and told her that "Dr. Verwoerd has been killed." She was upset, and I asked the night-watchman, how did Dr. Verwoerd got killed, he asked the day-watchman again who answered in Afrikaans, the night-watchman said to me, no I did not hear properly nothing happened. So I told my mother that it is not true. Shortly after this the ship left Cape Town.

While in Cape Town docks I saw this Dimitrio Tsafendas he came on board but I never saw how he came to the docks. I did not see anybody coming with him. I did not take much notice of him and neither did I speak to him. My mother don't know him either. I don't know if Mrs. Vogianou knows him. I don't think that they know each other. My mother went to Pretoria in August by train to fetch my sister and Mr. Christos Chistodulu a friend of us. They came to Cape Town during August with Christos' car. I met this friend Christos in Katanga in the Congo. I am sure that Christos and Tsafendas don't know each other.

4.10 p.m. 12.10.1966.

COMMENTS ON KOKKINIDIS'S STATEMENT

Alachiotis and Billis told the author that Kokkinidis strongly urged the crewmen to tell the truth about Tsafendas, warning them of the brutality of the South African police and claiming they would already have made him tell them anything they wanted. He said, "You will go back to Greece, but I have to go back to South Africa."³⁷⁴⁸ Kokkinidis was not present when the crew and Tsafendas sang Communist songs, or when Tsafendas made his spitting gesture when shown Dr. Verwoerd's photo and he was probably unaware of their visit to the township. However, though no one remembers for sure, it is very possible Kokkinidis was at the table, or nearby, when the conversation regarding justifiable assassination took place and this is how the question of Dr. Verwoerd's death being discussed on board began. We will examine his participation in the conversation regarding Dr. Verwoerd's death in the chapter on the Commission of Enquiry.

INTERVIEWS OF ELENI SAILORS WITH THE AUTHOR

This is what the sailors the author interviewed had to say about their questioning:

CLEANTHES ALACHIOTIS

Alachiotis clearly remembers being interviewed in Venice. He was aged twenty-three and was terrified by the experience. On conclusion, he signed the record of his interview. At the start of questioning, he was asked to provide his address in Greece, which made him feel uncomfortable, thinking the police might want to talk to him again. This convinced him to be as accurate as possible.

Alachiotis says he remembers "that day very well." He was, "like everyone else, taken by surprise," because after Kuwait, he thought they had got away and were not going to be questioned. Alachiotis says the policeman who interviewed him was "a tough-looking guy," but he turned out to be "very friendly and relaxed." He says he told him the "truth and everything that had happened," apart from singing Communist songs and the fact that Tsafendas had asked them to spend as little money as possible in South Africa. He explained how he met Tsafendas, described how he took the men to Mike's Outfitters and to a church, and he mentioned the visit to the township. The policeman wanted to know more about this township, but Alachiotis did not remember its name and said they only went there to meet some friends of Tsafendas and buy some souvenirs from them. He did say that they had tea in a black family's home.

³⁷⁴⁸ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

Alachiotis also told the policeman that Tsafendas often spoke about his travels and about politics, but he did not understand what he was talking about since personally he had no interest in politics. He said he did not understand exactly what apartheid was, and he praised South Africa for its beauty. When asked if Tsafendas had said anything about the Prime Minister, Alachiotis replied that Tsafendas "did not like him much and called him 'Hitler's best student.'" Alachiotis was ready to mention the 'Hitler' remark because he believed, as they all did, that the police must have known about it since Tsafendas used the expression so often and so widely. Alachiotis clearly remembers being asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing Dr. Verwoerd. He assumed that the policeman was referring to the conversation on the Eleni's last night in Cape Town when Tsafendas argued that it would be justifiable to kill Dr. Verwoerd because he was a tyrant, while the murder of Prince Rwagasore was to be condemned because he was a democratically elected President. Therefore, Alachiotis told the whole story to the policeman, who showed great interest in it.

Asked for his opinion about Tsafendas, Alachiotis could not remember exactly what he told the police, but believes that he must have told them he was a "harmless man, good-hearted, a quiet man ... very polite and well-mannered," as this is the way he remembered him. When the policeman asked if he had noticed anything wrong with Tsafendas or that he might have been unbalanced, Alachiotis was surprised by the question and said, "No; he seemed 100 per cent normal."

Alachiotis also said Tsafendas told the crew that "he had played the fool with the Portuguese army in order not to serve his military duty... I wasn't going to mention that, but they asked me, 'What were you talking about all these times?' So I said that we often told stories from our army days and the policeman asked me if Tsafendas had served in the Greek army. I then told him what he had told us, that he had joined the Communists in the Civil War but had not served in the proper Greek Army, and that he had pretended to be mad in order to not serve in the Portuguese Army. I remember him laughing about it." Other seamen told Alachiotis they were asked specifically whether Tsafendas had served in any army or if he had any military training.

As for the tapeworm, Alachiotis is certain that he was not asked about it. He was questioned about the gun, but he said that he had nothing to do with it and had only found out about it much later from the other guys. He remembers the policeman keeping notes while they were talking. At the conclusion of the interview, the policeman asked him to read over his statement, but he said that was “not necessary” and just signed it. Alachiotis says he was one of the first to be interviewed. When the interview finished, the policeman approached his two colleagues, who were interviewing other men, took them aside and told them something.³⁷⁴⁹

PANTELEIMON ASPIOTIS

Aspiotis remembers that every member of the crew was questioned in Venice and he himself was interviewed for about twenty twenty-five minutes. He does not remember whether he signed his statement or if he was asked for his address in Greece. He recalls that it took the police several hours to interview everyone, that there were probably three policemen and that a Greek consular officer acted as translator.

Aspiotis had a very good relationship with Tsafendas and remembers him taking the crew to a Greek shop and to a church in Cape Town. He recalls Tsafendas singing Greek songs with them and teaching them how to fish for lobster. He was not among the group taken by Tsafendas to the township. He does not remember the details of what he told the police but presumes he told them most of what he remembered about Tsafendas. What he did not mention was fishing for lobster because Tsafendas had told them “not to tell anyone because it was illegal.” He remembers the issue about the gun, but he had nothing to do with it.

Aspiotis was certainly not asked about the tapeworm; “I would have remembered that. I never heard about it before.” One thing he remembered because he found it “a little strange,” was being asked “if I had noticed anything strange about Tsafendas or if I thought that he might have been mad. I said no, he was perfectly fine. He was like any other person. He was definitely not insane. Him? Insane? No, definitely not! I wasn’t expecting such a question because the man was not mad.” He was also asked if Tsafendas had said anything about Dr. Verwoerd and Aspiotis said “No.”³⁷⁵⁰

³⁷⁴⁹ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010.

NIKOLAOS BILLIS

Billis remembers that he was interviewed in Venice by a South African policeman, that there were three policemen and that everyone in the crew was questioned and required to sign their statements. The questioning lasted from early morning until late afternoon. “I remember everything ... I told them everything I knew. I was terrified. This was a serious case. You couldn’t mess around with it.” He remembers the Greek consul as being “pushy” and pressing them repeatedly to tell everything and to hide nothing. He thought that “Captain Fountotos was a little irritated with him as he was treating us like children, though we were all just in our early twenties ...”

Billis told the police that Tsafendas was a Communist and against apartheid, though he does not remember the details of what he said. He told them that Tsafendas frequently talked about politics, but he did not understand him since he had no knowledge or interest in the subject. Billis also mentioned the trip to the township in Cape Town and claimed they had gone there for touristic reasons, to see where the Black people lived. He does not remember being asked whether Tsafendas had served in any army, but he definitely told them about his mad act with the Portuguese, “I did not think much of this then. They wanted to know what he was telling us, so I told them about it. I thought it was not important, but I remember they wanted to know more about it.” He also told the police that Tsafendas had told them that he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists. Billis believed that the Greek authorities must have known about this and told the South Africans. Billis also told the police about their discussion regarding justifiable assassinations.³⁷⁵¹

NIKOLAS KAMBOURIS

Kambouris remembers being interviewed in Venice and asked to sign his statement. Although he gave his statement reluctantly, he told police “practically everything that had happened with Dimitri. The only thing I did not say was that we sang Communist songs ... I told them that he spat towards the Prime Minister’s picture ... yes, I certainly mentioned the ³⁷⁵⁰ Panteleimon Aspiotis in a personal interview, 6 June 2015.

³⁷⁵¹ Nikolaos Billis in a personal interview, 12 June 2011.

‘Hitler’s best student’ comment - this is something almost every one of the crew had heard.” Kambouris was asked to explain what Tsafendas meant with the remark about Hitler and Dr. Verwoerd but he pretended that he did not understand the reference. He eventually said “perhaps Tsafendas meant that Dr. Verwoerd had studied in Germany and Hitler was his tutor,” avoiding any further supposition.

When the policeman asked if Tsafendas had said anything about killing the Prime Minister, Kambouris assumed, like Alachiotis and as we will see Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, that he was referring to Tsafendas’s claim that killing Dr. Verwoerd would be tyrannicide. Kambouris had to explain in detail to the policeman what tyrannicide was and Tsafendas’s theories about it. “I had to explain the whole thing and how it was in ancient Greece ... the policeman was very interested in this. I told him though that Tsafendas did not say he was going to kill the Prime Minister; just that it would have been justifiable if someone does.”

Kambouris was also asked if he had noticed anything abnormal about Tsafendas. “I was surprised by the question. We were all surprised by this question and we later discussed it. We were all asked this question. I said that he did not look mad to me and certainly did not act like a madman. He never said or did anything to make me think he was a madman, he seemed perfectly fine.” Kambouris does not remember being asked about the tapeworm but he was asked about the gun. He replied that Tsafendas had asked him if he had a gun or if he knew anyone among the crew who had one and that he referred him to Vasilis Perselis. He believes that he must also have told the police that Tsafendas had expressed his wish to go and live in Cuba. He described how Tsafendas told them he had fought in the Greek Civil War with the Communists and thinks this arose from a question about whether Tsafendas had mentioned serving in the army or receiving military training. What he did not mention was Tsafendas urging them to avoid spending money in South Africa, that they fished for lobster and sang Communist songs.

Kambouris said the policeman wrote everything down and he signed the statement without reading it. His statement “must have been the longest. It was three-four pages long ... we all discussed the length afterwards.” Kambouris also said:

“I remember being asked about my address in Greece at the beginning of the questioning ... that scared me a lot and I know it did the same to everyone. I thought that they might want to talk to me again or ask me to testify in court. That’s why I couldn’t lie; none of us could. We had to tell everything. We knew that if we missed anything which they knew we knew, it would look bad for us. We were all very young, almost children; if our name was involved in anything bad, we would never have worked on a ship again. Those were hard times ...”³⁷⁵²

GEORGE KANTAS

Kantas remembers being interviewed in Venice and asked for his address in Greece, which frightened him, thinking the police might want to get in touch with him again. He signed his statement without reading it. “I was petrified,” he recalled. “The policeman who interviewed me was massive and looked quite mean. I remember him very well. He was a tall, blond guy; he did not smile at all; he was deadly serious. I thought he was German. He looked like a German, like a Nazi, and I remembered Tsafendas calling White South Africans Nazis. I told him everything I knew. We all told them everything, everything. We couldn’t take a chance and hide something. We did not tell them we were singing Communist songs together because it was only five or six of us and no-one else knew about it.”

According to Kantas, the policeman wanted to know “what kind of man Tsafendas was, what he told us and what he did with us.” Kantas told him how Tsafendas came to the tanker and how he helped them with their shopping. “I did not tell him that Tsafendas asked us to boycott South Africa and not spend any money there. Was I crazy to say it?” He does not remember what exactly he said about Tsafendas’s personality, but he remembers him as a “very well-read and well-mannered man who knew a lot about politics and history,” and he presumes this is what he told the police. When the policeman asked Kantas if he thought Tsafendas was “normal,” he replied, “Yes, perfectly normal.”

He is certain that he mentioned the Tsafendas’s mad act to dodge the Portuguese Army, and that he had joined the DSE during the Greek Civil War. He does not remember if he was asked about this or volunteered it. Like everyone else, Kantas was asked if Tsafendas had said anything about the Prime Minister. He is sure he said that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student,” and that he believed it would be justifiable for someone to kill him because he was a tyrant. He does not remember telling the policeman about the spitting incident, which he had forgotten until was mentioned to him by the author, but he presumes that he did. He remembers going to the township and he assumes he told the police but he cannot be certain. Kantas had nothing to do with the gun and he remembers saying so. He was not asked about the tapeworm. He remembers Tsafendas saying he wanted to live in “socialist Cuba,” but he doesn’t remember if he mentioned this to the police.³⁷⁵³

³⁷⁵² Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014.

ELIAS KOKKINOS

Kokkinos was present in Venice but was not interviewed, as he was not present in Cape Town. He clearly remembers that all those crew members who were in Cape Town being interviewed.³⁷⁵⁴

DIONISIS LALLIS

Lallis was a crew member of the Eleni in Cape Town but was replaced later and was not with the tanker when it docked at Venice. He had no contacts with the crew and knew nothing about the questioning until now. However, he remembers Tsafendas well from Cape Town, although he did not associate much with him. He remembers him as being “perfectly fine. I never noticed anything or thought that he could be crazy or dangerous. I remember he was very polite. It looked like he had a good upbringing. He generally looked like a good man. I did not speak to him much and had no dealings with him, but he was very talkative and very friendly with some of the other guys on the Eleni.”³⁷⁵⁵

EMANUIL MASTROMANOLIS

We have seen what Mastromanolis told the author regarding his statement earlier in this chapter. In addition, he remembers that everyone on board was interviewed by the police, everyone was asked for his address in Greece and everyone had to sign his statement.³⁷⁵⁶

³⁷⁵³ Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012.

³⁷⁵⁴ Elias Kokkinos in a personal interview, 30 August 2014.

³⁷⁵⁵ Dionisios Lallis in a personal interview, 19 June 2015.

³⁷⁵⁶ Emanuil Mastromanolis in a personal interview, 29 February 2016.

EMANUIL PERSELIS

E. Perselis was present in Venice and remembers the entire crew being questioned by the South African police. However, he was not questioned as he had just joined the tanker as a replacement for another man and had not been on board at Cape Town. He remembers that the questioning lasted “many hours.”³⁷⁵⁷

VASILIS PERSELIS

V. Perselis remembers being interviewed by the South African police in Venice, stating his address at the start of questioning and signing his statement at the end. Perselis remembers, “I was asked about the gun and told them he asked me for a pistol for self-protection because he lived in a rough area, so I referred him to Manolis (Mastromanolis) and to Nikolakis (Mavronas). I told them I had nothing else to do with the gun issue after that.”

Perselis says he was asked if he thought “there was something wrong with him (Tsafendas).” He does not recall his exact answer, but he remembers Tsafendas as being “a very clever man, not mad at all, one hundred per cent normal.” He remembers Tsafendas telling him that he had got a job which was not paying him well and he had to wear a uniform. Perselis thought that it was in a hotel, not in the Parliament. Tsafendas had told him that he wanted to save money to go and live the rest of his life in Cuba, though he does not remember if he told the police this. He remembers Tsafendas being a Communist and considered him to be well-informed about Greek and world politics and history. Perselis did not go with Tsafendas to the township and never heard him say anything regarding Dr. Verwoerd’s death and presumes that he told the police so. He is certain that he was not asked about the tapeworm. He does not remember telling the policeman about the spitting incident, which he had also forgotten until was mentioned to him by the author, but he presumes that he did.³⁷⁵⁸

GRIGORIS POUFTIS

Pouftis remembers being interviewed in Venice, along with the rest of the crew. He thinks there were two or three policemen, each conducting interviews. He remembers signing his ³⁷⁵⁷ Emanuil Perselis in a personal interview, 30 November 2015.

³⁷⁵⁸ Vasilis Perselis in a personal interview, 14 January 2015.

statement, but not being asked about his address in Greece. The policeman who conducted the questioning was “very polite and friendly. It was more like a conversation than a police questioning. Very relaxed.” The policeman wanted to know everything that had happened with Tsafendas. Pouftis described how they met and that Tsafendas visited every day. He is certain that he told the policeman about his mad act with the Portuguese Army and that Tsafendas served in the DSE during the Greek Civil War. “I and the rest of us did not know at the time why they wanted to know more about it. I said Greeks were playing the fool all the time to avoid the army.”

Pouftis also told the policeman that Tsafendas was a Communist who despised the South African Prime Minister and mentioned both the spitting gesture and the remark that Dr. Verwoerd was Hitler’s best student. However, he did not reveal that they had sung Communist songs together. “I would have lost my job if the company had found out about it.”

Pouftis remembers being asked if Tsafendas said anything about killing the Prime Minister. “I told him ‘God no; he never said anything like this.’” As for the “justifiable killing” conversation, he remembers it vaguely but cannot remember whether or not he told the policeman. He also remembers going to the township, but doesn’t remember if he told the police. Pouftis does not remember being asked about Tsafendas’s mental state, but his own memory is of “an ordinary man, soft-spoken, knowledgeable and passionate about politics.” He was certainly not asked about the tapeworm. He remembers Tsafendas telling him he wanted to go and live in Cuba, but he doesn’t remember if he said that to the police.³⁷⁵⁹

IOANNIS SPEIS

Speis did not associate much with Tsafendas but he spoke to him from time to time and saw him every day on the Eleni. He remembers that he and the entire crew were questioned in Venice by three South African policemen; each conducting his own interview with the help of a Greek consular officer for those who’s English was not good. He remembers his interrogator taking notes and being asked to sign his statement.

Speis does not remember everything he was asked but he recalls being questioned about Tsafendas’s character and asked his opinion of him. He believes that he told the police ³⁷⁵⁹ Grigoris Pouftis in a personal interview, 28 November 2009.

approximately the following: “I never noticed anything wrong with him; he was very talkative and friendly.” Speis considered Tsafendas to be “a proper gentleman.” He was familiar with hawkers selling their wares on ships but thought Tsafendas “did not look like other hawkers.” He saw him as “a proud, intelligent man with lots of dignity. He never asked for anything from the crew and was always prompt with our financial dealings.” Speis knew that Tsafendas had taken some of his crewmates to the township, but he had not gone along. However, he was one of those to whom Tsafendas demonstrated how to fish for lobster, but he did not reveal that to the police. He was certainly not asked about the tapeworm.³⁷⁶⁰

DIMITRIOS STAVRIANOS

Stavrianos remembers being questioned in Venice along with the rest of the crew but does not remember exactly what he was asked and what he told the police. He remembers Tsafendas, but he did not associate with him very much and therefore thinks he could not have told the police a lot about him. He remembers Tsafendas as a “normal man; very well-dressed and well-mannered” who “did not show any signs of being mentally disturbed. He never behaved like a mad man or said anything to suggest that something might be wrong with him. None of us ever thought that he could be mad.”³⁷⁶¹ Although Stavrianos had little to do with Tsafendas, he was still interviewed by the police, confirming the crew’s claim that everyone who met him was interviewed.

EMANUIL TSABOUNIARIS

Tsabouniaris remembers being interviewed in Venice with all the other Eleni crew. He remembers a policeman questioning him and keeping notes and he recalls signing his statement, but he does not remember exactly what he told the police. He remembers being asked whether Tsafendas asked him for a gun or a knife. He said that, “Tsafendas had seen I had a knife and asked me to sell it to him. I did not do so because I liked it and it was a souvenir.” The policeman then asked, “Do you still have it?” and he replied, “Yes.” Tsabouniaris said it was in his suitcase and offered to bring it for him, but the policeman replied, “No, that won’t be necessary.”

³⁷⁶⁰ Ioannis Speis in a personal interview, 12 July 2015.

³⁷⁶¹ Dimitris Stavrianos in a personal interview, 18 January 2015.

Tsabouniaris remembers being asked his opinion about Tsafendas's state of mind. Although he does not remember exactly what he said then, he presumes he told the police what he remembers about Tsafendas to this day, that he was "a very funny and good hearted man, a very friendly, talkative and polite person, a true gentleman. Always very well-dressed and always very courteous. Everyone liked him. He was certainly perfectly fine, impossible to have been insane. Impossible! This man was definitely not insane. I could swear to God that he was not insane."

The first day Tsafendas came to the tanker, Tsabouniaris gave him money to buy him a few things ashore. He was the only who handed over cash and the other men made fun of him, saying he could forget his money because Tsafendas would not be back with it. However, the next day, Tsafendas brought everything he had asked for and the change from the money he gave him. "He was always very prompt with our financial dealings, not like other hawkers who I or the other guys had met. He was completely different; he talked more like a teacher than a hawker. He used nice words and had excellent command of the vocabulary. He seemed like a very well-educated and knowledgeable man; a sophisticated man."

Tsabouniaris told the author:

"The only thing I found strange was that his profession of a hawker did not match his character. He was very educated and very polite for a hawker. I always believed that something must be going on with this man, that he couldn't be just a hawker. I am sure he could have found a much better job. I thought that perhaps he could have a reason for doing this job; as a cover for something else, so he could walk freely around the harbour and aboard the ships. We discussed this with some of the guys and they also thought that there must be something happening with him... The thing that impressed me more was that he was very proud. He was doing the job with pride, not like a beggar or trying to make you buy in a sleazy way. He was a true gentleman."

Tsabouniaris remembers Tsafendas teaching him how to fish for lobsters, but he did not mention this to the police because Tsafendas had warned him that it was illegal and he would pay a fine if caught. Tsabouniaris does not remember Tsafendas talking politics with him, but he remembers him singing Greek traditional songs with everyone on board. He was definitely not asked about the tapeworm.³⁷⁶²

MICHALIS VASILAKIS

He remembers being interviewed along with all the others. He did not speak good English and the Greek consular officer acted as translator. He was one of the oldest of the crew and had been very close to Tsafendas. He remembers the Greek official asking him questions that were not asked by the policeman, things which the Greek had heard from the other men during the interviews, and this annoyed him. He remembers telling “pretty much everything” he knew about Tsafendas. “The only things I remember not telling him for sure is that he sang partisan songs with us and he gave me this anti-apartheid book. None of us mentioned these things, not even those who had not participated in the singing but just knew about it.”

Vasilakis remembers telling the police that Tsafendas took them to the township but not whether that they had tea in a Black family’s house. He told them that Tsafendas was a Communist who had also fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War and he is pretty certain that he also told the policeman and that he had “played the fool” so as not to serve in the Portuguese army.

Vasilakis remembers mentioning that Tsafendas had spat at Dr. Verwoerd’s photograph – it was Vasilakis who showed him the picture - and called the prime minister “Hitler’s best student.” The most difficult part of the interview was when he had to explain to the policeman what tyrannicide was after telling him about Tsafendas’s belief that Dr. Verwoerd’s assassination would be justifiable because he was a tyrant. The interview lasted about thirty minutes and he spent at least half of it explaining the philosophy of tyrannicide as understood by the ancient Greeks. The most surprising thing, in the view of Vasilakis, was that the policeman was unaware of the assassination of Prince Rwagasore and he had to tell him about it, although he only knew what he had heard from Tsafendas. He does not remember being asked about Tsafendas’s mental state, but his own opinion is that he was “surely one hundred and ten per cent sane. There is absolutely no way Dimitri to have been mad. He definitely played the mad again to not be executed.”³⁷⁶³ ³⁷⁶² Emanuil Tsabouniaris in personal interview, 14 June 2016.

³⁷⁶³ Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 16 January 2016.

ANALYSIS OF THE INTERVIEWS

With the exception of Kantas, who said his interviewer was mean-looking and he was scared, the crewmen who were interviewed by the author said the atmosphere at the interviews was relaxed and often felt more like a discussion between friends than an interrogation. The South African officers were polite and often smiled. Every man was asked if he wanted the Greek translator to read out his statements, but no one did. One reason was they felt it was unnecessary, but more importantly, they did not want to look as if they did not trust the policemen. They wanted the whole business out of the way as soon as possible.

The crew said they all discussed their interviews after the policemen were gone. They concluded that all were asked approximately the same questions and everyone had told the truth and volunteered everything that had happened with Tsafendas. The only information withheld was that Tsafendas sang Communist songs with some of them and gave banned books to three of them. They discussed the fact that they were asked about Tsafendas's mental state, but paid little attention to it at the time.

Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Perselis, Pouftis and Vasilakis told the police that Tsafendas described Dr. Verwoerd as "Hitler's best student." They are sure others testified to this since that was how Dr. Verwoerd was sometimes jokingly termed between them. By the time they were interviewed by the author, several of the men, had forgotten Dr. Verwoerd's name, but all remembered Tsafendas describing him in those words.

Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Pouftis and Vasilakis told the police about Tsafendas's spitting gesture. Kantas and Perselis remember the gesture but are not sure if they told the police.

Thirteen sailors were asked their opinion of Tsafendas. All told the author they never thought he could have been insane and that is what they told the police. They said the entire crew was asked the same question and all gave the same answer.

That Tsafendas was a Communist was stated by at least six men - Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis. These men also told the police that Tsafendas had joined the DSE, the military wing of the Greek Communist Party during the Greek Civil War.

As we have seen, a significant item of information given to the police by the crew was Tsafendas telling them that he had "played the fool" in order to evade service in the Portuguese Army. At least six men testified to this: Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas, Pouftis and Vasilakis, while it is very likely Vasilis Perselis did so, too. These crewmen also stated in personal interviews with the author that some of the men were asked if Tsafendas had served in an army or had any military training. According to his statement, Mavronas mentioned that Tsafendas had served in the Greek Army. This was wrong. Either Mavronas misunderstood what Tsafendas had told him or the policeman misunderstood Mavronas. Nevertheless, it shows that he, too, was asked the question. The South African police could easily have checked with the Portuguese Army whether Tsafendas was exempted from military service because he was insane.

The visit to the township was disclosed by at least five men - Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis. Mastromanolis and Pouftis, who had gone on the trip do not remember if they told the police about it but believe they most probably did.

Perhaps the most important information was that given by Alachiotis, Billis, Kambouris, Kantas and Vasilakis that Tsafendas had characterised any killing of Dr. Verwoerd as morally justifiable because of his tyranny. Tsafendas had used the philosophy of the ancient Greeks, that it was “a democratic man’s duty to remove the tyrant from power.” Pouftis was also present during this conversation but does not remember whether he mentioned it to the police. Aspras who was also in on the conversation, probably testified likewise.

According to the crew, Tsafendas’s theory regarding justifiable homicide, his mad play-acting, their visit to the township and the fact that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student” seemed of more importance and interest to the police than the sale of the gun by Mastromanolis and Mavronas. Men who were unaware of the four issues above were asked about them.

THE ISSUE OF THE MISSING STATEMENTS FROM THE ELENI

It is undisputable that statements have gone missing from the National Archives of South Africa. According to the Commission’s Report, “one hundred and five persons, including Tsafendas himself, gave oral evidence before the Commission.”³⁷⁶⁴ However, only forty-one of their statements were found in the archives and the missing statements included the records of Tsafendas’s two testimonies before the Commission. The important question is when these statements went missing, plus were they were available at the time to the Commission and to the Attorney-General?

³⁷⁶⁴ Report of the COE. Chapter I, Paragraph 4. December 1966. R.P. 16/1967. Pretoria.

It is inconceivable that fifteen men, although now aged in their late 60s to early 80s, could be mistaken about being questioned by the South African police. Mastromanolis's statement was found, but he insists that a statement was taken from everyone on board the Eleni. Even Emanuel Perselis and Ilias Kokkinos, who were not interviewed by the police, but were present in Venice, testified to the author that they clearly remember everyone being interviewed. Furthermore, most of these men have not seen or spoken to each other since 1966, yet all described to the author similar situations, comments and incidents from fifty years ago. The Tsafendas affair would have been the most memorable event in their seamen's lives and if some of the details had gone, the main issues remained in their minds.

The time differences between the statements also suggest that more men were questioned than those whose statements were found. The first recorded interview, according to the archives, was at 10.30 a.m. and was of Emanuil Mastromanolis, and the last was at 4.10 p.m. of Constantinos Kokkinidis. The other two were at 11.20 a.m. of Nikolaos Mavronas and at 2.30 p.m. of Captain Michalis Fountotos. The short statement of Dimitrios Zafiriadis does not have a time. Clearly, there is a big gap between each interview and according to the archived statements, the policemen took almost six hours to interview four people, or one hour and thirty minutes per person. However, it is abundantly clear from the length of the statements that the interviews could not have lasted more than twenty minutes each. That there were thirty-eight sailors to be interviewed makes perfect sense, starting early in the morning and finishing late in the afternoon, as testified by several of the men interviewed by the author.

The fact that South African policemen, probably three, were dispatched to Venice to do the interviews supports the argument that all the Eleni crew were interviewed. Would it have taken even one policeman six hours to question four people? There is also a three-hour gap between Mavronas's statement at 11.20 am and Captain Fountotos's at 2.30 p.m. Mavronas' statement is so short, his interview could not possibly have lasted more than ten-fifteen minutes. There is also a long gap – two hours - between Fountotos's 2.30 p.m. statement and that of Kokkinidis at 4.10 p.m. Fountotos's statement is also very brief and it is not possible that a policeman needed an hour and forty minutes to take it.

It stands to reason that the South African police would question everyone on the tanker who had been in contact with Tsafendas because of the many important issues relating to the Eleni, especially the fact that Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed there three days before the assassination. From those statements found in the archives it appears that only Kokkinidis was asked about that issue. The police questioned people with minimal contact with Tsafendas, such as James Johnston who had spoken to him for twenty minutes in his life and had nothing significant to say. They also spoke to people who had known Tsafendas two, three and more years ago, so would they not have questioned everyone who was in constant contact with him for almost one and half months up to just before the assassination? Even more so when Tsafendas had attempted to buy a gun, intended to escape with this tanker and more importantly, had discussed Dr. Verwoerd's possible death with them.

The fact that the police went all the way to Venice to question the Eleni witnesses shows their importance, yet only four statements were found in the archives. It is inconceivable that they then only interviewed four people out of the thirty-eight who were in contact with Tsafendas. Serious police work required that every single person be interviewed who had been in touch with Tsafendas shortly before the assassination, especially since Dr. Verwoerd's death was discussed among the crew. Apparently this is exactly what the South African police did, but there are no references to any of the other sailors apart from the four whose statements mentioned before. The question then is what happened to these statements.

They could have gone missing by chance, which is not impossible since evidence can go missing in any archives by accident. However, this creates the question, if they went missing by chance, why they were not used by the Commission, since if they went missing accidentally, that must have surely happened sometime after the conclusion of Tsafendas's case and not during it. It seems highly unlikely, if not impossible, that the police would lose some thirty-five statements soon after they took them. However, if they were in the possession of the Commission or the Attorney-General at the time, why they were not used? Nowhere in the Commission's Report or during the summary trial is there any reference to any of the information in these statements.

However, the fact that there is no mention of this evidence in the Commission's Report or that they were not used by the Attorney-General does not necessarily mean that they were not in their possession. Other evidence which evidently was in their possession was not used. This includes the fact that Tsafendas was exiled by Mozambique for twelve years, also that he was arrested by the Portuguese on two occasions in addition to those mentioned in the Report; namely in Lisbon in 1952 and in Beira in 1965. Also, the Commission for sure and probably the Attorney-General, too, were in possession of several statements by witnesses showing Tsafendas as a completely different person to the one described in the summary trial and in the Commission's Report. However, they were not used by any of them. Therefore, it is also possible that the statements were suppressed by these two bodies and not by the police.

A further question concerns the Eleni statements found in the archives. None contains the name of the policeman who conducted the interviews. All other statements are signed by the policeman who questioned the person concerned. The author is not in position to know why the policemen who conducted these interviews did not sign them. The issue of the missing statements will be discussed in detail later in this chapter and in chapter Six.

CONCLUSION REGARDING THE ELENI

As we have seen, the crew of the Eleni gave important information to the police about Tsafendas.

- He despised Dr. Verwoerd. He spat at a picture of him and denounced him as "Hitler's best student" because of the similarities between his national policies and those of Adolf Hitler.
- Three days before the assassination, Tsafendas told the sailors that a hypothetical killing of Dr. Verwoerd would have been justifiable because he was a tyrant and a dictator.
- He was a Communist and had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.
- He spoke about politics constantly and unreservedly opposed apartheid.
- He took a group of seamen to a township in Cape Town to show them the hardships caused to non-Whites by apartheid.
- The sailors believed Tsafendas was perfectly sane; none had noticed anything wrong with him.

All the above information would have been important to the police, but Tsafendas's remark about justifiable homicide was of paramount importance, given that the police and the Commission of Enquiry were trying to establish how Dr. Verwoerd's death was being discussed three days before the assassination. As we have already seen, the gossip about Dr. Verwoerd's reputed death was subject to intense speculation by the police and the Commission. Extraordinarily, none of the Eleni crew's statements taken in Venice would play any role in the case; neither in Tsafendas's summary trial nor the Commission of Enquiry. Why and how we will examine in the Commission chapter.

As for the fact that only four of the Eleni statements, plus Zafiriadis's short comment, out of thirty-eight statements taken, were found in the National Archives, this could mean only one thing: the statements were mislaid, either deliberately or by accident, the first more likely due to their importance and the fact that the South African police and General van den Bergh had withheld evidence from the judiciary before. It cannot be ruled out though that the statements were given to the Commission and to the Attorney-General and they did not use them and they then disappeared from the archives. Both the Attorney-General and the Commission had evidently suppressed important evidence about Tsafendas, as we will see.

Even if the statements disappeared accidentally through the passage of time, the fact remains that when they were available, they were ignored and not used. We will see in the next two chapters where and how these statements could have been used by the Attorney General and the Commission. The conclusion must be that they were either provided to the Attorney-General and the Commission and were suppressed by them or they were withheld from them. However, the most important issue here is not who withheld the information, but the fact that they were withheld and contributed to a distorted picture of Tsafendas and the assassination.

OTHER STATEMENTS FROM THIS DAY

CHARLES NISSIOTIS³⁷⁶⁵

I am the owner of Protea Dry Cleaners and Domestic Appliances, Pretoria. My wife, Evangeline, is the stepsister of Demitrio Tsafendas, who is alleged to have murdered Dr. Verwoerd.

During 1964 I met Tsafendas for the first time. He was unemployed at that time. I asked him to assist my wife in the cafe we owned at that time. He was however so lazy that my wife told him to leave within the first two days. I afterwards heard that he took up employment with Poole's Engineering, Pretoria. After that he never visited me and my wife again. My brother-in-law, Nick Vlachopoulos, sold some furniture of Tsafendas for R40 and gave the money to my mother-in-law. My mother-in-law sent the money to me in two instalments of R20 each to get bank drafts to be sent to Beira.

³⁷⁶⁵ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

To the end of 1964 or the beginning of 1965 I took out a bank draft for R20 at Volkskas Bank, Bosman Street, Pretoria and handed it to my mother-in-law, who forwarded same to Tsafendas in Beira. About two to three months later I took out another bank draft for R20 at the same bank. This draft was sent to Tsafendas in Beira. I cannot remember the address in Beira, but I think the address given by Tsafendas was c/o some Greek businessman there. In both cases Tsafendas wrote to my brother-in-law and requested the money to be sent to the address he furnished. As I knew Tsafendas he looked stupid but he was always friendly and happy. He used to talk a lot about the Bible and used to carry a Bible on him. I never saw him to be aggressive towards anybody. To me he appeared to be very absentminded. He was very fond of reading the daily English newspapers and could spend hours in doing so. He never discussed politics in my presence. As far as I could establish he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family.

Statement taken by J.W. Strumpher.

COMMENTS ON NISSIOTIS'S STATEMENT

Nissiotis was one of those family members who appeared before the Commission. They all testified that "Tsafendas never talked to the family about his tapeworm. According to them, he was definitely not insane. He always had proper accommodation in Pretoria."³⁷⁶⁶ Nissiotis had also told the police, "As far as I could establish he never mentioned the tapeworm story to any of the family."³⁷⁶⁷

Tsafendas was indeed employed for a very short time at Nissiotis's café, but laziness ³⁷⁶⁶ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³⁷⁶⁷ Charles Nissiotis statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

was not the reason he was dismissed. Upon his return to South Africa, Tsafendas stayed at Nissiotis's house, where his step-mother was also staying at the time. The family soon discovered that Tsafendas remained a passionate Communist and a critic of apartheid who was not afraid to declare his views. Worse, they discovered that he had brought with him a large amount of banned literature. Nissiotis had no problem with this, but his wife and Marika were terrified and pleaded with Tsafendas to throw it away. Tsafendas refused and was then asked by Evangeline (Evangelia) to leave her house. The same time, he was also asked by Evangelia to stop working at the café shop because she was afraid that sooner or later he would argue with a customer over politics and get them into trouble.³⁷⁶⁸

Nissiotis lied to the police about meeting Tsafendas for the first time in 1964. Tsafendas was a guest at his wedding to his half-sister in 1941 and gave them the gift of a coffee table which remained in Evangelia's possession until she died in 2016. He also lied when he said that Tsafendas never discussed politics in his presence. According to family members like Fotini Gavasiadis, Katerina Pnema and Mary Eendracht, the exact opposite was the case. Unlike his wife, Nissiotis was sympathetic to Tsafendas's political views, although he avoided making this public. However, like everyone else in the family, Nissiotis could not admit the truth, that Tsafendas was a committed Communist and diehard opponent of apartheid. Nissiotis liked Tsafendas and had a good relationship with him; much better than the one Evangelia had with her half-brother.

JOHANNES CHRISTIAAN OOSTHUIZEN³⁷⁶⁹

Cape Tramway, Tollgate, Cape Town.

I am an instructor at the above firm and live in No. 3 St. Michaelshof, Bond Street, Tamboerskloof.

On 12/29/65 Demitrio Tsafendas started as my apprentice conductor. He had to attend lectures and study certain bus routes in Deep River Depot. I keep a register of my observations to record the personal progress of each apprentice conductor. I remember ³⁷⁶⁸ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷⁶⁹ Johannes Christiaan Oosthuizen statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Tsafendas well. My registry shows an entry to his name and number, 10236. Every Tuesday pupils should report to me at 9.30 am. On such occasions I ask some questions to see how they progress. The entry show as follows: "Trainee is slow and it seems lazy too. He won't last long if he passes out. Slow in uptake. Will not last. Mind seems blank at times." The entry is in abbreviated form. I meant that he responds slowly to things that are explained to him, and had to be repeated over and over. His mind seemed to wander and he didn't concentrate on what he learned. It seemed as if he was lazy to learn the routes. I believed that he would not stay long if he did pass the test. I also believed that he may not pass the test at all.

Before he left, he said - "This is too much for me I cannot do it and I will resign." Other than his slow response, I did not at all get the impression that mentally anything was wrong with him. He is mentally normal. There are many rejected applicants because they are found to be of a bad standard. Tsafendas resigned from us on 1/12/66. He could not make the standards. He never had any political discussions or let him out against the State in my presence.

Statement taken by D.J.V. Troost. D/Sergt. 23505.

EDWARD CHARLES FURNESS³⁷⁷⁰

Duncanville, Vereeniging.

I was born at Vyffontein, Vanderbijlpark on 30.4.1910. I was employed at various mines as a miner, fitter and turner. I have no family and divorced. During 1949 I left for England Where I resided until 10.6.1966 when I returned to the R.S.A. Before I left for England I was granted a disability pension. While in England I occupied myself with small scale farming on hired ground. I was an honorary member of the North Middlesex Cricket Club in Hornsey, London North 8.

While being a member of the mentioned Club I met with so-called Neo-Labour ³⁷⁷⁰ Edward Charles Furness statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

Political party members. The club itself had nothing to do with politics but members of the Neo Labour Party frequented this club. I met several South Africans who emigrated to Britain who are or were members or supporters of that Political Party. I recollect the names of two of them i.e. Tennisson and David Gardener. The latter was an elected councillor of Hornsey, London. He was a member of the Neo Labour Political Party. Gardener is a European but Tennisson is an African.

The Neo-Labour Party frequently held political meetings and was more concerned with South African affairs than local politics in England. They were against the policies of the present Government in South Africa and made sure that their views were published in London Newspapers. I attended several meetings of this party and on each occasion they spent a lot of time condemning South Africa. The following persons are also members of the Party and I have seen them addressed meetings: Canon Collins, Barbara Castle, Ted Castle (Husband of Barbara), F. Brockway (Lord), Ian Me Kardo (M. P.), Ken Robertson (M.P.), Harold Wilson (M.P. Private member) George Brown (M.P.) Frederick Messenger (Sir) (M.P.) Tennisson, David Gardener. Tennisson and David Gardener were often the main speakers at these meetings.

About a week after the assassination of Dr. Verwoerd I saw the picture of the assassin in the newspapers. I identified the photo, as that of Tsafendikis whom I met during about 1960 at the stated club. Although his name was given in the newspapers as Tsafendas, I knew him as Tsafendikis, the name by which he was known by the Neo-Labour Party. I cannot say whether he was a member of this party but he was a regular visitor to the offices of the party and I have seen him in company of several members of the party, including David Gardener, I never saw him at any of their meetings, but I attended only some of these meetings.

The first time I met Tsafendas was during 1960 at the club. That was during the day and I was alone at the club. He came to me and introduced himself as Tsafendikis and as a Cape Coloured. The way he pronounced "Coloured" was clear to me that he was not a coloured from South Africa. I asked him what the object of his visit was, on which he replied that he requires my help to create a resistance to the regime of South Africa and mentioned Civil disobedience and anything that would get the South African regime out of power. I asked him who gave him the idea to come to me, and his reply was that members of the Neo Labour Party advised him to approach me. He mentioned names, such as Levy, Baily, Phillips, Jelley and Wilson. The latter is not the Prime Minister. They were all local members of the Party. I then told him to go whereupon he became aggressive, but left after a few harsh words. The conversation lasted only about five minutes and that was the last and only conversation I had with this man. The only thing that struck me about Tsafendikis were, that he was obviously not a coloured but rather an Assyrian. He was well dressed and appeared to be wealthy. I do not know when he arrived or when he left Britain, but after that incident I saw him on numerous occasions for several weeks hanging around the offices of the Neo Labour Party which are situated only about half a mile from the Club and on route to places I frequented.

At the time when Pratt endeavoured to assassinate the late Dr. Verwoerd at the Rand Easter Show in Johannesburg. When they received the news, the Neo Labour Party held a meeting in London at which it was decided to collect money for the defence of Pratt. I was approached for a donation but refused. I cannot say whether Tsafendikis was a member of the Neo Labour Party in England, but can say without hesitation and beyond doubt that he associated with that Party.

Statement taken by me at Vereeniging on 12.10.66 at 11 a.m.

(Indecipherable name) ... Capt.

(Indecipherable name) ... Nr. 20365 D/Sgt.

COMMENTS ON FURNESS'S STATEMENT

The person named here as Tennyson by Furness was the ANC representative in London, Tennyson Xola Makiwane. Tsafendas spoke extensively to Father Minas Constandinou about a member of the ANC he had met in London with whom he had a very good relationship. Father Minas does not remember the name, but Tsafendas also told him that the man was assassinated. Makiwane was assassinated in 1980. Tsafendas was surprised that the South African police knew so much about his activities outside South Africa, especially in London. It seems clear that most of this information came from Furness's statement.³⁷⁷¹ ³⁷⁷¹ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013.

DONALD NEVILLE MACKAY³⁷⁷²

E/M/A, City Tramways, Tollgate, Cape Town.

I am the personnel officer of City Tramways at above address, and I reside at 101 Costa Brava, Beach Road, Sea Point. On 12.11.1965 I interviewed D. Tsafendas, who approached me for employment as a conductor. He filled in form P.W. 1 in his own handwriting. Certain red writing in my own on this form. He had to be medically examined which examination he attended on 19.11.1965 and was found to be fit. He was to report for training on 24.11.1965, which he failed to do. He did however report on 29.12.1965, from which date he is considered to be a learner conductor. Then he was passed to the instructor Mr. Oesthuizen. Apart from signing him on, I merely asked him the essential question for Company records. I have noted his identity White – i.n. 963 081129 W, also Registration Certificate 203461, personal description and reasons for leaving previous employments –

(a) Table Bay Power Station – declared redundant, and

(b) Frazer and Chalmers – resigned. He resigned from us 12.1.66.

I remember that this man had a set of peculiar front teeth. They looked filed off and built up with silver or stainless steel.

Cape Town 12.10.1966

Statement made to me. (SGD.) D.J.V. Troost. 23505 Sergt.

PRESS REPORTS OF THE DAY

With a trial date fixed, newspaper coverage of Tsafendas diminished, though on October 12, the big story of the day was the fact that Nikolas Vergos, the man who had fought with Tsafendas at Mandini and a sought-after witness, was finally located. “KEY WITNESS FOUND” announced the front page of the Daily Dispatch,³⁷⁷³ while *The Cape Times*³⁷⁷⁴ front-paged “IMPORTANT WITNESS TRACED.” Mr Justice J.T. van Wyk, chairman of the Verwoerd Enquiry, had appealed to the media earlier for help in locating the sixty-one-year-

³⁷⁷² Donald Neville Mackay statement to the police, 12 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁷³ Daily Dispatch, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key witness found.’

³⁷⁷⁴ The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

old Greek-born Vergos, who was thought to have “vital information” regarding Tsafendas. Six hours later, Vergos walked into the office of the Rand Daily Mail in Johannesburg.³⁷⁷⁵ The Daily Dispatch and The Cape Times also reported that the scope of the Dr. Verwoerd inquiry had been widened to include the circumstances in which Tsafendas was granted permanent residence.³⁷⁷⁶

Regarding Vergos, even though he was labelled such an important witness by the Commission who had “vital information” regarding Tsafendas and the Commission got into a lot of trouble locating him, he was not asked to testify during Tsafendas’s summary trial. He gave a statement to the police and gave evidence before the Commission, but he was not asked by either the defence or the state to testify in the summary trial. The question is, why such an important and witness, according to the Commission, was not asked to testify in the summary trial. Of course we cannot tell for sure what the reason was, especially by looking at this incident independently. However, by looking, as we will do in the next chapter in the Summary Trial, and by placing this case together with many similar ones, we can see why Vergos was not asked to testify. Vergos was the man who asked his superior to fire Tsafendas as he was a communist³⁷⁷⁷ and denounced him to his superiors and to a security officer as “the biggest communist in the Republic of South Africa”³⁷⁷⁸ and a “communist bastard.”³⁷⁷⁹ In addition Vergos had argued with Tsafendas after Vergos had refused to pay two African workers he had illegally employed. Tsafendas had defended them and asked him to pay them and this is how the fight began.³⁷⁸⁰ The reason of their fight was not given by neither Tsafendas nor Vergos. However, given the fact that the police had questioned several workers at the canteen where the fight took place on September 9,³⁷⁸¹ it seems unlikely, but not of course impossible, that no one told them about it.

³⁷⁷⁵ The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

³⁷⁷⁶ Daily Dispatch, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd: Key witness found’; The Cape Times, 12 October 1966: 1, ‘Dr. Verwoerd Inquiry: Important witness traced.’

³⁷⁷⁷ Charles Edwin Woods statement to the police, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁷⁸ Johannes Jacobus Botha statement to the police, 15 September 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁷⁹ Jan Johannes Albertus Fourie statement to the police, 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

³⁷⁸⁰ Cleanthes Alachiotis in a personal interview, 29 September 2010; Nikolas Kambouris in a personal interview, 17 January 2014; Georgios Kantas in a personal interview, 11 January 2012; Michalis Vasilakis in a personal interview, 17 March 2016.

³⁷⁸¹ The Cape Times, 9 September 1966: 15, ‘Tsafendas in brawl in canteen.’

THURSDAY, 13 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

ROELOF ERASMUS SWIEGERS³⁷⁸²

White Male, Sidwell, Port Elizabeth.

I am employed at General Motors, Port Elizabeth at the testing department. Until 20/09/66 I lived in Durban and then came to Port Elizabeth. During my stay at Durban I met a Greek named Sideri. This person is already elderly. He was unemployed and stayed in Glen Ashley, Durban, but I do not remember his home address. He lives with his son.

The morning after the murder of the late Dr. Verwoerd, Mr. Sideri told me that he knew Tsafendas well. He knows his parents since he (Sideri) stepped ashore in Lourenço Marques during 1915 or 1917. He knows that Tsafendas is the son of a Greek and a black woman. That Tsafendas's father later married a white woman and Tsafendas then stayed with his father and the white woman in Pretoria where his father worked at Iscor. Tsafendas went to Middelburg later on, where he went to school. Tsafendas then left the country and he (Sideri) did not see him for 30 years until he ran into him about 18 months ago in Durban. Tsafendas then told him that he had travelled the world, and he also was in Russia. When Sideri ran into him in Durban, Tsafendas was staying at the "Old Man's Home" in Durban. Tsafendas did not speak with him about politics, but he is of the opinion that Tsafendas leaned towards the communist side. Tsafendas experienced lots of trouble during his travels because he was not in possession of a passport. The latter then went to Lisbon to get a passport since he was born in Lourenço Marques and thus qualifies for a Portuguese passport. There he also encountered a lot of trouble and the Portuguese government took him to Lourenço Marques to make sure that he was born there before they issued him a passport. In total, he stayed in Lisbon for three years.

Statement taken at my presence ... (Indecipherable name)

Port Elizabeth. 13.10.1966. 12 p.m.

³⁷⁸² Roelof Erasmus Swiegers statement to the police, 13 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Afskrif van vorm Z 204. NASA.

FRIDAY, 14 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

MICHAEL DAVID ERNEST NORTON³⁷⁸³

European male.

I am a journalist on the Cape Town staff (Cape Branch Editor) of the Post (Tel 3 26 73) and I reside at 30 Hancock Road, Steurhof, Cape Town (Tel 774567).

On the morning of 14.10.66 I accompanied Mr Gordon Winter to Thomas Boydell Buildings where he had to give evidence before the Commission of Mr Justice van Wyk. While waiting in the passage on the second floor, I came across Isaac Vallie, who is referred to in the article in the Post. I knew him. Vallie was accompanied by his brother Suleiman Vallie, to whom Mr Winter introduced me. After Mr Winter had gone to give evidence, the two Vallies came over to me and we started chatting, mainly about Tsafendas. Isaac seemed to be worried about the story in the Post about Tsafendas which was given to us by the Vallies. After a while it came out that his friends were upset and cross with him for having talked about Tsafendas. It was a casual chat and I did not question him. He mentioned no names and I did not ask him for any. Suleiman mentioned that in 1964 Tsafendas had come to his father and on that occasion posed as an Egyptian. This is all I have to tell.

(Signed) M.D.E. Norton

Taken by me at Cape Town this 14.10.66 at 4.10 pm.

(Indecipherable signature).

³⁷⁸³ Michael David Ernest Norton statement to the police, 14 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12. File: Die post aangelegenheid, NASA.

MONDAY, 17 OCTOBER 1966

STATEMENTS

JOHN PATRICE LEACH³⁷⁸⁴

I am an adult white male employed by Thomson, Watson & Co, Thibault House, Cape Town. On 24/7/66, the "Eleni," which is owned by Brays Shipping Co., London, called at Cape Town for repairs to the rudder. The vessel was on her way to the Persian Gulf but broke down and was brought in from High Seas by the tug Praia Grande, which left again on 27/7/66 for Luanda. My firm was asked to act as agents and if it was not for these repairs, she would not have called at Cape Town. She did not discharge anything here.

When the Eleni left Cape Town on 3/9/66 she went to the Persian Gulf where she called at Mina Al Ahmadi for orders. She left there again on 23/9/66 for Venice where she called on or about the 12th October, 1966. On her way to Venice, she also called at Suez on 5/10/66. At this stage I am unable to say whether she will ever call at Cape Town again. The "Eleni" was bound to call at Dubai, just for bunkers (?), stores (?) and water, but because of the needed repairs, she was brought to Cape Town. While at Cape Town, the crew members were allowed to go ashore and receive visitors.

(Signed) J.P. Leach

Statement taken by me ... (Indecipherable signature) D/Sgt. 17/10/66 10.10 am.

WILLEM NEL VISSER³⁷⁸⁵

No.29097 Sergeant.

I am a sergeant in the South African Police stationed at Durban Central where I was in charge of the Immorality section. On a date before the 11th of September I was spoken to ³⁷⁸⁴ John Patrice Leach statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Die 'Eleni.' NASA.

³⁷⁸⁵ Willem Nel Visser statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas, NASA.

by Mr. Brian Rudden who is connected to the Sunday Times as a reporter. Mr. Rudden wanted to know if I knew the alleged assassin - Mr. Tsafendas - of Mr. Dr. Verwoerd. I shared that I knew Tsafendas simply as an interpreter in the Regional Courts of Durban where he (Tsafendas) worked as interpreter in a fornication case I handled. Mr. Rudden wanted to know what Tsafendas's attitude towards the Immorality Law was and I notified him the following: "That Tsafendas have asked what people say when I arrest them under the Immorality Law and whether I catch a lot of these cases. That Tsafendas was interested no more and no less in such business than a normal member of the public is interested when they hear what kind of cases I deal with."

Mr. Rudden also wanted to take a portrait of me to publish in the "Sunday Times" which I refused to allow, because of Captain du Toit, my commanding officer, had not given permission. The report of Mr. Rudden is mere sensation-ism and untrue.

Durban. 17/10/66. 4.35 p.m.

Statement taken by (Indecipherable signature) ... 29097 Sgt.

JAN ABRAHAM SWANEPOEL³⁷⁸⁶

I'm a Lieutenant in the South African Police and in charge of the Diamond Division, Cape Town.

On 20/01/1966 I received a completed application form from the Marine Diamond Corporation, Cape Town in respect of Demitris Tsafendas, in which he applied for employment at the company. Records were checked in my office and it was found that he was not listed as an illegal diamond trade suspect. After that, the records in the office of the Investigation division, Cape Town, were also checked and it was established that there is no such a person registered with criminal records and that there is no such a person being sought for any criminal offenses. On the same day the Head Protection Officer of Marine Diamond Corporation was advised that there is no objection in employing him (Tsafendas).

³⁷⁸⁶ Jan Abraham Swanepoel statement to the police, 17 October 1966. K150, Vol. 3, File: Durban, NASA.

Details about Demitris Tsafendas, along with a list of other employees, was sent to the South African Criminal Bureau, Pretoria, for inquiry and on 21/02/1966 I was notified in writing that there is no criminal convictions registered against Demitris Tsafendas.

Applicants for employment with diamond companies are not seen nor spoken to in person by members of the Diamond Division. After confidential inquiries locally, a copy of a report is sent to any company, also the headquarters of the Diamond Division in Kimberley, where records of illegal diamond trafficking suspects are held for the entire Republic. In cases where it is suspected that an applicant may pose a security risk, inquiries are then also extended to the Security Police.

Cape Town. 17.10. 1966.

ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE COLLECTED BY THE POLICE

STATEMENTS WITH NO DATES

The following statements were taken by the police, but they bore no dates. The first is by Albert Vercueil. This particular statement was definitely taken by the police as he was also interviewed by the Commission of Enquiry and the statement containing his evidence to the Commission was found. Thus it is safe to assume that this is the one taken by the police. The statement was taken in Pretoria, but it is undated, while the name of the Commissioner of Oaths is also missing.

ALBERT VERCUEIL³⁷⁸⁷

I work at F. A. Poole, Pretoria as foreman and reside at 669 17th Avenue, Rietfontein, Pretoria.

I know Demitrio Tsafendas. He began working at FA Poole on 7.2.64, in Pretoria as a welder and was in the firm's service to 10.7.64. His salary was 77 cents per hour. During the period he worked here he was absent from the service for 3 full days and 3 half days. I did not find the accused as a very good worker, but will say that he was an intelligent worker mainly because he quickly grasped when work was entrusted to him. However, I found him very sloppy in his work. I found him to be very friendly, but very opinionated. He would not, for example work according to the assignment, but as he decides.

The accused worked with several other people, but he could not agree with one of them. Accused was well-built and strong, and bullied the other Portuguese workers. He had fights with several white workers. I often admonished him about his sloppy work and because he always quarrelled with the other workmen. He was then usually very cocky and always placed the blame on the other party.

On July 10, 1964 I beseeched him for the sloppy work he performed, and when he began to mumble again, I told him to come to my office. In my office I told him: "Demetri you are no good to me. You are always causing trouble in the shops, and your work is no good. You must leave today. "He became extremely angry and put his finger in my face and it looked like he was going to attack me. He then said "You are just like your bloody Government. I will kill your Prime Minister yet." I told him to go or I'll call the police to remove him. Thereafter I never saw him again.

³⁷⁸⁷ Albert Vercueil statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

During the period he worked here he showed no signs of mental disorder or any other abnormality. Personally I would say that he is an intelligent person and completely mentally balanced. I now show some tools and work produced by the accused personally and performed to give you an idea of the degree of initiative he laid to the day.

MARTINHUS PETRUS VAN WYK³⁷⁸⁸

Proclamation Hill, Pretoria.

I am an adult, white male residing at the above address. For the past 37 years I have been employed at "F.A. POOLE" Engineering works, Pretoria West. During 1964, Dimitrio Tsafendas was also employed at the firm. He was a fitter and also did welding. He was quiet by nature and did not easily talk to us employees. He often spoke to the Bantu people. On a certain day he had a quarrel with one of the Bantu. I do not know which Bantu it was. I heard that the accused told the Bantu he would stab him with a knife, or words to that effect. The accused came across normal. He told me that he mastered various languages and that he travelled abroad extensively. After a few months I noticed that the accused no longer worked with the firm. I have never seen him again.

AUGUST KAREL OESTRICH³⁷⁸⁹

I am employed at F.A. POOLE, Pretoria as a machine shop foreman. I know Dimitrio Tsafendas, who also worked for this firm. Dimitrio used to speak to me in German and I found him very polite, fairly intelligent, well-spoken in both English and German, very courteous and quiet. On one occasion he told me to complain about another man who ³⁷⁸⁸ Marthinus Petrus van Wyk statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁸⁹ August Karel Oestrich statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Dimitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

interfered with his work. He then spoke with a raised and excited voice. This was the only time I saw him in a rage and excited. He never spoke to me about any politics.

I never noticed anything abnormal about him, except that he had a strange look when I looked him straight in the eyes. He never gave me the impression that he was suffering from any mental disease. The day when he left our firm he told that he had a sister in Lourenço Marques and that he was going to see her. I never saw him again.

BERNARD MICHAEL GREENBERG³⁷⁹⁰

E/M/A. Assembly Hotel, Main Rd. Green Point.

I am the manager of the above Hotel. On the 7th of July 1966 Dimitrio Tsafendas answered to an advert I had in the papers for a receptionist. He called on me, filled in a form half-way but I decided not to take him on and told him that he would not serve my purpose. The half-filled in form I now hand over to the police. I had a bit of conversation with him. He mentioned that he had been in some kind of embroidery business in Portugal or Spain, and also in Lourenço Marques! He also mentioned that he was a teacher of sorts. He said he spoke various languages of which I have jotted down on his application form i.e. "English, French, Italian, Portuguese + Greek." He dated his form the 6th - I had to change it to the 7th, which was the day of the interview. I think that he had ...³⁷⁹¹

NICK VLACHOPOULOS³⁷⁹²

I am the owner of the Proclamation Hill Store, Pretoria West and married to the stepsister of DEMETRIO TSAFENDAS. During 1964 TSAFENDAS left the following articles at a second hand furniture shop in Pretoria West to be sold: 1 table, 4 chairs, 2 Big chairs, 1 Divan, 1 Bed. In the meantime TSAFENDAS disappeared from Pretoria and we lost trace of him. To ³⁷⁹⁰ Bernard Michael Greenberg statement to the police, n.d. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁷⁹¹ The document ended in that manner stating s.r.s (see reverse side), but there was nothing further.

³⁷⁹² Nick Vlachopoulos statement to the police, October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, File: Verklarings Demitrio Tsafendas. NASA.

the end of 1964 I received a letter from him in Beira requesting that the money for which his furniture was sold be sent to him. He gave his address in Beira as c/o Olimpia Court. At this time only the table and 4 chairs had been sold for R20. I gave the money to my mother in-law to forward to him. During the beginning of 1965 the rest of the furniture was sold for R20.00 and I also handed this money to my mother in-law. TSAFENDAS also left a locked pedal cycle at my shop which is still in my storeroom. I never associated with TSAFENDAS and know very little about his associations and activities.

Statement taken by ... Indecipherable name ... Commissioner of Oaths

Date: 2 ... (Indecipherable number) /10/66. Place: Pretoria

COMMENTS ON VLACHOPOULOS'S STATEMENT

Nick Vlachopoulos was also questioned by the Commission of Enquiry on October 21, 1966. He stated that Tsafendas “habitually ate a huge amount of food but never mentioned a tape worm.”³⁷⁹³ According to Vlachopoulos’s sister Fotini Gavasiadis and son Mike, as well as Tsafendas’s half-sister Katerina Pnema and first cousin, Mary Eendracht, Vlachopoulos had lied, for obvious reasons, stating that he “never associated with Tsafendas and knew very little about his associations and activities.” On the contrary, Vlachopoulos had a very good relationship with Tsafendas. He had heard about him from his wife, Eleni, Tsafendas’s half-sister, long before and was very anxious to meet him. That was why he had followed Marika, Victor and his wife to Lourenço Marques in 1963.³⁷⁹⁴

It was Vlachopoulos who gave money to J.J. van den Berg, an official of the South African embassy in Lourenço Marques, to turn a blind eye to the fact that Tsafendas was on South Africa’s Stop list and to give him an entry visa. Furthermore, Vlachopoulos gave Tsafendas a rent-free apartment in Pretoria for eight months and Tsafendas regularly worked voluntarily in his café. Vlachopoulos often discussed politics with Tsafendas, as he ³⁷⁹³ COE report regarding visit to family members of Demitrio Tsafendas, Pretoria, 21 October 1966. K150, Vol. 12, Sub file: 5, Subject: Algemeen. NASA.

³⁷⁹⁴ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

sympathised with his ideas, but he never discussed issues in public and insisted that Tsafendas do the same.³⁷⁹⁵

MISSING STATEMENTS

As already stated, several statements and other documents have gone missing from the National Archives of South Africa regarding Tsafendas's case. They include statements by Patrick O'Ryan (discussed earlier in this chapter), Eleni Vlachopoulos and Evangelia Nissiotis, Tsafendas's half-sisters, Tsafendas's statement to General van den Bergh, Tsafendas's two testimonies to the Commission of Enquiry into Verwoerd's death etc.³⁷⁹⁶

Of course we are not in position to know which other ones have disappeared because there are no references to any other statements. It must also be noted that evidence relating to the Tsafendas case are not the only ones missing from the NASA. Important evidence has disappeared in several other cases, such as for example the Ahmed Timol original inquest, where 600 pages have gone missing.³⁷⁹⁷

This suggests that there was a systematic removal of documents from the archives. Researcher and filmmaker Liza Key and Dr. James Sanders, journalist, author and researcher specialising in South African affairs and history, told the author that in the early 1990s, with apartheid on the verge of collapse, the South African Security Police burned piles of documents in order to destroy evidence contradicting official verdicts, as well to protect themselves, their witnesses and their secret informants.³⁷⁹⁸

Liza Key said about the missing documents from the National Archives:

“Access to government archives in South Africa is a frustrating business. Researchers are subjected to restricted access to the archive by, for example, the Department of Justice and have to go through lengthy bureaucratic manoeuvrings to find - when they are finally ³⁷⁹⁵ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015; Mike Vlachopoulos in a personal interview, 14 April 2016.

³⁷⁹⁶ Mary Eendracht in a personal interview, 9 October 2014; Fotini Gavasiadis in a personal interview, 6 May 2015; Katerina Pnema in a personal interview, 30 March 2015.

³⁷⁹⁷ Nicolson (Daily Maverick), 12 October 2017, 'Timol Inquest: He was murdered but culprits are dead, court rules.'

³⁷⁹⁸ Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 November 2016; Dr. James Sanders in a personal interview, 4 June 2016.

given permission to view the holdings - that vital documents are missing, have been redacted or intentionally destroyed. Literally tons of top secret security police documents were incinerated in the early 1990's. Housed in government diesel they smouldered away for days on the police rugby field in Johannesburg. According to former security branch members, the order to destroy was given by then Minister of Police, Heunis Kriel to protect the names of their informers. The few police files that survive are in the National Archive but names and reference numbers on flimsy dust covers that promise to unlock secrets of the past, are empty inside."³⁷⁹⁹

Piers Pigou, International Crisis Group's Senior Consultant for Southern Africa and TRC Investigator, told Liza Key about the destruction of police documents and the state of the South African National Archives: "... we've also seen significant numbers of records being destroyed... Records that were found by the TRC's own archival investigation team have subsequently gone missing [from the National Archives of South Africa] - records of the security establishment and so forth."³⁸⁰⁰

Yasmin Sooka, a TRC Commissioner, told Liza Key, "The Truth Commission in South Africa did have quite extraordinary powers. It had the power to search and seize information and of course in the South African case that was really necessary because the shredding machines were very, very busy as the former State was destroying records."³⁸⁰¹

Simanga, head of Soweto Security Branch and former MK rebel, told Liza Key about the destruction of the police documents by the police:

"The Security Police and the Bureau of State Security, which was called BOSS at that time, destroyed thousands and thousands of documents that they had in their possession. They used to keep meticulous records of activists in the country. But now towards the formation of the Transitional Executive Council they destroyed all the documentation. And it's not a thousand pages or five thousands of pages, its millions of pages that they destroyed...

Well, they were trying to hide the systematic ways of their operation. The systematic way that they used to kill people. There were people who just disappeared. And they have records of who they killed. That is what they were hiding. They operated exactly like Nazi ³⁷⁹⁹ Liza Key in a personal interview, 6 November 2016.

³⁸⁰⁰ Piers Pigou to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

³⁸⁰¹ Yasmin Sooka to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

Germany. Remember, towards the end of World War 2, when Hitler saw that Berlin was about to be taken over, the concentration camps and all these places where people were kept, he ordered them destroyed. That's exactly what they did, to hide evidence."³⁸⁰²

General Johan van der Merwe, Former Head of the Apartheid Security Police and Chief of Police, told Liza Key about the destruction of police files:

"Well... you know... you know... it was such a problem to us when the amnesty hearings started because we had no records at our disposal... and the reason why that was done [the destruction of police files] was only to protect our informers...because in all these files, information, reports... were filed in the files. Although they used code-names for the informers the circumstances were such that any person reading the files would immediately have recognized that this can only be that that person was present. And we were afraid that should that [information] fall into the hands of the ANC many of our informers would have been exposed and that would have been the end - not only their careers - but in many cases their lives."³⁸⁰³

Asked by Liza Key "who gave the order for the destruction of files?" General van der Merwe replied, "That order actually came from the Minister Adriaan Vlok. He was not a Minister at that time. It was Heunis Kriel who was Minister at that time. Heunis Kriel last Minister of Law and Order."³⁸⁰⁴

Paul Erasmus, former Security Branch policeman, told Liza Key about the destruction of police files:

"Political events overtook us. There was a big destruction of the entire filing system at John Vorster Square [+ 1989/90] which was something like nine hundred thousand personnel files, weighing tons, tens of tons maybe more. Huge steel filing cabinets... In the mid-80s, in fact, that filing system became an engineering problem and they had to bring government PWD engineers in because it looked like the filing system was going to fall out of the building. That a side of the building was going to collapse, which would have meant that the public of Johannesburg would have been subjected to something like nine hundred thousand personnel files of top secret documents lying on the M1 highway..."

³⁸⁰² Simanga to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

³⁸⁰³ General Johan van der Merwe to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

³⁸⁰⁴ General Johan van der Merwe to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

In 89/90 the main filing system at John Vorster Square as I mentioned was destroyed. It took days, if not weeks. The filing system was sanitized but some of it remained intact. Probably ninety percent was gutted out by hard labour prisoners were brought in from Johannesburg prison. They parked the trucks in the Security Branch basement and the documents went... hundreds of thousands of files, sub files, all top secret. Secret or top secret files went to the Police Sports grounds at Arthur Bloch Park and were burnt with government diesel. Literally took days. I personally witnessed it.

Well as I mentioned these documents were taken to the police rugby field at Arthur Bloch Park which is still the Police Rugby field in Newlands. They [the docs] were burnt next to the rugby which took days. Tons and tons of documents. The reason that so much documentation existed was - apart from an obsession to document everything - we didn't have computers. One can only imagine the fear of these documents becoming public, because it wasn't only what was happening on the one side, this was a record of what was happening on the other side. Amongst these documents would have been details of who were the informers in the ANC head office, in Lusaka or London or whatever. Going all the way to the right-wing on the other side because we were investigating the right wing as well."³⁸⁰⁵

In addition, Paul Erasmus told Liza Key about the treatment of documents he lent to the TRC:

"I am just amazed to find that I have got anything original left, the way it's been pillaged and plundered by the TRC. I had to go down to Cape Town to fetch them and it was just a disaster. We got ten times more stuff back than what I actually gave them but it was hundreds of unnecessary photocopies. Documents disappeared. I don't know who the TRC worked with and what they did with the papers but I certainly registered my extreme discontent. I gave them an inventory of documentation- original documentation and things that I had written which is quite considerable and I got back literally as you can see, this now is how I got it back."³⁸⁰⁶

Another possibility is that this evidence in Tsafendas's case was suppressed by General van den Bergh and the police and was never given to the Commission or to the Attorney-General. This would not be surprising since it is something that the police and van den Bergh himself had repeatedly done. That General van den Bergh, who was in charge of ³⁸⁰⁵ Paul Erasmus to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

³⁸⁰⁶ Paul Erasmus to Liza Key, n.d. Liza Key's Personal Collection.

the investigation, attempted to downplay and omit from the Commission Tsafendas's Communist beliefs and political activities seems to be in line with the disappearance of the statements. Since he had already withheld information about Tsafendas's Communism, it seems logical he would seek to withhold other important information. It would not have been the first or last time that the general withheld evidence from the judiciary. For a detailed account of General van den Bergh's possible role with the missing evidence, see chapter Six, The Commission of Enquiry, page 1875.

Another person who was very probably questioned by the police, although no statement was found in the NASA, is Dr. E.L. Fisher, a psychiatrist and a United Party MP. Dr. Fisher was the first doctor to treat Dr. Verwoerd after Tsafendas's attack in Parliament. We know this because the doctor gave a detailed account of his actions to the South African press. He told the Daily Dispatch, "We did everything we could to stop the bleeding. We gave mouth-to-mouth breathing and tried artificial respiration... we kept on treating him and trying respiratory treatment ... but by then he had no pulse at all. It was hopeless."³⁸⁰⁷ Other doctors who rushed to help Dr. Verwoerd, like Dr. Venter, Dr. Radford and Dr. van der Verwe, were questioned by the police and their statements were found in the archives. However, it should be noted that no statements were found in the Archives from two other doctors who were present, G. de V Morrison and Maud Clark, which could mean that not all doctors at the assassination scene were questioned or that statements made by these two doctors also went missing.

What makes Dr. Fisher's possible statement of some importance is what he told Die Vaderland the day after the assassination. He said, "It was clear that the assassin must have received training in the art of handling a knife. Each time, the knife slipped through the ribs, showing that it was not handled haphazardly as a usual stabbing would be carried out."³⁸⁰⁸ Later the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's death wrote in its final report:

"The doctor who carried out the post-mortem examination informed the Commission that there were no grounds for the rumour that the wounds had been inflicted by an expert stabber. He described them as quite ordinary. The Commission had the opportunity of ³⁸⁰⁷ Daily Dispatch, 7 September 1966: 1, 'Dr. Verwoerd assassinated.'

³⁸⁰⁸ Crowd and Revo, 1967: 20.

*inspecting all the photographs showing the position and extent of the wounds and is in agreement with this opinion.”*³⁸⁰⁹

The author agrees with the Commission’s conclusion and the issue of whether Tsafendas was an “expert stabber” is discussed later on the Commission of Enquiry Chapter. However, it seems most unlikely that the police would fail to question a doctor and an MP who was present at the assassination and had rushed to help Dr. Verwoerd, particularly after the doctor’s reported comments on the knife handling.

Finally, Panagiotis Peroglou and Elias Constantaras stated to the author that they were questioned by the police, but their statements were not found in the archives. This is what they remember telling the police:

PANAGIOTIS PEROGLOU

Peroglou met Tsafendas in Mary Scott’s boarding house where he would take his meals. He remembers being questioned at his shop sometime after the assassination, but does not remember the exact day nor by how many policemen. He does not remember what he was asked by the police nor what he told them, but he believes he must have told them everything he remembered about Tsafendas. His memory is of Tsafendas being “very well mannered, especially with women and elderly people... very talkative and friendly ... he had a lot of respect for women. He would bring them a chair or he would offer his chair ... he was very well educated, especially about Greece’s history and Christianity ...” Peroglou “never got the impression that he might be insane. He never did or said anything to make us think he was insane. He was definitely sane.” Peroglou does not remember Tsafendas talking politics.³⁸¹⁰

ELIAS CONSTANTARAS

Constantaras also met Tsafendas in Mary Scott’s boarding house and became a good friend. He clearly remembers being interviewed by “two or three policemen” who visited him at his work “two or three days after the assassination.” One of the policemen had a portable typewriter and typed his statement, which he signed at the end of the questioning

³⁸⁰⁹ Chapter II D, Paragraph 12.

³⁸¹⁰ Panagiotis Peroglou in a personal interview, 6 June 2016.

Constantaras does not remember exactly what he told the police, but says he “must have told them everything” he knew, for instance that Tsafendas talked constantly about politics and that he had fought with the Communists in the Greek Civil War.

Constantaras is certain he mentioned that Tsafendas called Dr. Verwoerd “Hitler’s best student.” He said, “I remember saying this because they asked me why he called him that and I said, ‘I don’t know, he did not say, I just overheard him saying it.’” Constantaras said, “I had to say it because there were others present at the time and I knew that they would have told the police about it, so it would have looked bad on me if I had kept it out. He (Tsafendas) had told us that Dr. Verwoerd was doing to the Africans what Hitler did to the Jews, but I couldn’t say this to the police and fortunately they did not ask me anything else about it.” Constantaras remembers talking about Tsafendas’s time in the boarding house, but not the details. He does not remember what else he was asked or said.

Tsafendas had given Constantaras a copy of Jean-Paul Sartre’s “Anti-Semite and Jew”, and as for his mental state, he remembers him as being “perfectly fine. He was not insane. None of us ever got the impression that he could be insane ... I was impressed by the way he was talking ... he talked very nicely, he knew how to speak properly. He sounded like an educated man ... he was very friendly and easy-talking with everyone ...” Constantaras does not remember if he told any of this to the police.³⁸¹¹

OTHER DOCUMENTS COLLECTED BY THE POLICE

The archives also contain several letters, memoranda and reports from various institutions, but most of them contain repetition and information we have already seen, or information of no relevance to the case. However, the following are documents of some importance.

THE GRAFTON STATE HOSPITAL REPORT

On September 16, 1966, the US embassy in Cape Town gave to the South African authorities a report on Tsafendas by the Grafton State Hospital, North Grafton, Massachusetts, USA.³⁸¹² This document later became available to the Commission of Enquiry and was mentioned in ³⁸¹¹ Elias Constantaras in a personal interview, 11 April 2015.

³⁸¹² Letter of the USA Embassy in Cape Town to the South African Security Branch, 3 October 1966. Correctional Service. Subject: Demitrio Tsafendas. File: 80/0043 A123 Vol. 1. NASA.

its final report. The Grafton document is of major importance since it reveals that Tsafendas had “faked mental illness” in the past, something that was not revealed during the trial and received very little attention from the Commission of Enquiry.

Tsafendas was admitted to this hospital on March 27, 1946 and remained there until July 31, 1947. The five-page hospital report, which has two appendices listing his movements in the United States, stated that when he was first admitted, Tsafendas “thought he had a tapeworm” and was “hardly convinced he hasn’t,” but he was “fairly co-operative and in good contact with the environment.” The report also stated that that Tsafendas had told the US Immigration authorities he would commit suicide if they deported him, and that “he faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings of ships.” Furthermore, according to the report, Tsafendas deteriorated in Grafton as time went on. He became “very agitated, assaultive and showed delusions and had to be put in seclusion at times.” On December 12, 1946, he was diagnosed with “schizophrenia, hebephrenic type, with deterioration: prognosis poor.”

The report also contains extensive references by Tsafendas to a man named Thomas Tuff. According to the report, Tsafendas talked often about this man, who he said was a missionary of the Christian Church and had a big influence on him. Years later, Tsafendas spoke at length to Father Minas Constandinou, Father Spiros Randos, Patrick O’Ryan and Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis about a man named Tom, who he said he met at a hospital in the USA. He told these witnesses that Tom was a missionary of the Christian Church and the one who introduced him to the sect. He told them Tom claimed to have a tapeworm inside him which ate his food. Tsafendas did not believe this story and concluded that Tom made it up in order to be found insane and exempted from service in the American military, since this was during the Second World War. Nevertheless, Tsafendas also told these witnesses that he copied Tom’s tapeworm story and used it as his own. Naturally, Tsafendas did not tell the hospital doctors about Tom and the tapeworm and the hospital report makes no mention of it. Tsafendas told the story to O’Ryan and about thirty years later to the priests on separate occasions but with exactly the same details.³⁸¹³

The report concludes with an account of Tsafendas’s “clinical course” at the hospital, stating that he smeared the walls with faces, claimed to hear voices from the radiators, and ³⁸¹³ Father Minas Constandinou in a personal interview, 6 February 2013; Bishop Ioannis Tsafaridis in a personal interview, 19 July 2015.

was disoriented as to place and situation. It said, “He is wont to assume silly, grimacing expressions and is prone to misidentify the attendants and the examiner.” The last paragraph of the report stated that a course of electric shock treatment had been started and Tsafendas had shown improvement; he was no longer in seclusion and was oriented as to place and person but not as to time. It said “He could safely be deported to his native country, accompanied by one attendant.” The last line of the report said, “Diagnosis: schizophrenia hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved.”³⁸¹⁴

1941 REPORT BY THE COMMISSIONER FOR IMMIGRATION AND ASIATIC AFFAIRS

This is a report about Tsafendas written by the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs in 1941 and sent to the Commissioner of the South African Police, thus clearly it was in the police files. The report concerns Tsafendas’s appearance in court accused of being in South Africa illegally because no permit for permanent residence had been issued to him. A fine was imposed, which he paid. He was then given a temporary permit and released. The report states that Tsafendas’s application for permanent residence was refused after the South African Consul-General in Lourenço Marques advised the police that Tsafendas was a “half-caste” and had been dismissed from employment at a kiosk in Portuguese South Africa (Mozambique) on account of his Communist leanings.³⁸¹⁵ ³⁸¹⁴ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

³⁸¹⁵ Report of the Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, 14 October 1941. K150, Vol. 3, File: W.D. 10/10/4102. Subject: Enquiry regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis. NASA.

CONCLUSION ABOUT THE POLICE INVESTIGATION

In the course of this chapter, we have looked at all the statements taken by the police during their investigation into Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. In total, 116 statements were found in the National Archives of South Africa, although many other witnesses were questioned, such as Patrick O'Ryan and the crew of the Eleni, whose statements were not found. Most importantly, we have seen Tsafendas's own words in the two statements he gave to the police while he was in custody. In clear and forthright terms, Tsafendas stated that he killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons. He said he was "disgusted" with his policies, considered him not to be "representative of all South African people" and wanted to see someone "who would represent all South African people," and he believed that by killing him "a change of policy would take place."

Several witnesses testified that Tsafendas was a Communist who opposed apartheid and considered Dr. Verwoerd to be a tyrant, a dictator and "Hitler's best student" since he was applying some of Hitler's policies to the non-White South Africans. Tsafendas himself admitted that he had been a member of the South African Communist Party. Witnesses also testified that Tsafendas had joined the Greek Communist Party and fought in the Greek civil war as a member of the party's military wing, the DSE.

Nowhere in either of his statements does Tsafendas mention a tapeworm or say anything that would suggest he was schizophrenic. He stated clearly that it was his own idea to kill Dr. Verwoerd, that no-one asked him to do it, and that he did it because he thought "a change of policy would take place" and "it was the right thing to do." The fact that not one of the 116 people questioned by police mentioned the tapeworm is of major significance since the defence at Tsafendas's summary trial would claim the tapeworm was central to Tsafendas's existence, that he had hosted it since he was a child and that it controlled his life. Tsafendas spoke about the tapeworm to all members of his defence team, plus the psychiatrists for his defence and for the state. Yet he had never mentioned it anywhere else up till then. Not a single person was aware that Tsafendas believed he had a tapeworm, not even his family. Tsafendas told no one all those years but suddenly, while in custody, he started telling everyone about a tapeworm.

Statements made to the police during their investigation portray Tsafendas as a Communist, someone who talks constantly about politics, an opponent of apartheid, colonialism and slavery, who strongly supports the independence of Mozambique. He is described as intelligent, well-read and knowledgeable. Witnesses say he is compassionate and though poor himself, gives money to people in need, such as poor Whites in Durban and his flatmate, John Bornman. The statements are compatible with what Tsafendas himself told the police and with what was said by witnesses interviewed by the author who were not questioned by the police.

There are also contradictory statements by witnesses. Many described Tsafendas as well-mannered and polite, while others considered him selfish and messy. Since social behaviour is a subjective matter, it is not surprising that different people formed different opinions of the man. Several also testified that Tsafendas discussed politics with them while others claimed that he did not. It is perfectly normal that a person would not talk about politics to every person he met, especially in Tsafendas's case, when his views opposed those of most White South Africans at the time. There were certainly others who talked politics with Tsafendas, but did not tell the police out of fear or to protect him.

A very important issue is what happened to Tsafendas while he was in custody, how he was "punished" brutally and systematically by the South African police. This unprecedented physical and psychological torture is something that has never been discussed before. We also saw in this chapter how Tsafendas, although initially he maintained to the police that he had killed Dr. Verwoerd for political reasons, later told his defence that a tapeworm controlled his life.

A factor of crucial importance concerned PIDE, the Portuguese security police. From Lisbon, the Director of PIDE in Portugal ordered the PIDE office in Mozambique not to reveal to the South African police any information "indicating Tsafendas as a partisan for the independence of Mozambique." It hid the fact that PIDE had held a file on Tsafendas (Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis) since 1938, containing details of his activities since then, including his five arrests for political reasons and the fact that he was banned from entering Mozambique from 1951 to 1963 due to his Communist and anti-colonial activities.³⁸¹⁶ The fact that PIDE had a file on Tsafendas has remained unknown till now. However, as we have also seen, the South African police were warned of the Portuguese attitude by the South African embassy in Lisbon only two days after the assassination. Stating that Tsafendas was a Communist who had been arrested several times by the Portuguese police, the embassy told their national police investigators that the Portuguese authorities would attempt to downgrade or hide Tsafendas's political activities.

³⁸¹⁶ Secret Criminal Record n° 10.415 of Demitrios Tsafantakis. PIDE/DGS, SC, CI (2) 6818, NT 7461, PNA. ANTT.

What puzzled many people about the assassination, both at the time and long after, was how Tsafendas managed to secure and hold onto a job in Parliament if he was "insane." In the first place, as we have seen and we will see later in detail, Tsafendas had three very good references. One was from Limasollu Naci College in Istanbul, one from Fries & Son in Frankfurt and one from Dimitris Apostolidis, a financial supporter and member of the ruling National Party. More germane, but a question that was never asked, was how Tsafendas managed to work for five or six months in a demanding teaching job at Limasollu Naci, the most prestigious private language college in Istanbul. Tsafendas spoke about it in his statement, the police must have had the reference, and his Istanbul employment was also reported in the South African Press.

However, no-one seemed to bother, then or later, –to check on the college and his work there. Had anyone done so, it would have been quickly apparent that six months' teaching foreign languages was much more demanding of any person, whatever his mental state, than carrying messages and bringing meals to newsmen in the Cape Town Parliament. His Istanbul employment, was also a major contradiction to what was stated at his summary trial. Neither the police nor the Press at the time paid much attention to the college and this information was just briefly mentioned.

Important information was also given to the police by the South African embassy in Washington – that Tsafendas had been hospitalised in the United States as unstable but not insane. The South African police were also given Tsafendas's medical report from Grafton State Hospital in Massachusetts, USA, which contained information regarding his time in the United States and his various hospitalisations there. The Grafton hospital's diagnosis of Tsafendas was "schizophrenia-Hebephrenic type. Condition: Improved." However, the report also contained significant information regarding Tsafendas's medical history -- the fact that in 1943 he had "faked mental illness because he was afraid to ship out because of the numerous leakings (sinkings) of ships."³⁸¹⁷

What's more, at least six of the Eleni crew testified that Tsafendas had also faked mental illness to avoid army service. As we have seen, these statements, along with others, ³⁸¹⁷ Grafton State Hospital report regarding Demetrios Tsafandakis, n.d. Demitrio Tsafendas Mediese Leer A125. NASA.

have gone missing from NASA, but the fact remains that they were taken at the time by the South African police. As we will see in ensuing chapters on the Summary Trial and the Commission of Enquiry, the vast majority of this information gathered by the South African police would not be used in court and would not be publicised. Only a very, very small amount would play a role at the Commission of Enquiry and almost none at all at Tsafendas's summary trial. Why and how will be examined in the respective chapters.

According to Professor John Dugard, based on the evidence presented here, "The picture comes across clearly of Tsafendas as a political person who was not insane when he killed Dr. Verwoerd. The evidence points overwhelmingly in this direction. Tsafendas was a political revolutionary, whose assassination of Dr. Verwoerd was motivated by a hatred of Dr. Verwoerd and all he stood for. He was not an insane killer but a political assassin determined to rid South Africa of the architect of apartheid."³⁸¹⁸ ³⁸¹⁸ Professor John Dugard in personal interviews with the author, 31 August 2016 and 8 September 2016.

CHAPTER FIVE

TSAFENDAS'S SUMMARY TRIAL

THE JUDICIARY IN APARTHEID SOUTH AFRICA³⁸¹⁹

The South African legal system was an integral part of the repressive machinery of the apartheid system³⁸²⁰ and was seriously damaged by it. Constitutional law and administrative law were unashamedly used by apartheid in its exercise in racist social engineering, though today are undergoing a process of rehabilitation under a new Constitution.³⁸²¹ The administration of justice under apartheid “systematically favoured the state ... devised rules that turned suspects into convicts ... and moulded the rule of law to serve the law of the legal system in enforcing economic, political and racial oppression.”³⁸²² According to Sydney Kentridge Q.C.,³⁸²³ “In South Africa, one after another, inquests into deaths in detention found that ‘no-one was to blame’ as the security police, the judiciary and district surgeons conspired to keep torture and murder under wraps.”³⁸²⁴ In effect, apartheid suborned the law and used it for its own ends.

Professor John Dugard, a foremost academic critic of the apartheid legal order, has expressed “outrage and shame” about the South African legal system during apartheid,³⁸²⁵ characterising it as “abnormal.” He said: “a legal system that excludes 70% of its population from the franchise, that excludes 70% of its population from owning land in 87% of the country, that arbitrarily deprives 8 million people of their nationality, that has forcibly relocated many millions of people on account of their race, that formally executes some 160 persons per year, that authorizes repression in the name of national security and that permits international aggression, [is] . . . a grossly abnormal one.”³⁸²⁶ Professor Dugard has also characterised it as an “old-fashioned, inquisitorial system modelled upon a code produced by ³⁸¹⁹ For some of the most important political trials of the 1950s and 1960s see Chapter One.

³⁸²⁰ SATIS, 1985: 5.

³⁸²¹ Dugard, 1998b: 111.

³⁸²² Parker and Parker-Mokhesi, 1998: 3.

³⁸²³ (1922-) Leading South African anti-apartheid lawyer and activist. He played a leading role in several very important political trials during apartheid, the two most well-known being the Treason Trial and the Inquest into the death of Stephen Biko (South African History Online. n.d)

³⁸²⁴ Quoted in Bizos, 1998: vii.

³⁸²⁵ Klug, 2000: 660.

³⁸²⁶ Klug, 2000: 659-660.

the Spanish Inquisition, one which bears little resemblance to the enlightened codes of procedure found in modern Western European countries.”³⁸²⁷

In his 1998 article, The South African Judiciary and International Law During the Apartheid Era, Professor Dugard set out several instances where the Appellate Division handed down decisions which favoured the State but militated against the interests of justice. These included the court's approval of South Africa's unlawful integration of Namibia and the war which followed, making it culpable in part for thousands of deaths; its brushing aside of human rights treaties in regard to the Group Areas Act, thus permitting the Act to be applied in a racial manner; its failure to consider international human rights provisions in a dispute over the rights of the indigent to counsel; its ruling that South African security forces were permitted to arrest persons in a foreign country, which ran counter to international law.³⁸²⁸

Professor Dugard wrote after examining some cases that “One must therefore assume - an assumption endorsed by the refusal of the court to consult a single international law treatise on a question of international law - that the court did not, quite frankly, give the proverbial damn about international law!” One ruling by the Appellate Division which was hailed as progressive was that South African courts had no competence to try a person abducted from another state. However, this decision was made after the fall of apartheid, showing that the judges were keen to go with the new order.³⁸²⁹

The TRC's report regarding the judiciary during apartheid emphasized that one of the reasons for apartheid's longevity was “the superficial adherence to ‘rule by law’ by the National Party (NP), whose leaders craved the aura of legitimacy that ‘the law’ bestowed on their harsh injustice ... In the intervening thirty years, however, the courts and the organised legal profession generally and subconsciously or unwittingly connived in the legislative and executive pursuit of injustice, as was pointed out by a few at the time and acknowledged by so many at the hearing. Perhaps the most common form of subservience can be captured in the maxim qui tacet consentire (silence gives consent). There were, nevertheless, many parts of the profession that actively contributed to the entrenchment and defence of apartheid through the courts.”³⁸³⁰

³⁸²⁷ Dugard, 1978: 273.

³⁸²⁸ Dugard, 1998b: 110-126.

³⁸²⁹ Dugard, 1998b: 110-126.

As for the role of the judges during apartheid, the TRC concluded:

“In the greatest injustices of all, judges who too easily made sense of the illogical and the unjust in legislative language, and who too quickly accepted the word of the police or official witness in preference to that of the accused. Kathleen Satchwell in her submission deals extensively with the case of Linda Mogale, her client who was assaulted and tortured in detention. Despite evidence to this effect, the judge nevertheless rejected ‘as impossible’ a process of police violence and system of intimidation.”³⁸³¹

However, the criticism of the judiciary by the TRC seems still very mild in comparison to the real extent of the role it played under apartheid, especially with regard to the role of judges in Government-appointed Commissions of Inquiry.

Historically the South African judiciary reflected a largely independent stance. In 1948, when the National Party came to power, most judges supported the old United Party, with a handful backing the NP. The new government lost no time in changing the balance in its favour. Especially during the 1950s and particularly after L.C. Steyn³⁸³² became Chief Justice, political appointments became the rule rather than the exception.³⁸³³ The government appointed judges it knew would support its policies, selecting sympathetic Afrikaner Nationalists in preference to distinguished members of the Bar whose political orientation might lean to the Left. In this way, the ruling party changed the character of the entire judiciary.³⁸³⁴

In 1977, according to an estimate by Professor Dugard, more than half of South Africa's judges favoured the ruling National Party. Furthermore, the same handful of judges heard virtually all political cases between 1978 and 1982. His figures showed that 17% of the ³⁸³⁰ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 4, 1998: 101.

³⁸³¹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report, Vol. 4, 1998: 103.

³⁸³² Steyn's appointment was hugely controversial at the time as he was chosen over Justice Oliver Schreiner, a man described as “the greatest chief justice South Africa never had.” The convention at the time was that the position of Chief Justice was given to the longest-serving judge in the Appellate Division. At the time, that person was Schreiner, while Steyn was a much more junior man. However, what Steyn had that Schreiner didn't was his support for the National Party. Due to the fact that Schreiner was not a supporter of the NP, he was twice ignored for the position. (Soggot (Mail and Guardian), 20 September 1996, ‘Battle lines drawn over chief justice’).

³⁸³³ Dugard, 1998b: 113; Sachs, 1973: 257.

³⁸³⁴ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016; Sachs, 1973: 257.

judiciary heard 84% of all the political cases, and four judges heard over 50% of them.³⁸³⁵

Although there are no official figures for 1966, Professor Dugard told the author that the situation was even worse then and the figures certainly higher.³⁸³⁶

Thus no eyebrows were raised when Judge Andries Beyers was named to preside at Tsafendas's summary trial and Judge Jacques Theodore van Wyk became the sole member of the Commission of Enquiry into Dr. Verwoerd's assassination. Both judges were NP supporters who favoured racial separation, and both had served the National Party and apartheid in various high-profile cases.³⁸³⁷ Professor John Dugard told the author:

“So, during the 1950s, most political appointments took place. The government was determined only to appoint its supporters and the result was that Beyers and van Wyk were both appointed. But I think, in fairness to van Wyk, he was, intellectually, one of the better judges. And Beyers, too, was intellectually good ... they were intellectual giants, so to speak, amongst the National Party judges. So I suspect that the government was very careful when it came to appointing judges to hear the Tsafendas case, and so that would explain why both Beyers and van Wyk were involved. They were certainly political persons and they owed their appointments to the government.”³⁸³⁸

DEFENCE'S PREPARATIONS³⁸³⁹

After visiting Tsafendas and concluding that he was not right in his mind, his defence team set out to establish a case for insanity and proceeded to appoint psychiatrists to examine him.³⁸⁴⁰ By this time, the media and politicians were already declaring Tsafendas a “madman.”³⁸⁴¹ When his defence team said they were going to contend that he was insane, Tsafendas “sort of shrugged his shoulders... and said, ‘Well, you just do whatever you think is best.’”³⁸⁴²

³⁸³⁵ Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, 1986: 141; See also Dugard, J. (1978) Human Rights in South Africa Legal Order.

³⁸³⁶ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 29 January 2016.

³⁸³⁷ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁸³⁸ Professor John Dugard in a personal interview, 7 February 2016.

³⁸³⁹ Due to lack of other sources, a lot of the information regarding the defence team's preparations is taken from David Bloomberg's memoir, My Times. However, we cannot take everything that Bloomberg has stated as unimpeachable, since his account contains some evident inaccuracies.

³⁸⁴⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 78-79.

³⁸⁴¹ Jones, 2000: 64

³⁸⁴² David Bloomberg in a personal interview, 6 April 2014.

The first specialist physician was Dr. Harold Cooper, a psychiatrist who had worked in psychiatric hospitals in Johannesburg and Cape Town and had subsequently gone into private practice. He was a strange choice, given that in the 1951 case, Rex v. Kennedy, the court refused to accept his psychiatric evaluation. Dr. Cooper had declared the accused in this case to be “mentally disordered,” (as he was later to find Tsafendas), but the judge dismissed this opinion as based on improbable evidence and found the accused fit to stand trial.³⁸⁴³ The other two psychiatrists were Dr. James William MacGregor, a specialist psychiatrist and neurologist since 1937 who practised in Cape Town; and Dr. Aubrey Zabow, who was working in a private practice in Cape Town and was also a part-time consultant in psychiatry at Groote Schuur Hospital and the Somerset Hospital.

Dr. MacGregor was the first to examine Tsafendas, on September 29. Tsafendas's responses were similar to those he had given at his meeting with his appointed defence team. After a ninety-minute examination in the presence of Bloomberg, Dr. MacGregor immediately diagnosed him as a paranoid schizophrenic, but requested a further consultation to decide whether he was certifiable. He went on to examine Tsafendas on a further two occasions, on October 4 and 11, for ninety minutes each time.³⁸⁴⁴

Dr. Zabow examined Tsafendas the following day (September 30), also for ninety minutes and in the presence of Bloomberg. He concluded that the accused was psychotic and suffering from schizophrenia and was certifiable, but asked to examine him again. He too examined him on two more occasions for ninety minutes each time, on October 4 and 11.³⁸⁴⁵ Dr. Cooper examined Tsafendas on October 1, again for ninety minutes and in the company of Bloomberg. The doctor declared that he had no doubt Tsafendas was mentally disordered, but needed to see him again before he could offer a final opinion.³⁸⁴⁶ Dr. Cooper would examine Tsafendas again on October 4, 11 and 14, spending a total of six hours with him, and his diagnosis remained unchanged.³⁸⁴⁷ Each psychiatrist examined Tsafendas for the first time in the presence of Bloomberg, and the second time on his own. The third time (October ³⁸⁴³ Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Responsibility of Mentally Deranged Persons and Related Matters. P: 17. Pretoria: Government Printer. 1967.

³⁸⁴⁴ Dr J.W. MacGregor's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA

³⁸⁴⁵ Dr Aubrey Zabow's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA

³⁸⁴⁶ Bloomberg, 2007: 79.

³⁸⁴⁷ Dr Harold Cooper's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 17 October 1966, p. 20. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

11), all the psychiatrists examined him together. Tsafendas's responses will be examined later in this chapter.

The last doctor appointed by the defence to examine Tsafendas was Dr. Hendrik Muller, a specialist physician with nineteen years' experience in private practice, who happened to be Judge Beyers's personal doctor. Dr. Muller's brief was to examine Tsafendas physically to determine whether he had a tapeworm.³⁸⁴⁸ The consultation took place on October 12, but Dr. Muller did not carry out a physical examination as he was supposed to, having concluded from his discussions with Tsafendas that he did not have a tapeworm.³⁸⁴⁹

When Bloomberg became aware that Tsafendas was examined on the night of the assassination by the psychiatrist Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky, he asked for and received a copy of his detailed report. Dr. Sakinofsky diagnosed Tsafendas to be suffering from paraphrenic schizophrenia, mentally disordered in terms of the Act and thus certifiable.³⁸⁵⁰ Bloomberg stated in his memoir, and this is one of his inaccuracies, that Dr. Sakinofsky examined Tsafendas on two more occasions before Bloomberg was appointed as Tsafendas's defence lawyer on September 26, and had come to the conclusion that Tsafendas was schizophrenic. In this he is mistaken. Dr. Sakinofsky testified during the summary trial that after his first examination, he saw Tsafendas for a second time on October 6, one month after the assassination.³⁸⁵¹ Bloomberg was appointed on September 26, ten days before Dr. Sakinofsky saw Tsafendas for the second time, and therefore Bloomberg's claim that the doctor had examined his client three times before September 26 is incorrect.

Dr. Sakinofsky, knowing it was "extremely likely" that he would be called to testify as one of the "medical witnesses," since he had examined Tsafendas on the evening of the assassination, wrote on September 19, 1966, to the Medical Director of the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg, requesting Tsafendas's medical record.³⁸⁵² The hospital would eventually send the record on October 3 and copies would be given to Willem M. van ³⁸⁴⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 79.

³⁸⁴⁹ Dr. Hendrik Muller's testimony on Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁵⁰ Bloomberg, 2007: 82.

³⁸⁵¹ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁵² Letter of Dr. Sakinofsky to the Medical Director of the Ochsenzoll Krankenhaus Hospital in Hamburg, 19 September 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

den Berg, the Attorney-General of Cape Town and prosecutor in the case.³⁸⁵³ Dr. Sakinofsky “wondered what was happening” about his own medical report on Tsafendas and telephoned Judge Beyers. The judge referred him to the office of the Attorney-General³⁸⁵⁴ from whom he learned he and his evidence had been “allocated to the defence.”³⁸⁵⁵

Bloomberg also asked a clinical psychologist, Mr. Reyner van Zyl, who was recommended to him by Dr. Cooper, a friend of van Zyl, to carry out psychological tests on Tsafendas. Van Zyl remembers Bloomberg calling him and “hyperventilating over the telephone” with excitement that Judge Beyers had asked him to defend Tsafendas. Van Zyl was only 31 at the time and admitted in a personal interview with the author that he was not experienced and this was the first time he used the tests which he applied to Tsafendas.³⁸⁵⁶ Van Zyl examined Tsafendas on October 13, for three and a half hours divided into two sessions; the first session lasted two hours and the second ninety minutes. Van Zyl concluded that Tsafendas was undoubtedly schizophrenic, but that his intelligence resulted in his schizophrenia not being as “florid” as was often seen in mental hospitals.³⁸⁵⁷

In the course of these consultations, Tsafendas told Bloomberg that he had recently applied for a disability grant and that he had been diagnosed as schizophrenic. Naturally, he omitted the fact that he was medically examined on ten more occasions since returning to South Africa and was found to be perfectly fit and sane. Bloomberg confirmed from records at the Department of Social Welfare that on a date three months before the assassination, his client had indeed applied for a disability grant and was examined for ten minutes by the District Surgeon of Cape Town, Dr. Ralph Kossew.³⁸⁵⁸ Dr. Kossew had found Tsafendas to be “schizophrenic,” with his degree of disablement as compared with a normal individual as “severe” and listed his incapacity as “permanent.”³⁸⁵⁹

The defence was quick to appoint three psychiatrists and a psychologist to examine their client, but did not seem concerned that Tsafendas had already been in custody for ³⁸⁵³ Letter of Dr. Trost to Mr. Mulder of the South African Embassy in Cologne. 3 October 1966. K150, Vol. 7, File: 09/04 Suspect Persons Demetrio Tsafendas. NASA.

³⁸⁵⁴ Bloomberg, 2007: 82.

³⁸⁵⁵ Dr. Isaac Sakinofsky's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

³⁸⁵⁶ Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 10 April 2016.

³⁸⁵⁷ Reyner van Zyl's testimony at the trial, 19 October 1966, p. 169. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA; Reyner van Zyl in a personal interview, 17 April 2016.

³⁸⁵⁸ Bloomberg, 2007: 79.

³⁸⁵⁹ Dr. Ralph Kossew's testimony at Tsafendas's summary trial, 18 October 1966, p. 132. K150, Vol. 10, File: Trial, NASA.

twenty days before they saw him for the first time. Although Bloomberg noticed bruises on Tsafendas's face and knew that he was a prisoner of one of the world's most brutal police forces, these considerations were not enough to convince him to appoint a doctor to examine his client.

